Billie Sol Estes freed from federal prison

BIG SPRING, Texas (AP) — Flim-flam artist Billie Sol Estes, once known as a financial wizard and a confidant of Lyndon Johnson, was released from prison today after vowing that his wheeling and dealing days are over.

"I'm ready to go, ready to get out," Estes said in an interview in prison. "I'm just going to live a day at a time and not worry about tomorrow."

"My values have completely changed."

Upon release from the minimum security Big Spring Federal Prison Camp, Estes was met by his wife Patsy and eldest daughter Pam, 35, whose book, "Billie Sol," is due for publication in early December.

Estes will spend his first 30 days out of prison at a Salvation Army halfway house in Abilene, a city in which several members of his family now live.

The charismatic, flamboyant con-man, 58, has spent almost 11 years behind prison walls since his first

Film-flam artist says his days of wheeling and dealing are over conviction in 1962 for federal mail fraud and conspiracy to defraud and subsequent 1979 convictions for fraud and concealing assets.

"I seen myself as a Robin Hood back then," he said in a prison interview last week. "I'd take from the rich and give to the poor."

"I heard the cry of the poor and I answered the cry of the poor."

A lifelong financial contributor to Democratic politicians, including Johnson, Estes said his personal fortune once totaled as much as $400 million.

His financial empire collapsed after disclosures that its assets were mostly paper. Creditors claimed Estes owed them $38 million. The federal government once had $21 million in tax liens against him for income on non-existent fertilizer tanks on West Texas farms and from government storage contracts.

Estes contends he now is broke.

While admitting no specific wrongdoing, Estes said it was his compulsiveness that got him in trouble and it is that same character flaw that concerns him even now.

"I'm just one drink away from being a drunk and just one deal away from being back in prison," he said.

"I'm a compulsive person. I'm a compulsive drinker and, if I smoked, I'd be a compulsive smoker. Anything I've done, it's been compulsive."

Warden John Allman describes Estes as a "difficult, complex and brilliant" man who may not be able to overcome his compulsiveness.

"He has at least three personalities that I've been able to identify," he said in an interview.

"One of those is a very dedicated Christian individual. He is also a very manipulative, excitable con-man who loves to get involved in anything that has an aura of intrigue to it.

"Thirdly, he is an intelligent, capable businessman who can perceive things very readily."

Allman said he believes that "deep down, Billie wants to go straight, to be a good person, a good family man, devoted to his friends."

The warden said he is aware of Estes' concern that his compulsive nature could get him back in trouble.

"I share that concern," Allman said.

Always an enigma, Estes, in a prison interview last week, said he could not have done what he did alone and implied that he "took the rap" for a number of unidentified associates.

But he said he may yet "put it all together" in a book, a movie or a

Missile foes spray paint on British defense boss

LONDON (AP) — Student demonstrators sprayed Defense Secretary Michael Heseltine's face and hair with red paint today, a day after Britain received the first of Europe's new cruise nuclear missiles.

Heseltine, arriving to address a Conservative students' meeting at Manchester University, was greeted by some 200 demonstrators. As police tried to escort him into the student union offices, someone in the crowd sprayed him with red paint.

Reporters on the scene said Heseltine was shaken by the incident but did not appear to be hurt. He was taken into an anteroom by detectives who cleaned him up.

Other protesters chained themselves to the perimeter fence at Greenham Common air base, 50 miles west of London, where the missiles arrived Monday, and sat down in front of its gates. Police said 72 were arrested.

At Faslane Bay, Scotland, three demonstrators invaded the naval base where Britain's nuclear-armed submarines dock. They climbed a 150-foot radio antenna and were refusing to come down, police said.

In central Australia, about 250 women gathered today outside the U.S.-Australia Joint Intelligence Facility at Pine Gap, demanding that the base be closed.

Missile opponents in Britain have vowed to intensify their protests against the cruise rockets, charging Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher with handing Britain's destiny to the United States and turning the nation into a "saturation bombing" target by accepting the American weapons.

Mrs. Thatcher, addressing a financiers' meeting Monday night in London, countered: "The United States is our ultimate defensive shield, the guarantor of Western freedom and the best hope for the world's oppressed."

Avoiding headline anti-Soviet rhetoric, she said the missiles could be withdrawn quickly if the superpowers reached an arms control agreement. She vowed Britain was ready to pursue "sensible dialogue" with East bloc nations and "in that spirit" would visit Hungary early next year.

Police said they arrested eight demonstrators outside Parliament Monday and another 30 who later blocked the road near the London Lord Mayor's official residence where Mrs. Thatcher spoke in defense of the rockets.

The weapons were the first of 572 cruise and Pershing 2 missiles to be deployed in five West European nations through 1988 in response to the Soviet buildup of SS-20 missiles.

The first cruises in Italy and Pershings in West Germany were scheduled to follow imminently.

The Soviets have threatened to leave the talks in Geneva, Switzerland, if the NATO deployment proceeds and say they will install more missiles in response.

"Mr. Heseltine and the British government have handed the destiny of the British people to President Ronald Reagan," Joan Ruddock, chairman of Britain's Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament, declared.

She announced plans for weekly rallies next month, including a Dec. 11 mass demonstration at Greenham, where protesters are threatening to hurl themselves before mobile transporters attempting to move the missiles.

"We can't stop helicopters and airplanes," said Dr. Lynn Jones, one of some 100 protesters living at makeshift camps around the Greenham base. "But they're not going to be able to get them out of here by road. They're effectively locked up in jail."

The missiles' portability is supposed to guard them against a knockout Soviet strike.

Opposition Labor Party leader Neil Kinnock, whose party was trounced in June elections after advocating unilateral nuclear disarmament, said Britain now invited "saturation bombing."

"The installation of cruise makes Britain a more dangerous place than it was yesterday," Kinnock said in a television interview. "This is against not only our interests, but against the interests of the whole world."

The cruise missiles join U.S. F-111 nuclear bombers and Poseidon nuclear submarines already based in Britain.

North part of Cyprus declared independent

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — The Turkish-occupied northern part of war-divided Cyprus declared its independence today and named itself the Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus.

The Cypriot government, based in the Greek sector of the Mediterranean island, immediately called for an emergency meeting of the United Nations Security Council and protested the unilateral move by Turkish Cypriots.

In Greece, the government said Premier Andreas Papandreu was meeting in emergency session with his armed forces commanders following the announcement from Nicosia.

The action was expected to sharpen the conflict between Greece and Turkey over the future of the island that was partitioned into Greek and Turkish sectors after Turkish forces invaded the Cyprus in 1974.

The official Turkish Cypriot Bayrak radio said the independence decision was reached during a special session of the legislative assembly of the self-proclaimed Turkish Cypriot Federated State.

U.S. Navy captain gunned down by terrorists in Athens street

ATHENS, Greece (AP) — A U.S. Navy captain serving with the American military mission to Greece was shot and killed today by a gunman who pulled alongside the officer's car on a motorcycle.

The American was identified as Capt. George Tsantes, 53, of New York City, chief of the naval section in the Joint U.S. Military Advisory Group in Greece, a U.S. Embassy spokesman said.

Embassy spokesman Peter Synodis said Tsantes, an American of Greek descent, arrived in Greece in April 1983. He was married with three children, and had served a previous tour in the Greek capital.

A police spokesman said two men on a motorcycle came up alongside Tsantes' official car, a black Buick, when it stopped a traffic light at a junction on a busy north of the city center.

One of the men on the motorcycle "fired at least seven shots with a .45 caliber gun," said the spokesman, who declined to be identified.

Tsantes was hit four times in the neck and chest, and one bullet entered his heart, said the spokesman, adding, "He must have died almost immediately."

Police said there had been no claim of responsibility for the attack.

The shooting took place at 7:30 a.m. (1:30 a.m. EST) as Tsantes was driving from his home in the northern suburb of Psychiko to his office at the U.S. Embassy in downtown Athens.

"Tsantes' driver, identified as Nikos Valoutsas, was seriously wounded in the attack, the police said."

Drug task force gets organized

Terry Braddock was elected chairman and Joe Van Zandt co-chairman of the newly created Drug and Alcohol Abuse Task Force at a meeting Monday night at Pampa Middle School.

Several committees were formed to help combat the misuse of drugs and alcohol through the efforts of the task force. These include parent patrol and surveillance, speaker's bureau, literature and information distribution, fund raising, crisis line, publicity, telephone and school liaison.

Persons interested in working on any of the committees should contact Braddock or Van Zandt.

Committee reports will be discussed at the next meeting of the organization at 7 p.m. Thursday, Dec. 15, at PMS.

Using the theme "Get Involved," Donnie Clemmer of KGRO introduced the speakers at the meeting, which was designed to initiate community efforts in education and prevention of drug and alcohol abuse problems.

Gray County Deputy Sheriff Michael Wopperer encouraged support of law enforcement in such matters and urged citizens to coordinate efforts with the local police and other law enforcement personnel. He asked them to report any suspicious activity to the proper agencies. He noted calls may be made anonymously to Crime Stoppers at 669-2222.

"Let the judges and prosecutors and the Legislature know you want stricter sentences," Wopperer said.

In 1980 $79 billion was spent on drugs in the United States, he said. Locally, the law enforcement staffs for the county and city were understaffed and could not adequately patrol this area as needed to combat the problem as well as it should be done, he said.

Braddock spoke on alcoholism, saying alcohol is the most abused drug in the nation today. Alcohol related accidents are the leading killer of youth 15 to 21 years of age, he said. He said alcohol problems can occur as the result of a lack of self-esteem and a lack of skills in decision making, communication, handling stress and being a parent.

"Often less than one minute in 24 hours is shared in useful dialog between a parent and a child," he said. "Parents should be involved and be at home."

Bob Schneider of the Texas War on Drugs and radio station KQTY in Borger, described the harmful effects of drugs, including the chemical THC in marijuana.

"Youth are attracted to the drug culture not through peer pressure but by peer attraction - wanting to be attractive to others," he said.

Schneider urged people to bring God back into the home and school, become committed to learning about drugs and work to combat them. He also suggested the family unit should be strengthened with love.

"Hugs are better than drugs," he said.

Services offered in Pampa to assist those desiring help include Narcotics Anonymous, which meets at 316 N. Ward from 4 to 5:30 p.m. every Sunday. The Information and Referral Service is available by calling 669-9323 any weekday.

Vickie Moose, organizer of the meeting, announced a video tape of the nationally televised production of "The Chemical People" could be borrowed by calling her at 665-1027.

