

They've changed astronauts, but reunion begins

By LARRY HOLLIS
Staff Writer

Astronaut Maj. David Hilmer will be the featured speaker for activities of the 11th annual reunion of the Pampa Army Air Field Association this weekend.

Maj. Hilmer will speak on the space flights at the banquet beginning at 7 p.m. Saturday in the Starlight Room. He is replacing John M. Lounge, NASA astronaut, who was unable to attend.

An open house will be held at 7 p.m. today in the Starlight Room of the Coronado Inn, followed by a steak dinner.

Registration will be conducted beginning at 9 a.m. tomorrow in the Starlight Room. A business luncheon will be held at noon.

The association has more than 500 members, with 100 living in the Pampa area.

The Pampa Army Air Field graduated 6,000 cadets in advanced twin-engine training school for bomber pilots during World War II. It was located east of the city on the site now occupied by Moody Farms. The base was closed in 1946.

Former military personnel and civilian employees formed the association and began holding annual reunions 11 years ago.

Maj. Hilmer was born at Clinton, Iowa, and completed his public education in Iowa schools. He received a bachelor of science degree in mathematics from Cornell College in 1972.

He entered the U.S. Marine Corps in July, 1972. While completing his regular assignments, he continued his education in the U.S. Naval Post Graduate School, earning a master of science degree in electrical engineering with distinction and receiving a degree as electrical engineer upon graduation in 1978.

After entering the Marines, he attended basic school, naval flight officer school and bombardier navigation classes. In 1975 he served as air liaison officer with the 1st Battalion, 2nd Marines. While with the 1st Marine Aircraft Wing at Iwakuni, Japan, he also taught mathematics for the University of Maryland overseas branch.

He was stationed with the 3rd Marine Aircraft Wing at El Toro, Calif., when he was selected by the National Aeronautics and Space Administration in 1980 for admittance into its astronaut program.

In addition to assisting with technical aspects of the space flights programs at NASA in Houston, Maj. Hilmer currently serves as chief of astronaut appearances.

Persons desiring further information on the reunion activities may call 665-2526.

Women are no longer a minority in the nation

WASHINGTON (AP) — American women increased their numerical superiority over men during the past decade while the overall U.S. population aged a bit, reversing a two-decade trend, new census figures show.

The national enumeration of 1980 found 94.5 males for every 100 females, down from the 94.8 counted in 1970, the Bureau of the Census reported Thursday.

That decline prolonged a trend that began when the 1950 census showed women outnumbering men for the first time in this century. There are still more boy babies born than girls, but women live longer.

Many of the other findings also showed trends continuing, including the gradual decline in what is still a heavy white majority. However, there was one notable switch in the report: the increase in the median age of the population.

The median age — meaning as many Americans were older as were younger — rose to an even 30 years in 1980 from the 28.1 years of the 1970 census.

"This marks the return of the nation's population to its pre-'baby-boom' aging trend," the report said. Before the boom of births after World War II, the median age had risen steadily from 20.9 years in 1880 to 30.1 years in 1950.

The median had dipped to 29.5 in 1960 and then to 28.1 in 1970 as American parents produced millions of infants before the surge slowed in the 1970s. Many of those children of the 1950s are now 30 years old or near it, raising the overall age of the population.

Other details on aging showed the number of Americans 65 years or older increasing to 25.5 million in 1980, accounting for 11.3 percent of the population compared with 9.9 percent in 1970.

In the matter of race, the report said whites made up 83.1 percent of the population in 1980, down from 87.5 percent in the 1970 census.

That drop was much sharper than for previous 10-year periods. For example, the white population had dipped only from 89.6 percent of the U.S. total in 1940 to 89.3 percent in 1950 and then to 88.6 percent in 1960 and 87.5 percent in 1970. But the bigger new decline was probably not as significant as it looked at first glance.

In the past, the report said, people who did not classify themselves in one of the relatively few racial categories on census forms but instead checked "other" and wrote in such entries as "Cuban" or "Mexican" were usually lumped with the already dominant "white" category in the final tally. In 1980 they were merely left as "other," thus increasing that category from 0.4 percent of the population in 1970 to 3.5 percent in 1980.

Still, the decline in white percentage was larger than could be accounted for by that change.

Among the largest racial minority groups, blacks increased to 11.7 percent of the population from 11.1 percent.

Boy bitten by rat

By JULIA CLARK
Staff Writer

Sunday just wasn't Dusty's day. Dusty Romines, described by family and neighbors as "a shy boy," was bitten on the middle finger by a rat.

In March, 1982, then two-year-old Dusty was attacked and bitten by three dogs, his mother said.

Dawn Romines of 1601 N. Duncan said her son Dusty "just has bad luck."

Dusty went with his parents to their shop on south Nelson Street on Sunday. While his parents were working, around two o'clock in the afternoon, Dusty was playing in another area of the building, Dawn said. He told his mother he had been bitten.

Dawn said when she asked Dusty what had bitten him, he said, "That cat," pointing to where he had been. When Mr. and Mrs. Romines looked in the direction their son was pointing, they saw a "big old rat."

Dusty said, "It had a big tail. I tried to step on it."

His mother said she thinks he probably was just playing around and stuck his hand in somewhere without seeing the animal.

Because Dusty had undergone the rabies series of vaccination shots less than two years ago, he will not have to have them this time, his mother said.

According to the rabies expert in Canyon, all Dusty needs is "booster" immunization. He will have one shot Friday and another Monday.

Dusty's mother has decided to keep the booster shots up, from now on. "With his bad luck, we'll get the boosters every two years," that way Dusty will be protected, she said in a phone interview this morning.

According to Dawn Romines, if an individual has taken the rabies series, a booster shot every two years will keep up the immunity. However, if Dusty gets bitten again he'll have to take two shots. One is the rabies and the other one is for the bite itself, to help prevent a localized infection.

Dusty's "bad luck" started when he was playing in a neighbor's front yard a year and a half ago.

He and a young friend were playing when three strange dogs attacked him. The young friend alerted her mother, who tried to try to frighten the dogs away.

According to the reports, Dusty was bitten about the body by a dog which looked like a pit bull mix. The report said the dog had a strong hold on Dusty.

The owner of the dog eventually pleaded guilty to a charge of allowing a dog at large, according to the report.

Giant hole opens up

BOLING, Texas (AP) — A sinkhole believed to be 600 to 700 feet deep opened overnight, caving in a strip of a rural Wharton County highway, authorities said today.

No injuries were reported, but at least two vehicles disappeared in the hole after their drivers escaped, said Wharton County Sheriff's Capt. Marvin Smith.

"We've got a pretty good little hole," Smith said.

The hole opened along a 100-foot long stretch of FM 442, which was closed after the first of the two drivers called authorities, Smith said.

The hole, about 4 miles east of this community and 70 miles east of Houston, stretches 200 feet across FM 442 from one pasture to another, Smith said, adding, "They believe it's about 600 to 700 feet deep."

"We got a call yesterday about a little dip in the road," he said. "It wasn't a hole or nothing. Then about 12:12 this morning we got the first call and it was already a big hole."

Soviet diplomat's son wants out

WASHINGTON (AP) — The State Department wants to talk to a Soviet diplomat's son who has asked President Reagan for help in staying in the United States. The boy told a newspaper, "I hate my country and its rules and I love your country."

Robert Williams, State Department press officer, said the Soviet Embassy has been asked to keep the teen-ager here so he can be interviewed by U.S. officials who will "ascertain his intentions."

The State Department announced Thursday night that Reagan had received a letter from the boy, but officials would not identify him by name or provide the name or position of his father.

The diplomatic officer on duty at the Soviet Embassy said he was unaware of the letter and the State Department's announcement and could make no immediate comment. He declined to give his name.

However, today's editions of The New York Times identified the boy as Andrei V. Berezhkov, 16, son of Valentin M. Berezhkov, an embassy first secretary.

The newspaper said the youth took his parents' car and left the family's Bethesda, Md., home Wednesday because, according to a letter he wrote the newspaper's Washington bureau, "I hate my country and its rules and I love your country."

The youth returned home on his own at 2 a.m. Thursday, the Times said.

The newspaper said the young man's letter, in English with a few spelling mistakes, said he also had written the president asking for help. The letter was dated Tuesday.

The letter to the Times also said in part: "I want to stay here. So I'm running away. I'll drive up to the US mission in New York. If the letter doesn't get to President it time I hope you help me. I love your people and country."

Oleg M. Sokolov, second-in-command at the embassy, was quoted by the newspaper as saying: "The situation is perfectly clear. The boy is back home with his parents. As far as the authenticity of this letter, we certainly think it is a forgery, and it looks like a very clear provocation to us."

The elder Berezhkov, 67, served in the Soviet Embassy in Berlin in 1940-41, before Germany attacked the Soviets in World War II, and as interpreter for Foreign Minister Vyacheslav M. Molotov at important wartime conferences.

His current job was said to be serving as liaison with the Soviet Union's Institute for the United States and Canada.

The State Department lists 137 diplomatic personnel in the Soviet Embassy. All are carefully screened before leaving the Soviet Union. Diplomats' younger children attend school in the embassy compound on upper Wisconsin Avenue about three miles from downtown Washington.

Inflation only rises a fraction as food falls

By SALLY JACOBSEN

WASHINGTON (AP) — Wholesale prices rose a minuscule 0.1 percent in July as the cost of food fell for the third straight month and the summer's energy price gains moderated, the government reported today.

For the first seven months of the year, wholesale prices fell at an annual rate of 0.7 percent, fueling economists' predictions that, for the full year, inflation at the wholesale level could be the smallest in two decades.

Last month's tiny gains were largely the product of a 0.6 percent drop in food prices and a 0.2 percent gain in energy costs.

"Prices fell sharply for meat, a trend expected to continue through year's end and then reverse itself, for vegetables and for eggs."

Natural gas and heating oil prices tumbled. Gasoline prices rose only moderately after surging in the two previous months.

Overall, wholesale prices for the year ending in July rose just 1.4 percent — the smallest 12-month gain in 15 years. Since July 1982, energy prices have tumbled 4.7 percent and food prices have risen just 0.1 percent.

Indeed, the bright price picture has been widely attributed to the long 1981-82 recession and the worldwide oil glut that drove down gasoline and fuel oil prices.

Food prices have also been falling, but this summer's scorching heat wave has devastated much of the nation's corn crop, now projected to be the down 38 percent from last year.

