Boswell resigns position with Pampa schools

By JULIA CLARK Staff Writer

The Pampa Independent School District Board of Trustees accepted a resignation and cast its votes for the board of directors of the Gray County Tax Appraisal District in a special meeting this morning.

Paul E. Boswell resigned as deputy superintendent of the Pampa schools to accept the position as superintendent of the Nixon - Smiley school district near San Antonio.

In a letter of resignation addressed to Superintendent James Trusty, Boswell said his resignation will be effective Friday.

"Please know I have enjoyed my years with the Pampa schools and I have the highest personal regard and respect for my colleagues and the entire educational staff of this district.

"I am leaving only because I have been elected Superintendent of the Nixon - Smiley Consolidated Independent School District," Boswell's letter said.

Accepting Boswell's resignation "with a great deal of regret" and "disappointment", Trusty wished Boswell success in his new endeavor. The board accepted his resignation in a six to one vote, with trustee Dr. Robert Lyle voting no.

Boswell said in an interview his decision to apply to Nixon - Smiley was purely unplanned. The opportunity to work directly with teachers and children "just happened and was too good to turn down," he said.

"I am a people person," he said. "I am going to miss my friends in Pampa. I wish to thank you for your interest in the Boswell family. I appreciate the time and relationships I have enjoyed in the school," he said.

Boswell was selected over 28 other applicants for the superintendent's position. The Nixon - Smiley schools have 1,000 students from kindergarten through high school.

Boswell graduated from Pampa High

PAUL BOSWELL

School in 1950 and returned for the third time as a member of Pampa school's staff in July 1982.

He was instrumental in establishing several innovative purchasing policies in the Pampa school district. He converted the school buses to natural gas fuel and contracted with the Texas prison system to renovate furniture in the schools, saving the district many thousands of dollars per year in operating expenses.

Turning to the original reason for the special meeting, the board cast its 2,550 votes for the board of directors of the Gray County Tax Appraisal District.

The board cast the following votes: Glenn Dawkins - 775; Lloyd Hunt - 220; Benny Kirksey - 775; Dr. Robert Lyle - 610; and Jimmy Wilkerson - 170.

The school district's vote, largest of all taxing entities in the county, makes the unofficial total vote for the appraisal board as follows: Kirksey and Dawkins, 775 each; Wilkerson, 770; County Judge Carl Kennedy and Dr. Lyle, 675 each; Lloyd Hunt, 340; and County Commissioner Jimmy McCracken, 125. The top five will be named to the board.

Telling the trustees about the drug task force meeting tonight at the Pampa Middle School cafeteria, Board President Wallace Birkes said he hoped the board will support the task force.

First U.S. missile shipment causes furor in Parliament

GREENHAM COMMON, England (AP) — A transport plane landed under heavy security today at the U.S. Air Force base here, a target of nuclear protests, and witnesses said they saw what appeared to be a missile nosecone in the cargo.

Defense Secretary Michael Heseltine cut short a visit to an army base in southern England to meet with Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, and the British domestic news agency Press Association said he was preparing to make a statement to Parliament concerning the arrival of cruise missiles.

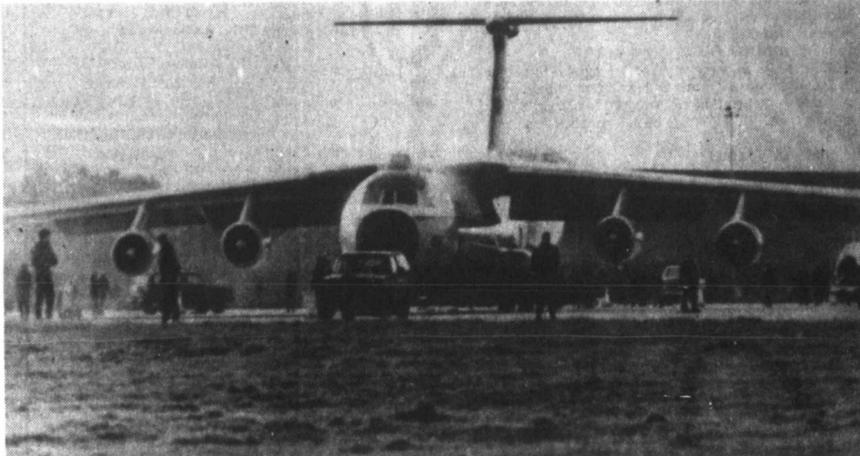

Heseltine has said he would inform Parliament once the missiles, the first of 572 cruise and Pershing 2 missiles NATO is to deploy in Western Europe, arrive in Britain. The U.S.-built, nuclear-tipped missiles are intended to counter Soviet SS-20 missiles already aimed at Western Europe.

The C-141 Starlifter was the first such plane to land since equipment for Europe's first shipment of cruise missiles began arriving at Greenham Common Nov. 1. Other flights, on larger C-5A Galaxies, have brought control equipment and missile launchers.

The Defense Ministry refused to comment on whether the latest flight had brought the missiles themselves.

The aircraft taxied to near the six shelters where the missiles and their mobile launchers are to be housed. Previous flights at the base, 50 miles west of London, had remained at the end of the runway.

In Alice Springs, Australia, police reported 111 arrests Sunday after hundreds of women protesting nuclear weapons swarmed over a fence at a U.S.-Australian intelligence post, demanding that the facility be closed. The protest continued today at the Pine Gap base as the arrested women began appearing in court.

Protesters said they also were commemorating the death of Karen Silkwood, an American concerned with worker safety at a nuclear fuel plant who was killed in a mysterious car crash nine years ago.

Police Sgt. Darryl Menzie said 109 of the women arrested for violating a restricted area identified themselves as Karen Silkwood and were charged with giving a false name.

Ms. Silkwood, who worked at a nuclear fuel rod plant, died in a car crash in 1974 while en route to a meeting where she reportedly was to present evidence of health hazards faced by plutonium-plant workers.

In London, protesters fell to the ground in a "die-in" demonstration during a Remembrance Sunday service in which British leaders — including Prince Charles and Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher — paid tribute to the nation's war dead.

Scotland Yard said 18 people were arrested on charges of "insulting behavior" during the demonstration at Parliament Square. The protest was not noticed by those at the service a block away. Eight other anti-nuclear demonstrators were arrested in incidents elsewhere in London.

In Dresden, East Germany, where 35,000 people died in a 1945 allied bombing raid, visiting Archbishop of Canterbury Robert Runcie, head of the Anglican Church and a British World War II tank commander, appealed for an end to the nuclear arms race.

About 20 East German youths gathered at Leipzig's town hall in a "peace protest" Saturday night. The youths said they wanted to place candles there to show that Christians in the East are concerned about peace, witnesses said.

Italy's Parliament opens a three-day debate today on NATO's nuclear missile plans for Western Europe.

Challenge DWI laws, Texas lawyers told

HOUSTON (AP) — Seventy Texas lawyers were told at a seminar on defending people accused of drunken driving to challenge every law, police officer and chemical test presented by prosecutors.

The seminar, held in Houston last week, is given by a traveling group of six legal experts who contend drunken driving defendants often do not receive a fair trial.

The experts recommended that defense lawyers use tactics ranging from showing juries the college grades of breath-test operators to filing "a half pound" of pre-trial briefs in hopes the prosecutor will agree to a plea bargain.

Drunken-driving cases "offer very fertile grounds for attacking the state's case," said Lawrence Taylor, a law school professor in Washington state and the author of the book, "Drunk Driving Defense."

The Texas lawyers paid $160 to attend the seminar.

"I have no apologies for coming to something like this," Dallas lawyer Peter Lesser told the Dallas Times Herald. "The defense lawyer's job is to represent his client and make sure that the state proves its case beyond a reasonable doubt. If I pick up a tip, I'm doing my job."

Reagan predicts stronger ties

President says tour raises prospects for peace

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, declaring "it's great to be home," ended his Asian tour today and said it brought stronger partnerships and better prospects for a more secure peace.

Reagan returned to the United States after leaving behind a renewed commitment to South Korea's security and a public reminder by Secretary of State George Shultz that the threat from communist North Korea must be kept in mind when assessing progress in human rights to the south.

Air Force One also carried two ailing Korean youngsters from poor families to the United States for heart surgery in New York. The children roamed about the airplane, giggling at tape recordings of their singing voices, and sitting on Nancy Reagan's lap.

In a statement prepared for delivery at a White House welcoming ceremony upon his return from the 15,650-mile, 6½-day journey, Reagan said that in Japan, an agenda for progress on a variety of economic and security issues was set, with plans made to deal with trade barriers, auto industry problems and investment.

In Seoul, he said, "I reaffirmed to the Korean people America's commitment to their peace and freedom. And I encouraged them to develop further their democracy." This was a reference to the president's comments on human rights issues in several speeches.

During the visit, however, several political dissidents were said by colleagues to have been taken into police custody or placed under house arrest by the regime of President Chun Doo-hwan.

"I know I speak for Nancy and everyone when I say — oh, my, it's great to be home," the president said.