Mrs. Moose reported churches, civic groups, school personnel and community leaders had been contacted to help with the community-wide project. She urged those attending the meeting to involve others.

minor accidents

MONDAY, November 14
7:30 a.m. — An unknown vehicle struck a 1978 Pontiac, owned by Charlene Lisenbee Klie, 1507 N. Sumner, in a private parking lot in the 1300 block of North Hobart. Police reported the driver left the scene.
11:07 a.m. — A 1980 Chevrolet, driven by Mary Wanetta Bayless Hill, 32, 1936 Lea, collided with a 1983 Ford, driven by Kenneth Ray Banks, 20, Camp Lajune, N.C., at the intersection of Hobart and Somerville. Hill was cited for following too closely, an expired inspection sticker and failure to show proof of liability insurance. Banks was cited for not carrying his driver's license.
5:12 p.m. — A 1966 Ford, driven by Ruthie Cook Teague, 19, 524 Lefors, collided with a 1979 tractor, driven by George William Quarles, 54, 616 Bradley Dr., in the 500 block of East Browning. A juvenile passenger in the Teague vehicle was transported to Coronado Community Hospital for treatment of minor injuries. Teague was cited for following too closely and failure to show proof of liability insurance. Quarles was cited for failure to use proper safety equipment.
5:15 p.m. — A 1976 Ford, driven by Robert A. Lowrance, 46, 937 S. Nelson, collided with a 1968 Ford, driven by Dorothy Finningan Gardner, 65, 1050 N. Wills, in the parking lot of the Coronado Center. No citations were issued.

non-profit historical endeavor which he said would be financed by a "foundation," he declined to identify.
"I've always done the time when something went wrong," he said.
Before his empire crumbled, Estes said, his personal fortune totaled between $150 million and $400 million and included mineral rights to a vast but deep reservoir of natural gas around his palatial home in Pecos.
He said gas sold at the time for 16 cents per thousand cubic feet and drilling would not have been profitable.
With gas priced now at $3 or $4 per thousand cubic feet, he said, his erstwhile assets would be staggering.
"I was amazed at a reporter the other day who said he'd heard I stole and hid $500,000," Estes laughed.
"Back then, I wouldn't have fooled with $500,000. Back then, it was so easy.
They never accused me of being a petty thief. Did they?"
Estes said he consented to an interview only to promote his daughter's book, which Pam described as "the story of Billie Sol Estes as seen through the eyes of his daughter."
Given a choice, he said, he would remain silent. "But if there's any way I can help her, I'm going to."

MOD donates modules for classroom

The Golden Spread Chapter of the March of Dimes Birth Defect Foundation recently presented Pampa High School with educational modules for use in classes in health, home economics, life planning, life sciences, biology or social studies at the junior high or high school level.
"These units present parenthood in a way that is relevant to the needs of young people and are also sensitive to the concerns of the community," said Quetha Hale, of Amarillo, community service representative.
"Parenthood is usually entered into without any training or preparation, and maybe this educational program will help define the responsibilities of parenthood," she said.

Black hopeful's window broken

BOSTON (AP) — Voters decided today whether to elect Boston's first black mayor while police said it was a ball bearing and not a bullet as first thought that broke a window at the crowded headquarters of black candidate Melvin King.
Meanwhile, the white front-runner, Raymond Flynn, predicted victory and proclaimed after a campaign that downplayed race in a city often marked by racial tension, "I can make Boston one city."
No one was hurt by the ball bearing late Monday night, and both King and Flynn called on Bostonians to reject violence. Police said early today there were no arrests.
Police, who originally said the window was broken by a gunshot, today attributed the damage to a ball bearing. "There is no way of telling what projected it," said Sgt. Edward Doherthy.
Meanwhile, Miami residents were also choosing a mayor today, and both candidates said the dwindling white vote could be the wild card in a race between two Hispanics. And in Santa Cruz, Calif., the City Council was expected to pick a gay mayor to succeed a socialist.
In Boston, King's workers shouted "Get down!" when the window was broken about 10:25 p.m. Monday. About 30 people were in the office at the time, not including King.
King, a 55-year-old former schoolteacher and state legislator, urged city residents to show "by coming out and voting that they don't tolerate that in the city."
Flynn, 44, who spent 13 years in the Legislature and city council, asserted, "Any kind of violence cannot be tolerated."

Lefors City Council studies ways to get marshall certified

By LARRY HOLLIS Staff Writer
LEFORS - Members of the Lefors City Council met Monday night to discuss problems of certification for the city marshall and consider equipment needs for water and sewer supply systems.
Gary McFall, who has accepted tentative employment with Lefors as city marshall, discussed problems concerning certification from the state for his law enforcement duties and raised several alternatives that could be taken.
He said current state laws require a law enforcement officer wearing a badge to take certification courses. The only exceptions allowed by law are sheriffs and constables, he said.
"We're currently in violation now," he said, according to his understanding of the laws, but discussed ways of moving toward the city's obtaining a certified law enforcement officer.
Law enforcement personnel hired by a city are allowed one year in which to enroll in and complete a state-approved certification course, McFall said. Once a person is certified, he is certified to work anywhere in the state, he said.
Some certification courses require several weeks of attendance for five to six days a week, he noted. This creates a problem for him since he currently is employed with a petroleum company which would not allow him to take that much time off to attend such a course.
McFall said he is currently working on an associate degree in law enforcement, which could substitute for a certification course. He is not certain he could obtain the degree within the year period, however, he said.

An alternative is attendance in a reserve officers school as a reserve deputy for the county, he said. But this status would require him to serve in the county sheriff's office, though he could be attached to the city as part of his duties.
Another alternative is attendance at a certification course in Clarendon, which meets two nights a week, he said. He suggested the councilmen, who recently approved themselves as deputies to assist the city marshall, could also attend and gain certification.
"All the small communities have this problem," McFall said, in getting law officers certified under state regulations.
Councilmen gave initial support to the idea of their considering attending the course at Clarendon, but also asked Mayor Ben White to look into the reserve deputy officer status.
City Attorney Mark Buzzard said another matter to be considered is questions of insurance and liability in relation to the hiring of a city marshall, dependent upon what his final employment status is. These questions need to be resolved, he said.
In other business, the mayor read letters from the state Department of Health concerning recent inspections of the city's water and sewer supply system.
The department indicated Lefors needed chlorination equipment, meters and gauges on several of the city's water wells, plus fencing around the new well, all required to meet state regulations. Councilmen authorized the seeking of bids to take care of the equipment and fencing.

The department also said chlorination was needed for the sewer system and suggested some improvements for the operation of the sewer plant. Mayor White said the improvements were already underway. Councilmen authorized seeking bids for the chlorinator.
The state inspector also said Mike Steele, Water Department Superintendent, needs to complete certification requirements for operation of the water and sewer system. Steele said he was taking steps toward obtaining certification.
Mayor White also read a letter from the Texas Railroad Commission concerning safety evaluations which indicated the commission has accepted the city's plan to take steps in correcting violations in the gas system. The mayor noted the city will be in compliance by the end of the month with the filing of a schedule indicating steps taken to correct the violations.
In other matters, councilmen voted to cast their five votes for G.W. "Bill" Hesse for election to the Gray County Tax Appraisal District and approved accounts payable.
Councilmen also were informed city insurance premiums will be raised about 5 percent. They also were told the auditor's report still is not available, which is delaying the preparation of the city budget.

Feminist leader takes stand

GRETNA, La. (AP) — Feminist Ginny Foat testified in tears that she "never met" the man she is accused of clubbing to death 18 years ago, and said her ex-husband and chief accuser once tried to strangle her.
Ms. Foat, a rising star in the National Organization for Women until she was charged in the 1965 killing of Argentine toymaker Moises Chayo, testified Monday that her ex-Marine former husband terrorized her with stories of killing and mutilation, threatened to kill her, and often beat her.

She said she did not lure Chayo from a bar to a fatal robbery.
"No, I never met this man," she said of Chayo. "I never robbed anybody. I never killed anybody."

Prosecutors were scheduled to cross-examine her today.
Asked about her 1970 breakup with John Sidote, the 42-year-old Ms. Foat said, "He said he would see me dead before I went, and he told me if I went, if he couldn't kill me, he would see me rot in jail the same as he did."

EVER STRIVING FOR TOP O' TEXAS TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Bigger the group, more costly care

A finding by researchers at Harvard medical and public health schools strikes us as a bit odd, to say the least:

Doctors who practice in large groups administer many more tests to patients with high blood pressure and charge a lot more, but their patients don't get any healthier than those who go to small - group practices or to individual physicians.

The study, as reported in The New England Journal of Medicine, seems to imply that patients are likely to get the most expensive care available, even if the extra care - and dollars - doesn't do anything for the patient. And that leads us to believe that perhaps a great many people care than they can afford, but a great deal more than they need.

The researchers studied the number of electrocardiograms, X - rays, urinalyses and other tests given 351 patients who had gone to doctors in the Boston area for the treatment of high blood pressure. During one year, group practices made up of four or more doctors give their patients an average of 6.4 tests each. The total cost for the tests averages $123 per patient for the year.

By contrast, doctors practicing alone administered an average of only 3.3 tests per patient, and charged only $71.

Doctors in small group practices (fewer than four doctors) came out with the lowest charges, at $58 each, for an average of 3.5 tests per patient.

Significantly, the researchers also found there apparently was no difference in the control of patients' blood pressure problems, regardless of the number of tests given or the amount of money charged.

The researchers themselves were not certain why large groups order more tests, but they speculated that:

Patients who go to the larger groups may do so because they want more tests; and group - practice doctors "may practice a more technical style of medicine, demonstrating adeptness at solving complex problems by using technological aids."

Patients certainly ought to be able to choose their physicians, and it's fine with us for patients who want a lot of tests to get them if they are willing to pay the price.

But a couple of questions remain, in view of two very relevant facts: Much of this nation's investment in medical testing technology is by government - owned facilities, while much of the nation's total spending for medicine comes from taxes, mainly through Medicare and Medicaid programs.

With so much tax money going for what the study seems to show are tests of no value to patients, should taxpayers have to continue to pay for them? We think not.

Uncle Tom, meet Uncle Jesse

Fritz Hollings (S.C.) and Reubin Askew (Fla) the Southerners in the Democratic presidential field, must defend themselves periodically against charges of covert racism—or at least of native insensitivity to blacks.

Along comes the Rev. Jesse Jackson and the question arises: Who's the real "racist" in the race?

Wait, let's back up a moment. Before overuse drained away much of its vital content, the word "racism" meant, roughly, "the notion that blacks must be kept in their place."

Who, in the 1984 presidential race, wants to keep blacks in their place? Let's talk first about who doesn't want to: namely, candidates who urge for blacks not less but more economic freedom, not more but less dependence on the federal government. That promptly excuses the Rev. Mr. Jackson. The Jackson program compasses more dependence, larger welfare programs, greater entitlements, an ever-expanding number of seats at the government banquet

table. The Rev. Mr. Jackson, though he is one of them, yearns to keep blacks down on the federal plantation, where they supposedly have spent so many happy days. In the old, segregated time, it was the local "Uncle Tom" who encouraged passive acceptance of the status quo. Uncle Tom, meet Uncle Jesse.

Jackson does urge blacks to one form of assertive behavior: winning political office. But this is apparently less for the sake of citizenship than of power. The more elected Jacksonites, the better Uncle Jesse's leverage in forcing through more government social programs.

The irony in all this is that Jackson came to national prominence through preaching quite a different gospel—self-help. The Jackson of PUSH (People United to Save Humanity) days bid black children say to themselves, "I am somebody."

They were to work and strive, to look their best, talk their best, do their best. Either Uncle Jesse changed his mind, disbelieved his own table. The Rev. Mr. Jackson, though he is one of them, yearns to keep blacks down on the federal plantation, where they supposedly have spent so many happy days. In the old, segregated time, it was the local "Uncle Tom" who encouraged passive acceptance of the status quo. Uncle Tom, meet Uncle Jesse.

