

Nature deals Vegas a wet hand

By ROBERT MACY

LAS VEGAS (AP) — Most gamblers kept on playing but some waded out to snap photographs as rolling runoff from mountain rains roared through the Las Vegas Strip, sweeping away dozens of cars and turning some streets into 10-foot-deep rivers.

"I saw three cars floating down the street with no one at the wheel," said Leslie Chamberlain, who was walking home from work at the MGM Grand Hotel when the flood struck Wednesday. "I've never seen anything like it."

The intersection of Flamingo Boulevard and the Strip, where Caesars Palace, the Dunes Hotel and the Flamingo Hotel are located, looked like a lake, and helicopters plucked several people to safety.

"We were lucky we got out alive," said David L. Snipes, a vacationing St. Louis resident. "I had no idea this could happen in Las Vegas."

The floodwaters, which reached widths of 40 feet and depths of 10 feet in some areas before subsiding during the afternoon, carried desert palm fronds, railroad ties and driftwood from the Spring Mountains 10 miles to the west, authorities said. No injuries or deaths were reported, but property damage was estimated at more than $2 million, Clark County officials said.

"It just came all at once, it was just a wall of water," said Ed Hoffman, who lives on the Strip. Hoffman said he watched as a dozen cars were swept about three blocks and dumped in a heap.

County employee David Grimble scrambled atop his street sweeper as four feet of water engulfed the vehicle. A crowd applauded as rescuers in a sheriff's helicopter lifted him from the roof.

Bee Duquette, manager of the Park Royal Apartments, said a Flight for Life helicopter rescued a couple from the roof of an adjoining apartment when water reached waist-high level.

Gamblers at one casino, the Imperial Palace, were evacuated while barefoot hotel employees shoveled mud from the casino driveway. The establishment re-opened about an hour later.

At Caesars Palace, workers used sandbags to stop seepage into a convention room. However, drainage tunnels constructed underneath the hotel parking lot after a similar flood in the summer of 1975, which killed two men and wrecked about 300 cars on the Caesars Palace parking lot, kept damage to a minimum, one casino official said.

Although Las Vegas gets only about 4 inches of rainfall annually, it is surrounded by mountains and a relatively small amount of precipitation can mean major flood problems as the water washes into the city. The National Weather Service reported almost half an inch of rain fell Wednesday.

Rowsey in jail on child-rape charge

By JULIA CLARK
Staff Writer

James Wayne Rowsey was indicted Wednesday for rape of a child and attempted murder by the Gray County Grand Jury in 223rd Judicial Court.

The first indictment said James Wayne Rowsey "on the 13th day of May 1983 did...intentionally and knowingly have sexual intercourse with (a girl under 17) and at the time of (said crime the female) was younger than 17 and not the wife of James Wayne Rowsey."

The second indictment said on July 10 Rowsey "attempted to cause the death of Carol Ann Witt by cutting her throat with a straight razor, said attempt amounting to more than mere preparation that tends but fails to effect the commission of offense intended."

The court issued an order for Rowsey's arrest and set his bond for the rape charge at $25,000. The original charge for the throat-cutting was aggravated assault, and Rowsey was released on $25,000 bond.

According to the Gray County Sheriff's office, Rowsey was arrested by a deputy about 11 Wednesday morning. Rowsey was charged with aggravated assault and arrested following his July 10 attack on Carol Witt.

Rowsey is in jail in lieu of a total of $50,000 bond.

Snake bites man; man bites snake; snake dies

LAKE CITY, Fla. (AP) — When a rattlesnake bit Arlie Waldron on the forearm, he decided to get even. He bit the snake's head off, but not before the rattler nipped him six more times, including once on the tongue.

A canebrake rattlesnake bit the 42-year-old Waldron as he started to teach his son about handling snakes as they stood in Waldron's backyard in the pine woods of north Florida.

Enraged, Waldron said he set out to bite off the reptile's head, but the fatal chop didn't come before Waldron had been bitten seven times.

He was rushed from his home near Lake City to a local hospital that night, July 16, and two hours later was transferred to Shands Teaching Hospital in Gainesville. He spent four days there before returning home.

His head and neck "swelled up like a balloon" Waldron recalled in a recent interview with the Lake City Reporter.

Only two days later, Waldron said, a doctor came into the hospital room and began "staring at me for a long time" in disbelief that the swelling was gone.

"I came out of the hospital faster than he's ever seen," Waldron said after returning to his job at a pre-fabricated home manufacturer on July 25.

Waldron, who said he had bitten other less-dangerous reptiles such as oak and grass snakes, promised to give up snake-biting. That decision, he said, was wholeheartedly supported by his wife, Bonnie.

Inferno cuts off power

NEW YORK (AP) — An underground fire that felt like "the gates of hell" to those who fought it blacked out the nation's garment center during one of its busiest weeks, with multi-million-dollar losses expected before all power is restored on Monday.

Emergency crews worked today to relight the 20-block area in midtown that was darkened when a 13-hour inferno cut power Wednesday.

Six hundred police officers guarded the area, deterring looters with street lights run by 62 mobile generators. No arrests were reported.

weather

The high for Wednesday was 94 degrees, recorded at 5:11 p.m. The low, recorded at 5:29 a.m. today, was 72 degrees. The forecast for today calls for variable cloudiness, warm, with a chance of isolated thundershowers. The high for today will be in the mid-90s, with a low tonight in the mid-60s. Winds will be southerly, 5-10 miles an hour.

Grand jury indicts nine this week

The Gray County Grand Jury in 223rd Judicial District returned nine indictments earlier this week.

Sammy Ray Doyle was indicted on a charge of unlawful possession of methamphetamines - not more than 28 grams. His bond was set at $5,000.

Ross Clayton Bennett was indicted on two charges of driving while intoxicated, subsequent offenses. His bond was set at a total of $3000.

Willie James Wilson was indicted for unlawful possession of marijuana, more than four ounces but less than five pounds. His bond was set at $2500.

Robert Gayle Gulley was indicted for arson. He is charged with setting fire to a house belonging to Vickie Heiskell. Bond was set at $5,000.

Fernando Coronado was indicted for a subsequent offense of driving while intoxicated and bond was set at $1000.

Enrique Lire DeLaRosa was indicted for a subsequent offense of driving while intoxicated and bond was set at $1000.

Up with People cast still needs beds

By LARRY HOLLIS
Staff Writer

Members of the Up With People show advance team are still seeking host families to provide lodging for two nights for members of the cast.

The Up With People show, seen by eight million people in 47 countries since its inception, will be presented live in concert at 7:30 p.m. on Thursday, Aug. 18, at the M. K. Brown Auditorium.

The highly acclaimed musical production, performed by a cast and staff of 130 young men and women from 18 countries, is sponsored locally by radio stations KGRO and KOMX.

Anne Hallward and Carey Ford, cast members, are hoping to find host families in town to provide homes for all group participants.

"People don't really need anything fancy - just a bed to sleep on," Ms. Hallward said.

"The families themselves can get great benefits" for hosting the members, she added. In addition to being able to meet people from other areas, the host families also get two complimentary tickets for the show.

Up With People cast members are planning to arrive in town about 7 p.m. on Wednesday, Aug. 17, in a procession of seven haywagons. The group will come into Pampa from the south on Hwy. 60, proceeding down Cuyler St. to Central Park. Pampa police will provide an escort.

Members will meet their host families at a pot-luck picnic supper at Central Park.

"We invite everyone in Pampa to come out and welcome the cast," Ms. Ford said. Local residents may bring their own picnic suppers and mingle with the group at the park following the procession, she added.

Anyone interested in providing the two-nights' lodging for the young people may contact Ms. Hallward or Ms. Ford during the day at 669-6809 (KGRO-KOMX) or at 669-9248 in the evenings.

In addition to personal appearances on regular tours, millions have seen the Up With People groups perform on television on such programs as three Super Bowls, Sea World broadcast, and Boston Pops programs.

Recent world tours have taken casts to such diverse locations as St. Peter's Square in Rome; Corn Market Square in Belfast, Northern Ireland; the bull-rings of Valencia, Spain; the Peking Conservatory of Music in the People's Republic of China; Poland and Venezuela.

The performers are students between the ages of 17 and 25 who participate for 11 months in a multifaceted program of learning. Each year these students travel an average of 35,000 miles, living with between 80 and 100 host families in several different countries. They have the opportunity to experience different lifestyles, to share interests and cultures, and even to learn new languages.

In specially arranged community involvement programs, local high school and college students accompany the Up With People cast in visits to nursing homes, hospitals and other institutions. Developed under a grant from the W. K. Kellogg Foundation, the program has a goal of providing these youth with an insight into the community's needs.

Each cast member assists in the day-to-day logistics of operating the cast, including show promotion, public relations, merchandising, and stage work. College credit can be earned in a variety of subjects through the University of Arizona.

Eight thousand students have taken part in Up With People since it was founded in 1968 as a non-profit, apolitical, non-sectarian educational program by its president, J. Blanton Belk.

As many as 10,000 students apply each month for the 550 openings available annually. Although musical talent and technical knowledge of stagecraft are assets, students are accepted on the basis of their motivation, maturity and potential to participate fully in a demanding program.

Interview sessions for those who wish to participate in the annual programs are conducted after each show. A slide and verbal presentation will be given after the local show, with interviews conducted for those who indicate interest in participating in the program.

Previous local students who have had the opportunity to tour with Up With People include Lyn Hart, Randy Carter and Mike Smith.

Up With People has a board of directors and an International Advisory Board which provide independent direction for the organization's growth and development.

The world-wide activities of the group are financed from ticket and product sales, show sponsors, student tuition fees, individual and corporate gifts, and foundation gifts. Gifts for scholarships, endowment funds and operating expenses are tax deductible.

