

Pampa receives 'tame radiation' during exercise

By LARRY HOLLIS
Staff Writer

Pampa fared fairly well in a simulated nuclear attack Tuesday, receiving "relatively tame" amounts of radiation here during a statewide Radiological Defense Exercise.

J. D. Ray, assistant fire chief, said matters were "kind of dull here" during the exercise yesterday. During the simulated attack nuclear detonations occurred at Amarillo (2 megatons), Wichita Falls (1 megaton), Abilene (5 megatons), Grand Prairie (3 megatons) and Fort Worth (5 megatons), as well as various other places throughout the state.

Winds were coming from the southeast, keeping Pampa out of range of radiation fallout from Amarillo, Ray said.

But the winds blew in radiation from Wichita Falls, Grand Prairie and Fort Worth. At that distance, radiation effects weren't felt here until about 19 hours after the time of detonation, Ray said.

By that time, radiation levels had fallen from 500 roentgens (a unit of measurement for radiation) to below 50 roentgens.

The exercise, condensing several days of events into the one-day activity, began with the local Office of Emergency Management receiving teletype messages warning of deteriorating political conditions in the world. Other messages indicated the situation was worsening, with the possibility of nuclear attack being imminent.

OEM personnel were advised to start early dissemination of information to the public, including location of shelters, information on radiation effects and how to combat them, distribution of pamphlets and organizing emergency teams.

"The more informed you are, the better off you will be," Ray said.

After the detonations were reported, then the emergency teams had to place radiation monitors around the city to check levels of radiation. Shelter managers were contacted and activities begun to open the shelters and check supplies.

Refresher courses were conducted for the monitor and shelter teams.

The first reports of local radiation effects were recorded about 19 hours after the nuclear blasts. The local office sent a message to state headquarters in Austin through a relay set up in Amarillo.

And that was about it for Pampa, Ray said. There were no damage or radiation sickness reports to send because of the low levels of radiation here.

He said he expected other parts of the state "were kept hopping, though."

The exercise last year created busier situations locally with the wind coming from the southwest, spreading radiation fallout over the city from the blast at Amarillo, Ray said.

The remainder of local exercise activities yesterday were mainly drawing up graphs to show radiation peaks and declines and establishing periods of times in which people could be outside safely to avoid overexposure to radiation, Ray said.

The exercise involved the Texas Department of Health, the Governor's Division of Emergency Management, the Texas Department of Public Safety, State Department of Highways and Public Transportation, and local emergency management coordinators and workers.

Senate okays religious meets in high schools

WASHINGTON (AP) — Student religious meetings in public high schools have won overwhelming Senate approval, prompting a leading supporter to forecast a change of heart in the House, where the concept failed once amid concern about church-state separation.

The Senate voted 88-11 Wednesday in favor of the measure, which is designed to permit voluntary religious student groups to meet in school facilities on the same basis as other extracurricular student groups.

Sen. Jeremiah Denton, R-Ala., told reporters he expects the Senate version of the religious meeting proposal "to be much more acceptable to the House" than the one defeated there last May when it fell 11 votes short of the two-thirds needed under a special procedure.

"A sealed door has had its seal broken," Denton said. Down the road, he added, "we can probably get it to grade schools."

The Senate attached the student meeting measure to a bill providing nearly $1 billion over two years to strengthen mathematics and science teaching in schools. The overall bill passed by voice vote after the Reagan administration abandoned attempts to tack onto it a sub-minimum wage proposal for teen-agers.

The Senate version required a simple majority. Its approval meant the measure could be considered by House-Senate negotiators on the math-science bill without returning for another House floor vote.

NOT RAIN...—Postmen apparently aren't the only people who keep going no matter what the weather conditions. Southwestern Bell Telephone Company employee Stan Beck simply put up an umbrella and continued splicing cable as a rainstorm approached Thursday afternoon. Pampa received 1.12 inches of moisture during the downpour. (Staff photo by Ed Copeland)

Castro agrees to release 26 more prisoners

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — The Rev. Jesse Jackson, preparing to escort 26 Cuban and 22 American prisoners back to the United States, says he wants to brief President Reagan and Secretary of State George Shultz on his meeting with Cuban President Fidel Castro.

Jackson, concluding in triumph a five-day visit to Latin America, said snags might occur only if the State Department balks at granting visas to the 26 Cuban political prisoners.

The 22 Americans, who were jailed in Cuba for various criminal offenses and freed by Castro after his meeting with Jackson, needed only their passports to return to the United States.

"Now the ball is in the court of our State Department," Jackson told reporters on a flight to Managua from Havana on Wednesday.

The Democratic presidential hopeful says he wants to meet with Reagan and Shultz on Friday because "there are some rather definite things we must share with them from the meeting with Fidel Castro."

"We would hope President Reagan would be willing to listen and engage in dialogue about our findings," he said. "Apparently we have been able to move substantially further than the diplomats and the messengers who have come this way."

Jackson was in Managua overnight for meetings with various government officials. It appeared unlikely that he would talk with junta leader Daniel Ortega during the trip. Jackson spoke to university students when he arrived Wednesday night.

Jackson's success in dealings with Castro recalled his mission to Syria last December which led to the release of captured Navy flier Robert Goodman.

Jackson visited the American prisoners at a prison about 15 miles outside Havana. He prayed with them and told them, "We do not come casting judgment about why you are here. That's something the judicial process must handle. You are Americans and you're ours and we're going to take you home to your families."

One man cried and hugged Jackson. Others seemed stunned. Most of them were imprisoned for offenses related to drug trafficking which carries a penalty in Cuba of 17 years in prison.

Jackson looks on the prisoner release and other parts of a 10-point statement he and Castro drew up as a first step in normalizing relations with the island just 90 miles from the United States. The two countries have not had formal ties since 1961.

But the Reagan administration says it is not interested in re-establishing diplomatic relations until Cuba gives a sign that it changes its military practices in other countries. Withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola and Ethiopia would be a good start, administration officials said.

A variety of issues have irritated the relationship between the United States and Cuba, with immigration matters among the sorest.

Jackson got Castro to say he would talk with the United States immediately, instead of after the election in November, about repatriating some Cubans detained in the United States after the Mariel boatlift. Castro also agreed to discuss easing visa restrictions to make contact easier between family members in the two countries.

In addition to the 26 Cubans and 22 Americans, Castro agreed to allow former CIA operative who is no longer in prison to leave the country. Andres Vargas Gomez was being allowed to leave for "humanitarian reasons," Castro said.

U.S. spurns Cuban offer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration has welcomed the release of 22 Americans held in Cuban jails, but is spurning Fidel Castro's offer for normalized relations until Cuba gives clear evidence it will stop trying to export its revolution.

A withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola and Ethiopia is the kind of evidence the administration is looking for, administration officials said Wednesday.

In obviously coordinated statements at the White House and before Congress, administration spokesmen made clear that they don't share the assessment of Democratic presidential hopeful Jesse Jackson that release of the 22 American prisoners was "a good faith gesture" that deserves an American response.

But the earlier statement by Castro in Havana that he is willing to resume diplomatic relations with Washington, broken in 1961, and exchange ambassadors, fell on deaf ears.

John Hughes, the State Department spokesman, said there can be no improvement in Cuban-American relations until Cuba ends its support for "subversion and revolution" in Latin America, withdraws its forces from Angola and Ethiopia and stops acting as "a surrogate for the Soviet Union."

White pleased, teachers peeved

Conferees agree on state education reform bill

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Mark White says a legislative conference committee has put together the best piece of education reform in the United States, but teacher groups say they've been left out and kicked around.

White on Wednesday said the conference committee report headed to both houses for review is "the blueprint for building the best system of public education this country has ever seen."

"There is no question in my mind, this is the finest educational reform bill in the history of the United States," the governor said.

The Texas State Teachers Association, which represents 95,000 teachers, said it felt like a battered canine.

"Even a dog knows the difference between being stumbled over and being kicked," said TSTA President Becky Brooks. "Texas teachers are being kicked and the TSTA cannot support it."

The Texas Classroom Teachers Association joined TSTA in complaining that the pay raise provisions are inadequate.

The plan sets a raise of $170 per month for all teachers. But two teacher groups complained many teachers will see no raise because they work in districts that use local money to pay above state minimums. Those districts would not be forced to hike pay, according to the TSTA and TCTA said.

"The bill is very likely to result in small or no raises for tens upon tens of thousands of teachers and other employees," said Ms. Brooks.

Here are major provisions of the conference committee report:

— A 15-member State Board of Education, appointed by the governor until November 1988 when it reverts to an elected board.

— Students must pass all courses to participate in extracurricular activities. Honors courses are exempt.

— Pre-kindergarten in districts where there are 15 or more educationally deprived 4-year-olds.

— High school seniors must pass a basic skills test to get a diploma.

— Teachers must pass a competency test by June 1986.

— Experienced teachers could earn up to $32,000 a year by rising to the top of a "career ladder."

— Gives State Board of Education authority over University Interscholastic League rules.

Former Pampa 'bad boy' didn't have time to prove he'd changed

BY JEFF LANGLEY
Senior Staff Writer

Paul Allan Long, 35, was a changed man after his release from prison two years ago, his mother said.

But he didn't have much time to prove his rehabilitation — he was shot three times and left dead on a pile of trash earlier this month near Bastrop.

Three bullets fired into the chest and back returned Long to Pampa, the hometown where he had once terrorized citizens and police officers alike. He was buried Wednesday in Fairview Cemetery.