"Working as partners to make tomorrow better and more secure is what this trip was all about," Reagan said, adding "I'm pleased to report some good news: America's partnerships are stronger, and prospects for a more secure peace and prosperity are better today than a week ago.

"Those who disagree with the United States get plenty of publicity," Reagan said. "But one thing becomes more plain to me each time I travel. Across the globe, America is looked to as a friend and as a leader in preserving peace and freedom.

"Coming home from Korea and Japan, all of us bring with us renewed energy and renewed commitment to our fundamental goals: building a new era of peace and prosperity."

Despite Wheeler vote

Water project not dead yet

By JEFF LANGLEY Senior Staff Writer

WHEELER — Wheeler County voters' rejection of a lake tax last Tuesday left the local water district without funds, but the Red River Authority and the local water district board members won't give up in their efforts to build a lake northeast of Wheeler, according to a water board official.

The water board wanted Wheeler voters to authorize a tax so that the local district could pay off the river authority's past engineering and test expenses on the project. Buying out the authority's interest would allow the local water district to take over control of the lake project, according to proponents of the tax.

But Wheeler voters rejected by a narrow margin a tax levy of up to five cents per $100 valuation for funding the local water district.

Without funds for the local water district, the Wheeler water board members may ask the Red River Authority to continue its work toward building the proposed lake, according to Wheeler County Water Supply District Chairman Pete Burton of Wheeler.

After the defeat of the tax proposal, the Wheeler water district board met Thursday and tabled further action on the proposed lake until its next meeting in December.

Burton said before the vote the river authority had asked the Wheeler water board to decide by December 31 what the local district wants to do about the proposed lake.

The water board chairman said the two options outlined by the river authority include "Plan A," which called for the river authority to continue with its work and control over the project, and "Plan B," which proposed that the local district to buy out the river authority and build the lake itself.

But after the defeat of the tax proposal, it's probably up to the river authority to carry the ball on the lake project, Burton said.

"We don't have the money,

Obviously, 'Plan B' is out the window," he said.

Burton said the defeat of the lake tax Tuesday was likely due to a low voter turnout. Also, many of the voters had just received their yearly tax bills, a poor time to ask citizens for a tax increase, the water board chairman said.

"Taxes are hard to vote," Burton said.

But the lake project is far from dead, according to the water board official.

"We will continue to pursue it," Burton said.

"It's the only lake project left in Northern Texas," he added, explaining he believes the Texas Water Commission wants the lake built.

To build the lake, however, the local water district or river authority must get a permit from the Texas Water Commission to dam up Sweetwater Creek, seven miles east and two miles north of Wheeler.

A dam there would create a 2,500-acre lake, a lake which would supply the entire county's water needs and create a place for recreation, proponents say.

The lake and a water distribution system would supply rural Wheeler County and the towns of Shamrock, Wheeler, Mobettie, Allison, Briscoe and Kelton.

The total cost of the proposed lake and water system is estimated at $28 million, which would cost Wheeler County taxpayers 15 cents per $100 valuation over 15 years, according to water board member M. Kent Sims.

Job hunter

Dotdee Neil, 59, is a Pampa woman who needs a job. She doesn't care what kind of job, just one that pays money.

"Right now, I just need a job. I mean a job — period," she said.

The woman's husband, for health reasons, hasn't worked in three years; the couple's only income is from her unemployment check and totals $176 a month; even the small unemployment check will dry up in December; her 1970 Chrysler is about to give out; she has a bad heart and high blood pressure; Dotdee Neil's back is against the wall, and her mind is searching for a way to pay utility bills and rent and put groceries on the table, the woman said.

The long-time Pampa resident said she knows a way out of part of her predicament. It's spelled, W-O-R-K. Now, if only someone will hire her, she wonders.

"I've lived here for forty - one years. My kids all went through school here," Neil said.

Her husband, Joseph, 62, an architectural draftsman, has "arthritis, emphysema, and gout," and hasn't been able to work in three years, she said. He hasn't drawn a dime yet, but her husband will apply for social security benefits later this month.

"I hope he gets it," she said.

Until Dotdee Neil was laid off last September, the Pampa couple with four grown children struggled along on $275 per month the woman earned by cleaning up the local Moose Lodge.

Neil's health isn't tip-top, but she said it's good enough to work a job and would pose little risk to potential employers. She takes medication for her health problems, and, "I've got to make money to buy it."

"I have a bad heart and high blood pressure. As long as I take my medication, I think I'll be all right," she said.

The woman has decades of working experience right here in Pampa. She wants a job, but wonders whether an employer will give her a chance.

"My age and heart and high blood pressure might not get me one, but I've had plenty of experience," Neil said.

"I've worked over 25 years in bars. I worked at Woolworth when it was here. I worked at Levine's when it was here. I used to work at Piggly Wiggly's when it was out there where Alco is now. I worked at Leisure Lodge, teaching arts and crafts to the elderly," she said.

The woman's car may not be as reliable as "Old Faithful," but if someone will hire her, Neil will make it to work somehow, even if she has to walk.

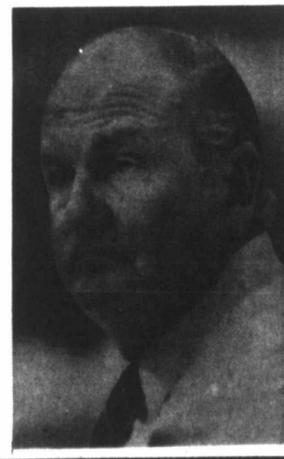

"I have a '70 Chrysler. How long it's going to run I don't know. Actually, I have two good legs, though," she said.

To interview a woman who wants to work, call Neil at 665-6103.

Corporate income tax percentage dropping
WASHINGTON (AP) — Corporate income taxes accounted for 8.1 percent of all federal revenues last year, less than one-third the level of 1950, a new congressional study disclosed today.
The study, conducted by the Joint Committee on Taxation and the General Accounting Office, found that corporations carried 11.5 percent of the tax load in 1981 and 28.3 percent in 1950. By comparison, personal income taxes accounted for 49 percent of federal revenues last year, 47.5 percent in 1981 and 39.2 percent in 1950.
Effective tax rates paid by various industries ranged from a negative 17.7 percent for chemicals to 39 percent for rubber manufacturers.
The study, carried out at the request of Reps. Donald J. Pease, D-Ohio, and Byron L. Dorgan, D-N.D., showed seven of 29 major industries had effective tax rates of less than 10 percent last year. While the average corporation paid 16.1 percent of its U.S. earnings to the federal government, the average tax on foreign income was 55 percent.
"The tax system has become a punchboard of gimmicks," Dorgan said in releasing the study. "While some industries, such as the trucking industry, pay a fairly heavy income tax, others, such as financial institutions, including many of the largest banks, pay no U.S. income tax."
Added Pease: "This study bears out my contention that the United States needs an alternative minimum corporate income tax. It is clear that corporations ought to make some contribution to the operation of our country."
Pease, who, like Dorgan, is a member of the House Ways and Means Committee, has proposed such a minimum tax to ensure that every firm with earnings of more than $50,000 a year pay an income tax of at least 15 percent.
The study found the insurance industry had a negative effective tax rate of 6.3 percent; financial institutions, a negative 3.8 percent; aerospace, a negative 0.6 percent; telecommunications, 1.6 percent; railroads, 4.1 percent, and broadcasting, 6.9 percent.
At the other end of the scale, the trucking industry paid an effective tax rate of 36.9 percent; tobacco, 36.3 percent; wood and paper, 36.1 percent, and wholesalers, 36.1 percent.

Leftist parties triumph in Peru

LIMA, Peru (AP) — The moderate left headed for control of Peru's city halls today, handing President Fernando Belaunde Terry's party a major setback in municipal elections that went smoothly despite threats from guerrilla terrorists.
"It is a moment of recognition and I am glad the country had the opportunity to say so," Belaunde said after left-wing and center-left candidates won the majority of Sunday's elections.
Official results in the races for 1,600 mayoral and city government posts were not expected for about 10 days.
The defeat was the first for Belaunde's centrist Popular Action Party, which propelled him to the presidency twice in the past 20 years.
Belaunde, 71, was president from 1963 to 1968, when he was overthrown in a military coup. He restored civilian government to Peru in 1980 after 12 years of military rule.
The elections were held under threats from the Maoist Shining Path guerrilla movement, which had warned Peruvians they might be killed if they voted. Police with machine guns and soldiers with bayonets guarded more than 40,000 polling places.
No violence was reported at the polls but, after they closed Sunday night, there were eight explosions near the Lima headquarters of the United Left coalition. There were no known casualties. A police official said the blasts caused some damage and four suspects were arrested.
The United Left, which included Peru's Communist Party, won the mayor's race in Lima with more than 33 percent of the vote. Alfonso Barrantes, a lawyer, polled only 2 percent less than Belaunde's candidate did three years ago.
"We represent the hope of the people who have been deceived too long," Barrantes, 53, told a cheering crowd before the explosions near the coalition headquarters.
Nationwide, the center-left Social Democrats, led by Alan Garcia, won the bulk of the city halls.
An independent polling organization, Peruvian Public Opinion, gave Social Democrats 38 percent nationwide, Christian Conservatives 26 percent, Barrantes' United Left 23 percent and Belaunde's government party 10 percent, a 25 percent plunge from the municipal elections of three years ago.

