

Limited funds force Pampa police to rely on informants

BY JEFF LANGLEY
Senior Staff Writer

Because of limited funds and manpower, Pampa officials must rely on "snitches" and must sneak regular police officers under cover to buy small amounts of narcotics in their enforcement of drug laws here.

That method of investigation usually results in charges against small-time street dealers and drug users, while higher ups and more prominent residents escape arrest, law enforcement officials concede.

"We mainly go after the dealers—that's our approach to enforcement," Police Chief J.J. Ryzman said.

"We always wind up getting some of the users as a result of getting some of the pushers," he added.

"All of the feedback I get is that the community wants strict drug enforcement. I think we went through a period of apathy several years ago. We've come out of that," the chief said.

Ryzman said his department makes drug enforcement the top priority from time to time, then switches to another area of crime. The priorities must be shifted to get the most deterrent out of the funds available, he said.

The Pampa Police Department's concentrated effort in drug enforcement has included a just-completed four-month undercover investigation that brought about the arrests of 48 local residents on drug-related charges (see story this page).

Assistant District Attorney David Hamilton is one of the officials who pointed out that because Pampa is a small town with limited funds, local officers must use the paid informants to develop drug cases.

"Most places, especially the larger towns, have gone away from using snitches and getting search warrants. They use full-time undercover officers," Hamilton said.

Pampa deals with drugs

One of a series

The local system results in a few mistakes, the prosecutor said. The informants can give police wrong or outdated information, he said. Officers also can get a tip that a local resident has a large quantity of drugs for sale, only to find a small amount of pot or paraphernalia by the time they get a warrant and raid the suspect's home, he said.

"It's either use the informants and make a few mistakes, or don't do it (enforce the law)," Hamilton said.

The prosecutor said Pampa police officers in civilian clothes often purchase drugs, usually just small amounts, from street dealers. Higher ups in a drug network won't sell to people they don't know, he said. Penetrating the groups takes patient work by full-time undercover officers, and the purchase of large quantities of drugs takes large quantities of cash, he pointed out.

"We have to operate haphazardly because of the lack of money and manpower," Chief Ryzman said in discussing his limited budget and the fact that his department has no full-time narcotics squad.

In the current fiscal year, the department was allocated $10,000 for drug investigations. The money is budgeted to pay for drug purchases and to pay the department's informants. The investigating officers' salaries and expenses are paid from the department's regular budget. Still, the budgeted cash won't buy a large quantity of "hard" drugs. Even the cost of buying small amounts of marijuana has gone up, Ryzman pointed out. He said an ounce or "lid" of marijuana that sold for $10 seven or eight years ago now goes for $75 to $80.

"It's hard to believe inflation has hit the drug market like it has," the chief said. "We need more money and the personnel to work drugs the way they should be worked."

Ryzman said one law enforcement tool that has helped in drug cases is the ability to confiscate a convicted dealer's car.

"We have several cars we're looking at in this bust," he said.

Both officials are sensitive to allegations that local drug busts more often involve only poor "street people," addicts and young drug users, while they acknowledge that drug dealing is a big business and that drug use penetrates all levels of society.

Hamilton said he knows that drug use isn't limited to the types of people usually arrested here and that today's drug users include doctors, lawyers, bankers, businessmen and other professionals.

"I've got file cabinets full" of intelligence information on more prominent drug users and dealers, Hamilton said. "But what I know and what I can prove are two different things."

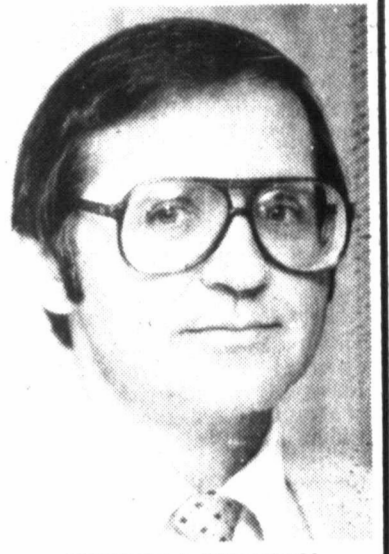

"They're isolated, and it's hard to make cases on it," he said.

The prosecutor said more prominent people "have more to lose" and keep their drug use to themselves.

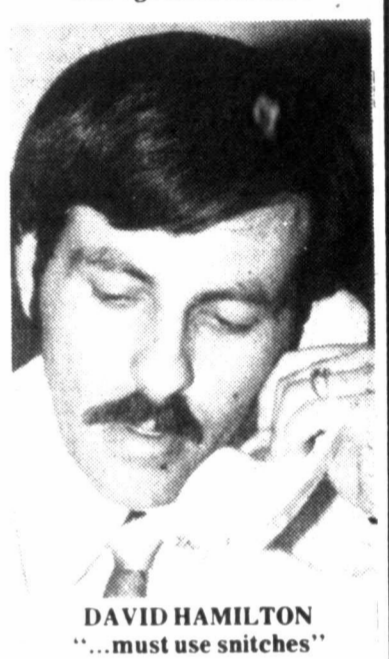

"They don't go around bragging about it," he said.

The main drug suppliers making the real money "don't sell to strangers," he said.

Five more arrested as major drug roundup continues

Pampa police arrested five more people Tuesday afternoon in a continuing roundup of suspects in the biggest local drug bust ever.

The latest arrests raised to 48 the total number of people taken into custody on drug-related charges as a result of a four-month undercover investigation. Those arrested in the drug bust have included 47 adults and one juvenile.

Police Chief J.J. Ryzman said officers were searching this morning for five more suspects wanted on felony drug warrants.

The city jail remained jammed beyond its normal capacity this morning, the chief said. The lack of space required that many of the drug suspects sleep on mattresses on the floor Tuesday night, he added.

The newest suspects and their charges and bonds include:

Whitney Dean Hopkins, 22, 506 Davis, delivery of a controlled substance, conspiracy to deliver a controlled substance and possession with intent to deliver a controlled substance, bonds totaling $30,000.

Alan J. Dallas, 20, 2120 N. Dwight, delivery of marijuana, $10,000.

Weldon Black, 19, Rt. 2, two counts delivery of marijuana;

Pamela D'Anne Spangler, 22, 1230 Finley, delivery of a controlled substance and possession of a controlled substance, bonds totaling $20,000.

Steven Echols, 21, 2200 Beech, delivery of a controlled substance and possession of a controlled substance, bonds totaling $20,000. It was incorrectly reported that Echols was in custody on Tuesday morning.

Ryzman revealed the results of the marathon investigation on Tuesday morning. The police department's drug investigation, conducted with the assistance of the local district attorney's office, began in late August, the chief said. The probe was coordinated by two Pampa narcotics officers, and most available officers participated at some point, he said.

The additional suspects being sought by police will bring the total netted in the investigation to more than 50, more than twice the number arrested in any previous drug bust here, he said.

Drugs involved in the arrests include methamphetamine (speed), LSD (acid), marijuana and assorted pills.

The undercover drug probe also revealed the sale of LSD at the Pampa Middle School, police said. Police said they busted the LSD dealer, but not before he had sold 1,000 doses, or "hits," of the drug for about $7 each.

McLean gets mandate to enforce leash law

By CATHY SPAULDING
Staff Writer

McLEAN — Borrowing a term from President Reagan's landslide re-election, city officials say they have a "mandate" from residents to enforce a new dog control ordinance.

In a city poll asking whether or not the dog ordinance should be enforced, 84 percent of the people responding said they favored the ordinance, while 13 percent did not.

The ordinance prohibits dog owners from allowing their dogs to run at large. The city levies a fine of $25 for the first offense and $50 for the second offense.

The ordinance incensed some town dog owners, who complained in the pages of the town's weekly newspaper. Their bone of contention was that the city had better things to do than to "chase dogs," and that time and money could be better spent such matters as building a teen center, clearing sewers and alcohol-drug abuse programs.

Some questioned the safety of the animal shelter, located in the city barn. One resident wrote "if you are truly concerned with the stray dog problem, may I ask why the majority of dogs that have been caught in your 'raw meat' baited trap have been pets in their own neighborhood?"

Other residents wrote in defense of the city, noting their frustration with what one letter writer called "a nuisance for citizens who try to keep their property clean, but cannot because of the overturned trash cans and 'calling cards' left by our friends' and neighbors' unleashed dogs."

Caught in the middle of the fracas, the council decided to ask the citizens whether they wanted the dog ordinance enforced. The council decided to insert the questionnaires — reading "Do you want the council to continue enforcing the dog ordinance: yes, no" — in city utility bills. The question was also printed in The McLean News.

The "ballots" were counted by two area residents during the council's regular meeting Tuesday. Of the 333 ballots returned, 289 showed a "pro-ordinance" response while 44 voted no. Three ballots were marked undecided.

"We now have a feel of the population," said McLean mayor George Terry, declaring that city workers are going to start picking up loose dogs again.

City officials plan to issue an open letter to residents to explain their decision to enforce the ordinance.

Following the meeting, Terry showed council members where the stray dogs will be kept. Two

City agrees to renew study on Kentucky paving project

By LARRY HOLLIS
Staff Writer

Pampa city commissioners Tuesday morning reached a general agreement to renew study of a paving project for Kentucky Avenue from Price Road to Plum Street.

Jack McAndrew, property owner in the area, asked the commission to consider the paving project again.

McAndrew and other property owners had asked the commission in November, 1983, to consider paving the street. But after some problems in getting all property owners to agree to put up their shares of the costs, the commission dropped the project in April.

McAndrew said he had heard the city was planning to haul more dirt to the caliche-based street to fill in the holes and ruts.

"Why don't we go in and pave it and get it over with?" he asked the commission.

He said the street is facing increased traffic from the industry in the area and from new development additions being located nearby. The street is caliche-based, but rain and snow causes chuckholes to form and makes the surface rough, he said.

"The bottom line is, traffic is heavy," he claimed. "We need to pave it." And there's "not that good of a base underneath it," he said.

Questioned by commissioners, he said no recent efforts had been made to contact the two dissenting property owners who had previously said they could not put up their share of the paving cost.

Commissioner Clyde Carruth said the city would like to avoid the property assessment route if possible. He said the city can only charge 8 percent interest for financing the property owners' shares under an assessment, but the city would have to pay about 13 percent interest for the money.

He asked McAndrew if the owners who had agreed previously to pay their shares in one payment would still be willing to do so.

McAndrew, who owns the most property in the area, said he would do so, but he cannot speak for the others.

Forrest Cloyd, technician with the Engineering Department, said there's a possibility of seeking urban development grants for the project, but there's no guarantee of getting them.

Commissioner David McDaniel said "quite frankly" the matter comes down to the response of property owners putting up their shares of the construction costs.

He said the area is growing and will be more important to the city as an industrial area and with other developments nearby. He said the city should take a look at the project again.

Carruth said the city needs to decide what size of paving project needs to be considered for the street, whether it be 37 feet or 48 feet wide. Mayor Calvin Whatley said the larger width would probably be better because of the number of trucks needing turning space.

The commission, without taking any official action, asked Cloyd to study the project for further consideration.

In other matters, the commission held a public hearing on a request by Furr's Family Center to get a zoning change from Multi Family District to Specific Use Permit for Tract D, Section 101, Block 3, I&GN RRC survey.

Jack Looney, Furr's representative, said the permit would apply only to a section of the land, commonly called Kelley's horse lot. The land will be used for expansion of the current Furr's building on Hobart.

The expansion area will be 150 feet deep and 300 feet wide, Looney said.

In Planning and Zoning Commission meetings, Looney had

Republicans say votes vanished

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas Republicans have gone to court to try to win back an historic Election Day victory they claim was stolen from them after the election.

State GOP Chairman George Strake said Tuesday that 2,385 absentee ballots "apparently disappeared" between Election Day and a Nov. 15 recount of a Harlingen justice of the peace race.

The first count gave Republican Gary Thornburg a 155-vote win over incumbent Democrat Eloy Cano. It was the GOP's first win in the Rio Grande Valley since Reconstruction.

But the Democrats asked for a recount, which produced a 67-vote win for Cano.

The state and Cameron County Republican parties filed suit in Brownsville to challenge the recount. Strake said GOP lawyers found 61 election law violations. The total absentee vote tallied in the recount was 2,385 votes less than the election night total had been, Strake said.

The lawsuit also asks for court review of Democratic County Commissioner Adolph Thomae Jr.'s 1,200-vote win over Republican Juanita Brodecky. Strake said a tabulating effort throws Thomae's win "into question."

U.S. claims Iranians encouraged hijackers

WASHINGTON (AP) — As the bodies of two Americans slain during the hijacking of a Kuwaiti jetliner were returned to the United States today, Vice President George Bush called for "patient but certain justice" against the killers.

The bodies of Charles F. Hegna and William L. Stanford, both employees of the U.S. Agency for International Development, were flown to Andrews Air Force Base aboard a C-141 aircraft from Frankfurt, West Germany.

With family members of the two victims standing by, Bush said, "We shall know their murderers with the long memories of those who believe in patient but certain justice."

"Wanton murder of the innocent is terrorism that no amount of incantation can disguise."

The flag-draped caskets bearing the two bodies were carried from the aircraft by eight military pallbearers and placed in white hearses. Burial will be at Arlington National Cemetery.

Hegna and Stanford each were the fathers of four children. Many relatives of both victims were present for the ceremony at the base, including Hegna's widow, Edwina, who wept during the proceedings. An AID official said Stanford's widow was returning to the United States from Pakistan.

Hegna and Stanford were returning to their post in Karachi, after completing an audit in Yemen, when the four hijackers forced the Kuwaiti jet on which they were flying to land in Tehran.

Once the two victims and the surviving passengers of the hijacking, including two other Americans, had departed Tehran on Tuesday, the White House accused Iranian of encouraging "extreme behavior" by the hijackers and said effective action by Iranian authorities could have prevented the killings.

White House spokesman Larry Speakes said President Reagan was outraged by Iran's behavior and he demanded that Tehran authorities agree to the extradition of the four captured hijackers. He said Iran has become a "safe haven" for hijackers.

"Many aspects of the Iranian government's handling of the situation raise profound and disturbing questions to which we are seeking answers," Speakes said.

Speakes was clearly skeptical about Iran's claim that it had sought a peaceful conclusion to the five-day ordeal and that Iranian security forces who stormed the aircraft Sunday night were responsible for the hijackers' surrender.

First class postage cost will increase to 22 cents

WASHINGTON (AP) — First class postage will rise to 22 cents effective Feb. 17, the Postal Service board of governors announced today.

The governors voted in closed session Tuesday to accept the recommendation of the independent Postal Rate Commission, postal service officials said. The decision was announced at today's open meeting.

Last year, the postal service recommended that postage rise to 23 cents in 1985, but the rate commission scaled that back. The commission lowered the planned increase because lower than expected inflation had dampened costs for the postal service.

Postage last increased in 1980. In that year the rate commission turned down a postal service proposal for 20-cent rates, but the postal governors overruled the commission and put that price into effect anyway.

This year the governors could have done the same and insisted on a 23-cent rate, but did not do so. That would have required a unanimous vote, however, and the vote breakdown on accepting the 22-cent postage charge was not known immediately.

In addition to 22-cents for first class letters, post cards will rise a penny to 14 cents each under the new charges.

Mailers of heavy items will get a break, however. The 20-cent rate now drops to 17 cents for each extra ounce of first class postage. That 17-cent charge will remain unchanged.

The governors also accepted other rate commission recommendations including:

—No change in the charge for priority mail.

—Increases ranging from 15 percent for second class regular items down to 8 percent for the fourth class book rate.

—A 13 percent hike for third class mail and 15 percent boost for express mail.

The rate commission's recommendations were based on having each category of mail pay its own way. Those recommendations have generated controversy between bulk mailing firms and newspaper publishers, with the publishers claiming they pay too much in relation to the advertising mail.

The postal service no longer receives subsidies from the federal government for its operations, although it does receive some money to compensate for special low rates offered to non-profit charities and some local newspapers. Those are considered subsidies for the papers and charities, however, not the postal service itself.

met with neighborhood residents to reach agreements with the development of the land.

He said Furr's would provide additional parking, restrict truck deliveries between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m. and construct an 8-foot tall block fence to cut down on refuse problems in the area.

Looney said Furr's also is considering placing a playground in the southeast corner of the lot.

McDaniel said the lot had been a matter of controversy in the past whenever any zoning changes had been proposed. He said if an agreement had been reached between Furr's and the neighborhood residents, "that's super."

No one voiced any objections to the zoning change request at the hearing.

In other business, the commission adopted on second reading the 1984 Electrical Code. In related action, the commission approved the appointments of Johnny Quarles and Bobby Burns as members of the city's Electrical Board.

The commission also approved on second reading an ordinance granting a Specific Use Permit for Lot 1, Block 12, Section II of the North Crest Addition for the location of a clinical pharmacy in the North Crest Medical Plaza.

Commissioners authorized the payment of $110,711.84 to Lewis Construction Co. for completion of street repairs.

Following an executive session, the commission named City Attorney Don Lane, also a member of the Lane and Douglass law firm, as counsel to represent the city in a lawsuit.

Dale Addison Wall of Wheeler has sued the city and Pampa Police Department, claiming he was falsely arrested in 1982.

In other action, commissioners approved salary changes and accounts payable.

Middle School concert slated

Pampa Middle School choirs will celebrate Christmas at their annual concert 7:30 p.m. Thursday at the Middle School Auditorium.

The six choirs representing grades 6, 7 and 8 will present traditional and contemporary Christmas songs, according to director Elena Donald. Nearly 300 pupils are enrolled in the PMS choir program.

The choral program has won numerous awards in the 15 years Donald has been associated with it. The PMS mixed choirs also perform at area churches during the holiday season.

Job training scheduled

Applications for the Texas Panhandle Community Action job training program will be taken from 8:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday at 208 W. Browning.

The program is designed to prepare youth and unskilled adults for entry into the labor force and to provide job training to economically disadvantaged people.

A copy of each applicant's birth certificate is required. Those wanting more information may contact Vickie Early, 665-0081.

The prosecutor said the problem goes back to time and money needed to make the bigger cases.

The police chief agrees. "The higher echelon is hard to penetrate. We go back to people, power and bucks," Ryzman said.

Hamilton, however, makes no apologies for the arrests of the "lower-level" dealers and users. "Maybe we're moving in the right direction, but it takes a little longer with our limited resources," he said.

The prosecutor said those busted can be made to testify before a grand jury, another of the more effective tools in enforcing drug laws and deterring drug use, he said.

"Those people can be made to tell you where they got it. It's the rock bottom place to start," Hamilton said. "I get names and information from those people."