"Paul had a past, but he also had a few good years in Austin," Twyla Long, his mother, told a reporter.

Long said her son was no longer the same man who helped the Kerr boys, two Pampa brothers with matching mean streaks and disregard for the law, in a second attempt to rip off weapons from the Borger National Guard Armory, a Dec. 31, 1975, incident that resulted in the shooting of a Borger police officer.

Prison had changed the man who on April 21, 1976, used a gun in an $11,000 robbery of the Gibson's Discount Store in Pampa, Mrs. Long said.

"Paul had a reputation here — he was a pretty bad boy," she said about her son's past, adding that "people do change."

She said her son had counseled cancer patients and battered wives following his release from the stretches in federal and state prisons. He was driving a delivery truck and working to go straight, Twyla Long said.

But someone cut short the former Pampa bad boy's attempt to rejoin society. On June 19, a man out for a walk along a creek near Bastrop found Long's decaying remains on a pile of trash and junk. The victim had been placed on top of the pile and covered with a sheet of tin and an old car seat, authorities said.

According to an autopsy, the victim was shot three or four days earlier with an unknown caliber weapon.

The murder victim's past resulted in a quick identification through fingerprints processed by the Department of Public Safety.

Long had lived alone in a trailer about 10 miles west of Bastrop, south of Austin, off of Highway 71, according to Bastrop County Sheriff Tommy Moseley.

No suspects have been arrested in connection with the murder.

On Nov. 24, 1975, Long broke into the guard armory in Borger and made off with a cache of automatic weapons. On Dec. 1975, Long and his buddies, David and Earl Kerr, brothers with violent dispositions and prison records to match, went back to the armory to try again.

Borger police lieutenant John O'Brien surprised the men, who were trying to knock a hole through a wall of the building, about 4:30 in the morning. The suspects opened fire on the officer with an automatic weapon. O'Brien was wounded in the left arm, and the suspects escaped. The officer recovered only to die a natural death about a year later.

About four months after the botched burglary in Borger, Long, using a .45-caliber pistol taken in the first break-in at the armory, pulled the job at the Gibson's store. The bandit, wearing a green ski mask, cornered assistant manager Gene Pruitt shortly after 9 p.m., as he left the store carrying a bank bag holding the day's receipts.

About 20 minutes after the Gibson's robbery, officers arrested Long, still wearing the ski mask, in a field near the St. Vincent DePaul Catholic Church. Officers found the weapon that linked the suspect to the burglary at the National Guard Armory stashed under a board nearby.

The bag from Gibson's, checks and more weapons taken in the Borger break-in were found by divers at Lake Greenbelt four days later. The cash from the store was missing.

Long "snitched" on his pals and agreed to testify against them for the shooting of officer O'Brien.

The Kerrs were returned from state prison, their home away from home, dating back to previous incidents, including an escape from the Gray County Jail, to stand trial for the 1975 shooting.

On November 12, 1977, a Hutchinson County jury found Earl Kerr guilty in O'Brien's shooting at the guard armory. He was sentenced to 50 years in state prison.

A jury convicted brother David on May 23, 1978. He, too, received a 50-year term.

Both remain in custody today.

In exchange for his testimony, Long received a 10-year term in federal prison.

In July 1980, Long was released from the federal prison at Springfield, Mo., and shipped off to the state prison at Huntsville. He was held in state custody to finish out the balance of the 15-year term assessed for the Pampa armed robbery.

On April 21, 1982, Long was released from Huntsville to begin his new life.

Twyla Long said prison officials felt her son was "completely rehabilitated" at the time he met his death.

Henry Cisneros on Mondale list

WASHINGTON (AP) — Even though San Antonio's first Hispanic mayor has publicly stated he has no ambitions to seek a higher office, campaign officials for Walter Mondale say the presidential hopeful will interview Henry Cisneros as a possible vice presidential running mate.

Mondale aides told the Dallas Morning News that Cisneros had been invited to meet Mondale at his North Oaks, Minn., home sometime next week to discuss the vice presidency. An official announcement is expected today, they said.

Cisneros, who was in Austin Wednesday and was unavailable for comment, told reporters earlier this month that he is not interested in the vice presidency or in any other elected office.

"I realize that there's been a lot of speculation about my future because of my recent political high profile," he said. "But I've got a full-time job as mayor. I am not looking for any national or state office coming my way out of the 1984 election."

The 37-year-old Hispanic mayor, who was an early supporter of Mondale in the Democratic presidential race, said that if any offers were made "I won't accept them."

"And you hold me to these words later if anything tempting comes along."

Former national Democratic chairman, John C. White, said that interviewing Cisneros was good politics for Mondale.

"Cisneros is one of the brightest young politicians in the country and the fact that he happens to be Hispanic doesn't hurt," White told The Dallas Morning News.

Cisneros was elected the first Hispanic mayor of San Antonio in 1981 and was re-elected in 1983. He said he intends to run for a third term.

Austin pollster George Shipley, a close ally of Cisneros, would not confirm the interview with Mondale but said it would make sense for Mondale to seek Cisneros' advice.

In addition to Cisneros, Mondale will interview Rep. Geraldine Ferraro of New York next week.

Rains continue falling across Texas

By The Associated Press
 Showers and thunderstorms continuing across central and western portions of Texas early today and forecasters said the pattern would continue throughout the day.

The activity was being triggered by the collision of a weak cold front pushing southward into moist air from the Gulf of Mexico. The heaviest area of thunderstorms before dawn today was across Central Texas from College Station to Abilene southwestward into the Big Bend area. Some lighter showers fell along the Texas-New Mexico border.

The showers and thunderstorms came a day after tornadoes and high winds whipped through the Panhandle, pounding the area with heavy rains and thunderstorms.

At least three tornadoes touched down in Wheeler, Collingsworth and Hall Counties. There were no reports of injuries.

Damage was limited to a barn near Estelina in Hall County, according to Ricky Garcia, a police and fire dispatcher at Memphis.

The other tornadoes touched down briefly, but no damage was reported. One was sighted northwest of Shamrock in Wheeler County and the other was in an unpopulated area of Collingsworth County, according to Sue Brandbik, a dispatcher at the sheriff's office.

Heavy thunderstorms were reported before dawn today 25 miles west of Junction and northeast of Marble Falls, according to the National Weather Service office at Hondo.

Other heavy thunderstorms were reported about 15 miles south of Killeen and another was sighted by radar about 30 miles north of Waco, the NWS said.

It was fair to partly cloudy early today over the Lower Rio Grande Valley and along the Red River and mostly cloudy elsewhere.

Early morning temperatures were mostly in the 70s, ranging from the mid 60s over the High Plains and Edwards Plateau to the low 80s in far South Texas. Extremes ranged from 63 at Amarillo to 84 at Del Rio.

Other readings around the state included 74 at Wichita Falls, 78 at Dallas-Fort Worth, 73 at Waco where rain was reported, 77 at San Antonio, 75 at Corpus Christi, 78 at Brownsville, 70 at San Angelo, 65 at Lubbock and 71 at both Abilene and El Paso.

Forecasters called for widely scattered thunderstorms to continue throughout the day and into the evening hours over Central and West Texas. It was to be clear to partly cloudy over the rest of the state. Highs were expected to be mostly in the 90s, ranging to as high as near 105 in the Big Bend area of Southwest Texas.

Supreme Court upholds government authority to restrict travel to Cuba

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court today reinstated the Reagan administration's authority to restrict travel by Americans to Cuba.

By a 5-4 vote, the court ruled that the restrictions are justified because they prevent the flow of U.S. tourist dollars to help finance Cuban "armed violence and terrorism in the Western Hemisphere."

Justice William H. Rehnquist, writing for the court, said, "Cuba also obtains close to 40,000 troops in other countries in Africa and the Middle East in support of objectives inimical to United States foreign policy interests."

The travel restrictions do not violate constitutional rights of U.S. citizens, Rehnquist added.

"We think there is an adequate basis to sustain the president's decision to restrict the flow of hard currency to Cuba — currency that could then be used in support of Cuban adventurism and restricting travel," he said.

The ruling overturned a May 1983 decision by the 1st U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals that declared the travel restrictions illegal and said they may not be enforced.

 The high court upheld the Reagan administration's contention that Congress authorized the president to restrict travel to Cuba as part of a broad trade embargo with the Caribbean island nation.

The administration had also contended that its options in dealing with North Korea, Vietnam and Cambodia could be restricted if the appeals court ruling was allowed to stand.

The United States imposed a trade embargo against Cuba in 1963 and most aspects of it were not at issue in today's case.

The current controversy was over Treasury Department regulations issued in April 1982 effectively limiting who may travel to Cuba.

The rules allow visits by those engaged in official travel, close relatives of Cubans, journalists and researchers. Also permitted is travel paid for by the Cuban government or by Cuban organizations.

The regulations were directed against tourists and other U.S. visitors to Cuba who would spend their own money there.

The Reagan administration decision rescinded in part a policy adopted in 1977 by then-President Carter removing restrictions on Americans' travel to Cuba.

The appeals court said that under 1977 amendments to the 1917 Trading with the Enemy Act, Reagan may impose the travel restrictions only if he declares a national emergency and lets Congress vote on the validity of such a declaration.

But the Supreme Court today said the appeals court misinterpreted Congress' intent in amending the 1917 law.

The court said that a "grandfather" clause in the amendments preserved the powers of the executive branch to restrict Cuban travel.

Rehnquist said the president's authority to regulate all property transactions with Cuba, including travel-related transactions, was in force at the time the amendments were enacted and therefore was preserved.