"The policy of devaluation, unemployment and depression where violence increases day by day cannot be continued," Garcia said in explaining the government's defeat.
In Lima, Social Democrats finished second behind the United Left with 26 percent, the conservatives had 20 percent and the government party 13 percent. Prime Minister Fernando Schwalb said the opposition "has triumphed" in elections that he said were clean and orderly because of massive security provided by the armed forces and police.
In Ayacucho, the main town in a region which is a stronghold of the Shining Path, Leonor Zamora Concha, the candidate of the opposition PADIN party, won the mayor's race with 46 percent of the vote, according to the Peruvian Public Opinion. She had been arrested last week during a protest against voting regulations, including heavy penalties for people who did not vote.
A week before the election, guerrillas staged two bombing attacks on Lima and dynamite blackouts in four state capitals.

Congress trying to clear desks

WASHINGTON (AP) — Legislators hope to adjourn the first session of the 98th Congress this week after last-gasp attempts to subdue runaway budget deficits and to restore the government's borrowing authority, which lapsed Nov. 1.
Congress was returning to work today after meeting on Friday's Veterans Day holiday and again on Saturday to complete work on a compromise emergency spending measure necessary to keep a variety of government agencies operating.
President Reagan was set to sign the measure today after returning from a trip to the Far East.
Both the House and Senate were expected to put in long hours this week in hopes of adjourning until January. If not, they could return before or after Thanksgiving, despite Senate Majority Leader Howard Baker's warning that it could mean staying "until Christmas Eve."
A backlog of minor bills and several major matters await action:
—Proposed legislation, due for Senate action today, extending the life of the Civil Rights Commission and transforming it into a hybrid panel with half its eight members named by the president and half by Congress. The compromise proposal was worked out last week.
—Senate confirmation of the president's nomination of William P. Clark as secretary of the interior, succeeding James G. Watt.
—Possible House action on a tax bill to reduce the deficit by about $8 billion over three years. The measure has been stalled by opposition to a provision restricting the use of tax-free industrial development bonds for such private purposes as building retail stores and fast-food restaurants.

Senate action on a $28 billion deficit reduction package consisting of $14.6 billion in spending cuts and $13.4 billion in tax increases.
Congress adopted a budget outline in June that mandated three-year spending cuts of $12.3 billion and tax increases of $73 billion to shrink the budget deficit, which was $195.4 billion in the fiscal year that ended Sept. 30.
So far, the only substantive action toward that goal has been House passage of a $10.3 billion package of spending savings last month.
But the president and House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., have refused to compromise on their differing ways of dealing with the problem.
"The main player on the ballfield isn't there, and that's the president," said Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill.

Search resumes for four missing crewmen

CORPUS CHRISTI, Texas (AP) — A cook who was rescued while clinging for life in an air pocket inside a capsized oil rig crew boat returned home while the Coast Guard continued searching for his five missing shipmates.
Hayes Bonvillian Jr., 47, survived by holding onto a bunk bed and keeping his head in an air pocket that formed when the deck of the Laverne Hebert went under late Wednesday.
Bonvillian was rescued by a diver and was hospitalized in Victoria until Sunday, when he was released for his return trip home to Houma, La.
The Coast Guard used six aircraft and a cutter to search a 115-square-mile area of the Gulf of Mexico for a fourth day Sunday.
Bonvillian, who said he was asleep when the ship sank, told authorities that he saw the five crewmen heading down a ladder to a self-inflating life raft. However, searchers weren't sure if the men were able to use the raft, which is missing from the boat.
The survival vessel has enough provisions to feed 10 men for 11 days, said Robert Schmidt, president of Gulf International Marine of Houma, La., the company that owns the Laverne Hebert.

Big landlord with heart of gold

EDITOR'S NOTE — The hundreds of houses Texas provides its employees include mansions and cottages and go to workers ranging from prison guards to college presidents. This article, the first in a series of three, looks at which state agencies give workers shelter as well as wages, and why.

By KEN HERMAN
Associated Press Writer
AUSTIN (AP) — The state of Texas is a multi-million dollar landlord with a heart of gold, providing free or token-rent housing for more than 900 state employees — some of them well paid.

An Associated Press survey shows that housing benefits go to a gamut of state workers, from college presidents in the over $100,000-a-year group to $20,000-a-year park rangers, from the governor to prison guards, and from fish hatchery workers to Texas Youth Commission staffers.

Texas the landlord owns mansions and mobile homes, cabins and dormitories, apartments and cottages.

However, no single agency in the state keeps tabs on all of Texas' residential property.

Starting at the top of the state's 170,000 employees, Texans give their $88,900-a-year governor free use of the 8,920-square foot Governor's Mansion, of which about 2,900 feet are in the "private quarters" used by Gov. Mark White and family.

At the mansion, across the street from the Capitol, the gas, water and electricity bills add up to more than $3,600 per month.

"You've got to remember, it's enormous. And we are taking 1,000 tourists a week through it. It's not only for the benefit of the governor," said mansion administrator Anne De Bois.

The speaker of the Texas House and the lieutenant governor, who both draw annual salaries of $7,200 a year, have apartments inside the domed Capitol.

Most of the state's highest-paid group of employees — college presidents — are rent-free tenants in homes ranging from historic to contemporary, but all expensive.

Some of the presidential homes were gifts to the schools. Others were purchased with state money. Either way, Texans pay the upkeep.

The Texas Parks and Wildlife Department has 199 residences at its parks, hatcheries and wildlife management areas. Employees living at the homes pay nominal rent, averaging about $40 a month. The average salary of the residents is about $20,000, according to Bob Hauser, chief of park operations.

Hatcheries division chief Bill Rutledge's comments summarized the prevailing thought on why the state gives free or inexpensive housing to certain employees. Tenants become in effect, according to Rutledge, 24-hour-a-day employees.

"If we don't have somebody on the hatchery, we don't have any fish the next morning," because people love to fish in hatcheries even though it's against the law, he said.

The token rent charged for Parks and Wildlife homes is calculated on the condition of the home and the remoteness of its location.

Lawmakers allow the Texas Department of Mental Health and Mental Retardation to give free housing to 99 top officials. However, MHMR only has houses for 41. The other 58 get $175 a month as a housing allowance.

The free housing goes to top officials at state schools and hospitals. Superintendents at state schools for the mentally retarded earn $46,991 a year. State hospital superintendents get $57,600 a year.

Texas Mental Health and Mental Retardation Commissioner Gary Miller (who gets an annual salary of $68,400) hangs his hat — rent-free — in a 5,000-square foot home, valued by the state at $148,400, on the edge of the Austin State School grounds.

Miller, his wife and two preschool children live in a two-story frame and masonry home built by MHMR in 1948. The 13-room house includes four bedrooms and four bathrooms.

The $148,400 value set by MHMR is too low for the stylish West Austin neighborhood, support services director Patrick Terry acknowledged.

Another 91 workers at state hospitals and schools for the mentally retarded live at MHMR facilities, but they pay rent. The monthly rents vary, but are generally in the $175 to $300 range. Salaries of these employees — including maintenance workers and starting MHMR staffers — are as low as $10,800.

Elmer Carlson, chief of wage and salary for MHMR, said housing subsidies may end in coming years.

"There is no effort being made to build housing for those getting the allowance," he said. "It's almost the reverse. There is a general plan to do away with the housing when it becomes substandard or uneconomical to maintain."

As transportation and communication improve, there's less need for top officials to be on hand 24 hours a day, according to Carlson. And some of the officials find living where they work not "especially desired."

Twenty Texas Youth Commission employees are in free housing. The superintendent at the commission's Corsicana facility lives in the system's biggest curiosity — a 17-room (five bedrooms, 3 1/2 bathrooms) mansion built in the 1930s.

If located in a nice part of a bigger city the mansion could bring $250,000 or more, said Ron Jackson, director of the commission, the state's juvenile correction agency.

Like the mental health agency, the youth commission offers housing for other employees too. At its Pyote facility, near Monahans, there's a $15-a-month trailer park and rooms in a converted dorm.

In Huntsville, one of the benefits the Texas Department of Corrections can dangle in front of a prospective director (in addition to a $64,400 salary) is a 5,600-square-foot, five-bedroom, five-bathroom, red brick mansion with colonial-style columns.

At Camp Mabry in Austin, the state's National Guard headquarters, Adjutant General Willie Scott's $52,600-a-year job includes free use of a 5,404-square-foot home valued at $216,160. However, half of it is used as visiting officers' quarters.

In San Antonio, Institute of Texan Cultures Director Jack Maguire lives rent-free in a two-bedroom apartment within the state-owned museum. Maguire said the apartment was set up for the use of then-Gov. John Connally, who wanted some place to stay when he visited HemisFair.