"Our purpose is to give young men and women a learning experience which prepares them for a swiftly changing world," Belk explained.

"The show is their statement of hope and enthusiasm for the future," he added.

"Think what might happen in students from the People's Republic of China, the Soviet Union, the United States and the other countries of the world spent a year together in Up With People," Belk said. "Maybe it would sow the seed for future understanding and harmony in the world."

Faya Largeau is overrun by rebel forces in northern Chad

By MICHAEL GOLDSMITH

N'DJAMENA, Chad (AP) — Chadian Information Minister Soumaila Mahamat today admitted the fall of the northern outpost of Faya-Largeau but claimed government forces continued to resist insurgents in parts of the 100-square-mile palm grove surrounding it.

"Our forces control the road leading west from a point seven kilometers (4.5 miles) distant and the road leading east from a point 18 kilometers (11 miles) distant," he told reporters.

At a news conference Wednesday, at a time when Western sources said all government resistance in Faya-Largeau had ceased, Soumaila claimed that the Libyan-backed onslaught had been "routed."

He declined to comment on government losses in the battle for the oasis and its 7,000 civilian inhabitants.

Western military sources said the rebels captured the town after a fierce six-hour battle. Resistance by the 2,500 troops, roughly half the armed forces of President Hissene Habre, ceased at midday today, the sources said.

However, the sources said other government troops recaptured the strongpoint of Oum Chalouba, 200 miles

U.S. says Chad battle not over

By LAWRENCE L. KNUXTON

WASHINGTON (AP) — Reagan administration officials say the battle to defend Chad from "blatant military intervention" by Libya will continue even if Libyan-backed insurgent forces capture the oasis stronghold of Faya-Largeau.

But the officials make clear they believe the task would become far easier if the government of France takes the lead by committing combat forces to the struggle.

"If the town has fallen, that is certainly not good news," said John Hughes, the State Department's chief spokesman. "But there are other towns in that area and if the town has fallen, certainly that does not mean that the battle for Chad is over," he said.

The possibility of a more active French role in Chad was raised Wednesday in an Oval Office meeting at the White House between President Reagan and Senegalese President Abdou Diouf. Senegal was described as fearing the precedent that would be set in northern Africa if Libya's leader, Moammar Khadafi, wins effective control of Chad.

"The United States does not consider itself to be the policeman of Africa," said Hughes, noting that Washington has neither engaged in major arms shipments to Africa nor established military bases there.

"And we have quite properly thought that the French, with their long tradition of involvement in that part of Africa, should have the lead, and we have continued to hold that position," Hughes said.

France has sent large quantities of military gear to Chad, and on Tuesday agreed to dispatch a force of 180 French soldiers to help train Chadian troops. On Wednesday, French military sources in Paris said France would send 500 more military personnel to Chad by next week to serve as advisers.

The Reagan administration holds that the Libyan-backed rebellion in Chad is part of a larger plan by Khadafi to extend Libyan power and influence throughout the area, threatening such U.S. allies as Egypt and the Sudan.

southeast of Faya-Largeau, from rebel forces loyal to former President Goukouni Oueddei.

The sources said a full-scale Libyan attack involving Soviet-built jet bombers, heavy artillery and tanks was launched on Faya-Largeau, 500 miles north of N'Djamena, shortly after dawn.

About 2,000 Libyan regular troops and 3,000 Chadian rebel forces were involved in the attack, outnumbering the government defenders by 2-1.

The sources said American-supplied Redeye missiles, flown to Faya-Largeau last week to help beat back Libyan air attacks, were withdrawn from the oasis and taken to safe government positions farther south because they proved ineffective in the difficult conditions of the Chadian desert.

The Redeye missiles were part of the $25 million emergency military aid package which President Reagan promised Habre to repel the Libyan-backed offensive.

The 2,500 government troops who defended the outpost were believed to have scattered into the surrounding desert with part of their arms, except for some 500 who were taken prisoner by the Libyan-led rebels.

Habre's army has been warring with the Libyan-backed rebels for two months.

In Brief

BEIRUT, Lebanon — Druse militiamen kidnap three Lebanese Cabinet members and issue five demands, including the resignation of President Amin Gemayel's government. Remaining Cabinet ministers meet and refuse to accept at least one of the demands — withdrawal of the Christian-dominated army from the central mountains, where rockets and shells were flaring.

WASHINGTON — President Reagan meets with his advisory commission on Central America, a newly-constituted panel whose Democratic members already are calling for changes in administration policy toward the region.

WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration hints that talks may be arranged soon for the first time between the government of El Salvador and leftist guerrillas fighting to oust the U.S.-backed regime.

VANCOUVER, British Columbia — International church leaders who refused to demand the Soviet Union withdraw immediately from Afghanistan were ready to denounce the U.S. role in Central America at final sessions of the World Council of Churches convention.

CIMITARRA, Colombia — As they told the story later, residents recalled that the temperature hung in the low 90s and not a whisper of breeze moved the palms as four men, each with a submachine gun, strode side by side down a dirt street. They said they knew immediately that the death squad was coming.

WASHINGTON — U.S. military activity in Latin America and Africa draws attention to America's widespread defense commitments and underlines a key Pentagon worry about a possible manpower shortage.

BELFAST, Northern Ireland — Catholic rioters hurl gasoline bombs at a police station in Londonderry in the fourth straight night of violence. The roof catches fire but the flames are extinguished and police say the overall level of violence in the province is relatively mild.

Protest finds empty room in Austin

AUSTIN (AP) — About 12 residents of the Zapata County community of San Ignacio journeyed to Austin today to tell the State Board of Corrections that they don't want a prison in their town.

However, the South Texans found an empty room because the prison board meeting was cancelled late Wednesday because of scheduling conflicts that made it impossible to get a quorum.

Joel Ruiz, a San Ignacio businessman, said Laredo business leaders are pushing a San Ignacio site for a prison as a way to help reduce unemployment in the Laredo area.

Dr. R.G. Sanchez, a San Ignacio chiropractor, said he found out about the push for a prison on Sunday. "It was like a bum dropped in our community," he said.

But prison board member Harry Whittington of Austin said the San Ignacio people have little to worry about. Whittington said it is unlikely that the board would decide to pick a South Texas site.

"There's a group of people that have wanted that area considered," said Whittington. "But that's all that's happened. They came to the Texas Department of Corrections and presented a proposal. It has not been seriously considered."

Whittington said prison officials frequently field requests from community leaders who think a penitentiary would be good for the local economy. Similar requests have been presented by residents of the Raymondville area, Dell City and Carrizo Springs in recent months, he said.

"I don't think the Laredo-area site is even being seriously considered," he said.

All the groups seeking a prison for their towns might be disappointed, according to Whittington, who said it's possible the board won't select any new site in the near future. The board has $11 million to spend for a site, but no money to build on it.

"I'm of the opinion that one won't be built there or anywhere," said Whittington.

The $11 million expires on Aug. 31, he said. After that date the money can be used to build on existing sites, including Grimes County and Huntsville-area sites that are "under-utilized," according to Whittington.

Two previous attempts to buy sites for prisons in South Texas ended in failure. An attempt to purchase land in Hidalgo County failed when questions about the landowners were raised.

The planned purchase of a Starr County farm was cancelled due to local opposition.

For this IRS hostage, it's a case of deja vu with a gun

By CHARLIE SMITH

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — An Internal Revenue Service official who had talked an irate taxpayer holding him at gunpoint into giving himself up was a veteran of the predicament. He also negotiated the end of a 3-hour standoff in 1978.

Howard Longley, the district director of the IRS, convinced the armed man who held him hostage in his office Wednesday to surrender after more than two hours, authorities said.

Police arrested Louis Edgar Miles after the incident. The gunman walked into Longley's office at about 10:45 a.m., brandishing a weapon believed to be a .357-caliber Magnum, said U.S. Attorney Bill Price.

Approximately 100 employees on the federal building's second floor were evacuated.

As negotiations continued, tactical teams from the FBI and Oklahoma City Police Department moved into position. Two officers were seen entering the area with bulletproof vests, a submachine gun and rifle.

Authorities filed federal assault and kidnapping charges against Miles, of suburban Oklahoma City, who friends described as "very mild mannered, soft spoken. Not the hyper type."

"He did a beautiful job under pressure," Price said of Longley. "He's just a very gentlemanly, relaxed, confident person."

Price declined to say what Longley told the man. On Dec. 4, 1978, while he was an assistant IRS southwest regional director in Austin, Texas, Longley was taken hostage by a disgruntled former revenue service employee who was armed with a handgun and a knife.

That standoff lasted about three hours and ended when Longley convinced the gunman to surrender. Longley, a 31-year IRS employee, refused to speak to reporters Wednesday.

After his surrender, at approximately 1:45 p.m., Miles, a gray cowboy hat covering his slicked, graying black hair, was taken into custody by federal marshals. Following an initial court appearance before U.S. Magistrate Ronald L. Howland, Miles was jailed in lieu of $200,000 bond. A preliminary hearing was scheduled for Aug. 17.

Authorities refused to be specific about the nature of Miles' tax complaint. "I can't go into details, but obviously, he had some tax problems with the IRS," Price said.

Miles, 48, was a civil service employee who retired after working at Tinker Air Force Base in Oklahoma City. He worked for a year as a draftsman for Midwest City engineer John Bates, who said the Miles he knew was very soft-spoken.

"You surely do not have the same guy," he said. "I don't believe I've ever seen him upset. Sometimes the problem with him is you can't even hear him when he speaks."

