

Autry avoids execution by minutes

By SHARON HERBAUGH
HUNTSVILLE, Texas (AP) — Convicted killer James David Autry was strapped to a death house gurney with a needle in his arm today when he was told — four minutes after his execution was to have begun — that a Supreme Court justice had granted a reprieve.

Autry, a 29-year-old drifter condemned for killing a store clerk over a six-pack of beer, was awaiting a lethal jolt of chemicals when Justice Byron White granted a stay of execution at 11:32 p.m. CDT Tuesday. The state failed in an attempt to overturn the stay.

When Autry was told at 11:39 that there would be a delay, "He did not say one word or have any response," prison spokesman Rick Hartley said.

At 12:05 the inmate, still bound by leather straps in the Texas death chamber, was told of the stay, Hartley said. "Once again there was no reaction." Three minutes later he was off the gurney and at 12:13 he was back in a cell adjacent to the death chamber, the spokesman said.

Autry's execution had been scheduled for just after midnight.

Ann Arnold, press secretary to Gov. Mark White, said the stay was granted on the basis of a California case which Texas Attorney General Mattox said "deals with the question of proportionality of the sentence — whether or not the sentence granted one person given the death penalty is the same or comparable to a sentence given someone else for an equal crime."

She said she understood that Justice White stayed Autry's case until the high court could rule on the California case scheduled to be heard Nov. 7.

John Duncan, the director of the Texas Civil Liberties Union, said in Austin that the stay that spared Autry will keep Texas from executing any convict until the legal question is decided by the Supreme Court.

"We've got another block on all Texas executions," an elated Duncan said about an hour after the stay was issued.

Elna Christopher, press secretary for Mattox, said it was possible the stay could block future Texas executions and that lawyers would begin researching the question today. None of the 170 inmates on Texas' death row has an active execution date.

Duncan said the stay also means Autry's lawyers will be allowed to present their case to the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Autry, known as "Cowboy" to his fellow inmates on death row, would have been the ninth U.S. inmate to be executed since the Supreme Court reinstated the death penalty in 1976. His execution would have made Texas the first state to execute two prisoners since that decision.

Lenora Taylor of Cleveland, Texas, the daughter of the woman Autry killed, was angry about the stay.

"I knew it... I thought it was so close. I thought it would be over with. It figures they would have found something," she said in a phone interview.

Outside the old red-brick prison where the execution was to have taken place, a boisterous crowd of about 200 pro-death penalty demonstrators shook their fists and chanted an obscenity when word of the stay spread.

Justice White issued the stay after the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals turned down a motion from the American Civil Liberties Union to halt the execution. He acted after receiving an application for a stay signed by Alvin J. Bronstein from the National Prison Project of the ACLU.

Mattox said his office called and asked the Supreme Court to vacate the stay, but "we were told we only had 30 minutes to present a written motion and that motion had to be served to each of the judges. It's an impossibility."

Earlier Tuesday, U.S. District Judge Robert Parker in Marshall denied a request by the ACLU to stop the execution — one day after the U.S. Supreme Court turned down by a 5-4 vote a request by defense attorney Charles Carver for an emergency stay.

Autry, who has a crime record dating back to his youth in Amarillo, was condemned for the 1980 slaying of a Port Arthur, Texas convenience store clerk and mother of five who was shot between the eyes.

Autry had denied fatally shooting Shirley Drouet, 43, who took the clerk's job at the store to earn some money, and 43-year-old Joseph Broussard.

Jeers, angry shouts greet announcement of execution stay

HUNTSVILLE, Texas (AP) — A crowd of more than 150 death penalty proponents who waited tensely for James David Autry to die erupted in fury when the convicted murderer was granted a stay of execution.

As the reprieve was announced early this morning, one woman yelled angrily, "Give me the syringe, I'll do it." A man nearby shouted "so murder is legal?"

Texas Attorney General Jim Mattox was denounced with obscenities as he explained the eleventh-hour twist of events.

His remarks were crushed by jeers and angry shouts as he addressed reporters and protesters who crowded before steps across the street from the Walls Unit, the prison where Autry lay strapped on a gurney awaiting death for more than an hour.

Supreme Court Justice Byron White granted the temporary stay at 11:32 p.m. CDT Tuesday. Autry was scheduled to die just after midnight.

The word, spread by newsmen, rippled through the crowd, causing joy for some and anger for others.

Throughout the night, the crowd had swelled with death penalty supporters, most of them students at nearby Sam Houston State University. A counter-demonstration was held on the other side of the street by candle-bearing demonstrators from Amnesty International, which opposes capital punishment.

Autry, 29, was convicted of murdering a convenience store clerk for a $2.70 six-pack of beer.

"We pay for our beer, now it's time for Autry to pay for his," said a sign carried by 22-year-old Jon Cabeen of Houston, a student at Sam Houston

Pampa school district's tax rate left unchanged at 63.9 cents

By JULIA CLARK
Staff Writer

The 1983 school tax rate was set at 63.9 cents per $100 valuation, the same as last year, by the Pampa Independent School District Board of Trustees Tuesday.

The rate was approved by a four to one vote.

Superintendent James Trusty said in spite of dropping personal vehicles from this year's tax rolls, the certified taxable value of the district's property increased by $13.8 million, generating the needed revenue to meet the district's proposed $10,460,144 budget.

The director of the Gray County

Appraisal District, Charles Buzzard, said his office predicts a 94 percent collection rate for this year, bringing in an estimated $4,516,971 for the school district. Last year's collections, including delinquent tax payments, penalties and interest amounted to $4,712,096.

During the discussion on the proposed tax rate, board member Jerry Carlson questioned appraisal district director Charles Buzzard about the fairness of dropping personal vehicles from the tax rolls.

Carlson said he felt business was carrying too much of the load in supporting the schools.

Buzzard and board member Dr. Robert Lyle said with the new system of valuation the load is becoming more evenly distributed. Buzzard also said when personal vehicles were included on the tax role, the collection rate was only 74 percent. Carlson voted against the new tax rate.

In other business the board approved the due bills and invoices and the new rental fees for school facilities.

Explaining that the policy on use of the school facilities by nonprofit organizations remains the same, Trusty outlined the new fee schedule. He also said because the administration and board feel the school facilities are primarily for the use of school activities, other groups may use school facilities on a space available basis.

The fees are as follows:

- Classrooms - 1. School hours: $7.50 minimum, plus $5 per hour, after three hours; custodial fee included.
- 2. Nonschool hours: $10 minimum, plus $7.50 per hour after three hours; custodial fee not included. Non school hours are defined as before 8:15 a.m. and after 4 p.m.
- Gymnasiums (excluding fieldhouse) - 1. School hours: minimum rental, $15, plus $7.50 per hour after three hours; custodial fee included.
- 2. Nonschool hours: minimum $20, plus $7.50 per hour after three hours; custodial fee not included.
- Auditorium and Fieldhouse - $75 minimum plus $15 per hour after three hours; custodial fee not included.
- Cafeterias - 1. Banquets shall be charged at cost - per - meal price, plus custodial - cafeteria personnel fees.

- 2. $40 nonbanquet minimum rental plus $10 per - hour after three hours; custodial fees not included.

Custodian - Cafeteria Fee - Custodial personnel shall be required to be on duty when a facility is rented, and cafeteria personnel shall be required to be on duty when a school cafeteria is used for preparation of food. All custodial - cafeteria services required when those personnel are not on regular school duty hours shall be paid for by the organization renting the facility at the overtime rate in effect.

The following five people were unanimously nominated by the board to serve as directors on the Gray County Appraisal District Board: Dr. Robert Lyle, Jimmy Wilkerson, Loyd Hunt, Benny Kirksey and Glen Dawkins.

Each of the taxing entities in the district may nominate one candidate for each of the five positions to be filled on the county tax appraisal board and should be submitted to county clerk Wanda Carter before October 15, 1983.

Price's action just 'buys time'

By JEFF LANGLEY
Senior Staff Writer

Bob Price's acquisition of the mountain of debts that led the former congressman into federal bankruptcy court just hours before the federal government tried to auction off his huge ranch could be a lesson in how to inherit 9,600 acres of land and lose them in less than one lifetime.

Officials with the federal agencies which loaned Price millions doubt the rancher - politician can ever pay all he owes.

Price filed for Chapter 11 bankruptcy Tuesday morning, just hours before the government planned to auction off the ranch from the steps of the Gray County Courthouse.

"It's a good way to buy time," said SBA official Barbara Hoffman about Price's legal action to block the government auction.

Hoffman, a lawyer with the Small Business Administration, the federal agency that tried to foreclose on the ranch Tuesday, said bankers consider Chapter 11 "a license to steal."

Arvell Williams, the Amarillo auctioneer who came to Pampa for the forced auction, called Price's last-minute filing a "cat - and - mouse game."

Both Hoffman and Williams agree that the bankruptcy filing won't change the basic facts: Price used the ranch to get loans that add up to more than the property is worth.

According to SBA official Barbara Hoffman, about 20 different government and private lenders hold liens on the Price ranch. The amount owed to just the first five lien holders (four liens held by the government and one lien held by the Panhandle Bank & Trust at Borger) totals more than $2.7 million. Price has put up the title of the ranch to borrow hundreds of thousands more from 15 additional "secured creditors." The former congressman also owes money to a score of "unsecured creditors," or creditors who have no liens on the property, according to the officials.

Price tried to sell the ranch, which spreads across four counties northwest of Pampa, at a "voluntary" auction last April 28. Pampa oilman Leonard Hudson entered the top bid then at $3,025,000, about $312 per acre. The deal never closed, with Hudson alleging the property is hopelessly covered with debts and liens. Price couldn't produce a "clear title" to the ranch, the Pampa oilman later said.

Price will have 120 days to show U.S. Bankruptcy Judge Bill Brister a list of debts and a plan to pay them.

Hoffman said lien holders must be paid in full and in order, according to the date a lien was acquired. Should the ranch be sold, creditors in line after the cash runs out will not collect, she said.

The SBA lawyer said Price blocked the government auction Tuesday in order to buy time and perhaps get a better price for the ranch. She said a sale through private negotiations may get more dollars for the property than a foreclosure sale.

Williams disagreed, saying prospective buyers, who might have bid on the property at the foreclosure sale Tuesday, would have known then that they were getting a clear title. The foreclosure would have "shut out," or wiped out claims by lien holders in line after the government, the auctioneer said. The bankruptcy filing opens the action to the tangled mess of creditors and may now ward off some interested buyers, he said.

"We cannot sell what we came here to sell today."

"I'm sorry you've come and were not able to leave with what you anticipated," Williams said to about 40 people who gathered for the scheduled auction at the courthouse Tuesday.

The auctioneer and SBA officials informed the crowd about Price's filing for bankruptcy, blocking the foreclosure sale.

Even though they called off the auction, the officials told the crowd they would accept written bids on the ranch and forward them to Price and his lawyer.

Hurt said the SBA will add its cost of scheduling the auction, only to have it blocked by Price, to the note it is trying to collect from him.

Price filed for bankruptcy in Amarillo federal court at 9:40 a.m. Tuesday. The SBA's foreclosure sale was scheduled for 1 p.m.

"This action has become necessary in order to protect (my) equity and the rights of other creditors from the planned foreclosure of the ranch by the Small Business Administration," Price said in a news release issued Tuesday by his Amarillo lawyer, Don Patterson.

Patterson said Price will submit a plan to Judge Brister that will outline a way to pay all of his many creditors.

