

Antonio Moriel at arraignment

Baby-faced teenager faces murder charges in Pampan's stabbing death

A 17-year-old baby-faced suspect was charged with murder this morning in connection with the Wednesday morning stabbing death of a 32-year-old Pampa man.

Antonio Moriel, 17, 310 W. Craven, was charged with the murder of Earl Love, of 417 Crest.

Justice of the Peace Margie Prestidge set Moriel's bond at $50,000.

Love was pronounced dead shortly before five o'clock Wednesday morning at Northwest Texas Hospital in Amarillo.

The victim was stabbed with a knife eight times, seven times in the left chest and once in the left arm, according to hospital personnel.

Police have arrested four teenage suspects in connection with the slaying.

Martin Rodriguez, 19, 421 Crest, and Richard Gonzales, 19, 320 Tignor, were arrested about three hours after the fatal assault and charged with aggravated assault with a deadly weapon. Jacques Jay Casanova, 19, of 806 E. Browing, was arrested at his home about noon Wednesday and also charged with aggravated assault.

Bonds for each of the three suspects charged with assault were set at $10,000.

Moriel was arrested about 5 p.m. Wednesday at the Cave arcade at Cuyler and Francis. He offered no resistance.

Police Chief J.J. Ryzman has said Love and his girlfriend, Anne Wright, 18, drove to the 7-Eleven store, 400 N. Ballard, about 1 a.m. Wednesday to buy a soft drink. Love and Wright pulled out to leave. The couple saw five men, including Rodriguez, a neighbor, in an area north of the store and stopped to talk, the chief said.

Ryzman has said he doesn't know why, but said Love and two of the men started arguing. One suspect then punched the victim, he said, while two others jumped on the driver's side of the vehicle.

Love tried to dump the men off the car, desperately rocking the vehicle back and forth, police said. The driver swerved into Ballard street, but the men on the vehicle hung on.

The car stalled on the road. The men then finished the assault on Love, police charge. Moriel, and perhaps others, repeatedly plunged the knife into the man, authorities allege.

Love screamed for Wright to call for help. She escaped from the 1977 Ford and ran inside the convenience store. Wright asked the clerk to call police.

The bleeding victim managed to drive the car from the street to the front of the store.

The five men, who Ryzman said had been drinking in the celebration of a birthday, left the scene.

Police received the call about 1:20 a.m. The first officer on the scene, Susan Ortega, found Love collapsed on the front seat of the car. The victim was "soaked" with blood—conscious, but suffering

Bomb rocks U.S. Embassy annex

Embassy scene after car-bomb blast

Suicide commando explodes van by building

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — A van filled with explosives and driven by a suicide commando ran a hail of gunfire and blew up today a yard from the U.S. Embassy annex in an east Beirut suburb, severely damaging the building and reportedly killing 23 people. The U.S. State Department said two Americans were among the dead.

Lebanese military sources put the total number of casualties at 23 dead and 60 wounded, but could not say how many were American and how many were Lebanese. At the blast scene, officials supervising the rescue reported two Americans were killed and 21 wounded.

Among the injured were the U.S. and British ambassadors. Neither man was seriously hurt. Richard Murphy, assistant secretary of state for Mideast affairs, said two Americans and five Lebanese were killed in the explosion. But he said the death toll was not final, and another U.S. official in Washington said the number of American wounded was "considerable," perhaps as high as 20.

The names of the dead were not immediately available.

The explosion ripped a 6-foot-deep, 16-foot-wide crater in front of the six-story annex and injured people inside and outside the building. The Voice of Lebanon radio estimated the van carried 330 pounds of explosives. Murphy said the vehicle, which he described as a small pickup truck, bore forged Dutch diplomatic license plates.

ISLAMIC HOLY WAR claimed responsibility for the blast. The same shadowy terrorist group also claimed last year that it blew up the U.S. Embassy in west Beirut, killing 63 people, and the twin bomb attacks on U.S. Marines and French peacekeeping troops, in which 299 servicemen died.

Lebanese Red Cross officials at the annex said they had taken 15 bodies from the wreckage two hours after the blast, and had treated 18 wounded. Abu Jawdeh hospital officials said they had received two bodies and treated 40 wounded.

The blast occurred at about 11:45 a.m. (4:45 a.m. EDT). Among the injured were the U.S. and British ambassadors, who were meeting on the top floor of the annex when the explosion occurred. U.S. political officer David Winn said neither U.S. Ambassador Reginald Bartholomew nor British Ambassador David Miers was seriously hurt.

Both ambassadors were taken to Abu Jawdeh hospital in Christian east Beirut, where they were seen conscious and talking.

PRESIDENT REAGAN said today the explosion was part of "the worldwide terrorist movement," which he said "threatens our people wherever they are in the world because these groups are opposed to everything we stand for."

But, Reagan told reporters as he left for a political swing through the Midwest, "You have to live and do your best to protect yourself. But you have to know that these terrorist groups are threatening all over the world."

First reports from Lebanese military sources had said the 48-year-old Bartholomew sustained head and chest injuries and was in intensive care. Reagan and the State Department denied the reports that the ambassador had been critically hurt, and the ambassador was seen talking and walking around at the hospital.

Winn said he rushed to Bartholomew's office after the explosion. "When I first got to his office, Ambassador Bartholomew was pinned under the rubble," he said. "We (Winn and Miers) had to pull him out."

Winn said that at the time of the blast, there may have been "30, 40 or 50 people in the building. It depends on how many were in the visa line."

U.S. Marine Cpl. Larry Gill said he was on duty at the front entrance of the annex when the attack occurred. "We heard shooting, saw it (the van) skidding, then the lights went out," he said.

Gill, of Mobile, Ala., suffered cuts and bruises. He said he had been partially buried in the rubble, but "I think I'm okay."

THE WRECKAGE of the vehicle used in the attack lay about five yards from the main entrance to the embassy building, inside the compound. The Dodge or Chevrolet van exploded a yard from the annex entrance.

One diplomat on the scene said: "Our guards shot at the car and tried to stop it, but it got into the compound and exploded right here" — pointing to the spot in front of the entrance. The diplomat also spoke on condition of anonymity.

Other witnesses said embassy guards opened fire on the approaching van. There was one report that a U.S. Marine killed the driver of the van just before the explosion.

The building did not collapse, but there was severe damage to the ground floor, and considerable damage to the other five stories. Damage from shrapnel could be seen 500 yards away.

Fuad Sajeh Jr., a witness who lives about a mile from the embassy, said: "The blast was very powerful. Our house shook and smoke, white smoke, started billowing. We could see the smoke clouds and hear ambulance sirens."

ABOUT 90 MINUTES after the explosion, a man telephoned the Beirut office of the French news agency Agence France-Presse to claim responsibility on behalf of Islamic Holy War, also known as Islamic Jihad.

Pleads guilty to manslaughter

Anderson given 15 years

Gerry Lee Anderson, 24, formerly of 910 S. Reid, pleaded guilty today in the beating death of Robert Wayne Fritz, 24, of 924 S. Wells.

Anderson, who had been charged with murder, pleaded guilty to a lesser charge of voluntary manslaughter in a plea bargain with the district attorney's office. He was sentenced to 15 years in state prison by 223rd District Judge Don Cain.

Anderson killed his former roommate, a newlywed, in a fight at a party at a Pampa residence on Aug. 16. The suspect, who growled like a dog in the fatal attack, repeatedly pounded Fritz's head into the ground.

The fight started over a couple of beers taken from Fritz's cooler.

Evidence introduced in today's court proceedings include sworn statements from five witnesses and an autopsy report.

Anderson was arrested on the day of the beating and charged with aggravated assault. Fritz was pronounced dead two days later at Northwest Texas Hospital in Amarillo.

Following the victim's death, a Gray County grand jury upped the charge, indicting Anderson on a charge of murder on Sept. 11.

The drilling rig employee's plea to the lesser charge of voluntary manslaughter means that Anderson intentionally killed Fritz, but did it in "the heat of passion," according to Assistant District Attorney David Hamilton.

Killing a man finally sent Anderson to prison. At the time of the attack, he was free on 10 years probation granted within a year for two separate burglary convictions.

Bullock reports

State may wind up $1.7 billion in red

AUSTIN (AP) — A 1985 state tax hike is avoidable despite a depressing economic forecast from Comptroller Bob Bullock, says Gov. Mark White.

Bullock said Wednesday that the state could find itself as much as $1.7 billion short over the next two years. He said the state would be $200 million short even if state spending does not increase and there is no inflation or increased demand for state services.

White said the Bullock forecast is a clear challenge to state agency heads.

"What it does do is point out the increasing necessity for each of our state agencies to refine their budget requests to the absolute essentials," he said. "I think the people of this state want to see the elimination of waste in every agency."

The governor has told agency heads not to expect increased budgets from the 1985 Legislature.

Asked if a tax hike can be avoided, White said, "I would hope to be able to avoid that. I know that's the goal of every member of the Legislature that I've talked to."

"There are some that have higher hopes for it than others," he added.

Bullock said state income for 1986-87 now looks more promising than it did earlier this year, "but from what the Legislative Budget Board is telling us about the state's spending needs, we may still be a couple of hundred million short of what we'll need, not even counting inflation or the higher demand for state services because of population increases."

Texans were hit with a $4.6 billion tax increase this year.

Included was a one-eighth of a cent increase in the state sales tax and a doubling of the 5-cent gasoline tax.

Speaker Gib Lewis said the Bullock report produced no new news.

"It's the same thing and figures comparable to what we have been looking at all the time," he said. "All it does is simply reinforce what I have been saying all along. The citizens of Texas have no reason to expect anything more or less from state government than they ask of themselves or the private sector."