The prosecutor will present the mass of drug cases to a grand jury on Thursday. He said the scheduled grand jury session may have some local dopers worried about who is "singing" about whom.

In part three of this series on Thursday, we will examine the tactics used by law enforcement officers in their undercover investigation in an interview with the new executive director of the Texas Civil Liberties Union, who says society would be better off without drug laws, and likened the local police's method of serving search warrants to "gestapo tactics."

dog pens — one for males, one for females — were built inside the city garage. The pens are bordered by chain-link fencing that reaches almost to the roof. The males and females are kept apart by a fence about six feet high. There are no outside runs for the dogs.

Terry explained if the dogs caught are not claimed within 72 hours (three days) they will be put to sleep. He added that he tries to notify the dog owners as soon after the dog is picked up as possible. "And we clean the pens every day," Terry said, adding that the dogs will be washed and treated for fleas when they are taken to the pens. Dogs must have proof of vaccination and a license before they are returned by their owners.

Terry said that nearly 15 dogs were picked up in the two months the ordinance was enforced, with not more than four or five dogs being kept at the pens at the most.

Seven dogs were put to sleep. The ordinance was not enforced during the month that the balloting was held.

In other business, council members took no action on buying telemetering equipment because no bids were received. They plan to keep waiting for bids.

The council voted to let bids on a new city pick-up truck and appointed Sam Haynes and Wanda Lamb to the Lovett Library Board.

Miami band trip, contest approved

Miami High School band students will be able to go to a music contest and band trip in May, school officials decided Monday, it may be the band's last music contest in their old band uniforms.

After meeting with band parents Monday, Miami school board members voted to allow the band to attend a band contest and trip May 2-3 to Sandy Lake, an amusement park north of Dallas.

They also authorized the purchase of 45 concert-marching band uniforms and a drum major's uniform for the 1985-86 school year. Miami ISD superintendent Bill Vestal said a committee will be formed to approve a design of the band uniform. Then bids will be let from band uniform tailors. Vestal estimated that each uniform could cost about $200.

Board members also agreed to pay for private transportation to a family who lives in a remote part of northern Roberts County. Vestal said the family lives north of the Canadian River in the Red Camp area. The school pays for transportation from remote homes to school bus stops because it may be costly and time consuming to drive a school bus to these areas.

"You get barren up in that area. It's pretty desolate," Vestal said. "A lot of area, not many kids."

The board accepted a bid of $17,461 from Culbertson - Stowers Chevrolet for a van-bus.

The board took no action the annual senior trip.

Christmas program slated at Miami

MIAMI — Members of the Miami High School band will join Miami Elementary School students in celebrating the Christmas season 7 p.m. Thursday at the Miami school auditorium.

The band, under the direction of Dana Reynard, will present six numbers including such Christmas classics as Mel Torme's "Christmas Song" (Chestnuts Roasting on an Open Fire) and Jay Livingston's "Silver Bells." They will also play other holiday songs and medleys as well as the song "All Time High" from the James Bond movie "Octopussy."

Elementary pupils will also share in the celebration as each of the grades kindergarten through sixth will present a special program.

A bake sale will follow the concert.

White Deer hires science teacher

WHITE DEER — The new science teacher at White Deer Junior High may not be a familiar face in the Panhandle, but Bryan-College Station residents would quickly recognize him as the Channel 3 weatherman.

White Deer school trustees Monday hired KBTX weather forecaster Steve Drillette to teach seventh and eighth grade science at White Deer Junior High School. Drillette graduated from Texas A & M University in 1983 with a Bachelor of Science degree in meteorology. A secretary with White Deer Independent school district said Drillette lacks six hours in getting his bachelor's degree in education and was hired on an emergency permit.

Drillette replaces instructor Rene Haiduk, who is pregnant.

School trustees also accepted the resignation of high school girls' basketball coach L.R. McIntosh, who will join the ministerial staff of Keeler Baptist Church in Borger.

His resignation becomes effective at the end of the girls' basketball season, which would come in February if the team does not make the post-season playoffs.

Schlueter says no Texas ad tax forseen for '85

AUSTIN (AP) — Rep. Stan Schlueter says the state's media executives have no reason to gear up for a 1985 battle against his proposal to tax advertising.

"As far as I'm concerned the discussion of an advertising tax this session is not necessary because the speaker and the leadership of the House have decided there's not going to be a tax bill this session," Schlueter said.

"So the folks in the media can relax for two more years," he added in a Tuesday speech to the Society of Professional Journalists.

The Killeen lawmaker, chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, stirred up one of this year's most heated legislative battles with his ad tax proposal. The plan was killed after a lobbying and editorial effort by media executives.

Schlueter said the media lobbyists did an awful job and then tried to persuade Texans he was out to get them.

"I've always said that when a lobby gets in trouble and they can't make their case with the facts, the first thing they do is holler 'foul play' or 'vendetta,'" he said.

Opponents of the ad tax "gave the poorest, weakest testimony of anybody who has ever appeared before the Ways and Means Committee," said Schlueter.

"The advertising tax was not singled out. It was not picked on. It just became one of those where the case had not been made it was any more detrimental to the economy than any other tax," he said.

Bonner McLane of the Texas Association of Broadcasters told the meeting that the fight against the Schlueter proposal was a hurry-up effort.

Some of our meetings were hilarious. The newspaper people had one set of numbers and we'd have another set.

MASS AMBULANCE LOADING—Teachers and staff members of a San Angelo elementary school assist police and fire officials in loading some of the 23 children stricken during a school choir performance into ambulances Tuesday afternoon. The multiple cases of hyperventilation and fainting were caused by a combination of heat, exhaustion and a lack of air flow during the performance, officials said. The children were treated at San Angelo hospitals and released. (AP Laserphoto)

Economist: 10,000 Texas farms could fail in 4 years

AUSTIN (AP) — President Reagan's proposal to slash farm price subsidies over the next four years could cause 10,000 Texas farms to go out of business, a state economist says.

The Reagan administration has proposed halving subsidy payments to farmers, and that would result in "chaos in rural America," said Ronald Knutson of the Texas Agricultural Extension Service.

Knutson, who last week met with Reagan administration officials in Washington, said the president wants to move agriculture in a direction that would make it depend more on market factors and less on government help.

Owners of the 50,000 medium-sized farms in the state would suffer most under the proposal, Knutson said.

He said 5 percent to 10 percent of those farmers probably would be ruined financially if the Reagan plan is approved by Congress next year.

"A lot of farmers will be hurt in the process. The unfortunate part of this whole thing is it will end up hurting those farmers that the government program was designed to protect," he said.

Texas has an estimated 190,000 farms.

The farm subsidy program pays farmers the difference between the government target price for a crop and the market price for it. The program was created during the Depression.

Although subsidies ranged from $3 billion to $5 billion a year during the 1970s, Knutson said the federal government is spending about $10 billion annually on the program in the face of declining farm exports.

The Reagan proposals likely will surprise many Texas farmers, Knutson said, noting that 70 percent to 80 percent of the state's farmers voted for Reagan in this year's election.

"It's a little ironic since farmers voted so heavily for Reagan. On the other hand, he ran on a campaign of cutting federal spending. Most farmers anticipated some cuts, but I don't think they anticipated them being this large," he said.

Despite the gloomy predictions, Knutson said the extension service isn't taking a position on the proposed cuts.

Illness overtakes children at school play rehearsal

SAN ANGELO, Texas (AP) — About 55 students and teachers were in the cafeteria of Fort Concho Elementary School, rehearsing for a school Christmas program, and everyone seemed in good spirits, choir director Jim Wynne said, except that some students were complaining of being hot.

Then, Wynne said, a boy in the audience got pale and started reacting to something.

"Then I noticed that a girl seemed to have a sleepy look on her face. She seemed to be upright. Other students in the audience and choir started reacting. They had glassy eyes and some were dragging their feet."

Within minutes, students were dropping all over the cafeteria, school officials said. Parents arriving at the school about 3 p.m. Tuesday were alarmed to see children being carried out on stretchers to waiting ambulances.

A doctor said it appeared one student had fainted, perhaps from heat exhaustion, and that sympathetic hysteria set in.

Twenty-three students, ranging in age from 9 to 11, were taken to a hospital emergency room, but doctors quickly assured relatives that the children were all right and would be able to leave shortly.

In the midst of the confusion at Shannon West Texas Hospital, Dr. Ron Thompson emerged to offer a preliminary report on medical tests that had been conducted on the children.

"We have not been able to identify the cause for the fainting and breathing problems," he said. "I'm sure everybody just got upset at seeing everybody else get sick."

Carbon monoxide is the most common cause for the fainting and vomiting that the students experienced. But levels of the gas were not evident in blood tests conducted in the emergency room, Thompson said.

Hospital administrator Bill Richards said, "Apparently what we're looking at is hyperventilation. When one went down, the others followed. When we got them in a controlled atmosphere and quieted down, it reverses the condition."

No adults were affect, Richards said.

Richards said several of the students had gone into convulsions but all had apparently recovered.

"I have one boy standing here beside me. I don't see any sign of post-seizure activity," Richards said.

Ken Land, a San Angelo fire and arson investigator, said he found no evidence of hazardous conditions at the school that would have caused the incident.

The school was evacuated, but Land said investigators could find no evidence of carbon monoxide or other gaseous substances in or around the cafeteria.

He said heat and a "diminished air flow," combined with weary students, triggered the multiple cases of hyperventilation.

"We don't feel there is a hazardous situation (at the school)," he said. "What we're talking about is oxygen deprivation. The kids, for some reason, weren't getting enough oxygen in their system."

School aide Celeste Allen said, "To me, it looked like the kids just fainted," she said. "It was very warm, and the air was not circulating. It honestly looked like they were just fainting. They had been so excited and keyed up."

Choir director Wynne added, "I've seen it many times."

Tradition makes Christmas

Tradition brings out the Christmas spirit in me more than anything else. Tradition... those little things you repeat every year that after a time become so ingrained in you that Christmas doesn't seem like Christmas without them.

I need two things to get me in the mood for Christmas. One is to listen to "The Christmas Song," sung by Johnny Mathis. You know "Chestnuts roasting on an open fire. Jack Frost nipping at your nose. Yuletide carols being sung by a choir and folks dressed up like Eskimos..."

As I told my kids, I grew up on that song. I bet my mother played the Johnny Mathis Christmas album every year since I was "knee high to a grasshopper." The last time she got the album out however, it was so old and scratched that it just wasn't worth listening to.

But fear not! I found that album again Monday — brand new. And guess what I did at 6:30 a.m. Tuesday morning — I listened to Johnny Mathis sing Christmas songs and now I'm ready for Christmas.

The reason I didn't listen to my album Monday night was because we were at my daughter's grade school listening to the fourth and fifth grade choir present their Christmas program. As one mother seated next to me commented, "These programs are for parents only." Only a parent can truly appreciate the value of those untrained voices as they join together in Rudolph the Red Nose Reindeer and other Christmas selections. But what those kids lacked in training they made up for in enthusiasm. I'm not ashamed to tell you that I had tears in my eyes more than once that evening.

Then we returned home to watch "Mickey Mouse Christmas Carol," a special Christmas cartoon like A Charlie Brown Christmas and The Grinch Who Stole Christmas — all a part of what makes Christmas Christmas.

The second thing I just have to have to make it Christmas for me is Christmas tea. But I won't get that until Christmas Eve. Christmas tea is a certain spice tea recipe that takes a while to cook and while it does it fills the house with the aroma of spices, tea and fruit juices. So it's not only the taste of the drink it's the smell of it too that makes it Christmas for me. Every Christmas Eve my family would all sit around the living room listening to carols on the stereo, eat cookies and candy and sip on Christmas tea while anticipating the surprises of the next morning.

Christmas morning Mother would heat up the tea left over from the night before and sit on the couch, her legs curled up under her robe as we kids tore into our presents.

My husband introduced me to a new holiday tradition that I'm glad to incorporate into my own. His family opens one present at a time instead of tearing into them all at once like we did. Each member takes a present and opens it while everyone else watches. It is amazing how each present takes on so much more importance by taking the time to open it carefully, exclaim over it and pass it around for everyone else to see. It also makes the special moment of opening packages last a lot longer. I wouldn't trade this tradition for anything.

I spent a lot of my growing up years in Louisiana where they have a few Christmas traditions of their own. Although the only time you see fireworks in the Texas Panhandle is during July 4, fireworks season in Louisiana is during Christmas.

Minden, La., has an annual Christmas parade followed by a fireworks display. The thing I remember most about that is getting an ember in my hair.

One of the most beautiful Christmas celebrations I've seen is the annual fireworks display on the riverbank at Natchitoches, La., (that's pronounced nak-e-dish). The fireworks not only fill the sky but are reflected in the river as well. Weeping willows and cypress trees line the riverbanks, trailing their limbs in the water.

A candlelight Christmas service was the highlight of my Louisiana church's holiday season. At this service each member of the congregation holds a lighted candle, the only illumination.

I've traded this Christmas observance for the Hanging of the Greens ceremony at my church here. In this service, children from the congregation bring in live greenery and poinsettias to decorate the church. But what moved me most about the hanging of the greens was when the service closed and the congregation filed out of the church singing "Silent Night." Barriers seemed to be dropped. It was the most wonderful sight to see people grabbing hands, exchanging smiles and greetings, and bending to kiss each other's cheeks. Beautiful! That's Christmas to me!

And as Johnny would say, "And so I'm offering this simple phrase for kids from one to 92. Although it's been said, many times, many ways 'Merry Christmas to you!'"

Ex-mayor slandered fired officers, jury says

ABILENE, Texas (AP) — Jim Snowden, ex-mayor of the Taylor County community of Tye, has been ordered to pay $48,538 in damages to two former police officers because of slanderous remarks he made about them after firing them.

A jury of four women and two men returned the verdict in Abilene federal court shortly before 5 p.m. Tuesday.

Snowden fired then-Police Chief Dan Parrack and his assistant, John Mauney, on Jan. 26, 1983.

Snowden testified he fired them because they permitted civilians to ride in city police cars, a violation of policy, but Parrack and Mauney contended it was because they permitted a City Council meeting to occur on Jan. 22, 1983, against Snowden's wishes.

The jury awarded $26,016 to Parrack and $22,522 to Mauney.

The majority of that was for a press conference held by Snowden on Feb. 7, 1983 in which the then-mayor announced he was investigating possible kickbacks, missing money and unauthorized purchases.

The jury found that Snowden slandered the men and awarded $17,804 to Parrack and $15,326 to Mauney.

No charges were ever filed in connection with Snowden's investigation.

Jurors also found that Snowden acted with malice toward both and awarded $1,500 to Parrack and $1,000 to Mauney.

Parrack also was awarded $3,000 for mental anguish, $1 for harm to his career in the past, $1 for harm to his career in the future, $3,709 for lost wages.

Mauney was awarded $3,000 for mental anguish, $1 for harm to reputation, $1 for harm to his career in past, $1 for harm to his career in future, and $3,193 for lost wages.

Defense attorneys Douglas Hudman and Bryan Bruner of Fort Worth said it was possible that the town of Tye would pay some of the judgment against Snowden.

Hudman and Bruner said they were pleased with the $1 judgment figures and with the fact the jury ruled a hearing on April 19, 1983 was impartial. Parrack and Mauney had contended the council hearing at which they were official fired was biased against them.

The officers had sought $4.5 million from Snowden, present mayor Violet Law and the city.

EVER STRIVING FOR TOP O' TEXAS TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

FTC 'protection' just an illusion

You can add another mostly useless government regulation to the pile of rules designed to give the illusion that the folks in Washington are fighting the good fight to make the world a safer place for consumers.

The latest is the Federal Trade Commission's decision to protect used-car buyers from used-car sellers. It has been eight years in the making, consumer advocates pushing hard for rules that would force sellers to explain all potential defects to buyers, and industry advocates pushing hard for scrapping the project.

The result is a compromise that one FTC commissioner called "a consumer-education campaign masquerading as significant new legislation."

Indeed, that is just what the new rules appear to be.

It takes an extremely long stretch of the imagination to accept that a part of government's legitimate function is consumer education. Of course, the bill for this new brand of consumer education will not be paid by the government or even by the used-car buyers. The customers will pay in higher used-car prices, even after the taxpayers have already paid for eight years of hearings, studies and reports.

The new rules require that dealers make specific disclosures in a buyers guide that has to be placed on the window of every used car. Some of the disclosures:

A statement of the terms of any warranty offered on the car; a warning that spoken promises are had to enforce, coupled with a suggestion to get all promises in writing; a suggestion that the consumer ask for an independent inspection; an identification of the major mechanical and safety systems of the car, including a list of some major defects that may occur in used cars.

Nothing more than common sense, aren't they? Would you buy a car without checking into the availability or terms of warranty? Don't we all understand just how unenforceable are spoken promises? Don't you already know that used cars are more likely than new cars to have some defects?

Is it worth paying an extra few dollars to be reminded of these things each time you go car shopping? Perhaps to some, but the FTC doesn't allow for option compliance. All consumers have to have this protection whether they want to pay for it or not.

The politicians and bureaucrats would have you believe they have saved used-car buyers from terrible tragedies. What they have done is save them from nothing and make them pay for a few common-sense warnings.

It seems to us that consumers' dollars would be better spent protecting themselves from useless government rules that only give the illusion of protection.

Bishops' stand nothing new

The Roman Catholic bishops startle us, do they, when they plump for nuclear disarmament and economic redistributionism?

One is sorry to say so, but what's the big deal? About religious hierarchs striking left-wing poses, I mean. Isn't this precisely what the National Council of Churches has been doing for 30-plus years?

One doesn't hear that much about the NCC these days: in part, I suppose, because of the budget crisis that forced large staff cutbacks at its headquarters. Last summer, however, the NCC sponsored a religious-inspection tour of the Soviet Union. The 266 clergy who went along seemed generally delighted at the state of religion in a state that officially hates religion.

True, on one occasion during the tour two Russian women interrupted a church service by unfurling banners, one of which said, "Pray for the Persecuted Church." The women were hustled away, nor did NCC spokesmen express anything but embarrassment over the incident. "I find it disturbing," said the Rev. John B. Lindner, "to have worship interrupted by any kind of group."

In a long article for the current issue of THIS WORLD, Joshua Muravchik insists that the National Council just can't get it right, concerning religion in the Soviet Union. The council's continuing theme is that the Russian churches, while obviously constrained by the state, enjoy remarkable freedom and latitude. Why, leading Russian churchmen say so!

Muravchik shakes his head vigorously at this one. Yes, it's true that Pimen, patriarch of the Russian Orthodox Church, who serves at the pleasure of the regime, thinks the lot of Russian religion to be happy.