Farmers prepare for dry spell

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — West Texas ranchers and farmers, many of whom are liquidating their herds because of a sweltering drought unparalleled since the 1950s, are praying for rain and pleading for federal assistance.

While the appeals for precipitation have been directed toward the clouds, the pleas for federal disaster relief have been targeted at U.S. Secretary of Agriculture John Block.

"If Secretary Block is willing to act now, he can prevent the total devastation of the ranching industry in that area," Texas Secretary of Agriculture Jim Hightower said Wednesday at a Washington news conference.

Hightower, armed with a bag of parched West Texas soil, said Block's inaction has forced many ranchers to liquidate their herds.

"Timely action could have prevented" such liquidations, Hightower said.

"I'm sure it's difficult for him (Block) to consider the need of our ranchers when he's sitting in an air-conditioned office nearly 2,000 miles away, so we've come here to bring the matter to his attention once again," Hightower said.

"We've even brought a bucket of West Texas soil, so they can put their hands in this parched soil and tell us if it's dry enough for them yet."

Gov. Mark White on Monday asked Block to reconsider his July 15 denial of federal drought relief for the counties.

White said earlier that Block could have "by the nod of his head given some large measure of relief to those farmers and ranchers who are impacted so heavily by this drought."

Pecos County rancher Gregg McKenzie of Fort Stockton said ranchers are selling out their cattle herds daily.

"I just liquidated my herd last week," McKenzie said. "We just kept a foundation herd, just a few cows and some registered bulls."

"This is more extreme than the drought of the '50s," McKenzie said. "It's been more devastating to the rangeland. We're at the point now where it's hurting the native vegetation."

He estimated that 50 percent of the ranchers in Pecos County have liquidated their herds.

Nearly 200 miles to the northeast in Colorado City, Bobby Lemons, vice president of City National Bank, said ranchers also are selling their herds, and cotton farmers have "just about given up on making a crop this year."

Counties affected are Brewster, Presidio, Jeff Davis, Culberson, Reeves, Pecos, Terrell, Crockett, Sutton, Schleicher, Reagan, Upton, Crane, Ward, Loving, Winkler, Ector, Midland, Glasscock, Coke, Nolan, Mitchell, Howard, Martin, Andrews, Irion and Dawson.

Officials said 24 of the 27 counties applied for federal drought relief through the governor's office. Counties not seeking federal aid were Irion, Glasscock and Crockett.

McKenzie challenged Block to come to Fort Stockton "and make a living as a rancher. If he can live for a week on $50 worth of food stamps, let him come here and see the devastation we have."

He said that ranchers who depend solely on rain for moisture "are hurting."

McKenzie said the drought of the 1950s lasted seven years, but the most recent dry spell has been building for about three years and its intensity in some locations is so bad that there has been virtually no rain.

White said in a letter to Block that the drought-stricken area normally would have received 6.26 inches of rain during the last six months. But Van Horn has had less than an inch, Fort Stockton only 1.26 inches, Pecos 1.48 inches and Presidio only 1.3 inches.

Hightower said cattle herds in the 27-county area have been reduced 50 to 60 percent by ranchers who simply could not afford to feed them.

"Real people are suffering real harm while the secretary of agriculture is waiting on another weather report," he said. "He has the power to help these people right now, and we're calling on him to use it."

"First, he should do what we asked him two months ago — implement the Emergency Feed Grain Program," Hightower said. "This simply gives the ranchers a small price break on the feed they are having to buy to keep their cattle and sheep alive. Three cents a pound is the maximum a rancher can receive under this program, but that can be the difference between survival and bankruptcy."

Hightower said Block should release more than 17 million bushels of government-owned corn being stored in the Texas Panhandle that could be used for livestock feed.

"We need these actions now. The losses from the drought had already reached disaster proportion when Gov. White and I called this to Secretary Block's attention June 21," said Hightower. "Since then, as many as 20 percent of the area ranchers have been forced out of business, and virtually all of them have been forced to liquidate most of their herds."

Railroad depot stands empty

By PATTI MUCK
Port Arthur News

WINNIE, Texas (AP) — The old Santa Fe depot stands empty now. The railroad tracks on both sides are still. A few rusty pop and beer cans litter the front entrance to the depot.

Loneliness marks the spot that used to be the hub of activity in Winnie. The Santa Fe Railroad closed the depot in June and rerouted all the business to its Beaumont terminal.

"They pretty well stripped it," says W.E. Whitworth. He was the one-man station agent here for 17 years. He unlocks the side door to show the barren shell to visitors.

"This depot is at least 85 years old," Whitworth says. His eyes wander around the old room with its wooden floor and high ceiling. A few old desks, chairs, and signs on the walls remain.

Whitworth sat in an old desk in front of the bay windows with their ripped shades. From this spot he had a good view of traffic up and down the tracks.

"At one time, they had quite an office force," he says. "The depot used to have considerable cattle shipments. There was a daily passenger train until the early '40s. Course, way back most everything that came to this area was handled by train," he said.

A full wastebasket still sits quietly by the desk. The June 1983 calendar was left behind; in the June 19 space, the words "closing date, W.E. Whitworth" are penciled in.

Whitworth talks freely about his old job. It was work he enjoyed. There was time for talk with the train engineers and freight operators then. Some of Winnie's oldtimers would stop in and talk about the bygone glory days of train travel.

Whitworth points out the window to the spot where a big rooming house stood years ago. He tells about the cattle freight that ranchers shipped out nationwide. "The cattle would sleep in the street until the trains came to get them," Whitworth says.

As he talks, he wipes grainy dust off the countertop where paperwork used to flow, and then steps out the screen door to butt a cigarette.

"Up until four or five years ago, we had 200 rail cars a week here," Whitworth says. They carried fertilizer and lumber. "We used to handle a tremendous volume of crushed limestone from Central Texas," he adds.

Trains still come through now and then, but they no longer stop here. Like Whitworth, they've been relocated to Beaumont.

Whitworth has spent the last few weeks learning how to operate a computer at the Santa Fe terminal in Beaumont. He makes the 30-minute drive daily and starts work in the late afternoon. "It's really another world — an entire change from what I'm accustomed to," he says. For 22 of his 27 years with Santa Fe, Whitworth has worked in a one-man station. Now he's surrounded by computer terminals, radios and telephones.

"Well, it just doesn't seem to be like the old railroading," he says. "The personal contact is gone and we handle everything by phone. It's a push button, remote control business now."

When Whitworth first came to Winnie in 1966, he didn't anticipate staying too long. He had used his seniority to get the position and figured he and his wife would stay about a year.

"Over the years, I could have bid on several jobs," he says. "but I like this area. Out here you're away from the wild crowds and everything."

As Whitworth walks around the outside of the depot, he points to the roof, which was partially torn off in last May's storm. Other than that, the depot is solid — a strong reminder of an era that has passed.

"This old building has pretty well withstood things over the years," Whitworth says.

The structure remains, but the business has changed. "Everything is computerized," he says. "I knew it would be a drastic change, and I was trying to get prepared for it. But it's quite a transition anyway," he says.

Then he locks the door, gets in his car and drives away. He has an hour or so before he has to leave for work.

Winnie's Chamber of Commerce has requested that Santa Fe turn the depot property over to the city. Plans are in gear to move the building to the city park, where it can be fully restored and equipped with railroad memorabilia.

It will be a study in nostalgia for railroad buffs like Whitworth.

Victims killed at point-blank range

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — A pathologist told a state district court jury that autopsies he performed on five victims of an execution-style slaying indicated they died from 22-caliber bullets fired less than a foot from their heads.

The state ruled its case against capital murder defendant Linda May Burnett, 35, a Nederland housewife, after the testimony Wednesday of Dr. Stanley LeBer of Beaumont.

The start of the defense case was set to get under way today. Ms. Burnett's trial in connection with the slaying of Martha Phillips of Woodward, Okla., was moved here on a change of venue from Beaumont.

Ms. Burnett and Joe Dugas were convicted and sentenced to die when they were tried previously on charges they murdered Jason Phillips. Dugas was shot to death two months ago during an apparent escape attempt and an appeals court overturned Ms. Burnett's conviction because a tape-recorded conversation she had with a hypnotist was used against her.

LeBer testified that he watched investigators remove the bodies of Mrs. Phillips; her husband, Elmer; their son, Jason, 3; and Elmer's parents, Bishop and Ester Phillips, from a grave in Gilbert Woods, about 10 miles from the Bishop Phillips residence near Winnie on July 9, 1978.

Bishop Noel Phillips Jr. of New Caney testified his father would have "resisted until he couldn't breathe again" if forced to leave his home against his will. Phillips said his father would have left only if an assailant had threatened his wife or grandchild.

Richard and Roy Dugas testified earlier that their brother, Joe Dugas, told them that an unidentified woman helped him kill the Phillips family.

Richard Dugas testified that Joe Dugas blamed Bishop and Ester Phillips for the breakup of his marriage to the Phillips' daughter, Mary.

State District Judge Larry Gist refused Wednesday to grant Carver's motion for an instructed verdict of innocent. Carver contended that prosecutors failed to prove Dugas and Mrs. Burnett conspired to murder Martha Phillips. Testimony of conversations between Dugas and his brothers implicating Mrs. Burnett became hearsay after Dugas' death, Carver contended.

Richard Hughes, first assistant district attorney in Jefferson County, told jurors Wednesday that prosecutors had proven a conspiracy existed between Mrs. Burnett and Dugas to kill the Phillips family and that testimony concerning it was admissible.

Hughes said Charles Neel, married to Dugas' first cousin, gave the most damaging testimony against Mrs. Burnett. "Neel testified that Burnett was at the Rodair Club (in Port Arthur) with Joe Dugas talking about killing the Phillips," Hughes said.