That is expected to be good news for consumers in the short run as farmers liquidate their herds rather than pay skyrocketing feed bills. Experts expect, however, that as the liquidation ends, meat prices may rise significantly next year.

But, in today's report, the Labor Department said beef and veal prices fell 4.8 percent in July and pork prices tumbled 5.7 percent. Poultry prices were down 2 percent.

The report said prices fell 11.9 percent for vegetables and 1.4 percent for eggs. The cost of fresh fruit rose 3.4 percent.

As for energy prices, gasoline costs rose 0.9 percent, off from the 5.1 percent gain of the previous month. Natural gas prices, up just 0.2 percent in the previous month, fell 1.2 percent in the new report. Heating oil prices were down 0.7 percent, a sharp reversal of the 5.3 percent rise of the preceding month.

The energy price calculations reported today were actually for June. That component of the Producer Price Index for finished goods, as the wholesale price calculation is called, lags a month because energy companies report their prices too late for inclusion in the most recent measure.

The report gave these other details: —Passenger car prices were unchanged. Light truck prices fell 0.3 percent.

—Capital equipment costs were up 0.1 percent. Those costs are for machinery and transportation equipment used by business.

All the price changes are adjusted for normal seasonal variations.

July's overall price increase of 0.1 percent, after seasonal adjustment, compared with advances of 0.5 percent advance in June and 0.3 percent in May.

If prices rose for 12 months straight at the July rate, the yearly rise would be 1.3 percent. In reporting its inflation figures, the department bases its compounded, seasonally adjusted annual rate on a more precise calculation of monthly changes than the figure the department makes public.

In all, the unadjusted Producer Price Index stood at 285.7 last month, meaning that goods costing $10 at wholesale in 1967 would have cost $28.57 last month.

In advance of today's report, economists predicted a modest inflation rate in the coming months.

"Inflation is going to stay this way for some time," says James Annable, chief domestic economist at First National Bank of Chicago.

Adds Jack Lavery, chief economist at Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith Inc., "There's no dramatic intensification of inflation in the months ahead."

A computer analysis by Chase Econometrics Associated, an economics forecasting firm, projected that this summer's heat wave would push consumer prices up 0.15 percent this year and 0.3 percent in 1984.

Wholesale food price trends are a good barometer of how food, energy and other commodity prices will move at the retail level. The Consumer Price Index, though, checks for a broader range of items, including housing and medical care, than does the wholesale price measure.

The French are back, making them extremely glad in Chad

By SALET GABA
N'DJAMENA, Chad (AP) — French paratroopers, their boots and submachine-guns polished, cruised slowly around the African quarters of Chad's capital, drawing spontaneous cheers from the people.
 "The French are back, the French are back," shouted small boys running alongside the grey-green jeeps Thursday.
 It was the first time French combat troops had been in N'Djamena since former President Valery Giscard d'Estaing was forced by political pressure at home and instability in Chad to withdraw them from this former French colony in 1979.
 For 19 years following the end of French colonial rule in 1960, the French army fought alongside French-trained Chadian forces against a northern guerrilla movement led at times by the current Western-oriented President Hissene Habre, and at other times by his arch enemy, Libyan-backed former President Goukouni Oueddei.

Snipers harass police in Lebanon

By FAROUK NASSAR
BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Snipers shot at a police commander but otherwise a truce held around Beirut and the central mountains today after two days of clashes between the army and Druse rebels that killed 27 people and wounded 66.
 In southern Lebanon, the Israeli army today detonated "stacks of arms and ammunition left in underground tunnels by Palestinian guerrillas" a year ago along a six-mile stretch of the coastal highway, the state radio reported.
 The highway between the southern beachside towns of Khaile and Damour were closed to traffic for three hours while the tunnel caches were blown up. Israeli soldiers warned villagers to stay indoors, the radio said.
 Beirut's international airport remained closed to traffic for a third day as President Amin Gemayel's government sought a reconciliation with Lebanon's Druse community.
 A cease-fire was proclaimed Thursday night, though Druse leaders said they would resume shelling the airport and Lebanese army positions unless the Cabinet resigns and the army promises to stay out of Druse zones.
 Police updated the death toll from 14 to 27 after compiling casualty reports involving victims from the army, Druse militiamen, their Christian militia foes and civilians caught in crossfires Wednesday and Thursday.
 The only recorded violation of the cease fire today was a burst of sniper fire from Druse positions in the hills south of Beirut at a local police commander driving on the coastal highway, police said.

Habre's and Goukouni's allegiances have shifted repeatedly during the drawn-out conflict, but their bitter personal rivalry has remained constant as the fighting continues.
 To the Chadians, the French army for many years was a guarantee of security in the midst of chaos. After it left, the war swept over the capital in successive waves for months. An estimated 75 percent of all buildings were destroyed and 20,000 of the city's 350,000 inhabitants were killed.
 "You cannot be surprised that we are happy to see the French army come back," said Josephine Monga at her vegetable stall in N'Djamena's market as the paratroopers drove by.
 French military sources said the troops were sent around residential neighborhoods to raise the morale of the people following the loss of the strategic outpost of Faya Largeau to rebel troops.
 An old man said "we were hoping they would come back to Chad one day."

The Druse, a secretive sect in the Israeli-occupied central mountains, have been warring with Christian militiamen for dominance of the region. They claim Gemayel's Cabinet is unfit to govern.
 Druse leader Walid Jumblatt has vowed to fight the Christian-dominated Lebanese army if it occupies positions vacated by departing Israeli troops. The Israelis are planning to redeploy 25 miles south of Beirut to avoid involvement in the Druse-Christian feud and reduce casualties from guerrilla ambushes.
 On Thursday, Druse militiamen released three kidnapped Cabinet ministers seized in an unsuccessful attempt to press the sect's demands that the Cabinet resign and that the army keep out of mountain areas without Druse permission.
 But Jumblatt said those demands still are the price for ending the shelling attacks.
 "We are not aiming at anyone," he said in a telephone interview from Damascus, Syria, where he lives in exile. "We want to add pressure upon the government to consider our demands and answer them."
 In the Syrian-controlled eastern Bekaa Valley, mutineers and loyalists in Yasser Arafat's Palestine Liberation Organization shattered a flimsy cease-fire Thursday and fired at each other with "all kinds of weapons." Lebanese radio stations reported. There was no indication of casualties.

In Brief

WASHINGTON — President Reagan says the United States won't intervene directly in Chad to stop Libyan-backed rebel forces, but the president and other U.S. officials voice frustration that France won't do the job, despite repeated urging.
BEIRUT, Lebanon — Casualties rise in two days of fighting between Druse militiamen and the Christian-dominated Lebanese army. PLO rebels and guerrillas loyal to chairman Yasser Arafat renew their feud for several hours. Beirut Radio reports.
WASHINGTON — Despite fresh fears of hikes in food costs, economists see little likelihood that wholesale prices will shoot up sharply in the coming months. Indeed, they're expecting this year's increase to be the smallest since the 1960s.
WASHINGTON — The State Department tells the Soviet Embassy it wants to talk to a Soviet diplomat's son who wrote President Reagan saying he wants to stay in the United States. The Soviets are told the boy shouldn't leave the country in the meantime.
BAR HARBOR, Maine — A new technique that could pinpoint birth defects and determine the sex of fetuses in the first seven to 10 weeks of pregnancy could "revolutionize" prenatal diagnosis.
Vicious thunderstorms ravaged much of the nation, knocking out power to thousands in the Northeast, delaying subways in New York and spawning mudslides in the Pacific Northwest and driving a tornado that touched down in the nation's heartland, injuring five people.
DES MOINES, Iowa — Walter Mondale, who goes to a lot of them, says they're like a "traveling gong show" and Fritz Hollings describes them as maybe "the silliest thing in the world." Senate Republican Leader Howard Baker, who went for awhile four years ago, describes them as "cruel and unusual punishment."

Trains collide in northern Mexico

By RANDALL HACKLEY
CUADRUARTE, Mexico (AP) — Two trains carrying about 600 passengers collided head-on in the northern Mexican city of Villa Ahumada, injuring at least 135 people. Mexican police said. No deaths were reported.
 The trains, one en route from Juarez to Mexico City, and the other, a two-car train from Chihuahua City to Juarez, crumpled like an accordion, one injured passenger said from his hospital bed today.
 "Nobody heard anything," said Chihuahua City newspaper reporter Victor Bartoli Herrera, who suffered a punctured left eyelid. "The engines just hit into one another, one on top of the other."

 Bartoli Herrera and other victims were picked up from the accident site late Thursday by passenger cars, buses and 13 ambulances sent from Juarez, 90 miles to the north, and transported to this border city of 900,000 across from El Paso, Texas.
 Among the injured was American Louise E. Hernandez, who suffered minor arm and rib injuries.

Mexican socialists asking ouster

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The country's major leftist party is calling for the impeachment of Oaxaca state Gov. Pedro Vazquez Colmenares for his role in the ouster of a city government.
 Presentation of the United Mexican Socialist Party's demand in the joint commission of Congress on Wednesday provoked heated argument among congressmen. At one point the conservative National Action Party, the largest opposition party, came to the defense of the socialists.
 The debate over removal of the leftist government of Juchitan, a Pacific Coast city of about 60,000, came after Rep. Edmundo Jardon, of the socialist party known as the PSUM, read the party's petition.
 "If there is no attempt to resolve this tense political situation by legal means, one must expect conflicts and tensions of the sort that cannot be predicted," he warned.
 Sen. Renato Sales of the ruling Institutional Revolutionary Party, or PRI, argued that the PRI-controlled Oaxaca state legislature acted legally in removing Juchitan Mayor Leopoldo de Gyves and his government after a violent campaign rally in which two people were killed and at least 20 wounded.
 The July 31 rally was the last before elections for state legislators Aug. 7. Voting for a representative from the Juchitan district was postponed indefinitely.
 De Gyves's administration continued Thursday to refuse to relinquish the municipal palace to a council named by legislature to run the city until elections are held. No election date has been set.
 Sales acknowledged that "there may be slight variations from the law" in the action against the Juchitan government but said "peace, security, order and freedom are above everything else."
 The National Action Party joined the PSUM, which includes the Mexican Communist Party, in attacking the PRI for allegedly breaking congressional rules by debating an issue that was not on the agenda. However, commission secretary Sen. Antonio Riva Palacio, also of the PRI, said reading of the petition allowed the debate.