Pimen also eulogized the late Leonid Brezhnev as "a tireless champion of universal and just peace." In like manner Pope Leo the Great could have called Attila the Hun a true friend of Christian civilization.

Pimen apparently has a thing about Soviet despots. When Brezhnev's successor, Comrade Yuri Andropov, duly went his own way to the judgment seat, Pimen hailed his "outstanding abilities and lofty spiritual qualities" as well as his attention "to the needs and hopes of people."

Muravchik isn't surprised to see the Russian church toeing the Soviet line as the price of survival. What does surprise, not to say dismay, him is the NCC's unwillingness to see Pimen-type clergy as other than state functionaries.

As for the statistical side of things, the NCC's Helen Hamilton informs Phil Donahue that the Russian church has grown since the revolution. Muravchik, however, points out: "Under the pressure of persecution and state-sponsored anti-religious propaganda, (the church) has shrunk in membership from an estimated 117 million in 1914 to an estimated 30 to 60 million today." Whereas Moscow had 1,550 churches in 1914, there now are 47, although the city's population has since grown eight-fold.

So why doesn't this impress NCC leaders? "In addition to their reluctance for 'peacemaking' reasons to focus attention on the downside of Soviet life, they are also motivated by the fear that they will get less cooperation from Soviet authorities if they give too much attention to the human-rights issue. Modulating their voices on this question seems a price worth paying for what they hope will be an increasingly warm welcome from Soviet officials."

Why the need for a warm welcome? To promote peace and understanding between the nuclear superpowers.

The NCC's Robert White says: "a key to making peace in the United States is for the people in the U.S. to understand that it is possible in the Soviet Union to worship God, to love God and one's country as we do in our country."

And if the price of peace is intellectual fudging and the shutting of one eye (sometimes both eyes) to what goes on? All too clearly, there are American clergymen willing to pay up without complaint.

Lord have mercy upon us.

Today in History

Today is Wednesday, Dec. 12, the 347th day of 1984. There are 19 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history: On Dec. 12, 1937, Japan shelled and sank the U.S. gunboat Panay on the Yangtze River in China. Japan apologized for the attack and paid reparations.

On this date: Ten years ago: Georgia Gov. Jimmy Carter announced his candidacy for President. He was the second formally declared candidate for the 1976 Democratic nomination; Rep. Morris K. Udall of Arizona was the first.

Five years ago: NATO decided to counter the Soviet military threat by placing hundreds of U.S.-made nuclear missiles in Western Europe by 1983, linked to a proposal for new talks on arms control with the Soviet bloc.

One year ago: A truck-bomb exploded at the U.S. Embassy in Kuwait, killing the driver and at least five other people. Bombs also went off at five other locations in Kuwait, one of which killed an Egyptian.

Weaning time for America

It's weaning time for Americans. When we were weak and our government was fat it was right that government should nourish us. Which it did.

Now we are fat and our government is in debt. It's weaning time.

President Reagan was elected the first time to cut taxes, curtail inflation, end recession; which he did.

Now he is setting out to do what he was re-elected to do - cut government spending, reduce the federal deficit.

His final budget to be announced in mid-January will begin the tedious process of re-teaching Americans to stand on their own feet and to feed themselves.

Government - paid health care will be less. Ouch already!

Farm subsidies will be trimmed. And government pensions. And veterans' benefits. And subsidies for development of synthetic fuels. And each of those groups is represented by an "organization" or an "association" which will scream bloody murder.

"Yes, I voted for budget cuts, but I didn't mean me!"

This president is counseled by such study groups as The Heritage Foundation and the Grace Commission.

The farflung financial empire of Peter Grace will feel the squeeze when his own commission's recommendations become effective - yet he is a grandfather also and feels so strongly that the alternative is national bankruptcy that Grace is spending his own money on a campaign to enlist 50 million voters to keep the heat on Congress.

Where else will waste be eliminated, fat be trimmed?

In education - energy - transportation - and housing aid.

In the 1986 budget the president must slash at least $40 billion from anticipated spending. That will still leave a hundred billion dollar deficit in 1988; our fiscal situation is that near desperation. So we should do more, we dare not do less.

The president himself will have to bite the bullet. He will have to forgo some of the increase in military spending which he considers urgently important.

But until we tourniquet our national hemorrhage, we are in much more immediate danger from red ink than from red guns.

The American Dream is still alive—barely

EDITOR'S NOTE—The following is a letter to the editor from a former Midland businessman published recently in an Odessa newspaper. We thought the message it contains is important and we are sharing it with our readers.

The American Dream is a goal everyone dreams of. It is the freedom of enterprise that creates an inward motivation.

The day finally came when I, a hard-working man all my life, had finally saved a little money to invest into a small business. Over the years I had been watching the market to see what would be a good return on the dollar. Too, I knew for sure it would be the electronics field or the fast-food business.

I know it takes money to make money. I figured what money I had would have to be in a small scale. I chose the food route since I did not have the technical background for electronics, and I do know people have to eat. So I got a small grocery store deli.

I found out real quick that there was much more involved than just giving change on a purchased item. I learned to legalize real quick everything from A to Z. To be covered "legally" you need a lawyer, C.P.A. and an agency to handle insurance premiums.

After about eight or nine months, I knew I was on my way to easy street. Then one day I got a notice from the electric company saying they were going to cut off my electric service if I did not pay the bill. What a shock!

I checked my bank account and found that my last check had bounced due to insufficient funds. I started my research and found out something about law. I knew about in-laws and outlaws but nothing much about these other laws. There were more than one or two.

Here are some I found out a little more about. These are federal laws, county laws, city laws and trade laws. I had never been robbed by an outlaw but robbed legally by ones who are in positions to make such laws.

Taxation without representation is one of the reasons I thought our forefathers had left England. Because of these various laws I was compelled to pay taxes more than I first thought would be involved. There is a business tax, amusement tax, school tax, gas tax, light tax, water tax, sales tax, surcharge tax, excise tax, auto tax, phone tax, sewer tax, garbage tax, fire tax, highway tax and three kinds of income tax: federal, state and city.

These laws require me to get a license for my small food store. A business license, inspection license, weigher's license, refrigeration license, retailer's license, sanitation license, dairy license, caterer's license, delivery truck and interstate delivery license. I bought only two licenses voluntarily, a marriage license and a fishing license.

My trade association insisted that I contribute to worthy causes. I had given to the Red Cross, the United Way, Girl Scouts, Cub Scouts, Brownies, Salvation Army, Heart Fund, Muscular Dystrophy, Child Care Center, old folks center, two churches, one synagogue and to a volunteer fire department.

I had one employee. I had to pay his Blue Cross Blue Shield insurance, unemployment compensation, workmen's compensation, social security, retirement pension fund and company life insurance premiums.

For my bank, creditors and my business, I am required by law to carry life insurance, liability insurance, burglar insurance, fire, wind and flood insurance. I had to pay these premiums promptly or my insurance coverage, like my electricity, would be turned off. I am inspected, suspected and disrespected and though I was bled white maintaining a constant flow of money to other people, there was just not enough to go around.

I did get short reprieve just before I got out of the business. I guess it was a miraculous stroke of good fortune. While chopping out a loin of pork one day, I missed completely and severed my thumb. It was insured. The money soon arrived, and I was able to pay my light bill, which saved the meat I had in the refrigerator. The business lasted about another month and then I got out.

In summary, I missed the American dream because it is hard for the little man to make it. I love America, and I thank the good Lord for the privilege of being born here. I love it when I see Old Glory still flying in the sky.

A man can just do the best he can with the tools he's got and my tool shortage was just not enough capital to begin with. The dream is still here and is still possible to gain, but not like in the good old days.

Won't give up hope to get funds for liver transplant

ODESSA, Texas (AP) — Despite the denial of county funds to finance a second liver transplant for a 5-year-old girl who is a ward of the county, a volunteer social worker says she will not give up the fight.

"As far as I am concerned my next step is to try the Legislature," said Vella Connally. "If she is a ward of the county, she is a ward of the state."

Ector County commissioners voted 4-1 at an emergency meeting Monday to deny funds to pay nearly $180,000 in hospital bills for Mary Evelyn Mosqueda, a patient in Dallas Children's Medical Center awaiting her second liver transplant in six months.

"We can't pay for everyone that is sick," Commissioner Julian Pressly said.

County Attorney Gary Garrison said he had talked to the state attorney general's office, which said the county had no legal liability to pay the bill.

"Harsh as it may sound, we have to look at reality," Garrison said.

When an agreement between the county and the state to care for the girl was reached, it was never intended to include paying for "organ transplants," Garrison said.

Mary Evelyn's mother gave her up shortly after birth on Aug. 6, 1979. Since then, the child has been cared for by the Texas Department of Human Resources and the Ector County Children's Services Board, a group that acts as a liaison between state and county agencies.

The mother was 16 at the time and already was in foster care herself. At birth, Mary Evelyn was diagnosed as having biliary atresia, which kept the infant's liver from secreting bile.

Ms. Connally, a savings and loan vice president and volunteer board member who has worked on Mary Evelyn's case, said the girl's situation is much different than others.

"There may be 300 children in the state of Texas in need of liver transplants, but Mary Evelyn is the only ward of the state," Ms. Connally said Tuesday.

She cited the case of Ashley Bailey, a 14-month-old from the West Texas town of Clyde, for whom President Reagan issued a national appeal for help toward a liver transplant.

The girl died Nov. 11, 1983, after a 10-month wait for an operation, but after Reagan's radio appeal, Texas Gov. Mark White's call for contributions to her hospital bills and family friends raised more than $100,000 through such events as bake sales and golf tournaments.

The Texas Legislature also granted $41,000 toward the operation and the federal government donated another $51,000. Odessa lawyer Jimmy Edwards, chairman of the children's board, told commissioners it was their obligation to pay for the child's medical bills.

"Separate your minds from the amount of money involved and consider your legal responsibilities," Edwards said.

But Garrison said for the next fiscal year, the county's branch of the state agency has only $17,000 to pay for relatively minor medical expenses.

Mary Evelyn underwent her liver transplant last June at the University of Minnesota Hospitals. State Medicaid and donations totaling $83,000 paid for the child's medical expenses and she was sent home after a month's stay.

But her body began to reject the new liver, and she was returned to Minneapolis. She now has an outstanding bill of $147,000, Ms. Connally said.

On Nov. 1, Mary Evelyn was transferred to the Dallas Children's Medical Center, where the first liver transplant in Texas recently was performed. Dallas also is closer to the North Central Texas community of Mineral Wells, where Mary Evelyn's foster parents live.

Ms. Connally said the bill at the Dallas facility now is about $33,000.

Austin firms feeling slump

AUSTIN (AP) — With some analysts predicting a continued slump for the microchip industry, two Austin firms which make the devices have frozen hiring in most job categories and reduced overtime work.

But neither Motorola Inc. nor Advanced Micro Devices plan any layoffs, officials say.

The severity of the downturn in microchips, also called semiconductors, became apparent last Friday when Texas Instruments announced it will lay off 2,000 employees in January.

Three days earlier, Honeywell Inc. announced a layoff of 1,000 workers at its Synertek Inc. semiconductor subsidiary in Minnesota.

Motorola and AMD are the only companies in Austin manufacturing semiconductors. Motorola employs 6,000 workers, and AMD employs 1,700.

And while no layoffs are planned, the brisk employment growth of the past two years is over for now, officials say. The most optimistic observers say the doldrums will continue until next summer at least. Others predict all of 1985 will be hard times.

"It's truly a time of uncertainty," said Wolf Loescher, a Motorola vice president.

When the problems developed this fall, the industry was surprised. Business had been booming and 1984 industry growth is expected to hit 48 percent. The companies and the industry analysts were expecting continued prosperity, forecasting a 1985 growth rate of up to 35 percent — or more.

But the growth in the personal computer industry, a big user of microchips, was slower than expected. Compounding the problem are the new plants semiconductor companies plan to open next year, creating more production capacity.

Advanced Micro Devices and Motorola are in better positions than some other companies, analysts say.

"Motorola has probably the broadest product mix of any semiconductor house in the world," said Will Strauss, a semiconductor industry consultant. "That's been their protection in the past."

Motorola, of Schaumburg, Ill., said its Austin-made microprocessors, which put the central elements of a computer on one chip, are selling well. The automotive market is a big user of Motorola microprocessors, and cars are still selling well. So are Apple Macintosh computers, which use the Motorola 68000 microprocessor.

Motorola memory chip operations in Austin will be more vulnerable to the downturn. Loescher said he expects price cuts throughout the industry in memory chips. He said the cuts probably will reduce profit margins. Still, Loescher said, most of Motorola's personal computer customers have healthy businesses.

Andy Rothman of Advanced Micro Devices said from the Sunnyvale, Calif., headquarters of the company that "AMD is in one of the best positions to ride out the current situation." Many analysts agree.

Four admit they cheated to win bass tournaments

MARSHALL, Texas (AP) — Four Louisiana men have admitted in federal court that they cheated to win more than $200,000 in bass fishing tournaments in East Texas.

The men pleaded guilty Tuesday to federal charges of conspiracy to commit fraud through a scheme in which they imported large black bass from south Florida and then claimed to have caught them during "high-stakes" fishing tournaments on Texas lakes.

Elro Vernon McNeil, 31, and Carey Harmon, both of Bossier City, La.; Garry W. Parkerson, 39, of Sarepta, La.; and Kenneth Puckett, of Dubach, La., pleaded guilty to the charge of conspiring to commit fraud.

All but Parkerson were released on personal recognizance bonds, pending sentencing. Parkerson was returned to Minden, La., where officials said he was being held on an unrelated weapons charge.

The men face up to five years in prison and a $10,000 fine.

U.S. Attorney Chris Harrison said U.S. District Judge Robert Parker will sentence the men in two or three months, after a pre-sentence investigation is completed.

The cheating scandal came to light earlier this year after a prize-winning fisherman was found shot to death on a private lake in Grand Prairie, the day before he was to testify before a Tyler federal grand jury investigating the cheating.

The death of Danny Ray Davis, 33, of Grand Prairie, was ruled a suicide. The grand jury was looking into a 1983 Labor Day weekend tournament on Lake Wright Patman in East Texas, in which Davis won the first prize of $50,000.

Two fishermen who claimed prize catches were disqualified after failing polygraph exams. Lab tests showed their fish were from Florida. Authorities said Davis had trouble passing the test, but he was awarded the prize money on a 3-2 vote by the judges.

Court papers said McNeil furnished Davis with the fish that won the top prize and that Davis paid $35,000 of his winnings back to McNeil.

Puckett and Harmon admitted using fish from McNeil to win the $15,000 second prize and $8,000 third prize, respectively, in the same tournament.

Three months earlier, court documents said, Davis used a fish from McNeil to win the $20,000 first prize in a bass tournament on Hubbard Creek Reservoir near Breckenridge in North Texas. Davis subsequently gave $15,000 of the winnings to McNeil, Harrison said.

Parkerson admitted using a fish supplied by McNeil to win the $105,000 first prize in a March 26, 1983 tournament on Lake o' the Pines in East Texas. According to court documents, Parkerson gave McNeil $70,000 of the winnings.

The cheating ring was involved in at least four other Texas tournaments, Harrison said.

"Most of these guys never wet a hook," said investigator Steven R. Hamilton, a special agent with the U.S. Fish & Wildlife Service.

"And most of the fish never touched lake water in Texas. They would go directly from McNeil's truck into the live well of the fisherman's boat," Hamilton said.

The investigation into the scandal began after the Labor Day tournament in 1983, Hamilton said, after a Longview woman learned of her fisherman son's involvement in the scheme and persuaded him to tell authorities.

Terry Isam, 21, of Longview, was charged on Aug. 29, 1984, with "knowingly and willfully devising a scheme and artifice to defraud and to obtain money by false and fraudulent pretenses," and using a wire communication, or telephone call, between Texas and Louisiana to execute the fraud.

Isam told authorities last year that he and other individuals set up a scheme to defraud public bass tournaments by using large bass from Florida, which were brought to Texas and then concealed until the day of a bass tournament, according to an affidavit filed by Hamilton.

"He (Isam) started talking to us, and he broke the case," Harrison said.

Charges against Isam were dropped two months ago under an agreement with the U.S. attorney's office, Harrison said. Isam is expected to plead guilty later to unspecified, unrelated charges under a plea bargain agreement, Harrison added.

Condemned man goes to electric chair

JACKSON, Ga. (AP) — The state's first try at executing Alpha Otis Stephens in the electric chair failed today, and he struggled to breathe for eight minutes before a second jolt carried out his death sentence for murdering a man who interrupted a burglary.

Stephens, 39, was still alive more than six minutes after the prescribed two-minute, 2,080 volt charge was administered at 12:18 a.m. Warden Ralph Kemp ordered the procedure repeated after Stephens was examined.

Stephens was pronounced dead at 12:36 a.m. He was the third person to be executed in Georgia in 12 months, the 20th in the country this year and the 31st since the U.S. Supreme Court restored capital punishment in 1976.

Prison spokesman John Siler said "apparently, there is no malfunction" in the electric chair, which was built for Georgia's first execution in 19 years last December. But he said prison officials intended to find out why it took two jolts to kill Stephens.

"We're looking at it. From everything we can gather, it went like it's supposed to," he said. He said one possible cause could be that "different people have different physical makeups."

Stephens' 10-year struggle to avoid execution climaxed with the failure of five separate appeals for mercy, two to the U.S. Supreme Court, in the 24 hours before his death.

He was condemned for the 1974 murder of Roy Asbell, who was taken to a remote field and shot twice in the ear after interrupting a burglary at his son's home.

Stephens appeared scared and nervous as he walked into the execution chamber surrounded by six guards at the nearby Georgia Diagnostic and Classification Center and was strapped to the varnished oak electric chair.

He declined an offer to see a chaplain and made no last statement. Seconds after a mask was placed over his head, the first jolt was applied, causing his body to snap forward and his fists to clench.

His body slumped when the current stopped two minutes later, but shortly afterward, witnesses saw him struggle to breathe.

During the required six minutes in which the body was allowed to cool before doctors could examine it, Stephens took about 23 breaths.

At 12:26 a.m., two doctors examined Stephens and said he was alive.

At the second jolt, administered at 12:28 a.m., Stephens again snapped upright. The charge was discontinued at 12:30 a.m., and at 12:36 a.m., he was pronounced dead.

Satellite finally gets off the ground

VANDENBERG AIR FORCE BASE, Calif. (AP) — A much-delayed weather satellite soared into space atop an Atlas-E rocket today after 13 postponements that cost the government about $1 million, a space agency spokesman said.

The NOAA-F weather and search-and-rescue satellite lifted off at 2:42 a.m., said C.J. Fenrick of the National Aeronautic and Space Administration.