Price, a Republican, served four terms in Congress from 1966 through 1974. He served as state senator from this district from 1977 through 1980.

The sprawling ranch that was hours away from going on the auction block Tuesday was bought by Price's grandfather in 1907.

Solidarity leader Lech Walesa wins 1983 Nobel Peace Prize

OSLO, Norway (AP) — Lech Walesa, founder of the now-outlawed Solidarity labor union, today won the 1983 Nobel Peace Prize for his struggle on behalf of workers' rights in Communist-ruled Poland.

The Norwegian Nobel Committee said it honored Walesa "as an exponent of the active longing for peace and freedom which exists, in spite of unequal conditions, unconquered in all the peoples of the world."

Walesa, the first Pole to win the coveted prize, was chosen for his "contribution, made with considerable personal sacrifice, to ensure the workers' right to establish their own organizations," the committee said.

It said the 40-year-old former head of Solidarity, the first independent trade union in the Soviet bloc, had worked with "a determination to solve his country's problems through negotiation and cooperation without resorting to violence."

Walesa had left his apartment this morning to hunt for mushrooms in the woods and was not at home when the prize was announced, said his wife Danuta.

"Oh god, I am very happy, very, very happy," she said when reached by telephone at their home in the Baltic port of Gdansk, where Walesa helped create Solidarity at the Lenin shipyard.

Walesa entered the international spotlight in August 1980 when, after a summer of strikes and labor turmoil, Solidarity forced Poland's government to allow the right to strike and organize independent unions. Those gains were negated later by the banning of Solidarity and the imposition of martial law.

The Nobel Committee, in a statement explaining its award, said Walesa "has attempted to establish a dialogue between the organization he represents — Solidarity — and the authorities."

The statement, read by Nobel Committee chairman Egil Aarvik, did not speculate on whether Walesa will travel to Oslo to receive his award and Nobel Prize check on Dec. 10.

The awards always are given on that date, the anniversary of the death in 1896 of Swedish dynamite inventor Alfred Nobel, whose will established the Nobel Prizes. This year's stipend for each winner is a record 1.5 million Swedish kronor — almost $190,000.

Walesa is only the second peace prize winner from the Soviet bloc, and his selection likely will prompt a similar response there as the 1975 award to Soviet dissident Andrei Sakharov. East bloc governments claimed the award to Sakharov was motivated by politics, despite the Nobel Committee's avowed apolitical goals.

Jakob Sverdrup, the Nobel Committee's secretary and head of the Norwegian Nobel Institute, said Walesa's name was proposed by several groups of parliamentarians, including West Germans, French and Norwegians.

Between August 1980 and December 1981, when Polish authorities suspended Solidarity by declaring martial law, Walesa was transformed from an unemployed electrician into one of the world's most familiar faces.

Even after the military crackdown, Walesa remained the leading symbol of the struggle for workers' rights in Poland, a cause to which he had dedicated himself more than a decade.

Interned along with thousands of other Solidarity leaders and supporters under the martial law declaration of Dec. 13, 1981, Walesa was released in November 1982 after eleven months in isolated internment.

United Nations speech

Soviets propose nuclear freeze

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — The Soviet Union is inviting the United States to join in a worldwide freeze on nuclear weapons, just two months before the planned deployment of new U.S. missiles in Western Europe.

Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko, in a proposal made Tuesday, urged the 158-nation General Assembly to adopt a resolution calling on all countries to agree to a freeze "under appropriate verification."

Moscow "considers it possible for the U.S.S.R. and the U.S.A. to be the first to implement it on a bilateral basis by way of example to the other nuclear powers," Gromyko wrote to U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar.

The foreign minister decided not to attend the assembly session after the governors of New York and New Jersey decreed that his plane could not land at Kennedy or Newark airports in protest of the Soviet downing of a Korean airliner Sept. 1.

Previous Soviet proposals for a nuclear weapons freeze have been rejected by the Reagan administration, which said such action would allow the Soviets to maintain an existing edge in nuclear strength.

Gromyko said his freeze resolution included a ban on deployment of new nuclear arms — an apparent reference to the 572 Pershing 2 and cruise missiles the United States plans to deploy in Western Europe beginning in December unless a superpower accord is reached.

Gromyko proposed in a second letter to Perez de Cuellar that the General Assembly adopt a resolution condemning nuclear war as "the most hideous crime against the peoples."

In Gromyko's absence, Soviet Ambassador Oleg A. Troyanovsky outlined the proposal in a speech to the assembly.

"The implementation of that initiative would markedly raise the degree of trust among the nuclear-weapon countries and would make it possible to move decisively towards breaking the vicious cycle of the arms race," he said. "Moreover, this would also promote the reduction and, eventually, complete elimination of nuclear weapons."

But he said deployment of the new U.S. medium-range missiles in Europe would provoke Soviet "countermeasures to preserve the balance of forces on both European and global scales."

Troyanovsky also condemned the United States for its military policies, its stance at the arms reduction talks in Geneva and its reaction to the downing of the Korean jumbo jet.

Soviet bloc states do not seek military superiority, Troyanovsky said, "but they will not allow anyone to acquire military superiority over them."

Regarding the airliner incident, Troyanovsky accused the United States of "deliberately whipping up war hysteria."

Troyanovsky repeated a question raised in Moscow by Soviet President Yuri V. Andropov about the United States' suitability to host the United Nations.

"Can the international organization, called upon to maintain peace and security, be located in a country where an outrageous militaristic psychosis is being imposed and the good name of this organization insulted?"

"It's one thing to have a strike with lots of divisiveness; it's another thing to have a river on top of the town," the governor said. Babbitt awaited the Reagan administration's answer to his plea that 10 counties be declared federal disaster areas.

American Red Cross surveys showed 934 houses, mobile homes, apartment units and businesses had been destroyed by flooding and another 2,952 damaged, with the numbers expected to rise.

Another major storm heading for flood-stricken Arizona

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — Flood-weary Arizonans dug through mud-caked debris and riot police guarded a mining town ravaged both by rains and strike violence as a forecaster warned the "same song, second verse" could renew downpours tonight.

The fierce flooding, which left 15 people dead or missing and hundreds of millions of dollars in damage in Arizona's worst disaster of the century, receded Tuesday as the sun came out.

But swollen rivers continued to rage out of control in some areas, forcing evacuations and inundating previously untouched communities southwest of Phoenix.

Added to the desert state's troubles, the National Weather Service said a major storm from a Pacific hurricane could hit tonight, bringing more heavy rains to devastated southern Arizona.

"We're talking large-scale," said meteorologist Brenda Graham in Phoenix. "It's the same sort of song, second verse."

Emergency-service workers began moving heavy equipment to likely flood sites ahead of the storm, while government and disaster-relief officials assessed the massive damage already suffered, estimated at up to $300 million by Arizona legislators.

In the copper mining town of Clifton, where floods swept away half the community, looters preyed on wrecked homes and businesses and striking copper workers threw rocks at non-striking employees of Phelps Dodge Corp., authorities said.

In response, police cordoned off the business district, imposed a 10 p.m. curfew for the town's 4,200 residents and called in 25 riot-helmeted reinforcements from the Department of Public Safety.

In Phoenix, Phelps Dodge broke off contract negotiations in the 3-month-old strike Tuesday after company officials said a crowd of strikers threw rocks and bottles and threatened workers who were trying to repair roadways. However, union negotiators charged that the company had been looking for an excuse to end the talks.

Some residents who had ridden out layoffs and strikes in Clifton, 100 miles northeast of Tucson on the San Francisco River, declared the flooding the final straw and packed up to move out.

"Goodbye to all this," said Jack Wright, as he loaded a mud-covered mattress onto his pickup truck.

"Aren't you even going to put your place up for sale?" a neighbor asked.

"Nope — I'm just going," Wright replied.

Gov. Bruce Babbitt stopped in Clifton on Tuesday to survey the damage, which Greenlee County Emergency Services director Stu Spaulding estimated at $12.3 million.

Blood drive Friday
 Coffee Memorial Blood Center of Amarillo is sponsoring a blood drive from 1:30 to 5:30 p.m. Friday in the Energas Bldg. Flame Room.

The center is seeking 144 pints to replace blood used this summer for treatment of Mrs. Beatrice Hollis of Pampa.
 Mrs. Hollis, who died in June after a lengthy illness and complications following open-heart surgery, required over 200 pints during her hospital stay.
 Volunteers may come by anytime during the hours of operation Friday. Blood donors should refrain from donating blood if they have an infectious disease or if they have a fever.

Sometimes beauty only skin-deep

What price fame? Apparently for Miss America contestants, and Misses Texas in particular, the price includes plastic surgery.

Ideally, the Miss America contest is the venue for this country's brightest, most talented and, yes, prettiest young women, who present a role model for young girls to live up to.

But in the past two years, the desire to win the Miss America title has led contestants to plastic surgeons' offices. Miss America of 1982, Debra Sue Maffett, and her "nose done" after losing the 1978, 1979 and 1980 Miss Texas pageants. Miss Texas 1983, Dana Rogers, had surgery for breast implants as well as a nose job after she placed as second runner-up in the state competition last year.

One wonders at the values that spawn such drastic measures to achieve physical beauty. On the one hand, we live in a culture that places a high value - too high perhaps - on youthful looks. On the other hand - and this reason should be as plain as the tip on a surgically altered nose - the Miss America contest carries a $25,000 cash scholarship for first prize and the potential of $100,000 from personal appearances.

Rogers had financial help for her surgery. San Antonio businessman Ernesto Ancira Jr., who said he wanted a Miss San Antonio as the next Miss Texas, helped pay for Rogers' surgery. Said Ancira, "She looked like winning material."

Rogers was even more candid than Ancira. "Some women wear their padding on the outside," she said. "Mine is already there, on the inside."

The Pampa News would not deign to pass judgement on either Ancira or Rogers. We are sure they had their reasons for what they did. What scares us is the influence on girls who idolize beauty contestants. Rogers, after all, said she "grew up wanting to change that (her appearance) all my life."

Despite Rogers' efforts, she did not win the Miss America title this year. The judges picked Miss New York, Vanessa Williams, the first black woman ever to win the pageant.

On a hopeful note, Williams said she does not place the emphasis on physical beauty that many of her co-contestants did. If she were to change the contest, Williams said, she would drop the bathing suit competition, replacing it with some form of athletic contest.

After all, a healthy and attractive body is more than just skin deep.

Anchorman reveals liberal bias

NEW YORK (NEA) - Every so often the tensions between the bland facade of America's television news and the powerful engines of slant and bias directly beneath its surface cause an ugly rip in the fabric, and we viewers get a rare look at what is really going on. One particularly instructive glimpse was afforded recently when Tom Brokaw, the boyishly good-looking anchorman on the NBC evening news, gave an interview to Mother Jones, one of the crazier publications spawned by the New Left in the '60s and '70s.

It wasn't so much what Brokaw said, but the reactions to it, that were revealing. No one who has studied the 1981 report of Professors S. Robert Lichter and Stanley Rothman on the political views of our "national media elite" (the reporters, editors, producers and anchor-men of the major national newspapers, newsmagazines and television networks) is likely to forget the massive liberal bias their research disclosed: Just for example, "The proportion of leading journalists who supported the Democratic candidates never dropped below 80 percent" in any presidential election from 1964 to 1976 inclusive.

So the fact that Brokaw picked Mother Jones to favor with an interview, or that he told it he thinks Reagan lives in a "fantasy land," that nobody, "outside of a small collection of zealots" ever believed in supply-side economics, that democratic reforms in El Salvador are a "sham," and that State Department assertions to the contrary are "outrageous," will surprise only those who think that conventionally moderate views necessarily lurk behind a conventionally handsome face.