 The PRI has dominated Mexican politics for 54 years and holds all governorships and other major offices.
MEXICO CITY (AP) — Women are directly affected by violence in Central America that holds back their participation in the economy and society, a Latin American conference on women said.
 The conference of women from 40 countries of the Economic Commission on Latin America approved a resolution Wednesday supporting the Contadora group's efforts to achieve peace in the region. Mexico, Panama, Venezuela and Colombia form the group, seeking a regional solution to the Central American conflicts.
 Since the organization's 1979 conference, the Central American situation has deteriorated, "making the integration of women into economic and social development more difficult," the resolution said.
 It also called on the commission to intensify its effort to include women in regional development.
 A paper presented by a commission consultant said that two-thirds of the work hours in the world are performed by women and they receive one-tenth of the world income.
MEXICO CITY (AP) — A small San Pedro, Calif., fishing fleet has written to thank the fishing ministry for giving it permission to catch a limited amount of tuna in Mexican waters.
 The letter, published Thursday in the official newspaper El Nacional and some other newspapers, said "this attitude of international friendship, we know, will add to the determination of the members of our fleet, of the association to which we belong and of the people of the city of Los Angeles, where the fleet is located, to seek an end to the North American boycott of Mexican tuna."
 Nine small fishing boats make up the San Pedro fleet. The letter was signed by Lawrence A. Bozanic, general manager of the Fishermen's Cooperative Association, and Arthur K. Snyder, its legal adviser.

Ice cream burglars must face the judge

HOUSTON (AP) — Five adolescent boys who were brought before a judge for breaking into a house and stealing ice cream and toys were told by handcuffed prisoners they would end up picking cotton at the Texas Department of Corrections if they did not change their ways.

The boys, whose parents asked they be brought before state District Judge Ted Poe to teach them a lesson, stood with eyes downcast and fingers twitching Thursday to confess they broke into a neighbor's house in northeast Harris County in early July to eat ice cream and steal toys.

People in the neighborhood said it was obvious the break-in was done by children.

"It sounded like kids," one man said. "They made milkshakes. So we investigated it and found out it was our kids."

The boys, aged from 12 to 14 years, confessed their guilt when confronted, the parents said. The boys also had taken back the toys they stole before they were caught.

The parents, working together after they learned their children had broken into the house, had the boys taken to the constable's office where they were fingerprinted and read their rights before signing written confessions.

The boys spent the summer working part-time three days a week doing maintenance work in their neighborhood after their parents asked their subdivision services association to put them to work for the summer.

"The intent was not to let them get away with it," a father said.

Poe lectured the boys after they sat through a morning in his court, watching him sentence adult defendants.

"Do you think people ought to be able to live in their homes without worrying about somebody coming into their homes?" Poe asked.

"Yes sir," the boys whispered.

Poe told the boys they were lucky to have parents who care about them.

The judge ordered lunch for the boys from the county jail. They ate balogna sandwiches with cheege while they talked to handcuffed defendants.

A-bomb vet recalls blast

By Betsy Brazy
Laredo News

LAREDO, Texas (AP) — In 1955, Ruben O. Garcia knelt inside a U.S. Army tank at Yucca Flats, Nev., two miles from ground zero as an atomic bomb exploded.

"We were in armored company, in tanks. They had us about two miles away from the tower to where the bomb was. They were testing to see the effect of the blast on equipment and personnel," the Laredoan recalled.

When the Task Force Razor device atop its 500-foot control tower exploded, Garcia and the 723rd Tank Battalion from Camp Irvine, Calif. were formed into a V-shaped armored formation facing the blast. Each man wore protective clothing and a radiation badge. The periscopes of the tanks were taped with olive drab material to shut out the intense light from the blast.

Garcia remembers the blast as "a big boom. It was the loudest thing you ever heard." He said the ground shook, too. "I've never been in an earthquake but I guess that's what it would feel like," he said.

Following the blast, the battalion's armored vehicles drove forward toward ground zero, where the bomb was detonated, drove around it and returned to their original position.

"They had protective clothing and everything but still when you'd get off they'd sweep you with a broom. You had to take off all your clothing and take a field shower in the middle of the desert," Garcia said.

On the protective clothing the soldiers wore film badges to measure the gamma radiation received by each person as a result of the blast.

Garcia said that before the blasts the soldiers were told not to take cameras and not to write home about the blast until after it happened. The soldiers waited three days for the weather to be right before they could participate in the blast. Garcia said he was not told about any hazards of radiation.

"They told us it was a test and not to worry about it; we were well protected," he said.

Did he believe the Army was telling him the truth? "Well, I guess I do," he replied. "So far I don't have any ill effects."

"I guess we were luckier than the guys on the ground, infantry people, because it was even worse on them," he added.

Garcia was one of many people in the armed forces who attended the atomic blasts. Still in apparent good health, Garcia joined the Texas chapter of the National Association of Atomic Veterans, based in Fort Worth. The association estimates 35,000 soldiers participated in atomic tests between 1945 and 1963.

"They sent me a brochure. They told me if I needed any help they would provide it," he said.

"I know that there were thousands of people who participated in that thing," Garcia said.

Garcia said he isn't sure that the soldiers participating in the blast increased their risk of getting cancer. "But the VA (Veterans Administration) doesn't want to do anything about it," he said.

Veterans and their families cannot sue the government for injuries received while employed by the armed forces, according to a U.S. Supreme Court decision. Their only recourse is to appeal to the Veterans Administration, said Louis Levin, chairman of the Texas chapter.

"We're having problems with the Veterans Administration. They're not giving us pensions. They do not give us anything because we have to prove our sicknesses are from the detonations," Levin said. "They won't release information; that's why we're having problems."

There was some recognition last month when Atomic Veterans Day was celebrated.

Levin, who participated in the Manhattan Project in 1945 in which the bombs dropped on Hiroshima and Nagasaki, Japan were developed, said he received a medical discharge from the Army.

The Army retracted his certificate of disability and he has been appealing ever since. "They don't have to give you a reason. They just give you a letter," Levin said.

Levin said many veterans have trouble getting their files because of the 1976 fire in the St. Louis records center. He said veterans asking for their files often are told they were burned in the fire.

Levin also was told his records were burned in the fire. Yet he has his files now. "I kept bugging them and all of a sudden they found them," he said.

Levin said his organization is gathering funds to help victims of radiation sickness received from the blasts.

"We're trying to raise funds for the widows and children. We have a lot of deformity in the second generations," he said.

Levin said an average of one atomic veteran is dying about every six weeks from cancer. He doubts the Veterans Administration will recognize that the atomic veterans' deaths may be caused by radiation received during the blasts. "They're probably waiting or us all to pass on and then they'll recognize us," he said.

Continental to suspend 89 flights to 19 cities

HOUSTON (AP) — Continental Airlines will suspend service to 19 cities, cancel 89 flights and use 250 management personnel to fill positions if the International Association of Machinists Union strikes the airline after midnight tonight, company officials said.

A proposed Continental contract has been rejected by 2,000 IAM members who work for the airline. The union has said it will strike Saturday if no agreement is reached.

In event of a strike, the Houston-based airline said a statement released Thursday it would operate 501 of its 590 flights, but would not service 19 of the 108 cities into which it now flies.

"We are committed to operating the airline at the highest level with the least disruption to our passengers in the event of a strike," Continental's statement said.

Seventy percent of the workers who might strike are in jobs not requiring Federal Aviation Authority license, the airline said. These include positions in the paint shop, exterior aircraft cleaning and stock clerks.

The Continental statement said that the airline's service would be suspended to the cities of Bakersfield and San Jose, Calif.; Baltimore; Buffalo, N.Y.; Detroit; Grand Junction, Colo.; Hartford, Conn.; Springfield, Mass.; Laredo and Brownsville, Texas; Las Vegas and Reno, Nev.; Miami; Rapid City, S.D.; and St. Louis.

Service would also be suspended to the Mexico cities of Guadalajara, Merida and Manzanillo, and to Caracas and Maracaibo in Venezuela.

The strike would cause Houston, the airline's largest hub, to experience a service reduction of 22 flights, from 131 to 109, the announcement said. Continental's second-largest hub, Denver, will lose 10 flights, dropping from 92 to 82.

Contingency flight schedules have been sent to more than 21,500 travel agents nationwide, and have been loaded into reservation computer systems, the announcement said.

The schedule changes will not affect departure and arrival times of the flights that are not suspended.

Flight schedules to Australia, New Zealand, Micronesia, Guam, Manila and Tokyo will not be affected, the airline said.

One flight each will be dropped between Houston and Washington, D.C.; Mexico City; Orlando, Fla.; Portland, Ore.; Cancun, Mexico; New Orleans and New York (La Guardia). A flight between Peoria and Indianapolis will be suspended, along with a flight between Denver and New Orleans, continuing on to Pensacola, Fla.

Negotiations between the airline and the IAM continue in Washington, but Continental spokesman Bruce Hicks said he did not know of any progress.

The airline said the union rejected an offer which would provide an annual base salary of $35,000 for the average licensed mechanic. The package included an additional $10,000 in benefits, also, the airline said.

The first Aggie wore tusks

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP) — Archeologists from Texas A&M University have unearthed a 10,000-year-old, 10-foot-tall mammoth that died on the banks of the Brazos River.

David Carlson and Gentry Steele, the archeologists directing the excavation on privately owned land near the A&M campus, said they have unearthed the ancient elephant's tusks, jawbones, shoulder blades, several vertebrae and ribs, and bones from the massive animal's legs.

They said though the excavation site now lies in the shadow of sheer cliffs, it once was a sandy point where mammoths could drink and forage.

Steele said mammoths were likely a common sight in Texas 10,000 to 12,000 years ago. This mammoth is a member of the species Mammuthus jeffersoni, named for Thomas Jefferson who excavated mammoth bones. Its cousin, the woolly mammoth, migrated from the Old World, but never ventured further south than the Great Lakes, Steele said.

Canoeists spotted the mammoth's jawbone jutting from the riverbank late last year and contacted the university, but bad weather delayed the excavation until this year.

Carlson said many giant North American mammals — saber-toothed tigers, sloths, giant armadillos, camels, American lions, horses and cave bears — might have met early extinction at the hands of hunting humans who crossed the Bering Strait.

"Mammals in North America didn't know they should run from human hunters," Carlson said. "Some of the species that developed alongside mankind in the Old World learned that lesson."

He said researchers so far have found no evidence of humans at the excavation site.