"If you don't have the money you tighten up your belt and make do with what you have," said Lewis, adding he is "opposed to any new taxes."

"The taxpayers have supported the proven needs of our public education and highway systems. But I don't think they want, or should be asked, to support another general tax increase to support bigger state government," he said.

Butler 'moves up' to Canadian job

By CATHY SPAULDING
Staff Writer

FRITCH — City manager Jody Butler wasn't looking for a new job when he was told of the open city manager position at Canadian.

But after meeting with Canadian city officials, touring the city and attending city council meetings, Butler decided to move up. He submitted his resignation to the Fritch City Council Tuesday, the night after the Canadian City Council hired him.

"I hate to leave," he said. "But it's a larger city, a larger budget, so it's a very good move for me."

Butler noted that Canadian Mayor Therese Abraham and other city officials visited with him three or four weeks ago and asked him to submit a resume.

"I wasn't looking for a new job. She just came by to see if other cities in the area had city managers," he said.

Canadian City Manager Van James resigned in August to take a manager position for the city of Mount Pleasant.

"My wife and I looked at the town that next week and we liked it," Butler said. "One thing that most interested me was the higher salary, car expenses and other benefits."

Butler said he visited with city employees to learn about such city projects as street paving and a $1.8 million water improvement, which met with some opposition from some community residents.

But, he said he's prepared.

"What a manager has to do is handle people on a one-on-one basis," he said. "I feel like one of my strengths is working with people. You can't please everyone, and I didn't please everyone in Fritch. But you have to enforce the ordinances; that's what keeps the city going."

He added that it's too early to tell what changes he'll make in Canadian city government or city projects. He said he is looking forward to the challenge of working on the water project.

Mayor Abraham said Butler "has a lot of organizational skills that we wanted."

"He will be pleasant, personable and he cares for people," she said.

"He is a professional in the field."

She added that Butler was the third candidate the city officials interviewed. "We had 50 resumes sent to us. And we had our interview 10 days ago and made it official Monday night."

Butler leaves his position in Fritch Sept. 28 and will join the Canadian city staff Oct. 1.

"So he's getting familiar with our water project real quick," Abraham said, adding that bids on new water tank and other construction work have been delayed until at least November because of electrical problems in city lines.

While he looks forward to his new

Pampa Medical Services transported the man to Coronado Community Hospital. Pampa doctors worked three hours to stabilize the victim, before he was transferred to the Amarillo hospital.

When she arrived at the store, officer Ortega saw a blue Buick leaving the area, police said. Officer Kenneth Hopson stopped the car about a block away.

Police said the lone driver of the car, Juan Estrada, 23, of 401 N. Crest, was bleeding from a slash wound to his left arm. Ryzman said Estrada, the fifth man at the scene, apparently suffered the wound in the attack on Love but did not participate. Estrada was not charged.

About 4:30 a.m., police arrested Rodriguez and Gonzales at the home of Rodriguez, who lives two doors down from the victim and about a block from the store.

The murder weapon hasn't been found, but police are searching for short, paring knife.

Services for Love will be at 2:30 p.m. Friday in the First United Methodist Church at Friona, with the Rev. Archie Echols, pastor, officiating.

Burial will be in Friona

Cemetery by Ellis - Blackwell Funeral Directors.

Mr. Love was born April 17, 1952 at Friona.

He was a house painter. He earned an Eagle Scout award in Oct. 1967 as a member of Friona Boy Scout Troop 56. He served with the Army in Vietnam. He moved to Pampa from Friona eight years ago. Love was a Methodist.

Survivors include two daughters, Nikkie Love of Friona and Heidi Love of Colorado Springs, Colo.; his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Howard Love of Friona, one brother, Pampa police officer Charles Love; and his grandmother, Mrs. Myrtle Love of Durant, Colo.

job in Canadian, Butler said he has no ill feelings toward Fritch.

"I have enjoyed it," he said. "I came here three years ago with no experience. And the city council was very supportive and very progressive."

"In a smaller town you do a lot more things, so I was starting on the ground floor," he added.

appearances by Democratic vice presidential candidate Geraldine Ferraro.

"We have a strong suspicion that a lot of these demonstrations... are orchestrated by the Republican Party. I feel very strongly that those are not spontaneous demonstrations. It's 1984's version of dirty tricks," Slagle said Wednesday.

Slagle, saying most voters have yet to make up their minds, also voiced confidence that Walter Mondale can overcome his poor showing in the opinion polls and defeat President Reagan.

"I feel very confident about it. Every poll we look at shows the folks believe he (Reagan) is pro-big business, pro-big banks. He does not represent people like me, average folks," Slagle said.

His comments came at a news conference called to announce the appointment of Texas First Lady Linda Gale White as state chairwoman of a Mondale fund-raising effort.

The effort will organize fund-raising parties in private homes on Oct. 7, to be based around a half-hour national television broadcast sponsored by the Mondale campaign.

"The polls show Mr. Reagan is leading in the race. That's one of the main reasons I'm taking a lead role in this campaign," Mrs. White said.

"Four more years of a president who's giving unlimited funds to a perilous arms race while he allows arms control talks to collapse is a president we literally can't afford," Mrs. White said.

Slagle said about one-third of the voters won't make up their minds until three weeks before the Nov. 6 election, and many will wait until the last 72 hours before election day.

"We think we're going to win by getting out the vote," Slagle said, adding that proceeds from the Oct. 7 parties would be used for mobilizing Democratic voters.

Governor appoints members of new state school board

AUSTIN (AP) — The new State Board of Education is a big step toward making Texas' public school system one of the nation's finest, Gov. Mark White says.

"What we've tried to do is build in this 15-member board all of the life experiences necessary for bringing this school system into preeminence," White said Wednesday after appointing the new members.

"I wanted a board dedicated to improving our schools and ensuring that every student, from the wealthiest to the poorest district, receives fair and equal access to the best education this state can provide. I have every confidence that these board members will dedicate themselves to that goal," he said.

The new board members, who must be confirmed by the Senate, replace the current 27-member elected panel which got repeated criticism from White and the Select Committee on Public Education.

Although it reverts to an elected panel in four years, the new board will implement the sweeping reforms enacted by the special session of the Legislature this summer.

In announcing the appointments, White said he found the mix he wanted between those experienced in education and those experienced in business and management.

"I think we have a good balance between business leaders, a demonstrated talent for managerial leadership, for leading large organizations successfully," White said.

"You'll find we have teachers on this board, probably more than we've had at any time in the history of this state. We have local (school) district members... We have a strong commitment from those individuals there."

The 15 names were chosen from a list of 45 — three in each of the new districts — submitted by a panel of legislators. The new members and their districts:

1st District, Maria Elena Flood of El Paso, assistant professor at Texas Tech's health sciences center; 2nd, Mary Helen Berlanga, a Corpus Christi lawyer who served on the elected board; 3rd, Pete Jose Morales Jr., a former president of the Devine school board; 4th, Volly C. Bastine Jr. of Houston, a lawyer and elected board member; 5th, William V. McBride, a retired Air Force general and president of the San Antonio Chamber of Commerce.

6th, Charles Duncan of Houston, former president of Coca-Cola Co.; 7th, Carolyn Crawford, director of psychological services at Beaumont Independent School District; 8th, Jack Strong, a Longview attorney and former state senator; 9th, Rebecca Canning of Waco, former consultant with the Texas Youth Council and a former high school teacher; 10th, John Prescott, a Texas A&M professor.

11th, Jon Brumley of Fort Worth, president of Southland Royalty Co., an oil and gas firm; 12th, Fred Bucy of Dallas, president of Texas Instruments; 13th, Emmett Conrad, a Dallas physician who served on the Dallas school board; 14th, Katherine Raines, a former teacher and a trustee of Cleburne Independent School District; and 15th, Paul C. Dunn of Levelland, a dentist and member of the Levelland Independent School District board.

White said he would pick one of the 15 to be chairman, adding that he considers all qualified for that post.

Although several of the new board members were nominated for the non-salaried jobs by billionaire H. Ross Perot, who headed the Select Committee, the governor denied that Perot had any undue influence on his selections.

"I would hope that everybody likes these appointees. I suspect there might be some he (Perot) doesn't like, but I didn't ask him if he liked them all or not," White said.

Spaghetti supper

The Pampa High School choir and the Choir Booster Club will hold their annual spaghetti supper from 5 to 7:30 p.m. Friday at the high school cafeteria.

Tickets to the "all-you-can-eat" meal can be obtained from any choir member or at the door. Proceeds will be used by the Booster Club to support various choir activities.

The choirs have also re-scheduled the free car wash for Saturday after bad weather postponed the event last week.

Choir members will wash cars free from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. at the Coronado Center parking lot. Local business and individual pledges have provided funds for the event and choir members have invited all Pampans to take advantage of the free car wash.

But relief not granted

Court says judge wrong to jail suspect for not saying 'yes sir'

AUSTIN (AP) — State District Judge Michael McSpadden said he was trying to teach a defendant to "be responsible" by jailing him for not saying, "Yes, sir," but state appeals judges say the judge went too far.

"The record clearly reflects that, rather than acting as a trial judge should act, Judge McSpadden, instead, acted much like a military drill instructor might act when dealing with a raw recruit," said Court of Criminal Appeals Judge Marvin Teague.

But the court said Wednesday it could not grant the relief requested by Michael Washington, who wound up with a 30-day jail sentence imposed by McSpadden. The court did, however, indicate Washington stands a good chance of winning with a different type of appeal.

Washington went to McSpadden's court on March 29, 1983, to plead guilty to burglary. A plea bargain in the case would have placed Washington on probation for four years. After the guilty plea, McSpadden questioned Washington.

"Let's have a 'yes, sir,' every time you say 'yes,' I want a 'sir' behind it. Do you understand that? Or you are not going to get probation... you are going to get 30 days," the judge told Washington.