Rather more interesting, though still not the most piquant aspect of the whole affair, is why Brokaw chose to disclose his personal political opinions at all. Some years ago, when Walter Cronkite's teen-age daughter incautiously told a reporter that "We're all Democrats in our family," rumor had it that pater was considerably distressed over this blemish on his otherwise spotless patina of benign neutrality. My guess is that Brokaw, whose contract with NBC reportedly pays him some $2.5 million a year, or in other words enough to liberate him from merely self-preservative concerns, had been chafing at the restrictions imposed on him as a conventionally neutral anchorman, and decided to let fly.

Anyway, he had certainly no reason to think that his corporate employers would personally find his views offensive; the Lichter-Rothman study indicates that media news executives are tilted just as far to the left as the talent they hire to read the teleprompter. And Brokaw's choice of a magazine for his interview may have been shrewder than it looks: Of the millions of matronly viewers who dole on him, dependably few see Mother Jones.

When the interview appeared, there were the usual wouldn't you-know sniffs from conservatives, but the really fascinating blast came from Colman McCarthy of all people - a columnist no whit less liberal than Brokaw himself. McCarthy objected on the ground that Brokaw's enormous salary should "put him above the overt taking of sides in political firefights." Note that "overt": McCarthy has no objection to Brokaw's views (on the contrary, he shares them); but he wants them peddled covertly, so the American people will go on thinking they're getting a balanced diet from NBC and its news staff.

Now Mother Jones itself has weighed in, with a commentary by Deidre English. She naturally defends Brokaw's decision to tell all to Mother Jones, and thinks "The frenzied response to the interview indicates how far - or, rather, how little - national debate is allowed to inch toward the left before it is declared out of bounds." But the moral I draw from the whole affair is a rather different one.

What bothers me isn't the real Brokaw but the phony one - the nice-looking-boy-next-door whose agreeable visage NBC presents to us every weekend evening to read aloud what is usually little more than a collection of artfully embroidered press releases from the Democratic National Committee. Since these are crafted and billed as "The Nightly News," rather than "Your Daily Anti-Reagan Barrage," the air of calm and judicious balance with which Brokaw delivers them greatly enhances their subliminal acceptability. To know from his own lips what Brokaw really thinks about it all is a long step in the direction of truth in packaging.

Today in History

By The Associated Press

Today is Wednesday, Oct. 5, the 278th day of 1983. There are 87 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history: On Oct. 5, 1947, President Harry Truman asked Americans to forgo meat on Tuesdays and eggs and chicken on Thursdays to build up a stockpile of grain for Europe.

On this date:

In 1502, Christopher Columbus discovered Costa Rica.

In 1830, the 21st president of the United States, Chester Arthur, was born in Fairfield, Vt.

In 1921, the World Series was broadcast for the first time, with sports writer Grantland Rice describing the action.

In 1966, the highest court in Texas reversed the conviction of Jack Ruby for the murder of Lee Harvey Oswald and ordered a new trial in a city other than Dallas.

Ten years ago: The Justice Department argued that a sitting vice president could be indicted on criminal charges. But if Vice President Spiro Agnew were indicted, the department said, the House of Representatives could impeach him before he went to trial.

Five years ago: It was announced that Secretary of State Cyrus Vance would go to South Africa to try to promote transition to black rule in Namibia.

One year ago: In the wake of the "Tylenol" poisonings, the government and the drug industry said they would work together to develop federal regulations requiring tamper-resistant packaging for all over-the-counter drugs.

Today's birthdays: Writer-director Josh Logan is 75. Actress Glynnis Johns is 60. Actor Jeff Conaway is 33.

Thought for today: "A simple life is its own reward." - George Santayana, Spanish writer and philosopher (1863-1952).

The White House's 'hate mail'

Almost every time President Reagan gives a speech he makes reference to a letter he received from some student backing him on the particular issue he's trying to push at the moment. It has always made me wonder if the president ever gets mail from kids who don't agree with him.

Well, it turns out he does. Sen. Orrin Hatch angrily brought it up in the Senate a few weeks ago. In an emotional speech he revealed the White House averages 100 letters a day from school children voicing their fears about nuclear war.

Hatch maintained that these letters were inspired by teachers who belonged to the National Education Association, and cited a book NEA had published titled, "Choices: A Unit on Conflict and Nuclear War." The book encourages pupils to write to the president and world leaders to express their fears.

The senator from Utah said he was outraged by the anti-president bias in the letters, which he described as "pervasive evidence of political propaganda."

The NEA denied their book was responsible for the anti-nuclear mail because only 3,000 had been sold. (With a title like that I believe them.)

My first reaction to Sen. Hatch's speech was that I was happy to learn there were 100 students a day who could still write letters. This shows the country's educational situation is not as bad as it has been painted.

The second was that the letters had somehow been read by top aides in the White House and had gotten under their skins.

But then, I had to come down on the side of Sen. Hatch and here is why. School children do not have the intellectual capacity to express themselves on something as serious as nuclear war. They don't understand it and never will. All they are doing are mouthing the biases of their parents and teachers who have been influenced by the liberal anti-Reagan media.

No child has ever seen a "window of vulnerability" close up, nor does he or she understand the importance of hardened MX missile silos, multi-warheads, first-strike capabilities and all the other little things that go into maintaining a superior deterrent arsenal. All the kids seem to worry about is getting killed.

Playing on this gut emotion, teachers tend to point out the negative side of the nuclear arms buildup, and never mention the fallout from the pluses. Is it any wonder President Reagan is getting so much mail from school children telling him that they are afraid of nuclear war?

Sen. Hatch doesn't like it and neither does the White House. Pupils are supposed to write to the president telling him how much they love him, and how much they pray for him, and how happy they are his policies are working to get us out of a recession. Those kind of letters written from the heart are passed all around the White House to make everyone on the staff feel good.

The ones instigated by pro-freeze teachers have no place on the president's desk. He hears from Congress and from misguided grown-ups does all day long. He doesn't want to be told the same thing by a bunch of scared school kids.

There is no law you can't write to a president disagreeing with him on what he is doing. But sending pervasive political propaganda to the White House goes beyond the boundaries of good manners. To paraphrase Sen. Hatch, "If a student doesn't have anything good to say about the nuclear arms race - he shouldn't say anything at all."

Wrong conclusions about PACs

Even in a town notorious for its lacks of humor, there was a special note of urgency in a book review by Morton Mintz (identified as "A Washington Post reporter assigned to the special investigations unit"), which appeared over Labor Day weekend in the Post's "Book World."

The title of the review: "When Money Talks, Politicians Listen." The book being reviewed: Politics and Money: The New Road to Corruption, by Elizabeth Drew, political correspondent for the New Yorker.

Mintz opens with the following Rodney ("I don't get any respect") Dangerfieldism: "One of our problems as a nation is that we often don't know what our great problems are." Then, of course, he tells us what we've been missing. "I doubt, for example, that most Americans, if asked to list the top 10 national problems, would include that of money in politics," Mintz writes. He's probably right.

Yet, Mintz tells us, money too often determines who will be elected to deal with our national problems and "what may be done about them."

Says Mintz, "No one who reads Elizabeth Drew's new book...will seriously dispute that money has come to be a dominant influence in American politics, and no reader devoted to democracy can help but be troubled by her strong and lucidly presented evidence that torrents of money, distorting and poisoning politics, have delivered us into the special-interest state." What is at stake, Drew concludes - and Mintz somberly repeats - "is the idea of representative government, the soul of this country."

Heady stuff this. And though I am sure Miss Drew's smallish (166 pages) book is crammed full of anecdotal information, I really wouldn't lose too much sleep worrying about the imminent collapse of democracy if I were you.

In fact, on the same Sunday that the Mintz book review appeared, there was another article in the Post by David S. Broder, the paper's political correspondent.

The Broder article, datelined Chicago, was filed during the annual meeting of the American Political Science Association, whose scholarly members sometimes take more than 166 pages just to footnote their books.

Interestingly, one of the major topics of discussion at the recent APSA meeting was the degree to which political action committees (PACs), the most evil of evils, according to Drew and Mintz, manipulate the legislative process by pouring money into House and Senate campaigns.

Unfortunately for Miss Drew, what the political scientists found is not likely to boost book sales.

"No one has demonstrated very convincingly there is a link" between PAC campaign contributions and congressional voting patterns, explained Frank Sorauf of the University of Minnesota. Instead, he said, other factors - political party and personal ideology, for example - appear to carry much more weight.

Other political scientists examining the influence of money in politics found much the same: that while congressmen sometimes vote the way their financial backers would like, at other times they don't. Examples of both types of behavior can be easily documented, but finding a consistent pattern is considerably more difficult.

Of the reports served up with great relish and handwringing by the Morton Mintzes of the world, "Sorauf said, political scientists, as a group, demand a higher standard of proof than is usually found in journalists' reports of in news releases from anti-PAC organizations like Common Cause," Broder wrote.

Autry never had chance to be anything but bad, lawyers say

HUNTSVILLE, Texas (AP) — James David Autry, a two-time loser condemned to death for the 1980 murder of a convenience store clerk, never had a chance to be anything but bad, his attorneys say.

Autry, the product of a broken home, spent much of his boyhood in reform schools. At 18, he was sent to prison for armed robbery and was later convicted of burglary.

Autry had been out of prison less than three months when he casually walked into the Sak-N-Pak convenience store, picked up a six-pack of beer and then killed the clerk with a single shot between the eyes when she asked for $2.70, said the prosecutor who convinced jurors that the 29-year-old drifter from Amarillo deserved to die.

"I've never seen anybody more cold blooded. He's a dangerous man who doesn't care for life," said Assistant Jefferson County District Attorney David Moore.

But Autry, a tall, slender man who seems almost shy, might have been a better man had his family life been better, according to affidavits filed in a state appeals court.

Autry's older sister, Pamela Cook Lynn, described their childhood home as a battleground between the parents.

"Our father stayed drunk almost all the time. He was sometimes violent with us kids and often he was violent with my mother. Because of my father's violent nature and heavy drinking, he and James never got along," she said.

"My father was constantly telling James that he was good for nothing, a bum and a criminal," Ms. Lynn said.

"I just feel that if he had been brought up better by my father and if he had had just a few more breaks in life and if he had had a little more opportunity to see what life in the free world was like, none of this would have happened," she said.

Stefan Presser, an attorney for the Texas Civil Liberties Union, argued jurors never would have imposed the death sentence had they known about Autry's troubled childhood.

Instead, the 29-year-old Autry, known as "Cowboy" to other inmates, spent the past three years waiting in a 5-foot-by-9-foot cell for his punishment to be carried out.

Some of Texas' 170 condemned inmates have been on death row for more than nine years.

Autry believes his case has moved faster through the courts because one of his two brothers threatened State District Judge Leonard Giblin.

"They (detectives) told me that my brother said that if they killed me that he would kill the judge. But I don't believe my brother would ever do that," he said.

Court officials were notified by Amarillo, Texas, police that threats had been made against Giblin last year. Giblin said he was taking precautions but said the threat had no bearing on the case.

Autry has denied killing Shirley Drouet, a 43-year-old mother of five who took the job as clerk at the store to earn some extra money. He also denied killing Joseph Broussard, 43, and a former Catholic priest who discovered the bloody body, and denied injuring Athanasios Svarhas, 30, a Greek sailor who suffered permanent brain damage.