The rocket was a "spectacular sight, rattling windows on Vandenberg Air Force Base and in the Santa Maria Valley," Fenrick said.

"Everything went flawlessly... Morale has been boosted 150 percent," he said.

Since the first try on Nov. 8, high winds forced cancellation of eight launch attempts.

Shultz not expecting big breakthroughs

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — Secretary of State George P. Shultz, who arrived in Brussels today to meet with NATO foreign ministers, said he does not expect "any big breakthrough" during meetings next month with Andrei A. Gromyko, the Soviet foreign minister.

However, Shultz said, "These meetings are going forward and they represent opportunities for progress and we welcome that."

"We approach these without expecting any big breakthrough, but we certainly are going to approach them with a sense of optimism," he said. Shultz said earlier that the Jan. 7-8 arms control talks with Gromyko will be the dominant issue during the annual NATO foreign ministers meeting.

Shultz, speaking to reporters on a flight to Brussels from Gatwick, England, denied reports that he and Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger are at odds on most issues.

"It simply isn't true that the Department of Defense is always on one side of issues and the Department of State is on the other," Shultz said. "That's not an accurate statement at all."

But he did not specifically deny that the two departments have different approaches to arms control negotiation with the Soviets, and that the State Department more willing than the Pentagon to make compromises to get an agreement.

Senior U.S. officials, speaking on condition they not be named, have said differences between the two departments could make it more difficult for the Reagan administration to come up with a unified position on arms control for Shultz' meetings with Gromyko.

In a statement upon arrival in Brussels, Shultz said: "While the Soviet Union's decision to enter into new arms control talks is welcomed, the road ahead will not be easy." He said he would "consult closely with our NATO allies as we prepare for the January meeting in Geneva."

methyl isocyanate escaped from an underground tank of the Union Carbide pesticide plant on Dec. 3, killing at least 2,000 people and injuring as many as 200,000 people who inhaled it.

The New York Times quoted a Union Carbide employee who inspected both the Bhopal plant and one in Institute, W.Va., two years ago as saying that safety systems at the India plant had not been "up to American standards" when he was there in May 1982.

The inspector, C.S. Tyson, said it was not clear to him whether years of improvements after his inspection had brought the plant up to American standards.

He was quoted as saying Indian managers and workers had not been asking enough "what if" questions to plan for emergencies. "In the states we do all kinds of what if training."

Panicky residents fleeing Bhopal

BHOPAL, India (AP) — Fearing a new leak of the poison gas that killed more than 2,000 people, residents lined up at bus and train stations and fled the city in record numbers today, despite broadcast assurances there was no danger, officials said.

Meanwhile at Hamidia, the city's main hospital, a spokesman said he had received a letter of regret from a city council member whose alleged assault on a senior doctor prompted almost 900 junior doctors and interns to walk out Tuesday.

"The striking doctors will be ordered to return immediately," said the spokesman. He said the hospital was treating all emergency patients.

The number of people leaving Bhopal increased to four times normal following reports that authorities planned to neutralize the methyl isocyanate gas remaining in a Union Carbide pesticide plant and rumors that area near the plant would be evacuated, rail and bus officials said.

Many people panicked after nearly 200 government buses, rumored to be for an emergency evacuation, arrived in the central Indian city of 900,000 people. There was no explanation for the presence of the buses.

Small Army plane crashes on landing

FORT BELVOIR, Va. (AP) — A small military airplane with four people aboard crashed and exploded while attempting to land at Davison Army Airfield today, Army officials said.

"Our initial reports indicate the aircraft exploded on contact," said Lt. Col. Miguel Monteverde, an Army spokesman at the Pentagon. "It doesn't look good for those aboard."

Long lines waited today at the railroad station and the main bus terminal. All buses and trains leaving the city carried record numbers of passengers, railway authorities said.

City officials announced that schools would be closed through Dec. 23. They gave no reason for the closure.

Police used loudspeakers to reassure residents of the worst-affected areas of the city. Arjun Singh, chief minister of Madhya Pradesh state, went on state television and radio Tuesday night in an effort to calm Bhopal residents.

"There is no cause for panic and I repeat there is no reason to evacuate the city," he said. He did not explain the buses.

Singh said residents will be given three days notice before scientists neutralize the remaining gas, and that he would stay at the U.S.-built plant during the disposal process.

Singh said that Indian scientists and a five-member Union Carbide technical team were studying "a zero-risk method of neutralizing the gas." The scientists reportedly decided to neutralize the gas with chemicals.

Union Carbide had suggested the gas be processed into pesticides, but the state government is opposed to the plant restarting production even temporarily.

Many citizens said the operation to render the remaining gas harmless carried the risk of another leak, and that state authorities were not taking the people into their confidence.

Hightower blames loss of 10-year seat on one vote

By KATHRYN BAKER
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — Jack Hightower, who represented his conservative, Panhandle district in Congress for 10 years, says he lost his job because of one vote.

"I think that if two years ago I had stood up in the caucus or on the floor of the House on the first day of the session and voted against the Speaker, I would have been a hero, at least among these people, and probably would not even have had an opponent," Hightower said in a recent interview.

But like every other Democrat in the House, Hightower cast the ceremonial vote on the first day of the session for Speaker Thomas P. "Tip" O'Neill Jr.

Republicans used middle-class America's disenchantment with big government against incumbent Democrats this year. That disenchantment was symbolized by O'Neill, a Massachusetts congressman.

"I think Tip O'Neill was the name mentioned always in all of my opponent's advertising. He ran a tremendous amount of advertising saying I was Tip O'Neill's boy," Hightower says.

Hightower was one of three Democratic incumbents defeated in Texas. Tom Vandergriff, the former long-time mayor of Arlington, lost to economics teacher Richard Army.

Vandergriff spent $1 million, much of it his own money, to barely win the newly created seat in 1982. It had been expected to go Republican then.

Democrat Bill Patman had represented his southeast Texas district for two terms. He lost to Mac Sweeney of Wharton, a young, politically savvy former aide to John Connally and John Tower, who waged a well-financed campaign that caught Patman by surprise.

Hightower had been one of the Democratic "boll weevils," who went against their party's leaders in the House and supported President Reagan's economic program in 1981.

Nevertheless, Republicans targeted Hightower's district this year. Even he admits it was ripe. It had previously been held by a Republican — Bob Price — and Hightower had less than a firm grasp on it. He won re-election with only 55 percent of the vote in 1980.

"I think the Republicans are happy to have the assistance of 'boll weevils' when it's to their benefit, but as has been demonstrated in my case, when they think they can claim the seat, they'll claim it," Hightower said.

Hightower was defeated by Beau

Boulter, a former county commissioner from Amarillo.

As one of Hightower's colleagues said, the surprise was not that the five-term congressman lost, but rather that he was able to hold the district for so long.

The liberals at the top of the Democratic ticket were too much weight for him to carry this year, Hightower said.

"I have a very conservative district, and they were not about to support the top of the ticket and they were not about to support the candidate for the United States Senate," he said, "so it made it extremely difficult to pull them back over into the Democratic column."

Despite the Republican leaning of his district, Hightower said he had never considered switching parties, that he is "comfortable" as a Democrat. He says the Democratic leadership has abandoned the old ideals of the party and turned it into a party of big spenders and minorities.

"There are Democrats who'd like to see people like me leave the party," Hightower said. "They'd like to run us off, to make Republicans out of us. But I'm not going to give them the satisfaction, because I think they're the ones that are wrong."

Demo leadership battles underway

By DONALD M. ROTHBERG
AP Political Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The effort of a handful of new-wave Democrats to chart the party's future is turning into a parody of its past and leaving the opposition without a clear voice while President Reagan gets ready for a second honeymoon with Congress.

Who will speak for the Democrats is a question being asked with increasing urgency by party and elected officials who believe recent electoral disasters were a clear message from the American people.

The leadership contests in Congress and beyond are an outgrowth of frustration over the Democrats' inability to effectively challenge Reagan's program and offer clear alternatives. But they also reflect some of the regional and ideological splits that bedevil the party.

Senate Democrats were ready to offer their answer to the leadership question at a caucus today at which Sen. Lawton Chiles of Florida challenged Sen. Robert Byrd of West Virginia for the post of minority leader.

Byrd was an odds-on favorite for re-election to the post, but Chiles was confident that he would attract support on the secret ballot from senators who feel more dynamic leadership is needed to match the skills of Sen. Bob Dole of Kansas, the new Republican Senate leader.

Chiles argued that if the Democrats didn't replace their leadership to reflect the changing dynamics of the nation, the party was doomed to remain a minority for many years to come. Byrd's strength was his good-soldier approach to the job, his willingness to accommodate the needs of senators and massage their considerable egos.

The Byrd-Chiles contest reflected not only the nervousness over recent election results, but the internal politics of the Senate. While generally regarded as a moderately conservative Democrat, Chiles was likely to benefit from liberal opposition to Byrd.

But the Senate fight was a clean choice between one senator or the other.

Far different was the thrashing about in search of a party chairman to replace Charles T. Manatt, who held the post through Reagan's first term.

This weekend, Democratic governors and party officials plan to get together in Kansas City, Mo., and try to agree on a candidate.

What started out as a reasonable enough effort on the part of some of the younger Democratic governors to play a greater role in the national party is turning into an embarrassment.

FAA's airline inspection program questioned

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government's monitoring of the airlines is coming under criticism as air safety investigators question whether the Federal Aviation Administration has enough inspectors or is using the right techniques to assure safety rules are followed.

The concern over the FAA's ability to keep tabs on air carriers — especially small regional airlines — comes as the commuter industry is ending a year marred by bankruptcies, at least five fatal crashes, and the discovery of widespread safety violations at two airlines.

Two members of the National Transportation Safety Board, including its chairman, raised questions about the FAA's inspection program Tuesday as the board discussed its investigation into the crash last year of an Air Illinois plane that killed 10 people.

That airline has since gone bankrupt. Investigators have said the FAA should have known about safety failures at Air Illinois before the crash in October 1983.

Although the FAA has stepped up its inspection program since the Air Illinois accident, NTSB Chairman Jim Burnett said the problems have not gone away and he was "still not satisfied that (FAA officials) have done enough to improve surveillance" of the industry.

"In fact, I think we have a long way to go," he said in an interview.

Board member Patricia Goldman said she saw no evidence of "major changes" in the way the FAA inspection program is run now compared to before airline deregulation, although there now are more airlines, many more planes and more types of aircraft.

She suggested in an interview that changes might be needed in the techniques used by the FAA, since there appeared to have been a number of instances in which safety violations were missed during routine checks conducted by inspectors.

"If an airline is able to — as the expression goes — 'cook the books,' how can an inspector find out? Are you totally dependent on people being whistle blowers?" she asked, noting that FAA inspectors rely heavily on airline record keeping.

And airline records, she noted, have on occasions been shown to be misleading.

For example: — In the Air Illinois accident, investigators said maintenance records at the airline repair facility showed numerous repairs to the electrical system on the plane that crashed, but the plane's logs showed no problems with the system because the flight crews never logged them. The plane crashed after its generators failed.

Provincetown-Boston Airlines was found to have falsified training records to show a pilot had been checked out on a particular aircraft when no such check flight ever was performed. While a detailed FAA investigation eventually exposed those and other irregularities, the tipoff reportedly came from complaints lodged by disgruntled employees, and not FAA surveillance.

In response to the criticism, FAA spokesman Ed Pinto said the agency has made a number of changes in its inspection program since the Air Illinois accident.

More pot is growing on federal lands

WASHINGTON (AP) — Despite stepped-up enforcement efforts, marijuana cultivation is increasing on federal lands as pot farmers use booby traps, camouflage and violence to protect their illegal crop, a new study says.

The report by the General Accounting Office says marijuana plots on public lands not only are helping make pot the nation's second largest cash crop but are posing threats to land-management personnel and citizens visiting parks.

The GAO, the investigative arm of Congress, said the report was based on visits last year to 22 forests and parks under the Forest Service, Bureau of Land Management and National Park Service in California, Oregon, Arkansas, Missouri, Idaho and Hawaii.

"The Forest Service estimates that over 8,200 marijuana plots were cultivated on its lands in 1983, an increase of about 128 percent over the estimated 3,600 cultivated in 1980," the GAO said.

The report said that while the Forest Service discovered 1,973 of the estimated 8,286 plots on its land in 1983, "limited personnel and equipment resulted in the destruction of only about 1,300."

Pampa splits with Canadian

CANADIAN — Canadian's Lady Wildcats led by as many as 18 points in the first half, but then had to shut down a rally by Pampa's Lady Harvesters in the second half to claim a 50-40 win in girls' basketball action Tuesday night.

In the boys' game, Pampa pulled away from Canadian in the second half for a 55-38 victory.

Canadian girls are now 6-4 for the season while the Lady Harvesters are 3-3.

"We just spotted them too many points in the first half," said Pampa coach Albert Nichols. "We came back strong the second half, but we were just listless the first half."

The Lady Harvesters trailed by 17 (31-14) at halftime, but then trimmed the lead to 9 (38-29) after three quarters as Pampa's fullcourt press forced several Canadian turnovers. At the midway point of the fourth quarter, Pampa had knotted the score, but the Lady Wildcats forced some turnovers of their own, while the Lady Harvesters failed to capitalize on some foul line opportunities.

Stephanie Byard led Canadian's balanced scoring attack with 11 points while Dana Johnson and Melinda Vanhoozer added 10 points each. "Last night was our best effort so far this season," said Canadian coach Steve Zurline. "We had some injury trouble earlier in the season and were just waiting to get it all together."

Also scoring for Canadian were Lisa Pfannenstiel, seven; Lucinda Dunnam, six; Stephanie Harris, Shelia Carr and Tracie Ross, two points each.

Kerri Richardson led Pampa scorers with 10 points. Jackie Reed and Melissa Nichols had nine points apiece, followed by Rotaunda Powell with seven, Sandee Greenway, four, and Rogina Fly, two.

Pampa spotted Canadian a 5-0 lead in the boys' game before the Harvesters scored eight straight points late in the first quarter to take a 12-9 lead.

Pampa stretched the lead to 8 (24-16) at halftime and then widened the gap to 14 after three quarters. Canadian rallied to pull within 8 in the fourth quarter, but turnovers prevented the Wildcats from pulling any closer.

"It was a good for us to play this caliber of team," said Canadian coach Larry Dyess. "Pampa has a very fine team and playing against them will help us on down the line."

Rodney Young led the Harvesters with 20 points while Richard Rogers contributed 14. Petey Davis added 11, John Tarpley and Jeff Gaines, four each, and Chris Comer, two.

Mark Bessire topped Canadian with 11, followed by Donnie Anderson with eight. Geoffrey Dockray had seven, Rodney Boyd, six; Sid Beebe, Taylor Newcomb and Kyle Northcutt, two apiece.

Both Pampa boys and girls host Garden City, Kans. in a Saturday afternoon basketball doubleheader in McNeely Fieldhouse. The girls' game tips off at 3:30 p.m., followed by the boys' game.

The Harvesters, 7-3, are on a three-game winning streak.

The Pampa Shockers routed Canadian junior varsity, 60-30, in a boys' JV game last night.

Vibret Ryan led Pampa with 13 points while Michael Glover added eight.

The Shockers now have a 9-2 record and have won their last eight games in a row. Their next game is against Garden City JVs at 3:30 p.m. Saturday in Pampa.

Next Tuesday's scheduled junior varsity game with Abernathy has been canceled.

College basketball roundup

Georgia continues domination

Things are back to normal in Georgia. Joe Ward drilled a 12-foot jumper with four seconds to play Tuesday night as Georgia defeated 12th-ranked Georgia Tech 60-59. It was Georgia's seventh consecutive college basketball victory over Tech, which has beaten the Bulldogs only once in a varsity sport since 1982 — a 35-18 football triumph Dec. 1.

Tech was the only member of the Top Twenty to lose Tuesday night, but both No. 5 Memphis State and No. 16 Indiana got healthy scares. Vincent Askew scored four points in overtime to give Memphis State a 57-52 victory over gritty Mississippi, and Indiana needed free throws by Delray Brooks and Mike Giomi in the last minute to hold off Iowa State 69-67.

Ward, who led Georgia with 20 points, said the winning shot came on a clear-out play the Bulldogs labored in practice.

"They cleared me wide open," Ward said.

"We came in as underdogs," Ward added. "We had to go out and give it all we had. When you play with emotion and stay intense, it helps your defense."

Indiana, 3-2, overcame Iowa State's second-half lead when leading scorer Steve Alford began finding the range. Alford finished with 22 points, 16 in the second half.

Iowa State, 5-1, tied it for the last time at 63-63 on Jeff Grayer's free throw with four minutes left. Stew Robinson and Alford hit consecutive baskets for a 67-63 Hoosier lead with 1:39 to play, and the Hoosiers were never headed.

Barry Stevens led the Cyclones with 31 points.

Luster Goodwin scored 18 points as Texas-El Paso, 5-1, avenged its only loss with an 83-62 romp over New Mexico State. The Miners, 66-63 victims of the Aggies last month, ensured there wouldn't be a repeat by holding State to 27 percent shooting the first half.

Junior forward Roger McCready scored 19 points, grabbed six rebounds and dished out three assists to lead Boston College, 5-0, to a 70-50 victory over Rhode Island.

Keith Gatlin broke a tie with a 14-foot baseline jumper with 70 seconds remaining and freshman Derrick Lewis added a free throw with three seconds to play as Maryland edged Ohio State 76-73. It was Maryland's sixth straight win after a season-opening defeat, while the Buckeyes lost for the first time in four games.

In other games, it was La Salle 74, St. Joseph's 69; Bradley 59, Furman 47; Mississippi State 71, Southern Mississippi 53; Tulane 73, Southeast Louisiana 62; Indiana State 94, Minnesota 86; Baylor 98, Texas A&I 77; Utah State 92, Brigham Young 91 in overtime; and Washington State 54, Montana 53.

FOUL CALL— Pampa's John Tarpley appears to be questioning the officials' call after committing a foul in last night's basketball

Landry says Cowboys a success

DALLAS (AP) — Even if Dallas fails to get into the National Football League playoffs, the 1984 Cowboys' season will be a success in Coach Tom Landry's eyes.

"This team is a much more solid group than last year or we wouldn't have had a chance to make the playoffs," Landry said.

He added, "We lost a lot of leadership in Drew Pearson, Billy Joe DuPree, and Pat Donovan. We had to struggle all the way, every game. We could have been out of the playoff race easily but it was a credit to the team to be able to pull itself up."

"We're fortunate we still have a chance."

The Cowboys will need help.

If San Francisco defeats Los Angeles on Friday night, then Dallas can make the playoffs by defeating Miami on Monday night.