In later questioning, after replying with "yes, sir" several times, Washington dropped the "sir." McSpadden said, "Let's have a 'yes, sir.' I swear to God, how long does it take you to listen?"

Washington later again dropped the required "sir." McSpadden ordered the 30-day jail stay as part of Washington's probation conditions.

"So, for 30 days just thank me every single day you spend there," the judge told Washington. "Please think of me, Mr. Washington, every single day you spend in jail. Start saying 'sir' to people. You understand that?"

"Thirty (days) is all I can do to you. I'd have done 60 if I could, but you are going to do 30 days and learn how to be responsible," he told the defendant.

Judge Charles Campbell's majority opinion said McSpadden had the power to set the probation conditions. But Campbell added in a footnote:

"We pause to note parenthetically, however, that the actions of the (judge) in this case are hardly models for judicial behavior."

VALLEY FLOODING CONTINUES—Children play in waist deep water in the Laguna Heights area near Los Fresnos after three days of torrential rain has flooded many areas of far south Texas. Rains since Sunday have dumped more than 20 inches of rain in some parts of the Rio Grande Valley, hitting residents trying to recover from last winter's damaging freeze.

Rains end: damage in millions

BROWNSVILLE, Texas (AP) — After three days of torrential rains in South Texas, the sun finally emerged as officials warned of the possibility of millions of dollars in damage caused by high water.

The National Weather Service on Wednesday lifted flood warnings for eastern Cameron and Willacy counties and by 4 p.m. the sun had poked through the clouds. Twenty-four hours earlier, authorities had been assisting with the evacuation of families living in low-lying areas threatened by rising water.

"The major threat of any new rain causing flooding seems to be over," said Richard Hagan, National Weather Service meteorologist in Brownsville.

In Austin, Gov. Mark White said he had received "almost hourly reports on the situation in the Valley. We are monitoring it very closely."

A cold front that dumped nearly 20 inches of rain in some parts of the Rio Grande Valley between Sunday and Wednesday drifted east in the Gulf of Mexico off the Texas coast Wednesday afternoon.

Almost 200 people had to be evacuated to shelters in Brownsville and nearby towns Tuesday. Red Cross officials said the shelters would remain open through Thursday night for evacuees who could not get home.

While no official damage estimate was available, destruction could "be in the millions" of dollars, said Cameron County Judge Moises Vela. Water damage to homes in Brownsville and businesses on South Padre Island "will be enormous," he said.

Classes were suspended Wednesday at Texas Southmost College and Pan Am University in Brownsville and schools in six Rio Grande Valley cities were closed for a second day.

Roads linking the mainland with South Padre Island and Port Isabel, where some of the heaviest rains fell, remained closed Wednesday night.

Officials warned travelers to stay away until waters receded.

"There are strong currents across Highway 100 and small cars are likely to get washed off the road," said Carlos Gallegos, a Texas Department of Public Safety dispatcher in Harlingen.

Meteorologist Hagan said 19.3 inches of rain had fallen on Port Isabel between 3 a.m. Sunday and noon Wednesday. Padre Island had received 14.2 inches and Harlingen 11.3 inches.

Los Fresnos, where two evacuation centers had been set up, received 12.8 inches of rain.

AT&T drops long distance rate cut

AUSTIN (AP) — The chairman of the Public Utility Commission says he is "surprised" that American Telephone & Telegraph Co. blames the commission for forcing the company to drop its rate cut request.

"I think our decision made good and common sense," Phil Ricketts said of a recent PUC decision barring AT&T from reducing its payments to Southwestern Bell.

AT&T wanted to cut Texas intrastate long distance rates by 14 percent as part of a package that included increases for other services and the lower payments to Bell. As a result of the PUC decision on the Bell payments,

AT&T scrapped the whole plan Wednesday.

"The real losers remain the long distance customers of this state, who, because of recent PUC rulings, must continue to pay more for long distance than is necessary," said Tom Jones, an AT&T vice president.

Jones said AT&T will look for other ways to make up its $100 million annual losses in Texas. But Ricketts is not convinced AT&T is losing money.

"They have never proven and are not attempting to prove they are losing a penny in Texas," he said.

"I was somewhat surprised by (the release) in view of the fact that the decision we made last Friday was consistent with the decisions we had made before," said Ricketts.

In the decision, the commission said AT&T should pay higher rates to Southwestern Bell than other long distance companies pay. AT&T has superior connections to the Bell system, including the advantage of "one-plus" dialing that keeps customers from having to dial a series of numbers.

AT&T spokesman Phil Bode said the commission decision would be appealed to state district court.

Final testimony due in open beaches case

AUSTIN (AP) — Attorneys prepared to wind down their presentations in a test case in which Texas Attorney General Jim Mattox is attempting to stop the rebuilding of hurricane-damaged homes on West Galveston beaches.

State District Judge Harley Clark said the jury could get the case by Friday morning. The trial began Sept. 12.

A series of defense witnesses, including three involved in lawsuits with the attorney general's office, said Wednesday that everything possible was being done to restore the beach ravaged by Hurricane Alicia in 1983.

The three testified in support of Robert Matcha, who is accused by the attorney general of violating the Texas Open Beaches Act, which outlaws obstructions on public beaches.

Mattox claims that Matcha and defendants in 14 other civil suits are trying to rebuild damaged houses which are now on the public land because Alicia shifted the vegetation line which the state says marks the boundary of the public beach.

David Fineman, Galveston

Island builder and a member of the city planning commission, testified Thursday that the hurricane-damaged beaches were in the process of reviving, despite a record cold winter and hot summer.

B.F. Clifton, a Houston resident whose West Galveston beach house was blown and washed away by Alicia, said he had rebuilt the sand dune in front of his lot by importing about 18 truck loads of sand from Hitchcock on the mainland.

On cross-examination, Clifton said he and Fineman had brought a lawsuit seeking a court order against the attorney general. He said more than 100 other Galveston property owners had joined in the suit.

Asked if the purpose of the suit was to keep Mattox from enforcing the public beach boundary to the vegetation line, Clifton replied:

"No, we're just trying to protect our property because of the attorney general's action."

Another defense witness was John Arrington, who exhibited a color movie film made Saturday, showing recreation activities along the beach.

"I did this to prove that people can walk down the beach without running into obstacles and people can have a picnic without getting underneath a house as the attorney general says," Arrington said.

Arrington said he is a defendant in one of the other beach boundary suits filed by Mattox. A trial date in that case has not been set.

The civil suit carries no criminal penalty, but Mattox has asked that Matcha be levied a $50 to $1,000 civil penalty.

Bomb tossed in prison cell

HUNTSVILLE, Texas (AP) — A Death Row inmate was in fair condition today after he was seriously burned in a firebombing incident at the Texas Department of Corrections Ellis I Unit, authorities said.

Calvin J. Williams, 24, a black condemned to death for the 1980 murder of a Houston travel agent, suffered second-degree burns Wednesday when a flammable liquid was thrown on his legs and matches and a homemade bomb tossed into his cell, prison spokesman Phil Guthrie said.

Williams was flown from the prison near Huntsville to Galveston's John Sealy Hospital for treatment.

The bomb, which did not explode, added a new twist to months of violence in the Texas prison system, where more than 280 inmates have been stabbed, including 13 fatally, this year.

Guthrie said the incident, the second attack on Williams in the past 17 months, appeared to stem from a grudge between the victim and his attackers.

"The victim is black and the suspects are white, but we are more inclined to look at this as personal animosity rather than as a racial or gang-related incident," he said.

Guthrie identified the two suspects as Warren Eugene Bridge, 24, and James Michael Bridle, 29.

Bridge, a Georgia drifter, faces death for the Feb. 10, 1980, slaying of a 62-year-old Galveston convenience store clerk.

Bridle was sentenced to die for the Feb. 24, 1980, killing of a South Houston man. Officials say the Californian has belonged to a white supremacist prison gang, the Aryan Brotherhood, and wears the swastika and lightning bolt tattoo of the group.

The bomb, about the size of a soft drink can and equipped with a fuse at one end, was removed from the cell by a prison guard and later detonated in the prison yard by officials.

Father objecting to public schools

LONGVIEW, Texas (AP) — A father charged with violating the state's compulsory school attendance law says he doesn't plan to put his daughter in public schools because "we believe we're totally within the law already."

Billy Sutherland was arrested Monday because he and his wife are teaching their 7-year-old daughter, Chrissy, at home. The couple says they feel they can give her a better, Christian-oriented education there.

Sutherland, free on a $500 bond, said Wednesday night that although no court date has been set yet, he plans to "appeal to a jury to make the decision to put an end to all this."

"We believe in complying with the law," he said. "There is an exemption for private schools, and private schools are not defined except to say they must teach good citizenship. And our curriculum teaches that."

Sutherland, a youth ministries director at the Greggton First Baptist Church, says he and his wife, Debbie, want to keep Chrissy at home because public schools aren't allowed to present Christianity and Christian values.

"If the courts had their way, schools would be a Godless vacuum," he said. "Luckily, we have some good Christian teachers in schools who try to keep them from being that way."

The couple, who also have a 3-year-old daughter, said they looked into private schools, but could not afford the tuition on Sutherland's church salary.

"We're not mad at the schools," he said, adding that he thought his daughter had "very excellent teachers" in both kindergarten and the first grade in the Pine Tree Independent School District.

Pine Tree superintendent Leland Frase said state law required him to report Sutherland's refusal to enroll his daughter.

Mike Fetter, the Sutherlands' attorney, said his clients' situation falls under the same category as a church school, thus exempting Chrissy from the attendance law, which affects children ages 7 to 17.