He said he was framed by relatives of John Alton Sandifer, a companion he met in prison. Sandifer went to the convenience store with Autry and was indicted for capital murder. But he received a seven-year sentence in a plea bargain for an unrelated burglary and was paroled last month.

Autry also claimed he confessed to the murder after being beaten with a telephone book by police officers.

Shortly after his arrest, Autry telephoned his mother in Florence, Colo., investigators said.

One officer testified that Autry told his mother he went to the store planning to rob but "it just went bad" and he started shooting and couldn't stop.

Autry said the thought of being strapped to a medical gurney and killed by a chemical solution didn't frighten him.

"We're all going to die," he said. "I don't want to die, but I won't put up a fight because they're going to get me anyway. But I won't be happy about it."

Prosecutor says

Murder 'like Western movie'

PORT ARTHUR, Texas (AP) — James David Autry committed a crime that was "like something out of a Western movie," recalled the prosecutor who persuaded a jury to condemn the 29-year-old drifter to death by lethal injection.

Autry was convicted of fatally shooting Shirley Drouet on April 20, 1980. He killed her, said Assistant District Attorney David Moore, rather than pay for a six-pack of beer.

Of the fatal gunshot, Moore said: "It was like something out of a Western movie — perfectly centered between the eyes."

Prosecutors said Autry and a companion, John Alton Sandifer, casually walked into a Sak-N-Pak store in a rough neighborhood on the city's east side. When they walked out, Mrs. Drouet lay slumped against a cardboard box, dead of a single bullet from a .38-caliber pistol. One customer also was killed, and another was crippled for life.

Both Autry and Sandifer were charged with capital murder in Mrs. Drouet's death. But the indictment against Sandifer, 31, was dismissed for lack of evidence. He accepted a seven-year prison sentence for an unrelated burglary.

Sandifer, who met Autry while both were in prison, was paroled Sept. 13 after serving less than half of the term.

According to testimony, the shooting occurred only six hours after Sandifer had bailed Autry out of jail on an auto theft charge.

The pair spent most hours drinking beer, smoking marijuana and popping pills, investigators said, before deciding to rob the store using pistols owned by Sandifer's father.

The two men entered the store, got the beer and strolled to the counter.

"Mrs. Drouet stated the price and James was quoted as saying, 'I'm paying for it with this.' He pulled a pistol and shot her between the eyes," Moore said.

Shortly after the shooting, Sandifer's brother, Mark, and his wife were driving by the store when they recognized the car they had lent to John Sandifer. The couple drove into the parking lot.

"John came running out of the store, jumped into the borrowed car and drove away. Autry then leaves the store, sees Mark in the car and goes over and sits in the car. He looks back into the store and sees two customers," Moore said.

Autry went back into the store and found John Broussard, a former priest working as an oil company clerk, talking on the telephone. He shot Broussard twice. As he was leaving the store, Autry encountered Athanasios Svarhas, 30, a sailor from Lithohoron, Greece. The gunman fired once, striking Svarhas in the mouth. Svarhas survived but suffered permanent brain damage, Moore said.

Sandifer surrendered to authorities soon after the shooting and told investigators that Autry was responsible for Mrs. Drouet's death. Autry was arrested at the mobile home he shared with Sandifer.

Mark Sandifer and his wife, who were not involved in the shootings, testified for the state.

Autry's attorneys called Sandifer as a defense witness, saying he could prove that Mrs. Drouet was not killed during a holdup. This would have made the murder a non-capital crime. But when the state refused to grant Sandifer immunity from prosecution, he took the 5th Amendment and declined to testify about the shooting.

Civil Liberties spokesman says all Texas executions now 'on hold'

AUSTIN (AP) — A stay of execution that spared James David Autry will stop Texas from putting any condemned convict to death until the legal question is decided by the U.S. Supreme Court, the director of the Texas Civil Liberties Union said today.

"We've got another block on all Texas executions," an elated John Duncan said about an hour after Supreme Court Justice Byron White issued a stay of execution.

Elna Christopher, press secretary for Attorney General Jim Mattox, said lawyers would be studying the question today to determine if the stay could block all Texas executions until the high court rules on a California case it will hear next month.

Duncan also said the stay means Autry's lawyers will be allowed to present their case to the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans. The stay was based on the argument that all crimes of a certain nature should be punished alike.

"It's the concept that if you're going to have capital punishment, you must have some statewide proportionality review of the sentences," Duncan said.

He said armed robbers who kill convenience store clerks in Beaumont, San Antonio, Lubbock and El Paso "should be dealt with in the same fashion in all jurisdictions, and only those which have the grossest of facts should wind up as capital cases."

The concept of proportionality was argued successfully before the 9th Circuit Court of Appeals in California, which held that it was constitutionally required that California's highest court conduct a proportionality review.

California appealed that decision to the U.S. Supreme Court, and Justice White said late Tuesday in his three-page stay of execution that "we will hear arguments in that case in November, and if we affirm ... there will be a substantial question whether the views of the (5th Circuit Court in New Orleans) were correct" in denying Autry a stay.

"Of course, I do not know how the (Supreme) court will rule on this question, but in view of the judgment of the (9th Circuit Court), I cannot say that the issue lacks substance," White wrote.

Duncan said there is an "obligation" on the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals "to conduct a prompt, statewide review before affirming a sentence."

He said the death sentence should not be allowed to stand unless a review shows "that capital punishment in the case meets that very small portion of crimes of this variety in which capital punishment is justified."

The issue of proportionality in the Autry case was brought up when ACLU lawyers sought a stay from a federal judge in Marshall, Texas, on grounds Autry's attorney did not raise that issue.

"And since the U.S. Supreme Court had agreed to write on it, and since the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals does not conduct proportionality reviews, we are entitled to enjoin all executions in Texas until the Supreme Court determines whether a proportionality review is constitutionally mandated," Duncan said.

Despair turned to joy for Autry

HUNTSVILLE, Texas (AP) — James David Autry awoke in pre-dawn darkness to begin the ritualized trek toward execution, a journey that began in faint hope, sank to despair and then soared to joy.

He was dressed and being escorted through a myriad of barred doors at the Texas death row before most of his fellow inmates had roused to the day.

Autry, manacled and still wearing "prison whites," was placed in the car of Warden Jack Pursley. He left the Texas prison system's Ellis Unit, which houses death row, and was driven 15 miles, through a lush agricultural countryside still sweet of morning air, to the old, red-brick prison called The Walls near downtown Huntsville.

Pursley parked his car in front of the prison and Autry was escorted up a long ramp and through double glass doors. A few more steps and bars, once more, closed behind him.

Autry and his escort walked down a long corridor and then out a metal door. They followed a concrete walk across a large courtyard where inmates in the crowded prison had, until recently, lived in tents.

Had he chosen to, Autry could have look overhead for a last glimpse of the sky. It was overcast, threatening.

Guards opened a heavy wire gate and Autry stepped into an open air pen crowned with concertina barbed wire.

Another green metal door was opened and the group stepped into the Texas death house.

The barred door of a bright yellow cell is opened and Autry steps in. It's a cell like many others in the Texas prison, a five-foot-by-nine-foot cage of bars and concrete. There is a bed, a toilet, a sink and a small table holding a Bible and a boxed game of checkers.

Here, the state has decreed Autry is to spend the last hours of life.

There are seven other cells in the block, all painted in pastels. The cell next to Autry's is for visitors. Its bars are covered with fine mesh.

Near the end of the block corridor sits several crates.

They contain the dismantled remains of "Old Sparky," an oak chair wired for electricity that was the instrument of death for 361 Texas inmates before it was retired.

Now the waiting begins.

In late afternoon, Autry receives phone calls from his family.

His brother calls at 5 p.m. and they talk for five minutes. At 5:15 p.m., it is his mother, calling from Amarillo, Texas. Another five-minute, private talk.

At 6 p.m., a telephone line to the Texas governor in Austin is opened.

At 7:30 p.m., he ordered a dinner of hamburger with mustard, french fries and ice tea, showers afterwards and changes into what prison officials call "discharge clothing."

His outfit was a blue pullover golf shirt, grey and white checkered slacks and grey tennis shoes.

He paced some more.

His attorney, Charles Carver, arrived about 9 p.m. and they talked for about 45 minutes.

After Carver left, Autry believed he had about only two hours to live.

Autry and his guards waited.

At 11:39 p.m., he was told there had been a delay. Texas officials were uncertain whether the stay would cancel the execution. Autry remained on the gurney, needles in his arm, for another 26 minutes before Pursley told him that Supreme Court Justice Byron White had granted a stay.

Finally, the needles were removed. He was unstrapped and returned to his holding cell.

Pursley asked him if he had any questions. Autry shook his head.

Outside, Texas Attorney General Jim Mattox told reporters and an angry crowd that Autry would live at least another 30 days while justices sorted through his appeal.

At 11:39 p.m., he was told there had been a delay. Texas officials were uncertain whether the stay would cancel the execution. Autry remained on the gurney, needles in his arm, for another 26 minutes before Pursley told him that Supreme Court Justice Byron White had granted a stay.

Finally, the needles were removed. He was unstrapped and returned to his holding cell.

Pursley asked him if he had any questions. Autry shook his head.

Outside, Texas Attorney General Jim Mattox told reporters and an angry crowd that Autry would live at least another 30 days while justices sorted through his appeal.

Autry was told that he had about only two hours to live.

Autry and his guards waited.

GENERAL STRIKE — The port of Buenos Aires, normally crowded, is empty Tuesday because of a 24-hour strike.

Ruler says debts will be met, strike ends

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — Argentina's military ruler says the country will avoid default and proceed with democratic elections this month despite problems ranging from a nationwide strike to the arrest of the Central Bank president.

President Gen. Reynaldo Bignone, in a nationwide radio and television broadcast Tuesday night, assured the nation and its foreign creditors that Argentina, although faced with a possible default in two weeks, will fulfill its international financial commitments.

Meanwhile, labor leaders hailed as "the people's triumph" a 24-hour general strike for higher wages that virtually paralyzed the country Tuesday.

The strike, the third of its type in the past 10 months, came less than four weeks before Oct. 30 general elections to end more than seven years of military rule. The transfer of power to elected authorities is set for Jan. 30, 1984.

The strike halted industry, commerce, education and transport throughout the nation. Administrative employees reported for work at most banks, but did not serve customers, and essential electrical, water and health care services were maintained by skeleton crews.

Bignone said renegotiation of Argentina's $40 billion foreign debt is being carried out in a way "that will allow the country to fulfill its obligations, as has always been its tradition."

Argentina "will continue true to that tradition, and I assume the pertinent responsibility for that," he said.

Bignone sought to reassure the nation's 28 million people that the financial woes would not upset the transition to civilian rule.

"The elections are an already-consolidated objective within sight," he said. "With the necessary doses of responsibility and good judgment, we will be able to get through these remaining days and be able to fully live the democracy that all Argentines desire."

Argentina's financial problems grew more critical this week with the arrest of Central Bank President Julio Gonzalez del Solar and the abrupt suspension of foreign credit.

Last week Federal Judge Federico Pinto Kramer suspended negotiations to reschedule the foreign debts of government-owned corporations, saying he suspected the proposed contracts were detrimental to state interests. He ordered Gonzalez del Solar arrested Monday on his return from an International Monetary Fund meeting in Washington.

The bank president spent Tuesday night at a police station in Rio Gallegos, 1,900 miles south of Buenos Aires, where the judge sits. The official Argentine news agency Telam said he would be indicted today.