The restrictions were challenged by professors at Harvard and Boston universities, other hopeful tourists and organizations seeking to improve understanding and relations with Cuba.

Lawyer says

Parents will not be coerced to testify

HOUSTON (AP) — The parents of a teen-ager accused of murder went to jail for 5½ hours for refusing to testify before a grand jury, but their attorney says his clients will not be coerced to bear witness against their son.

Bernard and Odette Port, father and stepmother of 17-year-old David Port, were released on $1,000 bond on order of the Texas Court of Appeals Wednesday afternoon, court clerk Thomas Lowe said.

The couple walked quickly to a car with their attorney, Randy Schaffer, but did not answer questions from reporters.

David Port is free on $20,000 bond in a murder charge filed in the June 7 slaying of 23-year-old mail carrier Debora Sue Schatz. Ms. Schatz was found shot to death in a remote area of northwest Harris County June 9.

State District Judge William Hatten found the elder Ports in contempt of court Wednesday morning, fined them $500 each and sent them to jail. Schaffer delivered a handwritten writ of habeas corpus to the appeals court.

The fine and stay in jail will not alter the Ports' determination and they still "will not testify against their son," Schaffer said.

"What are they going to do — hang them by their thumbs? They are not going to torture them into doing something against their conscience," Schaffer said.

The Ports were held at the Harris County Jail in separate cells reserved for inmates jailed for non-payment of child support.

The Ports say the protection that allows spouses not to testify against each other should extend to parents and their children. Texas law doesn't provide for parent-child privilege.

They also claim the laws of their religion, Judaism, prevent them from testifying against a family member. But two rabbis testified last week that the Jewish law applied only in religious courts.

The younger Port last week pleaded innocent to the murder charge and waived his right to a grand jury indictment in hopes of keeping his parents from going to jail.

Prosecutors said they will proceed with the investigation because they have no other witnesses who could testify to key facts. The grand jury was scheduled to meet Friday.

"The public interest is served by seeing that justice is done and that the truth is presented to the grand jury," said Assistant District Attorney Brad Beers.

But Schaffer argued that the Ports' testimony would violate their Fifth Amendment protection against self-incrimination and that "the state has attempted to abuse the grand jury process by compelling them to testify."

Schaffer has said prosecutors may be seeking the testimony to turn the murder charge into a capital murder indictment. "If they speak, it could mean that the state could kill their son," he said.

Assistant District Attorney Jim Lavine said Schaffer's suspicion points to the need for a complete inquiry. "If that's the way they feel, they may just have made an argument for a grand jury investigation," Lavine said.

Lavine said the grand jury's term, which ends next month, could be extended to hear the case.

REFLECTIONS—Odette and Bernard Port reflected in the car top Wednesday as they left the Harris County jail after spending several hours behind bars for contempt of court. They are parents of a teen-ager accused of murdering a female postal carrier and have refused to testify against him before a grand jury. The Texas Court of Criminal Appeals set bond at $1,000 each. ### Killing triggers phone calls, vandalism

HOUSTON (AP) — Attorneys say they have received "a relentless stream of calls," including bomb threats, about a murder case in which a 17-year-old is accused of killing a woman mail carrier and his parents were jailed because they refused to testify.

Assistant District Attorney Jim Lavine, a prosecutor in the case, said he believes the public is fascinated with the case because it involves an upper-class white family — parents Bernard and Odette Port and teen-ager David Port.

"The initial response from people was frustration and anger," Lavine told The Houston Post. "I think the fact that it is an upper-class white family strikes closer to home with some (callers) than if it were a ward killing."

Houston's six wards, its original voting districts, are the city's oldest neighborhoods. They are impoverished areas.

Lavine said his office received a bomb threat in which a woman caller accused the district attorney's office of letting white people go free.

State District Judge William Hatten, who held the elder Ports in contempt of court Wednesday for refusing to testify to a grand jury investigating the killing, said his home was broken into and vandals scattered flower pots and spray-painted obscenities.

A bomb threat was also telephoned to the district attorney's office.

David Port is free on $20,000 bond set on a murder charge in the June 7 shooting death of Debora Sue Schatz, 23, a mail carrier who disappeared while delivering mail in the fashionable neighborhood where Port and his parents live. Her bullet-riddled body was found two days later.

Hatten, in addition to the vandalism, has received anti-Semitic letters about the Ports, who are Jewish. Randy Schaffer, an attorney representing Bernard and Odette Port, said he has been stopped by people at restaurants to talk about the case.

"There has been a relentless stream of calls, and to a man and woman they have said they too would go to jail to protect a family member," said Schaffer. "What has intrigued people in this case is that these parents are average citizens who were minding their own business. It could have happened to anyone."

The elder Ports spent 5½ hours in jail Wednesday before being freed on $1,000 bond each.

Harris County District Attorney John Holmes, who said he is accustomed to receiving calls and letters, said the tone and volume of those in the Port case has been a surprise.

"There is a lot of volatile reaction," he said. "One woman said something like: 'I think I ought to just kill you instead of not voting for you.'"

Task of amending state revenue bill underway

AUSTIN (AP) — House tax bill-writers began changing a proposed $1.3 billion package of new and revised revenue raises today in hopes of getting it ready for debate Friday.

"Hopefully we will finish up the bill in one day," said Rep. Stan Schlueter, D-Killeen, chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee today.

The committee completed a full day of public hearing on the controversial measure Wednesday with most of the long line of witnesses opposing the levies designed to pay for public school reform and highway improvements.

Schlueter said late Wednesday he had at least 10 proposed amendments to change the measure from the way it was originally introduced.

Schlueter, who has vigorously opposed Gov. Mark White's suggestion of the sales tax hike.

Schlueter, along with Speaker Gib Lewis, prefers doing away with some of the current exemptions to the sales tax. "I would give you a little advice. Whatever you do, do it fast and then leave town," said Robert E. Johnson of the Lone Star Bus League.

Johnson said the bill would tax buses "five or six separate ways," and predicted the hikes could force some inter-city bus companies to abandon rural routes rather than operate at a loss.

The tax bill would raise about $1.35 billion the first year for education reform and highway improvements. It would raise nearly $2 billion annually by 1987.

The original bill calls for: — Doubling the motor fuel tax from 5 cents to 10 cents a gallon.

— Increasing liquor taxes and the cigarette tax.

— Boosting the motor vehicle sales and rental tax from 4 percent to 5 percent.

— Increasing the franchise tax on businesses from $4.25 to $5.25 per $1,000 of taxable capital.

— Raising motor vehicle registration fees $25 over three years. — Repealing the tax exemption on the first year of insurance policies.

— Raising hotel and motel taxes from 3 percent to 4 percent.

— Increasing state college tuition from $4 per semester hour to 15 percent of the cost of education.

— Applying the sales tax to a variety of services not currently taxed, although fees charged by lawyers, doctors and architects still would be exempt.

Under the bill, the sales tax would be applied to repairs on tangible and real property, computer software, cable television, home fertilizer, newspaper and broadcast advertising, amusement admissions, auto parking and storage, ice cream, doughnuts, pastry and a variety of personal services, including babysitting, dry cleaning, massage and haircuts.

A number of representatives of Texas newspapers, radio, TV and billboard firms appeared to oppose putting advertising under the sales tax. "This is not a tax on newspapers but on readers of advertisements," said Jeremy Halbreich, vice president of the Dallas Morning News and spokesman for the Texas Daily Newspaper Association and the Texas Press Association.

"The amount of tax raised would be offset by a loss in sales," said William Moll, representing the Texas Association of Broadcasters. "We feel the transportation industry has been asked to bear a heavier burden," said David Fellers of the Texas Oil Marketers Association.

Fellers said the bill includes several tax hikes applicable to motor vehicles — including the fuel tax, motor vehicle sales tax, increases in vehicle registration fees and imposing the sales tax on repairs.

"The bill will add approximately $1 billion to the cost of owning (motor) vehicles in the state of Texas," added Gene Fondren of the Texas Auto Dealers Association. "We respectfully suggest that a billion dollars is too much to ask of any one industry."

Austin bowling proprietor David Hurwitz said it wouldn't be fair to apply the sales tax to bowling and not to fees for playing golf or tennis at city-owned facilities.

Bob Bennett, representing the Six Flags Over Texas and Astro World amusement parks, also objected to the tax on amusements. He said it would jeopardize the state's tourist industry.

Harry Hubbard, president of the Texas AFL-CIO, and David Kahn, a University of Texas student, both objected to the plan to increase state college tuition to 15 percent of the cost of education.

Kissing bandit is sentenced

HOUSTON (AP) — A man who admitted he kissed a clerk at a dry cleaners and then took $300 from her has been sentenced to 15 years in prison.

Nathaniel Henderson was sentenced by state District Judge A. D. Azios after he pleaded guilty to aggravated robbery.

Prosecutor Bob Loper said Henderson asked for clothes in someone else's name, then followed the woman employee to the back of the store. He kissed her on the mouth, then asked for money, Loper said.

An appeals court reversed an earlier conviction and 45-year sentence because the jury also imposed an unauthorized $300 fine.

Opinion

Federal programs perpetuate poverty

Charges to the contrary notwithstanding, the Reagan administration has not slashed the "safety net" for the truly needy. Federal expenditures on welfare programs have increased 10.5 percent since 1981.

The president has, however, pared several proposed increases in welfare spending. Consequently, the states have picked up a larger share of costs for those 54 social programs that Washington has asked them to administer. States such as New York and Massachusetts have enacted some additional programs of their own. Meanwhile, high-growth states in the South and West have barely felt the impact.