The Sutherlands said the program is used by 11,000 students who study at home nationwide. It includes a state-mandated citizenship course, reading, spelling, math and writing — in addition to emphasizing Christianity, Sutherland said.

"I believe in the need to do what God wants me to do, and I don't feel we should be penalized for our convictions," Sutherland said.

He noted that "we've been getting calls like you wouldn't believe from people who home-teach but haven't told the authorities."

Cult gathers recruits

HOUSTON (AP) — A controversial religious cult in Oregon that recently renamed a town after its head guru has gathered 18 new recruits from Houston's "streets and breadlines" to help populate its city, a group spokesman says.

The destitute residents, recruited from "the streets, the parks and the food lines," boarded a bus Wednesday night to head for the Rajneeshpuram in central Oregon, said Swami Deva Ullas.

The commune is named after the group's spiritual leader, Bhagwan Shree Rajneesh.

"I want to get away from violent people," drifter Art Schoenthal told Houston television station KHOU before he boarded the bus.

Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Opinion

Learning comes from hard work

A Florida university recently reported that many of its incoming freshmen have trouble writing, with 60 percent flunking a writing test they took on the opening day of classes.

"This does not mean the freshmen are illiterate and can't write," a school official said. He said the tests showed that "These are just people with problems in spelling, punctuation and other areas of writing."

The freshmen were asked to write a 500-word essay. Content was not important. The grading was on grammar, sentence structure, punctuation and organization.

"Many good, bright students have trouble writing because they don't write enough. They don't have a good grip on the fundamentals of language," said the school's dean of humanities.

Then he said something that worries us: "It's a national problem."

We sure hope our government's education bureaucrats don't get wind of this new "national problem." If they do, we probably will soon see a Federal Bureau of Writing or something equally ridiculous.

Lack of writing skills, it seems to us, is a very individual problem, even if it is shared by thousands of people. And, it will be solved not by massive outpourings of money or the meddling of bureaucratic experts. It will be solved when those thousands of individuals sit down and apply themselves.

We recall one fellow who had a similar problem. He wanted to learn to read and write. There were no government schools for him to attend, no government agencies crowing about excellence in education, no bureaucracy demanding minimum skill levels, no welfare-oriented officials trying to ensure that he would succeed even though he was sorely disadvantaged.

But this fellow wanted to learn. So he applied himself. He walked miles to his job early every morning and miles back home late every afternoon. At night he would study, alone, by the fire.

He forced himself to learn. And he learned so well that people are still quoting him today more than 100 years later.

He wrote some beautiful things. One begins, "Four score and seven years ago..."

Media turns on Mondale

NEW YORK (NEA)—The presidential election campaign is now underway in earnest, and the media are curiously united in agreeing that its opening went badly for Walter Mondale.

I say "curiously" because normally our liberal Washington press corps will give a liberal candidate the benefit of any doubt that exists, and isn't above dreaming up a little in none does. (After all, the Lichter-Rothman study of 1980 established that more than 80 percent of the media elite voted Democratic in all four presidential elections beginning with 1964.)

Yet there, in the Washington Post the other day, was veteran political correspondent David Broder, engaging in what can only be described as Mondale-bashing. And here is Larry Eichel of the Miami Herald's Washington Bureau: "In his speech of B'nai B'rith accusing his opponent of trying to cloak himself in religious trappings, Mondale said the American people would be surprised to learn that 'God is a Republican.' If there are many more weeks like this one, a lot of Democrats may not be surprised at all."

It is possible, of course—even likely—that such rhetoric, as well as Mondale's current dismal poll ratings, are consciously intended to lay the foundation for an alleged "dramatic turnaround" in his fortunes in the later stages of the campaign.

It is quite conceivable, for example, that there will be some development—perhaps in a televised debate—that the usual prompt-hailers can promptly hail as having breathed life into his moribund campaign.

But if Mondale nonetheless ultimately loses by a wide margin, critical articles such as the above can at least be cited as proof that the media were aware of looming disaster early on, and did not hesitate to report the facts.

Certainly there is, to put it charitably, room for improvement in Mondale's performance. One can understand the strategic impulse behind his charge that President Reagan is mixing politics and religion impermissibly by "embracing" such fundamentalist Christians as Jerry Falwell. This accusation is a coded message to Jewish voters, artfully designed to imply that Mr. Reagan is imperiling the religious neutrality of the U.S. government to the detriment of the Jews. With luck this may distract their attention from Mondale's own embrace of Rev. Jesse Jackson of "Hymietown" fame, whose record was recently described by the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith as rendering "the self-portrait of an anti-semitic."

But by seeming to turn his back on the national upsurge of religious concern over trends in such areas as the family values, Mondale risks losing far more votes than he gains.

When he charges Mr. Reagan with favoritism toward "the rich," Mondale is at least on traditional Democratic ground, exploiting the ancient politics of envy. He may even be succeeding, to some modest extent, if the polls on the Reagan image are to be credited. But it will surely be hard to convince many voters that Mr. Reagan wakes up in the White House, brushes his teeth and then spends his day looking around for ways to give new tax breaks to his wealthy friends. The president would have to be a pretty abandoned plutocrat not to have higher ambitions for his administration and his place in history than that.

Probably Mondale is more to be pitied than censured. He dares not dwell on the Reagan record on economic issues lest someone compare it with that of the Carter-Mondale administration. He can't even view the future with alarm as convincingly as the Democrats did in 1980, picturing Reagan's supposedly itchy finger on the nuclear button. (His finger has rested there for nearly four years, quite uneventfully.) No doubt Mondale would like his media critics to know that, if they have any really constructive suggestions, he would welcome them.

Today in History

Today is Thursday, Sept. 20, the 264th day of 1984. There are 102 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Sept. 20, 1881, Chester A. Arthur was sworn in as the 21st president of the United States, succeeding James A. Garfield, who was assassinated.

On this date:

Ten years ago: The government reported that the Consumer Price Index rose 1.3 percent in August.

Five years ago: The House of Representatives defeated a measure to carry out the terms of the Panama Canal treaties. (The House reversed itself in a second vote six days later.)

One year ago: The Reagan administration and congressional leaders reached a compromise on a resolution to keep U.S. Marines stationed in Lebanon for another 18 months.

Today's birthdays: Basketball coach Red Auerbach is 67. Psychologist Joyce Brothers is 56. Actress-comedian Anne Mearns is 55. Actress Sophia Loren is 50. Hockey star Guy Lafleur is 33.

Look out for tow trucks

Why is it when people get involved in the towing business they become instant jerks?

I have been doing towing horror stories in this space for years, and the victims always have a common complaint.

"Not only did they tow my car off," they begin, "but then when I tried to get it back, they treated me like I was a common criminal." I have noticed something else about people in the towing business. They seem to enjoy their work immensely. The next time you get towed, God forbid that you do, watch how the fat bilbo behind the counter where they have taken your car grins when he looks at your checkbook or credit card and says, "We don't take nuthin' but cash."

But let's say for the moment that you've never parked in the wrong place and had your car towed away. You may think people who do such things deserve the treatment they get from towing companies and you may think that if anybody is a jerk, it's me.

You think wrong. Here's a perfect example of how people act when they are given the keys to a tow truck.

C.N. Deal, an Atlanta airline mechanic, was headed home south of the airport one afternoon when he noticed a motorist stopped in the emergency lane with a flat tire.

The motorist was a lady, C.N. Deal - being the sort of man who still would stop and help a lady change a tire although she might be a militant feminist who would hit him up beside the head with a lug wrench for even thinking she couldn't handle the problem by herself - would have stopped and given aid anyway, but he didn't see any reason to.

Parked alongside the lady's car was a tow truck. Half an hour later, C.N. Deal drove back north and noticed the lady was still parked on the side of the road and still had a flat tire.

He promptly exited and drove back to the lady's car. "I thought the tow truck driver was going to change your tire," he said to the woman.

"I did, too," she replied. "He stopped and offered to change it all right, but he wanted $15 first. I didn't have $15, but if I had, I still wouldn't have given it to him to change my tire."

"When I wouldn't pay him," the lady continued to explain, "he got back in his truck and drove off and left me here."

C.N. changed the tire for nothing. "It took me less than 10 minutes," he said. "Can you imagine this tow truck driver finding a woman stranded in 90 degree heat and refusing to help her if she didn't pay him first?"

Sure, I can imagine it. I'm surprised he didn't tow the lady's car somewhere for being illegally parked and charge her $75 to get it back.

C.N. said the lady hadn't noticed the name of the towing company, and all he remembered was that the truck was blue and white.

If I had the driver's name, I'd print it. Since I don't, all I can do is hope he reads this column, if he can read, and realizes what a creep he is.

Civil rights planks grounds for debate

BY CHARLES VAN EATON

(This is the first of two related columns comparing the Democratic and Republican platforms.)

When the Republican National Convention was under way, I watched part of it, just as I watched part of the Democratic National Convention. But I couldn't really enjoy it because I'm not a fan of political conventions and I don't care much for politics or politicians.

One thing does intrigue me about the political arena this year. Both parties seem to have staked out radically different positions on the issue of what constitutes the proper philosophical framework of a just and humane society. Their respective positions can be seen in the platform statements on civil rights.

Civil rights is not the same issue today that it was thirty years ago. Thank God the vicious political barrier to equal opportunity represented by the Jim Crow laws is gone. Civil rights today has become a blanket term covering a whole host of issues which pertain to the relative economic positions of various groups defined by race, sex, and national origin.

The Democratic platform statement on Civil Rights reads: "We affirm our longstanding commitment to civil rights for all and pledge to enforce laws guaranteeing equal opportunity for all Americans. The next Democratic administration will offer unwavering support for the following: A strong, independent Civil Rights Commission, strengthened civil rights enforcement and equal educational opportunity."