Naturally that's not quite the way they put it. Mostly they lambaste Ronald Reagan. See the greedy rich reveling in their tax cuts! Gaze on the savagery of the Reagan budget cuts.

All taxpayers are paying more now than before the Reagan tax cut. How come food-stamp spending is $3 billion more than under Jimmy Carter, and AFDC payments $400 million higher.

Ah, well, the point is after all to win votes, not to point blacks and other minorities to a better way of life. From Jackson and most of the other would-be presidents, you don't hear what can be done to lessen government dependence and create job opportunities for blacks—unless the jobs are government make-work positions. You hear, instead, how taxes must be raised and spending increased and regulations tightened.

Uncle Jesse, Uncle Fritz, and the rest seem to reason that when the money runs short, there's an endless supply of rich people they can pluck.

In a new book, "What's Ahead for the Economy," Louis Rukeyser calls the minimum-wage law "the single most anti-youth, anti-black, anti-job law on the books of the United States of America." This, because the law makes it impossible profitably to hire an unskilled worker whose output will not match the minimum.

But don't cup your ear, waiting for Uncle Jesse's indignant demand that the minimum-wage law be abolished as one means of elevating blacks. Elevating Uncle Jesse seems to be accomplished by the talking of economic nonsense—well, so far in the campaign the nonsense that Uncle Jesse talks will match anybody else's.

Today in History

By The Associated Press
Today is Tuesday, Nov. 15, the 319th day of 1983. There are 46 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history: On Nov. 15, 1492, the first recorded reference to tobacco was made by Christopher Columbus, who noted in his journal the use of tobacco among the Indians.

On this date: In 1777, the Continental Congress adopted the Articles of Confederation.

In 1907, the comic strip "Mutt and Jeff" made its first appearance.

In 1940, the Queens-Midtown Tunnel, linking Long Island and Manhattan, opened.

In 1979, President Jimmy Carter warned Iran's government that it would be held accountable for the safety of Americans held hostage by militants in Tehran.

And in 1981, President Reagan's chief economic adviser, Murray Weidenbaum, said unemployment might reach 9 percent before Reagan's policies started helping the economy grow.

Ten years ago: Egypt and Israel began exchanging prisoners of war.

Five years ago: Anthropologist Margaret Mead died in New York at age 76 after a yearlong battle with cancer.

One year ago: Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev was buried in front of the Kremlin Wall following a state funeral.

Airport race brings out right stuff

The first Airport Terminal Marathon was held last week at O'Hare Field in Chicago. The idea for the marathon came from Fred Tatashore, a young lawyer who had watched the entire New York Marathon on television a couple of Sundays ago.

He said, "I've been racing through airports all my life and it suddenly occurred to me that most terminals are now 26 miles long. Since people have to run to catch their planes, there was no reason not to have an airport marathon."

"I am amazed how many have shown up for it. We have competitors from terminals in Atlanta, Miami, San Francisco, London, and Paris, and one team came all the way over from the Tokyo airport."

"How does a terminal airport marathon differ from the New York and Boston Marathons?" I asked.

"Ours is much more difficult because we require the contestants to run the 26 miles fully clothed, carrying either an overnight case or a garment bag. The course is laid out as follows: Everyone starts from the curb. When the gun goes off they race up to the ticket counter, check in, and then they go to the gate where their plane is leaving from."

"Won't some contestants have shorter distances to run than others?"

"No, that's the beauty of O'Hara airport. Every plane gate is exactly 26 miles from a ticket counter."

I talked to several of the contestants who were running up in the parking lot. Husbands were rubbing wives' shoulders and wives were putting Ben Gay on their spouses' legs. I was surprised to find a lady who said she was 68 years old, putting resin on her shoes. "My children live all over the country so I've been in training for a year. I once ran from one end of the Detroit airport to the other in 7 minutes and 14 seconds."

The youngest runner was Tommy Styson, who was eight years old. He said he got interested in air terminal marathon running because his mother was always late for their plane.

Before I could interview anyone else, the gun went off and the First Airport Terminal Marathon was on. The field was jammed as it began, but once people went through the X - ray machines, it started thinning out. One FBI man got cramps in his legs and fell in front of Gate E - 1, several got as far as the cocktail lounge before they began retching. Pilots, baggage handlers, and porters cheered them on, and airline stewardesses provided Gatorade for those who looked like they were about to drop. Every wheelchair at O'Hare was put in service to take off those who dropped from exhaustion.

The winner turned out to be a traveling salesman, Jimmy Diamond, from Rosslyn, New York, who got to his gate in 2 hours, 12 minutes, and 4 seconds, beating out the Atlanta favorite, Jeff Harrington, who works for Federal Express. Harrington might have won, but he claimed the woman at his ticket counter had sent him to the wrong gate.

I talked to Diamond after the race. He was in agony and gasping for breath. I asked him if it was the toughest airport terminal race he had ever been in. He said, "No. I once had to run from Piedmont to the Eastern Shuttle at National Airport, and I couldn't stand on my feet for two weeks."

The first lady to cross the finish line was Virgie Kressling of Doylestown, Pa. She was hardly puffing. "I'm an Avon lady sales rep, and I've been doing this for years."

What made the Chicago O'Hare race so inspiring was that the losers were just as exhilarated as the winners. As one contestant told me, "Just to have completed the 26 miles is enough glory for me. Running through an airport is the only way an ordinary person like me can prove he still has the right stuff."

Confusion on Central America

WASHINGTON (NEA) - Public opinion polls usually don't receive much attention in this column, but the results of a recently completed nationwide survey are so astounding that they merit closer inspection.

In March 1982 and again in September 1983, NBC News asked a scientifically selected sample of more than 1,500 men and women to identify the Central American governments supported and opposed by this country.

Among those polled in early 1982, almost half (47 percent) were unable to identify President Reagan's position toward the government of Nicaragua.

The next largest group of respondents - 31 percent - incorrectly said the Reagan administration was supporting Nicaragua. When the second survey was conducted last month, however, the proportion of those giving that wrong answer had actually increased to 45 percent.

In the 1982 survey, 57 percent correctly said the Reagan administration is supporting the government of El Salvador - but 18 months later the proportion of those supplying that right answer had dropped markedly to 47 percent.

If the survey results are reliable, exactly 10 percent of this country's adults can correctly identify the Reagan administration's friends and who could identify the White House's position toward Nicaragua and El Salvador 18 months earlier.

In other words, fully 90 percent of the people can't even distinguish between Reagan's good guys and bad guys, much less decide whether they share that judgement.

Indeed, both of the president's current attempts at military adventurism - the Middle East and Central America - are rapidly disintegrating into foreign policy and national security disasters.

To Lebanon we have sent 1,600 Marines - almost certainly too few to achieve any form of military success but very surely too many to die. Their principal mission seems to be to serve as targets of opportunity for every ideological zealot, religious fanatic and self-proclaimed revolutionary in Beirut.

In Central America we have fewer troops but a far larger contingent of surrogate mercenaries dedicated to the purported just cause of undermining - if not overthrowing - the government of Nicaragua.

The justification for that multimillion-dollar operation, we're told, is that the Soviet Union and Cuba are using surrogate mercenaries to advance their unjust goal of undermining - if not overthrowing - the government of El Salvador.

The radical Sandinista government of Nicaragua is hardly a model of democracy, but its shortcomings hardly justify this country's intervention in the form of extensive sabotage and guerrilla warfare covertly planned, organized and financed by the Central Intelligence Agency.

The right-wing government of El Salvador, our client in the region, isn't much to brag about either. Members of its uncontrollable armed forces, for example, are regular participants in the "death squads" which last year summarily executed more than 1,300 civilians.

Throughout the past several years, a stream of committees, commissions and inspection teams composed of religious leaders, politicians, businessmen and others has returned from Central America to decry this country's involvement in the region.

The White House, however, has routinely ignored their conclusions as the work of malcontents lacking in patriotism, courage or common sense.

But now the president's own commission (headed by this country's Premier Practitioner of global power politics, Henry M. Kissinger) has, according to one report, emerged from El Salvador "aghast" at the policies and practices of an authoritarian government which is unable or unwilling to control blatant abuses of power.

University heads say house part of job

EDITOR'S NOTE — University presidents are among the hundreds of state workers Texas provides with housing. In this article, the second in a series of three, the people in some of those houses say the practice has a long tradition and helps them do their job.

By KEN HERMAN
Associated Press Writer
AUSTIN (AP) — To people who pay rent or make mortgage payments, it must look like Charles Austin of Commerce has a pretty good deal — $69,700 a year and a rent-free mansion.

The home is on the fringe of East Texas State University, where Austin is president. The two-story, 5,947-square-foot house, valued by the school at $185,607, is owned by the state of Texas. It comes with the job.

But to Austin, one of about 30 state college administrators who get free housing, the home is a "mixed blessing."

"Certainly it's a benefit in some respects," he said. "But many presidents would tell you that in terms of their personal financial situation, it's not that great a benefit. You lose some tax advantages. You lose ability to gain equity."

University presidents are far from being the only state employees facing that situation. According to an Associated Press survey, more than 900 state workers, ranging from prison guards to the governor, live in free or token-rent housing. The dwellings include cabins, mansions, and dormitory rooms.

Despite the potential pitfalls of rent-free living, a residence for university presidents is expected in academia, says E. Don Walker, University of Texas System chancellor and current Bauer House rent-free resident.

"Ever since I have been associated with higher education, including the time as a student, there's always been housing provided to the chief executive officer of colleges," he said. "This is a common practice among colleges and universities, public and private."

The Bauer House actually is three buildings amid the tall trees of western Austin. The grounds are immaculately manicured and groomed. The swimming pool is often the center of parties held at what Walker calls "the focal point for the system."

"Mrs. Walker and I live upstairs, for the most part, in three large rooms. The rest of the house is public," he said.

Walker has not owned a home since 1965. He plans to retire in 1985, and "once we retire we're going to have to decide whether we buy or rent."

"During the great increase in value of homes, we haven't realized that," he said.

Former West Texas State University president and state Sen. Max Sherman agrees that university presidencies are "expected" to include a free house.

"It becomes a significant aspect of recruiting," a president, said Sherman, now dean of the LBJ School of Public Affairs in Austin, a job that does not include house keys.

Sherman got a housing allowance, but no house, while at West Texas State. University regents tried to buy a house, but backed out and lost $25,000 in earnest money.

The question wasn't whether to buy a house, but where. Regents for the Canyon school picked an Amarillo home with a $450,000 price tag. The WTSU Ex-Students Association and others thought it was silly to buy a house in Amarillo, 20 miles from the Canyon campus.

To East Texas State President Austin, the home is more than merely a freebie for the president.

"The primary reason is for promotion and development of the university. We use it extensively in official entertaining," he said.

A check around the state showed a variety of presidents' homes, some historic, some new, all valuable. Austin said the homes are of particular value at a "residential campus," such as East Texas State where many of the students live on campus.

"It's quite important there be a university home. It's a focal point for the social life of the university," he said. "In an urban university setting, then it may not be as important."