In a statement read at the trial, Mrs. Burnett admitted on July 10, 1978 that she had accompanied Joe Dugas nine days earlier to the Phillips' home, but she denied participating in the slayings.

Georgetown.

Abilene police have made three trips to Montague to question Lucas about the disappearance of one woman and the slaying of another.

Lucas was convicted in 1960 of murdering his 74-year-old mother and spent six years in a mental institution before he was paroled from a Michigan prison in 1970.

He has said he killed women in Texas, New Mexico, Arizona, Utah, California, Oregon, South Dakota, Minnesota, Illinois, Michigan, West Virginia, Florida, Louisiana, New Jersey, Oklahoma and Missouri.

Lucas subsequently was charged in the slayings of an unidentified woman whose headless body was found near Plainview in February 1982 and the March 1981 strangulation of Beverly Joyce Luttrell, a 46-year-old Odessa woman.

Last month, he was indicted in the strangulation of an unidentified woman whose body was found near

Lucas declared mentally competent

MONTAGUE, Texas (AP) — A drifter who claims to have killed 100 women in 16 states was ruled mentally competent and will stand trial Sept. 13 on charges he killed an 80-year-old woman.

Henry Lee Lucas, charged with the killing of Kate Rich of nearby Ringgold, nodded in agreement when asked by State District Judge Frank Douthitt if he agreed with the mental competency ruling.

"Douthitt said Wednesday his ruling on Lucas' competency was based on reports from three psychiatrists that the 46-year-old former mental patient was competent to aid in his defense.

Douthitt said he would hear pretrial motions on Sept. 7.

"Among the motions pending is one by defense attorney Don Maxfield calling for the trial to be moved because of strong sentiment in Montague County against Lucas, who has been charged with five Texas killings.

Wheeler church hosts singers

WHEELER - The Continental Singers and Orchestra of Thousand Oaks, Calif., will present a concert at 7:30 tonight at the Wheeler First Methodist Church.

The group will present a program of contemporary Christian music along with favorite gospel songs, according to Rev. Ernest McGaughey, pastor.

The Continental Singers and Orchestra are currently on a 75-day tour of 20 states, West Germany, Belgium and France. Scott Wright, son of Mr. and Mrs. Jim Wright of Wheeler, is a member of the group. Rev. McGaughey said.

Following the Thursday evening performance, auditions will be held for persons interested in becoming a part of the group for next year's tour. Rev. McGaughey said.

The public is invited to attend the performance.

Getting our money's worth

The pentagon must ensure that U.S. taxpayers get better national security from their increased dollars for defense, and not multibillion-dollar weapons boondoggles, high-priced bolts, or 4-cent electronics parts at $110 apiece.

Efficiencies and economics should be an integral part of President Reagan's proposed five-year $1.6 trillion effort to modernize U.S. defense to counter the massive Soviet military buildup.

Defense spending practices have been under assault by an army: The General Accounting Office, Congressional Budget Office, a private sector panel, the Pentagon's own inspector general, and the conservative Heritage Foundation - a staunch supporter of U.S. rearmament.

Drawing fire have been spare part overpayments (including a now notorious $17.3-inch aircraft bolt); expensive planes, tanks, guns and missiles that don't meet specifications; the military pension system; and the number of military bases.

While some criticism concerns political hot potato issues and strategic matters such as the weapons on which we ought to rely, mundane questions of organization and management provide much of the gist for the critics.

For example, to curb waste in spare parts contracts, the president's Private Sector Survey on Cost Control recommends encouraging competition through more bidding, and purchasing common parts rather than letting each service buy its own.

Most horror stories about M1 tanks that break down of FA-18 fighters that lack range, originate with tests performed by the armed services and an existing testing office in the Pentagon - suggesting the problem isn't testing, but management.

Congress clearly shares in the management problem. For every piece of military hardware whose cost and capability have come under attack, there are one or more influential members of Congress who have championed it.

That points to an important warning recently sounded by Heritage Foundation President Edwin Feulner. The public should be on guard against exploitation of the cause of a leaner, meaner military by those who would indiscriminately chop the defense budget.

Today in History

By The Associated Press

Today is Thursday, Aug. 11, the 223rd day of 1983. There are 142 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Aug. 11, 1954, a formal peace announcement ended more than seven years of fighting in Indochina between the French and the Communist Vietnam.

On this date:

In 1857, the first Atlantic cable broke after 335 miles had been laid, putting off work on the project until the next year.

In 1929, Arabs launched attacks on Jews in Palestine in protest of Jewish use of the Wailing Wall in Jerusalem.

In 1941, British Prime Minister Winston Churchill and President Franklin Roosevelt met on a warship in the western Atlantic to sign the Atlantic Charter.

In 1965, rioting and looting broke out in the predominantly black Watts section of Los Angeles.

Ten years ago: Former Argentine dictator Juan Peron and his wife, Isabel, accepted the Peronist Party's presidential and vice presidential nominations for elections scheduled a month later.

Five years ago: Despite a truce, new fighting erupted in Beirut between Lebanese Christians and Syrian troops.

One year ago: The Senate approved an amendment to an appropriations bill calling for the prevention of the spread of Cuban influence in the Western Hemisphere.

Today's birthday: Writer Alex Haley is 62.

Thought for today: "Do you wish men to speak well of you? Then never speak well of yourself" - Pascal, French philosopher and scientist (1623-1662)

Abolition was long stride forward

By OSCAR COOLEY

Appropriately, the abolition, 150 years ago, of human slavery in the British empire was commemorated last week by a ceremony in Westminster Abbey.

Another 30 years passed before the slaves of the American South won their freedom and slavery was made illegal in this country.

The British action was brought about largely by the efforts of one man, William Wilberforce. In recognition of his achievement, a university for blacks, Wilberforce University, was established in Ohio.

Slavery is not a venerable institution. Jesus Christ does mention it in the Gospels, though it surely was one of the evils which he condemned. It was a product of war, the conquered being enslaved by their conquerors.

The essence of slavery is that one person is the property of another and in all respects is subservient to the owner, or master. The slave is not free, as you and I are, to act spontaneously. Whether he is treated kindly or cruelly depends on the master.

A slave differs from a wage laborer in that the latter receives a wage, usually in money, which he can spend in any way he wishes. This money confers a degree of freedom. The amount of the wage is subject to agreement in advance by the employer and the employee.

Slavery, being forced on the conquered by the conqueror, was condemned as wrong long before the time of William Wilberforce (1759 - 1833), but it was practiced by many, including George Washington, who condemned it. Regarding slavery, Thomas Jefferson said, "I tremble for my country when I reflect that God is just."

Slavery tended to prevail in economies where mass production was the practice but machines had not been invented to produce on the mass scale desired; hence, gangs of men were enslaved to do it. The growing of cotton and rice in the American South is an example. The same crops are grown today on an even larger scale, but machines have been devised to replace the gangs of slave labor.

In the North, small-scale family farming was more economic, and so there was less motive to use slave labor in agriculture. Vermont, incidentally, abolished slavery within its borders in 1777, it being the first state to do so.

Northerners, however, were not averse to operating ships that carried on the slave trade between African and our Southern ports.

Slavery, though rooted in economics, is fundamentally a moral question. This is why William Wilberforce was against it: he was a do-gooder, a moralist. When he rose in the House of Commons to condemn slavery, it was not the economics of the thing that he abhorred, it was the morality of it. His speech was not an analysis, it was a sermon.

In the British West Indies and elsewhere in the empire, sugarcane and other mass crops were grown - and one may be sure the planters cursed Wilberforce and his religious friends for their attacks on slavery, but he persisted none the less, and he may conclude that he finally succeeded in 1833 because there were a lot of decent people in Parliament; people who did not vote with their pocketbooks but had inherited their seats and held them not so much through politics as through prestige. Wilberforce himself was never voted out; he retired because of ill health. The planters were mollified by 20 million pounds sterling which Parliament voted to reward them for losing their slaves.

Peter Davies, director of the British Anti-Slavery Society, thinks "the situation around the world is at least as bad as, if not worse than, it was in 1833." He holds that 100 million people live in "slavery or conditions so close to it you can't tell the difference." He charges that "100,000 migrant agricultural workers in the U.S. South and Midwest are being held in some form of illegal bondage."

Apparently, he refers to the Mexican migrant workers. They, however, are not slaves, nor are they held in bondage of any kind. They come to the U.S. voluntarily because they know at this season there is far more work here, gathering the crops, than in Mexico and at higher wages. They are paid in cash, and they are free to return to Mexico whenever they wish. If some of them are here illegally, it is because they have broken our immigration laws.

The abolition of slavery in the western world was a very definite step in the progress of the human race.

No more taxes, no more taxes

By ANTHONY HARRIGAN

It is a brave man who says that Americans are undertaxed. On that score, columnist George Will is a very brave man.

In a column in Newsweek July 18, Mr. Will argues that "we, as a nation, are undertaxed." He says that there is an "inescapable need to raise taxes" and insists that the President "must hurry to restore the government's revenue basis."

A lot of Americans will disagree with Mr. Will and say that more than it is taking in. But he cure for that is to spend less, not tax more. The pressure ought not to be on President Reagan to push for more taxes but on the liberals in Congress to cut expenditures. The liberals, of course, continue to hold to the spend and elect philosophy that has guided them for 50 years. Mr. Will properly reminds us that Congress went into an uproar when Mr. Reagan proposed to change eligibility for subsidized student loans. Benefits for all is the theme of the liberal legislators.

The states, however, are beginning to learn that economies can be achieved in welfare programs. The State of Tennessee, for example, has succeeded in reducing overall spending on the food stamp program. This is the result of strict enforcement of the law to eliminate those who were free-loading. If the federal government displayed the same will, enormous savings could be achieved. Congress, however, must lead the way or, at least, do its part.