The Republican platform statement on Civil Rights reads: "For millions of black Americans, Hispanic Americans, Asian Americans, and other minority groups, the past four years have seen a dramatic improvement in their ability to secure for themselves and for their children a better tomorrow...the policies of the Reagan administration have opened literally millions of doors of opportunity for these Americans...we pledge to do even more during the next four years.

There you have it. To the Democrats the challenge of justice and human economic and social progress (i.e., what 1984 "civil rights" is all about) can be met only through creation of a strong Civil Rights Commission and enforcement of laws.

To the Republicans, the challenge of justice and human economic and social progress is met in the context of general economic progress: in the words of John F. Kennedy, "a rising tide lifts all boats." The Republicans do not speak in terms of laws, commissions and enforcement.

In terms of two ancient contending schools of thought, the Democrat view of justice and human economic and social progress is "end-state" oriented and the Republican view is "process" oriented. In this regard, the two positions could not be more philosophically distinct and opposed.

The Democrats' objection to the change that occurred in the Civil Rights Commission's emphasis under President Reagan is based solely on the fact that the new commissioners are not advocates of quotas in employment. Their anger is perfectly consistent with an end-state view of justice.

In an end-state view of justice (where justice is defined in the classical sense of "giving one his due") what matters is the statistical distribution of the material goods of life among statistically defined groups. Thus, if blacks, women, Hispanics or any other precisely defined group is found to be under-represented in particular occupations, relative to their number in society, the end-state view of justice would call for the power of the state to be employed to forcibly correct this "unacceptable" end-state.

For the Democrats of 1984 this has come to mean that Civil Rights and equal opportunity can only mean one thing - explicit quotas, despite that fact that equal opportunity, as a common sense term, is generally understood by most people to mean "process" rather than "end-state."

In a process view, the demands of justice are met when free individuals are able to satisfy their personal goals through voluntary, mutually advantageous trades and exchanges. So long as people are not denied the opportunity to pursue their own non-coercive goals, the demands of justice through equal opportunity are met whatever the end-state distribution of goods. Thus economic growth is seen as both a result and a guarantee of equal opportunity and justice for all - especially those who are starting at the bottom of the economic ladder.

That the process view of justice - especially for minorities - is the view held by such prominent black economists as Walter Williams and Thomas Sowell is significant. When these two scholars, who probably know more about the economic history of racial minorities than anyone else in America, argue that the use of government power to create end-state results under the rubric of civil rights has been a failure, the grounds for real debate between the two parties has been established.

Van Eaton is a professor of economics at Hillsdale College, Mich.

The views expressed in the opinion column on this page are those of The Pampa News or Freedom Newspapers. Opinions expressed by the syndicated columnists are their own.

Freed seamen report were after t-shirts when nabbed by Soviets

GAMBELL, Alaska (AP) — Five tired but smiling American sailors said they were glad to be back on American soil today after a week in Siberia, where they were taken by a Soviet warship that seized their supply ship during a souvenir-hunting jaunt.

The seamen, released Wednesday in a rendezvous between an armed Soviet icebreaker and a Coast Guard cutter in the Bering Sea, were not harmed during their detention, said Tabbs Thoms, skipper of the 120-foot Frieda K.

With his crew by his side, Thoms spoke to a mob of reporters and villagers Wednesday night after the freed vessel beached on Gambell, located on St. Lawrence Island about 50 miles east of the rendezvous site where the vessel and crew were freed earlier in the day.

Thoms said he and the crew piloted their ship to the rendezvous, where Coast Guard Capt. Jack Billington met with the commander of the Russian icebreaker Aisberg in the wheelhouse of the Frieda K to sign documents turning over the crew and vessel to the Americans.

The transfer took place in the Bering Sea near the international date line at 3:20 p.m. ADT (7:20 p.m. EDT).

Coast Guard officers who boarded the Frieda K were met by five armed Soviet crew members, said Chief Petty Officer Dan Dewell. Thoms said the Soviets confiscated film from cameras, the ship's log and charts from the Frieda K.

Thoms said the crew was pressured to sign papers admitting an intentional violation of Soviet territory, but refused to do so.

"We collect T-shirts and sweat shirts from where we go, from time to time, and this was our intention" when the encounter with the Soviet warship occurred Sept. 11 in the Bering Strait, said Thoms.

Tropical storm floods Guerrero

CHILPANCINGO, Mexico (AP) — The tropical storm Odille was heading out to sea Wednesday, leaving behind thousands of flooded homes and several communities without drinking water in the Pacific coast state of Guerrero.

Meanwhile, the National Weather Service reported that hurricane Norbert, which had threatened to hit Mexico's Pacific coast, had shifted and was headed out to sea in a north-northwesterly direction.

supplies to remote villages, was heading for a village on Little Diomedes, an Alaskan island only 2½ miles east of Soviet-owned Big Diomedes, when the boat was stopped and boarded by "many, many" Soviet soldiers, he said.

Thoms, who did most of talking for his crew, said they were approaching the narrow passage between the two islands when he saw a gray ship approaching.

He said he steered the Frieda K closer and saw an officer on the bridge. "As we neared the ship...one of the officers on the vessel motioned" and Thoms interpreted that to mean they should tie up to the vessel.

"So we threw our lines on and before the wink of eye, you could say, there were many, many soldiers on board, armed with guns, knives and pistols, and they seized my crew."

Thoms and other crewmembers said they were happy to be back on American soil and said they were grateful to the Coast Guard crew that came to pick them up.

The skipper acknowledged to reporters that he may have strayed into Soviet territory, but said he was not aware of it at the time.

"My navigation equipment said I was 15 miles inside U.S. waters, but apparently that was off," he said.

Thoms said the Soviets shut down the vessel's radio equipment and detained the crew on deck and him in the wheelhouse. Another ship arrived and towed the Frieda K to the Soviet port town of Urelik in Siberia, he said.

Before being taken to what appeared to be a barracks at a military installation, the crewmen were told they could take clothes and one other item. "We asked only to take our Bibles," Thoms said. "They refused" to permit it, he said.

He said the crew was never harmed, but "they intimidated us. You could say they made fun of us. They wanted us to say that we intended to cross the line, which is not the truth."

"They wanted us to sign papers. I signed nothing from the time I entered from the time I left. I have been taught from my upbringing, don't sign anything unless you understand it, and I don't know Russian."

Thoms said he and his crew maintained morale while in captivity by joking among themselves. He and another crewman were kept separated from the other three crewmen, he said.

Besides the skipper, the crewmen are Tate Thoms, 18; first mate Mark Halpin, 20; cook Charles Burrall, 29; and deckhand Tony Miller.

Environmentalists: issues on hold till after election

WASHINGTON (AP) — From acid rain and toxic waste dumps to coal leasing and wilderness preserves, energy and environmental issues are on hold, and environmentalists say it's no accident.

"Certainly they're on hold, until after the elections," said Marion Edey of the League of Conservation Voters, the environmental movement's political action committee. "The Reagan administration has been trying to hold them off."

Environmentalists are opposing President Reagan's re-election, contending that his first term has been a disaster both in dealing with existing environmental problems and preparing for the problems of the future. They say the predominant environmental issue is Reagan himself.

But Reagan has been giving them little ammunition of late, prompting the league to tell voters in its campaign literature "not to be lulled into a false sense of security."

With seven weeks to go before the November election, the environmental issue was highlighted Wednesday when Walter F. Mondale received the Sierra Club's first-ever presidential endorsement.

Reagan has defended his environmental record as "one of the best kept secrets in Washington." During one of his weekly radio addresses in July, he described himself as an environmental pioneer who as governor of California worked to help cleanse Los Angeles of smog, requiring the strictest auto emission standards in the nation.

"Obviously neither the problem in California nor those nationally have been solved," Reagan said at the time. "But I'm proud of having been one of the first to recognize that states and the federal government have a duty to protect our national resources from the damages of pollution that can accompany industrial development."

However, the first 2½ years of Reagan's presidency were marked by controversy over the president's interior secretary and director of the Environmental Protection Agency.

Interior James G. Watt, who had said mineral and energy resources of the public holdings in the West were needed to build America, resigned after making a tasteless joke about handicapped and Jewish members of the commission investigating his coal-leasing program.

And EPA Administrator Anne M.

Burford left the administration amid congressional investigations into mismanagement at the agency.

Their successors have drawn far less criticism. Interior Secretary William P. Clark has kept a low profile and met with environmental critics, something Watt refused to do. EPA Administrator William Ruckelshaus is the "good guy" of the Reagan administration for environmentalists, who say he has not received the necessary support from the White House.

Police, judges urged to get tough on family violence

WASHINGTON (AP) — Police officers and judges need to be more aggressive in investigating violent crimes committed in American homes, and then get tough with those who abuse their families, a Justice Department task force recommends.

In a report released Wednesday, the Attorney General's Task Force on Family Violence said family crime should be treated as seriously as street crime.

"Child abuse, spouse abuse and the abuse of the elderly, incest and child molestation are not matters of personal belief or how to deal with children or keep order in the house," said the report, presented to Attorney General William French Smith at a news conference. "They are crimes. They are prohibited."

Smith, who established the task force, promised to implement at least some of the recommendations of the nine-member panel of law enforcement officials, psychologists and family experts.

The report recommended that:

- People charged with violent family crimes be arrested just as if there was no relationship between the victim and the alleged attacker.
- When no arrest is warranted, the investigating officer file a report on an incident.
- Prosecutors cease requiring victims to sign a formal complaint against a close relative to initiate prosecution.
- Victimized children be handled with greater sensitivity by prosecutors and judges. The panel proposed videotaping the testimony of children so they do not have to confront their attackers in a courtroom.
- Judges jail violent abusers who inflict serious injury. When appropriate, the panel said, judges should have the option of imposing weekend or evening jail sentences.