Nevertheless, some of the urban universities are buying or building homes for their presidents. At the University of Texas at Dallas, where all 7,500 students commute to class — there's no on-campus housing — President Robert Rutford gets free use of a home valued by the school at about $350,000, according to UT-Dallas spokesman Buddy Adams.

UT-Dallas bought the 6,605-square-foot home in residential North Dallas in 1972 for $110,000.

UT-El Paso President Haskell Monroe lives in Hoover House, named for the cotton merchant whose widow gave it to the school in 1965. It was valued at $52,500 then. School spokesman Dale Walker was unsure of the current value.

"Geez, I don't know," he said. "It must be worth a quarter million dollars."

The two-story, cplanned building "would be called, even in today's terminology, a mansion," Walker said. The home is in El Paso's Kern Place neighborhood, a close-in area of older, valuable homes.

The Hoover House was built in 1917, and features ionic columns that support a front portico. The home comes with a full-time housekeeper, and a half-time groundskeeper. Monroe, whose annual salary is $82,100, pays part of the housekeeper's salary, according to Walker. UTEP pays the utility bills, as do most of the universities.

At North Texas State, the problem was getting rid of the president's home. In 1980, NTSU regents paid $303,000 for a home for new President Frank Vandiver. A year later Vandiver headed for Texas A&M. NTSU Vice President Alfred Hurley got the top job, but he liked the home in which he was living.

The "for sale" sign went up and stayed up for 17 months, according to Fred Pole, NTSU vice president for administrative affairs.

"The interest rates had gone up. And there were quite a few Braniff pilots in that area. There were a lot of houses on the market," he said.

The home finally sold for $350,000. Hurley stayed in his house, and now draws a $6,000 annual housing allowance, as do presidents of the few Texas colleges that don't have presidential residences.

In College Station, Vandiver is in a home valued at $730,573. "It's a nice house, but not palatial by any means," A&M spokesman Lane Stephenson said of the 8,550-square foot house that was built with private gifts.

A&M regents have agreed to pay up to $150,000, or half the cost of any house that football coach Jackie Sherill decides to build, Stephenson said.

Like Hurley, Tarleton State University President Barry Thompson decided to stay in his home, rather than move into the president's residence, according to school spokesman Jay Evans. The house was converted into a student services building.

Evans said Thompson never would have been happy in the official home at the school noted for its Western image.

"He raises appaloosa horses. Hell, our students would have roped them if he put them at the house," said Evans.

Heart patients resting up from trip

ROSLYN, N.Y. (AP) — Two Korean children awaiting lifesaving heart surgery were resting in a hospital today after hitching a plane ride with President and Nancy Reagan and becoming celebrities in their home country.

Lee Kil Woo, a 4-year-old boy from Seoul, and Ahn Gi Sook, a 7-year-old girl from Kyongnam, in southern South Korea, arrived at St. Francis Hospital late Monday after a stopover in Washington.

In South Korea, newspapers, radio and television have given widespread publicity to the adventure, which came as the president ended his visit to South Korea.

State-run television interviewed families and friends of both children, and newspapers gave extensive display to pictures showing them waving with the Reagans from the door of Air Force One before the flight to Washington.

Doctors met the children at LaGuardia Airport in New York on Monday. Although the youngsters, who suffer from congenital heart defects, ended their long journey sleepy, shy and at times fretful, they apparently suffered no ill effects from all the attention, the hospital reported.

The children, clutching miniature American flags, were also met at La Guardia by a horde of reporters and cameramen. "I don't feel well. It's too hot, too many people," Gi Sook said through an interpreter as she clutched a box of popcorn and her flag.

Hospital spokesmen said the chance of successful surgery, scheduled for early next week, was about 90 percent. Both children have holes in their hearts, and the little girl also has a displaced aorta and other problems.

"Without the operations, the strain on their hearts would become too great and they would die of heart attacks by the time they're 10 or 12," said Dr. Filippo Balbonio, the pediatric director.

The surgery and ensuing four- to six-week hospital stay would cost about $20,000. Kil Woo and Gi Sook are in a program for poor children in developing countries that provides for their operations, and travel to the United States, through donations.

New probe launched of GM X-car brakes

WASHINGTON (AP) — The 1980 General Motors Corp. X-car, already the subject of a federal government suit involving brake problems, is being investigated anew for troubles with the system that makes the power brakes work.

And a consumer group is demanding that the government seek the recall of 3 million other GM cars built in 1981 to 1983, contending that they have the same serious brake defect attributed to the X-car. The group said the problem could have been corrected in manufacture with a 75-cent part.

The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration said it is looking into a lack of power brake assist in 1 million 1980 Chevrolet Citation, Pontiac Phoenix, Buick Skylark and Oldsmobile Omega.

Owners complain that extra effort on the brake pedal sometimes will not stop their vehicle quickly enough, the federal agency said, adding that it knows of 800 owner complaints involving more than 100 accidents and 30 injuries.

According to the highway safety administration, General Motors contends that extra pressure on the pedal is sufficient to stop the vehicle and that problems do not exist if owners keep their vehicles tuned to factory specifications.

Meanwhile, a General Motors spokesman accused the Center for Auto Safety of using "half truths and deliberate distortions of fact," in its demand that the government recall 1981-1983 "A" and "J" cars.

"This is the kind of irresponsible scare tactic that has come to be typical of the Center for Auto Safety," said John Hartnett, manager for news relations in GM's Washington office. "Fortunately, we soon shall have the opportunity to tell the complete story to the court in the X-car brake case — namely that the brake system on these cars is perfectly reliable."

The center, in a petition filed with the highway safety agency on Monday, said the defects are disclosed in GM internal documents that it had received under subpoena. "The apparent cause of brake lock-up in these cars is front brake caliper pin corrosion which causes the front brakes to degrade and lose effectiveness compared to the rear brakes," the center said in a letter to Diane Steed, administrator of the federal agency.

GM's Hartnett said the cars have an outstanding record of

U.S. calls on Nicaragua to learn the lesson of Grenada

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration, in a fresh appeal to Nicaraguan officials to establish democracy, is suggesting the alternative for them could be the kind of political upheaval that led to the imprisonment and death of the Grenadian leadership a month ago.

That thesis was set forth in a speech Monday night to Organization of American States foreign ministers by Deputy Secretary of State Kenneth Dam, who said the lesson of Grenada is that "political differences tend to degenerate into violence" without democratic safeguards.

Calling Nicaragua an obstacle to peace in Central America, Dam accused the Sandinistas of failing to negotiate in good faith. He challenged Nicaragua to accept proposals by Central American mediators calling for an end to subversion in the region, disarmament and the withdrawal of all foreign security forces.

These are among 21 proposals formulated in September by the so-called Contadora group, composed of Mexico, Venezuela, Colombia and Panama. The foreign ministers of the four countries hope to use this week's OAS meeting to

Engineer convicted in scheme to ship arms

HOUSTON (AP) — An engineer who worked on the space shuttle project has been convicted in a scheme to send 308 firearms to his homeland of Nigeria for sale on the black market.

A federal jury on Monday convicted John Chizoba Adi, 33, of dealing in firearms without a license, aiding and abetting in making a false statement to the U.S. government and lying to a grand jury.

Jurors acquitted Adi on charges of conspiracy, aiding and abetting and perjury.

Adi, who was working with Lockheed Engineering on the shuttle project, persuaded two American citizens to purchase the .25-caliber pistols for him, said Assistant U.S. Attorney Jim Powers.

Adi allegedly paid about $50 each for the pistols during 1981-82 and then shipped them to Nigeria, where they would sell for as much as $500 each on the black market. Powers said. Bank records showed Adi deposited $14,000 during the same period, he said.

U.S. District Judge Carl Bue set sentencing for Jan. 9. Adi could be sent to prison for up to 15 years and fined up to $20,000.

sound out their Central American counterparts on verification procedures.

Dam spoke several hours after the surprise announcement by OAS Secretary General Alejandro Orfila that he is stepping down early next year, more than a year prior to the scheduled end of his second five-year term.

In an unusually candid speech, Orfila said he found during his eight-year tenure that the organization too often has been an irrelevant bystander when major hemispheric issues arise.

"It must be acknowledged that the OAS has been detached from, or only tangentially involved in many of the major issues that affect the present and determine the future of America," the Argentine diplomat said.

"In some cases it was conspicuously absent; in others, worse still, it was ignored."

The failure of the OAS to assume a central role in the turmoil in Central America and the Caribbean "clearly has marred its public image," Orfila said.

Meanwhile, two anti-Sandinista rebel leaders in Washington Monday had differing opinions about the future of Nicaragua's government.

Adolfo Calero, head of the CIA-backed Nicaraguan Democratic Force told a news conference that military intervention by other Central American nations to oust the Sandinistas is "definitely an option." He said his Honduran-based forces could establish a government on Nicaraguan territory and then ask for aid from "friendly countries."

But Eden Pastora, head of a rebel group based in Costa Rica, said the Nicaraguans can solve their own problems.

"The Nicaraguan people are against any kind of intervention or invasion," Pastora said during a speech Monday night. "It's a problem that we Nicaraguans can solve ourselves."

Teachers sue superintendent

HOUSTON (AP) — The Houston Teachers Association says it is suing the Houston Independent School District because the new teacher evaluation system violates their constitutional rights.

Association President Camella Walker said the lawsuit challenges the school district's assessment plan for refusing to allow teachers to contest the subjective rating system or the improvement program for teachers who are found to be deficient.

A hearing on the group's request for a temporary injunction was set for Dec. 1.

The lawsuit, filed Monday in state court, asks that teachers be allowed to file grievances over the results of their evaluations and seeks a maximum 60-day time limit for settling complaints, which now take up to six months to complete.

"It is meaningless and farcical for the (district) to promise its employees an effective way to secure a resolution of their disputes concerning wages, hours and working conditions, and then design a procedure which, for all disputes that arise during the final two-thirds of their annual employment term, affords no decision until school is out," the lawsuit said.

The school district last year began using the new evaluation system, called the Teacher Quality Assurance Program. It includes an evaluation of teachers by their principal and area supervisors and a rating from 1 to 4 on a variety of objectives. Teachers who do not score satisfactorily in the evaluation are put on a "growth improvement plan."

I Don't Have Time
For My Eyes

Don't get me wrong. I think taking care of your eyesight is just as important as the next guy. In fact, that's why I went to Dr. Simmons & Simmons in the first place...to see about extended wear contacts.

I know a lot of stores have them. But I figure for something as important as my eyes, I needed an eye-care specialist to make sure I get the best fit possible. And besides, for one fee, I got a thorough examination, the right type of lens for me, a good fit and check-ups to make sure I'm getting the best wear possible.

Now that I've got my extended wear contacts from Drs. Simmons & Simmons, I've got more interesting things to do with my time than worrying about my eyes...see what I mean?

How to Manage Your AT&T Holdings After the Breakup.

Introducing The Telephone Exchange Fund-AT&T Shares.

(A Unit Investment Trust)

Now you can continue to have an equity investment in the Bell System after the reorganization with all the convenience of a unit investment trust. You can tender your AT&T stock now for an interest in a portfolio that will only hold shares of the new AT&T plus the seven regional phone companies that the divestiture will create. Instead of the paperwork burden of owning securities in eight different companies you own a single investment, which should simplify most shareholders' bookkeeping.