If Mr. Reagan were to do what Mr. Will deems necessary, he would be doing precisely what the liberals also want him to do. There would be no hope of slowing public spending.

Indeed there is plenty of expert testimony contrary to Mr. Will's position. In June, Dr. Norman B. True, chairman of the Institute for Research of Economics and Taxation, testified before the Senate Finance Committee. He argued that "The last thing in the world is a new layer of tax burdens." He added that "tax increases should not be on the congressional agenda until the recovery is assured, if not, indeed complete."

The national economic recovery is coming along nicely, but it is slow. In some lines of business and industry, it is very slow indeed. It is a tender plant that needs a lot of cultivation. A tax increase could cause it to wilt.

Indeed changes in the tax law should not consist of adding more of a burden. As Mr. True said in his testimony, "The real and critical deficiencies in the income tax system arise from the continuing bias against private saving and capital formation."

Those who say Americans are undertaxed should read Mr. True's testimony. It is compelling.

The last dying days of Lebanon...

By PAUL GREENBERG

It's just like the friendly old days in relations between the U.S. and Israel. The American president and the Israeli foreign minister are exchanging smiles for the camera. Caspar Weinberger, who always seemed more comfortable when he was badmouthing the Israelis, presides stiffly over a full-dress review in honor of his Israeli counterpart, Defense Minister Moshe Arens. Menachem Begin, the Arabists in the State Department, and other irritating elements are lying low. The joint communique issued at the end of the visit radiates harmony; both sides agree that the partial Israeli withdrawal from Lebanon is but a stage in their full withdrawal, in concert with all foreign forces in the country. All is copacetic. In short, both sides have agreed to pretend.

They have agreed to pretend that the Israeli withdrawal to southern Lebanon is something more than a quasi-desperate attempt to get out of the crossfire between Christian and Druse militias, that Lebanon is a country rather than a fiction, that it has a government instead of a decaying series of cliques, and that Lebanon hasn't already been partitioned and re-partitioned - not just between Israelis and Syrians, but among 57 varieties of other forces: Christian Phalangists and Christian non-Phalangists, Sunni Shiite Moslems, Druse mountaineers (who keep their religion a secret), and at least two different factions of the Palestine Liquidation Organization now bent on liquidating each other. Plus a wild congeries of armies, gangs, militias, and terrorists. This doesn't count a pro forma Lebanese army and the thinly spread international peacekeeping force, which is now reduced to keeping tabs on a multi-front war.

A dream is dying: The dream of a resurrected Lebanon arising in the wake of the Israeli invasion. The Israelis and Americans may be all for leaving Lebanon to the Lebanese, or at least their Lebanese, but Syria refuses to budge. Perhaps because Damascus still thinks of Lebanon (and perhaps Jordan, the West Bank, and Israel, too) as Greater Syria. While others fiddle with formulas, the Syrians do nothing. They need to do nothing else to carry out their policy: Obstruction.

As one American diplomat said, anonymously of course, about Syria's Hafez - al-Assad: "Mr. Assad knows exactly what he wants. Everyone else - the Americans, the Israelis, the Lebanese - is ambivalent." That may be to understate the case; everyone else seems tied in knots. The American position may resemble a contortionist's most of all. By now Washington has had at least five policies toward the Israeli invasion of Lebanon: Don't go in. Go in if you must, but not very far or very effectively. Get out. Don't get out. Get out but not very far.

For the moment, American and Israeli diplomats seem decided to be indecisive together. The other characters in search of a drama seem equally decided to be indecisive. Sober diplomatic formulas appear and disappear like the dust raised by machine-gun rounds. Nothing in Lebanon seems steady, permanent, reliable; only the casualties are real.

Perhaps if the Syrians would agree to withdraw, or withdraw partially, or just to talk about withdrawal... or if Bashir Gemayel had not been assassinated and replaced by his slippery brother... or if the Palestinians hadn't been slaughtered in their camps or, before that, hadn't slaughtered the Christians in their towns, or if a civil war hadn't been allowed to sputter dangerously for six or seven years... or if the West had intervened in 1975, or after when even George McGovern could see the need for intervention... or if every Lebanese family didn't seem to have something to mourn, to avenge, to kill... then the dream might be taking shape now. But it isn't. Most of the players, far from envisioning solutions, begin to want just out. And when that happens, the most fanatical, the most unforgiving, the most bloodthirsty may outstay the rest.

Lebanon's government lacks not just military or diplomatic force, but a moral mandate. It's not just without deep or widespread support; it may not deserve such support. The best example of its moral vacuum was scarcely

Lebanese cabinet ministers freed

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Leftist Druse gunners renewed their barrage on Beirut's airport and shelled a mountain army post today, but the rebellious sect freed three Cabinet ministers seized in an attempt to force the Cabinet to resign.

Government sources said the three ministers, seized Wednesday night, were unharmed and in good condition after intensive negotiations to gain their release. The sources did not explain what prompted the abductors free the captives.

The three were Adel Hamiyeh, minister of finance, a Druse; Pierre Khoury, minister of public works, a Maronite Christian; and Adnan Mroweh, minister of labor and public health, a Shiite Moslem.

The abductions, repeated Druse shelling attacks, and the Druse feud with Christian militias in the mountains overlooking Beirut have presented President Amin Gemayel with his most serious challenge since taking office last September.

The crisis has overshadowed U.S. presidential envoy Robert C. McFarlane's efforts to arrange a withdrawal of foreign armies from the country.

Today's renewed shelling began about 8 a.m., when two shells fell near the airport tower and on a runway, followed nearly three hours later by an intense barrage. Officials closed the airport, still recouping from Wednesday's attack.

No injuries were reported today, but five Lebanese were killed and 30 people wounded in the Wednesday barrage, including Marine 1st Lt. Alineal Morris of Sarasota, Fla., hit in the thigh by shrapnel.

Maj. John Shotwell, spokesman for the 1,200 Marine peacekeepers stationed at the airport, said today's shelling did not endanger the Marines, who dug new foxholes, sandbagged positions and reinforced bunkers.

In the lull between the shelling attacks, McFarlane returned to Beirut after an overnight trip to Israel. He arrived at the airport was driven safely to the American ambassador's residence in suburban Yarze.

On Wednesday, Druse gunners blasted the Defense Ministry and presidential palace and battled with Christian militias in the Israeli-occupied mountains overlooking the Lebanese capital.

US military commitments underscore Pentagon concern

By TIM AHERN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. military activity in Latin America and Africa is drawing attention to America's widespread defense commitments and underlining a key Pentagon concern about a possible manpower shortage.

The current maneuvers involve a relatively small number of America's 21 million uniformed personnel and are of generally short duration with the exception of the six-month-long series of exercises in Central America.

But they highlight a potential problem that U.S. military leaders and experts have warned about publicly in recent months — America doesn't have enough troops to fulfill all its commitments at once. Should greater numbers of troops be needed for a longer time, there would be manpower shortages.

Gen. John A. Wickham Jr., the new Army chief of staff, told reporters at the Pentagon earlier this week that "traditionally, we've had a range of contingency needs that probably exceed the force capabilities that we've been able to generate. That probably applies now."

Similar warnings have been sounded by other military leaders in recent months. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger, in arguing for the Reagan administration's record $1.8 trillion Pentagon buildup, says the money is needed to fulfill all the U.S. commitments abroad.

The United States is now taking part in three overseas exercises, in addition to moving about 550 men to the Sudan to operate and defend U.S. AWACS surveillance planes. The big jets were moved there to monitor the attempt of the U.S.-backed Chad government to repulse Libyan-supported rebels.

In Central America, the first elements of what will eventually be 5,000 U.S. ground troops began arriving this week in Honduras for a series of maneuvers that may take up to six months.

Meanwhile, the Navy has committed three battle groups — two aircraft carriers and a battleship — and a total of 19 ships to the maneuvers in what Wickham and other Pentagon officials say is an effort to "send a message" to potential enemies that the United States will support its friends such as Honduras.

A separate, and long-planned, Navy exercise also is underway in South America. Six ships and 2,000 men are part of the 24th annual "Unitas" exercises, a six-month series of naval maneuvers between U.S. ships and vessels from Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Ecuador, Peru, Uruguay and Venezuela.

In Egypt, 5,500 U.S. troops that are part of a rapid deployment force began joint American-Egyptian maneuvers in the third "Bright Star" exercise. The month-long exercises also involve smaller operations in Sudan, Oman and Somalia and a total of 7,000 U.S. troops in the four countries.

Two weeks from now, 17,000 Army and Air Force personnel will take part in the annual NATO exercises, one of the biggest annual maneuvers of the Western alliance.

In addition, 1,800 Marines have been in Beirut for 11 months as part of a multinational peacekeeping force and will remain there for an indefinite period. Lebanon has asked that the number of Marines be increased.

Except for the lengthy and highly publicized maneuvers in Honduras and the Marines in Beirut, the exercises are among the 120 "significant" military maneuvers the Pentagon plans each year, 90 percent of which are overseas. That figure doesn't include smaller exercises run by each of the four services.

Because of the small number of troops involved, the maneuvers don't tax U.S. commitments, but if the numbers of troops were increased or the maneuvers extended beyond their usual length of three to four weeks, American personnel would have to be shifted.

Wickham and other members of the Joint Chiefs of Staff have warned that the current defense buildup, while providing dozens of new weapons systems, could mean a manpower shortage as the new weapons enter service later in the decade.

Layoff to be costly

PORT ARTHUR, Texas (AP) — The "good old days" when the economy of the Southeast Texas coastal area was propped up by the petrochemical industry are gone forever, an economist says.