Let's protect our freedoms

A decision by a San Francisco court of appeal that political parties and state central committees can't endorse or support judicial recall or confirmation elections is somewhat troubling.

What brought the issue to a head was the question of Republican Party endorsement of a recall against California Supreme Court Chief Justice Rose Bird and Reynoso, Allan Broussard and Otto Kaus during last November's election.

As things turned out, the move to recall Rose Bird didn't qualify for the ballot and the other three justices were reconfirmed. Though the point was moot, the court decided to rule anyway, because "the issue is one of broad public interest and is likely to recur."

We're no more impressed now with the electoral process than we have ever been. Elections provide government officials with the shred of respectability they need to justify their depredations on the public, and are generally to be scorned by those who prefer exploiters. Nonetheless the attitude of the appeal court toward judicial elections is revealing.

Partially because of revulsion at party-boss-dominated municipal government in Eastern and Midwestern cities, "progressive" reformers in California in the early part of the century stipulated that elections for many local posts should be "non-partisan." The tradition that judicial elections should be "non-partisan" is a long standing.

All this may have come from a good-hearted, if somewhat naive, effort to keep nasty old partisan politics out of the judiciary and local government. The results, however, have generally been more congenial to power holders than to the public at large.

Political parties have not been eliminated, nor has political ambition. But, with no party designation on a ballot, it's a little more complicated for voters to try to figure out where candidates are coming from, what they believe in, and what they are likely to do once in office. Candidates have the luxury of running without the political baggage a partisan affiliation can bring. The more sophisticated voters can figure it out, of course, but those who pay little attention to political maneuvering may be completely in the dark, voting on personality, looks, or whether they like somebody's name.

For the judiciary, of course, non-partisan elections are terrific. They reinforce the mythology that judges are somehow "above politics," dispensing wisdom from an Olympian perch of objectivity, great learning and respect for the Constitution.

It's not surprising, therefore, that a court would want to protect this convenient arrangement by preventing political parties from horning in on their cozy little game. At least the attitude is consistent. In a 1980 ruling a different court had ruled that a political party (the Democrats this time) couldn't endorse in a school board election in Marin County.

What's disturbing is the utter contempt the court's thereby displayed for First Amendment rights of free speech.

If endorsement of a candidate (or urging voters to vote against one) is not the kind of political free speech the First Amendment was designed to protect, we'd be hard put to come up with a better example. The First Amendment was written to protect political sinners as well as saints (Congress shall make no law, etc.). Even a political party, disreputable as such an institution might be, should, you would think, be permitted to express an opinion about an election that, while ostensibly non-partisan, is certainly political.

It's difficult to avoid the suspicion that the appeal court not only has little respect for the First Amendment, but is more than a little uneasy about democracy as well.

With Fulbright, look who's talkin'

By PAUL GREENBERG

For a fellow who says he doesn't want to denigrate this Administration, J. William Fulbright does a fairly persistent job of it. In still another interview, he has depicted the Reagan Administration as inexperienced - so inexperienced that he isn't sure that its leaders have noted the similarity between their rhetoric and what earlier administrations were saying during the Vietnam Era. "I don't think any of them were around," says Mr. Fulbright. "They were all out in California making movies or doing something like that."

And where was he at the time? Mr. Fulbright was a senator from Arkansas then and floor leader for the Tonkin Resolution, which was a blanket promise to defend Southeast Asia against Communist aggression. ("The U.S. is therefore prepared, as the President determines, to take all necessary steps, including the use of armed force, to assist any member of or protocol state of the Southeast Asia Collective Defense Treaty requesting assistance in defense of its freedom.")

That brave resolve was made in the expectation that tough words would make tough action unnecessary. But the Communists did not choose to fight just with words. In the end, senators like J. William Fulbright proved a source of irresolution, and the Tonkin Resolution proved an embarrassing monument to bluster. The war and 50,000 American lives were lost in a vain effort to preserve a hope of freedom in Vietnam, Cambodia and Laos. By comparison to Mr. Fulbright's role in shaping that debacle, making movies in California was a fairly innocuous activity.

Still in his post-resolution period, Mr. Fulbright now warns against involvement closer to home - in Central America. And his argument, like the one he made for the Tonkin Resolution, may have just enough validity to appeal.

and mislead. Describing Central America as feudalistic, Mr. Fulbright explains: "Just a few of the families own all the wealth. That is something we don't advocate at home or anywhere else. We are supporting people who are not representative or even sympathetic to our own aspirations. I think we are wrong in thinking that we can intervene and create nice democracies in our own image. I don't think that works."

But what is the alternative to encouraging democracy in Central America - to leave that part of the world, too, to vicious dictatorships? They already begin to sprout, following the model of Fidel Castro's in Cuba and the emerging police state in Nicaragua. Even imperfect democracies on this country's doorstep would be preferable to perfect tyrannies.

But is democracy practical for Central America? There is a popular notion that democracy can't work for Latin Americans, or Southeast Asians, or perhaps any people not of European stock. It is a notion perhaps more popular than sound. If the U.S. could use its influence and its arms to install and maintain democratic governments in Europe after the Second World War, surely there is hope for democracy elsewhere. After all, the European democratic tradition was scarcely robust earlier this century. Neither France's Third Republic nor Germany's Third Reich was a great example of democracy - certainly not when compared with the democratic tradition in a country like, yes, Costa Rica.

Mr. Fulbright's picture of Central America as one big feudal estate is drawn with very broad strokes. It leaves out not just Costa Rica but all those struggling to build a society of smallholders and popular rule there. If even Costa Rica is in trouble today, that is in large part because of the war just across its borders.

Whether or not democracy is a realistic choice for Central America, it is certainly not realistic to say - as Mr. Fulbright does - that these little countries should be left to sort out their own problems. Other powers and other ideologies won't let them. It is still tempting to believe that what happens elsewhere will not affect this country - but that isolationist line hasn't held up very well this century.

Of course the rhetoric about El Salvador resembles last decade's about Vietnam. The ideological struggle didn't end in Southeast Asia. Vietnam was not Marxism's last territorial demand, no matter what happy endings were promised if only the U.S. would leave. Mr. Fulbright himself used to picture a Communist Vietnam as a kind of Asian Yugoslavia. His idyllic calculations did not include Boat People and slave labor camps, genocide and continuing war. But none of those realities seems to have tempered his enthusiasm for seeing no evil. Has he noticed that his rhetoric about Central America has a decided similarity to what he used to say about Vietnam?

Once again the U.S. is confronted by an ideological struggle, this time in this hemisphere. It may not be prudent to confront this familiar problem in El Salvador, or at this particular time. But surely it will have to be dealt with at some time - or it will deal with us. It is not likely to go away of itself, much as Mr. Fulbright and the rest of us wish it would. On the contrary, it's getting closer.

What is happening in Central America today is not just another violent uprising against another familiar oligarchy - any more than what happened in Europe in the 1930s was, to quote Charles Lindbergh at the time, only another of that continent's age-old power struggles. It was part of this country's unending ideological struggle, and Central America is only its latest theater. That struggle can be ignored, as Americans should have learned by now, only at our peril.

"You see, I'm not worried about all this because... it's just a Vietnam flashback, it's not really happening."

Why not better pay if the teachers earn it?

By PAUL HARVEY

Better pay for better teachers sounds so entirely appropriate that it's difficult to imagine dissent from that prescription, yet there is dissent.

Contrarily, the National Education Association and the American Federation of Teachers are insisting that all teachers should be paid equally.

Albert Shanker, president of the Teachers' Federation, is showing some flexibility, urging his members "at least to listen" to new ideas.

For 30 years our chief preoccupation in education has been wider educational opportunities for minorities, women and the handicapped.

Some of the results are impressive. Blacks are now almost as likely as whites to graduate from high school. One-third of our medical school students are women.

But the quest for equality in education measurably reduced the quality of education; it failed to encourage excellence.

Efforts to identify and encourage the specially gifted students were maligned as "undemocratic" and "racist."

Thus did we lower academic achievement standards until high schools were graduating seniors, one-third of whom were unable even to comprehend what they read in TV Guide.

Let's not belabor that. The sorry record of public education over recent decades has spoken for itself.

One unfortunate by-product of that era is with us yet. Many of those goof-off students of the sixties are now teachers.

This brings us to President Reagan's insistence on better pay for better teachers.

Noting the astronomical escalation of school budgets, the president says, "Common sense should tell us that we don't have an education problem because we are not spending enough; we have an education problem because we are not getting our money's worth for what we spend."

Most Americans second that notion.

George Gallup's pollsters report voters are most anxious about three things, in this order: money, jobs and the quality of public education.

Teachers are the last powerful American labor force to learn that productivity can and should be measured, that society has a right to expect a fair return on its investment.

As anyone else, teachers must be measured by their output.

It can be argued that it is less easy to evaluate intangible results.

Some educators insist that, "We are not production line workers whose output has a numerical value."

Yet it does.

Most Texans are safe from catching AIDS

TEMPLE, Texas (AP) — Of the 1,922 cases of Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome reported in the United States over the past three years, 26 have occurred in Texas — most of them in Houston, Dallas and San Antonio — an infectious disease specialist says.

Although two of the cases have involved Temple men, one of whom died, chances are slight that the average Central Texan will contract the mysterious virus, Dr. Paxton H. Howard Jr. of Temple said Wednesday.

Howard said studies have shown that "active" homosexual men make up the largest risk group.

"These are men that have over 60 sexual partners a year. Fifty percent of their sexual contacts come in the bathhouses in New York. There is a high incidence of sexually transmitted disease common in the homosexual male because of this," he said.

Howard, head of Scott and White Hospital's division of infectious disease, called a news conference Wednesday to discuss AIDS after returning from Seattle, where he attended the 5th International Symposium of Sexually Transmitted Diseases.

"It (AIDS) is primarily found in big cities where there is a large concentration of high-risk groups. Homosexual men are high risk, IV drug users are high risk," Howard said.

One of Temple's victims recently visited San Francisco, one of the cities with a high incidence of AIDS, Howard said.

Texas' 26 cases through the first seven months of 1983 compares with 16 cases in 1982 and five in 1981. Most of the state's cases have been reported in Houston, with several in Dallas and San Antonio, Howard said.

AIDS destroys the body's immune system, making it easy prey for bacteria and carcinogens. Death is caused not by AIDS itself but by the accompanying illness. Mortality rate of the disease is 80 percent.