Features of The Telephone Exchange Fund.

As a holder of Units of the Fund you will be able to:

- Receive a pro rata share of the net dividend income from the securities held by the Fund (or have your dividend automatically reinvested). Dividends will be paid monthly.

• Retain investment flexibility (you can redeem your units to the sponsor at any time after the divestiture at the then current market value).

• For six months following the divestiture, if you decide to redeem your Units in the Fund in exchange for Bell System securities you will receive shares in these companies in any combination you wish, without a fee.

• Tender shares currently held in your IRA, Keogh, or SEP plan for Units of the Fund.

• Minimum tender of 10 shares.

Exchange your AT&T stock the easy way for units representing a portfolio that will hold shares in the new AT&T and the seven new regional companies.

To receive a copy of a prospectus containing more complete information including fees and expenses, call the number below or return the coupon. Be sure to read it carefully before exchanging your AT&T shares.

Competition hot for 'Main Street' designation

AUSTIN (AP) — People in Dallas and Houston probably don't appreciate parking problems downtown, but when the folks in Hillsboro started having trouble finding a place to park on Main Street, they knew they had it made.

"That's a sign of a healthy downtown," said Anice Reed, who manages Project Main Street for the Texas Historical Commission.

For her, Hillsboro is one of more than a dozen success stories of the project begun four years ago, aimed at preserving historic buildings and making downtown the busy hub it was in the old days.

In fact, because of the success of the Main Street program, her biggest problem has become breaking the news to the growing number of cities that did not get chosen. Only five a year are picked, and the latest list came out Friday.

"Competition was so stiff year. It's amazing. I have to call 18 cities this afternoon that are going to be just sick," she said after Gov. Mark White released the list of 1984 Main Street Cities in Texas.

The winners were Belton, Ennis, Brownwood, Goliad and Paris. They will get professional assistance from experts in tourism, corporate management, historical preservation and architecture.

Cities that applied but were not chosen this year were Athens, Clarksville, Conroe, Denton, Edinburg, Electra, Giddings, Grapevine, Ingleside, Lampassas, Mineola, Mineral Wells, San Marcos, Sherman, Sweetwater, Taylor, Tomball and Uvalde.

Cities apply by Sept. 1, and a nine-member state committee reviews the applications, visits the cities, and recommends the five winners to the governor in November.

"We look at the historic fabric in the downtown," said Mrs. Reed. "We look at private sector support, the support pledged by city government, and the geographical distribution of cities. We can't pick them all in Central Texas."

That was the main reason, for example, that Taylor was not chosen this year, she said. The city has community support, government support, historic buildings, restorations under way, and has launched its own Main Street project without any outside help. But it is located only 20 miles from Georgetown, and Georgetown is already a Main Street city, Mrs. Reed said. She said she told Taylor officials the truth when she phoned the bad news to them Friday.

"I was very honest with them. Taylor is a natural, but so are many of them. Lampassas didn't get it and they are a natural. Electra is a wonderful little city. There were just too many."

Nevertheless, Ennis, a 1984 winner, is located in the same county as Waxahachie and not that far from Hillsboro.

"It happens sometimes," Mrs. Reed said. "We try as we can to spread them out over the state, but that has not always been possible." She said Hillsboro was in its third and final year of assistance in the program.

Towns were not required to apply the first year of the program; 14 applied the second year and 13 the third year. This year, with interest heightened by success stories in places like Hillsboro, Navasota and Georgetown, 23 cities wanted in on the program.

"We had no idea this would happen," said Mrs. Reed.

In Hillsboro, where a downtown that was once a decaying cluster of abandoned buildings has come back to life, sale tax receipts have jumped by 20 percent with no increase in population.

"They have so many new businesses downtown it's phenomenal," said Mrs. Reed.

She said experts usually advise downtown shops to have unified hours, like shopping centers, and stay open in the evenings for people who work and cannot shop during the day.

You wouldn't think owners of shopping centers built on the fringes of the cities, contributing to the flight from downtown, would be enthusiastic about revitalizing the downtown marketplace, but Mrs. Reed said it is not always the case.

"It varies from city to city," she said.

Mrs. Reed said the program has even helped the towns not chosen as Main Street Cities.

"Just by applying, it forces them to look at their downtown, to count their vacancies, to look at what their tax rate is, their retail mix. For the first time city governments are looking at their problems downtown. It's amazing," she said.

"It's working. We're bringing people back downtown."

Business management book finds a receptive audience

CHANDLER, Ariz. (AP) — When the president of a company writes a book, often the only readers may be employees buttering their way up the corporate ladder.

But "High Output Management," written by Intel president Andrew S. Grove, is on its fifth printing and selling its way out of retail bookstores.

Grove's ideas on employee-supervisor relations and middle management productivity have contributed to Intel's below-average turnover and what company spokesman Frank Vaughn calls "a strong corporate culture."

Because the young firm, with manufacturing and technical facilities in Chandler, has successfully survived the recession, both business owners and managers are studying Grove's ideas. But where does he get them?

"You won't believe this, but I really don't know," he says with a chuckle. "The ideas aren't necessarily all mine, but more of a home brew of things management at Intel has tried and has seen work many times."

Grove takes the concept of corporate culture, a firm's personality, to heart.

"We take the process of management as seriously as the process of technology," he explains. "That's the only way to make sure technological innovations and products aren't a flash in the pan. Any other way, and we'll only have occasional successes and things won't work in a predictable fashion."

Middle management is becoming what Grove calls a "forgotten specialty," and he believes it may be drifting away from original goals, such as helping increase productivity.

As an alternative, he suggests "know-how" managers working in tandem but concentrating directly on ideas and corporate needs rather than supervising employees.

Dear Abby

Two's a crowd in this double bed

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1983 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: I have a friend who is a widow and often travels with a widower. Their relationship is strictly platonic. (My friend says she does not find this man physically attractive.)

Recently the two of them attended her granddaughter's graduation in another part of the country, and the daughter, thinking her mother and this man were lovers and not wanting to appear old-fashioned, put them up together in a room with a double bed!

My friend said she was uncomfortable and somewhat embarrassed, but she didn't want to make a fuss, so she went along with it.

What are your thoughts on this?

NO NAMES OR LOCATIONS

DEAR NO NAMES: I find it difficult to believe that a grown woman with all her marbles would share a double bed with a man rather than "make a fuss"!

What fuss? It would seem perfectly logical for her to have told her daughter that she and the gentleman were just friends, not lovers, and separate accommodations were required.

DEAR ABBY: Our son was married to a nice girl whose parents had no money, so my husband and I gave the young couple a wedding reception and paid for it ourselves.

The invitations were sent out with reply cards. Eight couples we did not know but who were friends of our son and his bride returned the reply cards saying they were coming, so we counted on them for dinner as we did for all the others who accepted by mail.

When the dinner was served, those eight couples did not show up. Abby, dinner at $41.50 a plate for 16 people cost us $664. After the wedding, none of the no-shows called to explain or apologize. And none of them sent a gift.

My question is this: Since these people were friends of the bride and groom, don't you think they should make good the $664? We offered to foot the bill for the reception, but must we pay for guests who accepted but didn't show up?

STUCK IN NEW JERSEY

DEAR STUCK: You are indeed "stuck," because having offered to pay for the reception, you are obligated to pay for the no-shows. They were very rude, and your son and his bride should let them know about it, but the financial loss—unfair as it is—is yours.

...

DEAR ABBY: I worked for a married man for 25 years. For 18 of those years I was his mistress. I finally broke it off after trying to end it for three years. He got mad and fired me. Then he hired a young divorcee to take my place. I needed that job, Abby. I told him if he didn't give me my job back I would tell his wife.

UNDECIDED

DEAR UNDECIDED: No. If your boss fired you because you refused to sleep with him you can sue him for sexual harassment. You can also appeal to the Labor Relations Board and/or one of the many support groups for women's rights. WEAL (Women's Equity Action League, 805 15th St. N.W., Washington, D.C. 20005) and your local chapter of NOW (National Organization for Women) are particularly effective. Good luck.

...

DEAR ABBY: In reply to "Bible Student": Adam was not born, he was created. Also, the Bible states that "Mary was with child—not with fetus." I really think "Bible Student" should go back to school.

RAY IN CHULA VISTA, CALIF.

Consumers grow knowledgeable about furniture

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

A home furnishings trend which has been accelerating recently is the blurring of lines between custom furniture sold through interior designers and architects and mass-produced furniture sold in retail stores.

As consumers have become more affluent and more conscious of design trends through media exposure and personal interest, the market for what the industry calls "high end" furnishings has grown.

As a result, furniture styles once found only in showrooms catering to designers and their clients are now appearing on retail sales floors.

At the recent Southern Furniture Market in North Carolina, the popularization of high-style designs continued to grow. It seemed particularly strong in upholstered furniture offerings where stylish—often extreme—shapes for chairs and sofas were common. Many of the pieces shown were covered with costly fabrics such as imported silk, hand-painted cotton and English chintz.

The City Mix Collection by Kay-Lyn, for example, consisted of 31 pieces of upholstered furniture people were familiar with but that couldn't be bought before.

Les Flippo, vice president of Hickory Mfg. Co., Kay-Lyn's parent, put the collection together from magazine clippings sent into the company by customers.

Flippo said many manufacturers get such clippings and letters from consumers who may have seen a sofa or a chair they liked in an ad or in an article about the home of some famous personage.

"The furniture isn't available because it is often antique or, if new, has been custom-made," he said.

Usually, the manufacturer writes back and advises the prospective customer to visit a retail store nearby that carries the manufacturer's brand. But this time, Flippo did something different. He saved the letters and clippings over a period of about a year and made copies as exact as possible of some of the most-requested articles.

Among the items in the collection is a sofa occupied by Paloma Picasso in an Architectural Digest article on the designer and daughter of painter Pablo Picasso, as well as seating used in ads for some of the nation's most prestigious fabric houses. (In each case, the manufacturer did attempt to ascertain if the pieces were being made before he went ahead on the copies.)

A group of 70 fabrics was selected for the sofas, chairs and chaises in the City Mix Collection. Consumers will pay a premium of at least 10 to 15 percent for each piece, compared to usual Kay-Lyn prices, said Flippo.

The furniture is being made outside the usual assembly line, since the individual proportions and detailing of each piece would not be possible under ordinary manufacturing methods.

Mass-produced seating must have standard dimensions. Such factors as the length and width of the arms, the slope of the back and the sewing methods for the cover must be standardized in order to achieve labor and cost economies.

A chair or sofa made off an assembly line is not necessarily better. But its proportions and the method of cover attachment can be varied as needed. This design freedom produces chairs and sofas of more individuality and distinction.

It is a subtle difference. Until quite recently, most industry authorities would have said that only interior designers were able to appreciate and willing to pay for such subtleties.

Flippo is among those who believe a segment of the general public is now "willing to pay more for visual quality."

This point of view was endorsed by Helene Lauter, a former magazine editor who runs interior design seminars given through department store design departments.

Mrs. Lauter said 1,800 people recently paid $25 each to attend such a seminar in a Florida department store to educate themselves about interior design, and to learn how to work with interior designers.