Those findings from a Princeton University study conclude that the impact of the Reagan budget initiatives has not been as severe as initially imagined. A previous Princeton report and countless media accounts suggested that the poor had been savaged by the administration's budget cuts. The most recent Princeton study, which covers the Reagan presidency to date, discloses a far different picture. Apart from the working poor who have lost extended benefits, the report concludes that most welfare recipients continue to qualify for federal and state assistance.

The study also found that even though state agencies have generally gained greater independence from the federal government, the president has yet to achieve the grass-roots control he sought three years ago. Nor has he reduced the federal share of these programs to any great extent. Nonetheless, the administration has managed to shift some of the welfare burden back to the states.

A clear conclusion from various studies and, most of all, from our national experience is that increased welfare spending does not reduce the welfare rolls. In 1966, when the War on Poverty began, there were, according to federal figures, 28.5 million poor persons amounting to 14.7 percent of the population. By 1982, this nation's 34.4 million poor amounted to 15 percent of the population. During that period, the federal government has dispensed more than $500 billion in welfare benefits. If the experience of the last 17 years teaches us anything, it is that federal welfare programs perpetuate, rather than eradicate, poverty.

Profits translate into more jobs

We Americans have always had a love-hate relationship with the idea of profit. While we are drawn to get-rich-quick schemes, we are surprisingly offended by news of big corporate profits.

Even as we demand 10 or 12 percent interest on our risk-free bank deposits, or safe government securities, we get very upset when corporations earn 14-16 percent return on capital investments in risky enterprises.

To a degree this is the result of the left-wing economics taught in America's public schools - which has left most young Americans thinking that corporate profits are at least 30-50 percent on sales, when in fact, they are one-tenth of that level at 3-5 percent.

Indeed, if you read the monthly political diatribes put out by the National Education Association (NEA), it's a wonder we still have a capitalist system.

Yet, the mounting spectre of employee layoffs in bankrupt or failing corporations during the 1980-1982 recession should have done much to remind young and old Americans alike that profits are not merely nice for owners - they are the lifeblood of jobs.

This is why the best news over the past six months is that America's corporations are suddenly experiencing explosive growth in profits. It is this surge in profits that is fueling the fastest job growth of any recovery in history with 6.3 million new jobs created since the recession's trough in November 1982.

In the final quarter of 1983, corporate net profits surged by a whopping 64 percent, and in the first quarter of 1984, they were up 58 percent over the same period in 1983.

It is no accident that this tremendous profit performance coincided with hefty gains in employment, with fourth quarter employment up 3.4 percent over the same period in 1982, and the first quarter of 1984 up by a record-breaking 4.5 percent over the same period in 1983.

This is, of course, the pattern. America's strongest periods of employment growth have always come with real profits rising strongly. Weak employment growth has always followed narrowing profit margins.

For example, from 1975 to 1979, corporate profits in real dollars were rising, after taxes and inflation, a husky 109 percent a year. In that same period, employment growth averaged an astonishing 3.6 percent one of the strongest employment growth surges in American history.

Conversely, from 1980 through 1983 corporate profits fell an average of 9 percent a year, and total employment grew a scant 0.5 percent per year, far less than enough to take care of new labor force entrants.

So, the return of a strong corporate profit picture is good news for everyone looking for work, and should be welcomed as another sign that America is economically on the mend.

This does not mean that corporate America has yet arrived on easy street. Only that the long nightmare from 1979 to 1983 has ended, and the restoration of normal levels has begun.

Even so, net profits in constant dollars in the first quarter of 1984 (calculated at an annual rate) were still 17 percent below the 1979 peak, and well below the share of GNP and of business sales they reached in the middle 1970's and 1960's.

Indeed, it may come as a shock to most Americans that in spite of the multi-billion earnings in the auto stocks, and the strong performances being chalked up in high technology, American corporate profits are still running at a rate (of sales) 40 percent below that of the 1950 post-World War II boom, and account for less than nickel of every sales dollar.

Nevertheless, there is some even better news hidden in these already impressive figures. Because of lower inflation, and because of accelerated depreciation, schedules allowed by the 1981 Reagan (ERTA) tax cut, what are called "economic profits" are even stronger than the "book profits" that are being reported.

While corporations have been allowed to step up their depreciation of plant and equipment, the inflation they are "catching up with" has slowed down dramatically. This means that real corporate earnings are being under-reported.

For example, in the first four quarters of the 1982-83 recovery book profits rose 36.2 percent, about normal for most recovery periods. Economic profits, however, shot up by 66 percent, or nearly double the normal level.

This explains why 1983 produced a 20-percent increase in spending on new plant and equipment, double the normal recovery cycle. And 1984 is showing even greater strength.

So, in spite of the uptick in interest rates, the U.S. recovery is still in exceptionally strong shape, and shows little sign of abating soon. Jobs should continue to open up rapidly.

Breast cancer debate continues

Doctors get excited, even as you and I, with "what's new." Open-heart surgery is a presently prevalent operation which may be overdone.

I don't know. Nobody knows yet. Nor has medical science resolved the debate over how to treat breast cancer - mastectomy or lumpectomy.

Remove the breast - or remove just the tumor. For physicians, a painful choice. For patients, an agonizing one.

The most thorough and balanced recent evaluation of the two procedures which I have seen has just been completed by the Wall Street Journal.

The Journal discovered that a woman with breast cancer can walk into the Medical Sloan-Kettering Cancer Center in Manhattan seeking the best treatment medical science has to offer.

But the "best treatment" may depend on which door she enters.

Through the York Avenue entrance she will meet Dr. Samuel Hellman, who advocates leaving the breast intact, removing any small tumor, and treating the area with radiation.

But if the woman walks into the same Cancer Center through the entrance off 68th Street she will meet Dr. Jerome Urban, who considers the mastectomy "the present best cure."

This debate has continued - sometimes "ragged" - for two decades, has led to sharp and emotionally charged confrontations among cancer specialists.

Some feminists insist that the male-dominated medical profession is callously and unnecessarily "mutilating women."

In the middle - are the women, 115,000 each year.

However... For the past five years an experiment has been conducted involving hundreds of breast cancer patients at 28 medical centers. The women volunteered to participate in the experiment.

I will have for you the first report on that research within weeks.

It may or may not resolve the controversy.

Some are certain to argue that a five-year study, in which the most recent woman to argue did so just last January, is much too limited for a definite verdict.

Presently - right now - before these new findings are available - here are the known numbers:

Sixty percent of women discover breast tumor while it is still small and confined.

With a mastectomy, a woman's chances of surviving five years are 85 percent to 90 percent.

Those statistics are based on decades of experience.

We do not yet have comparative numbers for women who opt for the lesser operation, the lumpectomy.

But we will have the first of those numbers before August.

Controversy in Willacoochee

I love small towns. Willacoochee, Ga., is one of my favorites. Willacoochee is located amongst the piney woods of South Georgia, and its mayor is the famous Lace Futch.

Lace once took on the federal government over the Willacoochee census. He claimed there were more people in town than the federal government had given it credit for.

Lace won the battle, scored more federal funds for his community, and built, among other things, recreation fields and a place for the old folks to go and quilt. Somebody wrote a story about Lace for the Los Angeles Times and it appeared on the front page.

There is a new controversy raging in Willacoochee these days. Give me a small town in an uproar over a big city stink anytime.

Myrtle Sutton lived in Willacoochee for years. After her husband died, she became very close to a white shepherd dog and, according to residents, took the dog with her everywhere she went.

A few months back, Mrs. Sutton broke her leg and had to be taken to the hospital in nearby Homerville. After leaving the hospital, Mrs. Sutton moved into a nursing home in Homerville and then her dog, the shepherd, up and died.

Mrs. Sutton could not be reached in the nursing home and her son refused to offer any information, and because the Suttons "always stayed off to themselves" according to Willacoochee residents, I had to give up on finding out the dog's name.

I'll call it Butch - I had a dog named Butch once - for the purpose of telling the rest of the story.

When Butch died, Mrs. Sutton's son contacted a funeral home in Homerville and arranged for the dog's burial. The funeral director put the dog in the back of his station wagon and drove it to the Willacoochee cemetery.

There, he buried Butch in a metal casket next to Mrs. Sutton's husband. Wilbert Vault Co. dug the grave and provided the vault in which the casket was sealed.

Thus, the controversy. Some citizens of Willacoochee do not think it proper that a dog should be buried in a human cemetery.

"I got kin buried there," said one resident. "It's a sacred place and I don't feel good about a dog being buried there."

"The Suttons loved their dog as much as some people love other people," said the funeral director. "If the people in Willacoochee are upset, they are going to have to get some laws concerning cemeteries."

Mayor Futch checked with the city attorney to see if there was any law against burying a dog in a human cemetery. The city attorney couldn't find one, but, according to the mayor, he's still looking.

"It never seemed necessary to have any city ordinance against burying a dog in the cemetery," said the mayor. "Everybody knows when your mule dies, you bury it in the field. When your dig dies, you bury it under the tree in your backyard."

Nobody knows what might happen next. Perhaps the city attorney will locate a law that will have the dog's remains moved elsewhere. Then again, maybe he won't.

I'm not going to take sides other than to say I would rather be buried next to a dog than a lot of people I know.

Meanwhile, rest in peace, Butch, if that's possible with all this commotion.

Sanctuary worker is back helping aliens

BROWNSVILLE, Texas (AP) — Just one day after being sentenced to two years probation for conspiring to transport illegal aliens, a Colorado church worker planned to spend the day doing what comes naturally to her: helping Salvadorans at a refugee halfway house.