Economy Ministry sources said he would be charged with harming the national interest during negotiations with an international organization. Conviction on such a charge is punishable by up to 10 years in prison.

Gonzalez del Solar was ordered arrested after the judge objected to a clause in a contract signed by the bank president in New York Sept. 16 rescheduling Aerolineas Argentinas' repayment of $220 million to a consortium of foreign banks headed by Citibank. The clause recognized the jurisdiction of New York State courts in executing the contract.

The Aerolineas contract was to serve as a model for the renegotiation of the other state companies' debts, but politicians charged it was a sellout of Argentine sovereignty.

The executive branch has appealed Pinto Kramer's order. But until the legal issue is resolved, foreign banks and the IMF have held up delivery of $830 million already-approved fresh credit.

If fresh funds are not disbursed, the country will enter into default in two weeks.

British labor debating scrapping nuclear weapons

BRIGHTON, England (AP) — The opposition Labor Party today debates its commitment to unilaterally scrap Britain's nuclear weapons, a stance which cost votes in the June election and is contested by the party's new leader.

An uncompromising resolution introduced at the socialist party's annual conference — despite leader Neil Kinnock's opposition — calls for the dismantling of Britain's Polaris nuclear missiles.

If accepted by a two-thirds majority, the resolution would again tie Labor to a key plank of the radical platform which contributed to the party's worst defeat in 65 years in last June's general election.

Kinnock had tried to get the resolution removed from the conference agenda, advocating a new, less controversial proposal that Britain's nuclear arsenal be included in U.S.-Soviet arms reduction talks in Geneva, Switzerland.

Kinnock, elected leader on Sunday, is a left-winger and longtime peace movement member. But in the aftermath of defeat at the hands of Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's Conservative Party, he wants room to maneuver on Labor's unconditional disarmament stance, a stance which has split the party. The resolution is flatly rejected by moderates, now headed by the new deputy leader, Roy Hattersley. But the proposal's sponsor, the 1.25 million-member Transport Workers' union, has refused to back off.

The proposal to use the submarine-launched Polaris missile as a bargaining chip also was being put to the conference, as was a radical recommendation calling for the expulsion of all U.S. bases from Britain, where 25,500 American military personnel are stationed. That proposal also rejected British membership of "any Pentagon-dominated military pact based on the first use of nuclear weapons."

Labor's election commitment was confined to expelling the 150 U.S. F-111 nuclear-capable fighter-bombers, based at two airfields in England, and Poseidon missile submarines, operating from Holy Loch on Scotland's west coast.

Labor Party General Secretary Jim Mortimer denied at a news conference last Sunday that this meant pulling Britain out of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

Rebel transport plane downed

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — The Defense Ministry says Nicaraguan soldiers shot down a U.S.-registered transport plane carrying supplies to CIA-backed rebels in the northern mountains.

A ministry statement issued late Tuesday said a DC-3 transport plane registered in Oklahoma was shot down 90 miles of Managua, the Nicaraguan capital, after taking off from Honduras.

The ministry said two Nicaraguan rebel pilots and a mechanic were captured by soldiers of the leftist government, while two men died in the crash and two escaped after parachuting from the plane.

Elsewhere in Central America, leftist Salvadoran rebels said they overran four army posts, killing 16 soldiers, and Guatemala's army said it killed 23 leftist rebels in an ambush.

In Tegucigalpa, capital of Honduras, a spokesman for the U.S.-backed Democratic Nicaraguan Force rebel group said the transport plane was on a "special mission" when it was forced to land because of "mechanical difficulties."

The three men captured were identified by officials in Managua as Roberto Amador Alvarez, a former major of the National Guard of late Nicaraguan President Anastasio Somoza, former National Guard Capt. Hugo Reinaldo Aguilar, and Jaime Lau Ramirez, a mechanic.

The Honduran-based rebels, led mostly by former officers of the National Guard, receive aid from the CIA. They and a separate guerrilla force fighting in southern Nicaragua are trying to overthrow the leftist Sandinista government.

The Nicaraguan Foreign Ministry said armed rebels riding in speed boats destroyed two fuel tanks at Benjamin Zeledon, a port on Nicaragua's Atlantic coast. The ministry said the attacks

Sunday destroyed 380,000 gallons of gasoline and diesel fuel.

Late Tuesday, Costa Rica and Honduras warned they would use force to block Nicaraguan moves against rebel groups in their territory.

Costa Rica, which has no army, condemned Ortega's comments as a "serious threat to the integrity and sovereignty of our country."

Not all financial aid for the border

WASHINGTON (AP) — Though under fire for the way it is tallying its assistance to Southwest border areas, the Reagan administration is continuing to include in its total $94.8 million in financial guarantees most of which were not actually targeted for the border.

The $94.8 million was included in $137 million in assistance the administration announced Tuesday had been awarded so far to Southwest border communities whose economies are suffering from last year's devaluations of the Mexican peso.

Alix Reed, an assistant press secretary to Vice President George Bush, said she had "no quarrel" with published accounts that only about $11 million raised through the guarantees actually had been allocated to the border — for a drill rig construction project in Brownsville, Texas.

But she said the $94.8 million in guarantees had been granted to a Houston company as a single award and "the decision was made we were just going to leave it at that," with the whole amount considered as border aid.

Texas Rep. Ron Coleman, an El Paso Democrat, has accused the administration of using the $94.8 million in guarantees to inflate its border aid figures, saying the move "calls into question the credibility of their whole program of border assistance."

That program was launched in August by a special multi-agency task force appointed by President Reagan to accelerate federal assistance to the border areas. The task force is chaired by Bush.

The vice president's office announced the $94.8 million in financial guarantees for a subsidiary of Global Marine Inc. last month, included the entire amount in its border aid tallies and said it would "keep 500 workers on the job in (a) Brownsville, Texas shipyard."

But The El Paso Times later reported that the company actually had only an $11 million share of a $55 million rig being built at the shipyard.

Ms. Reed said the company had "not indicated what they are going to do" with the rest of the $94.8 million so "we're not going to change the status of it."

Ms. Reed also defended the inclusion in border aid tallies last month of a $4.2 million low interest loan for a housing project in Cathedral City, Calif., which a local official told the Times was basically a community "tied to the resort economy, not the peso."

Ms. Reed described the community as a "pocket of poverty" and said it was in "definite need."

Included in the $137 million in aid tally was $20.8 million which the task force said had been awarded in the past week.

Among that was $1.3 million described as contracts from the Small Business Administration "for firms in affected border counties." However, Ms. Reed could not name the counties.

Other awards announced for the past week were:

— A $798,000 Department of Agriculture loan to provide rental housing in Tombstone, Ariz.

— A $133,430 Department of Agriculture grant to provide housing in Amado, Ariz.

— Loan guarantees of $5,583,000 from the Department of Agriculture for construction of new electric utility lines in 17 counties, of which 12 are in the border region. Those counties were identified as Dimmit, Kinney, Uvalde, Webb, Zavala, Jim Hogg, LaSalle, McMullen, Starr, Zapata, Edwards and Real, all in Texas. The task force did not specify how much was going to these 12 counties.

— A $1,025,000 Department of Agriculture grant and loan to help build a sewer system in Presidio, Texas.

— A $1,331,117 Department of Agriculture contract for construction of a dam in Culberson County, Texas.

— Department of Health and Human Services grants of $160,000 for human services programs in San Diego, Calif. and Las Cruces, N.M.

— SBA loans of $2,970,000 for firms in Hidalgo, El Paso, Brownsville and Cameron, Texas.

Wood carver creates works of art from cypress knees

By JOHN PLATERO
Associated Press Writer
PALMDALE, Fla. (AP) — Tom Gaskins wants to be remembered for his "knees." After all, it was he who made them famous.

They have nothing to do with this 74-year-old man's anatomy. Gaskins, a naturalist, woodsman and champion wild turkey hunter, is an expert on cypress knees, a botanical oddity nature has given only to the cypress tree.

Most of Gaskins' time is spent at his Cypress Knee Museum in this small south-central farming community, or at a workshop across U.S. 27, where he embellishes nature's creations into works of art.

"No one knows why the cypress has knees, but it's the only tree that has them," says the spry Gaskins as he walks a catwalk he has built through a nearby cypress swamp. "A knee never becomes a tree, it's not part of the root system, doesn't have leaves and takes thousands of years to grow."

Botanists generally are in agreement that knees are outgrowths which help aerate the tree's root system when it is submerged in a swamp. Not all cypress trees have knees.

While these bark-covered growths protruding from the earth bring to mind something from a horror movie, Gaskins discovered their beauty as a child when he learned to whittle.

A talented wood carver, he began his museum collection in 1934 and moved it south to Palmdale three years later, when he was granted a U.S. patent on his cypress knee products. He opened the museum to the public in 1951.

No two cypress knees are the same. They vary in height from only inches to as much as 8 feet. Gaskins explains that circumference and height are determined by the size of the tree, root system and age.

Knees generally grow in conical shapes, and their formations are determined by bruising suffered from fallen limbs, nature's elements and wildlife.

"It is easily scarred, but the healing process causes it to take exquisite forms," Gaskins says.

After he cuts the knees, Gaskins steams them in large metal tubs so the bark can be peeled. They are then dried in the sun, which results in different shades of color ranging from a light maple to almost a deep red.

Once stripped of its bark, the knee's graceful swirls, twists and bends form a work of art, says

Gaskins.

Some of his creations are hollowed out and can be used as vases or plant holders; others are converted into lamps and clocks. However, most are sold as ornamental conversation pieces.

Remarkably, when one looks at a finished cypress knee for any length of time, it appears to resemble people's faces, caricatures, animals or nature scenes. For years, Gaskins' cypress products were sold in fashionable department stores across the country.

He's well known through much of the state either for his museum, a wild turkey caller he manufactures, or his prowess in hunting the large game bird.

"But I'm not considered an old-timer yet," he adds. "You got to be 80 for that."

Still agile and sinewy, Gaskins jogs three miles each morning after doing 90 pushups. His personal philosophy on how to stay healthy includes standing on his head five minutes every day "to prevent glaucoma," and ingesting a creosote and plastic combination of his own invention "to cure arthritis and prevent cancer."

Brauchi honored with national service award

Donna C. Brauchi, Gray County Extension home economics agent, is to receive a distinguished service award from the National Association of Extension Home Economists.

One of six Texas Extension agents chosen for the honor, Brauchi is to be presented with the award during the national association's annual meeting Oct. 24 - 27, in Atlanta, Ga.

The award recognizes Brauchi's creativity and outstanding leadership in health and nutrition programming, said Belinda Covington, Nacogdoches County Extension home economist and awards committee chairman for the Texas Association of Extension Home Economists.

Brauchi worked with members of the Gray County Extension Program Building Committee and the health care community to plan, organize and implement a health fair.

The health fair included 23 exhibits and reached 550 area residents. During the fair, 235 colorectal cancer screening packets were distributed, 87 pints of blood were collected, about 15 persons were referred to doctors and 11 volunteers were recruited to work with three different organizations.

Brauchi's other activities include training 25 adults to sit with the elderly and establishing a job referral service to match sitters with potential employers.

The home economist also conducted programs on nutrition, meal planning, food buying and food preservation for more than 700 county residents.

Brauchi has served as Gray County agent for 10 years.

Through United Way Salvation Army aids needy

By REED ECHOLS
Of the United Way

The Pampa Salvation Army, a United Way Agency, provides disaster and emergency services such as food, clothing and temporary shelter for people homeless and destitute.