Book available on earth sheltered house

When the sun's rays sizzle in August, the well water is still cool. When winter's wind brings numbing cold, the soil beneath the surface remains unfrozen. Since the earth is an excellent insulator from the extremes of temperature, it's not surprising that when prospective homeowners consider energy expenditures, they sometimes find themselves attracted to the idea of earth sheltered housing: a home that is built partly or completely below ground level.

Until recently there has not been a lot of information available on the subject, but one excellent publication, Earth Sheltered Housing, provides the basic hows, whys, pros and cons of this architecture. Published by the U. S. Department of Housing and Urban Development, this 141 page manual is available for $6 from the Consumer Information Center, Dept. 173L, Pueblo, Colo., 81009.

Housing below ground level may conjure images of cold, clammy, bat-cave living, but imaginatively planned earth sheltered buildings can be bright, sunny and functional. A properly designed below-surface house is neither a basement apartment for sun-shunners nor a year-round refuge for hermits. It can be a practical alternative to high energy bills and an interesting form of architecture in its own right. But there are a number of factors to consider before reaching for the shovel, and "Earth Sheltered Housing" discusses them.

Energy bills can be cut dramatically by tucking part of a house under the earth, but other costs may reduce those savings. Because below-grade housing is a new science and units are not being produced in quantity, there may be extra building costs. One building estimates that costs run about 10 percent higher for underground structures. But these higher costs are generally more than offset by energy savings.

Limitations on the size and shape of the home are other considerations. Rooms may need to be smaller and the floor plan may need to be adjusted to accommodate the weight of the earth above. Light, of course, is a major concern. Skylights, a central atrium, or a glass-sided southern exposure are all workable solutions. "Earth Sheltered Housing" includes sample floor plans and designs.

Finally, zoning and building codes may need to be changed to recognize the difference between conventional and below-ground construction, and lenders may want more information on appraising value. HUD's book has solid suggestions on how to appeal zoning decisions.

Two finish gifted and talented sessions

Jolee McKenna Burger and William L. Fetter, both of Pampa, are among 75 public schoolchildren from 11 Texas Panhandle communities to conclude the fall session of the Gifted and Talented Institute at West Texas State University with a program, Saturday, Nov. 19.

During Saturday sessions, students from 16 area schools have participated in courses involving perceptual motor skills, art, outdoor skills, creative dramatics, science, computers and the Panhandle Plains Historical Museum on campus. WTSU faculty and staff members teach the courses.

Students are to demonstrate their skills learned during the sessions and exhibit art work at 1 p.m., Nov. 19, in the Activities Center Ballroom.

The 1984 spring session of the Gifted and Talented Institute will be hosted jointly with Region XVI Education Service Center of Amarillo.

Each Saturday from Jan. 28 through April 7, students and their parents will participate in course programs similar to the fall schedule.

Students will have the option of enrolling in three-week courses at a cost of $20, six weeks for $40 or nine weeks for $60, said Mary Jane Reeves, coordinator of the Gifted and Talented Institute. Reeves said parents and children may choose to take achievement and ability tests and a creativity test may be added.

"I think it's important to parents to know what their child is capable of and not to push them too hard, but hard enough," she said.

Course teaches children value of land, agriculture

By SHERI BRENDEN
St. Cloud Times

FOLEY, Minn. (AP) — John Patterson eased his hand into three buckets of dirt. After wriggling his fingers and pondering, he named the soil: loam, sand and clay.

The Foley sixth-grade teacher was testing a new curriculum for elementary students developed to teach children about the need to protect agricultural land.

"I like this kind of hands-on learning," said Patterson, who has found that his classroom is often filled with many farm children interested in agricultural issues.

Patterson, along with about 35 other teachers from the area, cut, pasted and colored and listened to the new curriculum's classroom activities during a recent workshop here. Regional workshops are being scheduled throughout the state.

The statewide soil conservation curriculum, sponsored by the Governor's Council on Rural Development, is the first of its kind in the country for elementary school students, according to Laura Noy, who designed the curriculum.

It is an interdisciplinary program that exposes children to the numerous facets of soil use, according to John Miller, environmental education specialist with the Minnesota Department of Education.

"Soil loss isn't just something that can be solved by biologists," Miller said. Protecting land from urban encroachment or erosion involves economical, political and sociological considerations, too, Miller said.

"We've designed this curriculum so it fits in with other things that teachers must address," Miller said.

The teaching packet suggests that students draw pictures of "unhappy soil that is hurt by wind and heavy rain," or demonstrate the effects of wind erosion by blowing a hair dryer over soil samples with and without crop residue.

Other activities include starting a compost pile, simulating a zoning council decision, writing poems and short stories about earthworms, negotiating a mock world trade agreement or making a clay settlement showing a wise use of land.

"I think some of the activities will appeal to urban and rural children," Miller said. "This to me is environmental education."

Cindy Bourgeois, Sherburne County Soil and Water Conservation District clerk, said the simple experiments and activities should appeal to children and teachers.

"Teachers don't have to be agronomists to teach the kids," she said. "They won't have to stand up in front of elementary kids and preach. The kids have to do things."

The conservation training is likely to reach beyond children, too, said Issie Jensen, office administrator with the Benton County Soil and Water Conservation District. "It's a funny thing," Jensen said. "If you teach this to the kids then the kids take it home to Mom and Dad."

The loss of soil to a crop of asphalt or poor management is a hazard to everyone.

"Soil is a very important resource and we're losing it," he said. "Yet it certainly has not been a priority in the schools."

Assassination memories still haunt witnesses

By KATHRYN BAKER and SCOTT McCARTNEY Associated Press Writers DALLAS (AP) — Most Americans old enough to remember know exactly where they were on Nov. 22, 1963 when President John F. Kennedy was shot.

Austin Miller remembers. So does Clemon Johnson. And Harold Norman. And Earle Brown.

They were there. Forgetting has been difficult for Austin L. Miller.

Miller, a railroad worker in 1963, walked over to Elm Street on his lunchbreak and was looking right at President Kennedy when shots began to crackle.

At first he didn't realize what was happening, he said. But when he saw a Secret Service agent jump on top of the back of Kennedy's car, he knew.

"I've tried to forget all I could of it, but I still remember most of it," said Miller, who was 25 at the time of the assassination. "I guess you never forget it."

Miller said he has told very few of his friends and co-workers that he was there when President Kennedy was killed. It is not something of which he likes to be reminded.

"It's nothing to be proud of to see something like that. I wish it never happened," he said. "I don't care if any of my friends know I saw it. I don't broadcast that. I'll always be ashamed of what happened."

Clemon Johnson, 77, was an employee of the Union Terminal Railroad in 1963. He and some buddies took an alternate route on their way back to work from lunch in order to get a glimpse of the president as his motorcade passed by Dealey Plaza.

They stood on the railroad overpass, above Kennedy's route. "That was the first president I had seen."

The memory haunts Johnson 20 years later. He still fears reprisals from some vague force. "I try to keep out of the picture as much as possible. I might get the same bullet he got," Johnson said, at first refusing to talk to a reporter.

He reconsidered. "They're supposed to have got the man that done it, but if they didn't... Well, I guess I wouldn't be living now."

Like dozens of other eyewitnesses to the assassination, Johnson was called to testify in the Warren Commission's inquiry into the assassination and the bizarre events that followed it.

Johnson told what he saw, which was little. He said he was "within throwing distance" of Kennedy when the shots were fired. He is still confounded by his unwilling involvement in history.

"I don't know for what reason... I was looking to see the president," he said. "Couldn't realize at the time it happened just what had happened."

Nevertheless, he said, the Warren Commission "grilled us as if we'd-a done it."

"I never like to talk about it," he said of having seen the assassination. "I never like to be boastful about it or even... I always just try to ignore talking it, because to me it was a sad event, not what we thought it would be — just see the president come along and that'd be it."

"I'd just about soon hear somebody else talk about it than to talk about it myself. To me, it couldn't be the way they say," he says. "I just let it pass — Well, that's the way they believe and no sense arguing about it."

Earle V. Brown, standing on a railroad bridge over Elm Street in Dealey Plaza on Nov. 22, 1963, imagined he saw a gun protruding from a window and heard gunshots.

That was about two hours before the president's motorcade passed through downtown Dallas. Shortly after noon, Brown heard the real thing.

"I was down there early at about 10 a.m. and I had this vision of a rifle sticking out of a window. It was very strange. Then I heard these shots," said Brown, a Dallas police patrolman at the time.

"It was a premonition and it has always really shook me up when I think of it. It was like someone was trying to tell me something."

About two hours later, Brown said, he heard gunshots and then saw two or three puffs of white smoke waiting toward the bridge.

The president, he said, was lying in his wife's lap as the car passed beneath him. "I still see that," he said.

T.E. Moore says witnessing the Kennedy assassination was the low-point of his life, but he has rebounded. "I went through a down period, I guess you could say. It upset me greatly. But it really didn't affect my life too much after that," Moore said.

Moore, now 62, believes Lee Harvey Oswald killed Kennedy from the Texas School Book Depository, and he believes an echo he heard in Dealey Plaza fooled others into thinking there were four shots, or shots from the grassy knoll.

"I was standing on the corner of Elm and Houston (across the street from the school book depository) when the Kennedy parade came by and made the turn going toward the underpass," Moore said. "After the car got down there 50 feet or so, the first shot was fired. Then there were two more shots."

"There was an echo that made some people believe there were four shots. Then all I could see was a security man climbing on the back of the car. You've seen the picture of that, I'm sure. I didn't really know if the president was hit or not."

Moore, who worked in the Dallas County courthouse at the time of the assassination and served as district clerk for Dallas County for two years before losing an election last year, said he didn't testify for the Warren Commission, but was interviewed by the FBI.

He said he knows some witnesses feared that if there was a conspiracy, their lives might have been in danger. "I just never gave it a second thought. I'm pretty confident that Lee Harvey Oswald was a lone assassin and shot from the school book depository," he said.

Roy Sansom Truly gave Lee Harvey Oswald a job at the Texas School Book Depository and saw his employee in the building shortly after he had watched the assassination of President Kennedy.

Twenty years later, he refuses to talk about what he saw on Nov. 22, 1963. "That's something that was in the past and you don't talk about," Truly politely told a reporter. "Everybody who was there has lived through it and that's all I want to say."

Truly told the Warren Commission that he went outside the building to watch Kennedy's motorcade, heard the shots and then went back inside and saw a police officer.

"The officer had his gun pointing at Oswald," Truly told the commission. "The officer turned this way and said, 'This man work here?' and I said 'Yes.'"

Then, Truly testified, he and the officer left Oswald and went to the fifth floor. "I just don't have anything to say about it," Truly insisted when called by The Associated Press. "I just don't want to talk about it."

When Harold Norman put it all together — the gunshots he had heard from above him, the debris falling in the hair of the man standing next to him and the president falling into his wife's lap — he knew he was as close to history as he cared to be.

Norman and two friends were standing in a fifth-floor window of the Texas School Book Depository, directly underneath the window from which the fatal shots were fired.

He was there because he worked there — with Lee Harvey Oswald.

"I didn't see the gun barrel but I did see the debris that fell in one of my friend's hair. I could hear a gun going off above us, and the debris fell each time there was a shot," said Norman.