Stacy Lynn Merkt, 29, was sentenced Wednesday by U.S. District Judge Filemon Vela for conspiring to transport three Salvadorans on the nation's so-called "underground railroad." The Colorado Springs, Colo. native could have received 15 years in jail and a $9,000 fine.

After sentencing, Ms. Merkt said she was surprised at the leniency of the sentence, saying she had expected to go to jail.

She planned to celebrate her freedom "by working in the garden, buying tortillas and teaching English" to refugees staying at the church-sponsored Casa Oscar Romero halfway house, said Diane Elder, co-director of the shelter.

Ms. Merkt is the first U.S. citizen connected to a nationwide Sanctuary Movement to be convicted for her activities.

Vela called Ms. Merkt, a member of a religious community in Colorado Springs, a woman of "high intentions and high ideals."

"You acted as a conscientious person who believes in love, charity and peace," Vela said.

But he told her "violating the law" out of moral motives "is not the way to go."

Vela said he shared her concern over the plight of Salvadoran refugees fleeing violence in their war-torn homeland.

Ms. Merkt said she plans to appeal her conviction.

"I'm no celebrity, I'm no martyr and I'm no felon. I am a woman with a heart and mind. My faith commitment connects me to people and to justice," she told the judge.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Robert Guerra said Ms. Merkt's conviction should signal others involved in the Sanctuary Movement that in South Texas immigration, laws are enforced.

"This trial and conviction should show the Sanctuary Movement that the law will be enforced in this district as it exists," Guerra said.

Ms. Merkt, a nun and reporter were arrested Feb. 17 on a rural South Texas highway while driving three Salvadorans, including an infant, from the Casa Oscar Romero to San Antonio.

The nun is serving one year's probation received in a plea-bargain and the reporter was never indicted.

Casa Romero, located about 10 miles from the Mexican border, is considered to be the first stop on a nationwide "underground railroad" providing assistance to illegal Central American immigrants.

Ms. Merkt and other sanctuary supporters, about 100 of whom crowded the courtroom Wednesday, contend that Salvadorans are political refugees, not economic aliens as the government asserts.

Refugees fleeing persecution in their homelands are protected by the federal Refugee Act of 1980 and United Nations protocol, sanctuary supporters say.

They say providing sanctuary to aliens is one way of expressing opposition to U.S. policy in El Salvador, Nicaragua, Honduras and Guatemala.

A caravan of sanctuary supporters from throughout Texas converged on the Rio Grande Valley about dawn Wednesday and held a silent vigil outside the courtroom before sentencing.

Several of the protesters, wearing buttons that read, "El Salvador is Spanish for Vietnam were photographed" by a cameraman from the Brownsville Police Department.

After sentencing, Ms. Merkt and her supporters gathered in the shade of a mesquite tree in the garden of the Casa Oscar Romero for a prayer service.

Ms. Merkt said she plans to continue working at the refugee halfway house indefinitely.

Two other sanctuary workers are scheduled to be tried later this summer for transporting illegal aliens.

Kearns pleads guilty to bungled assassination attempt

WACO, Texas (AP) — Saying he was "positive" he was the man who tried to kill a former federal prosecutor six years ago, the conspiracy trial of James R. Kearns came to a surprise ending when he plea bargained with government attorneys to save his wife from possible prosecution.

Kearns, 45, was charged with accepting $100,000 to murder former federal prosecutor James Kerr, of San Antonio, who was known for his zealous prosecution of narcotics and organized crime cases.

Wednesday's court session before a jury of eight women and six men was scheduled to begin at 9 a.m. After a 45 minute meeting between attorneys in U.S. District Judge William S. Sessions' chambers, Kearns announced his decision to change his plea if the government would not prosecute his wife.

"I have no consideration for myself in this plea bargain at all," the Revere, Mass., native told the judge.

Sessions, who moved the trial to Waco from San Antonio on a change of venue, set Kearns' sentencing for July 27 in San Antonio. Kearns could be sentenced to a maximum life sentence for conspiring to murder Kerr and up to 10 years in prison for assaulting him and fines $10,000.

Defense attorney Barry Haight said he discussed the plea bargain with his client after determining that the government's case against him was overpowering and that his wife might be in danger of being prosecuted.

"This morning I reviewed the testimony I received from the government Tuesday night and made the decision that the evidence appeared to be overwhelming," said defense attorney Barry Haight. "There was also the fact that his (Kearns') wife might be in jeopardy herself (of prosecution)."

"I discussed it with my client, and we decided to proceed with the guilty plea if the government would not proceed against his wife, which was the primary goal in his mind," Haight said.

Kearns' wife, Catherine, who sat alone outside the courtroom throughout the trial, declined comment on her husband's action.

Prosecutors say Kearns was hired by Jamie "Jimmy" Chagra to murder the prosecutor, who was conducting a large-scale drug trafficking investigation. Chagra pleaded guilty last month in a sealed agreement with federal prosecutors.

Kerr, who was driving from his San Antonio home to a nearby restaurant on Nov. 21, 1978, narrowly escaped death by ducking under the dashboard as a hail of up to 20 bullets smashed into the hood and windshield of his car.

The former prosecutor, who received only minor cuts on his head and hands from shards of flying glass, left San Antonio shortly after the incident and has been working as an administrative law judge at an undisclosed location.

Kearns said he entered the plea in exchange for a promise that government attorneys would not prosecute his wife on charges of obstruction of justice and suborning perjury.

Kearns pleaded guilty to both counts in the indictment — conspiracy to murder Kerr and using a .30-caliber carbine rifle to assault Kerr.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Ray Jahn, who prosecuted the Kearns case with his wife, LeRoy, also a federal prosecutor, declined comment other than to say he was "pleased with the results of the trial, very much so."

Sessions asked Kearns if he was guilty of conspiring to kill Kerr and of firing the shots into the prosecutor's car. Kearns responded, "Yes."

"Are you sure?" the judge asked.

"Positive," Kearns replied.

Chagra was acquitted of charges he paid for Wood's killing, while Charles Harrelson was found guilty of killing the judge.

Dear Abby Balding young man losing more than hair

By Abigail Van Buren
© 1984 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: My problem may seem silly to many people, but it is having a devastating effect on my life. I am an intelligent, average-looking 22-year-old male whose hair has been constantly thinning since I was 17 years old.

I know this has happened to other men, but for some reason I am unable to fully accept it. It is psychologically devastating to my happiness and productivity. Some mornings I don't even want to get out of bed and look at myself in the mirror.

I've lost all my confidence and zest for living, and I'm depressed most of the time. I have one year of college left, but no desire to finish now. I feel that a part of me is slowly dying day by day.

I have spent a fortune on so-called "hair-restoring" products, but they were all disappointing. Is there anything I can do to save the rest of my hair? Is there any information you can give me on hair replacements? Please don't suggest counseling because the money might be better used for reversing my condition. Please answer soon.

LOSING HAIR AND HOPE

DEAR LOSING: First, have a thorough physical checkup to make sure there is no medical reason for your excessive hair loss (endocrine deficiency or scalp disease, etc.). If there is none, then your early balding is probably an inherited trait, and there is nothing you can do about it.

In that event, there are three choices: Buy the best hairpiece you can afford. (Some are so cleverly designed they are almost impossible to distinguish from the real thing.)

Go the hair transplanting route, which is a long, expensive and often painful process that doesn't always turn out as hoped.

Seek counseling to help you accept this condition. When a man reacts so strongly to the loss of hair, there is usually more involved psychologically than meets the eye.

Luggage fits tight spots

Light is right for summer getaways

By Florence De Santis

NEW YORK (NEA) — With the beginning of the summer getaway season, fashion luggage makers have come up with colorful, well-designed pieces to fit the passenger area of planes. Garment bags are now made to go into the plane's closet or cases can slide into overhead bins.

Designs are becoming so exact that one luggage maker now offers a carry-on tailored to a particular plane. Ventura Travelware consulted the engineers at Boeing about the size of the overhead bins on the new 767 jumbo jet. In the Cougaroo Collection, Ventura created the largest piece of carry-on luggage yet made — just for the 767 bins.

Compartmentalized like other carry-ons in the collection, "767," as the piece has been named, is a soft-side 24-inch suitcase, but only 14 3/4 inches high, as opposed to the 17 1/2 inch height of the usual 24-inch case. Nine inches deep, it can carry a long-trip wardrobe, but because it's a carry-on the traveler need never wait for it to come off the plane.

Duffle bags have become popular as smaller carry-ons, and Fulton does a new bucket-side shape with sloping top and two leather handles. Its nylon tweed reinforces the sturdy construction. Hunting World, however, likes the classic tall, drawstring canvas duffel, with leather trim reinforcement and shoulder strap that is convertible to hand carrying.

For the in-between size of luggage piece suiting an overnight stay, luggage makers like the carry-on tote. French of California does its in tapestry with double leather reinforcement straps ending in handles. Lancel's 21-inch tote is crisply tailored entirely in canvas for a neat, handbag look.

A good idea for those who may come home with items purchased on the trip is the expandable tote, such as Fulton's nylon velvet with a zipper. When opened it has about 5 inches more room. Skyways incorporates the same idea in a duffel bag that turns inside out and opens up to become a really deep tote. Another tote idea is the rainproof style, such as Valguzza of Italy's synthetic rubber small tote that looks like a patent handbag. (NEWSPAPER ENTERPRISE ASSN.)