The 49er-Rams game will be nationally televised but Landry won't watch.

"I probably won't even look at the game because all I'm concerned about is the results," Landry said. "I've seen enough football games this year."

"It's hard to become a Montana fan but I guess I will," he joked.

Joe Montana, of course, threw the game-winning touchdown pass against Dallas to give San Francisco the National Conference title in 1981.

"I'll root for anybody who gives us a chance," Landry said.

Should the Rams win, the Cowboys could still get a wild card if St. Louis beats Washington on Sunday after the New York Giants lose to New Orleans on Saturday. Of course, the Cowboys would have to beat Miami.

Dallas is 9-6 and tied with the Giants and St. Cardinals for second place in the National Conference Eastern Division behind Washington's 10-5.

The Rams are 10-5 in the NFC

West but Dallas has a tiebreaker edge.

The Cowboys, seeking a NFL record 10th straight appearance in the playoffs, suffered a damaging blow by falling to Washington 30-28 on Sunday.

"The Washington loss has to rate as one of the big disappointments we've had through the years," Landry said. "Our team played so hard but it came down to the turnovers. All their fumbles bounced back to them."

Landry said he thought the Cowboys' could bounce back.

"Our team must get ready right now and not wait until this weekend to get ready," Landry said. "Both the Rams and Cowboys have their work cut out. They'll have to win on the road and if they can't then they shouldn't be in the playoffs."

Odds makers made the Cowboys six-point underdogs for the meeting with the Dolphins.

The teams stand 2-2 against each other with the Cowboys winning the last meeting 28-27 in 1981 at Texas Stadium.

"I think our team will respond," said Landry. "If they can read, then they know what's going on. I don't know if we can reach as high an emotional level as we did for Washington, but the team just has to do it."

Landry said he thought the Dolphins, who have already clinched a playoff spot, would go all out against the Cowboys.

"When you have a 14-1 record it's hard to play bad," Landry said.

In a telephone call to the Dallas media on Tuesday, Miami Coach Don Shula confirmed that the Dolphins would get after the Cowboys.

"We have an obligation to the other teams and coaches to do the best job we can to win," Shula said.

Landry said 1985 should be an exciting year for the Cowboys.

"We'll have a good nucleus coming back and we should be much better," Landry said.

Asked about a possible trade of either Danny White or Gary Hogeboom, the Cowboys' dueling quarterbackbacks, Landry said, "You never know what the circumstances might be."

Eagles moving to Phoenix?

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The Philadelphia Eagles say no final decision has been made, but two Arizona officials and a U.S. senator say financially strapped Leonard Tose has agreed to move his National Football League team to Phoenix.

The move, according to the Philadelphia Inquirer and the Arizona Republic, would include Tose's sale of 25 percent of the team to Canadian businessman James Monaghan, who also has a residence in Phoenix.

"I understand Tose confirmed the deal," Eddie Lynch, chairman of the Phoenix Metropolitan Sports Foundation, said Tuesday. "My first reaction is empathy for the Philadelphia fans, and secondly, I'm elated about them coming to Phoenix."

The Inquirer quoted Michael Gallagher, chairman of the Mayor's Professional Sports Advisory Committee in Phoenix, as saying: "I'd say this move is done. I'm pleased we're going to have an NFL football team, but it's too bad that someone has to lose one for us to get one."

U.S. Sen. Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz., said from his suburban Washington home Tuesday night that the move is virtually assured, adding that plans call for an announcement Monday — the day after the Eagles finish their season in Atlanta.

The Arizona Republic said the Eagles were ready to shift the franchise to Phoenix within days after Sunday's last game.

"I have a very reliable source who says that that is going to happen," DeConcini said. "I'll be very surprised if the move doesn't take place."

In New York, NFL spokesman Joe Browne said that a proposed refinancing agreement involving possible new ownership had arrived from the Eagles Tuesday morning but contained no reference to any Eagles' move.

"We have had no contact from either Leonard Tose or Susan Fletcher (Tose's daughter and team vice president) regarding a possible Eagles' transfer out of Philadelphia," Browne said.

Tiebreakers confusing

By DAVE GOLDBERG
AP Sports Writer

From all the 9,112,421 tiebreakers involved in determining which teams from the NFC East go to the playoffs, emerges a curious fact. It may not matter whether the New York Giants win or lose Saturday — their route to the playoff is the same either way.

Here's the situation. If the Los Angeles Rams beat the San Francisco 49ers Friday night, the Giants will take the field against New Orleans Saturday knowing that all they need to do to join the Rams as an NFC wild-card team is to beat the Saints.

However, if the Rams lose, it doesn't matter what the Giants do. For if they beat the Saints, they still have to depend on Washington to beat St. Louis and Miami to beat Dallas to get a wild-card spot — that would make them 10-6 while Dallas and St. Louis would be 9-7.

If they lose to the Saints, they would make the playoffs if ... you guessed it, Washington beats St. Louis and Miami beats Dallas. That would make the Giants, Cards and Cowboys all 9-7, and the tiebreaker would be the results of the games against each other in which the Giants are 3-1, the Cards 2-2 and the Cowboys 1-3.

"I don't figure that stuff," says Coach Bill Parcells. "It's an exercise in futility."

NBA roundup

Kings lead Knicks past 76ers

It was a royal return for Bernard King.

The 6-foot-7 forward, who leads the National Basketball Association in scoring, had 34 points Tuesday night to lead the New York Knicks to a 110-106 victory over the Philadelphia 76ers in his first game after a 13-day absence because of a groin injury.

"After an injury like that, to put in a night like this ...," New York Coach Hubie Brown said, his voice trailing off as he searched for words to describe what King means to the team. The Knicks had lost six of the seven games they played without King and they were facing a Philadelphia team that had won seven straight.

In other NBA games, it was Denver 123, Portland 122; Los Angeles Clippers 116, Golden State 104; Detroit 108, Chicago 101; Milwaukee 120, Cleveland 106; Utah 85, Washington 82; Boston 130, New Jersey 121; Kansas City 121, San Antonio 120; and Phoenix 120, Houston 112.

King said he was unsure how well he could play after the two-week layoff, but he knew the team needed his leadership.

"Even if I wasn't effective tonight, I wanted to help the team mentally," he said.

The 76ers got 23 points from center Moses Malone and 17 each from guards Andrew Toney and Maurice Cheeks. Celtics 130, Nets 121.

Boston improved its record to 19-2 as Danny Ainge scored 15 of his career-high 25 points in the pivotal fourth quarter against New Jersey.

The Nets, with only eight players in uniform because of injuries, overcame a 10-point deficit in the second quarter as Otis Birdsong scored 18 of his 42 points in the period. New Jersey took a three-point lead into the final 12 minutes, but the Celtics outscored the Nets 39-27 in the fourth period.

Larry Bird led Boston with 35 points and Robert Parish added 26. Micheal Ray Richardson had 31 points and 16 assists for the Nets.

Nuggets 123, Trail Blazers 122

Denver opened a three-game lead over Houston in the Midwest Division and stayed unbeaten in 10 home games this season as Alex English scored 32 points and Calvin Natt 25 against Portland.

Kiki Vandeweghe and Mychal Thompson scored 28 points apiece to lead the Trail Blazers, who lost a chance to win the game, when Jim Paxson missed an eight-foot shot at the buzzer. Suns 120, Rockets 112

Phoenix pulled within a half-game of the Pacific Division lead when Maurice Lucas scored eight of his season-high 22 points in a 2½-minute span late in the fourth quarter.

The Suns led 67-48 early in the second half, but Ralph Sampson, who had 13 of his 26 points in the fourth quarter for the Rockets, cut the deficit to 102-99 with 3:55 left. Lucas' spurt then helped Phoenix to a comfortable 114-106 advantage with 1:10 left. Bucks 120, Cavaliers 106

Milwaukee took over sole possession of first place in the Central Division with a victory over Cleveland as Sidney Moncrief scored 30 points.

The Bucks held the Cavaliers to 29 percent field-goal shooting in the second half while outscoring them 63-42 to wipe out a 64-57 halftime deficit.

Cleveland lost its sixth straight game to fall to 2-18 despite 27 points from Roy Hinson. Terry Cummings had 25 points and Kevin Grevey 23 for Milwaukee. Pistons 108, Bulls 101

Terry Tyler had a season-high 26 points and Vinnie Johnson added 24 as Detroit knocked Chicago out of a first-place tie with Milwaukee.

Michael Jordan had 27 points to lead the Bulls, who had won their previous five games. Isaiah Thomas had 22 points for the Pistons, while Bill Laimbeer pulled down 23 rebounds. Jazz 85, Bullets 82

Adrian Dantley scored 32 points, including a decisive three-point play with 13 seconds left, to lift Utah over Washington.

The Bullets, who got 23 points from Greg Ballard, led 82-81 before Dantley's driving layup and free throw put the Jazz ahead. Kings 121, Spurs 120

Kansas City also used a late three-point play to beat San Antonio.

Pampa routs Amarillo in indoor soccer

The Pampa Soccer Club routed an Amarillo team, 10-1, last week in an indoor soccer game.

Jim Bridwell led Pampa with four goals, followed by Scott Fleming with three, Britt Parrish, two, and Jerry Shoopman, one.

Defensive standouts were Scott Smiles, Gary Griggs and goalie Shane Etheredge.

Pampa has a 4-1 record in the Amarillo Indoor League.

Badgers beat Seward

AMARILLO—Amarillo College routed Seward County Community College, 99-66, Monday in JUCO basketball action in Amarillo's Carter Gym.

Andrew Kennedy paced the Badgers with 38 points. Steve Dailey added 24.

James Irvin paced the losers with 14 points. John Garinger followed with 12.

Pampa Blue wins seventh grade tilt

Pampa Blue rolled by Dumas Orange, 45-17, in seventh-grade boys' basketball action Monday.

Mark Wood led Pampa in scoring with 15 points.

In an eighth-grade boys' game, Pampa Blue slipped by Dumas Orange, 36-33.

Pampa Red hosts Perryton at 5:30 p.m. Thursday in an eighth-grade game at the middle school gym.

On Friday, Pampa Red meets Pampa Blue in a seventh-grade game at 5:30 p.m.

Gospel singers devise living memorial in small country church

NEWTON, Texas (AP) — At sunset, mist rises above the cemetery and church, shrouding them in an eerie haze of gray. The greens of the woods and fields slip into a gentle darkness. On this autumn Friday, football rivals Kirbyville and Newton are locked in combat on the gridiron for high school glory.

But at Ford's Chapel, a small country church off U.S. 190, relatives and friends quietly assemble for a monthly gospel singing to proclaim another kind of glory: they gather to remember of Marie Ellen Davis Stark, wife of Dwight Stark, and mother to a family of two daughters, two sons.

Marie, born in July, 1912, was buried on Feb. 15. One daughter, Dwylene Crouch, wanted to create a living memorial for her and the dead in Ford's Cemetery by conducting an informal and nondenominational worship service the fourth Friday of every month. The service would center around the common bond of music, she says. Gospel singing has attracted the attention of folks in Newton County, she says, pulling relatives and friends together.

Across the dirt road from the century-old Ford's Cemetery, home of the Johnsons, Stephensons, Gunters, DeSpains, and other early settlers of Newton County, stands a freshly painted white church with its sheet metal roof.

The building was vacant for years, except for the annual Ford's homecoming in May, which drew former members from throughout Southeast Texas, Dwight Stark says. The building belonged to the Methodist church, and the church donated it to the community. Some of the glass still fills in the bare window frames, which match the unpainted boxcar siding walls and ceiling.

The interior is without ornamentation, save a bouquet of silk flowers in a plastic basket. Young and old drift into the square building, chat with old friends and neighbors, and take their places on thick wooden benches. Stark sits in quiet dignity by an open window.

Bon Weir resident and first time participant Eunice Jones says she looks forward to the singing and fellowship regardless of others' religious backgrounds. She and Stark are Pentecostal, but "everybody loves everybody, everybody knows everybody."

After about 30 people arrive, the service begins informally with "Amazing Grace," with Mrs. Crouch playing the donated piano. They sing from "Select Church Songs," a hymnbook of old Pentecostal and camp meeting songs.

Nearly all the songs have references to the peace and joy of eternity, such as "The Unclouded Day".

O they tell me that He smiles on his children there

And His smile drives their sorrows all a-way

And they tell me that no tears ever come again

In that lovely land of unclouded day

Lots of people know the words by heart. Some clap, some raise their hands in worship. Some children play in the aisles while others just doze in their mothers' arms. Enthusiasm, not talent, governs participation, and several people switch off leading the songs.

Guitarist Woodrow Inman says, "God said in his word, 'make a joyful noise' and that doesn't leave any of us out."

Long-time first grade teacher Verna Franks asks a woman in the back of the church, "What's your favorite song Grandma Smith?"

"Amazing Grace," responds the 95-year old grandmother. "We'll sing that because we're so glad to see you," Ms. Franks says back.

A quartet from Kirbyville, "The Gospel Tones," sets up the only amplification equipment used during the evening. They sing "I Woke Up This Morning Feeling Fine," "Sail Away Home," and "I'm Building a Bridge."

The audience responds with applause after each selection. The only preaching of the evening comes from former Pentecostal pastor Grady Love from the Wolfbend-Cattle Creek area. He reads from the Beatitudes in Matthew 5, "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God."

People need to value the time they have together, he says. "I don't think it would cost any of too much to say to someone 'I appreciate you.'"

After the sermon Love picks up the hand saw he brought in earlier, bends the blade into an "S" and plays "Farther Along" by tapping the steel with a stick. "You really need a rubber hammer to get the right notes," he says, "but notes don't matter much to me."

Ogden Miller led the congregation in singing on "Leaning on the Everlasting Arms" and "Precious Memories." The second song, he said, reminded him of "the precious memories I have here (and those) who taught me about Jesus."

Outside, the music carries well in the heavy night air. The only other song is distant, from cars passing along the highway. The darkness envelops all, save for a few strands of light coming from the chapel.

Before the closing song, "Where the Soul Never Dies," Miller surveys the group and says, "This will be just what we make of it."

Family Circus: 25 years young

By JOY STILLEY

AP Newsfeatures Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — Bil Keane's five real children are grown, but time has stood still for the four cartoon kids he modeled on them 25 years ago in "The Family Circus."

Though Keane's four sons and one daughter now range in age from 35 to 26, the characters they inspired have had perennial youth: Billy remains 7, Dolly 5, Jeffy 3, and PJ, who made his appearance in 1962, is still a toddler.

"I let him (PJ) grow to 18 months, he started to walk, grew hair, but then I put the freeze on. I thought, if I keep them growing at this rate, I'll be out of business," Keane explained in an interview.

But after a quarter of a century, he's still very much in business, with the popular feature running in more than 1,100 newspapers. And, marking its staying power, "The Family Circus Album: a 25th Anniversary celebration," has just been published.

The volume combines some of the favorite panels during the years with pictures from the Keanes' own family album of the youngsters in situations on which the cartoons were based. It includes a commentary by the artist, as well as a sampling of letters from readers.

"Whenever I have one (cartoon) that evokes nostalgia, the amount of mail is astounding," said Keane, at 62 an older, thinner, version of "daddy" in the feature. "I don't try to preach, but I'm not afraid to show the children at prayer. They have respect for God, grandparents, relatives, pets. Their home is the happiest place in the world. If that comes through, then I'm doing what I try to do."

On the other hand, he also gets letters when he shows the children in potentially dangerous situations, such as in a car without their seatbelts buckled. A worried fan wrote, after he showed them standing near the edge of the Grand Canyon, "Keep those children back!"

"It's flattering to me that they think of them as real," Keane said. "I take great pains to make it seem real. They also seem real to me. I dream at times that the Family Circus characters are intermingled with our own family."

Billy evolved from "myself and our older boys," Neal, Glenn and Chris, Keane points out. Dolly is his daughter Gayle; Jeffy is the Keanes' youngest Jeff; and PJ is "a composite of all the kids as infants."

"Just like any father or mother, I try not to play favorites," he says, "but I guess I use Dolly more than any of the others. She tries to be a little mother, bossing her brothers. She's a font of misinformation, yet she's so tender and cute."

"My wife, Thel, who's the model for mommy, is the hub of the enterprise. She has given me support, she's my advisor and critic. She has an uncanny knack of putting her finger on something. She handles all of the business end."

When the prototypes were young, they didn't realize they were providing their father with material for his drawings, he recalls, and later "they rather enjoyed the notoriety." Though these original suppliers are gone from the household, Keane says he has more ideas than he can ever use, thanks to four grandchildren.

As with the changes that have taken place within the circle that encloses his weekday drawings, and in the larger Sunday panel, "I've continued drawing the same characters, but it's gradually gotten better. I started out drawing what I considered funny, but now it's more than just a belly laugh. I

"There was a time when you couldn't draw a toilet, or make a comment about sex. I'm careful because the material is for family consumption, but the shackles of prudery that once ruled most comic strips have been lifted somewhat. Nevertheless, I think that comics are the last frontier of decent, clean entertainment."

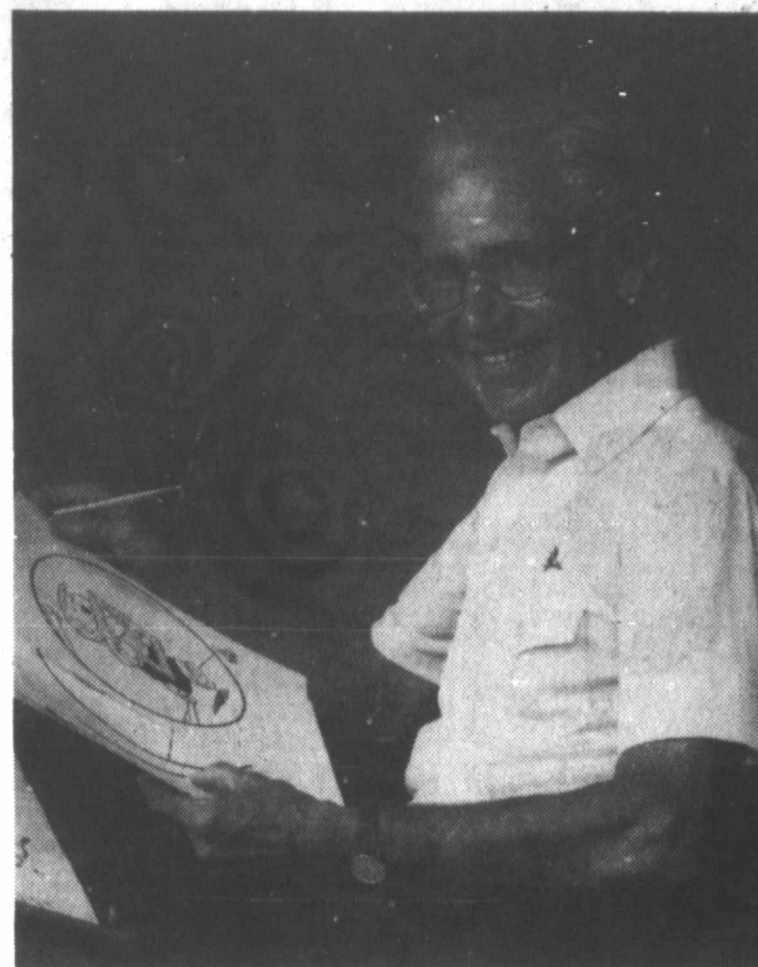

Keane, a native of Philadelphia and former staff artist on the Philadelphia Bulletin, lost the second "I" in his first name in high school. "We were putting out a satirical magazine, and the others were spelling their names as Franc and Edd; so just to be different I dropped the I, and when I started doing cartoons in the service, I signed them Bil Keane. Later I leagally changed my name."