Mingling with rich is just another job

NEW YORK (AP) — They get no kick from a Rolls. Mere caviar doesn't thrill them at all. In fact the green stuff is a bore. But they get a kick from their work.

Mingling with millions and bantering with billions is just another job for the reporters who write about the Forbes Four Hundred — the annual list of the 400 richest people in the United States.

"It's intense work and very fulfilling and provides you with such an overview of this economy in action," Richard Behar, a 24-year-old senior reporter-researcher at Forbes, said in an interview. "These are really the people who shake and move the country. You can learn from them."

"We can talk about $150 million like it's nothing," said reporter-researcher Jeff Bloch, 24, at the Forbes offices on lower Fifth Avenue. "When we're doing the reporting, it's like doing any reporting job: You don't drool over their limousines or their homes."

Behar and Bloch spent a full year checking out the financial intimacies of hundreds of Americans, verifying worth and determining if they were indeed rich enough to make the list.

Traveling to such cities as Boston, Seattle, Palm Beach and San Diego, the two financial writers said they interviewed about 60 percent of the 400 names on the list, and examined their financial statements.

"A lot of these are people who don't grant a lot of interviews," Bloch said. "We put calls into everybody — at least every secretary."

"We also talked to ex-wives, attorneys, public relations people, bankers," added Behar. "We put it together like any reporting job. And you develop a fine eye for when people are lying."

The list began three years ago and was the brainchild of the publication's chairman and editor-in-chief, Malcolm S. Forbes.

"His original idea was for a listing and nothing more," said Harold Seneker, the senior editor who heads the project. "I was told I could design it any way I wanted to. It took 13 months of research just to launch the first list."

"Some on the list I can really admire — those who are workaholics, who have struggled from early on and are Horatio Alger types and who remain productive after they obtain their wealth," Behar said. "To many of these people, wealth is secondary. They have a product, a dream. They work until their 90s and die with their boots on."

Behar is a graduate of the journalism school at New York University who previously worked for the education desk at the New York Times. He has worked on the Forbes list for two years. Bloch, who has worked at the financial publication for a year, worked for the Miami Herald after graduating from the school of journalism at Northwestern University.

Bloch plans to remain in journalism. Behan would like to one day own his own magazine. "This project has had that effect on me," he said. "I'm a workhorse also. Money to me would be secondary."

Environmentalists fight to save prairie land

CEDAR HILL, Texas (AP) — Environmentalists who warn that only about 5,000 acres of tall-grass prairie remain in Texas are fighting to save the native grassland threatened by development in southwest Dallas County.

The shoulder-high grass once swept along the Gulf coast and through the blackland prairie from the Oklahoma border through Dallas to San Antonio — about 20 million acres. Much of the land was changed by agriculture and some of the remaining prairie is now endangered by urban sprawl, officials of the Greenhills Environmental Center said.

"If you destroy this ... you are destroying something you can never get again," Dr. Geoffrey Stanford, center director, said. "You have got to preserve this for our great-great-grandchildren. We have a sacred duty to preserve this."

He said the center's officials will guide conservationists on tours of six of the remaining native prairie sites in southwest Dallas County. The Texas Parks and Wildlife Department has pledged to preserve the area, called the Penn prairie.

Stanford helped form the 9-month-old Native Prairies Association of Texas, which will host a national conference on tall-grass prairie preservation in 1986.

The fields, near what will soon be Joe Pool Lake, are excellent examples of tall-grass prairie, said David Riskind, an ecologist with the parks and wildlife department.

The prairie grasses, which once sustained herds of bison, were later maintained by farmers for livestock feed because of their high nutritional value.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) Find out the cost before letting a friend commit you to a social activity today. You might feel the expense will not be worth it.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) It's likely that you will conduct your material affairs in a successful manner today, but you might not be equally as skillful in handling social relationships.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) For someone who is normally positive and optimistic, you may unduly waste a lot of time today worrying about things that will never happen.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) A friend upon whom you can normally depend may be either unable or unwilling to assist you today, but someone you'd least expect will fill the gap.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Someone with whom you are collectively involved is taking a much sterner view of things than you may realize. Be careful how you handle this situation.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Be cautious today regarding tasks you delegate to subordinates. They may lack your skills and proficiency and mess up something you could have handled easily.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Strive to be clever and bright in your personal dealings today, not selfish or tricky. If you step out of character you may get stung.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) It will be best in the long run not to make promises today where you agree to one thing, but inwardly intend to do something different.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) If you continue to put off a specific task you know you should be attending to, it will eventually catch up with you and be double the work later.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) You have good earning ability today, yet conversely you could also make some rather foolish expenditures. Don't squander your funds.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) You might not be able to operate as freely as you like today, owing to restrictions imposed upon you by others. Try not to strain at the leash.

Investigation requested into state funeral home industry

AUSTIN (AP) — A consumers' organization and a group representing elderly citizens are demanding new regulations from the state Board of Morticians and a statewide investigation into pricing practices of funeral homes.

The Consumers Union and the Gray Panthers on Wednesday also accused the board of failing to make certain funeral home laws are being followed.

"If funeral homes are violating the law, then it's the duty of the board to act. Since the board has been unwilling on their own initiative to act, we are filing a formal complaint and a rule-making petition outlining what we believe would be appropriate action," said Carol Barger, an attorney for the Consumers Union.

The board first came under fire last month after failing to discuss at its regularly scheduled meeting a report prepared by board member Grady Baskin Jr.

Baskin conducted a probe on his own, posing as a family member trying to make funeral arrangements for a relative. He said most of the two dozen funeral homes he visited failed to comply with state law requiring advance disclosure of prices.

Gov. Mark White ordered his staff to investigate the refusal of morticians board Chairman Aubrey Fife of Junction to allow discussion of that report.

In addition, news reports this week disclosed that the board has failed, since 1979, to hire a private investigator to look into consumer complaints against undertakers. The law requires at least one board investigator be a licensed private investigator.

John Shocklee, executive secretary of the board, said the board had asked the Legislature for four years to provide money to hire a licensed private investigator, but that neither current investigator has such a license.

"Whether we're in violation has not been proven one way or the other," he said.

Shocklee also said the board was following up on Baskin's report and conducting its own investigation of the funeral homes.

He said the board had received the Consumers Union-Gray Panther petition and "will take whatever necessary action is required."

Ms. Barger said she sees "compelling reasons" to demand changes.

"The cost of the funeral and burial of a family member is, for many families, one of the largest single expenses they will have to bear. Yet the tradition in the funeral industry has been to lead consumers to believe that it would be somehow disrespectful to the deceased to concern themselves with cost," she said.

"In no other situation involving a major purchase is a consumer in such a vulnerable position. The board has neglected their duties to see that consumers are provided accurate, readily available information," Ms. Barger said.

The petition asks for an immediate, statewide investigation into funeral industry pricing.

It seeks rules to require a desk sign at funeral homes and a bold-faced warning in funeral contracts notifying customers that it is illegal for a contract to be offered without a retail price list first being made available.

The petition also asks that the morticians board withdraw its application to the Federal Trade Commission for exemption from FTC regulations. To satisfy the FTC, the state board must prove it would be as tough as the federal agency in enforcing rules to protect consumers.

"We don't believe the board can meet the FTC requirements and we think it's inappropriate for the board to seek exemption," Ms. Barger said.

Conferees hit immigration bill snag

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sponsors of a landmark immigration bill say House and Senate negotiators have hit a stumbling block that threatens to kill the legislation they want to get through Congress before next month's adjournment.

After making headway for several days, the conferees were unable to reach a compromise Wednesday on a provision designed to prevent job discrimination against legal aliens. But they offered to keep talking on Thursday to break the impasse.

"We are at a sticking point," said Sen. Alan K. Simpson, R-Wyo., the chief Senate sponsor of the measure, after debate dragged on more than five hours.

Rep. Dan Lungren, R-Ill., a leading sponsor in the House, said he feared the failure to agree on the matter threw the future of the legislation into question.

"This is a major stumbling block," Lungren said. "There are some who want to use this to kill the bill."

The snag came during the fourth day of House-Senate negotiations over the bill, which was designed to stem the flow of illegal immigration across U.S. borders. The legislation has passed both chambers, but several major differences have to be ironed out.

Hispanics are fiercely opposed to the measure, which calls for sanctions against employers who knowingly hire illegal aliens. They fear employers will discriminate against Hispanics or other foreign-looking persons in a mistaken attempt to avoid prosecution under the law.

Conferees got stuck on the anti-bias provision that was offered as a means of preventing such discrimination.

The amendment put forward by Rep. Barney Frank, D-Mass., would prohibit employers from discriminating against legal aliens when hiring or recruiting workers. It would also give U.S. citizens protection against discrimination on the basis of national origin.

The amendment, which was approved by the House on a 404-9 vote in May, is "essential" for passage of any compromise resolution in the House, Frank argued.

Backers of the Frank amendment argued that under the new bill, certain aliens would be given the right to live in the country, but they would not be given the protections needed to compete on an equal basis for jobs in order to earn a living.

"If an individual wants to hire an American, and not an alien, they should be able to do it ... and not suffer a challenge," said Rep. Romano Mazzoli, D-Ky.

Congressional negotiators compromise on farm spending

WASHINGTON (AP) — A House-Senate negotiating panel has agreed to a $34 billion compromise for next year's spending by the Agriculture Department, including money to finance part of President Reagan's new program to help debt-ridden farmers.

But in agreeing on the farm, food and nutrition bill, the conference committee scrapped a proposal to create a major new soil conservation program designed to protect erosion-prone farmland.

Senators on the conference committee pushed for approval of the "sodbuster" measure, but House members resisted on grounds that it was improper to attach legislation for a new program to an appropriations bill.