Of the 1,922 cases reported in three years of AIDS' known existence, 710 cases were noted in New York City, 180 in San Francisco, 113 in Los Angeles, 61 in Miami and 54 in Newark, N.J.

Two witnesses called in Mattox trial

AUSTIN (AP) — Prosecutors say two witnesses were asked to appear Thursday before a grand jury investigating the affairs of Attorney General Jim Mattox.

David Garza of the district attorney's public integrity unit declined to identify them.

Since July 26, grand jurors have been investigating Mattox' 1982 campaign finance reports and an accusation that he threatened to put a Houston law firm out of the governmental bond business over a personal matter.

The grand jury, which meets regularly on Tuesday and Thursday afternoons, has heard testimony from half a dozen people who work for Mattox, including two of his top legal aides.

Grand jurors took a break from the Mattox case Tuesday, but Garza said, "We were not backing off. We were just letting the grand jury do some of its other business."

Prosecutors were still sifting through telephone, travel and other records from Mattox' office late Wednesday, trying to pick out which ones they want to show grand jurors.

Mattox has filed a motion to throw out the subpoena and get his records back, but both sides have agreed to postpone a hearing on that motion at least until the district attorney's office decides which records it needs.

The district attorney's office has also obtained documents to show grand jurors from a $1.7 billion lawsuit against Mobil Oil Corp. filed by South Texas rancher-oilman Clinton Manges.

Manges, a $50,000 contributor to Mattox' campaign, is suing Mobil in a dispute over oil leases on his 64,000-acre ranch in Duval and Webb counties, and the state has intervened on his

Burford cleared in Justice probe

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Justice Department, completing a six-month investigation of the Environmental Protection Agency, today cleared former EPA Administrator Anne Burford and five of her top assistants of any criminal wrongdoing.

In issuing today's report on the investigation, however, Attorney General William French Smith said that allegations concerning four lower-ranking EPA officials were still under investigation.

The report did not name these officials and referred to the types of allegations in a general way. The department's investigation was begun last February, when a variety of charges of misconduct were swirling around the embattled agency.

The allegations included perjury, conflicts of interest, sweetheart deals with industry, political manipulation of the $1.6-billion hazardous waste cleanup fund, blacklisting of agency employees and destruction and removal of subpoenaed documents.

The report covered not only Mrs. Burford but also former EPA general counsel Robert M. Perry; James W. Sanderson, a former top consultant to Mrs. Burford; John Horton, former assistant administrator for administration; John Todhunter.

Pets pampered when owners leave them behind for vacation

By KARREN MILLS
Associated Press Writer

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — The dog is part of the family. But sometimes when vacation time comes around, that part of the family gets left out.

Richard and Kal Sanders-Greenberg ask why not give the pampered pet a vacation too? It takes away the guilt of leaving Fido if he's being well cared for and is having fun.

The Sanders-Greenbergs have started a pet boarding service, Pets Are Inn, that arranges lodging for pets in the homes of other animal lovers while their owners are away.

Pets Are Inn has about 150 caretakers scattered throughout the Minneapolis-St. Paul area. Most live in suburban homes with fenced yards, but they have some apartment dwellers who take in parakeets, gerbils and indoor cats. For large dogs, there's a nearby farm.

If the dog is used to sleeping in bed with its owner, the Sanders-Greenbergs find a caretaker that doesn't mind having a canine bedmate.

"The house is really open to the animal. That's part of our pampering service. It helps ease the animal through the difficult transition process," Sanders-Greenberg said.

The pet owner is asked several questions about the animal's habits: Is Fido allowed on the furniture? Is he used to a fenced-in back yard? Then Pets Are Inn matches the animal with the caretaker they feel is best for that pet.

The caretakers have all been carefully screened. "We've visited all the homes and personally interviewed all the people. We've taken quite a bit of trouble to make sure we have topnotch people that we can trust," Sanders-Greenberg said.

The Sanders-Greenbergs — who began the business May 1 — will arrange boarding for most kinds of pets, but they say the biggest demand is vacation homes for dogs and cats.

"There are more dogs than just about anything else. Your dogs are the animals that seem to have the hardest time. Dogs really need that human contact, that attention. They just thrive on it," Sanders-Greenberg said.

"These dogs get a lot of attention," he added. A contract is drawn up outlining the responsibilities of the caretaker, stipulating that the animal will not be neglected, will have fresh food and water and will be walked on a leash for a certain amount of time each day.

Any specific requirements for an individual pet — such as daily brushing and combing for long-haired dogs — also are included in the contract.

The caretakers have access to 12 veterinarians who are on call around the clock in case a pet gets sick. And Pets Are Inn carries $300,000 in liability insurance in case of an accident.

Pets Are Inn picks up the animal at the owner's home and returns the animal to the home following the vacation. For people coming into the Twin Cities from out-of-town for the weekend, the Sanders-Greenbergs will pick up their pet at the hotel.

"The humans can have their type of fun and the pets can have their type of fun," for a weekend in the city, Sanders-Greenberg said.

For those out-of-towners who are leaving the state by plane, Pets Are Inn will pick up their pet at Minneapolis-St. Paul International Airport.

The cost of boarding a pet varies, depending on the service required. For a dog under 30 pounds that does not require daily grooming, the cost is $9.50 a day, plus transportation. Rates are discounted for stays of longer than 10 days.

Sports submarine coming on market

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — Someday, teen-agers may go cruising in sports subs 3,000 feet under the sea. Executives may take long lunches off the continental shelf.

An egg-shaped, underwater craft called Deep Rover is coming on the market, and its designers say it will open Earth's last frontier in ways dreamed about only by science fiction writers and the most imaginative oceanographers.

Invented by British engineer Graham Hawkes, Deep Rover is a relatively cheap, one-person acrylic bubble with robotic arms capable of construction work, prospecting or drawing detailed diagrams. It has a comfortable seat with a 360-degree view, and Hawkes says anyone can learn to drive it in a half-hour.

The battery-powered sub uses thrusters and propellers to "fly" through the water more than a half-mile below the surface — 1,000 feet deeper than any similar craft.

A second generation has already been designed for work at 7,000 feet in 1985 and a journey to the deepest part of the ocean — seven miles down — is planned with a later model in 1987.

Scuba divers are currently limited to 200 feet. Other one-person submersibles can't go lower than 2,000 feet and are far less maneuverable. The average depth of the Pacific is 13,739 feet and the average depth of the Atlantic is 12,257 feet.

Hawkes is president of Deep Ocean Technology Inc. of Oakland, a company he founded in 1981 with American scientist Sylvia Earle. He had left OSEL Group of England, which he helped build into a world leader in manned diver systems.

Hawkes and Ms. Earle share a sense of adventure and a passion for proving that the sea is more than just a highway for ships. They see a future of underwater restaurants and hotels, farms and seabed mines.

"The idea of living underwater is not a wild idea," Hawkes says. "Most of the big rigs in the North Sea have concrete structures in 500 feet of water. The stress and fatigue problems are actually less in building that type of structure than they are for a high-rise on land. So the way-out plans for restaurants and hotels under the water are not in the least bit wild."

The first Deep Rovers will sell for about $600,000, but the price could be slashed to less than one-tenth of that if they're mass-produced.

Women are political powerbrokers

WASHINGTON (AP) — One is a Democrat, an Easterner, a practical woman who has spent a lifetime in politics and held a top position in the Carter White House.

The other is a Republican, a Westerner, a former television reporter who became a lobbyist and has close ties to the Reagan White House.

Anne Wexler and Nancy Reynolds are powerbrokers in a town where most of those with power are men, consummate "insiders" in political parties where most "insiders" are men, successful lobbyists in a field dominated by men.

"They are complete professionals in a town where that's not commonplace," says Jack Valenti, president of the Motion Picture Association of America, which is one of their clients.

For six months, Anne Wexler and Nancy Reynolds have been senior partners in their own lobbying firm, offering clients access to VIPs in both political parties, the White House and Congress. They represent more than a half-dozen Fortune 500 clients and such diverse associations as the National Machine Tool Builders, the National Railroads and the National Football League.

"We think we're the only firm in the country headed by two women of different parties with reputations that give us visibility," says Ms.

Wexler, 53, who was an assistant to President Carter, responsible for maintaining liaison with the business community and other groups.

When Carter was defeated, Ms. Wexler started her own firm, specializing in helping clients develop strategy and build grassroots support for issues and legislation. She recruited two more partners, Gail Harrison, who served as former Vice President Walter Mondale and Robert M. Schule, special assistant to Carter for congressional liaison.

"We haven't been in the red since the day we opened our doors," Ms. Wexler says.

That was January 1981, the day after Reagan was inaugurated. They had three clients: Aetna Life and Casualty Insurance; Tosco, a petroleum-chemical products company; and GHK, a natural gas producer.

Two-and-a-half years later, the company has grown to where it now turns away clients. Ms. Wexler estimates the company did $1.5 million in business last year. Her list of 23 clients includes Armco, Inc., the Bendix Corp. and the New York Power authority.

Six months ago, Ms. Wexler lured Ms. Reynolds, 56, away from Bendix, where she was a vice president and head of the company's national affairs office. They had met and worked together during Ms. Wexler's White House years.

"It took me about 20 minutes to decide," Ms. Reynolds says. "And neither of us has had a better time in our lives."

Both insist that being women does not affect their business. "It's gender neutral." Yet both say they have to work harder than men to prove they have mastered the issues.

"We're held to a higher standard," Ms. Wexler says.

LOOSE MARBLES

LISA PATMAN

I sprained my wrist the other day, and I have yet to figure out how. I wish I could report that I hurt it by executing a perfect double back flip, or by writing the great American novel, or by wrestling a bank robber to the ground. But the truth is that I probably sprained the darned thing either trying to heave my body out of bed, or by shoveling an extra-heavy forkful of mashed potatoes into my face.

It is rather embarrassing to be obviously injured, whether you're encased in plaster or swaddled in bandages. Even a flesh-colored bandage will draw the inevitable "How did it happen?" For most of us the answer is so silly that we're ashamed to admit it. I have a friend who broke her arm when she tripped over a phone cord. A couple of days earlier she had fractured two fingers when she closed a door without removing her hand first. She also had acquired a black eye when she tried to walk and chew gum at the same time, and ended up slamming her face into a wall. Tired of trying to explain her clumsiness, she began replying, "My husband beat me up," which kept the questions to a minimum, although it did somewhat sully her husband's reputation.