The Keanes live in Paradise Valley, Ariz., where he works at the studio attached to his house and plays a lot of tennis.

Would he like to produce "The Family Circus" for another 25 years?

"Absolutely. I'll do it for 50 if I can make it."

("The Family Circus Album" is published by Fawcett-Columbine.)

FAMILY FUN — Bil Keane may be a little older than when he started drawing the cartoon series, "The Family Circus," 25 years ago, but the four kids whose lovable antics he chronicles have stayed young.

Christmas stories teach importance of love

By George Plagenz

We all have our favorite Christmas stories. These are mine.

Charles Howard was a department store Santa Claus who used to visit children in the hospitals after closing hours at the store.

One year, the week before Christmas, he went to see Nancy, an emaciated polio victim who was being kept alive by motors and gadgets. Before Howard went into the room, the nurses told him it might be her last Christmas.

When Nancy saw him dressed in his Santa Claus suit, she quivered with excitement. "She wants to kiss you, Santa," said her mother, who read Nancy's lips. Howard leaned down and felt Nancy's one good arm around his neck.

"I wasn't worth a darn after that," he said. Before he left, Nancy gave him three sticks of candy for his reindeer.

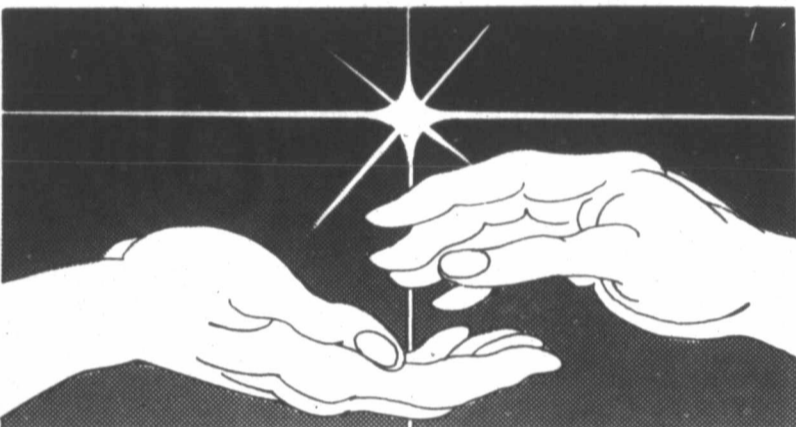

That night Howard couldn't sleep. The next morning he wrote Nancy a letter. He told her how wonderful it had been to see her and how his reindeer made him divide the pieces of candy so each one of them could have a piece.

"When I tucked Dancer in bed," wrote Howard, "he had his piece under his pillow."

Several days later, a nurse called on Howard at the department store. From the instant Nancy read the letter, she said, a change came over her. "I think she is going to get well," said the nurse.

The next year, from his throne in the department store, Howard saw a little girl in braces running to him. It was Nancy.

"You can't always work a miracle like that," said Howard later, "but you can try."

AGNES'S HAPPIEST Christmas was also her saddest.

She had always dreamed of opening her presents on Christmas morning and finding a fur coat in one of the brightly wrapped packages. But fur coats are expensive and Agnes knew her husband couldn't afford one.

On this Christmas she was more sure than ever that there would be no fur coat. Her husband had been ill with heart trouble for much of the year.

So after she opened a five-pound box of chocolates, a pair of fine kid gloves and a sheer nightie ("John had never lost that gleam in his eye"), she went to put her arms around him and thank him.

"There's another box for you behind the big chair," he said as she hugged him. It was a big box — the kind a fur coat would come in. She knew it couldn't be. But it was. And it was beautiful.

"Put it on," he said. Agnes's hair was in curlers and she had a bathrobe on.

"Oh, not now, John," she said. "I'll wear it for you when we go out tomorrow night."

But he insisted. And so Agnes made breakfast that Christmas morning in her house slippers and fur coat.

She is glad she did. That was the only time John was to see her in the gift she had waited for so long — and the gift he had saved for so long.

Agnes took him to the hospital that night. He died the next morning.

THE LOUDERMILKS always had bananas and cream before they opened their gifts on Christmas morning. There was no reason for it. It was just the way they had always done it.

One Christmas, however, the gift-opening began without the bananas and cream. Nobody remarked on the omission or even seemed aware of it.

But then Mrs. Loudermilk noticed Freddie was going around with a sad face. "It just doesn't seem like Christmas," he said. His mother couldn't understand. There was the tree and there were plenty of gifts and everything to make it seem like Christmas.

"Why, whatever do you mean, Freddie?" she asked.

"We didn't have our bananas and cream this morning," he said.

How you celebrate Christmas probably isn't as important as celebrating it the same way each year. Christmas customs take on a hallowed association. Like other traditions, they give a sense of continuity and belonging, a feeling greatly needed in our world today.

We don't always realize the full impact of these little things until our grown children return home and comment on the good feeling these traditions gave them.

In "A Letter to His Daughter," William Butler Yeats writes, "May she live in a household where all is custom and ceremony."

Freddie's mother forgot how important a little custom can be, even if it's only bananas and cream on Christmas morning.

HER NAME wasn't really Penny. Paul didn't know what it was but as he told the story in later years that was what he always called her.

He was getting ready to lock the door of his little shop on Christmas Eve. Christmas was not the happiest time for him. He lived alone. The gay holiday shoppers who passed his window seemed only to add to the sadness and loneliness he felt.

As he was walking to the door to lock it, a little girl walked in. "I want to buy that string of blue beads in the window," she said. "It's for my sister."

As he looked into the face of the child, his heart stood still. There had once been a girl in his life — older than this girl — who had the same wheat-colored hair, the same sweet, innocent face and sea-blue eyes.

He had been in love with her but had let circumstances separate them and send their lives in opposite directions. Only later did he realize how much he had lost when she had gone out of his life.

While all this was flashing through his mind, the little girl spoke up. "How much are the beads?" she asked. He watched her untie the knots in a handkerchief and pour a handful of pennies on the counter.

"I think you have just enough there," he said. He went to the window and took out the string of blue beads, being careful — as his back was turned — to remove the price tag which said $4.95.

He wrapped the beads, took the pennies without counting them and the little girl left with a smile on her face.

Hospital offers safe ride

The highways and streets of Pampa might be a little safer this holiday season because of Coronado Community Hospital's new program called FriendShip.

On the evenings of Dec. 14, 15, 21, 22, Christmas Eve, Christmas day, New Year's Eve and New Year's day, CCH is to provide free taxi service to anyone who has had too many drinks. The reveler or a friend can call the hospital at 665-3721.

The hospital will contact the Checker Cab company, and ask for a taxi to take the caller home.

"The service is free and confidential," says Linda Haynes, director of public relations at the hospital. "The only restriction is that callers must let the taxi drivers take them home in Pampa, not to other parties or to a bar."

The FriendShip program and similar projects have been very successful in other areas, reducing traffic accidents, deaths, and driving - while - intoxicated arrests, Haynes said.

"We believe drunken driving is a serious problem nationwide," said CCH administrator Norman Knox. "We are pleased to do our part to combat the problem here in our community."

FriendShip taxi service will be available only on Dec. 14, 15, 21, 22, 24, 25, 31 and Jan. 1, but Knox indicated the hospital would evaluate the success of the program for possible use in the future.

Coronado Community Hospital is an affiliate of Hospital Corporation of America, the world's largest health care management company.

Landlord responsible for apartment

DEAR BRUCE WILLIAMS: I'm disgusted, perhaps "repulsed" might be a better word. I rented an apartment two weeks ago and I signed a one-year lease. The apartment is absolutely full of cockroaches.

Now, I'm not the most squeamish person in the world, but I have sprayed, put out traps, stamped, and done everything I can do, but the roaches keep coming.

I've talked to an exterminator but he tells me as long as the other apartments in the building are infested, there's nothing I can do but try to control them.

I've contacted the landlord and he said at the price I was paying for the apartment, he can't afford to have an exterminator in once a week — learn to live with it.

When I told him I was moving, he said that I couldn't do that because I signed a lease, and at the very least would forfeit my security deposit, and he would sue me. Can he do this to me? — K.P., Fresno, Calif.

DEAR K.P.: With people like your landlord, who needs enemies.

A direct answer to your question is no, he cannot do this to you. It's true that you have a lease, but your landlord has obligations, too.

Your obligation is to pay the rent on time and take reasonable care of the apartment. His obligation is to provide a habitable dwelling place where you can live with reasonable comfort and security. He's not doing this.

You have a couple of choices. First, go to your local board of health and make a written complaint that the landlord is not providing habitable premises for you.

If your health officer tells you that this is a routine matter and says, "Give me a couple of weeks," tell him that in your opinion this is an emergency and you don't want to wait any longer.

Tell him you will go to the county or state authorities and to the local governing body if he doesn't move quickly.

Usually that will inspire him to make an inspection that day or preferably in the evening, when the friendly roaches seem to come out in force.

Your other option is to pick up and move and tell the landlord that you are moving because the house is not fit for human habitation. You might want to do this in conjunction with the health department inspection.

You will then demand your rent and your security deposit refunded and it will be necessary to make this demand in a small-claims court.

I have every reason to believe that if the conditions are as you've described them, and you take the steps I've outlined so that you can prove your case, you will prevail in court.

DEAR BRUCE WILLIAMS: I would like to return to the job market. I have secretarial skills and I enjoy working. Quite honestly, we also need the money. But with two youngsters, I really would prefer to work part time.

I've sought part-time work in the area but have not been successful. There are lots of full-time jobs available, but if I want to work 20 hours a week, it's no go. Any suggestions? — F.L., Tampa, Fla.

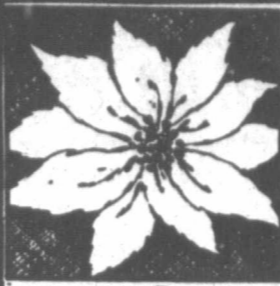

DEAR F.L.: One of the latest innovations is job sharing, and you might want to consider it.

You pair yourself up with another woman who has similar interests and skills and would also like to work on a part-time basis. Then you seek out an employer who is willing to let you work, for example, mornings and your alter-ego work afternoons.

There are some real benefits to the employer in an arrangement like this: 1) He can find people with skills who aren't available in the ordinary job market and who will work for a tad less and; 2) These people are fresh physically and mentally because they only work in the morning or afternoon.

It's a trend that has a great deal of merit. I would strongly suggest you give it a good run for its money.

Write to Bruce Williams in care of this newspaper. Volume of mail prohibits personal responses. Questions of general interest will be answered in this column.

Dear Abby

Son's holiday hospitality lacks spirit of the season

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1984 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: Last winter I wrote to my son and asked him if I could come to visit him for a few days before Christmas. He told me to come and reminded me that he had a bad back and couldn't give up his bed, so he hoped I wouldn't mind sleeping on the floor in the living room. I said I wouldn't mind. (He's 42 and divorced.)

He told me he had a girlfriend who sometimes "sleeps over," so I shouldn't be surprised if she was there. As it turned out, she was. They slept in the bedroom and I made a bed for myself on the living room floor. It was very hard, but the worst part was not having any shades on the windows.

I arrived on Friday and planned to leave on a 4 p.m. plane on Sunday, but my son and his girlfriend wanted to drive somewhere to see a football game, so they dropped me at the airport at 9 a.m. where I sat for seven hours until my plane left. Oh yes, my son gave me $2 for lunch.

Do I have a right to feel hurt? And do you think I should visit my son again? I am 69 and a widow.

MOM

DEAR MOM: You have a right to feel not only "hurt," but insulted and mistreated. And if you visit him again, Mom, you should have your head examined.

DEAR READERS: If you can use a few good laughs today, try these quotes:

"Eighty percent of married men cheat in America. The rest cheat in Europe." (Jackie Mason)

"Your manuscript is both good and original. But the part that is good is not original, and the part that is original is not good." (Samuel Johnson)

"A man is incomplete until he is married. After that, he is finished." (Zsa Zsa Gabor)

"A critic is a man who knows the way, but can't drive the car." (Kenneth Tynan)

"France is a country where the money falls apart but you can't tear the toilet paper." (Billy Wilder)

The above quotes are from the book "The Other 637 Best Things

"Anybody Ever Said" by Robert Byrne (published by Atheneum). It's $10.95, and worth every cent.

DEAR ABBY: Even though you stated that not one penny is charged to organ donors or their families, it happened to us four years ago. Our daughter was in an automobile accident. There was no hope for her survival and we were asked to donate her organs after her death. We agreed because we wanted to help others in need, knowing our daughter could not be saved.

We received an extremely large bill from the hospital for the surgery, operating room, etc. related to removing her organs for transplant purposes. We are not wealthy people, but we paid the bill.

We were later told that we should not have been billed and were advised to sue the hospital. We did not sue because we felt if they could live with their conscience, we could live without the money. We did what we thought was right, and that's all that matters.

ANOTHER EX-DONOR
IN WEST VIRGINIA

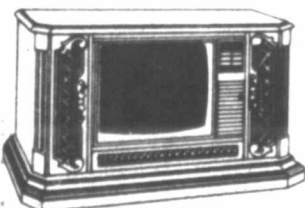

DEAR EX-DONOR: I submit that doing what you thought was "right" is not all that matters. When you allow dishonest deeds to go unpunished, you encourage cheats to continue cheating. Even though you can live without the money, why not demand its return—and give it to charity?

(Do you hate to write letters because you don't know what to say? Thank-you notes, sympathy letters, congratulations, how to decline and accept invitations and how to write an interesting letter are included in Abby's booklet, "How to Write Letters for All Occasions." Send your name and address clearly printed with a check or money order for $2.50 (this includes postage) to: Dear Abby, Letter Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

FOOD

Keep it simple

HOLIDAY BRUNCH IDEA — Serve this delicious and easy Crustless Bacony Quiche to your holiday guests.

Make it special. Keep it simple. These ideas do not have to be mutually exclusive. Approach this often hectic season with the idea that you, too, can enjoy the moment.

A holiday brunch before an afternoon of caroling, cross-country skiing, decorating the tree, attending a play, or simply enjoying the good conversation of good friends can be fun for the hostess as well.

Plan an easy - to - prepare menu without many last - minute touches. Let the food be the centerpiece and ask other members of your family or close friends to help where necessary.

Even young children are great helpers if they know ahead of time what is expected of them.

Try Crustless Bacony Quiche as one of the recipes on your brunch menu. It's particularly easy to serve; there's no crust to roll out and no bacon to fry. Simply sprinkle bacon bits, shredded Swiss cheese and sliced green onions in a pie plate or quiche dish, beat the other ingredients, pour and bake. Crusty loaves of bread, mixed greens, perhaps even fresh fruit complete this holiday brunch.

Other ways to use bacon bits for brunch (still keeping it simple) are a filling for an omelet, stirred into hash browns, ¼ cup stirred into a batter yielding three 9-inch waffles or ¼ cup stirred into a batter yielding 12 muffins. Substitute them for Canadian bacon in Eggs Benedict, one tablespoon per serving.

Sprinkle bacon bits on fresh fruit or stir into your favorite filling for deviled eggs. Even cut cored apples into quarters, spread the cut sides with peanut butter and sprinkle with bacon bits.

Whatever your choice for brunch, enjoy the holidays with family and friends.

CRUSTLESS BACONY QUICHE
 ½ c. bacon bits
 1 c. shredded Swiss cheese
 1-3rd c. thinly sliced green onions (with tops)
 1 ½ c. milk
 3 eggs
 ¾ c. buttermilk baking mix
 ¼ t. pepper

Heat oven to 400 degrees. Grease pie plate, 9x1¼ inches, or quiche dish, 9x1½ inches. Sprinkle bacon bits, cheese and onions in plate. Beat remaining ingredients until smooth, 15 seconds in blender on high or one minute with hand beater. Pour into plates. Bake until top is golden brown and knife inserted in center comes out clean, 30 to 35 minutes. Cool five minutes. Six servings.

Talking about turkey

By GAYLA MALONEY
 Texas Department of Agriculture
 Turkey is one of the most popular meats served for American holiday meals. This versatile bird is available in all sizes, therefore it can be served at everyone's holiday meal, from the smallest to the largest families.

Turkey meat is one of the meats highest in protein. At the same time is also contains the lowest fat and calories. One cup of mixed, light and dark, turkey meat contains 265 calories. Turkey also has unsaturated fats, which reportedly does not increase the blood cholesterol level. Turkey is also a good source of the B vitamins, thiamine, riboflavin and niacin. The majority of turkey production in Texas is around the Temple and Waco areas.

Whether you are a "first-timer" or "old hand" at preparing turkey for your holiday dinner, there are many facts to remember in order to make your meal safe and delicious. When purchasing a turkey, either fresh, frozen, self-basted or prestuffed, be sure to look for the U.S.D.A. label. This inspection mark lets you know the turkey has been inspected and that it is safe and wholesome. Since there is no significant difference in quality between fresh and frozen turkeys, the choice is based on personal preference.

If purchasing a frozen turkey, make sure that it is solidly frozen. Keep the whole, frozen turkey — either prestuffed or unstuffed in the home freezer until ready to cook. The two recommended methods for thawing turkeys are thawing in the refrigerator or in cold water. The main point to remember is that both methods keep your turkey cold while thawing — the key to prevent excessive bacterial growth. Always remember to cook the turkey promptly after thawing.

To thaw in the refrigerator, place the turkey in its original wrapping on a tray or in a pan to catch moisture that accumulates as it thaws. The thawing time depends on the size of the bird, usually one to five days. If thawing in cold water, place the bird in its unopened bag in the sink or in a large container and cover it with cold water. Change the water every 30 minutes to assure safe and effective thawing. Thawing time is usually between four to 12 hours, again depending on the size of the bird.