The action came Wednesday during an afternoon-long session to work out differences between the House and Senate on spending for programs administered by the Department of Agriculture in the fiscal year that starts Oct. 1.

Sen. Thad Cochran, R-Miss., chairman of the conference, said he hoped both chambers can vote on the committee's recommendations and send the measure to the president before the planned adjournment of Congress early next month.

Although precise final spending totals were not available Wednesday, committee staff members estimated the measure provided for spending of about $34.5 billion, or nearly the same amount requested.

Wool clothes need proper care

NEW YORK (AP) — Fall and winter's wearable new designs are in exaggerated but simple silhouettes, many in luxurious pure wool fabrics like jersey, gabardine, covert, flannel and twill, the fashion industry reports.

With proper care, these new additions to the clothes closet, as well as wool suits and separates that serve as the basics for a classic wardrobe, can last for years and always look good, experts at the Wool Bureau point out.

"Before you decide which of this year's great fashion buys to add, you'll want to take your wool clothing out of storage and review what you already own," says Carl Freeman of the bureau's Technical Center.

If the garments were properly cleaned before storing they need no special treatment before wearing, he points out. But if clothes were stored with moth balls all summer, he advises that the garments be hung up properly to air out, rather than cleaned just to remove the smell.

"The biggest mistake people make caring for their wool clothing is drycleaning it too frequently," says Freeman, who explains that unnecessary cleanings break down the wool fibers and shorten the life of a garment.

"Since wool is a naturally wrinkle- and soil-resistant fabric, all that's usually needed to refresh a garment is proper hanging and a soft clothes brush," he adds.

Freeman offers these suggestions for keeping wool clothing in good condition:

— Hang your clothes where they can breathe. Wool needs air to help it spring back into shape, so leave plenty of space between wool garments in the closet. Jackets should be hung on wooden or plastic-contoured hangers, skirts by the waistband on skirt hangers.

— Give your clothing a rest. A 24-hour rest period between wearings will help clothes last longer.

— Steam away wrinkles. After wearing or unpacking, hang wool garments on a shower rod over a tub of hot water, to steam away wrinkles and refresh the fabric.

— Brush after every wearing. A soft, firm-bristled brush removes dirt that may be lodged in the fiber. Shake out wool knits, however — don't brush them or hang them. Instead, fold gently and store in a dresser drawer so garment will maintain its shape.

— Follow care label instructions. Many of the wool knitwear styles are now machine washable. Check your sweaters for the Superwash label, which indicates the garment is completely machine washable with ordinary detergent, and machine dryable.

— Hand-washed sweaters should be gently rolled in a towel to squeeze out excess water. Dry them flat so they will maintain their shape.

Jane Fonda's workout gets mixed reviews

Jane Fonda's "Prime Time" exercise routine for older people and non-exercisers gets a mixed review in the current Family Circle magazine from Sandra Lotz Fisher, fitness and health director of New York City's YWCA.

Fisher says, "Although there were many effective stretches and strengthening exercises, the routine could push beginners too hard too fast..."

She points out: "Sorry, but many of the exercises aren't at the 'no experience' level. For example, the total number of repetitions for abdominal exercises was over 100! Although they were interspersed with relaxation pauses, that's still pretty demanding for an older person or non-exerciser. As for the claim that it's a regimen for people with bad backs, I have to disagree. The hamstring stretches were all done standing, rounding over from the waist. Now that's a good stretch, but someone with back problems would probably find bending over for such a long period of time very uncomfortable. Same goes for floor work, where we sat with our legs wide apart. That position can put a strain on back muscles.

"My other gripe is that there are no aerobics. I would have liked 10 minutes of some aerobic movements — dancing, marching, whatever — to get the cardiovascular system going. (Also, aerobics are a terrific way to burn calories.)"

Here's what she says about Fonda's new workout:

"I think Prime Time is healthier for you than Fonda's original 'Beginner' workout. Instead of 'going for the burn,' the stress is on more moderate, reasonable stretching and toning. The Prime Time pace is slower and in some cases, there were fewer repetitions."

"Another plus: the hour-long routine really emphasizes warmups and cooldowns (about 10 minutes for each). The slow, gentle stretching and deep breathing are terrific for bodies unaccustomed to lots of physical exertion. In general, I found Prime Time to be a carefully constructed fitness routine which emphasizes flexibility and strength."

Hospital's X-rays separate Halloween tricks from treats

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: It's a little early to be thinking about Halloween, but I know you prepare your column several weeks in advance so I'm writing you now.

For several years, we at Mercy Hospital in Charlotte, N.C., have watched the fun of Halloween being replaced by fear and dread among parents as more incidents of candy tampering are reported in the news media.

We don't want to see this tradition of Halloween come to an end, so we hope hospitals around the country will pick up on our idea in an effort to make Halloween safer for children and more enjoyable for parents.

This year, for the 10th consecutive year, Mercy Hospital in Charlotte and the Mercy Urgent Care Center in Pineville, N.C., will offer free X-rays of candy for children in our area.

Over the years, hundreds of families have taken advantage of this offer. X-rays, as you probably know, will detect only metal or solid objects in candy or fruit. X-rays will not detect poisons or drugs, however, so parents should still check their children's candy for signs of tampering: discoloration, or torn or punctured wrappers.

I'm happy to say we have never found anything in any of the candy or fruit that has been checked at Mercy. We have, however, heard of reports of candy tampering in this area of North Carolina.

We hope other hospitals across America will join us in this project at Halloween.

Yes, it costs the hospital some money for the X-ray equipment and film. But our staff donate their time, and our hospital volunteers help coordinate it. Last year, Eastern Airlines donated baggage tags that we used to make sure each child got the right bag of candy returned. (There were several hundred people coming to our emergency department in just a few hours, so you can imagine the opportunity for chaos.)

The local police departments from Charlotte and Mecklenburg County also made these suggestions, which we pass on to the public at Halloween:

— Parents or an older sibling should accompany young children as they make their rounds at Halloween.

— Trick-or-treaters should stay in familiar neighborhoods.

— Children should avoid masks that could impair their vision, and cumbersome shoes that could cause them to trip.

— Children should eat nothing until the "treats" are inspected.

— Children should dress in bright-colored clothing, or wear reflective costumes so they can be seen at dusk by drivers.

— Each child should carry a flashlight, but avoid shining it in the eyes of motorists. Never allow children to carry candles, because they could set their costumes on fire.

— Children should not approach a house that doesn't have outside lights on.

— Observe basic safety precautions: Use sidewalks and crosswalks; don't cut through yards or vacant lots.

— Observe one of the most important rules of all: Never go inside the house of someone the child doesn't know well.

I'm sorry for the length of this letter, but I know many, many parents read your column, and they are the ones who have to look out for the safety of their children.

If other hospitals want more information about how to organize their own Halloween safety project, they can write me at Mercy Hospital, 2001 Vail Ave., Charlotte, N.C. 28207.

Thank you, Abby. With a little luck, we can make Halloween safe for all children everywhere.

Eye skin care

The skin around the eyes is thinner and drier than skin elsewhere on the face.

Never pull or drag it, but gently pat in foundation makeup or treatment cream to combat lines. A special eye cream should be used. Such creams are lighter and more easily absorbed than creams for the rest of the face.

You can also use an eye-skin oil. Use it at night and pat in a bit of eye cream or oil before applying eye makeup, especially if it's in powder form.

Tips for trips

Long airplane trips dry the skin, as airline personnel know. Prepare for a flight by limiting your intake of coffee and alcoholic beverages before and during a long flight. Both are dehydrating.

Drink bottled water and fruit juices instead. Use cream or lotion face cleansers rather than soap and water. Apply a foundation containing moisturizer before the flight and to refresh makeup.

Practice improves your relationship

By Ellie Grossman

NEW YORK (NEA) — You're at each other's throats again, each determined to prove the other wrong. Actually, you're indulging in a power struggle, something couples do all the time for a good reason, according to Susan M. Campbell, Ph.D., a San Francisco clinical psychologist and author of "Beyond the Power Struggle" (Impact Publishers, $7.95).

"Most cultures foster the myth that a human being is one consistent person, so we tend to perceive ourselves as one-sided," Ms. Campbell says. "But that's not realistic. It doesn't permit us to change from moment to moment, and everyone does."

With couples, for instance, he may become known as the spender, she, the saver. He, the doer; she, the viewer. Initially they may have been drawn to each other partly for those very reasons. But resentments can grow over time because each may be harboring an unacknowledged desire to behave like the other at times: in short, to be whole.

But neither sees that. They just keep trying to control each other.

"Still," says Ms. Campbell, "I believe it's possible for couples to overcome that 'either-or' point of view and work to know each other and themselves better."

Here's one way to try. Take a couple with a "togetherness" problem. She wants more of it; he doesn't. One night he says, "Let's go to that party." She says, "No," and two minutes later they're screaming at each other.

"One of them can make an effort to change this behavior," says the author.

SUSAN M. CAMPBELL, author and psychologist, says a relationship can be ruined by hidden power struggles.

That may only cue her to reel off a 23-count indictment, to which case you must listen for the voice beneath the fury that may really be saying, "I wish I knew you really cared for me." And after she's all talked out, "Take a couple of deep breaths and resist the desire to defend yourself," she says.

"Instead, talk about your own softer feelings if you can such as, 'I want us to feel good together. Maybe if I tell you why I like to be with people, you won't be so upset by it. I want you to know me.'"

Also, consider expressing mixed feelings, if you have any. Something like "I want to go out but I don't want to leave you alone so let's talk about it" may engage her sympathetic attention and may also make it easier for her to confide in you.

Still, remember that most people resist change, even for the better, because change is frightening. So, it may be some time before she's ready to give an inch.