Her poor husband didn't know what to do. It would look a little put-on if he denied the whole thing, even though he was, indeed, innocent. Yet he too, hated the long explanations of his wife's more serious stumblings. So he took the only avenue left him.

First, he removed from his mouth the expensive bridge which had given him front teeth for so many years that even his closest friends were unaware that he wore false chompers. Then he played a heavy and spirited session of squash, in which he let the hard little ball hit him again and again, making interesting bruises on many parts of his body. Then he calmly went about his business, answering "What bruises, what teeth?" (or rather "Wha brutheth, wha theeth?" to anyone who inquired about his injuries.

Most of his friends figured his wife had found a way to get revenge from the horrible beating they thought she had received. They treated the couple with much more respect thereafter, not wanting to get in on any further violence. The more adventuresome steered clear from any act which might be construed as flirtation, which suited the couple just fine, since they already were a happily married couple uninterested in clandestine entanglements. The entire episode worked out great for both of them.

It worked so well in fact, that I think I'll do the same with my stupid sprained wrist. However, to save Old Dad the trouble of getting all bruised up, and since all his teeth are still his own, I'll just eliminate the middleman and explain, "I sprained it when I gave Old Dad a hard left hook. That'll teach him to criticize my fried cantaloupe."

I can hardly wait for that respect to start pouring in.

When in doubt, try following doctor's orders

By Lawrence Lamb, M.D.

DEAR DR. LAMB — I am a 25-year-old female and two years ago I became very sick while on duty at the hospital where I work. I was having severe abdominal pain right under my ribs in the pit of my stomach, in the center. It felt like something was twisting my intestines or a hard gnawing feeling. I went to the emergency room and was hospitalized. My tests showed that I had acute catarrhal pancreatitis. Since I have been out of the hospital I've started having more severe pain. It is not always when I eat but also when I have eaten nothing. The doctors also found two duodenal ulcers and put me on Gaviscon and Tagamet. I quit taking the Tagamet except when I started hurting real bad, but my doctor got mad and said that was the wrong way to do it. Another serum amylase test was done and it was 195. I drink some socially to have a good time but not a lot. The doctor said I was never to drink again. He says I have pancreatitis but how can he say that on the basis of just a serum amylase test? Something else worries me. I've been taking amphetamines such as Ionamin so I can get more work done. Can speed damage my stomach or cause severe pains? Should I have another test to see if my ulcers have reopened or do what my doctor has told me to do thus far? DEAR READER — I couldn't include all your letter. You are the kind of patient that doctors find most difficult to help.

Speed will increase gastric acidity just like caffeine and should be avoided. The gastric acidity may contribute to your pancreatic problems. And your ulcer could be penetrating into the pancreas aggravating the condition. You have a serious illness and would be wise to start cooperating and following directions to the letter. If you want to get well, stop substituting your bad judgment for your doctor's judgment. Pancreatitis is one of those diseases where the doctor does indeed put a lot of reliance on the laboratory test. To give you more information on your disorder I am sending you The Health Letter 11-4, The Pancreas: Your Enzyme Organ.

Dear Abby

Woman needs some sex answers quick

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1983 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: I have some questions I'm too embarrassed to ask anybody else. I'm a 21-year-old woman and, unfortunately, my mother never told me anything about growing up or being sexually active.

How far can a woman go with a man without getting pregnant? Does the degree of penetration determine whether she is in any danger of getting pregnant? Can a woman get pregnant if she doesn't have an orgasm during sex?

Sorry I am so dumb, but I really need to know.
COULD BE PREGNANT

DEAR COULD BE: See a doctor at once for a pregnancy test.

A woman can get pregnant without experiencing orgasm, and your other questions are answered in detail in my booklet, "What Every Teen-ager Ought to Know." It can be obtained by sending $2 and a long, stamped (37 cents), self-addressed envelope to: Abby, Teen Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.

Parents have written to tell me that their 12- and 13-year-old boys and girls found it very educational, and they (the parents) regretted that such a booklet was not available when they were growing up.

DEAR ABBY: I am a 35-year-old woman. I'm recently unemployed, which necessitated my returning home "to the nest." My problem: an overprotective mother. She has never liked the man I've dated for the last seven years. When we broke it off (for a while) two years ago, she was very pleased, so when we got back together again, I never told her.

Now that I am home, when he calls I am forced to lie to her, and I have to tell her I am going somewhere else so I can meet him.

Everyone I talk to tells me my mother has no say about whom I may date, but I can't seem to get that through her head. I need some suggestions on how I can deal with her overprotectiveness.

Louise Fletcher to speak at ABW meet

Pampa News Publisher Louise Fletcher will be the guest speaker at the Sept. 13 meeting of the American Business Women's Association at 7 p.m. in the Coronado Inn.

Guest speakers at the group's August 9 meeting were Ann Hallward and Carey Ford, performers with the Up With People show which will be giving a concert in Pampa next week. Phyllis Laramore told about the benefits of coupon clipping at the meeting. Mrs. Laramore has saved about $225 since the first of the year by clipping coupons.

Hostesses for the August 9 meeting were Wilda McGahan and Alice Parker, and the group plans to participate in the festival of trees, and to participate in the bazaar at the Pampa Mall August 20.

Improvise for a barbecue grill

ROCK COOKING: A flat rock, not more than two inches thick, can serve as a handy grill for cooking hamburgers, or frying eggs and bacon.

Choose a rock that has not been in water recently. Also, avoid shale or limestone rocks that might retain moisture. Water in such rocks can expand quickly when the rock is heated, causing the rock to explode.

Clean a rock and cover it with foil (if you wish.)

Heat the rock slowly over coals, turning it occasionally. If one side of the rock heats faster than the other, the rock could crack or break.

When the rock is thoroughly heated, place it on coals and brush off dirt and ashes. Remove foil and cook food directly on the rock.

If you are cooking a steak, chop or other food that needs longer cooking, turn the rock or heat an additional rock.

SHOVEL GRILL: Clean a heavy shovel, then cover the top surface with extra heavy-duty foil. Set the shovel directly on cooking coals, or prop it above the surface of the coals on rocks or bricks.

Use this improvised grill for frying meats or other foods. Grease from cooking meat runs off front of shovel. The long handle allows you to move the grill without getting close to the fire.

Try cooking these scrumptious foods on your improvised grills.

HIDDEN TREASURE BURGERS: For each hamburger, roll or press out two 1/8 pound patties to about 1/4 inch thick. Mix chopped onion, grated cheese and sweet pickle relish. Place two to three tablespoons of the mixture on one patty leaving 1/2 inch around the edge of the patty bare of mixture. Top with the other patty and gently press the meat together around the edge of the patties to form one burger. Grill until meat is done (about 10 minutes per side).

God speaks their language

By GEORGE W. CORNELL
AP Religion Writer

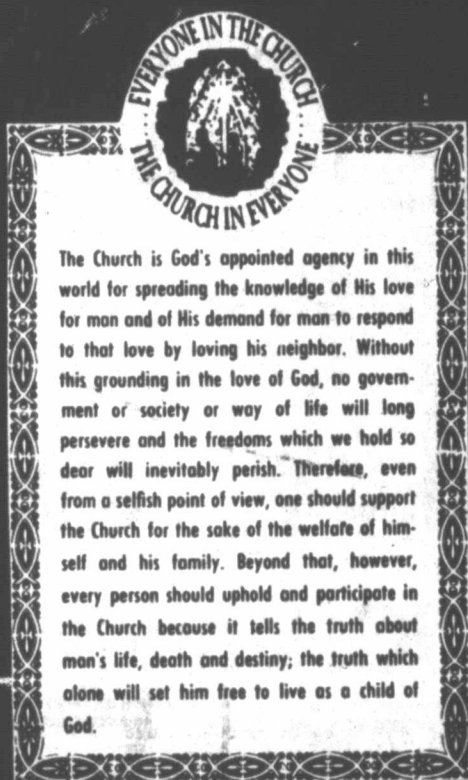

Now they have the book. They also have a written language which they didn't have before. Many who had thought God didn't speak their tongue now can read the holy words in their own vernacular. That transition has come in the lives of the Hanga-speaking people of northern Ghana, West Africa, and the achievement is a landmark in the worldwide work of the Wycliffe Bible Translators. The occasion was the completion of the New Testament in the 200th spoken language that previously had no written form, no dictionary, nor even an alphabet. "It's a beautiful book," says Geoffrey Hunt, who with his wife, Rosemary, spent 12 years among the Hanga people to decipher their language and give it an alphabet. "It takes a long time," says Hunt, now of the organization's international linguistics center in Dallas. He notes the tasks requires absorbing the "pattern of sounds," the way different intonations are combined for different meanings, then putting them into lettered words. About 4,750 Wycliffe linguists and assistants now are at work or in training, with research and translation projects going on in nearly 800 unwritten languages used by groups in 40 countries. Since it usually takes close to 15 years of analyzing to put a new language into writing, completion of one was a rare event in the early days of the half-century-old organization. At present, the Bible or portions of it were translated by combined efforts of many organizations into 1,763 languages. Estimates are that 3,000 languages or dialects still are without Bibles. The Wycliffe translators, and a sister organization, the Summer Institute of Linguistics, were founded by the late Cameron Townsend in 1934, after his pioneering rendering of Cakchiquel into writing in Guatemala about 1930.

Eternal Vigil...

Salt air, the beating of heavy waves, and rains... these are just a few of the elements that a ship must face constantly. With all of these things, it is little wonder that the crew must be alert, looking for rust and other damage. New paint to protect the ship must be applied regularly.

An individual faces many things in this world, that would rust and corrupt his life, therefore it is good to begin each week with a renewing of spirit, that can be obtained only through worship in the Lord's house.

Hospital advertises for patients

By BOB WIELAND
Associated Press Writer
GARLAND, Texas (AP) — A pensive ballerina in pink tights ponders the question, "How would you change the way you look?"

The advertisement, running in Texas regional editions of several national women's magazines, goes on to suggest that "Plastic surgery could give you a new beginning."

Garland Community Hospital, a 128-bed facility bought by Humana in 1975, is behind the ad campaign, which publicizes a new plastic surgery information and education program called "Beginnings."

The program is the brainchild of R. Lyle Luman, the hospital's 35-year-old executive director, who says more than 2,600 responses have been received since the ads began running in February.

"We felt there was a void in public awareness for what plastic surgery is," Luman said, adding that a survey backed up that theory.