NEW IN SPECIALIZED lightweight luggage is Ventura's "767," which is specially engineered to fit the overhead bin on the new Boeing 767 jumbo jet. Of Cordura nylon in black, tan or Astro blue, the case's leather trim reinforces its soft construction. About $210.

Telephone buyers check service

One of the most frequent questions customers ask the AT&T is "What do I do when a phone that I buy breaks?" Customers who bought the telephone from the Bell system can get it repaired at an AT&T phone center or service agency. If it is still under warranty, repair is free. If the warranty has expired, they will be charged. AT&T will not repair non-Bell equipment. People who buy a phone from another source should make sure a repair service is offered.

LOOSE MARBLES

LISA PATMAN

By LISA PATMAN

If you think the Marbles household is a bit wacky, you should visit my neighbor a couple of houses down the street. A case in point:

A few evenings ago, she sat through three hours of the most horrible spine-chilling scary movie — one in which a thin, helpless babysitter is alone in the house with two small, sleeping children. The girl is defenseless, the wind is howling, and there is nothing good on television. Suddenly the phone rings and a creepy voice whispers, "have you checked the children?" The tension builds and the movie viewer is ready to run in and check on his children, whether he has any or not. Then a crazed killer gets loose and chases the babysitter all around the house, even though she never sees him. The girl is terrified, she's frantic, and she's desperately short of potato chips. You can see that the movie is horror personified.

My nutty neighbor sat through the entire movie and loved every thrilling, chilling minute of it. Then she got an idea. She knew that I, too, was home alone, glued to the television, unnerved by the thrilling, chilling plot, and she decided that she would get the best of me. She picked up the phone and dialed.

"Hello?"
 "Have you checked the children?" my neighbor wheezed into the phone.
 "I beg your pardon?"
 "Have you checked the children?" she repeated in the creepiest voice.

"What?"
 "HAVE YOU CHECKED THE CHILDREN?" she screamed in frustration.

"I don't have any children," the voice answered.
 "Isn't this the Marbles residence?" my poor, misguided neighbor whimpered.

"No, it isn't," answered whoever it was on the other end of the line.

Which not only goes to prove that my neighbor is crazier than I am, but also that she should wear her glasses when dialing telephone numbers.

I'm just glad for her sake that she doesn't watch X-rated movies. A misplaced obscene telephone call could get her into a lot of trouble.

LOVES HIS STUDEBAKERS—B.B. Holland stands among his collection of Studebaker automobiles. The 12 cars all run and are in good condition while several others, in various states of repair, can be found on the Holland homestead near Bryan. (AP Laserphoto)

Nine-acre display of Studebakers

By KATHY YOUNG
Bryan-College Station Eagle

BRYAN, Texas (AP) — B.B. Holland leads a double life: by day he's the mild-mannered principal of South Knoll Elementary; by night he's the sultan of Studebakers in the Brazos Valley.

More than a mere classic car collector, the Holland homestead is nine acres devoted to a Studebaker shrine. Twelve cars, all in good running condition, line the carport. But this is only the beginning. Off to the right, sits a solid looking '50 pickup under repair. Studebaker, of course. The shop houses a Studebaker under renovation from the frame up. Another storage shed holds sorted parts. To the rear of the property sit numerous Studebakers, collected for their parts.

Holland credits his love of Studebakers to his grandfather, the late E.L. Dillon.

"I was real close to my grandparents and my grandfather always had Studebakers," Holland said.

In 1967 when his grandfather got too old to drive he bought his car. The green '50, four-door sedan was nicknamed "Sheriff" by one of his daughters for its resemblance to the tank.

"It was in excellent condition when we got it," he said. "It only had 57,000 miles on it."

The cornerstone of his collection and a sentimental favorite, Holland says he would never sell it.

"It's a solid little car with 73,000 miles now," he said adding, "It's going to get thoroughly restored shortly."

In 1976, 10 years after Studebakers went out of production, Holland began to add to his collection.

"I joined the Studebaker Drivers Club in Houston and heard about a '57 Silver Hawk for sale. I bought it for two hundred dollars and towed it home," he said.

"All it needed was some transmission fluid added and it's been running fine ever since," he added.

The collection grew with the addition of a '63 Avanti sport coupe added in '77. He spent the next five years restoring it.

But the car he really longed for was a '50 bullet-nosed convertible.

"I had been wanting a '50 convertible for the last five years," he said.

"I like the '50's. I was in high school when it came out. A lot of people identify Studebaker with the bullet-nose," Holland said.

When Holland's dream convertible showed up for sale in Navasota, he got his car with one catch.

Borrowing continues despite high interest

By CHET CURRIER
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — One oddity about today's high interest rates is that they don't seem to discourage borrowing.

Businesses have been rapidly loading up on loans for months. So have individuals. And of course the federal government keeps on borrowing steadily in multibillion-dollar gulps.

In the 1970s, there was a ready rationale for borrowing at almost any cost. Interest rates might be at two-digit levels, but so was inflation — and as you paid back a loan over time, you did so with cheaper and cheaper dollars.

What's more, it made sense to borrow and buy because saving and waiting was futile. The price of any item you wanted kept rising.

Now, inflation is running under 5 percent. So buying to beat the next price increase is presumably no longer an urgent impulse.

The way many economists see it, today's borrowing binge is partly the result of financial deregulation. The old state usury laws that imposed upper limits on interest rates are gone.

Furthermore, many loans today — mortgages, for example, and even some auto loans — are made with floating or adjustable interest rates. This takes a big element of risk out of lending for financial institutions like banks.

"Why are we borrowing so much? Because it is so easy to borrow," said Edward Yardeni, economist at the Wall Street firm of Prudential-Bache Securities.

Right now these circumstances have some apparently positive effects. Many people and organizations that might otherwise have access to credit are getting the funds they need for, say, a house or the latest, most productive office equipment. All their credit-financed buying is helping to keep the economy growing at a brisk pace.

But credit cannot simply expand forever. At some indeterminate stretching point, the balloon bursts, with many painful consequences.

"If the economy continues to display surprising strength this summer, then only higher interest rates will impose the necessary financial discipline," Yardeni says. "The risk is that at higher rates we will whip us to death rather than into shape, even the sorry state of the international debt and domestic banking situations."

"To avoid such a calamity, we believe that the government should seriously consider permanent credit controls to regulate our insatiable appetite for goods and services bought on credit."

Maury Harris, economist at Paine Webber, agrees that the sea of controls looks tempting. But he maintains they would be "very risky" in practice.

In 1980, Harris recalls, the government briefly imposed a set of controls that contributed to a short but sharp recession.

Survivors say that they felt like 'goners' as big yacht foundered

QUEEN CHARLOTTE CITY, British Columbia (AP) — Survivors of a luxury yacht which foundered in 20-foot seas and 50-mph winds off the remote Princess Charlotte Islands said they felt like "goners" when their efforts to bail out the sinking ship failed.

The 14 passengers and six crew members of the 91-foot Royal Princess were all rescued by Canadian and U.S. Coast Guard helicopters after the ship sank Wednesday about 525 miles northwest of Seattle.

Five people remained overnight at Queen Charlotte General Hospital for treatment of hypothermia, said hospital spokeswoman Andrea Hunter.

"Considering the weather and considering there was no vessel within two hours away and considering all 20 people are alive and breathing, it went extremely well," said Claire Stewart of the Canadian Coast Guard.

Survivors of the six-hour ordeal praised one another for remaining calm and helping their fellow passengers despite seasickness, the cold and fright.

"It was that feeling of camaraderie that made it happen," passenger Katherine Cook, 34, of Vancouver, British Columbia, said of the rescue. "We all liked each other a lot."

The yacht, based in Tacoma, Wash., was on an 11-day expedition to Indian villages on the Queen Charlotte Islands which began June 20 when it encountered stormy seas.

The vessel's skipper, Frank Stoney, 47, of Nanaimo, British Columbia, said "monumental waves" were breaking over the life rafts when the yacht was abandoned at about 9:30 a.m. Wednesday.

"We tied the life boats together, but we also had to keep paddling to keep them from bumping into each other," he said.

Passenger Loren Smith, 25, of Seattle, said the passengers and crew had tried to save the foundering vessel by bailing.

Americans held in Cuban jails are only a tiny part of problem throughout world

By LAWRENCE L. KNUTSON
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — The 22 Americans being released from prison cells in Cuba represent only a small percentage of the Americans arrested and jailed around the world each year.

Over the decades many of these American prisoners have complained of harsh treatment, poor food, unsanitary living conditions and the culture shock caused by unfamiliar customs and language.

Often there is little U.S. diplomats can do to ease the conditions under which Americans are held or to obtain their release.

But over the last few years prisoner exchange treaties with a short but expanding list of countries have given the State Department a new alternative.

These agreements permit the transfer of people convicted of criminal charges in certain countries to serve their sentences in U.S. prisons if the prisoner and both governments agree.

Citizens of these nations who are convicted and sentenced to prison terms in the United States have the same privilege.

"We have an interest throughout the world in the fate of Americans held in jails in various countries, particularly in substandard jails," said John Hughes, spokesman for the State Department, in discussing the promised release by Cuban President Fidel Castro of most of the U.S. citizens held by Cuba on criminal charges. The release was arranged by Democratic presidential candidate the Rev. Jesse Jackson during his visit to Cuba on Wednesday.

"The (prisoner) transfer treaties have been a welcome thing for the families and friends of many persons in prison abroad and we think they have been a success," said one State Department official, speaking on condition he not be identified by name.