At Christmas time, the Salvation Army has its busiest time of the year. Army workers provide food baskets and necessities for needy families as well as toys for children who would otherwise have little or nothing to enjoy at Christmas.

The Golden Agers' monthly luncheon and bingo game is one of the most recent and most successful programs at the Pampa Salvation Army. Each month senior citizens from both nursing homes as well as shut-ins are brought to the Salvation Army Center for lunch followed by bingo, prizes and fun.

These programs are made possible by local contributions and United Way Funding.

Captain and Mrs. Milton Wood direct the local Army. They are assisted by a secretary-case worker and many volunteers. About 250 volunteer hours are contributed each month, including providing community transportation, helping with the Golden Agers' luncheons and preparing food orders.

The Thrift Store, the local Army's major source of income other than the United Way, is a place of business where people may purchase clothing at very inexpensive prices. Through the Thrift Store, the community and the Army work together to provide clothes for those in need.

Thanks to the dedicated employees, many volunteers and local support, the Salvation Army meets many of our community's special needs.

Thanks to you it works...

Dear Abby
Daughter shocked by mother's love affair
By Abigail Van Buren
© 1983 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: Two years ago when I found out that my husband was having an affair with my mother, I practically went into shock! My husband said he loved me and wanted another chance. We'd been married for eight years and had three children, so I forgave him and my mother, too. Things were better for a little while, then a week ago he confessed that he had never stopped seeing my mother.

I told my two sisters about it, and they both said Mom had slept with their husbands, too. (Our father doesn't know this, but he's caught her with other men.)

I want to leave my husband, but I hate to break up my family. My parents come over often and my mom flirts openly with my husband, which tears me apart. (She says if she acts "cold" to him, Dad would wonder why.)

I think I'm losing my mind, Abby. I'm so depressed, I cry all the time. Please help me. I don't want to be a 26-year-old divorced mother of three.

GOING TO PIECES

DEAR GOING: There are worse things than being a 26-year-old divorced mother of three. And living as you are is one of them.

Run, do not walk, to the nearest shelter for abused women in your area. You need emotional support and counseling in order to get your head together, bolster your self-esteem and learn how to make it on your own. Your husband desperately needs counseling — and so does your mother — but for the moment, look out for yourself.

DEAR ABBY: I am a student on a limited budget. What should I say when a stranger accosts me on the street and asks for money? I am entirely dependent on my parents for financial support, and I simply cannot afford to give away money.

Instead of just walking away and feeling guilty, would it be all right to say, "I'm sorry I have no money to spare, but I will say a prayer for you?"

VANCOUVER, B.C.

DEAR VAN: I wouldn't recommend apologizing, explaining or offering to say a prayer for a stranger who accosts you on the street and asks for money. Just say "No" and keep walking. And if you want to pray for him, go ahead and pray. You don't need a person's permission to pray for him.

...

DEAR ABBY: Please remind your readers to get up and walk about at least every two hours to prevent problems with blood circulation while traveling. Muscle-flexing exercises are also helpful, but walking is better.

Recently, in a medical staff meeting, I heard of a 28-year-old woman who developed a blood clot in her leg, apparently as a consequence of a long car ride without a break. She developed severe complications that nearly cost her life.

Long airplane rides can cause this condition when a considerate passenger is too reluctant to disturb another passenger.

FRIENDLY PHYSICIAN

DEAR FRIENDLY: Thanks for an excellent suggestion, to which I want to add: When sitting for long periods, refrain from crossing your legs. It inhibits normal circulation.

EDITOR'S NOTE — Recent reports that two companies in Colorado and Nebraska providing meat for the school lunch program were using substandard cattle and processing the beef under unsanitary conditions have put the spotlight on the safety of our food. The first tests of meat from the companies found no contamination. But the issue of food safety is not a new one. Here is a look at how the government tries to protect the public and some of the problems.

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer

The federal government spends more than $400 million a year policing the U.S. food supply, but the inspection system already has serious problems and a government agency says the public may be less well protected in the future.

A recent report from the General Accounting Office said foods that violate safety standards wound up on market shelves despite inspections, that regulation was fragmented and that safety laws had gaps.

It also said spending cutbacks and changes in the food supply from staples to processed products meant that the "ability of food regulation programs to efficiently and effectively protect the U.S. public may be diminished in the future."

"It is generally believed," the GAO report said, "that federal food safety regulation provides adequate protection for the U.S. public, although we believe that comprehensive information to support that belief does not exist."

The government watchdog agency said a review of past studies showed basic problems had not been corrected, and it said change was not likely "as long as major food-related disasters do not occur."

The U.S. Department of Agriculture and the Food and Drug Administration in the Department of Health and Human Services have most of the responsibility for enforcing laws on food safety.

In general, the USDA oversees meat and poultry; the FDA looks after everything else. But the two agencies operate very differently.

The USDA, for example, inspects virtually all the livestock and poultry we eat. Inspectors are on duty continuously in slaughter and processing plants.

"We inspect 123 million head of livestock in this country every year," said John McClung, head of information for the USDA's Food Safety and Inspection Service.

"We inspect 4½ billion poultry... Every one of those animals has to be inspected before it's killed (and) after it's killed... If they're processed further... then we have to inspect the processing function as well."

The FDA, by contrast, makes only periodic inspections. Plants processing foods where there is a high risk of trouble may be inspected once a year; others are visited less frequently. The GAO report said that as of 1982, the FDA planned to inspect processing plants on the average of once every five or six years.

Are the inspections frequent enough? "Probably not," said an FDA spokesman who agreed to be interviewed only if he were not identified by name. "But it's all the manpower we've got."

The FDA's Bureau of Foods has about 900 field investigators. According to the GAO report, they are responsible for about 64,000 processors, storage facilities and repacking and relabeling plants.

The USDA's Food Safety and Inspection Service has about 7,500 inspectors, responsible for about 7,200 slaughterhouses and processing plants, McClung said. The GAO has said the continuous inspections by the USDA may not be necessary. McClung said the USDA agreed, but lawmakers did not.

"The way we are doing inspections is antiquated," he said. "The costs are just too high and technologically, there's not a need to do that anymore... We have tried to promote that sort of concept (non-continuous inspections) and it did not sell very well with a large number of the members of Congress."

The GAO said past studies found that "adulterated products continued to reach consumers..." despite the USDA and the FDA. But officials say the statistics didn't always tell the whole story.

A 1981 GAO report, for example, "found that 24.9 percent of meat and poultry slaughtered under USDA inspection at plants within six states reviewed came from plants not meeting one or more USDA inspection program requirements."

McClung replied: "Maybe you have one incidence of an inspector in a plant seeing flies... on one line on a temporary basis. That plant would then be written up and become part of that 24.9 percent. That does not by any stretch of the imagination mean that 24.9 percent of the product is somehow substandard."

Is our food safe?

"Absolutely," said McClung. "The supply of meat in this country is phenomenally safe and phenomenally wholesome."

Could it be safer?

"I suppose it could," said the FDA spokesman. "But I don't think it would be materially safer. Even if you put 10 times as many people on the street as we have now, you probably couldn't make it a whole lot safer... You could just get closer to approaching zero (risk), I suppose. Zero's an unachievable goal."

We also learned the reason the Japanese enjoy long, luxurious baths. It has to do with the creation of Japan and its first citizens, Izanagi (man) and Izanami (woman). One day, Izanagi dips his spear into the water and a drop from it forms Japan. Later, Izanami bears a son, the fire god, and is fatally burned. She goes to the underworld and Izanagi follows to find her.

Now, the underworld is a forbidden place and because Izanami isn't looking her best (she's decomposing), she chases her husband away. But now, he has been polluted and must purify himself — with water. The polluting effects of experiences and the need for purification is to this day an important part of the Shinto religion, the professor said.

McFarland plans to offer himself as a sort of guide for the students in Japan. "I speak enough Japanese to go shopping and ask directions," he said. "I could be a guide for walking tours."

In the meantime, McFarland has assigned himself a tough task. "This is an educational mission to open up to young people the diverse world in which they live," he said. "I hope they will feel at home amidst that diversity."

Japanese people and how can I get acquainted with them? It would be a shame if they think they're playing a game and that's all."

Michael Carter, a 22-year-old SMU senior, nose-guard for the football team and an Olympic hopeful (in shotput), said he plans to shop for video equipment and try some acupuncture to relax. Since joining McFarland's class, he says he's learned a little Japanese history and can say "good morning" and "where's the restroom?" in Japanese.

Brad Turner, a sophomore saxophone player for the SMU band, said he wants to see a waterfall and try some rice beer. "If they have that," he says McFarland's course has cleared up some of the mysteries of the Land of the Rising Sun.

"Now I know they're not just a bunch of guys making Sonys," Turner said.

McFarland, a 30-year-old veteran of SMU who has visited Japan six times, and was instrumental in forming a sister school relationship between SMU and Japan's Kwansai Gakuin University, undoubtedly sought to teach more than that when he created his course.

The day we sat in, for example, we learned that Japan came to be called the Land of the Rising Sun because in the limited view of the McFarland, history of religions professor at SMU, is readying a class of athletes, cheerleaders, pom pom girls and band members for a trip to Japan in November when the SMU football team will play the University of Houston in the Mirage Bowl. The game, set for Nov. 26, will be played at Olympic Stadium in Tokyo to a sellout crowd of 80,000. Expenses will be paid by a Tokyo sports-promotion agency.

Of the 150 students signed up for the Japanese culture course — Religious Studies 3367; Introduction to Japan — some will not travel to Japan. The basketball player, for example, said he was taking the course as an elective. (Despite his obvious boredom with the lecture material, he said he likes the films and slides the professor shows.)

Most of McFarland's students, however, will spend a week in Japan, bringing the tradition of Texas football to Japan, and perhaps taking home to Texas a taste for sushi and sake.

McFarland hopes that by giving his students a basic understanding of Japanese geography, history and culture, the trip will be more significant. "A real learning experience."

"I hope they won't spend all their time looking for hamburgers and video games," he said. "I hope they will ask, 'Who are the

By MARCIA SMITH

DALLAS (AP) — A large and restless basketball player wearing foot-long Adidas yawned ostentatiously and kicked the seat in front of him. It was 8:30 in the morning and the professor was talking ancient Japanese deities and Shinto shrines.

The long-legged jock shifted uncomfortably in his plastic scoop chair and dozed off. With the uncanny timing students cultivate after spending a few years in the back rows of "monster" classes, the young man woke just as the professor summarized his lecture.

Before dismissal, the professor led his drowsy class in a recitation of Japanese numbers. "Ichi, ni, san, shi, go, roku, shichi, hachi, kyū and ju," the class repeated with considerably more enthusiasm than perhaps was called for.

Even the basketball player got into it. When he came to "ju," he played with the word a second and came up with "ju eat?" He grinned broadly when the students around him giggled.

Dr. Neill McFarland knows what he's up against teaching Japanese culture to a group of sleepy athletes. "I don't expect outstanding scholarship from them, but if they learn something about the culture because of their interest in sports, that's good."

Special times deserve easy pork roast

Those special family times — holidays, anniversaries, birthdays — are still very important today. However, many contemporary cooks don't have the time cooks once had to spend hours in the kitchen preparing the celebration feast.

But this doesn't have to mean that the food is any less impressive. For what could be more special or easier to prepare than a pork loin roast? It requires little of the cook yet is elegant enough to be set in the place of honor on the Thanksgiving dinner table.