"We (then) developed an access for the public we feel is informative and educational with a packet of information that is available to any consumer who would ask for it," he said.

The information packet describes common cosmetic surgery procedures and lists the three plastic surgeons on the staff of Garland Community hospital.

"If a person is interested in plastic surgery, they have an opportunity to make an appointment for a consultation," Luman said.

Of the hundreds who have responded to the ads, about four percent have gone to consultations — and one-fourth of those have elected to undergo surgery, Luman said.

Most of the hospital's plastic surgery patients — 71 percent — are from the Dallas area, Luman said. But others come from such locations as Midland, Mount Pleasant, Stephenville, Joshua and Kirbyville.

Among the satisfied patients is a 29-year-old Dallas office manager named Carla.

She underwent a breast operation in June and said she was pleased with the results.

"What could have been a potentially frightening experience was extremely pleasant," she said, adding, "They make you feel pampered — very special."

Carla said she decided to have the operation at the hospital after her mother showed her the magazine ad.

"Their advertisements are extremely tasteful; so are the brochures," she said, adding, "it all fell into place."

Although admitting that the only reason for the operation was "pure vanity — plain and simple," Carla said "there's a big difference" about the way she feels about herself.

Luman says that's one of the big reasons people elect to have plastic surgery — and one of the reasons the advertising campaign has gotten a good response.

"We in the health care business have to be looking forward to what the public wants in terms of health care," Luman said.

The plastic surgery ads are to run in three magazines through November — D. Redbook and Ladies' Home Journal. The full-page ad also appeared in Women's Day.

"With Beginnings, you'll enjoy all the reassurance and peace of mind that goes with having your surgery performed in the comfort and safety of a major hospital — with a cost comparable to surgery in a doctor's office," the ad reads.

Crime stoppers program spreads

By STEVE BREWER
Associated Press Writer

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — Across the nation, crime comes into the living room at night, brought in by television and newspapers and accompanied by a plea for help.

With the same sort of impact that made Vietnam the "television war," re-enacted crimes brought to you by Crime Stoppers programs are getting people involved in the fight against crime. Some do it for money, some do it out of civic duty, but whatever the reason, people are turning in criminals and reaping the rewards.

"The main reason people don't want to help fight crime is apathy — they don't even want to think about it," says Greg MacAleese, founder of the Crime Stoppers program. "We're trying to penetrate that problem."

Crime Stoppers began seven years ago as a brainstorm by MacAleese, a journalist-turned-cop who believes public involvement is the only way to reverse the nation's soaring crime statistics.

It has grown from a poorly funded local program to a nationwide network covering 360 communities in 45 states.

"I never really anticipated that it would be this successful," MacAleese said. "It's such a simple concept."

The concept is one that has been questioned by some and praised by others, but no one has thought of a better way to solve crimes and to get the public involved.

"When it actually comes down to putting bad guys in jail, there is not another program that is this successful," MacAleese said. "That's what the bottom line is."

Crime Stoppers shows people re-enactments of crimes of all kinds — burglaries, robberies, terrifying murders, "all within the limits of good taste," MacAleese said. The televised re-enactments are followed by a plea for calls, a promise of anonymity and the temptation of a reward of up to $1,000 if the call results in an indictment.

"For every crime that is committed, it's my theory that somebody else knows about it. It may not be an eyewitness ... but somebody has information about it," MacAleese said.

Often that person is "on the fringes of the criminal element" and calls in for the money, MacAleese said. But some call for other reasons, and 25 to 30 percent of the callers want no reward, he said.

Although MacAleese thinks of the rewards "as a way of saying thank you," he recognizes that "any time you combine anonymous informants and reward money, you have to be very cautious not to violate people's rights."

So far, the courts have upheld cases involving information gathered through Crime Stoppers, but there are those who question its methods.

"It's hard to pinpoint why this is wrong but there is something wrong about it," said Ray Schowers, legal director for the New Mexico chapter of the American Civil Liberties Union. "It's bounty-hunting in a strange sort of way."

Schowers finds himself in the same situation as other critics of Crime Stoppers — he doesn't like the sound of it all, but he has no specific complaints.

"We searched long and hard for a particular constitutional problem with it and haven't found any," Schowers said. "It does create this whole notion that people are spying on one another, but I don't have any evidence of that."

"We decided to let it alone until we find a specific problem with it."

Yankees must play game or forfeit it

NEW YORK (AP) — George Steinbrenner blames Lee MacPhail for ruining a day at Yankee Stadium for the kids. And there might not be a night at the ballpark next Thursday, either, if the Yanks — with the owner's blessing — vote against concluding the pine-tar game with Kansas City.

If the Yankees refuse to play, the game would be forfeited to Kansas City. Even if the Yanks vote against playing, though, the Royals will have to show up at Yankee Stadium Aug. 18 at 6 p.m., as directed by MacPhail, the American League president.

"I don't know what we're going to do. It's all boring to me," Yankee pitcher Goose Gossage said Thursday night. "I don't care what happens in that game. If we lose it, we lose it. We're in a pennant race."

The Players Association, which met with MacPhail, decided not to file a grievance over the AL president's decision, saying that of the available dates, Aug. 18 was the least objectionable.

Steinbrenner, in a lengthy statement issued by the Yankees' office in New York, took MacPhail to task for ordering that the game be resumed starting at 6 p.m., four hours later than Steinbrenner had announced.

"It's a darn shame that MacPhail is making it necessary for us to cancel our plans for the young kids of the New York area," Steinbrenner said. "We had planned on having some entertainment after the ballgame, a lot of giveaways, and making a real great day for a lot of young campers and kids at the end of their vacation...

"We wanted to make it a really nice day for them, but MacPhail has axed all that only to accommodate the Kansas City team's wishes...I do not understand this — it's a lousy, lousy thing to do. But we will abide by it if the game is played."

The game was halted July 24 after George Brett hit a two-out, two-run homer to give Kansas City a 5-4 lead in the top of the ninth inning. When the Yankees protested that Brett's bat had pine tar too far up the barrel, the umpires disallowed the homer, called Brett out and gave the Yanks an apparent 4-3 victory.

Four days later, MacPhail overruled the umpires, restored the homer and ordered that the game be resumed next Thursday, rather than at the end of the season, to avoid postseason scheduling problems.

Astros' Scott 'discombobulates' Padres' hitters for 5-1 victory

HOUSTON (AP) — In the early part of the Houston Astros' game against the San Diego Padres, pitcher Mike Scott admitted he was a bit out of sorts — "Discombobulated," he said.

Scott's vocabulary was as puzzling as his pitching was to the Padres after the early innings.

The Astros' right-hander settled down to combine with reliever Dave Smith on a seven-hitter, as Houston downed the Padres Thursday night 5-1 for the fourth win in five games.

"I don't know what I was doing out there," Scott said. "I've never been so discombobulated in my life. I had no idea where the ball was going. I was terrible."

Scott, 6-4, walked four and allowed four hits in the opening four innings, but escaped with only being charged for one run on Tony Gwynn's two-out RBI single in the third inning.

A line-out double play to right fielder Kevin Bass bailed Scott out of a second inning jam and bought him time to settle down.

"If it wasn't for that, I wouldn't have got past the second inning," he said.

After walking Juan Bonilla in the fourth inning, Scott recorded 10 straight outs before Bobby Brown's single in the seventh inning. Smith pitched the final two frames for his fifth save.

"We had Scott on the hook and we let him off," said San Diego Manager Dick Williams. "He was wild. We just couldn't get the base hits when we needed them."

Jose Cruz made a winner of Scott when he drove in the game-winning run in the fourth inning and gave Smith some breathing room with a bases-loaded triple in the eighth inning.

"It's about time," Cruz said. "I've been swinging the bat pretty good. Last night, I had a chance to win the game early, but I didn't. Today's another day."

In the fourth, Bill Doran drew a base on balls with one out and went to second on Dickie Thon's single off loser Mark Thurmond, 5-2.

US sprinter fades back in world qualifying heat

HELSINKI, Finland (AP) — U.S. fortunes, which had been running high in the inaugural World Track and Field Championships, suffered unexpected setbacks Friday when Larry Myricks failed to get through the first round heats of the men's 200-meter dash and women's hurdler Candy Young was injured.

Myricks, recovering from a hamstring injury, finished only fifth in his heat and missed reaching the second round.

Thursday, his teammate, Calvin Smith, had predicted that Myricks would win the 200 final, which will be run Sunday.

"I just had no zip, no bounce," said Myricks, adding that the injury did not bother him during the race. He said, however, that recent inactivity because of the injury was a factor in his not running well.

Smith, winner of a gold medal in the men's 400-meter relay and a silver medalist in the 100, won his 200 heat easily in 21.10.

Among those joining Smith, the world record holder in the 100, in the second round of the 200 were world record holder Pietro Mennea of Italy and 1980 Olympic 100-meter champion Allan Wells of Scotland.

Mennea had the fastest first-round clocking, 20.80, while Wells won his heat in 21.14.

In the women's 100-meter hurdles, Young was injured after clearing the first hurdle. Her left leg in pain, she could not stop immediately and crashed into the second hurdle, then tumbled onto the track, grabbing her leg in agony.

The U.S. team, leading in gold medals and in total medals, had been very enthusiastic going into the final three days of competition.

After a day off Thursday, the Americans were anxious to return to the Olympic Stadium track, where they have produced some astonishing and unexpected performances since the inaugural World Championships began last Sunday.

The Americans still were riding high after Wednesday night, when Carl Lewis anchored the 400-meter relay team to a world record 37.86 seconds and led a 1-2-3 U.S. sweep in the long jump. Mary Decker won the women's 2,000 with a gritty finishing kick, and Michael Franks and Sunder Nix finished 2-3 in the men's 400-meter dash. That gave the United States a total of five golds and 15 total medals, including a 1-2-3 sweep in Monday night's men's 100-meter final, won by Lewis.

"That really fired me up," American pole vaulter Billy Olson said about Wednesday's magnificent efforts.

"I wouldn't mind being out there today (Thursday)," he said during the break in the schedule.

"I think the (American) athletes feel really good because everyone (the fans) are very much behind them," said American Edwin Moses, winner of the 400-meter intermediate hurdles Tuesday night.

Willie Gault, a member of the relay team, along with Emmitt King, Calvin Smith and Lewis, thinks the world record will provide a big boost for track and field in the United States.