Such treaties are in effect between the United States and six other nations: Mexico, Canada, Bolivia, Peru, Turkey, and Panama.

Similar treaties have been signed with France and members of the European Common Market and U.S. officials are said to be "looking for every opportunity" to reach additional transfer agreements with other nations.

Last year, 53 U.S. citizens were returned to the United States under these treaties, bringing the total returned to 756 since the first such agreement went into effect in 1979.

The overall scope of the problem is larger.

Last year, a total 3,090 Americans were arrested on a wide variety of charges in 101 nations, according to the State Department.

At year's end, 1,815 Americans were in custody in 92 countries.

One U.S. official, speaking privately, said that while a variety of alleged criminal offenses are involved, the largest category involves illicit drugs.

He said that about 34 percent of those Americans in prison abroad were jailed on drug-related charges.

American consular officials monitor arrests of Americans and keep track of their status as a standard part of their jobs.

"We visit prisoners regularly," said one official. "We communicate complaints they may have to the appropriate authorities. We help with medical assistance if necessary. We assist with communications to family and friends in the United States or abroad. And we help with legal representation."

"But we cannot act as lawyers or provide legal advice and under normal circumstances we cannot act or intervene to spring an American citizen," he said.

"We advise American citizens to keep their noses clean when they are abroad and to be aware they have the responsibility to obey the sovereign law of the country they are in," he said.

Study looks at Austin growth

AUSTIN (AP) — Boom growth sparked by high-tech has meant many things, both good and bad, for Austin, where a University of Texas study shows increased income, shopping, crime and traffic.

Dowell Myers, a UT assistant professor of community and regional planning, said, "The challenge in Austin is to make the best of preserving our old quality of life while adding on some improvements."

"The irony is that the famous laid-back Austin life style and low costs of living are attractive to high-technology development, but the sharp rate of economic growth is damaging some of the factors in that attraction," said Myers, director of the study entitled "Quality of Life: Austin Trends 1970-1990."

While Austin has attracted several high-tech businesses, the city's quality of life is ranked behind that of other high-tech cities, according to Myers.

"Every city or community needs an attractive element that serves as an incentive factor to keep residents in an area and to lure others to it," said Myers.

Astro-Graph by bernice bede osol

This coming year you are likely to be luckier than usual, both in romance and in your social life. Others will be drawn to you and your popularity will be heightened.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Try to bring some balance into your life today by not making it all work and no play. A recreation break will do you a world of good. Find out more of what lies ahead for you for each season following your birthday by sending for your copy of Astro-Graph Mail $1 for each to Astro-Graph, Box 489, Radio City Station, N.Y. 10019. Be sure to specify birth date.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Your initial efforts may only be partially successful today, but don't use this as an excuse for quitting. A second try will prove more fortunate.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Do not think in petty terms today. If you put your mind to it, you could take something from which you've already benefited and expand it even further.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) Put your splendid imagination to work for you today in areas which could offer material rewards. Your chances for developing a winner are better than usual.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Any ventures or enterprises that you originate or over which you have direct control should turn out very lucky for you today. Delegate as little as possible.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Something is going on now behind the scenes that a reliable pal is masterminding on your behalf. He'll tell you about it if he can pull it off.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Things appear pretty good for you today, carewise. More importantly, something else which you have been hoping will happen looks like it will.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) If you feel your plans for advancing your status or career are well formulated, this is the day to put them into action.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Faith can work wonders for you today, even regarding things which you feel cannot be changed. Put it to work. Don't flatter and then expect positive results.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) In commercial dealings today with persons whose ideals and standards are on par with yours, both of you should profit rather handsomely.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Because your inclinations today will be to do more for others than you expect from them, something good will come back to you, although perhaps not immediately.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Sometimes it is necessary to take a calculated risk in order to better your lot in life. Today a gamble may be in order if the odds are tilted in your favor.

HITLER PAINTING—This painting is one of the 20 watercolors attributed to Adolf Hitler that will be shown for the first time starting June 29 in Florence, Italy. The painting will be shown along with masterpieces plundered from Italy during the Nazi era. (AP Laserphoto)

Showing of paintings attributed to 'Sunday painter' Adolf Hitler

FLORENCE, Italy (AP) — Watercolors attributed to a "very modest Sunday painter" named Adolf Hitler will be shown for the first time, along with masterpieces plundered from Italy during the Nazi era, in a major exhibition opening this month.

The paintings by the Nazi leader were obtained by Rodolfo Siviero, a secretive Italian government art sleuth, who was responsible for the recovery of the 141 masterpieces.

The works include a marble fragment by Michelangelo and paintings by Rubens, Memling, Tintoretto and Botticelli.

City art officials and Siviero's sister, Imelde, said it was the wish of the detective, a native of Florence who died last year at 71, that the works be shown together.

"My brother wanted a permanent museum for the city of Florence of the works he recovered from the Nazis, but he also wanted to show the poor art work which that Nazi scoundrel himself produced," said Miss Siviero.

"They certainly are not works of art, rather a curiosity," Florence's commissioner of culture, Giorgio Morales, said in an interview with The Associated Press.

Twenty watercolors signed "A. Hitler" will be shown, but officials said only 18 have been authenticated by two Munich experts hired to evaluate the works.

The paintings, most of them measuring about 8 inches by 10 inches, depict street scenes in Vienna and Munich, including, for example, the Hofbrauhaus beer hall in the Bavarian city.

They are believed to date from 1910 to 1914, when Hitler was in his 20s and eked out a living in the two cities by copying and selling picture postcards.

Pina Ragionieri, a museum curator who is in charge of press relations for the exhibit, said the Hitler works were also probably copied from postcards. "They clearly show he was a very modest Sunday painter," she said.

Just how Siviero obtained them is in keeping with the mystery that surrounded his career, which began as an undercover agent for Italian intelligence while he was studying art as a young man on a scholarship in Berlin.

Ms. Ragionieri said Siviero got them "directly or indirectly" from the wife of Martin Bormann, a member of Hitler's inner circle, in the predominantly German-speaking city of Merano in northern Italy in 1947.

Siviero's sister denied that version but refused to disclose their origin.

"I am fed up with all this buildup about Hitler's works, when interest should be centered on the real masterpieces recovered by my brother," she said.

Most of the works being shown were taken openly or smuggled out of Italy during the period of Hitler's alliance with Italy's Fascist dictator Benito Mussolini and later during the Nazi occupation of the country.

Some were simply sold for money, others carted off or, as in the case of the Flemish master Peter Paul Rubens' portrait of Italian Prince Andrea Doria on horseback, sold to Hitler on Mussolini's orders, according to the exhibit's records.

A painting by Venetian master Giambattista Tiepolo was stolen from a collection in Turin as part of a "Hitler group" intended by the dictator to be part of a Hitler museum in Linz, Austria. Hidden by the Nazis, the work was found by U.S. occupying forces and later returned to Italy in an agreement with West Germany worked out by Siviero, the exhibit records said.

During World War II, the detective worked with partisans and the British 8th Army to protect Italian art treasures.

Some works, however, were stolen after the war and also recovered by Siviero, who was known for his unorthodox style; he once posed as a buyer to recover a stolen Greek bronze from the Sicilian Mafia.

Morales said representatives of West and East Germany as well as five countries that helped in recovering stolen works — Spain, France, Yugoslavia, Britain and the United States — have been invited to attend the opening along with Italian President Sandro Pertini.

He said the show, which opens June 29 at the Palazzo Vecchio, will run at least until Dec. 31, when it will probably be made into a permanent exhibition on the third-floor of the fortress-like palazzo, once the home of the Medici dukes, the great Florentine art patrons.

Cutting horses, million-dollar stakes

BRENNHAM, Texas (AP) — With a few deft moves, veteran horseman Polly Hollar tightens the drawstrap on his saddle before mounting his horse to return to the corral for another work session of cattle cutting.

Hollar is one of many horse trainers in Washington County, specializing strictly in readying horses for million-dollar competitions around the nation.

A multiple champion himself, Hollar uses his ranch just west of Brenham on U.S. Highway 290, as a training center for cutting horses.

Guiding his horse toward a group of cattle bunched at the far end of the large holding pen, he is doing his day's work.

A soft, guiding nudge with a knee, a barely audible word of encouragement from the rider and the horse separates a calf from the herd.

Instinct dictates that this calf return to the herd. Now it's up to the horse to keep this animal from rejoining its companions for as long as possible — without help from the rider.

Dust swirls time and again as sudden moves to the right, the left, some fancy backstepping and tight turns keep the calf away.

Finally exhaustion overcomes the animal's instinct to rejoin its herd. Lethargic, it wanders to another corner of the corral.

After a good half hour of this, Hollar guides the horse toward the gate, dismounts and hands the reins to a helper.

"Good workout. He's learning, but I still had to help out here and there by using the reins," he grumbles.

A novice would never have noticed, but the experienced eyes of judges at a cutting futurity pick up such "mistakes" the second they occur.

A rider is not allowed to rein his horse during competition. In fact, the less reining and spurring a rider has to do, the better the horse will be rated, since judges look for natural ability in the animal.

"In such contests — really, in this business they are called futurities and stakes or superstakes — there are million dollar figures involved. You can't afford a mistake," Hollar said.

"Cutting is the biggest thing around and a lot of kids can become financially wealthy by winning, if they are good," the horseman explained.

Indeed, showing horses at high-priced contests is one of the biggest money-making ventures in Washington County.

Area horsemen questioned would not dare guess at the cash brought into the county through such contests, but agreed that training operations located in the county bring in "more than $1.2 million annually."