What could be the state's ritziest house is in the planning stages in College Station, where the Texas A&M System has approved a $12 million home for its chancellor. A&M System boss Arthur Hansen is the state's highest-paid employee at $143,100 per year.

Houston residents Chester and Billie Jean Reed, for whom the ranch-style home will be named, gave $1 million for the project.

"I love A&M," Reed said.

The gift was accepted by the Texas College and University Coordinating Board despite the objection of board member Marshall Formby of Plainview, who told his colleagues, "I just don't want to go down in the record as voting for $1.2 million for a chancellor's house, even though it is a gift."

"The Legislature is trying to find money for salaries and to increase programs, and we are having to tighten our belt. Even though (the chancellor's house) doesn't cost the taxpayers now, it will later, because after it is built the taxpayers will have to keep the house up. I just think we are getting a little out of line," he said.

Formby's "no" was the only dissent.

Rep. Bill Hollowell, D-Grand Saline and one of the Legislature's leading penny-pinchers, is ready to toss the college presidents out of their residences.

Hollowell is still steamed about the house the University of Texas System built in Austin 12 years ago for its chancellor.

CLOSE LOOK — Officials from federal and local authorities spent Sunday taking a close look at the Amtrak Eagle at a Missouri Pacific train yard in Marshall. The train derailed Saturday, killing four. The train was righted and pulled into Marshall and the track repaired and opened Sunday. Cause of the accident is still under investigation. (AP Laserphoto)

Derailment probe focuses on shattered rail

MARSHALL, Texas (AP) — A shattered section of rail may tell investigators why five cars on the Amtrak train Eagle derailed deep in the East Texas woods, killing four women and injuring scores of people.

National Transportation Safety Board member Donald Engen said Sunday that the broken section of rail will be sent to a Union Pacific laboratory in Omaha, Neb.

But he said a final report on the accident may not be ready for four months.

The Saturday morning accident was the worst for Amtrak since June 10, 1971, when 11 people were killed in Salem, Ill., said Cliff Black, an Amtrak spokesman in Washington. Amtrak was formed May 1, 1971.

Buses carried 101 of the 145 passengers on board to Dallas and San Antonio. Workers unloaded baggage into a truck Sunday morning, and the train was righted, placed on repaired track and moved to a Marshall rail yard where federal investigators sealed it off and began their examination.

Torn pillows were strewn along the tracks, disposable coffee cups littered the ground near the accident site, but the only other sign of the accident at the scene Sunday was a Missouri Pacific railroad crew sitting by a campfire after they replaced 700 feet of mangled track.

Harvey Edwards, a Chicago art photographer taking the train to Dallas, said it was not the sight of the mud-spattered, crumpled train cars that scared him, but rather the sounds he could still hear.

"When you remember the sounds — that's when it really gets to you," said Edwards. "It's the screams and the moans I can still hear."

Officials said 24 people were admitted to three area hospitals after the accident. Scores of others were treated for minor injuries and released.

A data recorder on board the train, which was headed for San Antonio, Texas from Chicago, showed it was traveling at 73 mph when it derailed, said Missouri Pacific vice president Richard Davidson. The speed limit for passenger trains on that stretch of rail is 75 mph.

"It's clear to see that the second wheel on the right-hand side of (the fourth car) has a very pronounced gouge that indicates that could be the first wheel to hit a separation in the track," said Engen.

Engen said the shattered rail "did come apart subsequent to derailment," and added that it was the same section of rail that Missouri Pacific Railroad crews had been working on within two hours of the derailment.

A railroad spokesman said two freight trains passed over the rails after the repair crews finished Saturday morning and shortly before the Amtrak train derailed.

NTSB spokesman Bob Buckhorn said the rail was broken in several places, causing the separation.

"The track breaks and the broken piece of rail comes up and is hit by the oncoming truck, which is the technical word for the set of four wheels," Buckhorn said. "You can say that the train derailed because of the break, but there's probably more to it. A train can pass over a break in the rail without derailling."

William Grimmer, Amtrak's general superintendent for its Midwest division, said no defects had been found on the two-engine, nine-car Eagle that was carrying 162 people, including 145 passengers and 17 railroad workers.

Texas Department of Public Safety spokesman David Wells identified the dead as Sybil Fisher, 59, of Mineola, Texas; and Dorothy M. Blask, 77, of Milwaukee; Alma Zahn, 69, of La Crosse, Wis.; and Carol McDonald, 74, of Richardson, Texas.

Marshall Memorial Hospital administrator James Pears said 21 patients remained hospitalized, two of them critically injured. A total of 58 injured people were treated in Marshall.

One person was hospitalized at Marion County Hospital in Jefferson and two at Good Shepherd Hospital in Louisville.

"We handled 58 pretty well but we couldn't have handled many more. We felt pretty lucky that we didn't have 128 injured as was first reported to us," Pears said.

Harrison County Sheriff's Lt. Brandon Cullum said officials considered it "very lucky" that there weren't more fatalities.

"I expected maybe 50 or 60 bodies to identify," Cullum said. "The good Lord was watching out for these people."

Judge ending lengthy career

CENTERVILLE, Texas (AP) — After nearly one-half century on the bench, Max Maurice Rogers says he's going back to the Leon County ranch that his family has owned since the Civil War.

Rogers, 80, had served as judge of the 2nd Administrative Judicial District of Texas, presiding over 34 Texas counties and 106 district courts.

Rogers decided at age 10 that he wanted to be a lawyer. He studied law at the University of Texas and went to work in 1927 at a Dallas firm. But he soon tired of representing "mostly one of the banks in Dallas in matters that were not of too much importance."

So he returned home two years later and was elected as district attorney for the judicial district that included Leon and Walker counties.

"That was the Clyde Barrow-Bonnie Parker era," Rogers said in an interview published in Sunday's Houston Post.

The notorious couple was instrumental in a 1933 prison break from the Texas Department of Corrections' Eastham Unit in which one guard was killed. Rogers tried gang members Raymond Hamilton and Joe Palmer and won their death sentences.

"Clyde and Bonnie helped them get out but they were not present when the break happened inside the unit. They were waiting in a car but there was no way of establishing the two with the killing of the guard."

As Hamilton and Parker waited on death row, they bribed a guard to bring them weapons. The pair, along with three other convicts, then shot their way out of prison.

Hamilton later was captured in Fort Worth and Parker was cornered in St. Louis. Both eventually were executed. Rogers prosecuted the prison guard, who received a 15-year sentence.

"We had lots of those things. That was the era when so many state banks were being robbed," Rogers said. "That's when the Texas Bankers Association posted a reward of $5,000 for every dead bank robber. They didn't want them captured or tried, they wanted them killed."

In 1937, Rogers became a state district judge and three years later was named to preside over the 2nd District, which then was composed of 33 counties and 23 district courts.

The job lacked the excitement that he knew as a prosecutor but the challenges were just as great, he said.

During his tenure as judge, Rogers helped resolve a challenge to the election authorizing the sale of bonds to finance construction of the Houston's Astrodome and a suit to prevent drugstores from selling liquor.

In 1965, Rogers resigned as state district judge to devote full time to the increasing responsibilities as administrative judge.

As he ends his legal career, Rogers said the greatest challenge of the judicial system is making sure the cases move quickly through the courts.

"It is not right for people to be charged with a crime and not be able to make bond and just stay and stay in jail. Having people sit up in jail ... and not be able to get to trial to have guilt or innocence determined is unthinkable," he said.

EVER STRIVING FOR TOP OF TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

The real reason for state's action

There are few things that raise our fears more - or make us more willing to accede to more legislation - than the specter of "the exploitation of children." And thus the state of California, in its campaign to eradicate businesses which employ young people to sell candy door to door, trots out a few well-chosen examples of such children being abandoned in neighborhoods far from home, engaging in sex acts with a supervisor, or being robbed of their money.

Never mind that these appear to be isolated, infrequent incidents, or that thousands of young people over the years have benefited, without incident, from the opportunities the candy-selling provides, or that remedies against such specific abuses are already available.

Under the banner of protecting children, the state proposes to shut down a number of private businesses, and rob their youthful employees of the rare opportunity (for young people) to earn money and perhaps learn entirely wholesome business and social skills.

So far, a judge has ruled that the state has been unable to make its case, and thus lifted a temporary order restraining the businesses from operating. Among other things, Superior Court Judge William R. Sheffield said supporting documents filed by the state were based on "hearsay, speculation, legal conclusions and irrelevant beliefs." We hope the judge maintains his skepticism about the state's case. We frankly do not see how the state can make a valid case at all.

The child labor laws on which this case presumably hinges were probably no more valid when they were written decades ago than they are today. But their prohibitions against children under 16 engaging in "street occupations" such as "rope or wire walking," gymnast, acrobat or contortionist, or in "wandering businesses" seem hopelessly irrelevant to the selling of candy door to door.

And why is it that door-to-door selling by children on behalf of non-profit, charitable organizations is not only perfectly legal but considered entirely safe and beneficial to the sellers, while the same activity is called illegal and dangerous when someone makes money from it?