"Track and field (in the U.S.) ... doesn't get as much respect as it should," said Gault.

The fans here have been very supportive of the Americans.

They stood and yelled and cheered loudly when the American team broke the relay record. They also leaned over the railings to present the four runners with flags — both American and Finnish — and handed them various size versions of "Lasse," the rabbit that is the meet mascot and is named after Lasse Viren, the four-time Olympic gold medalist from Finland.

The Americans' success also has buoyed their hopes for the 1984 Olympic Games at Los Angeles. There, the United States track and field teams hopes to make amends for its absence in the 1980 Moscow Games, which they boycotted and for its relatively poor showings in the 1972 and 1976 Olympics, when they won only six gold medals each.

"I was so proud to see the American flag up on top tonight, and I want to see our flag up on top next year too in the Los Angeles Olympics," the emotional Decker said after her dramatic victory.

"We have proved we can come abroad and compete at our level," said Lewis, the star of the American team — and of the meet.

"Now, Los Angeles is less than a year away. When people come to our turf, we want to show them we can compete well, too."

Kramer: selfish tennis stars killing goose with golden egg

By WILL GRIMSLEY
 AP Special Correspondent

LOS ANGELES (AP) — You can buy a canary but you can't make it sing. The tenor may refuse to exercise his lungs at the opera but what's to prevent you from burning down the opera house?

This is the rationale that is running through established tennis minds these days as the once grand old English lawn game is threatening to choke on its own success.

"If something isn't done — and done quickly — exhibitions will be the ruination of tennis," Jack Kramer dolefully predicted after watching one of the country's most prestigious tournaments humiliated over the weekend.

"I am dismayed over what happened to the National Clay Court Championships at Indianapolis. This is a tournament that always ranked second only to the French as an important clay court event."

"All the great champions have played in it. Indianapolis built a new multi-million-dollar, 10,000-seat stadium. Promoters signed a network TV contract with CBS."

"And what happens? Not one of the top six players in either the men's or women's divisions showed up. Most of them were off playing exhibitions."

"It is a shame." A big clump of the top men players were competing instead in a $300,000 eight-man exhibition series at nearby Newport Beach, promoted by a man named Bill Stamps.

The field was headed by Jimmy Connors and Ivan

Lendl and also included Wojtek Fibak, Tim Mayotte, Yannick Noah, Mats Wilander, Kevin Curran and Elliott Telscher.

The irony was that Wilander and Noah were the 1982 and 1983 winners, respectively, of the French title and would have been excellent drawing cards in the Indianapolis tournament.

The country's — and the world's — best woman player, Martina Navratilova, and highly rated Andrea Jaeger skipped the National Clay Court also to play an exhibition.

"Imagine how CBS must feel," said Kramer. "CBS is one of the most faithful sponsors in tennis yet they were forced to put on an inferior product just because of the selfishness of the players."

"No one seems to care about giving anything back to the game that feeds them. No one worries that they may be gradually killing the goose that lays the golden eggs."

Jack Kramer is virtually the father of professional tennis, although Cash and Carry Pyle, Big Bill Tilden and later Bobby Riggs promoted one night stands around the country dating back to the 1920s.

Kramer was the king. U.S. and Wimbledon champion, Kramer became the impresario of the touring pros after World War II, later promoted his own tournament in Los Angeles and, after the game went open in 1968, emerged as the architect of the Grand Prix tour.

Many thought he should be elevated as the czar of tennis — a benevolent despot — to save the game from its wild ambitions and unbridled indiscretions, but unfortunately it never came to pass.

Now the game is stewing in its own grease, alienating promoters, discouraging TV networks and suffering an image crisis as a bunch of arrogant, self-centered players who behave abominably on court, answer to no authority and frequently throw matches when it's to their best interest to do so.

Critics have come to look upon the game as not far removed from pro wrestling — pure theatre with a diminishing competitive aspect.

"It is getting worse every day," said Kramer. "Unless the players themselves see the danger and agree to regulation the sport is in real danger."

"The players and their agents control the game. And a few are running amok."

Kramer, an avid golfer, cited the structural differences in the companion sports.

"Golfers grew up with the system — the USGA and PGA," he said. "They have progressed in a quiet, orderly manner. Open tennis exploded so suddenly it flew off in all directions."

Kramer suggested that with all the prize money and TV revenues available it should be easy to schedule two simultaneous tours of 30 weeks, leaving 22 weeks for exhibitions and private pursuits, but committed to at least 15.

"Promoters must be guaranteed certain top players for a representative field," he said.

"If a player refuses to go by the rules, other players should say, 'Okay, jerk, we won't play in any tournament you're in.'"

"If the guy brings up civil rights and says, 'I'll sue,' let him sue. Then cancel all tournaments until the case is settled. That should fix things in a hurry."

Rangers control Arlington Stadium

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — The Texas Rangers and the city of Arlington have announced a new lease agreement that will give the American League baseball club complete control over Arlington Stadium.

The lease, effective Nov. 1, was announced Thursday. It gives the Rangers control of parking, concessions, maintenance and remodeling and expansion facilities.

"We believe it will be to our advantage, to our fans, and the Rangers to have unified control of customer services from the time a fan enters a parking lot until he leaves the parking lot," said Eddie Chiles, Rangers board chairman.

"It will be the Rangers' sole responsibility to increase our customers' enjoyment at the stadium," Chiles said.

Larry Schmittou, vice president of marketing, said "the new agreement means the Los Angeles Dodgers and the Rangers will be the only clubs in baseball to control their entire operations."

"Over a four-year period we will be remodeling and expanding extensively. Immediately after the season ends we will start construction on an additional 32 luxury boxes — only eight which remain unsold as of this moment — and there will be numerous other improvements," Schmittou said.

He added there will be more ticket windows, souvenir stands, concession stands and restrooms. Also included in our long range plans are the construction of the club's offices at the stadium and increased facilities for the news media and a new scoreboard."

Schmittou said the marketing department will control the Rangers' advertising and will publish a yearbook starting in 1984.

Making mosquitoes toast of the town

By ERICA JOHNSTON

HOUSTON (AP) — Some 20,000 people are likely to celebrate this weekend the presence of a pesky critter most people love to hate.

Consider:

- It breeds in swamps or water-filled trash, or in muddy pools on vacant lots.
- It feeds on nectar or sap from plants until the mating urge arrives.
- The female of the species, seeking blood to set eggs and fuel another generation, rises in clouds of torment to bring a season of misery to humans, animals and even birds.
- Its bite leads to incessant itching and could lead to disease or even death.

It's the ubiquitous mosquito. In Texas alone, you get your choice of 83 varieties.

But even though it's not held in high esteem, — or any esteem for that matter — one coastal city has decided to honor the critter.

"We had no real historical significance to capitalize on, but we've got the meanest crop of mosquitoes in the world," says Lanis Neugent, co-chairman of the Great Texas Mosquito Festival slated for this weekend in Clute, a community of 12,000 about 50 miles south of Houston.

While revelers there may praise the antics of the pest, other areas of Texas have mobilized "swat" teams to control them.

According to experts around the state and to the relief of most people, this is not a banner year for Texas mosquitoes unless you live in the sodden Gulf coast area from Port Lavaca to Beaumont.

But although the mosquito problem may be relatively light this year, experts say they'll always be around.

In Galveston County, where the Mosquito Control District employs several people each summer to count how many of the creatures land on them, district director Terry Hensley acknowledges that all authorities can do is control them.

"There will never be a situation where you're going to eradicate mosquitoes," he says. "There's just too many areas where they can lay their eggs."

"Mosquitoes are smarter than you think," says Harris County Mosquito Control District Director Robert Barnett. "They're extremely adaptable. Some of their eggs can last several years before hatching."

In the Houston area, 56 people work year-round, fogging areas with pesticide and mapping mosquito populations using computers — a $2 million annual project.

Away from the coast, mosquitoes usually pose big problems only in irrigated fields and places where there are ponds and lakes, Davis said.

In Dallas, the county health department uses blood samples from 100 chickens placed in strategic locations throughout the county to determine whether the mosquitoes there are carrying diseases.

Even in dry San Angelo and similar areas, officials use bug-loving minnows to control the mosquito population.

Most of the insects are merely pests. Three varieties, however, are the principle disease carriers: two types of culex mosquitoes, which can carry St. Louis Encephalitis and Western Encephalitis; and aedes aegypti, which experts say is a potential carrier of dengue fever. No cases of dengue fever have been reported in Texas for many years, however.

So far this year, just one case of St. Louis Encephalitis has been reported. In 1981, the health department reported 89 cases and one death. Last year, 18 Texans had the sickness, with one unconfirmed death, officials say.

Davis says the virus carried by some culex mosquitoes still exists in Texas. But it is carried in birds and passed on by mosquitoes, and is transmitted to humans only when the culex mosquitoes can't find birds to bite.

"You probably hardly ever see culex," Barnett says. "What you see are varieties of woodland pool mosquitoes. They are pests, but they aren't really dangerous."

To keep them away from your house, experts advise removal or covering of any object that could hold water, and cleaning clogged roof gutters.

Although mosquitoes are a year-round problem, the "real" season starts this month and lasts until October, officials say.

"The mosquitoes around now are laying eggs, so they probably have a whole crop (of eggs) waiting for the next flood," Barnett says. "And that crop might be twice as big."

Aggies get first Nobel laureate

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP) — Texas A&M University has successfully courted its first Nobel Peace Prize winner to the school's faculty.

Dr. Norman E. Borlaug, called the "Father of the Green Revolution" for his work in plant genetics, will join the A&M faculty Jan. 1, officials announced Thursday.

Borlaug has been appointed Distinguished Professor of International Agriculture, said university president Frank E. Vandiver.

"It is appropriate that our first Nobel Laureate should be in agriculture," said Vandiver. "His decision to continue his important research here represents a major step forward in our quest for pre-eminence and recognition as a world university."

"We are highly honored to have Dr. Borlaug join us at Texas A&M," he added.

The winner of the Nobel prize in 1970, Borlaug lives in Mexico City where he is on the staff of the International Maize and Wheat Improvement Center. He will continue to be associated with the center on a modified basis.

The plant geneticist is credited with developing new varieties of wheat that dramatically increased crop yields throughout the world.

Vandiver said Borlaug will continue his research into new varieties of high-yield crops, particularly wheat, and will work closely with the Texas Agricultural Experiment Station, the agricultural research agency of the Texas A&M University System.