The easy-to-handle roast is simply placed in a slow oven to bake unattended. Stuffing, basting and gravy preparation are unnecessary. It is important, however, to keep a careful check on the roast to determine when it is done. But this is easy, too, when you rely on a roast meat thermometer. Fresh pork is well done yet juicy, tender and flavorful at an internal temperature of 170 degrees.

Whether you're choosing a pork loin roast for Thanksgiving, other special occasion or just a quiet Sunday dinner, you'll appreciate how easily it fits into the family budget. Pork continues to be an excellent buy this fall, offering a good return for your meat dollar. It can help you stretch your budget even further when you plan for leftovers. Cooked pork can be the start of a variety of tasty and economical bonus meals.

You'll be grateful, too, for pork's leanness and outstanding nutritive value. A three-ounce serving of cooked lean pork contains just 197 calories. In exchange for these relatively few calories, you receive a wealth of nutrients including high-quality protein, the B-vitamins, and the minerals iron and zinc.

For an accompaniment to the pork roast that's also special yet easy and nutritious, try Cantonese Vegetables. It's a light, quick stir-fry featuring bok choy, carrots, pea pods, mushrooms, bamboo shoots and water chestnuts.

PORK LOIN ROAST

4 to 6 lb. pork loin roast
Place roast, fat side up, on rack in open roasting pan. Insert roast meat thermometer so the bulb is centered in the thickest part. Make certain bulb does not rest in fat or on bone. Do not add water; do not cover. Roast in a slow oven (325 degrees) to well done (170 degrees). Allow 30 to 35 minutes per pound for a center loin roast; 35 to 40 minutes per pound for a half loin; 40 to 45 minutes per pound for a smaller blade or sirloin roast.

NOTE: Have the meat retailer loosen the chine (back bone) by sawing across the rib bones. When roasting is finished, the back bone can be removed easily by running the carving knife along the edge of the roast before the meat is placed on the platter to be carved.

CANTONESE VEGETABLES

- 1/4 lb. bok choy (about 4 stalks)
- 1/4 c. julienne carrot strips
- 2 T. butter or margarine
- 1 c. pea pods
- 1 c. sliced mushrooms
- 1 can (8 oz.) bamboo shoots, drained
- 1 can (8 oz.) sliced water chestnuts, drained
- 1 t. Worcestershire sauce
- 1/4 t. salt
- dash ground red pepper

Cut bok choy into 1/4-slices; reserve. Cook and stir carrots in butter in large frying pan over medium-high heat 3 to 5 minutes. Add bok choy, pea pods, mushrooms, bamboo shoots, water chestnuts, Worcestershire sauce, salt and red pepper. Cook and stir 7 to 10 minutes, or until vegetables are tender-crisp. Six servings.

Rice will go well with the pork and Oriental vegetables as will a mixed greens salad accented with mandarin orange segments. Then for a light dessert just right for the season, serve lemon sherbert with pumpkin cookies.

MENU SPOTLIGHT — For a special family meal that's easy to prepare, serve a lean, flavorful pork loin roast with stir-fried Oriental vegetables.

The frost is on the pumpkin pie

No time to make pie crust? No time for fancy dessert preparation? No need to worry. This ingenious new Frosty Pumpkin Pie — made with a crust of frozen whipped topping — is probably one of the easiest, most glamorous, and at the same time, scrumptiously delicious desserts you've ever made. With a total of five ingredients, all ready to use, the dessert is good news for busy cooks.

All you need to prepare the creamy crust is a pie plate, a spoon, some freezer space and three cups of whipped topping. Simply spoon thawed whipped topping into a pie plate and shape into a crust. Freeze, add the pie filling — an easy to stir together mixture of canned pumpkin, whipped topping, sugar and pumpkin pie spice — and refreeze.

- ### FROSTY PUMPKIN PIE
- 1 1/2 oz. container whipped topping
  - 1 c. canned pumpkin
  - 1/4 c. packed brown sugar
  - 1 1/4 t. pumpkin pie spice
  - 1/4 c. chopped pecans

Spoon three cups whipped topping into 9-inch pie plate. With back of spoon, spread and shape into a shell. Freeze until firm. Combine pumpkin, sugar and spice, mixing until well blended. Fold in remaining whipped topping. Spoon into shell; sprinkle with pecans. Freeze until firm. Eight to 10 servings.

When preparing the following recipe, Fall Fruit Toss, a ginger sparked fresh fruit salad, measure out the specified two cups thawed whipped topping, then cover and return the remaining portion to the freezer. Whipped topping may be thawed and refrozen several times without affecting quality.

- ### FALL FRUIT TOSS
- 3 c. chopped apple
  - 2 c. chopped pear
  - 1 c. grape halves
  - 1 t. chopped crystallized ginger
  - 1/4 c. mayonnaise
  - 2 c. thawed whipped topping
  - 1/2 c. chopped walnuts

Combine fruit, ginger and mayonnaise. Fold in whipped topping. Sprinkle with walnuts before serving. Six to eight servings.

FROSTY PUMPKIN pie features an easy-to-make crust of frozen whipped topping.

Ball control helped set up Pampa's 3-0 homecoming win over Levelland

By L.D. STRATE
News Sports Editor

Clutch defense and his own thundering punt helped put Devin Cross in position for his game-winning field goal against Levelland last Friday night.

But ball control and time of possession also led to the meeting at Levelland's 37-yard line, from where Cross hit his field goal to give Pampa a 3-0 homecoming win.

Take the final seven minutes of the third quarter. The Harvesters didn't score, but they ran off 17 plays and left Levelland deep in their own territory with 39 seconds left in the third period.

Pampa head coach John Kendall took special notice of that long drive while viewing the game film the next day.

"That was a crucial drive for us even though we didn't score," Kendall said. "We were going into the wind and it really helped us to control the ball the way we did."

It was the longest possession by either team. Pampa had ran off 14 plays early in the first half before the drive ended on Cross' unsuccessful field goal attempt from Levelland's 23.

For the game, Pampa led in possessions (11-9) despite turning the ball over three times on fumbles. Each team had two penetrations.

Cross' 74-yard punt late in the fourth quarter put Levelland in the hole on its own one-yard line.

"That punt was a definite factor in the game," Kendall said. "Then our defense played some inspired football and stopped them when we had to."

Facing a third and seven on Pampa's four, Levelland was forced to punt when Pampa lineman Dean Birkes stopped Walter Washington, the Lobos' top rusher, after a two-yard gain.

Six plays later, Cross unloaded his game-winning field goal with only 17 ticks left on the clock. It was the first field goal of the season for the 175-pound senior, who also backs up Robert Knight at quarterback. He booted two field goals last season.

Pampa's coaching staff received a scare midway in the third quarter when senior tailback Anthony Scott appeared to have suffered a serious leg or knee injury, but it turned out to be just a bad case of cramps.

Scott is well on the way to having a 1,000-yard rushing season. He has now rushed for 445 yards in four games after a 152-yard night against Levelland.

"Scott has got speed and some good moves, but what I like about him best is that he's a team player," Kendall said.

Devin Cross...boots winning field goal.

Although Scott escaped injury, an important member of Pampa's defensive unit didn't. Senior linebacker Dennis Kuempel, who is the team's leading tackler for the season, may have re-injured his shoulder.

Kuempel was in on 11 tackles against Levelland to lead the Harvesters in that category. He also recovered a fumble.

Another linebacker, Danny Sebastian, was in on eight tackles. Birkes and Brian Kotara had six stops each while Ricky Poole, Tony Santa Cruz, Paul Mason and Swasey Brainard all had five.

Next on Pampa's schedule is defending district champion Lubbock Estacado, 3-1 so far. The Matadors are coming off a 35-6 win over Borger.

"Estacado has some great athletes," Kendall said. "They've only lost one district game in the past five or six years and that was to Borger two years ago when Borger went to the playoffs. The kids are going to have to play a super game to beat them."

Pampa is now 2-2 for the season and 1-0 in district play. Pampa's other win came against Perryton.

"We're going to take them one at a time," Kendall added. "They're all big games from here on out."

Phils edge Dodgers on Carlton's gem

By KEN PETERS AP Sports Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Mike Schmidt says the opening game of the 1983 National League Championships is merely history now, but the Philadelphia Phillies slugger played the major role in its making.

"The game means nothing now except that guys will write about it for tomorrow and we'll think about it for a couple of hours before starting to think about the next one," Schmidt said Tuesday night after he homered in the first inning for the only run in Philadelphia's 1-0 victory over the Los Angeles Dodgers.

"I remember we won the first game against the Dodgers in the 1977 Championship Series, but they came back to win the next three," he said. "Of course, being up by one game is more fun than being down by one."

"I know the Dodgers are a great ball club, and there's going to be some hitting before this series is through."

There was little hitting in the first game of the best-of-five series, which resumes tonight in Dodger Stadium with Los Angeles' Fernando Valenzuela, 15-10 during the regular season, going against Philadelphia's John Denny, 19-6.

Steve Carlton blanked the Dodgers on seven hits for 7-2-3 innings before giving way to ace reliever Al Holland with the bases loaded and two away in the bottom of the eighth. Holland got Mike Marshall to fly out to right to end the Dodgers' strongest threat of the game.

Jerry Reuss was the loser in the pitchers' duel, allowing five hits before going out for a pinch-hitter in the bottom of the eighth. His performance was flawed only by the fastball in the first inning that he threw in Schmidt's preferred hitting area, low and across the plate.

"The game was one pitch the way it turned out," said Reuss. "It was a good pitch to a good hitter."

Schmidt said he wasn't certain the ball was going to clear the centerfield fence.

"He had thrown me a couple high and inside and I was just trying to find the ball to tell the truth," recalled Schmidt, who led the majors with 40 homers this season but never before had hit one in the league championships. "It just so happened the pitch was down and over the plate ... I just sort of threw the bat at it."

"I thought it had a chance to go out, but when (Ken) Landreaux kept his arm up in the air at the fence, I thought he'd caught it."

Both the winners and the losers agreed it was a well-played contest.

"Carlton pitched a super game," said Dodger Manager Tom Lasorda. "We had our chances to score a couple of times and we didn't. Who would have thought that Schmidt's home run in the first inning would have been all they needed to win."

"Reuss pitched a great game, but just came up short," Lasorda continued. "We hope our turn comes tomorrow."

"That homer didn't look like much in the first inning, but it looked monumental by the fifth or sixth," said Phillies Manager Paul Owens. "It was a classic game."

"I thought there would be good pitching and not a lot of hitting," he said. "In fact, we were going to play for a run early. It was a tough game for the Dodgers to lose and a good game for us to win."

After Holland turned the Dodgers away in the eighth, they had one final chance for a comeback, when Derrel Thomas reached first as Schmidt booted his grounder with two away in the bottom of the ninth. Thomas stole second, but Holland then got Greg Brock to ground out and end it.

Although Schmidt and many of the players on each side predicted heavy hitting in the games ahead, Owens said, "With the pitchers the two clubs have, there could be more games like this coming up."

Game 2 could provide another such pitchers' showcase, considering the talents of the opposing hurlers.

Valenzuela has not been as consistent as in the past, including his 1981 Cy Young and Rookie of the Year campaign, but he has pitched brilliantly at times. Denny, with the league's best record and second-best earned run average (2.37), is the leading candidate for this year's Cy Young Award.

One playoff veteran, Philadelphia second baseman Joe Morgan, sees the second game as the potential clincher for the Phillies.

"If we win it, with our pitching there's no way they're going back to Philadelphia and sweep us in three games," said Morgan, a longtime Dodger nemesis. "Of course, beating them in Game 2 isn't going to be easy."