The fact is the distinction makes no sense, and child labor laws which prohibit such activities cannot be justified. They seem only to assure that children will be "protected" from earning money, for themselves and for their employers.

What is really at issue here, it seems to us, is the affront the candy-selling operation represents to the state's tax and business employing hundreds of part-time people operating in some manner as independent contractors is more difficult to police for violations of minimum wage, workmen's compensation, tax withholding and other laws than more traditionally structured businesses.

Insofar as it escapes such burdensome restrictions, the door-to-door candy business may be said to be part of the underground - or at least partially hidden - economy. And that, more than anything else, offends the state, because the existence and success of such enterprises expose the welter of tax and business regulations for what it is, a lead weight on the economy.

When the economy is so taxed, regulated and controlled that it chokes off opportunities and incentives, people will make their own opportunities.

Working to save American values

KEYSTONE, Colo. - High in the mountains west of Denver, the Shavano Institute of Hillsdale College is conducting an important educational program for Americans who hold leadership positions in American society.

Men and women whose achievements have already provided them with significant influence in their communities and professions are given an opportunity to talk to scholars and commentators with insights into the problems and opportunities facing the nation.

Dr. George C. Roche, III, President of Shavano and Hillsdale, emphasizes the opportunity for renewal of American society in the years ahead, with a focus on limiting government intrusions in the country's economic system.

Those who lecture at the Shavano Institute speak off the record, and the discussions between people from different professions and disciplines leads to valuable exchanges.

One recent talk traced the history and sources of radicalism in American life. The speaker noted that there were more radical newspapers in the 1880s and 1890s than there were even in the turbulent 1960s, when so-called alternative papers sprang up in cities and on college campuses. The speaker pointed out that while the vast majority of immigrants in the early period sought total Americanization, there were elements that brought to these shores the hostility towards free economic institutions that characterized revolutionaries in Europe. Some of these early radical movements are related to late 20th century radicalism.

The speaker also cited the effect of the Great Depression in radicalizing many influential writers and academics. He asserted that there is no possibility that the radical forces in American life will waver away in the years ahead as they are too well-entrenched in places of influence and too well-financed.

This guest lecturer at the Shavano Institute focused attention on the trans-national character of leftist hostility to free institutions, citing the links between Left groups in the U.S. and Europe. The European impact on American political thinking is considerable. In West Germany, the so-called "Green" movement, which is determined to advance the Soviet Union's goal of disarming the West, is currently engaged in violent activities which bring to mind the mob violence of Hitler's brown shirts. In time, something like the "Green" party may emerge in the U.S. The constituent elements already exist here.

The goal of the Shavano Institutes is understanding of the nation and the world. From understanding should flow ideas for action to protect and strengthen the spirit of liberty under law that is fundamental to the U.S. The Shavano Institute also provides important opportunities for association among leading citizens who share the same concerns about safeguarding American freedoms which are under intense ideological assault. By getting to know one another at Shavano these leaders can learn to work together to protect American values and institutions.

Riches at work for society

How would you like to be the richest man in the U.S.?

His name is Daniel K. Ludwig, according to Forbes magazine, and he has more than $2 billion - or he did when the magazine went to press. When you get up in the billions you can lose it as fast as you make it.

Ludwig is 85, lives in New York City, and made most of his money, they say, in shipping.

Beginning in the 1950's, he took contracts with the big oil companies to transport oil, let us say from the Middle East or other production area to the U.S. or elsewhere, and using the contracts as collateral - that is, proof of his ability to pay - he would borrow money with which to build the tankers in which to carry the oil.

He didn't inherit his wealth; he made it by astute business and hard work. But he also speculated, as one is sorely tempted to do when his wealth piles up. In the words of the Forbes writer, he "sank a probably unrecoverable $1 billion into an Amazon jungle pulp empire," but even so "his net worth is still above $2 billion."

"Jungle pulp empire" sounds like the making of paper pulp out of the vast wood resources of the jungle. This apparently did not prove practical, but it well might have, and if it would be a boon to the human race, which uses enormous and ever increasing quantities of paper and paperboard. Someone had to try it out, providing the capital for a test, with no assurance of its success. Someone had to take a chance - had to speculate.

America's second richest man is Gordon Getty, with worldly wealth in the area of $1.4 billion. He is 48 and did inherit a sizable kitty from his father, Paul Getty, founder of the Getty Oil Company. The Getty family owns 40 percent of that company.

Gordon is a modest fellow. He wears old clothes, watches football on TV, and plays ball in the street with his sons. He is musical - loves to sing, play the piano, and compose music.

He is reported to have underwritten a new production at the San Francisco Opera each season for the last several years. Each time it costs him a quarter of a million dollars. Do the San Francisco opera - goes on to whom they owe all that great music?

A billionaire is a millionaire a thousand times over. It seems a huge amount of money for any one person to possess. Evidently these "richest" men keep their money invested, that is, working to produce more wealth, not only for themselves but for the many who consume the goods and services which this invested capital provides.

It should be borne in mind that these fabulously rich individuals speculate and often lose, which somebody has to do. Who can afford it better than they?

In recent years, they have lost heavily also because of inflation. Consider the loss a person suffers when the million, or billion, dollars he has made, saved and invested undergoes a fall of 50 percent or so in the value of the dollar.

If given a choice, I would rather lose money by investing in the Amazon jungle than by the hike in prices at the supermarkets. In the first case, I would have free choice, while in the second there is no choice about it.

Limiting freedom of information

You've certainly heard of Paris. They've been holding another international meeting there.

Talloires, you've probably never heard of. It's out of the way, tucked in the French Alps.

But what took place there a month ago is of considerable importance to the proceedings of the U.N. Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization in Paris.

The key item on the UNESCO agenda, once again, is something that has come to be called the "new world information order."

I shall attempt to be basic and brief. For a number of years there has been an effort underway to redress a perceived imbalance in the worldwide news business.

The complaint is that the gathering and dissemination of international news is dominated by relatively too few Western press and broadcasting organizations.

The result is that the news in the underdeveloped world - the Third World - goes inadequately and unfavorably reported.

The desire is that international information activities be restructured to give Third World countries more say in reporting their stories to the outside world and greater control in the outside news getting in.

The concern is that the means of doing so - licensing news people, broadcasting restrictions and making governments directly answerable for their own newsgatherers abroad - would abridge press freedoms regarded as basic in the West. And the standard operating procedures under totalitarian regimes, where the news business is the state's business, might be extended worldwide.

The West - especially the governments - was a bit slow in perceiving the extent of the threat. Discussions were well underway within UNESCO before much of the fuss was raised.

In the second strategy session in two years, some 90 representatives of news organizations - mostly from North America and Europe, but with enough representation from Africa and Asia to internationalize the resistance movement - met at Talloires Sept. 30 through Oct. 2.

Out of it came an agreement to expand assistance to Third World countries in developing their own independent news services through personnel training programs and easier access to the necessary technology and hardware.

Also renewed was the determination to resist moves within UNESCO to institutionalize information procedures that would in effect be restrictions on freedom of information.

The UNESCO bureaucracy says the Western media are overreacting and overreporting the issue.

And besides, it might be asked, does it really matter what comes out of UNESCO? Its decisions are not mandatory. A new information order would have no validity within any country that refused to go along. The West's news organizations and people could go on doing what they've always done.

Well, not quite. Such an order would make it more difficult. It would give international sanction to practices that meet general disapproval.

The Soviets, for example, could point to it as justification for their interference with Western broadcasts. And countries like El Salvador or Libya could hide behind it when jailing (or worse?) troublesome foreign news people.

In assenting to limitations on freedom of information anywhere, we are limiting our own right to information.

The decisions at Talloires will, in the long run, probably turn out to be less important than the fact that the West and its allies are reacting, and in concert.

What is at issue can't be overreported.

Legacy

In this feature we excerpt material that has appeared on The Pampa News' editorial pages in previous years, whether from the editorials, the column written for many years by Freedom Newspapers founder R.C. Helles.

One of the ways we would have better schools and more competition in education would be to repeal the various tenure laws that exist in different states. I presume that most states have tenure laws so that teachers after they have held a certain teaching job for a certain time cannot be discharged without the authorities proving that they have violated some law or are guilty of serious moral turpitude.

There is no more reason why a board of education should be compelled to continue to employ a teacher when the board believes it could get better teachers than there would be to have a law that compelled subscribers of this newspaper, after they had taken it for three years, to continue taking the paper so long as the publisher wanted them to take it and pay for it.

Dear Abby

Notch-year babies raise another cry
By Abigail Van Buren
© 1983 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR READERS: It all started when I received a letter that read in part: "If you are drawing Social Security and were born in 1917, 1918, 1919, 1920 or 1921 (called 'the notch years'), you are being unjustly penalized by receiving lower benefits than those born prior to and after the above-mentioned years. For example, if you worked until you were 65 before starting to draw Social Security, you are receiving about $100 less in your monthly check than those born before 1917 or after 1921." — NOTCH-YEAR BABY

I checked with a spokesperson at Social Security who informed me that the facts in that letter were correct, so I ran it on Sept. 5 (1983), adding: "Your congressman is your elected representative. Let him know that you want this inequity corrected."