The debris was dust and tiny pieces of concrete broken loose by the concussion of the rifle, he said.

"You read about things like that and never believe that they'd actually happen when you were there. But I was right there. That's something you never forget."

Norman said witnessing the assassination changed his life — not in tangible ways, but in spiritual ways.

"I sure do see that scene — sometimes pretty regularly. Sometimes I'll be driving down the street and thinking about it," he said. "I can close my eyes and see President Kennedy again. One minute he's smiling and waving and then he's slumped back and wounded."

Dickerson paces Rams past Falcons

ATLANTA (AP) — Eric Dickerson's first appointment with the Atlanta Falcons this year ended in disappointment, but the Los Angeles Rams rookie vowed things would be different next time.

The next time was the National Football League's Monday night television contest and Dickerson set two single-season club records. He raced for two touchdowns and ripped off 146 yards in 21 carries to pace the Rams to a 36-13 victory over the Falcons.

The game was played in a steady rain before just 31,203 fans. There were 28,253 no-shows.

"I don't like to be shut down by a team," said Dickerson, who was held to only 64 yards in 29 attempts in the Rams' 27-21 victory over Atlanta earlier in the season.

"I'm going to find a way to play better next time," he said. "The first time I didn't take them seriously after watching them on film. This time I was more serious and it was a personal goal to get more than 64 yards."

Dickerson scored on runs of one and seven yards and increased his league-leading rushing total to 1,369 yards for the year. The yardage total and 19 touchdowns shattered Los Angeles single-season records.

Meanwhile, Rams' quarterback Vince Ferragamo, who sustained a cut right hand when he smashed it on a Falcon helmet during the second quarter and needed "a few" stitches after the game, threw touchdown passes of 61 yards to Preston Dennard and nine yards to George Farmer. The Rams ran their record to 7-4 to gain a share of the NFC West lead with the San Francisco 49ers.

Dennard's TD reception gave the Rams a 7-3 lead in the first quarter. Dickerson then scored his first TD in the second quarter to give Los Angeles a 14-6 halftime lead as the Falcons managed only field goals of 31 and 23 yards by Mick Luckhurst. Atlanta's only touchdown was a fourth-period run of one yard by Gerald Riggs.

The Rams, who had 442 yards total offense to only 209 for the Falcons, broke it open in the third quarter on Dickerson's seven-yard scoring run and Ferragamo TD pass to Farmer. Ch. Nelson added a 27-yard field goal and Barry Redden had a 40-yard scoring run for the winners in the final quarter.

"Our offensive line dominated them, and I wouldn't say I was surprised. I can run in rain or snow. It makes no difference," said Dickerson.

Midwest Basketball Preview

Big Ten race expected to be wide open this season

CHICAGO (AP) — Any assessment of college basketball in the Midwest usually begins with the Big Ten Conference, and any assessment of the Big Ten has to begin with Indiana and the Hoosiers' flamboyant coach, Bobby Knight.

The Hoosiers won the Big Ten title for the third time in four years last season, when they weren't supposed to win. They're not supposed to win again. This time the prediction might stand. But don't bet on it.

around 7-2 Uwe Blab, Winston Morgan and Stew Robinson. Knight also has a pair of outstanding freshmen in Steve Alford and Marty Simmons.

Despite the loss of Brewer, the Big Ten's leading scorer, Minnesota could better its 9-9 conference record of last season. Coach Jim Dutcher has four starters returning from a team that made it to the National Invitation Tournament. They include Tommy Davis, Marc Wilson, Jim Petersen and Roland Brooks.

record of the three, but distractions could be a problem. This is the final season for long-time Coach Ray Meyer, who will turn over the reins to Joey Meyer, his son and top assistant.

Wherever DePaul plays, it will be billed as "The Coach's Last Trip," and that could be distracting. DePaul has four starters returning from the team that finished second in the NIT plus outstanding freshmen Dallas Comegys and Lawrence West, both of whom are expected to see a lot of playing time.

Heavyweight champ may retire after next fight

Holmes admitted he is interested in a unification fight, but puts his purse figure at $100 million — pure fantasy.

But Holmes could make a bundle for fighting Coetzee, especially in South Africa.

Diane Holmes remembers going into her husband's dressing room after he kept the World Boxing Council title by stopping Mike Weaver in the 12th round of tough fight June 22, 1979, at Madison Square Garden in New York.

Indiana doesn't figure to be dominant, but then neither does anyone else in what could become a wide-open race. For beginners, Michigan State and Iowa are the teams to watch.

Purdue, Ohio State and Illinois finished in a second-place tie last season, but Purdue's Russell Cross and Illinois' Derek Harper left to go to the National Basketball Association. Minnesota lost 7-foot-3 Randy Brewer through graduation.

Coach Jud Heathcote has his best Michigan State team since 1979, when the Spartans, led by Magic Johnson, won the NCAA title. Kevin Willis, a 7-0 senior center, and guard Sam Vincent will lead the Spartans, whose main strength will be depth.

Cornhuskers on top again

By The Associated Press

Powerful Nebraska has come within one vote of regaining the stature it held earlier this season — the unanimous choice as the No. 1 college football team, in the weekly Associated Press Top Twenty rankings.

One vote in this week's poll went to runnerup Texas, but the Longhorns still lost ground after polling two first place votes last week.

The unbeaten, 11-0, Cornhuskers of Nebraska, coming off a 67-13 rout of Kansas, received 59 of 60 first-place votes and 1,199 of a possible 1,200 points from a nationwide panel of sports writers and sportscasters in the weekly poll.

Texas, which rallied from a 14-3 halftime deficit to defeat Texas Christian 20-14, received 1,137 points.

Nebraska, which has been No. 1 in every poll this season and twice was a unanimous choice, led Texas 58-2 in first-place votes and 1,198-1,140 in points a week ago. This is the ninth consecutive week that Texas has been No. 2.

Auburn, earning the right to represent the Southeastern Conference in the Sugar Bowl by beating Georgia 13-7, remained third with 1,072 points. Georgia slipped from fourth to seventh.

Indiana lost Ted Kitchel and Randy Wittman, two of the Big Ten's top four scorers. Knight will build

Golfing greats stay busy before Skins Game

By WILL GRIMSLEY
AP Special Correspondent
 Who said all bears hibernate and sleep through the winter? Don't believe a word of it. Especially in the case of the golf variety.

Take, for instance, the Golden Bear, Jack Nicklaus. A phone call was placed to his North Palm Beach, Fla., home for the purpose of getting Jack's slant on the big $350,000 "Skins Game" he's playing with old rivals Arnold Palmer, Gary Player and Tom Watson on national television over the Thanksgiving weekend.

"Oh, I'm sorry Jack is tied up all day with Japanese photographers," said Barbara, mother of Nicklaus' five children. "He's modeling for his clothing company in Japan. He is busy for the next two days. In fact, Gary (14), Michael (10, youngest of the brood) will be modeling tomorrow."

A call to Palmer, first to his home in Latrobe, Pa., and then to his Bay Hill Golf Club in Orlando Fla., found him equally occupied.

"Oh, this is a bad time," said a secretary. "Mr. Palmer is holding a clinic for United Airlines and there's a tournament in the afternoon. Tomorrow, he is hosting a group of advertisers for the Ladies Home Journal."

Doc Ciffin, Arnie's Man Friday, said Palmer had just returned from a 2 1/2 weeks trip to the Orient — Hong Kong, Manila and Chung San, Mainland China, where he is building a course.

Meanwhile, Player, with enterprises on four continents, was home with family, prize cattle and horses in Johannesburg, South Africa, and Watson also was out of pocket.

"Mr. Watson is in Japan," his Kansas City office said. "He won't be back until the 23rd." Besides playing, Watson, five-time British Open champion, also is getting interested in course design.

It's amazing that these fairway giants could find time for a couple of rounds of golf. The four men have dominated the game for the last quarter of a century, compiling close to $11 million in career earnings, 320 total victories and 44 major championships, while establishing corporate empires.

Vying with a weekend sports feast that will include the Oklahoma-Nebraska football game, a full NFL pro schedule and the Larry Holmes-Marvis Frazier heavyweight title fight in Las Vegas, Nev., they will battle Saturday, Nov. 26, and Sunday, Nov. 27, over the Desert Highlands course in Scottsdale, Ariz.

"These players were chosen for their endless achievements and immense popularity," said producer Don Ohlmayer, brainchild of the extravaganza to be shown over NBC-TV.

"The Skins Game" is a glorified version of the friendly waging jousts common to weekend golfers everywhere. In this case, there will be a $10,000 stake on each of the first six holes, $20,000 on the second six and $30,000 on the last six of each round. A player must win cleanly or the money goes over to the next hole.

The site is one of the many courses which Nicklaus has built.

"It's been a very busy season for Jack," explained wife Barbara. "He's just returned from England where he is designing a course and he stopped off in Glasgow. He will be making another trip to the New York this week to look in on St. Andrew's (America's oldest course) and a Nicklaus project in suburban Westchester County."

"He is building a course in Sweden and has a contract for a new one in Japan. These are in addition to those in the United States. I can hardly keep up with them. There's Arrowhead in Dallas, one for a new Hyatt Hotel in Grand Cypress, Fla., and a course in Orlando not far from Arnie's Bay Hill."

In addition to his golf architectural enterprises, Nicklaus must oversee

Evans signs with Blitz

CHICAGO (AP) — Chicago Bears backup quarterback Vince Evans has signed a contract with the Chicago Blitz, joining the ranks of several other National Football League players who have defected to the United States Football League.

Evans said in a telephone interview Monday that he signed a four-year, guaranteed contract with the Blitz.

"One of the reasons was that I felt like I wasn't going to get an opportunity to be a starter for the Bears and the opportunity came up with the USFL," Evans said. "They were excited about me and I would have the opportunity to be a starter. That was the main thing, to use the God-given talents I have."

With the Bears, Evans worked mainly as a backup to regular starting quarterback Jim McMahon.

Evans said that under the terms of the contract, he would stay with the Bears for the remainder of the current National League Football season and join the Blitz when the USFL season begins in March.

Evans declined to discuss details of the pact, other than to say the contract was for four years and that the Blitz had contacted him about joining the club.

Evans also said he had no hard-feelings toward the Bears or head Coach Mike Ditka, even though Ditka has said that McMahon would remain as the Bears' starting quarterback.

"Sometimes you can look back on things and bitterness can arise, but I don't do that. They have been a great learning process for me and helped me develop my character. I thank God for the time I spent with the Bears."

Regarding Ditka, Evans said, "It's been a good relationship and I had the opportunity to see where he's coming from. You can appreciate the fact that you know exactly where you stand with him."

The Blitz scheduled a news conference for today "to announce the signing of an NFL player," team spokesman Kay Schultz said.

Pat McCaskey, a spokesman for the Bears, said he was not aware of the signing and that the team would have no immediate comment.

Evans is a seven-year veteran from the University of Southern California. He was drafted by the Bears in the fourth round in 1977 and established himself as an NFL quarterback with a strong passing arm who also could run for big yardage.

He led NFL quarterbacks with eight rushing touchdowns in 1980, the same year he passed for 316 yards and three touchdowns in a 61-7 victory over Green Bay.