The planned firing of about 400 Texaco Inc. employees later this month will cost the area at least $22 million, said Bernard L. Weinstein, an economist.

The scheduled layoffs, which could push the local unemployment up as much as two percentage points, provide an example of the need for Southeast Texas cities to diversify their economies, Weinstein said Wednesday.

"We need something to take the place of these jobs we are losing right now," he said.

Weinstein said the petrochemical industry will continue to be an integral part of the area's future.

"Petrochemicals will still be around, but at best it's going to be holding its own. Generally, it will not be a growth industry anymore," he said.

Texaco is set to begin on Aug. 19 the closure of greasemaking, packing and shipping, and lubrication oil blending and compounding facilities.

Dear Abby

Battering boyfriend wants a chance to redeem himself

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1983 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: I am dating a very beautiful and sensitive woman who has been beaten by her father, brothers, ex-husband and boyfriends. She is 42, and I am 38. When we started going together (a year ago), she promised that I would be the only man in her life.

Last week she admitted to having had sex with three other men while going with me. I forgave her, then I found out that a fourth man had given her a lobster for Mother's Day. Knowing that a man doesn't give a woman a lobster for nothing, I questioned her and she admitted she had had sex with him, too. I became upset and jealous and unintentionally sprained her wrist and yanked her hair.

She said my actions had hurt her more than all the fractures she had received from all the other men put together, and she never wants to see me again.

Since this was the first time I ever did anything like that, don't you think she should give me another chance so I can prove it will never happen again?

NEEDS HER

DEAR NEEDS: Not necessarily. A woman who has been battered as much as your ladyfriend reaches a point where she finally says, "Enough!"

Any woman who continues going with a man who has physically abused her once can expect a repeat performance unless he gets professional help and learns to control his anger.

DEAR ABBY: I am a 13-year-old girl, and my problem is my house. You see, we live in a middle-class neighborhood, but my parents aren't as wealthy as everyone else. Our house is falling apart, but we can't afford to fix it up, and it really is a disgrace.

I'm losing all my friends because I'm too embarrassed to invite anybody over. They keep inviting me to their houses, but I can't ask them back because I don't want them to know I live in a dump.

Please help me before I lose all my good friends. Sometimes I feel so bad I just burst into tears.

BURSTING IN BUFFALO

DEAR BURSTING: Would you drop a good friend because you discovered she lived in a "dump"? True friends judge you on what you are, not the kind of house you live in.

DEAR ABBY: Your advice to "For Better or for Worse," who discovered after being married for 38 years that her husband was having an affair with a young woman, was right on, Abby. And a belated thanks to you.

Several years ago, my husband had an affair that put me in the deepest depression. I wrote to you and you advised counseling. I took your advice, and because of it and the help and support of my family doctor I came out of that horrible experience a better, stronger and happier person. We will soon celebrate our 30th wedding anniversary.

You are so right. If there's a shred of hope that a marriage can be saved, try to work it out. One has everything to gain and nothing to lose. The real loser was the other woman.

THE WINNER

Cool for the pool

Shape-showing Lycra is 'in'

By Florence De Santis

NEW YORK (NEA) — Everyone wants new swimwear for the summer months, and designers bring out their latest ideas, testing fashions for the next warm seasons. The result right now is a mix of current bold looks and a trend to more delicate styles.

Because stretch nylon maillots have overwhelmed everything else for some time, swimsuits in terry, jersey or stretch cotton are beginning to appear. However, there are still lots of the figure-sleeking Lycra/nylon blends that take brilliant colors and bold prints so well.

At Diva, Lycra/cotton stretch in gold and rust stripes is used for a strapless suit with matching rompers that convert it into a playsuit. However, Valery Easley of St. Raphael not only likes Lycra/nylon, but uses a European mix with 20 percent Lycra to get even more brilliant colors in her engineered prints handscreened in Como, Italy.

Her strapless maillot is divided down the front by shirred seaming, with one half of the suit in auto racing flag checks of black, white and orange, the other half in a sunburst of spearhead rays overlaying stripes. Use of such geometric elements in prints is called "graphics."

Another theme that continues to interest swimsuit designers is the combination of stripes and flowers. The California house called Dippers likes navy and white stripes crisscrossing a suit in reverse halves, with big, spaced flowers on the navy-striped white half. Sea Fashions does an entire group of suits in black and white tiger stripes bordered in overlaid red poppies.

Another group features a big front motif of chevron striping in ombred blue or pink shades, overlaid with a single large floral bouquet. Stripes and coin dots, stripes and graphics, stripes and solid color blocks — just stripes are no longer enough, bold as these have been. Stripes alone are more likely to show up in the new knit or terry suits, such as a white wool knit bikini by Gloria Sachs, with wavy stripes in soft purple. It's the softness of colors in fabrics other than Lycra/nylon that is causing some designers to start in their direction.

The softer color look appears in Lycra/cotton maillots that still keep the sleekness of stretch. At Wavelengths, a black Lycra/cotton maillot is midriff-striped in gray, red and white. Oscar de la Renta for Wavelengths puts a wedge-shaped striped front inset on his red Lycra/cotton suit. Danskin's stretch cotton leotard suit with little sleeves and placket trim is pencil-striped in soft multi-color.

In all-cotton suits, some delicate looks begin to surface, such as Monica Tilley's white cotton knit maillot with slip-cut top trimmed in lace. Anne Cole of Los Angeles restores the boy leg to a white ribbed cotton knit suit with "under-shirt" top. Elton's red ribbed cotton knit has a classic tank top with navy and white striped bottom, pretending to be two-piece. Unlike strapless styles, these suits are for action.

SEA FASHIONS' Lycra/nylon stretch fabric in navy sleeks the figure; hidden bra, shirred top support and shape; straps allow action. News is the print, engineered in ombred chevron striping of blue or pink tones with overlay of single floral bouquet. About $30.

BOLD GRAPHICS jump in brilliant colors on a shirred-front strapless swimsuit by Valery Easley for St. Raphael in Lycra/nylon stretch. Half racing car flag checks, half sunburst spear rays over stripes. It's in black, white and orange. About $52.

Making scents

After a long hard day of work, T.V. actress Melissa Sue Anderson has her own special way to perk up her looks. "I just go a little bit heavier on the perfume at ears, neck and wrist," she told Beauty Digest magazine. "I also wash my hair, and let it dry naturally. The knowledge that my hair is clean and bouncy, and with a discreet hint of my favorite perfume, gets me in a good mood for the evening."

At Whiting and Davis, texture stars, in their exclusive "sport mesh" material, a honeycomb effect used in black, bone and other solid colors. Shapes here include classic hobo, zip tote and fold-over shoulder bag styles, often with smooth leather trims. Some bags take splashes of bright color woven in.

Try leather clutches in summer

By Florence De Santis

NEW YORK (NEA) — Designers have abandoned straw as boring in creating handbags this summer. Fabrics of all kinds, and even leathers, look more original, yet light enough for summer.

Vittorio Ricci, for example, chooses polished kid in delicate tints for such ideas as his envelope with an unexpected cone-shaped roll on one side of the flap. His two-tone envelope features half-moon flaps meeting and overlapping each other.

Most original is his evening clutch folded just like a napkin and made of real napkin damask, edged in kid.

For day, Ricci combines natural-color linen and black polished kidskin in architectural shapes. An expandable clutch has the half-moon flap and side gussets in black kid. An arch-

Raw material prices show economy is up

By CHET CURRIER
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — When prices of industrial raw materials like zinc, rubber and tallow rise, few consumers take any immediate notice.

But economists regard changes in the prices of such commodities as a sensitive indicator of where the economy is heading. The market for zinc, for example, tells something about the state of the market for the many products in which it is used — from roof gutters and television screens to cosmetics and luminous dials of clocks.

Rubber becomes tires and elastic bands, beach toys and surgical gloves. Tallow goes into detergent, shortening, plastics and more. An index of these and other raw materials, compiled by the Commodity Research Bureau, a publisher of commodities information, reached a peak in early 1980. After that, it fell about 25 percent by last winter as economies around the world languished in recession.

But since then it has been bouncing back, posting an increase of more than 12 percent from last December to July.

"Raw materials prices respond quickly to changes in supply and demand," said Jack Lavery, chief economist at Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith Inc.

"Increases in raw materials prices generally signal that economic activity is expanding," he wrote in a recent commentary. "They also suggest future increases in the overall rate of inflation, because a pickup in raw materials prices heightens costs at the initial stages of production. Eventually these increases can feed through to prices of finished products."

Changes in raw materials prices have proven to be a fair-to-middling advance indicator of trends in inflation, Lavery said. He believes the consumer price index will be rising at a 6.5 percent to 7.5 percent annual rate by 1985, more than double its current pace.

But he says a "drastic resurgence" of inflation is not necessarily in the cards, particularly if rising interest rates and a slowdown in the progress of the economic recovery reduce upward pressure on raw-material prices.

In the meantime, according to economists at New York's Citibank, the recent upswing in commodity prices promises some help for developing countries now struggling to get out from under a burden of debt. Though these countries have been working to build an industrial base, exports of primary commodities still typically play a vital role in their economies.

According to the International Monetary Fund, these nations exported roughly $120 billion in primary commodities in 1980. But with demand slack and prices falling, the total dropped about $20 billion in 1981 and another $15 billion last year.

Recipient's wife attends donor's funeral

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Vicky Willis left her husband's bedside to attend the funeral of Leslie Smith, a man she had never met.

Thanks to Smith's family, who donated the man's organs, Mrs. Willis' husband is getting a second chance at life.

"I couldn't get it out of my head," Mrs. Willis said.