On Sept. 13, Rep. J.J. Pickle, chairman of the Social Security subcommittee of the House Ways and Means Committee, made the following comments, which were inserted in the Congressional Record: "My colleagues, and especially 'Dear Abby' readers, one thing we have learned in the past week is that something written in 'Dear Abby' is faster than a telegram and more powerful than the evening news. When 'Dear Abby' says write to your congressman, people do not just listen, they act. Unfortunately, the letter on the Social Security notch in a recent 'Dear Abby' column was partially wrong and somewhat misleading."

Readers, for the record, I was correct in stating that those born from 1917 through 1921—the "notch years"—are being unjustly penalized by receiving lower retirement benefits than those born prior to the above-mentioned years. But Mr. Pickle was right, I was incorrect in stating that those born in the notch years would receive lower benefits than those born after 1921. The fact is, everyone born after 1921 will be unjustly penalized by receiving lower benefits than those born before 1917.

In a column dated for release Sept. 26, I ran a detailed explanation of my original item. I have since received a blizzard of letters from legislators and their constituents concerning this issue. Some samples:

I received a copy of a letter written by the late Sen. Henry M. Jackson to a constituent, dated Oct. 14, 1981. It read in part:

"In order to control potential 'runaway' benefits that would overcompensate Social Security beneficiaries for inflation, the Congress altered the manner in which initial benefits are computed. Unfortunately, the new benefit formula blatantly discriminates against Social Security recipients born after 1916, since they will receive substantially lower benefits." (The italics are mine.)

After my column of Sept. 5 appeared, I heard from Rep. Clarence D. Long, D-Md.:

"Dear Abby: I was delighted to read your column bringing the Social Security problem to the public's attention. Don't back down. You were right. I have been pressing for years to correct this inequity. In fact, I was the first member of Congress to introduce a measure to resolve that problem."

Rep. Walter B. Jones, D-N.C., wrote: "Dear Abby: Nothing since the controversy over gun control has prompted more mail and telephone calls. Our office has been inundated! I am aware of this inequity, and as a member of Congress, I have sponsored two or more bills to rectify this inequity."

From Edward R. Roybal, congressman from California and chairman of the Select Committee on Aging, came this message:

"As the chairman of the Select Committee on Aging, I must agree with the letter writer who is upset by the considerable differences in benefits paid to persons simply because one reached age 65 in 1981 while the other reached 65 in 1982."

"I am convinced that although we needed to correct a problem in the old benefit formula, it was not necessary to reduce benefit levels for people born after 1916. Consequently, I have introduced HR 4093, which guarantees that persons born in or after 1917 will receive a benefit which is equal to the benefits paid to those who were born in 1916."

I asked for a copy of Roybal's bill, which he promptly sent. After reading it, I telephoned him and asked, "Won't your bill be costly to the taxpayers?" He replied, "Yes, but money paid to our senior citizens will be pumped right back into the economy because they have to spend their Social Security checks in order to survive—unlike the younger generation who are saving for a rainy day."

I agree with Rep. Roybal. Our senior citizens should be treated at least fairly, if not generously, in their retirement years. For them it is already raining!

If you agree with me, let your elected representative know that Abby was right when she said there is an inequity, and you want it corrected.

Counselor's Corner

Concentration becomes an art lost to us

A large number of people today share one particular interest, one that has been too long ignored — concentration, restoring use of memory and recall.

In counseling a patient last week, I became aware that this person was not using memo. or recall resources. This person needed a list and steps to follow to accomplish each day's expectations. I suggestion that this person rely on her cognitive abilities to be aware what needed to be done.

Our society is facing a crisis today. Unless we learn to concentrate, we're going to lose the ability to perform tasks, make love or complete a signments, much less have fun. But describing concentration is as difficult as defining love.

Athletes must concentrate, their actions depend on it. John Brodie, ex - professional quarterback of the San Francisco 49ers, said once that players can't be worrying about the past or the future or some other extraneous event. They must be able to respond in the here and now. I believe we all have the ability to concentrate naturally, but we may lose it as we grow older.

Adam Smith, author of the book "Powers of the Mind" maintains that total concentration fulfills a deep human need and that the craving for it explains why people take up mountain climbing, under - water research, auto racing — all activities that demand single - minded attention.

Martha Ellen Hughes writes "whether awake or asleep, the brain is always being bombarded with stimuli. How to cope with the information it receives is the problem. The brain must decide what needs attention and what can be ignored."

How do we develop the ability to concentrate? Perhaps it begins by being concerned about ourselves. Students have a tough chore in keeping up with their school assignments and homework. Sometimes they have trouble concentrating. They'd rather play basketball, telephone a friend or watch television. For most of us, it's too easy to think elsewhere than on our present responsibility. We need to learn to have respect for ourselves.

It's also important to be concerned about another person, the one in our presence, their well being may depend on our effort to give them attention, recognition, praise and an empathetic response. Whenever someone makes a request, let's concentrate on them long enough to take the order. That's respect.

Some of us use reminders. When I want to do something, I jot it down in order not to forget it because it's important. When we fail to concentrate well, it's not because it's a built - in inadequacy. We have probably overloaded our capacity to think clearly. We need to decide our priorities and see them through. We can do this by setting realistic goals. Our minds can handle that kind of information. As we feel an accomplishment, we become confident in completing more the next day.

Keep your workspace sacred to yourself. This is a place to work, not goof off. Be responsible. Do a good job. Perform as you've agreed. The whole business depends on your input. Rely on your own judgment. Guessing will break down concentration. Once you have put your mind to a task, be steady, consistent and see it to completion. You're available and your mental effort is reliable. Believe it and do it.

Do unpleasant jobs first. Permitting procrastination can interfere with your performance. Admitting you began in error can result in less expense and time wasted. In concentration, it's best to not become bothered by other matters. Omit trivia.

Take on one task at a time. This attack plan keeps our concentration on the task in order for the performance to be appropriate. Now the end product will be as expected, matching the blueprint.

Some destructive forces break into concentration. Dr. James K. Weatherly, a Houston psychologist, believes that the "neurotic" personality suffers from what can be described as too much concentration — an obsessive fixation on one small detail. That's the reason we have coffee breaks on the job. A few moments of brain rest can bring back a higher level of performance and a job well done.

An inability to concentrate is usually the result of anxiety — lack of self - esteem, self doubt, a fear of insecurities. The severity isn't always a factor. Psychological problems don't have to be severe to interfere to attentiveness.

Loneliness, nervousness, worrying, striving too hard for results definitely destroy one's concentration. The best method to use in a concentrated focusing is the now — present time. We have the strength to do anything. Stay out of the way of our minds and meaningful things happen.

The Indian philosopher Krishnamurti is quoted advising, "Let the mind gather strength by itself; don't force it. As the soil renews itself during the wintertime, so, when the mind is allowed to be quiet, it renews itself..."

As we disarm the brain, believe it has the right to give us accurate guidance which we have learned. Concentration is a good resource in the process of responding in the here and now.

Turnaround for Chargers

Dallas runs out of miracles

SAN DIEGO (AP) — The Chargers' club is gone from the San Diego Chargers' clubhouse, replaced by a feeling that the worst is over.

"It was turnaround time," Coach Don Coryell said after San Diego snapped a four-game losing streak Sunday with a shocking 24-23 National Football League victory over the Dallas Cowboys.

"It's a great feeling. Seems like it's been ages since everyone has been happy," said quarterback Ed Luther, who shook off a nightmarish season and produced his best effort.

Ignited by their first return of a blocked punt for a touchdown in 21 years, the Chargers got a Dan Fouts-like effort from Luther, who completed 26 of 43 passes for 340 yards and one touchdown.

The loss knocked the Cowboys, now 9-2, into a first-place tie with the Washington Redskins for the lead in the NFL Eastern Division. San Diego, still last in the AFC West, is 4-7.

Rookie Derrie Nelson helped the Chargers roll up a 24-6 lead with his 21-yard first-quarter return of a blocked Danny White punt for San Diego's first touchdown.

"They came out to play and we were ripe for the picking," said Cowboys' running back Tony Dorsett, the main target of San Diego's inspired and swarming defense. He was held to 58 yards in 17 carries.

"We knew if we could stop him we could shut down a lot of what they do," said defensive end Richard Ackersman.

White saw it from a different standpoint.

"We lost this one in the first half," said White, who nearly pulled off another patented Cowboy comeback. "It was a lack of execution, not a lack of emotion. It was a lousy, stinking rotten game." White fired three touchdown passes, two in the fourth quarter, but San Diego's defense held when it had to.

The margin of victory for the Chargers was Rafael Septien's missed extra point late in the second quarter.

"It was the first time I was wearing long cleats and they got caught in the ground. It was freaky thing," he said.

With Fouts out almost a month with an injured shoulder, Luther and San Diego's offense has struggled, scoring only two touchdowns in the last three games.