American League playoffs open today with Orioles meeting Sox

By JOHN NELSON AP Sports Writer

BALTIMORE (AP) — He does one heck of a Carlton Fisk imitation, but at this stage of his career, he might be just as happy to be Rick Dempsey.

Dempsey, catcher for the Baltimore Orioles, was a man on the spot as the American League playoffs began. Considered one of baseball's best-throwing catchers, Dempsey will have to contend with the fleet feet of the Chicago White Sox.

In a team this season, the White Sox stole 165 bases, 77 by Rudy Law and 57 by Julio Cruz.

The way Dempsey was talking on Tuesday, he was relishing the limelight. He's never been too shy.

Over the last several seasons, Orioles fans have gotten used to Dempsey's antics, especially during rain delays when he comes onto the tarp and imitates, among others, former Manager Earl Weaver, his teammates and, most memorably, Fisk. The object of Dempsey's Fisk caricature was the 1975 World Series when, as the Boston catcher, Fisk homered to win the sixth game against Cincinnati. Fisk's homer was down the left-field line, and, as he danced sideways toward first, Fisk waved the ball into fair territory.

Now, Dempsey and Fisk are opposing catchers in the AL playoffs, which begin today. Fisk, signed by the White Sox as a free agent in 1981, probably won't have to worry too much about Orioles baserunners. They stole only 61 bases this season.

But Dempsey already has taken note of the White Sox's baserunning threat.

"Sure they're going to try to run — with guys like Cruz and Law," Dempsey said. "They're going to try to run us off the field, but we're ready."

Left-hander Scott McGregor, 18-7, and 1-0 this season against Chicago, was picked by Manager Joe Altobelli to start the opener, who were favored 13-10 to win the playoffs by Nevada oddsmakers.

"You don't want to pay so much attention to Cruz or Law that the guy up at the plate hits one off the clock," McGregor said after Tuesday's workout. "I've seen that happen so many times. You try a couple of trick moves to first, and then you throw one right down the middle."

"If they get on base, to tell you the truth, I'd just as soon tell them to steal second, third and home, take the run and go sit down in the dugout," McGregor said.

McGregor will be followed in the playoff rotation by rookie right-hander Mike Boddicker, 16-8, left-hander Mike Flanagan, 12-4, and right-hander Storm Davis, 13-7. Jim Palmer will be in the bullpen.

The winningest pitcher in baseball this year, right-hander LaMarr Hoyt, 24-10, was Manager Tony LaRussa's choice to start for Chicago. Following Hoyt, who was 2-1 against Baltimore, will be left-hander Floyd Bannister, 16-10, right-hander Rich Dotson, 22-7, and left-hander Britt Burns, 10-11. Since the All-Star break, Chicago's first three starters have a combined record of 42-5.

"So much has been said about Chicago's hitting," Dempsey said. "But I don't think any team can put up three starters like Chicago. I don't fear their hitting like their pitching. Over a short series when you can throw Hoyt, Dotson and Bannister, you have, more or less, three legitimate 20-game winners."

Between the two clubs, they should come away with their share of postseason awards. Hoyt and Dotson both are Cy Young candidates. Ron Kittle of the White Sox, with 35 homers, 100 RBI and a .254 average, is a Rookie of the Year contender. Baltimore has two Most Valuable Player candidates in Eddie Murray, 33 homers and 111 RBI, and Cal Ripken Jr., 27 homers, 102 RBI and a .318 batting average. And the White Sox would be disappointed if Fisk — 26 homers and 86 RBI — were overlooked entirely in the MVP vote.

"Figure-wise, we're the top two teams in the league," Kittle said. "They beat us seven out of 12 times, but in three of those losses, we played them neck-and-neck. We have the power pitchers, and they have the finesse pitchers."

Besides speed, pitching offered another vast difference between the two clubs, although both came away with considerable success. McGregor was the perfect example of the difference. He had only 86 strikeouts to Hoyt's 148, but McGregor's earned run average was 3.18 to Hoyt's 3.66.

"He gets the ball over the plate, he changes speeds, and he changes rhythm," Dempsey said of McGregor. "And, he's knowledgeable, he knows the hitters. He tries to make them hit the ball where it will do the least harm, to take away their strengths."

Much also has been made of the Orioles' edge in experience. Besides Fisk, designated hitter Greg Luzinski was the only other White Sox player in the starting lineup with World Series experience. Luzinski was with the 1980 World Series champion Philadelphia Phillies. On the other hand, the Orioles have many returning players from their 1979 World Series club, including McGregor.

"Four years later, four years older and wiser, maybe there is a little less pressure," McGregor said, "but I'm still excited."

LaRussa did not want to downplay the importance of experience, but he refused to concede the edge to the Orioles because of it.

"Experience is a benefit. I never underestimate it, except we have guys with experience. As a team, they have more, but it didn't bother us in the pennant race," LaRussa said.

Pampa spikers trip Borger in loop match

BORGER — Pampa's Lady Harvesters, led by Diana Simmons and Carrie Carter, defeated Borger, 15-12, 10-15, 15-1, in District 1-4A volleyball action Tuesday night.

"It was one of the sweetest wins we've had all year due to the rivalry between the two schools," said Pampa coach Phil Hall. "That's what made the match so close."

Hall said the spikes of Simmons and the sets of Carter had Borger off-balance the entire match.

"I think every ball that Diana hit over the net went to the floor," Hall said. "She had 12 to 15 kills. Carrie just did a super job of setting."

Borger's gym was also crowded with Pampa fans, which pleased Hall.

"The fans helped spur the girls on to beat Borger," Hall said. "They were very vocal. There were also football players and basketball players, both boys and girls, here. It's good to see that kind of unity among athletes."

Pampa hosts Lubbock Estacado at 1 p.m. Saturday in dual matches.

"We've beaten Estacado twice this year, but they're coming off a big upset over Lubbock Dunbar, who was unbeaten in district play," Hall said. "So we can't afford to get the big head. We've got to be ready against them."

Executive success rules changing

By JOHN CUNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — The rules of executive success are changing, and it's going to be a lot tougher for aspirants to crack the top ranks than it was during the fast-track, upwardly mobile days of the 1960s.

The change, says Eugene Jennings, who makes that assessment, will have a profound effect on the lives and careers of those who had expected to follow the earlier patterns of quick success.

Old patterns, says the professor, are returning: Experience over youth, company over career loyalty, steadiness rather than quickness of judgment, and a view of one's job as a career rather than as a stepping stone.

Jennings, who teaches management at Michigan State University and advises corporate boards and chairmen on executive development, sums up the changes as a return to the time-tested practice of leavening.

"The first time he heard the term, said Jennings, was in an interview with Charles E. Wilson, who headed General Motors Corp. from 1941 to 1953.

Then just beginning his studies of executive mobility, Jennings asked Wilson, "What's the key to making great leaders at GM?" He said Wilson replied tersely, "Leavening, young man, leavening."

Wilson explained: "You add just a little yeast to cause talent to rise slowly, but not too much to make it float up and cave in."

Little did Wilson foresee of what would happen — that the wild growth of the 1960s would allow leavening to be dismissed as archaic, and encourage young executives to stress career management, or the art of making successful moves.

Notions developed that to stay in a job "too" long was to be like a fly waiting to be swatted; that you must move and keep ahead of the mess you made so that you wouldn't be discovered; that in the first two years on a job you learned more than you could ever learn in the last two; and that in order to keep growing you should report to larger, more fertile ground every few years.

Jennings, whose books, among them "The Mobile Manager" and "Routes To The Executive Suite," were perhaps the major factor in identifying and explaining such notions, now believes they are becoming passé.

What brought about the changes?

There is a glut of middle managers, said Jennings, and right behind them are a lot of young baby boomers now about age 30 or 35. At the same time, there is a slowing of economic growth, which induces considerable "resizing."

News in brief

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — More than 75,000 businessmen and white-collar workers staged the largest protest march in Sweden's history to denounce a bill that would aid trade unions at the expense of private companies.

The demonstrators, led by Sweden's top industrialists and accompanied by marching bands, marched Tuesday to the Riksdag building as Parliament reconvened after a summer recess.

The Social Democratic government has proposed setting up "wage-earner funds" aimed at giving workers more control in companies and promoting a more equitable distribution of wealth.

The government would collect about $250 million a year from taxes on company profits and turn the money over to regional boards of trade union officials. The boards would use the money to buy stocks in private companies.

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Israeli air force jets intercepted a small Swiss-registered private plane flying from Cyprus to Lebanon and forced it to land in Israel, Cypriot airport sources report.

Israeli authorities permitted the Piper-28 aircraft to fly back to the Larnaca airport in Cyprus on Tuesday after questioning the pilot and co-pilot, the only two people aboard, the sources said.

The pilot reported he lost his way in fog, the sources said. He later found himself flying over some warships and the Israeli air force jets intercepted him and asked him to land at Haifa airport.

The office of the Israeli military spokesman told The Associated Press in Tel Aviv that the plane requested help from the Israeli side and then asked to land at Haifa.

FRED WARING

JACK VALENTI

Names in the News

TYRONE, Pa. (AP) — Band leader Fred Waring has been praised as "still down to earth" by a boyhood friend as his hometown honored him with a plaque and a banquet.

Waring, 83, who with his "Pennsylvanians" has recorded more than 2,000 songs, was honored here Tuesday with the dedication of a plaque at the site of the former Waring home.

Most of the nation's 3,500 movie theaters charge little more than 50 U.S. cents.

"The last thing I would do is suggest that depriving poor people" is the answer, said Valenti. The solution, he said, is to apply higher prices in certain targeted upper class theaters while allowing others to maintain low, popular prices.

Residents had been searching through their attics and closets for recordings, old photos and articles involving the town's favorite son. The memorabilia was used in an exhibit that included a copy of "Sleep," a record backed with "The West, A Nest and You."

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Comedian Rodney Dangerfield, who hurt his neck when he fell from a 4-foot ledge during the taping of a television show, is described as feeling fine after his release from a hospital.

His manager, Estelle Endler, said the 60-year-old Dangerfield has "remarkable recuperative powers" and will be back to work soon.

Over the years Waring has maintained close ties with his hometown by visiting and playing benefit concerts.

At a banquet Monday night, Waring spoke about getting started in show business with his brothers and friends, and of the families who lived on his boyhood block.

"With his old friends, I don't think Fred's changed at all," said George Stevens, 76.

"He's still very much Fred — still down to earth."

Dangerfield, best known for the line, "I don't get no respect," hurt his neck Sunday while taping a spoof of a beer commercial for his ABC-TV fall special.

"He was supposed to fall off the ledge and jump onto mattresses, but he landed on his face," Ms. Endler said.

Dangerfield was released Tuesday from Cedars-Sinai Medical Center Tuesday. He recently starred in the movie "Easy Money" in which, ironically, he spent time in traction in a hospital.

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Jack Valenti, president of the Motion Picture Association of America, and Mexico's President Miguel de la Madrid have conferred on ways to bring about better cooperation between moviemakers in Hollywood and Mexico.

Valenti, 62, said at the meeting Tuesday the president asked for help in rebuilding Mexico's film archives, destroyed in a fire last year. Valente said U.S. filmmakers would help restore the archives.

"I pointed out that 15 to 17 films have been made in Mexico in the last year, probably leaving in this country a minimum of $100 million," said Valenti. "It's a tidy sum and the president wasn't aware of those figures."

Valenti also said that low prices for movie admissions in Mexico are hindering growth of the film market.