Extension Agent Bill Thane agrees. "That's a real conservative estimate, but I'd say it is fair enough," Thane said.

Hollar explained that training a horse for competition is really the first link in a chain ultimately resulting in more profit for the horse's owner.

The chain involves breeding, training, showing at competition, winning at competition and breeding a winner.

Lendl, Navratilova advance in Wimbledon Tournament

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — Pity the poor clay court specialist, who has overserved, underserved and misvolleyed his way into a heap of trouble on the carefully kept lawns of Wimbledon.

To the tennis purist, the grass at the All-England Lawn Tennis and Croquet Club is sacred. To the clay court player, it's a graveyard.

Only one seed has been ousted from this year's Wimbledon tournament so far. No. 10 seed, Anders Jarryd of Sweden, a classic, hard-serving clay court man, felled in the first round by American Scott Davis.

But a half dozen others, from French Open champ Ivan Lendl to Italian Open titlist Jimmy Arias, have hauled their chests from the fire only at the end of five-set marathons.

John McEnroe was to continue his title defense today against Rodney Harmon, while on Center Court, Sweden's Mats Wilander, the fourth seed, headed Pat Cash of Australia.

Also on Center Court, two women with four singles titles and 36 years at Wimbledon between them were to face tough American opponents. Britain's Virginia Wade challenged No. 5 seed Zina Garrison and No. 2 seed Chris Evert Lloyd played Betsy Nagelsen.

On Wednesday, the top seed and defending champ, Martina Navratilova, advanced to the third round with a hard-fought 6-2, 7-5 triumph over Amy Holton in 65 minutes, a bit long for her.

Lendl, who bested McEnroe on the Parisian clay, was tumbled from the Queens Club grass court tournament just 48 hours later by unheralded Milwaukeean Leif Shiras. Several times during the match, he was seen tapping his shoes as if to shake clay out of them.

On Monday, he clearly still hadn't made the transition to grass when he was stretched to five sets by Dick Stockton in the opening round.

On Wednesday, he did better, defeating South

African Derek Tarr 6-3, 6-1, 6-3, but still complained about the surface.

"Today the court was drier, and that made it easier for me to run and kept the ball from making too many bad bounces," he told reporters. "But I agree with Stockton that I am not a natural volleyer."

Arias, who outlasted Italy's Gianni Ocleppo on Wednesday in an epic 7-5, 5-7, 3-6, 7-6, 6-4 clash, complained that on grass, "it's twice as hard to hit passing shots."

He said he also has no notion of how to hit a second serve on the surface. "My kick serve is a useless sifter. I'm trying to slice, but I'm double-faulting all the time because the slice is not my usual second serve."

Others who've had trouble on grass included Johan Kriek, the No. 12 seed, who fell two sets back before rallying to beat Sweden's Stefan Edberg 4-6, 6-7, 6-4, 6-1, 6-1, and Tomas Smid of Czechoslovakia, the 13th seed, who needed five sets to get past Mark Kratzmann of Australia 6-3, 2-6, 6-7, 6-8, 6-6.

More fish in Lake Meredith?

Preliminary results from a study being conducted by the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department indicate that fishermen at Lake Meredith are experiencing their best success since the early 1970s, according to Joe Kraai, Fisheries Biologist from Canyon.

The study estimates are based on creel census statistics obtained by interviewing fishermen from sunrise to sunset on randomly selected days during April, May and June and through counting the number of fishermen on the lake during study day. The fishermen interviews result in a catch rate estimate, or, the number and pounds per hour caught at each of the lake's gamefish species. The fishermen counts result in an estimate of the number of fishermen using the lake and the total number of hours fished during the period.

Results to date indicate fishing has been very good for white crappie, white bass, walleye, smallmouth bass and largemouth bass. Statistics for April and May are as follows: 37,568 fishermen fished for over 139,000 hours and caught 29,441 white crappie weighing 14,747 pounds; 20,613 white bass weighing 13,405 pounds.

Warren to be honored

The Hart Warren Pro-Am Tournament will be held Monday at the Pampa Country Club golf course.

The tournament is being held in honor of Warren, who is retiring after 29 years as the head pro at the Pampa club. Warren will also be honored with a retirement dinner at 7 p.m. Monday night at the country club.

The tournament gets underway at 1 p.m. Saturday with a shotgun start. It will be a 4-man, best ball format.

There are 120 entries expected.

Blue team loses to Canadian

Pampa Blue (Energy-Agri) was defeated by Canadian, 11-3, in Senior Babe Ruth baseball action Wednesday night.

Mike Kilgo had a perfect 3 of 3 night at the plate for Pampa. Richard Fishburn and Gary Coleman had one out apiece.

Pampa Blue, 1-4, will play Canadian again at 7:30 p.m. Saturday night at Optimist Park.

Three Senior League games are scheduled Sunday. Pampa Red visits Dumas, Pampa Blue travels to Booker and Pampa Gold hosts Perryton.

Overstreet funeral held on Wednesday

BIG SANDY, Texas (AP) — In funeral services at the small town school that he gave a big name, Miami Dolphins running back David Overstreet was remembered as a man who accomplished much in a short span and as an athlete "who will always be missed."

Hundreds of people, young and old, rich and poor, flocked to the auditorium of Big Sandy School Wednesday to attend the service for Overstreet, 25, who was killed in a fiery car crash on Sunday.

Members of the Dolphins' football team were honorary pallbearers. Active pallbearers included Billy Sims, the Detroit Lions star who shared the backfield with Overstreet at the University of Oklahoma, and Jim Norman, his high school coach.

Also in attendance were Larry Switzer, the coach who recruited Overstreet to Oklahoma, and Don Shula, the Dolphins' coach.

It was an emotional service in the standing room only, 10-seat auditorium, where Overstreet's coffin sat before a stage lined with flowers. At least two family members came so overwrought they had to be led from the room.

But the speakers who eulogized Overstreet urged them to think of his life rather than his death and to think of a spirit being free rather than his body in the grave.

"I know David will always be with us," said Norman, counting the days when Overstreet rushed for more than 3,000 yards and scored 56 touchdowns to lead the Big Sandy Wildcats to a state championship in their league. His memory will be with me as one of my own sons."

Shula said that when he first heard Overstreet was in a car wreck he asked, "how bad was he hurt?" and was shocked to learn that he died.

"It's a real test of courage and faith. As a football coach you deal with wins and losses. When the loss involves a human life, this is when you're really tested," Shula said.

Most of the town of 1,300 turned out for the funeral service.

Six miles down the road from the auditorium on Texas Highway 155, a concrete truck was pouring a platform for gasoline pumps at a service station.

Overstreet died instantly about 6 a.m. Sunday after his 1980 Mercedes ran into the pumps and exploded.

Smith County Justice of the Peace Mitch Shamburger said that judging from the wreckage and skid marks stretching a tenth of the mile down the highway, Overstreet was traveling more than 70 mph when he apparently fell asleep at the wheel, striking a utility pole and then skidding or rolling through an intersection into the gas station.

He was driving from Dallas to the home of his mother, Mertie Overstreet, in Big Sandy.

SWC reactions vary on TV ruling

DALLAS (AP) — The U.S. Supreme Court's decision to break the NCAA's hold over college football's television rights has Southwest Conference officials wondering what the ruling will mean for their teams.

In a 7-2 vote, the high court Wednesday voided the NCAA's exclusive rights to control the television of college football games, ruling that NCAA contracts worth $281 million violate federal antitrust laws.

The decision allows individual colleges to negotiate their own deals with television networks for broadcasting football games.

Bill Morgan, media director for the Southwest Conference, said the Supreme Court's decision was not unexpected.

"Right now we need to see what our options are... if the conference could get into a package deal or if schools want to handle it individually," he said.

The high court's 7-2 decision instructed the lower courts to hold hearings to work out details of the NCAA's curtailed powers.

The decision came after the universities of Oklahoma and Georgia challenged the NCAA's power to make television contracts for collegiate football games with ABC, CBS and Turner Broadcasting.

The two universities claimed they could make more money if they could negotiate their own TV contracts. The result, they said, would be more regionally televised games.

DeLoss Dodds, athletic director for the University of Texas at Austin, said the Supreme Court opinion was 51 pages long, "and right now I know only two things — one, the court ruled against the NCAA plan and two, they referred their decision to lower courts."

The ruling will apparently invalidate this year's NCAA contracts with the networks.

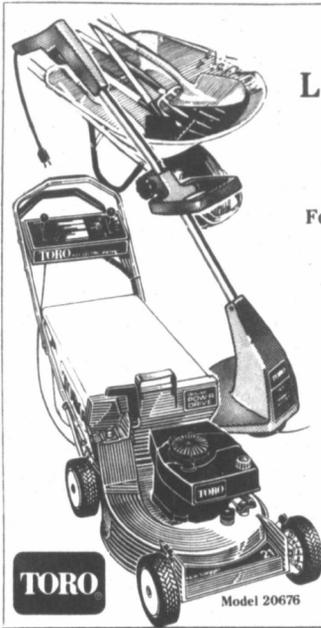

Jackie Sherrill, athletic director and head football coach at Texas A&M University, said he realized the opinion of the court was based on law.

"I expect the ruling to produce lots of scrambling among the schools between now and Sept. 1," Sherrill said. "As far as Texas A&M

Game postponed

The City Little League Tournament game between Vance Hall and Dean's Pharmacy last night was postponed because of rain.

The semi-final game will be played at 7 p.m. tonight with the winner meeting Dixie Parts at 7 p.m. Friday night in the championship round.