"We had a great game plan and we shot the works," said Luther, a four-year pro making his fourth start.

Chuck Muncie's 2-yard touchdown run gave San Diego a 14-0 lead before White hit Drew Pearson on a 16-yard scoring pass play with 1:45 left in the first half.

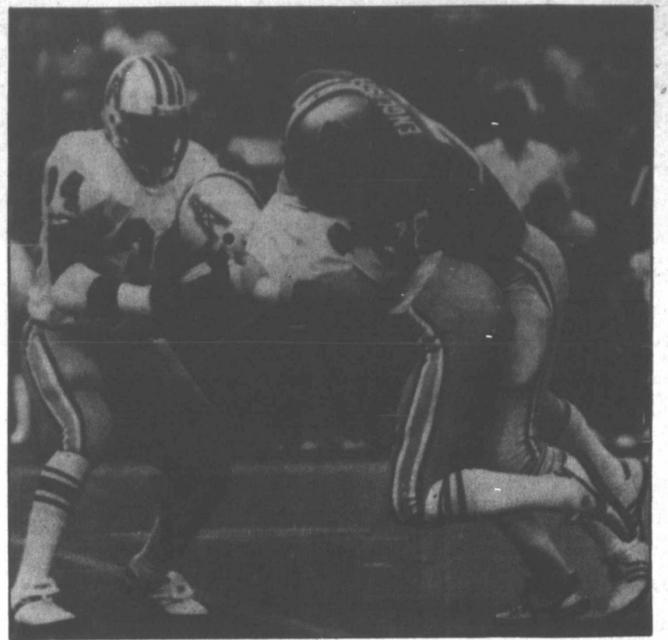

Instead of playing it safe and sitting on the lead, San Diego went to the air on four consecutive plays, reaching the Dallas 17, where Rolf Benirschke booted a 37-yard field goal with eight seconds remaining for a 17-6 halftime lead.

At halftime, Coryell said he reminded the Chargers of a bitter loss to the Cowboys in 1980 after leading 24-14. "We reminded ourselves that they are a great comeback team. The game was not over."

Luther's 18-yard TD pass to backup tight end Pete Hololan made it 24-6 less than four minutes into the second half.

Then it was the Cowboys' turn. After Septien booted a 37-yard field goal, White rifled fourth quarter TD passes to Tony Hill on a 35-yard scoring play and to tight end Billy Joe DuPree, from four yards out with eight minutes to go.

But the Chargers let the Cowboys have the ball for only one more series after that.

Cotton Bowl has Georgia on its mind

DALLAS (AP) — The Cotton Bowl apparently will have to settle on Georgia as the guest team in its annual New Years Day Classic.

Action taken Sunday in a conference hookup between representatives of Michigan and Ohio State indicated that the winner of next Saturday's game will go to the Sugar Bowl as an opponent for Auburn.

The Cotton Bowl also had wanted the winner of the Michigan-Ohio State game and a source close to the Cotton Bowl said the classic, which will be played Jan. 2, will have the Southeast Conference runnerup Bulldogs, who have a 8-1-1 mark this season, as the guest team to oppose the Southwest Conference champion.

A source close to the Cotton Bowl said that Georgia was the fall back choice in case one of the two Big Ten teams couldn't be courted.

Georgia does not play this week, and officially can't sign with a bowl until 6 p.m. Saturday.

Georgia coach Vince Dooley said Sunday night the team is looking forward to an appearance in the Cotton Bowl if they are invited.

"I have talked to our seniors, and they have expressed to me if they had an opportunity, they would like to go to the Cotton Bowl," Georgia coach Vince Dooley said in a telephone interview.

The reasons, he said, are: "One, they want to go to a game New Years Day or Jan. 2, and secondly, with the expectation of Texas being the opponent, that would be a good challenge for them."

Texas was rated No. 2 in the country and Georgia was No. 4, before Saturday's 13-7 loss to No. 3 Auburn.

Iowa, another team in the Cotton Bowl picture, apparently is headed for the Gator Bowl.

Official invitations cannot be made until next Saturday.

A Sugar Bowl invitation to Michigan or Ohio State would mean Southern Methodist probably would have to settle for the Sun or Liberty Bowl.

The Liberty Bowl has a $600,000 plus payoff, and may be the bowl the Mustangs would choose if they could not receive a major bowl bid.

SMU Athletic Director Bob Hitch said Sugar Bowl representative Jim Higgins told him that "SMU is still the second team in the Sugar Bowl behind the Michigan-Ohio State winner."

"If they can't get 'em and we keep winning we should get a chance to get to New Orleans," Higgins, the incoming president of the Sugar Bowl, said. "I was impressed with SMU. I think Auburn-SMU would be a good game."

However, Hitch admits, "It (a major bowl bid) doesn't look good for us."

The No. 7-rated Mustangs, who beat Texas Tech 33-7 Saturday, are 8-1 with their only loss coming to unbeaten and No. 2-ranked Texas, which survived TCU 20-13 Saturday.

If Texas defeats either Baylor or Texas A&M in its final two games then the Longhorns would become the host team in the Cotton Bowl.

SMU has games left against Arkansas in Little Rock and Houston in Tokyo (The Mirage Bowl) on Nov. 26.

Two Texas losses and two SMU victories would put the Mustangs in the Cotton Bowl and create all kinds of havoc among the holiday classics.

Mustang Coach Bobby Collins said if the Mustangs win the rest of their games and don't get invited to a major bowl "I'd use whatever pull I have to fight for a playoff system."

"How can you deny us if we win? How can you not take us?"

The Bluebonnet Bowl in Houston has increased its interest in Baylor with Missouri as a possible opponent. The Sun and Independence Bowls also have been looking hard at the Bears, who play in Austin Saturday.

Baylor has losses to SMU and Texas Tech and was tied by Texas A&M.

Georgia is 8-1-1 and Iowa is 8-2 with victories over Penn State and Ohio State.

Luck big factor; Oilers snap skid

HOUSTON (AP) — The grocery sack masks started coming off the heads of several embarrassed Houston Oiler fans in the third quarter.

Suddenly, it was okay to be an Oiler fan again.

A sign that read "I'm Mad Too Bum" was removed.

The Houston Oilers had finally won a game, beating Detroit 27-17 Sunday to end a 17-game losing streak, and all was right with the world — at least for one week.

"What can I say? Welcome back to the NFL," Oiler interim Coach Chuck Studley said. "If we play like we played today, we'd be rough on anyone. We literally rose from the dead after the way we were beaten last week."

Studley was commenting in a cheerful Oiler dressing room after second year quarterback Oliver Luck, in his first pro start, threw two touchdown passes and the Oilers won their first game of the season for a 1-10 record.

A sign that read, "Houston Oilers, the best 0-10 team in NFL," no longer applied.

Victories have been a scarce commodity since former Coach Bum Phillips departed after the 1980 season. The Oilers had lost three overtime games this season and were flattened 55-14 by Cincinnati Nov. 6.

But on Sunday, the victory was sweet.

"They didn't give it to us, we took it," said Studley, who got his first victory as head coach since replacing Ed Biles on Oct. 10. "The team will never forget the game. They gave me the game ball but I told them they would all get a game ball to remember this victory by."

The embarrassment of losing shifted from Houston to Detroit, 5-6 after winning four of five games.

"You know it's going to happen but you don't want to be the team they beat (to end the streak)," said Detroit quarterback Eric

Hipple. "It's like everyone will point at you and say 'Oh, you're the fools who lost to Houston.'"

Luck, showing poise beyond his experience, completed 18 of 26 passes for 189 yards, including a pair of 13-yard touchdowns to rookie tight ends Mike McCloskey and Chris Dressel.

Florian Kempf kicked field goals of 47 and 21 yards and rookie fullback Larry Moriarty catapulted three yards for a touchdown after he appeared to be stopped at the two.

Billy Sims leaped one yard for a Detroit touchdown and Ed Murray's 35-yard field goal netted the Lions a 10-10 halftime tie. Quarterback Gary Danielson hit James Jones with a three-yard touchdown pass for a 17-10 Lion lead in the third quarter.

Then it was Oiler time. Moriarty's touchdown put Houston ahead 24-17 and after Bill Kay intercepted a Danielson pass, Luck completed a string of 10 consecutive pass completions leading to Kempf's 21-yarder.

Sims, showing his frustration after the interception, smashed his helmet to the ground on the sidelines.

"I was just frustrated because of the interception and the way the game was going," said Sims, who rushed 105 yards on 20 carries and caught nine passes for 90 yards.

Earl Campbell showed no after-effects of his trade demands last week, rushing 107 yards on 28 carries. But he said he still wants to be traded.

But Luck is happy in his present address.

"There were not that many checkoffs today," Luck said. "We knew what they'd do defensively. It was mostly a matter of us executing. I feel elation, excitement. Success is temporary though, so you have to enjoy it while you can. Maybe my bio-rhythms were up today."

Schramm confirms report

Cowboy owner may sell out

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Oilman Clint Murchison, who has owned the Dallas Cowboys since their inception in 1960, is considering selling the National Football League team, according to published reports.