Smith died Sunday of injuries he suffered three days earlier from a bicycle accident in Stillwater, Minn.

Mrs. Willis' husband, Pat, 36, may live because of the transplant. Doctors transplanted the St. Paul, Minn., man's heart into Willis in a 7½-hour operation Sunday night at University of Minnesota Hospital.

Willis, who lives in the Dallas area, suffers from cardiomyopathy, a heart condition in which the heart enlarges as the muscle tissue degenerates, turning fibrotic. Two younger brothers have died from the same ailment.

He had been hospitalized since late May and flown in June by air ambulance to Minneapolis. "He did fine. The new heart was a very good one," Dr. R. Morton "Chip" Bolman, chief surgeon of the heart transplant team, told the Dallas Times Herald.

Smith suffered a head injury in the bicycle crash. He had been in excellent physical condition, drank rarely and did not smoke, officials said.

Mrs. Willis said she meant to be an anonymous visitor at Smith's funeral Wednesday but was moved, she said, when the officiating Catholic priest said, "Even though Leslie is gone, he's touched lives. His heart beats gladly in the body of another man."

She decided to introduce herself to the priest, she said. "I asked an usher if I could see 'the father,' and he brought me Randy Smith, the father of the man who died. So I told him who I was," she said.

"He grabbed me. We just held each other, maybe for two minutes. He was just so genuinely happy. He told me to be sure to let him know how Pat is doing. He really, really wants to know. I think this gives meaning to his son's death."

Bolman, the surgeon, said Willis took a turn for the worse last week.

"We all thought he was going to die. His kidneys were starting to fail. For a couple of days, he was too sick to transplant, even if we'd gotten a heart," Bolman said. Doctors installed an intra-aortic balloon pump which kept Willis' heart pumping. They told Mrs. Willis her husband had "about a week."

"I felt he was being kept alive beyond his time for a reason," she said.

A nurse who watched the operation said the diseased heart that doctors removed was "huge" and no longer resembled a human heart.

Cardiomyopathy appears to be congenital in the Willis family, passed from mothers to sons. As far back as the family can trace, no male in the family has lived past age 40. One of his brothers died of the disease in 1977 at age 22 and another in 1979 at age 21.

Dollar still going strong

By The Associated Press
A strong dollar gained further ground on foreign exchange markets early today in trading described as quiet and hesitant.

The dollar rose against all major currencies except the Canadian dollar, hitting new all-time highs against the French franc and the Italian lira.

The American currency, trading at its highest level against the West German marks in 9 1/2 years, broke through the 2.73 mark barrier in the first hour of Frankfurt trading. It later settled at 2.7285 marks, up from 2.7190 Wednesday.

Traders said the dollar was being helped by predictions of another surge in the basic U.S. money supply and a feeling that central banks had all but abandoned their recent coordinated intervention policy.

But they said most big investors appeared to be awaiting outcome of today's meeting by West Germany's Central Bank Council. The dollar was bolstered Wednesday by forecasts that American interest rates will rise and the central Bundesbank will take no steps to match the increase.

In the United States Wednesday, the Commerce Department reported the retail sales boom slowed in July. However, the Reagan administration says it expects a new spurt of growth once consumers "catch their breath" from earlier buying sprees.

The Commerce Department said retail sales last month were 0.03 percent lower than in June, although the July total was 10.3 percent higher than a year earlier.

"Consumers paused to catch their breath in July after boosting their spending sharply" in the April-June quarter, said Malcolm Baldrige, the Commerce Secretary.

Other economic news: —Robert M. Sinche, chief economist at the investment firm of Bear, Stearns & Co., told a news briefing that inflation is likely to rise to the 6 1/2 percent to 7 percent range in the second half of next year and to between 7 percent and 7 1/2 percent in the first half of 1985. Inflation, as measured by the Consumer Price Index, was 3.9 percent last year, and many economists believe the rate will be slightly below that this year.

—The Civil Aeronautics Board voted 4-0 to begin regulating airline reservations systems to safeguard against domination of the computerized service by a few big companies. Many air carriers, particularly smaller ones unable to establish their own systems, have complained to the CAB that anti-competitive biases are built into American Airline's Sabre computer reservation system and United Airline's Apollo system.

Where the death squads walk

Colombian soldiers stand outside their quarters in Cimitarra, Colombia. Residents say that last July the soldiers had disappeared just before four men, armed with submachine guns, came down the street, seized five men and executed them at the edge of the town. The death squads are said to have killed 3127 people in Colombia during the past year. (AP Laserphoto)

Town's residents recall a visit by a Colombian death squad

EDITOR'S NOTE: Right-wing death squads, frequently accused of operating with the knowledge of government officials and made up of police and military personnel, flourish in many Latin American countries. Here is the story of one such death squad operation as pieced together from interviews with witnesses to the event.

By TOM WELLS
Associated Press Writer

CIMITARRA, Colombia (AP) — As they told the story later, residents recalled that the temperature hung in the low 90s and not a whisper of breeze moved the palms as four men, each with a submachine gun, strode side by side down a dirt street. They said they knew immediately that the death squad was coming, and they would always remember the day, Monday July 18.

They recalled that people lingered outside the adjoining concrete-walled houses and then slipped silently inside doorways as the men headed for La Ruiz, a small restaurant with six tables.

Witnesses who claimed to have been there said the only customers at that hour were a dozen men who had come into town to buy supplies for their small farms hacked out of the jungle along the Carare River.

They said the gunmen walked straight into the restaurant and ordered five men out into the street. The men were ordered to lie down in front of police headquarters, next door to the restaurant. Their hands were handcuffed behind their backs, said witnesses who asked not to be identified for fear they would be the squad's next victims.

The gunmen said they had a list of 180 people to be executed and that they would be back, the witnesses claimed.

The five men from the restaurant were marched down the darkened street. Over a period of several minutes, gunshots punctuated the darkness. A few hours later, the bodies of the five men, still bearing watches and money, were found on the edge of town. Each had been shot in the back of the head.

Some Colombian newspapers have theorized that any army people involved with the death squads are operating on their own or in connection with cattle ranchers and big businessmen impatient with Colombia's turtle pace system of Justice.

The Colombian Human Rights Commission says death squads have killed 327 people in the last year. Many of those killed had been investigated by the army for suspected links with leftist guerrillas, Colombian newspapers have said.

In February, the attorney general's office, acting on orders of President Belisario Betancur to put an end to the terror, accused 163 people of being members of the death squads.

Fifty-nine of those named were active members of the army, including two lieutenant colonels. Sixteen others were retired army soldiers and the others were civilians.

Only one of the colonels and the 16 retired soldiers were charged with taking part in murders. The others were simply said to be members of the death squads.

US to apologize to France

NEW YORK (AP) — A draft Justice Department report contains a United States apology to France for allowing Nazi Klaus Barbie to escape prosecution for war crimes after World War II, NBC News reported today.

The Justice Department, which has been investigating U.S. ties to Barbie, was expected to release the report later in the day, NBC said.

Barbie, 69, called the "Butcher of Lyon" because of his role as chief of the Gestapo in Lyon from 1942 to 1944, was extradited to France last February from Bolivia.

Church leaders attack US policy

VANCOUVER, British Columbia (AP) — The World Council of Churches assembly assailed American military involvement in Central America, calling for an end to U.S. efforts to "contain the aspirations" of the region's people.

In its closing hours Wednesday night, the 18-day assembly also denounced South Africa's apartheid policy of race and adopted a sweeping condemnation of nuclear weapons, calling their production, deployment or use a "crime against humanity."

In a statement on the Mideast, the assembly criticized Israel and backed the Palestinian right to a sovereign state.

Regarding Central America, the assembly strongly opposed "any type of military intervention by the United States, covert or overt, or by any other government."

That position parallels that of most major U.S. Protestant denominations and of U.S. Roman Catholic bishops in urging withdrawal of all outside forces.

But the global church body also accused the U.S. administration of launching broad military, financial and political policies against Central America's people.

The aim is to "destabilize the Nicaraguan government, renew international support for Guatemala's violent military regimes, resist the forces of historic change in El Salvador and militarize Honduras," the assembly said.

It said the militarization of Honduras was to ensure "a base from which to contain the aspirations of Central American people," although ostensibly for reform, peace, democracy and to prevent communism.

"The opposite prevails," the assembly said, as violence escalates and undermines the "legitimate interests and security of the nations and peoples of the American hemisphere."

A Reagan administration spokeswoman, in an interview published Wednesday, blasted U.S. church leaders and the news media for confusing or distorting U.S. policy in Central America.

Faith Whittlesey, the administration's director of public liaison, said church leaders tend wrongly "to characterize the Sandinistas as Robin Hoods, essentially fighting for social justice."

Concerning South Africa, the assembly said racism destroys "human dignity both of the racist and the victim."

Earlier this week the assembly refused to demand that the Soviet Union withdraw its 100,000 troops from Afghanistan immediately, but called for a cutoff of arms shipments to rebels fighting the occupation.

Londonderry police HQ roof is torched

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — Catholic rioters hurled gasoline bombs onto the roof of a Londonderry police station and set it aflame in the fourth straight night of sectarian violence in the British province.

Firemen swiftly extinguished the blaze Wednesday night on the roof of the police station on the edge of the staunchly Catholic Creggan quarter of Northern Ireland's second largest city.

Nobody inside was reported hurt, and the city was reported calm early today.

Earlier Wednesday, a British soldier in the capital of Belfast was charged with the murder of 22-year-old Roman Catholic Thomas Reilly. It was the second killing in 10 days by British troops in Northern Ireland.

Pvt. Ian Richard Thain, 18, of the Light Infantry Regiment, appeared at Belfast Magistrates Court and was freed on the equivalent of $150 bail after his commanding officer said he would not be allowed to leave the province. He did not enter a plea.