The 6-foot-2, 212-pound signal caller lost a three-way battle for the starting job last season when he and veteran quarterback Bob Avellini gave way to McMahon, a first-round draft pick in 1982.

When McMahon faltered in several starts this season, Evans replaced him. Finally, Evans earned a chance to start two games, but he eventually was replaced.

Cruise missile arrival stems from 1979 NATO decision

LONDON (AP) — The arrival of the first U.S. cruise missiles in Britain comes nearly four years after NATO made a historic decision to counter a Soviet buildup by modernizing its Western European nuclear arsenal.

But the decision by the North Atlantic Treaty Organization on Dec. 12, 1979, was coupled with an offer to negotiate nuclear arms reductions with the Soviet Union.

The "two-track" NATO decision was controversial from the beginning and brought hundreds of thousands of anti-nuclear demonstrators into the streets of Western Europe.

Although successive governments of the NATO countries said repeatedly they hoped they could avoid deployment of 572 U.S. cruise and Pershing 2 missiles, they steadily reaffirmed the decision to start stationing the missiles by the end of this year if U.S.-Soviet arms reduction talks in Geneva failed.

With little hope of a breakthrough in Geneva, British Defense Minister Michael Heseltine announced Monday the first of Britain's scheduled contingent of 160 cruise missiles had arrived earlier in the day in two crates, under heavy military security.

He stipulated that technically the missiles were still not operational, but that they would be by the end of the year. He gave no numbers or other substantive details.

In addition to Britain, the missiles also are scheduled for deployment in West Germany, Italy, Belgium and the Netherlands over the next five years and are meant to balance the Soviet deployment of about 360 triple-warhead SS-20 missiles already in place.

The 1979 decision was prompted by concern among European and U.S. officials that the Soviet Union was leaping ahead with its modern SS-20 mid-range nuclear missiles and that NATO was nothing comparable in its arsenal.

Two years earlier, Helmut Schmidt, then West Germany's chancellor, had put up a warning signal, saying the "disparities of military power in Europe" should be removed.

Talks between the Soviet Union and the United States opened in Geneva on Nov. 30, 1981, on the basis of President Reagan's "zero option" proposal.

This called for dismantling of the SS-20 missiles and two other types of Soviet missiles. In return, NATO would cancel deployment of 464 cruise and 108 Pershing 2s.

The Soviets rejected the proposal and on March 30, under pressure from the European allies, Reagan modified it. He called instead for an "interim" agreement — reductions in Soviet missiles and in NATO's planned deployment.

This again was rejected by Moscow and on Sept. 26, Reagan refined the NATO proposal, saying nuclear-capable aircraft also could be discussed in Geneva, that the number of Pershing 2s would be reduced and that NATO would not attempt to match Soviet global missile deployments.

The Soviets, who did not accept this offer either, contend a virtual nuclear balance already exists and has most recently called for a reduction to 140 SS-20s.

The United States was planning to present a new proposal for the Geneva talks scheduled to resume today, administration officials said. This proposal called for limits by each side to 420 warheads.

If deadlock continues in Geneva, the cruise missiles at the U.S. Air Force base at Greenham Common, 50 miles west of London, will become operational by the end of the year, Heseltine said. He gave no precise numbers.

Britain is scheduled to deploy 96 of its total of 160 cruise missiles in the first phase of the deployment program. The remaining 64 will be deployed later.

Italy is also to begin deploying 112 cruise missiles and West Germany is to start taking the 108 Pershing 2s by the end of this year.

West Germany is also due to take 96 cruise missiles and Belgium and the Netherlands are scheduled for 48 cruise missiles each.

But as U.S. and other NATO country officials have said, "what goes in can come out," if the arms talks succeed.

Study questions heart disease personality link

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP) — Heart attack victims with hard-driving personalities are no more likely than low-key people to suffer second attacks or other coronary problems, a researcher says.

Dr. Robert B. Case, a professor of medicine at Columbia University in New York, said Monday that based on his research, he sees "absolutely no reason to change Type A (compulsive) behavior" as a means of reducing the chance of further heart disease among such patients.

"I'm not saying Type A is out" as an indicator of a person's risk of heart disease, he cautioned, but simply that his study "raises some questions" about the concept.

Previous studies have linked Type A personalities to an increased chance of heart disease and death, as well as to heart disease risk factors such as cigarette smoking, high blood pressure and high blood cholesterol levels. Case noted.

In Case's study, 545 heart attack patients were asked to fill out a detailed questionnaire that is generally accepted as a means of identifying Type A personalities — people he described as having "a strong sense of pressure, a work compulsion, intense competitive tendencies... (and) free-floating hostility."

Case, who presented his findings at the American Heart Association's annual scientific meeting, had expected his study to show that the heart attack victims with Type A personalities would be more likely to die or suffer second heart attacks, heart damage, irregular heart rhythms or reduced heart efficiency.

"We analyzed everything backward and forward and simply couldn't find any relation" between those post-heart attack ailments and Type A personality, he said. "It was a surprise."

Even "extreme, hard-core Type A's" were found to be no more prone to second heart attacks or other problems, he added.

Case said his findings conflicted with what is "gospel as far as the public is concerned" — the notion that people with Type A personalities are more prone to heart disease than those with low-key, or Type B, person "ities."

"We have real, conflicting evidence," he said.

A possible explanation arises from the chance that some patients answering the questionnaires failed to recognize themselves as Type A personalities, Case noted.

He also said his study only looked at the link between Type A personality and subsequent ailments in heart attack victims, so it didn't address the question of whether Type A personality is a useful tool in predicting heart disease in people who haven't had heart attacks.

Soviets leave arms talk session early

GENEVA, Switzerland (AP) — The Soviet delegation left the medium-range nuclear arms talks after 35 minutes today, the shortest session in nearly two years of negotiations, but U.S. officials said the two sides will meet Thursday.

The meeting today came one day after the first of 572 new cruise and Pershing 2 medium-range missiles arrived in Britain.

Chief Soviet negotiator Yuli A. Kvitsinsky refused to comment to reporters waiting outside the U.S. delegation building where the session took place, but the office of U.S. negotiator Paul H. Nitze said the talks would continue.

Negotiating sessions have usually lasted from one to two hours since they began in November 1981, but the brief stay of the Soviets today was seen as significant since they have threatened repeatedly to leave the talks when the U.S. begins deploying new missiles.

Kvitsinsky, on arriving at the mission, had to push his way through a crowd of anti-missile demonstrators and reporters outside the U.S. delegation headquarters.

The United States, adhering to a 1979 NATO plan of negotiating against a deployment deadline, Monday flew the first of its cruise missiles to Britain, part of a contingent of 572 nuclear-tipped rockets scheduled to be sent to five West European allies.

The Soviet Union, which already has 243 triple-warhead SS-20s aimed at Western Europe, threatened in recent weeks to walk out of the medium-range nuclear force talks in Geneva if deployment of 108 Pershing 2 and 464 cruise missiles begins as planned.

A Reagan administration official said Monday in Washington that the United States was planning to present a new proposal cutting to 420 the number of warheads allowed each side. That matches the number of warheads left if the United States accepted Soviet President Yuri V. Andropov's latest offer to reduce the Soviet triple-warhead SS-20s to 140.

Today's brief meeting was the 109th plenary session since the talks began in November 1981. This round of talks began Sept. 6, but no firm recess date has been set by either side.

Rebels advance towards Arafat stronghold

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — A rebel tank regiment and infantry brigade today were pushing toward PLO chairman Yasser Arafat's last Middle East stronghold in a Palestinian refugee camp in northern Lebanon.

The Lebanese state radio said, the Syrian-equipped rebels were advancing behind a heavy artillery barrage on the refugee camp of Baddawi, outside Tripoli, to dislodge Arafat's garrison of Palestine Liberation Organization loyalists. The shelling set more oil storage tanks afire.

The three-pronged assault collapsed a four-day ceasefire and the attack appeared aimed at driving the loyalists from the camp and tightening the noose around Arafat and his followers, the radio said.

Reports telephoned from reporters based in Tripoli said the rebels' strategy appeared to be to capture Baddawi and increase pressure on the PLO chief to evacuate the northern port city to avoid an all-out assault.

The reports said the shellfire was concentrated on Baddawi but a few shells struck Tripoli's oil refinery on the camp's edge, setting oil storage tanks on fire. The Lebanese government says it lost $100 million from burning crude and refined oil in the past two weeks of PLO warfare.

Tripoli is 50 miles north of Beirut, which was shaken this morning by the sound of rapid explosions as shells and rockets crashed into predominantly Christian east Beirut. Police said the intense barrage, which lasted 30 minutes, injured five motorists and forced schools in most of east Beirut to close for the day. Christian-controlled radio stations blamed the attack on Syrian-backed Druse militiamen in the central mountains overlooking the capital. Police said Lebanese troops clashed twice with Druse fighters during the night around the mountaintop town of Souk El-Gharb, which overlooks the U.S. Marine base at Beirut's airport.

Early today, F-14 Tomcat jet fighters from the carrier USS Dwight D. Eisenhower staged repeated reconnaissance flights over Beirut and the surrounding area, radio stations reported. Similar flights had drawn fire from Syrian ground positions in Lebanon last week.

The two-day escalation of hostilities around Beirut coincided with the arrival of U.S. Middle East envoy Donald Rumsfeld on his first tour of the region.

Rumsfeld held talks with President Amin Gemayel and other government leaders.

Worrisome days continue in housing industry

NEW YORK (AP) — In spite of the recovery in home building, home selling and home financing, these are worrisome days in the housing industry.

Worries about the big federal budget deficit, worries about the level of interest rates, worries about the availability of financing.

To make matters worse, there are even some concerns about the demographics that support the industry — about the 42 million people who will pass age 30 in this decade, considered the prime age for thinking about buying a nest. As it turns out, not all of those young people have been out there in the marketplace where the housing people would like them to be. Instead, they've been staying home with the older folks and saving their money instead.

Even the statisticians at the Census Bureau were a bit surprised by some of the numbers they saw: A decline of more than 300,000 under-30 households in 1981, followed by another 450,000 a year later.

Another worry re-emerged at the San Francisco meeting this week of the U.S. League of Savings Institutions. This worry, as so many other housing worries, involved Uncle Sam and his behavior on finances.

The housing, financing and real estate people consider the old spendthrift's behavior to be both outlandish and dangerous, especially when he sends up little signals suggesting the housing people have it too good.

Too good, in the sense of having a disproportionate share of the market for funds, which they claim is an exaggeration. Uncle Sam, the cause of our problems, is blaming us, the housing people say.

A U.S. League study suggests that the old spendthrift has become a monster in the marketplace. It produces this evidence:

—In the 1950s, the federal government's share of total funds raised in the money and capital markets averaged only 4.8 percent a year.

—In the 1960s, Uncle Sam's share increased to an annual average of 7.1 percent, or about 14 cents of every dollar of financing.

All this is preliminary to an even bigger shock. The people at the U.S. League ask you to savor this bit of evidence:

—"Through the first three years of the 1980s, the federal government's share of the capital pool has been 26 percent — one dollar of every four — and the really large federal deficits are yet to come."