Tex Schramm, Cowboys' president and general manager, confirmed Sunday after a game against the San Diego Chargers that the team may be put on the block, the Fort Worth Star-Telegram, The Dallas Morning News and the Dallas Times Herald reported today.

A group of Dallas businessmen has offered to pay as much as $35 million to $40 million for the club, the Star-Telegram reported.

Murchison has held preliminary discussions with at least two parties interested in buying the Cowboys for a price ranging between $50 million and $60 million, the Times Herald reported.

Murchison, 60, who has been chairman of the board of the franchise since its inception in 1960, is in failing health, Schramm said.

Murchison is anxious to settle his estate with the family of his brother, John D. Murchison, who died in 1979.

"Reason No. 1 is Clint's physical condition," Schramm said. "He wants to get everything in order with the survivors of his brother, who was also his business partner."

"There's no guarantee that he'll be selling. But that's one of the alternatives being considered at the present time."

Murchison controls 90 percent of the team's stock.

Although Schramm refused to identify the bidders, the Star-Telegram quoted sources within the team as saying they are four or five Dallas businessmen.

Schramm also said he might be involved as a partner and that preserving the team's structure would be a condition of the sale.

"People have been talking. I'll say that," Schramm said. "But at this stage it's very preliminary. Nothing will happen on this for a while."

Former co-owner Bedford Wynne of Dallas, who sold his stock in the Cowboys in 1981, told the Star-Telegram that he did not know who the buyers might be.

"I've heard rumors, and I've known some people who might be interested in it," he said.

Murchison paid about $600,000 for the expansion franchise in 1960. Coach Tom Landry and Schramm have been with the club since its inception.

A report Sunday by CBS said Murchison was asking $60 million for the Cowboys. Schramm told the News. "That's just speculation."

Rams going after lead

ATLANTA (AP) — Los Angeles fights for a share of the division lead and Atlanta fights for survival when the two National Conference West rivals meet tonight on national television.

The Rams, 6-4, need a victory to retain a share of the division lead with the San Francisco 49ers, who defeated New Orleans 27-0 Sunday to drop the Saints one game off the pace in the torrid West race.

Atlanta carries a 4-6 record into the game and will remain in the division cellar, but could close to within one game of the Rams and Saints and stay two games behind the 49ers with a victory.

Despite the records, Atlanta is a 1½-point favorite in the Monday Night Football telecast (ABC), set for a 9 p.m. EST kickoff in Atlanta-Fulton County Stadium. The Falcons were assured of a sellout of just over 60,000 when a local television station gobbled up some 1,000 unsold tickets Friday so a local blackout would not be in effect.

The Falcons have lost all four of their games within the division this season, including a 27-21 setback at the hands of the Rams four weeks ago that built Los Angeles' commanding advantage in the series to 25-6-2.

Coach John Robinson of the Rams reviewed the films of the initial contest last week and said that "looking at the first quarter again makes you want to vomit." The Rams were dominated in the first period before claiming the victory.

NUMB ARMS, LEGS
Danger Signals

There may be misalignment of vertebrae in the spine causing pressure on nerves, yet the patient experiences no pain in the back. Instead, a variety of sensations may be felt in other parts of the body. These include tingling, tightness, hot spots, cold spots, crawling sensations, electric shock sensations, stinging, burning, and others. Here are nine critical symptoms involving back pain or strange sensations which are usually the forerunners of more serious conditions. Any one of these usually spells back trouble.

- (1) Paresthesias (see above) (2) Headaches (3) Painful joints (4) Numbness in the arms or hands (5) Loss of sleep (6) Stiffness in the neck (7) Pain between the shoulders (8) Stiffness of pain in lower back (9) Numbness or pain in the legs.

These signals indicate that your body is being robbed of normal nerve function. Until this function is restored, you will, in some degree, be incapacitated. The longer you wait to seek help, the worse the condition will become. Don't wait! Should you experience any of these danger signals...call for in Depth consultation in Layman's terms.

FINGER CIRCLES

The wearing of rings dates back to prehistoric times when men wore rings of woven grass. Historians believe that prehistoric man feared that his soul would leave his body unless it was physically bound inside him. As a result, he wore grass rings about his ankles, waist ties and fingers to protect his soul. Later, the ancient Egyptians wore rings as symbols of eternity and regeneration. Rings were called "Finger Circles." Believing in an unending life for man's spirit, the Egyptians placed rings on the fingers of their dead to symbolize rebirth. Today, although meanings may differ, we continue to wear rings as symbols of love and eternity.

Women priests: bishops offer solace but gives little hope

WASHINGTON (AP) — America's Catholic bishops, while expressing sympathy for women who desire leadership roles in the church, are raising no hopes that female priests will become part of the clergy anytime soon.

At the end of a weekend conference of bishops and Catholic women, Bishop Pierre DuMaine of San Jose, Calif., noted on Sunday that Pope John Paul II clearly opposes the ordination of women and the church's long history tends to weigh against it.

"I'm not optimistic or sanguine that a 2,000-year tradition can be turned around 180 degrees very quickly," he said.

The weekend gathering preceded today's opening of the annual meeting of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops, at which nearly 300 church leaders will consider questions including the possible need for a "pastoral letter" aimed at reassuring disenchanted Catholic women.

During the weekend conference, most of the main speakers supported the idea of wider church roles for Catholic women, contending that limiting the priesthood and other leadership offices to men rose in the second century and later, not through the Christian gospels.

None of the main speakers was a bishop, and none of about 75 bishops in attendance said outright that women should be ordained.

Still, it was to American bishops that the pope made his pointed September remark "that the church's teaching on the exclusion of women from priestly ordination is extraneous to the issue of discrimination and that it is linked rather to Christ's own design for the priesthood."

The pope also told the bishops to withdraw all support from anyone promoting ordination of women.

With that background, Bishop Joseph Imesch, chairman of the group's Committee on Women in Society and the Church, was asked why the weekend meeting was taking place at all.

"I don't think the Holy Father said don't talk to women," he replied. "I think there is a big difference between support and dialogue."

"We're not starting a movement to reopen the question" of women's roles in the church, he said. "We're acknowledging the fact that it is open at a scholarly and theological level."

Some women at the meeting questioned the value of the all-male bishops writing a pastoral letter on women, even if it is phrased in the most sympathetic and supportive terms.

Glenn likes some polls

By EVANS WITT Associated Press Writer WASHINGTON (AP) — John Glenn likes to talk about polls, but he is very careful just which polls he brings up in stump speeches.

The Ohio Senator seems to favor the polls that show him making the strongest showing of any Democratic presidential hopeful in the hypothetical 1984 election contests against President Reagan.

But there is a whole category of polls Glenn doesn't mention much. Those are generally the ones showing the race between him and Walter Mondale, Alan Cranston, Gary Hart and the rest of the Democratic field.

You see, Glenn doesn't do very well in many of those polls of Democrats' preferences for their party's nominee.

A recent series of state polls by the Gallup Organization showed Glenn far behind Mondale in nine of ten states. Only in his home state of Ohio did Glenn manage to take the frontrunner's spot away from the former vice president among registered Democrats. The ten states have 1,902 delegates, almost half of the Democratic total.

And if he doesn't win the hearts, minds and votes of his own party's faithful, Glenn won't ever have the chance to test his strength in a general election against Reagan.

The matchups with Reagan in those same ten states — all big, all important in the 1984 political season — show the weakness of Glenn's whole argument that the polls prove he is more "electable" than Mondale.

Glenn's edge over Mondale isn't much — five percentage points at the most in any of the states. In Michigan and Florida, for example, Glenn is essentially tied with Reagan, while Mondale is slightly behind. In Pennsylvania, Glenn does a bit better than Mondale, but both are well ahead of Reagan.

In the other states — California, New Jersey, Illinois, North Carolina, Texas and New York — there is essentially no difference between Glenn and Mondale's performance against the GOP incumbent.

An ABC News-Washington Post poll released last week confirmed those state findings at the national level.

In the wake of events in Grenada and Lebanon, Reagan and Glenn were essentially tied. Reagan, 48 and Glenn, 45 Mondale was a bit farther behind Reagan, trailing 44 percent to 50 percent in the ABC-Post survey.

Statistically, there is no difference between Mondale and Glenn's performance in such a poll. The sampling error margins alone could account for those gaps.

Thus, Glenn's performance against Reagan can only be considered very marginally better than Mondale's showing.

No clues in killing of union official

COATZACALCOS, Mexico (AP) — Police so far have no clues in the murder of a top union official who was shot down on his doorstep by gunmen here.

A jailed oil workers union leader, in an interview Sunday predicted there would be "more assassinations" of "witnesses to the crimes" he claims were committed by the top union leadership.

Rogelio Perez Castillo, Education Secretary of the union, was shot down on his doorstep after answering the doorbell at his home in this oil-producing center Friday.

Victor Manuel Contreras, the justice of the peace investigating the murder, said Saturday night that the court has not uncovered "the slightest evidence" in the case.