Witnesses said Reilly was unarmed when he was shot Tuesday during a street scuffle between Catholic youths and troops in the staunchly anti-British Ballymurphy quarter of west Belfast.

Sporadic violence flared in west Belfast Wednesday afternoon after an estimated 1,000 Catholics attended a rally called by Sinn Fein, legal political wing of the outlawed Irish Republican Army, to protest Reilly's killing.

The mostly Catholic IRA is fighting to drive the British out of Northern Ireland and unite the Protestant-dominated province with the predominantly Catholic Irish Republic to the south.

Relatives of the dead man placed a wreath at the spot where he died, then marched past the army base where Thain was stationed.

Rioters lobbed gasoline bombs at police while others hijacked vehicles, including two buses and a van, and set them afire.

But a Belfast police spokesman said the violence was "relatively minor by Northern Ireland standards" and it faded as night fell.

Reilly's death brought the toll since sectarian fighting flared in 1969 to at least 2,306.

The most recent spree of violence began Sunday when Catholic youths took to the streets to mark the 12th anniversary of Britain's policy of internment suspected terrorists without trial. The policy was abandoned in 1976, but IRA supporters still mark the anniversary.

World record

Carl Lewis raises his arms after he passes the finish line in the 400-meter relay at the World Track and Field Championships Wednesday in Helsinki. Lewis won his third gold medal and anchored the U.S. team to a world record. (AP Laserphoto)

Americans break world record with 37.86 time

HELSINKI, Finland (AP) — The United States has thrust itself back on top as the world power in sprinting, mainly because of Carl Lewis.

The swift and powerful Lewis, who runs with the speed of a runaway locomotive, anchored the American 400-meter relay team to a world record Wednesday night in the inaugural World Track and Field Championships.

Churning down the final 100 meters to the cheers of 50,000 fans in Olympic Stadium, Lewis swept across the finish line well ahead of his closest pursuers.

As he did, he glanced at the clock.

"When I first looked at it, I thought it said 38.8 (seconds)," said Lewis.

"I did a double-take. Then, I looked again... and I realized it was 37.8."

Actually, it was 37.86 seconds.

The old record was 38.03 by a United States team in the 1977 World Cup at Dusseldorf, West Germany.

Preceding Lewis on the relay were Emmitt King, Willie Gault and Calvin Smith.

Lewis, Smith and King also had finished 1-2-3 in the men's 100-meter final Monday night, and Lewis led a 1-2-3 finish in the long jump Wednesday night.

The multi-talented 22-year-old from Willingboro, N.J., won with a leap of 8.55 meters (28 feet, three-quarters inch), and was followed by Jason Grimes at 8.29 (27-2 1/2) and Mike Conley at 8.12 (26-7 3/4).

Despite the impressive long jump finish, it was the relay team that commanded the most attention.

The Americans, once the world power in the sprints, had slipped in recent years, failing to win a gold medal in the 100- and 200-meter dashes in the 1972 and 1976 Olympic Games.

And in 1980, the United States boycotted the Summer Games, further diminishing the American sprinters' credibility.

But led by Lewis, who has been ranked No. 1 in the world in the 100 each of the past two years, they are solidly on top again.

Surprisingly, it was the first world record for Lewis, the world's best sprinter and long jumper. He does, however, have the best times in history in the 100 and 200 at sea level, and the best distance in the long jump at sea level.

But the outright world record was something special.

"It's a dream come true," he said.

Today was a day off, before the final three days of competition begin Friday.

Decker runs wire-to-wire, wins long race over the world's best HELSINKI, Finland (AP) — She's been doing it for a long time in America, but leading from start to finish has been the name of the game only recently in Europe.

Mary Decker did it for the third straight time since June 26 Wednesday night at the World Track and Field Championships, outkicking a West German and two Soviets to win the 3,000-meter final before a 50,000 throng at Helsinki's Olympic Stadium.

Decker, who turned 25 last week, led from the gun lap as she broke the American records in the 1,500 (3:57.12) in Stockholm, Sweden, June 26 and the 800 (1:57.60) five days later in another meet at Gateshead, England.

She was timed in 8:34.62 Wednesday night — far off the world record of 8:26.78 owned by Russian Svetlana Ulmasova, who was fourth here, and her American record of 8:29.71.

Decker owns one world record (the non-championship 5,000) and six American records.

But, of course, this victory was by far the most important one of her career, which started at 11 when she ran in — and won — a cross-country race in her hometown, Huntington Beach, Calif.

"I was so proud to see the American flag up on top tonight. And I want to see our flag up on top next year, too, in the Los Angeles Olympics," Decker said after capturing the first gold medal for the U.S. Women's team.

This inaugural championship in the most popular sport on the Olympic program was the closest thing to the Olympics that Decker has been involved in.

She didn't compete in the 1976 Summer Games in Montreal due to an injury and four years later, the United States and several other Western nations boycotted the Moscow Olympics because of the Soviet Union's invasion of Afghanistan.

Winner of the Sullivan Award — the most prestigious U.S. amateur sports honor — for her remarkable performances last year, Decker recently predicted the strong Eastern Europeans would not run away from her if it all came down to a deciding kick.

"If I have to kick I will be able to kick. I'm fast and strong enough. I think I have a good kick," she said after breaking her American 1,500 record in Stockholm last month.

None of her rivals had an answer Wednesday night.

Tatiana Kazankina, the world 1,500 record holder, tried but failed. She came up level with some 50 meters left, but wilted to eventually finish third in 8:35.13, two-100ths behind runner-up Brigitte Kraus of West Germany.

"I sensed Kazankina,"

Decker said. "She did the same thing in the heats. When I sensed it tonight I took a deep breath. I did not feel tense. I knew I had a good kick."

Decker's plan was to lead so she could stay out of trouble.

"I'm basically a strength runner. I haven't worked much on my kick," she said.

But the kick was right there Wednesday night.

League, owners, players and union all stuck in pine-tar controversy

NEW YORK (AP) — The Kansas City Royals are in favor of resuming the controversial pine-tar game next week. Now it's decision time for the New York Yankees players, who have two options — play or forfeit.

Meanwhile, the Major League Baseball Players Association must decide whether to contest or forget the matter.

The controversy stems from a July 24 game in which the Royals' George Brett had a two-run homer in the top of the ninth inning disallowed by the umpires because of too much pine tar on his bat.

American League President Lee MacPhail later overruled the decision, and said the game should be resumed Aug. 18 with four outs to go and Kansas City leading 5-4.

The Royals voted 15-10 Wednesday night to play, according to player representative Dan Quisenberry.

"If we played at the end of the year, we'd have to fly all the way across the country from California," he said. "Everybody's tired in August anyway, so what's another game? It's important to get the thing squared away."

Although the Yankees didn't take an official vote, player rep Dave Winfield said a poll of team members Tuesday night showed unanimous opposition to the Aug. 18 makeup.

"You have to look at the negatives," Winfield said. "We could fail to get the two runs we need to win and we'd lose momentum in a very important pennant race."

"At the same time, we would add to our problems by having to play on what would be a day off."

But Yankees' principal owner George Steinbrenner, who is against completing the game before the season ends, said, "It's against our wishes... but we'll play it."

But the decision may not be his to make.

Don Fehr, counsel to the players' association, said the Aug. 18 date could violate the section of the collective bargaining agreement which states: "No club shall be scheduled or rescheduled to play more than 20 consecutive days without an open day."

Mark Belanger, special assistant to the players' union, met Wednesday with MacPhail. He said the players association could file for arbitration if it determines that there have been a violation of players' rights or simply drop it.

"Those are the two possibilities," he said. "We hope to come up with something very soon."

Trail Dodgers by four games

Houston moving up in standings

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston Astros' shortstop Dickie Thon says an extra-inning game is just a matter of concentration — and getting one's second wind.

Thon lived up to his advice Wednesday night, slamming a towering home run to left field in the 14th inning to give the Astros a 4-3 win over the San Diego Padres.

"You just have to have your second wind to take an extra-inning game," Thon said. "They're all important. You just have to continue to concentrate."

Thon said he surprised himself with the homer, his 16th of the year.

"I wasn't thinking home run tonight," he said. "I just wanted to get on base. I hit a slider and I wasn't really looking for that pitch."

The power output surprised Thon — but not Houston Manager Bob Lillis.

"I knew he had power, and he's shown consistent power this year, especially since it's hard to hit home runs in this park (the Astrodome)," Lillis said.

Thon's homer, which came off reliever Luis DeLeon, 2-4, gave the third-place Astros a little breathing room over San Diego in the National League West. The Astros pushed their record to 57-54, while the Padres dropped to 56-57.

Houston also was helped by the fact that the division-leading Atlanta Braves and second-place Los Angeles Dodgers both lost, enabling Houston to close within four games of the Dodgers.

The Astros still trail the Braves by 10 1/2 games.

Vern Ruhle, 4-3, pitched the 14th inning to earn the victory. Starter Bob Knepper appeared to have the game under control until the eighth inning, when the Padres tied the score at 3-3 on Alan Wiggins' two-out, two-run single.

Garry Templeton and Kurt Bevacqua chased starter Bob Knepper with singles, and Bobby Brown's groundout to first base off reliever Frank DiPino advanced Bonilla to third and Bevacqua to second, setting the stage for Wiggins' tying hit.

Templeton disrupted Knepper's no-hit bid with a two-out single in the fifth inning. Juan Bonilla's subsequent double cut the Astros' lead to 3-1.

With one out in the first inning, Thon and Phil Garner singled off Padres starter Dave Dravecky. Both scored when Jose Cruz doubled to left-center field.