Never thaw prestuffed turkeys because bacteria can develop in the stuffing while the turkey thaws. It is also not a good idea to thaw turkey on the kitchen counter because room temperatures fall within the danger zone of 60 degrees F. to 125 degrees F. which promotes active growth of bacteria.

If left on a kitchen counter, a frozen turkey will thaw from the outside in. As the surface warms bacteria could multiply to a dangerous level. Since some food poisoning organisms produce toxins that withstand heat, cooking cannot be relied on to destroy all bacteria.

When thawing is completed, remove the neck and giblets from the neck or body cavity. Wash the inside and outside of the bird and giblets with cold water and drain well. It is also important to wash your hands, utensils and sink after they have come in contact with the raw turkey to prevent the spread of bacteria.

If purchasing a fresh turkey be sure to purchase the turkey only one to two days before you plan to serve it. Keep the fresh turkey refrigerated at 40 degrees F. or below.

Stuffing a turkey in advance may sound like a good idea, but actually this practice invites trouble because harmful bacteria can multiply in the stuffing and cause food poisoning. Turkeys should be stuffed only at the last minute.

Dry stuffing and ingredients may be prepared the day before, tightly covered and left at room temperature. The perishables (butter or margarine, mushrooms, oysters, cooked celery and onions, broth, etc.) should be refrigerated. The ingredients should then be combined just before stuffing the turkey.

Remember to allow ¾ cup stuffing for each pound of ready-to-cook turkey. Stuff the cavity lightly because stuffing expands as it cooks. Extra stuffing may be baked separately.

Cooks in a hurry can bake all the stuffing in a greased, covered casserole during the last hour while the turkey roasts. Not only does an unstuffed turkey take less time to cook than a stuffed one, but time will be saved by not stuffing the turkey and having to scoop the stuffing out to serve it once the turkey is done.

Holiday buffets are a festive, fun and wonderful serving method for a large crowd. However, they do require extra care in preparing, storing, and serving the food. Be sure to have enough refrigerator space for the perishable foods.

It's a good idea to keep buffet servings small and to replenish the serving dishes as needed, directly from the stove or refrigerator.

If food is left out more than two hours, even in heated serving units, the risk of food poisoning is increased. When the guests have finished eating, put the perishables, especially the turkey and other meat and poultry products back into the refrigerator.

You bought the kind of turkey you wanted because you read the Chalet spices life with variety

LAKE WALES, Fla. (AP) — Hugging a picturesque lake off a byway of this Central Florida rural community is Chalet Suzanne, a unique country inn that seems to transport its guests to a European fairyland of a half century ago. Started in 1931 by the late Bertha Hinshaw after her husband died and the family fortune was lost in the 1929 stock market crash, the chalet's attractions were Mrs.

Hinshaw's gourmet cooking, antiques she had collected from around the world and, to a degree, her artistic eccentricity. She died in 1973, but the chalet's tradition has been continued by her son, Carl, and his wife, Vita. From the red brick driveway and courtyard, visitors encounter what appears to be a small village of tiny pastel-colored homes. These are the 30 rooms available for overnight guests, plus several small shops. Unlike other motels along the nation's highways, Chalet Suzanne was built with quixotic disarray that is rarely forgotten.

No two rooms are alike in shape, nor are their furnishings. Colorful tiles from a number of European countries are found everywhere.

Turrets, balconies, patios, iron work, flower gardens and stained glass windows give the place a storybook effect.

Hinshaw remembers his mother's creative instincts.

"She would get up in the morning and decide to build something. She never put anything down on paper. She simply told the workers what to build. When they finished and if she didn't like it, she would have them tear it down and start again."

When a 1944 fire destroyed the family home where the business had begun, Mrs. Hinshaw used her ingenuity to stay in business.

What had been the family game room on the hill leading down to the lake was converted to a dining room. Other remnants from the 70-acre estate were added on until there were five attached dining rooms.

The restaurant's foyer was once part of the hen house and is connected to what used to be a wing of the stable.

Objets d'art are everywhere, along with family memorabilia. In the dining rooms, no two tables are alike. Each is set with different china and glassware gathered in Europe. Soup bowls are replicas of a large ashtray Mrs. Hinshaw admired during a visit to Oslo, Norway.

Four honeymoon suites are available, including one that has an inside balcony overlooking one of the dining rooms. Meals are delivered via a glass dumb-waiter.

A 2,450-foot grass airstrip is located behind the lodge for visitors who come by private aircraft.

Vita Hinshaw, a former airline stewardess, is the chalet's hostess and oversees the restaurant, wine cellar, gift shops and office.

INN HOSTESS — Vita Hinshaw, and her husband, Carl, own the Chalet Suzanne in Lake Wales, Fla., an unusual country inn that features turrets, balconies and stained glass windows.

CHRISTMAS SUGAR COOKIES — Because of this busy time of year, cooks will appreciate the simplicity of this delicious recipe for Christmas Sugar Cookies. Kids will love to help with the mixing, frosting and decorating — they'll have loads of holiday fun.

Easy to make sugar cookies

One of the nicest Christmas traditions of days gone by was decking the halls with homemade treats. Family and friends would roll out cookie dough, shape into angels, stars and trees, make colorful icings and sprinkle sparkling decorations on the fresh baked sugar cookies. Then use it all to trim everything from trees to wreaths.

Festive and enjoyable, these edible ornaments are easier to make than you think. Dazzling stars, heavenly angels, adorable gingerbread men, bells, trees, wreaths and candy canes quickly create a festive flavor. They're easy to cut out and all you need for decorating is a little imagination and some children who will love to join in the fun.

For friends far away, don't forget to send a box of those sugar cookies packing. What a wonderful way to say "Wish you were here," and what a delicious surprise to receive.

This Christmas, holiday cheer and warmth and goodness can begin in your kitchen with Christmas Sugar Cookies. Any way you slice them, or shape them or frost them, they're treats. This recipe will please your family and friends, so put it in a safe place. Ol' St. Nick may leave you a note and ask for another heaping batch next year!

CHRISTMAS SUGAR COOKIES

- 2 c. sifted all purpose flour
- 1 t. baking powder
- 1/2 t. salt
- 1/2 c. shortening
- 1 c. sugar
- 1 egg
- 1/4 c. milk
- 1/2 t. lemon extract

Sift together the flour, baking powder and salt; set aside. In a mixing bowl blend the shortening and sugar and mix in the egg. Add dry ingredients alternately with milk and lemon extract and blend thoroughly. Chill dough overnight.

Preheat oven to 400 degrees F.

Roll dough to 1/4 inch thickness on floured pastry cloth. Cut out shapes with knife or cookie cutters. Transfer to greased cookie sheet and bake seven to 10 minutes. Yields about four dozen cookies.

DECORATING AND ICING

- 3 3/4 c. (1 lb.) powdered sugar
- 4 T. milk (approximately)
- Food colorings

Combine powdered sugar with milk; stir until smooth. Add more milk, one teaspoon at a time, to achieve desired spreading consistency. Divide icing into several small bowls and tint with several drops of food coloring. Trim with colored decorator sprinkles, cinnamon red hots and candies.

Christmas Sugar Cookies is one of Imperial Sugar's newest recipes. Additional copies of the recipe and information about other free recipes and free cookbooks are available from Imperial Sugar Company, P.O. Box 500, Sugar Land, Texas, 77478.

Turkey

label, you thawed it properly and cooked it according to the directions and your turkey was the hit of the holiday dinner! Now — what do you do with the leftovers? Maybe these recipe ideas from the Texas Department of Agriculture will help.

TURKEY TURNOVERS

- Pastry for two-crust pie
- 1 1/2 c. chopped cooked turkey
- 1 1/2 c. shredded Swiss cheese
- 1 can (2 1/4 oz.) deviled ham
- 1/4 c. sour cream
- 1 t. parsley flakes
- 1/2 t. salt
- 1 beaten egg
- Sesame seeds
- Sour cream

Prepare pastry for two-crust pie and divide into two equal parts. Roll each part on lightly floured cloth-covered board into 16x8 inch rectangles. Cut each rectangle into eight, four-inch squares. Mix turkey, cheese, deviled ham, 1/4 cup sour cream, parsley flakes and salt. Spread scant three tablespoons turkey mixture on a triangle half of each square, keeping mixture 1/2 inch from edges. Moisten all edges with water. Fold pastry over filling to form triangle. Seal edges with fork; prick tops. Brush turnovers with beaten egg; sprinkle with sesame seeds. Bake at 425 degrees F. until golden brown, about 13 minutes. Serve hot with sour cream. Serves 8.

TURKEY BUFFET CASSEROLE

- 4 oz. medium wide noodles
- 1 pkg. frozen broccoli spears
- 3 T. butter or margarine
- 3 T. flour
- 1 t. salt
- 1/4 t. prepared mustard
- 1/4 t. pepper
- 2 c. milk
- 1 c. grated processed American cheese
- 2 c. cooked turkey, diced
- 1-3 c. pecans

Cook noodles in boiling salted water until tender; drain. Cook broccoli as label directs until just tender; drain. Dice broccoli stems, but leave flowerets whole. In saucepan over low heat, melt butter; stir in flour, salt, mustard, pepper, and milk. Cook stirring constantly until thick and smooth. Remove from heat and stir in cheese until melted.

In greased shallow casserole or eight-inch square baking dish, arrange noodles, broccoli stems, and turkey; pour cheese sauce over all. Arrange broccoli flowerets on top, pressing them lightly into sauce. Sprinkle with pecans.

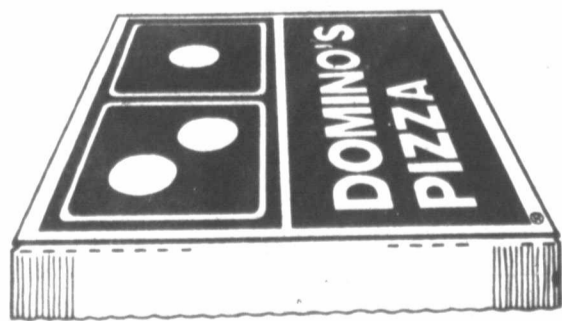

Bake, uncovered, at 350 degrees F. for 15 minutes, or until bubbling hot. Yield: 4-6 servings.

TURKEY-STUFFED GREEN PEPPERS

- 3 lg. green peppers
- 1 box corn bread stuffing mix
- 2 beaten eggs
- 1/2 c. chicken bouillon
- 2 c. chopped cooked turkey
- Grated sharp cheese

Cut the green peppers in half lengthwise and remove seeds. Cook in boiling water for 2-3 minutes, then drain. Arrange hollow side up, in a casserole. Mix the stuffing mix with eggs. Add bouillon to moisten and mix. Add turkey and mix well. Fill the green peppers with turkey mixture and cover with cheese. Bake at 350 degrees F. for about 25 minutes.

Reader request: a barley casserole

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
Associated Press Food Editor
DEAR CECILY: Some years ago our paper carried your recipe for a barley casserole with mushrooms and onion in it. Sorry to say I have lost my copy and can't remember the exact proportions called for. I hope you will give the recipe for the dish again because I think other cooks may find it enjoyed at their table as much as it was at mine. — ADVENTUROUS COOK.

DEAR ADVENTUROUS COOK: Old-fashioned cooks used to use barley chiefly for soup. But more than a dozen years ago some modern cooks found it made an admirable accompaniment, in casserole form, for poultry, meat and fish — and a welcome change from potatoes, rice or pasta. So glad you asked me to revive the recipe. — C.B.

BARLEY CASEROLE
½ of a ¼-pound stick butter (4 tablespoons) Medium onion (4 ounces)

finely chopped
¼ pound mushrooms, thinly sliced
2 chicken bouillon cubes
1 quart water
1 cup pearly medium-size barley
1 teaspoon salt

In a 10 inch skillet over moderately low heat, melt butter. Add onion and mushrooms and cook, stirring often, until wilted.

In a 1½- or 2-quart saucepan bring bouillon cubes and water to a boil, stirring to dissolve cubes.

Into a round ungreased 2-quart casserole (about 8 by 2¼ inches) turn barley; stir in onion-mushroom mixture, the very hot bouillon and the salt.

Bake, uncovered, in preheated 350-degree oven, stirring several times, for 1 hour. Cover tightly; continue baking until liquid has been absorbed and barley is tender but chewy — 30 minutes longer. Serve hot.

Makes 8 servings.

BARLEY CASEROLE — Easy to make and good to serve with poultry at holiday time.

Pioneer Texas flier still has her head up in the clouds

By ROBERT SELTZER
Fort Worth Star-Telegram
ROANOKE, Texas (AP) — As a child, Edna Gardner Whyte had her head in the clouds; as a grown-up, she got her body up there as well.

She is almost 83 years old, a silver-haired woman often dismissed by the unenlightened as someone who does nothing more adventurous than knit booties for her grandchildren.

Few people would guess, by looking at her, that she has been flying airplanes since 1926, the year before Charles Lindbergh made his historic flight across the Atlantic in the "Spirit of St. Louis."

To her, the sky is almost a permanent address, with the earth a place she visits between jaunts through the heavens.

During her nearly 60 years as a pilot, she has spent almost four years in the air, flown 58 kinds of airplanes ranging from a Monocoupe to a J-5 Taperwing, won 128 trophies and taught almost 5,000 students to do, on a less heroic level, what she has done.

"It's very gratifying to be up there, so high above everything," she said. "There's nothing sadder than when a senior citizen gives up living. If I didn't have any students to teach, my days would be very dull. I'd atrophy. You know what atrophy is? Die."

In good weather Mrs. Whyte has been known to work as many as 18 hours a day, instructing her students on the joys of flying. Many are too young to know or understand the story of a woman who has made history in the air.

"She's a pioneer in aviation," said Clarence Page, director of the Air Space Museum in Oklahoma City, which recently inducted her into its hall of fame. "She's won races all over the United States. She's determined to make the public understand that women can fly just as well as men."

"She and Amelia Earhart were great pilots, but Amelia's husband was a writer who did beautiful articles about his wife, so she got more publicity."

Unless her home were an airport — which it almost is — Mrs. Whyte could not reside in a more ideal location. She lives about 20 miles northeast of Fort Worth, only a few yards from the runway of a small airport which she built and later sold. A hangar, which accommodates two planes, is attached to the house like a garage.

"I have a car, but I don't like driving," she said. "The highways are too dangerous. I'm afraid of them. You're driving along, and the only thing separating you from a car going the other way is a thin, white stripe. Give me the sky ... there's more room up there."

Edna M. Gardner was born on Nov. 3, 1902, in Mankato, Minn., during an age, she said, when men thought women were "too stupid" to vote. If that was the prevailing attitude, young Edna did her best to conquer it.

In 1909, her father got a job with the railroad in Seattle, so the family moved there to join him. A year later, he was killed in a train wreck. Edna was 8 years old.

Her mother, a schoolteacher who had contracted tuberculosis, sent the children — Edna, a brother and a sister — to aunts and uncles in three different states.

"In those days, the more petticoats a girl wore, the nicer she was supposed to look," she recalled. "The daughters of my relatives would get three, and I'd get one. It hurt. I think that's why I became so competitive early on in life."

"But I must have been a pill. I was feisty and opinionated. One year, I went to four different schools. I never meet a stranger, though. I feel like I know everybody."

As a girl, she participated in all the sandlot activities usually reserved for boys, especially football and baseball. She even loved dashing through the culvert as a shortcut to the schoolhouse. All the other girls thought she was, well, bold, but the boys accepted her — they had to.

"It hurt me to know that I could get better grades than the boys, and yet women still couldn't vote," she said. "So I had the desire, from the very beginning, to do anything a boy could do. They seemed kind of shy with me when I played around them, but that wasn't going to stop me."

In 1926, while working as a nurse at Virginia Mason Hospital in Seattle, she got her first ride in an airplane. She was hooked.

She found someone willing to instruct a woman, but only if she dressed like a man, with a hood wrapped around her head to conceal her long hair. After 12 hours of training, she felt ready to solo, and her instructor agreed, finally.

Alone in the cockpit of the OX-5 Jenny, Edna M. Gardner — whose singing voice was so bad that, as a child, she mouthed the words to the hymns in church — sang an impromptu song of liberation: "I've gotten rid of that man at last, I've gotten rid of that man at last."

"Back in Minnesota, my mother read an article that called me 'The Flying Nurse,'" she said. "She was well by this time, and she thought I was crazy. She said she would pay my way through medical school if I quit flying. So I went to the University of Wisconsin, but it wasn't long before I was flying again."

The novice received her pilot's license (No. 4013) from the Department of Commerce in 1928. She had to cry to get it. The inspector, a man, refused her initial requests, so she kept pleading and pleading until, finally, her tears proved more eloquent than her words and he relented.

"From then on," she said, "nobody could stop me."

A civilian working with the Army Air Corps at Meacham Field during World War II, she trained fighter pilots for combat missions she herself could not fly. What she could do was see herself flying one of those "big, beautiful" military airplanes, and the image was seductive. Yet, while her determination realized many of her dreams, her sex dashed many others.

"To this day, that's one of my biggest regrets," said the aviator, who has lived in the Fort Worth area since the end of the war. "I also wanted to be a pilot for a commercial airline, but they wouldn't accept me because I was a woman."

"It hurts to see retired pilots getting the $40,000 a year in pensions that I could be getting. Today, there are about 45,000 male pilots in the world and about 86 women (pilots.) They call that equal rights."

And in 1969, when she needed $5,000 to start building her airport, the Small Business Administration rejected her loan request. The SBA decision was based on what it considered sound policy: She was a woman.

"That's why I call my school a school that exists without federal funds," she said.

Inducted into countless halls of fame, she still worries about protocol each time she is asked to speak somewhere, wondering if it would be proper to wear pants instead of a formal dress.

"Do you know how much one of those dresses from Neiman-Marcus costs?" she asked rhetorically. "I can't afford it."

Mrs. Whyte has been a friend of and, in at least one race, victor over Amelia Earhart; she has performed stunts that seem to imitate the crazy, erratic flight patterns of a housefly; she has flown through fog, landed among rock-strewn fields and — survived it all.

And, amid all that adventure, she has had only one accident. It happened recently enough, however, to remain fresh in her memory — three months ago.

"I had soloed this man's wife the day before," she said. "I was with her, in the back, but she was doing the flying. So he wanted to solo, too.

"He came out at 6 that morning, and I wanted to give some experience with forced landings in case he lost his engine. The first two went fine. The third time, he chose a plowed field with trees all around it."

"I saw a telephone wire at the last second. The wire hit the wheels of the plane. We started heading straight down. I had to pull the plane, so that the nose wouldn't hit the ground. We landed upside down, and we just slid about 40 feet."

Both she and her student escaped without injury. The only damage, she said, was to her ego.

The aviator has been a widow since 1970.

Administration takes advantage of Warsaw Pact friction

By R. GREGORY NOKES
AP Diplomatic Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration has been moving quietly over the past year to improve relations with some of Moscow's closest allies in Eastern Europe, taking advantage of new friction between the Kremlin and Warsaw Pact nations over economic and security issues.

The focus now is on expanding economic ties, but U.S. officials believe East Germany, Hungary and possibly Bulgaria also are interested in loosening Moscow's political grip and that Washington can subtly contribute to that effort.

"Although they are not independent of Moscow, they like to be treated as if they were," said a senior State Department official, who spoke on condition he not be identified. He said the administration has decided to "treat them as they want to be, as the best way of achieving that (independence)."

But he said the United States also has to "accept that there will be no big changes soon — only gradual ones."

The effort has been undertaken without fanfare, partly because too much public attention could embarrass Moscow and cause it to crack down on the East European countries.

In part, the administration has been responding to signals from the East Europeans that they want better relations with the United States as part of an overall improvement in relations with the West. West Germany, which has been progressively building closer ties with East Germany, is encouraging the contacts.

There have been an unusual number of diplomatic contacts, particularly with the East Germans. Secretary of State George Shultz met at the United Nations in October with the East German foreign minister, Oskar Fischer, the first such high-level meeting in six years. A U.S. statement issued afterward said they "agreed on the need to establish an expanded framework for relations."

The two countries also exchanged high-level officials in September at ceremonies marking the 10th anniversary observances of the establishment of diplomatic relations. And East Germany's ambassador, Gerhard Herder, attended both the Democratic and Republican conventions.

Officials say economic necessity is driving East European nations to seek improved trade relations with the West. Moscow has increased the price of its oil for Eastern Europe to above the world price — following a long period of subsidy. More than ever before, the East Europeans are looking to Western markets to earn badly needed hard currency.

In October, the East German government signed an agreement with two Ohio firms to import and distribute German-made utility trucks, a move State Department officials said would have been unthinkable until recently. Ohio Gov. Richard Celeste said the agreement between IFA of East Germany and Technik & Trade Inc. of Cleveland and Trident Motors of Columbus was the first joint manufacturing effort ever between East German and American firms.

"From an economic standpoint, closer ties with the West could take the pressure off the Soviet Union," said Richard Burt, assistant secretary of state for European affairs. "It probably cuts both ways with the Soviets."

Still, Moscow has vetoed plans for separate visits to West Germany by the leader of East Germany, Erich Honecker, and the leader of Bulgaria, Todor Khristov Zhivkov.

U.S. officials are encouraged at signs that some Warsaw Pact nations have resisted new Soviet missiles and shown displeasure at Moscow's breaking off arms control talks with Washington. East Germany finally gave in after initially resisting the deployment of new Soviet missiles installed after the deployment of American missiles in Western Europe. Bulgaria wasn't required to take any at all.

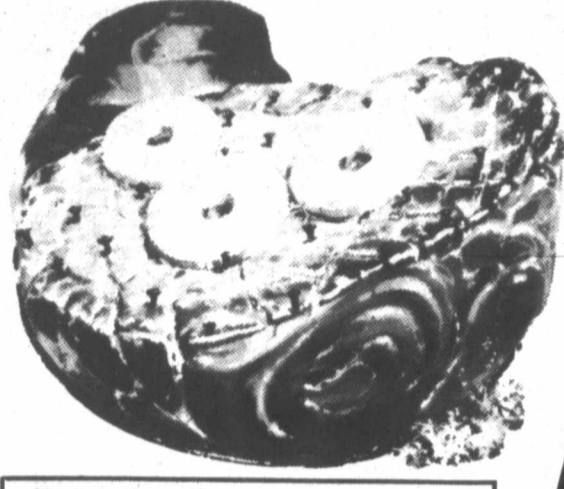

"Honecker publicly said the East Germans regretted that they had to take Soviet missiles," Burt said. "It's no secret that they are unhappy with the so-called countermeasures."

But he added, "We recognize that each of the East European countries is different, and relations with each are improving at a different rate."

The United States has relatively warm relations with Romania, a member of the Warsaw Pact, and Yugoslavia, which is not. But those countries have long been regarded as mavericks in the Communist world. East Germany has not.

Romania was the only Warsaw Pact country to participate in the 1984 Summer Olympics in Los Angeles in defiance of Moscow's boycott, although East Germany was known to have been angry at Moscow for pressuring it not to send a team.

Only Albania, which is not a Warsaw Pact member, and Czechoslovakia appear uninterested in improved ties with the West, officials say. Poland is a special case because of the Soviet-backed crackdown on dissent there, but Washington is holding out the prospect of improved relations if authorities retreat on the crackdown.

Vintage airplane salvaged

MIDLAND, Texas (AP) — In Midland Regional Airport's main lobby, a dozen or more people usually stare through a glass wall overlooking a broken water fountain and wait for their flights.

Occasionally noticing the door marked "Pliska Museum," some of those people wander out into the courtyard. And there, beyond the broken water fountain, in a little, glass-enclosed room behind the restaurant, they find themselves face to face with a piece of aviation history: the Pliska Airplane.

The story begins in 1910, only seven years after the Wright brothers first powered flight at Kitty Hawk, N.C. William Randolph Hearst had offered a prize of $50,000 to the first pilot to fly a plane from coast to coast. The rules: it had to be done in 30 days or less, and within a year of his making the offer.

On Nov. 19, 1911, Robert G. Fowler landed his biplane in Midland. Fowler had left Los Angeles the previous month, and was following the Texas and Pacific Railroad tracks across Texas in pursuit of fame, glory and $50,000. He achieved none of these, arriving in Jacksonville, Ga., too late to qualify for the prize money, but his brief stop in Midland inspired two local men with the possibilities of heavier-than-air travel.

John Valentine Pliska was a blacksmith. Gray Coggin was a chauffeur and auto mechanic. Together they built and flew an airplane.

In 1912, in West Texas, that wasn't a common occurrence.

"This revolutionary and complicated craft was literally built with their bare hands and only with the simplest machinery with which to work, in a blacksmith shop in the heart of pioneer ranch country," wrote Pliska's daughter, Mary Beth in "A Blacksmith's Aeroplane."

The plane was made from wood, piano wire and suellacked canvas, and its 50-horsepower engine was ordered from Ohio. It never flew more than a mile at a time, and was a notable flop at the Odessa July Fourth celebration when it only got a few feet off the ground and a crowd of angry cowboys demanded their money back. But it flew.

Deciding they needed a more powerful engine, Pliska and Coggin sent the one they had back to Ohio and dismantled the plane, storing it in the rafters of Pliska's blacksmith shop at Baird and Texas.

"George Abell was riding by the Pliska shop one day (in 1962) and they were getting ready to throw it out," says Lester Van Pelt Jr., secretary-treasurer of the Abell-Hanger Foundation. "He thought it was worth saving."

HIGH HOPES FOR NEW TELESCOPE—This NASA model shows the Hubble Space Telescope being deployed from the cargo bay of the space shuttle. The device, which scientists hope to place in orbit during the summer 1986 flight of the shuttle Atlantis, would allow astronomers to see 14 billion light years away, permitting them to view objects 50 times fainter than those now visible through ground-based instruments. (AP Laserphoto)

Naval Observatory prepares for 'golden era'

By CAROLE FELDMAN
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — For more than a century, from a hill overlooking the Capitol and the Washington Monument, astronomers have been plotting the path of the Earth and the stars to aid the movement of the U.S. armed forces.

These days, the U.S. Naval Observatory is participating in the development of an orbiting space telescope that will allow astronomers to see 14 billion light years away and to view celestial objects 50 times fainter than those now visible through ground-based instruments.

Some scientists have called the orbiting telescope the greatest advance in astronomy since the invention of the simple telescope almost four centuries ago.

Senior astronomer LeRoy Doggett said the observatory, which recently marked its 154th birthday, is entering a "golden era."

The $1.2 billion Hubble Space Telescope, 43 feet long and weighing more than 25,500 pounds, is tentatively scheduled to be placed in orbit by the space shuttle Atlantis in the summer of 1986.

The telescope will be serviced, as necessary, by shuttle astronauts on future missions. It also can be retrieved by the shuttle and brought back to earth if it cannot be repaired in orbit.

The project director for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, Edward Weiler, said earlier this year that the telescope will be powerful enough to read a small sign in New York from a vantage point in Washington, D.C., or to see the light of a firefly 10,000 miles away.

Dr. Kenneth Seidelman, director of the observatory's Nautical Almanac, said of the telescope, "Hopefully it will increase our accuracy and will be a step towards further astrometric studies from space."

Astrometry is the branch of astronomy dealing with the measurement of the positions of the planets, stars and other celestial objects.

Seidelman said the observatory would like to use the space telescope to search for such things as undiscovered moons around Saturn and Uranus and to observe minor planets.

Pluto's satellite was discovered in 1978 by astronomers at the observatory, he said, and the space telescope will be used to confirm that sighting.

Seidelman said this all is in line with the observatory's mission to determine the positions and motions of the Earth, Sun, Moon, planets, stars and other celestial objects to provide the Pentagon, particularly the Navy, with information vital to navigation.

The observatory was founded on Dec. 6, 1830, as the Depot of Charts and Instruments. Its main function was to check the accuracy of ships' chronometers. The Navy turned to the most accurate system available — the measurement of the movement of stars and planets — to determine exact time.

The mission has remained essentially the same, although the technology has changed, Doggett said.

For example, to determine the exact time, the observatory moved from quartz crystal clocks to atomic clocks, geared to the cesium atom.

Doggett said precise timekeeping is essential to navigators, who match the position of objects in the sky to the time to determine their location.

The observatory, in the 1940s,

Fun gone from law enforcement

LIBERTY, Texas (AP) — C. L. "Buck" Eckols, the Liberty County sheriff who lost a re-election bid by only 78 votes, said he won't miss the daily annoyances of law enforcement when he hangs up his badge next month after 12 years in the office.

"Law enforcement isn't fun any more," said the 70-year-old lawman. "It used to be we were the good guys, now it's reversed. Everybody's threatening to sue you all the time."

Eckols was elected sheriff in Liberty County 12 years ago and suffered his first defeat at the polls in November when Harris County deputy E. W. "Sonny" Applebe edged him out by 78 votes.

The retiring sheriff expresses few regrets at the loss because, he says, law enforcement now favors the criminal.

In the old days, said Eckols, if a suspect refused to answer a question, "I'd say, 'now get back up (gesturing from the floor) and I'll ask you again.'"

New laws giving prisoners more rights, said the sheriff are "all for the worse. It gives the crooks the advantage on you."

Eckols said he hates to get sued, but recalls losing only one suit — by an inmate who accused Eckols' deputies of using an electric cattle prod to force him to talk. The case was settled out of court for $5,000, said the sheriff, because court costs would have been more. The charge was without foundation, he claims, noting that one deputy named in the suit was not even on duty at the time.

The Liberty County sheriff developed a reputation as a tough man who had a simple philosophy: "Just don't let the crooks operate."

Once, when a motorcycle gang came into the county, Eckols showed how tough he could be.

"They started drinking beer, racing and raising hell," he recalls. So he arrested and jailed them and then impounded their bikes.

Later, one of Eckols' men heard motorcycleists at a Montgomery County cafe warning each other to stay out of Liberty County.

"They know I'm not going to take any bull," said Eckols. "Word gets around."

Eckols spent most of youth and his career around cattle, becoming a national rodeo star in his 20s.

He was a star athlete in high school and was set to attend Rice University on a scholarship, but his skill with a rope kept him out of college.

Check Safety To Make The Holidays Bright

- Before hanging strings of lights, spread them on the floor and check for frayed or bare wires, cracked insulation, loose connections, and damaged plugs or light sockets.
- Check extension cords for wear or damage and don't run them across walking areas.
- Test lights before putting them on the tree. Unplug them before making repairs or replacing bulbs.
- Overloading circuits with too many lights can cause fire. Follow manufacturer's instructions about the number of lights allowed on one circuit.
- Choose a fresh, green tree, trim its base and keep it in plenty of water. If the needles are brown and break off easily, it could be a fire risk.
- If you buy an artificial tree, make sure it has been tested for flammability by Underwriters Laboratories (UL).
- Place your tree away from the fireplace or other heat sources and out of the traffic pattern.
- Never string lights on a metallic tree. Light strings with damaged insulation can electrically charge a metallic tree. Instead, shine unattached colored floodlights or spotlights on the tree.
- Always turn off lights before leaving home or going to bed. You'll save money and be safer, too.
- Never use lighted candles on a tree or near evergreens. And don't burn evergreens in the fireplace.
- Do not use inside lights on the outside. All outside lighting equipment, including lights, cords and plugs, should be waterproof and made for outdoor use. Also, hang sockets downward and don't leave a socket empty.
- When hanging lights on the rooftop or in tall trees outdoors, stay clear of electrical lines. Make sure you or your decorations don't come in contact with them.
- Should you receive a CB radio or television this Christmas, let a qualified serviceman install the CB base unit or television antenna for you. This delicate job is best left to the professionals.
- Be sure electrical toys are tested for safety. Look for the UL mark.

Statues of nude women once lined hotel drive

DALLAS (AP) — In its heyday, Doris Day was an owner, Raquel Welch was a cocktail waitress and the Beatles were guests. Now the Dallas County commissioners want to purchase the old Cabana Motor Hotel to use it as a jail.

Under a state order to find more minimum-security jail beds, Dallas County commissioners voted unanimously Monday to purchase the Best Western-Dupont Plaza Hotel near downtown for $9.2 million and convert it into a jail for as many as 1,200 prisoners.

When it opened more than 20 years ago as the Cabana, the hotel was famous for a guest list that included the Beatles during a 1964 stop in Dallas.

Doris Day was part owner, and the hotel was built with money from the Teamsters union and was designed by the architect who created Caesar's Palace in Las Vegas, said Alex Seymour, executive director of the Dallas Hotel and Motel Association.

Statues of nude Greek women and fountains with multicolored lights once lined the driveway, and the better rooms had mirrors on the ceiling, Seymour said Monday. "It was quite the risqué place," Seymour told The Dallas Morning News. "It'll sure be a change."

Hotel employees were told Monday to stop taking reservations past New Year's Day. About 200 employees will be transferred to Best Western's other hotels or be out of a job, officials said.

Commissioners had been negotiating the Dupont Plaza purchase about a year, County Judge Frank Crowley said.

The county has been housing its minimum-security inmates at Woodlawn Jail, a facility that was built in 1919 as a hospital and transformed into a jail in 1975.

LONDON (AP) — Actor Stacy Keach will ask a judge next week to reconsider his nine-month prison sentence for smuggling cocaine into Britain.

Keach, 43, sentenced Friday after pleading guilty to smuggling 1.3 ounces of cocaine through London's Heathrow Airport on April 4, will go before Lord Chief Justice Geoffrey Lane on Dec. 19, officials said Tuesday.

Keach stars in the television series "Mickey Spillane's Mike Hammer," based on Spillane's private eye books.

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Only one person, perhaps, could do justice to the leading role in a six-hour television miniseries depicting the career of Frank Sinatra from band singer to superstar — Old Blue Eyes himself.

Doug Duitsman, a vice president at Warner Brothers Television, said Tuesday that the project, brought to Warner by Tina Sinatra, the star's daughter, will be televised on CBS with Sinatra playing himself.

Sinatra celebrates his 69th birthday today.

RAJNEESH PURAM, Ore. (AP) — Two 300-pound birthday cakes were the centerpiece as about 1,700 disciples of Bhagwan Shree Rajneesh capped a five-day celebration of the Indian guru's 53rd birthday.

Followers gathered Tuesday for a meditation session between disciples and their master, an event held only four times a year, making the observance a special religious event.

Rajneesh's followers came from around the world to this central Oregon commune-city for a festival billed as "Five Days of Celebration and Gratitude to Nature for His Existence."

ATLANTA (AP) — Sen. Gary Hart said he was gratified to hear calls from Democrats for "new leadership with new ideas" after the party's lopsided presidential defeat last month.

The Colorado lawmaker in Atlanta Tuesday to discuss the future of the Democratic Party and thank supporters for their help during his unsuccessful campaign for the presidential nomination, met with about 40 Democrats at a downtown hotel.

Hart, 47, said that the Democrats had an "excellent chance" of recapturing the Senate but that he had not yet decided whether to run for re-election in Colorado and probably would not announce his plans until late in 1985.

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Joan B. Kroc, the widow of the founder of the McDonald's fast-food chain, says she donated $1 million to aid famine victims "in the hope that it will inspire others to do whatever they can to help relieve the tragic suffering in Africa."

Red Cross officials said Tuesday that the donation from the Joan B. Kroc Foundation is the largest so far in a campaign on behalf of an estimated 187 million people in 27 African countries.

"Americans have demonstrated their concern for their fellow man time and again, and I'm confident they will respond to this truly critical need," Mrs. Kroc, 55, widow of Ray A. Kroc, said in a prepared statement.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Conservatives, led by President and Mrs. Reagan, grabbed most of the top positions in a Good Housekeeping magazine poll that asked readers to name the people they most admired.

Results, scheduled for publication in the January issue, were released to The Associated Press by the White House and confirmed with Good Housekeeping.

Reagan, 73, was voted the most admired man for the second year in a row, while his wife, Nancy, 61, moved to No. 1 among women from 16th place a year ago.

Phyllis Schlafly, an outspoken opponent of abortion and the Equal Rights Amendment, and U.N. Ambassador Jeane J. Kirkpatrick placed third and fourth, respectively, behind Mother Teresa of Calcutta. And former first lady Pat Nixon and British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher followed Britain's Princess Diana, who placed fifth.

In No. 8 position was Rep. Geraldine Ferraro, the unsuccessful Democratic candidate for vice president. Supreme Court Justice Sandra Day O'Connor and Transportation Secretary Elizabeth Dole, both Reagan appointees, were ninth and tenth.

CHECK THE FACTS:

This product contains no saccharin.

This product contains saccharin.

100% NUTRASWEET • 100% TASTE!

So if you want the taste of 100% NutraSweet and not the taste of saccharin, choose new Diet Pepsi, Diet Pepsi Free and Pepsi Light! That's because Diet Coke, Tab and Caffeine Free Diet Coke still contain saccharin—in fact almost twice as much saccharin as NutraSweet. Check the facts and compare the taste. We think you'll choose Diet Pepsi, Diet Pepsi Free and Pepsi Light.