Perhaps the next time a skirmish about togetherness appears imminent you can try the "Do you mean?" exercise.

"That's a way of clarifying your mistaken impressions of the other person's thoughts or wants," says Ms. Campbell. "You might say, 'Can I do a couple of do-you-means with you now?' Then you ask her questions she can only answer with 'yes' or 'no' so the discussion doesn't turn into an argument."

"For instance, you may be assuming she thinks you want to go out just to make business contacts. Ask her that by prefacing it with, 'Do you mean you want to stay home because you think I'll spend my time on business?' She may say 'no.'"

"Keep asking questions. Perhaps, 'Do you mean you want to stay home because you're afraid I'll flirt with other women?' will elicit a yes. That, in itself, may ignite an argument between you," she says, "but remember, the goal is for each person to be known and to know the other."

Besides. Just because she begins caterwauling doesn't mean you have to.

"There's always a moment of choice regarding whether to exacerbate or de-escalate an argument," she says. "Most of us don't usually allow ourselves to use it. We do a knee-jerk reaction."

"But if you pause and say, 'I'm tired of fighting like this, aren't you? Let's look at what we're really trying to say to each other,' maybe you can agree not to fight at that moment. And at least you'll be agreeing on something."

Maybe you can even go on to discover that underneath everything, the same thing is making you both miserable.

"In a relationship, the person who makes more sacrifices and does more work sees that as 'I love you more than you love me,' and it's very common for both parties to feel that way," Ms. Campbell says. "Finding that out may leave you both feeling terrible and I don't have a formula for what to do next."

"There may not be any solution, but at least you're communicating. There's some openness between you again, and with that, there's hope."

Shoe lovers will be stepping lightly

By Florence De Santis

NEW YORK (NEA) — Your feet will have to have their own "wardrobe" this fall.

Why? Fall fashions include a dizzy variety to select from, such as menswear separates, soft knits in many styles and dresses from classic to funky. One style of footwear only — a shoe or a boot to go with menswear designs — won't look right with other fashion looks.

At 9 West, the shoe wardrobe starts with a tailored adaptation of the oxford. It has a high but sturdy black stacked heel, the cut-out vamp crossed by a wide band laced and tied on one side. This lightens the oxford such as the slip-on spotted jungle cat from Luruea, the scooped-out vamp crossed asymmetrically with a smooth leather band. At Shoe Biz the tailored flat closes up over the foot, boot style, and is woven of multicolored leather in a confetti effect.

Since tinted or patterned hosiery goes with shoes this fall, foot and leg form part of the total costume. You can coordinate these — by wearing the spotted cat shoe mentioned with plain, tinted sheers with a knit two-piece or a softly simple suit ensemble.

A really tailored suit, however, calls for sheer striped hosiery and an important shoe, such as 9 West's semi-oxford.

Pumps remain the favorite all-around wardrobe shoe, decorated this fall with leather mixes, such as Roberto Noguero's pump with snake heel. The lower half of the shoe body is in snake; the upper half in smooth pale leather. These come in dark and light tones of gray and brown leather mixes and go with menswear or knit dressing.

For dresses, wear the more decorative look as in Paloma's smooth leather pump with baroque-shaped insets of shiny black patent.

Almost a pump, the new city moc goes sophisticated and versatile in its uses. Phyllis Poland does a brown suede moc with the vamp plug and cross strap in Paisley print suede. Andrew Geller even does a dressy version of his moc, in black faille with the vamp plug beaded in black, red and silver.

look to go with office suits and is certainly more elegant than the oxford.

Low-heeled slip-ons with a ballerina look have returned since the recent '50s influence, and 9 West does them on a silver wedge heel with a graceful d'orsay side dip and low-cut vamp. Untrimmed, this kind of flat comes in many color choices to go with simple dresses or informal leisure clothes.

More sophisticated for wear with office dresses and classic knits are the firm's pumps on covered medium heels. One shoe has teardrop cutouts on a tapered vamp accented by a string bow; another, in black or red patent, crosses the cut-out vamp with three strips.

This kind of basic shoe wardrobe can be augmented with lively accents

Area football roundup

White Deer puts 2-0 mark on line against Sunray

By JEFF LANGLEY

WHITE DEER — The White Deer Bucks and Sunray Bobcats put their undefeated records on the line Friday in what could be a messy battle at White Deer.

"We're looking forward to a bloodletting," said White Deer coach Paul Wilson. "They're tough on the line of scrimmage... We've got to get down there and root with 'em."

White Deer stands 2-0, after taking a 7-6 squeaker over Spearman and rolling over Claude, 35-10.

Sunray is off to its best start in years after scoring opening victories over Vega and Phillips. The Bobcats blanked Vega, 19-0, and smashed a mismatched Phillips squad, 48-6. The Bobcats returned 14 lettermen, including seven two-way starters.

Both teams compete in Class 2A. White Deer will shoot for the District 2-2A title, while Sunray has a shot at the 1-2A crown. For smaller-school competition, both teams field giants on the line.

"We average 199 from tackle-to-tackle. They average 206," Bobcat coach Danny Chisom pointed out.

"You don't see that very often," he said.

"We're both big in the tackle spots... I'd say they're a little more physical," coach Wilson said.

The physical confrontation figures to be won or lost in the trenches, the coaches agreed.

"There won't be any dancing around on the line — just hitting," Wilson added.

White Deer is favored by a safety. Kickoff is scheduled for 8 p.m.

Chisom feels the winner will be the team that "gets a break here or a break there."

"We're sure White Deer is the best team we'll play for a while," the Sunray coach said.

The Bucks defense saved the day in their opener over Spearman. The squad stopped a two-point conversion pass and preserved the one-point win. Running for more than 100 yards, fullback Timmy Bichsel was Bucks top runner in the opener and scored the team's only TD.

Ron McIntosh shined in the White Deer victory over Claude. The back hit pay dirt three times and rushed for 133 yards. Bichsel ran for one touchdown in the second win, and Drew Wilson scored another on a pass. Glen Wise also booted five straight extra points. The defense came up with the big plays when it had to, collecting six Claude turnovers.

White Deer returned seven offensive and five defensive players from last year's 5-5 team. The Bucks' heralded line includes Jim Bob Mitchell, 6-2, 208; Marvin Thrasher, 5-10, 160; Andrew Rapstine, 5-11, 208; and Tracy Kotara, 6-3, 220.

Wheeler begins defense of its District 1-1A crown tomorrow night against McLean at the Mustangs stadium.

Wheeler is off to a 2-0 start in non-district play while McLean is 0-1. The Mustangs edged Stinnett, 32-0, in the opener and blanked Shamrock, 32-0, last week. The win over Shamrock avenged Wheeler's only regular-season loss a year ago, 23-0 to the Irish.

McLean, coming off an open date, was routed by Whiteface, 41-0, in the first game. Graduation hit the Tigers' football team hard this year. Only five starters return from last year.

"When you lose 17 or 18 seniors like McLean did last year it's going to hurt, especially in this size of classification," said Wheeler coach Preston Smith. "They've got a young team."

However, Smith isn't about to take the Tigers for granted.

"Last year they gave us about as good a game as any team did," Smith said. "They really got after us."

McLean is a definite underdog in Friday's game, but Wheeler has some injuries that could narrow the victory margin. Linebacker Charlie Miller has cracked ribs and fullback Dicky Salyer has a sprained ankle, but both will be playing, Smith said. Darren Grimes, a starting offensive tackle and defensive end, couldn't play last week due to injuries now, but he's healthy now.

Wheeler's probable lineup is as follows: Offense—Robert Andis and Larry Trevino at ends; Darren Grimes and Robert Meadows at tackles; Roger Cross at center; Wade Bentley and Draton Childress at guards; Steven Snapp at quarterback; Dicky Salyer at fullback; Toby Collins and Todd Alvey at running backs. Defense: Grimes and Jerry Don Horton at ends; Ed Ellis and Danny Debose at tackles; Bentley, Collins and Miller at linebackers; Snapp and Trevino at cornerbacks; Andis at strong safety; Joel Dodd at safety.

Wheeler's winning tradition took a jolt in 1982 when the Mustangs were moved from Class A to Class AA and finished third in the district standings. Wheeler had lost only four games in eight years to Class A schools, one loss coming in the state championship finals.

However, the Mustangs rolled unbeaten through district last year. They lost to Nazareth, 20-14, in the bi-district round.

Groom, one of Wheeler's district opponents, also opens 1-1A play Friday night at Follett.

Groom (1-1) had plenty of heroes in last week's 27-6 upset of District 2-1A favorite Vega.

Jeff Britten scored two touchdowns and passed for another. Jack Britten scored a touchdown. Ken Ruthardt caught a touchdown pass. Kevin Wood, Adrian Hill and linebacker Mike Swafford were outstanding on defense.

One of the unsung heroes was Sudan transfer Ben Schuster, who caught three passes and kept scoring drives alive for Groom.

Schuster, a 188-pound sophomore, also kicks extra points and field goals. He leads the Tigers in receptions with five catches for over 85 yards.

"Schuster is a good player," said Groom coach Frank Belcher. "Besides being a good kicker and receiver, he's also a good blocker."

Lefors visits Phillips and Canadian hosts Panhandle in other area games.

Sudan transfer Ben Schuster has given the Groom Tigers a big lift this season. Schuster (shown kicking extra points in a practice session above), not only handles the kicking chores for the Tigers, but also is the team's leading receiver with five catches for over 85 yards. Schuster will be in action Friday night when Groom travels to Follett to open District 1-1A play. (Staff Photo by Ed Copeland)

Greenberg recalls 1945 Tigers

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

On the day after the Detroit Tigers clinched the American League East Division championship, Hank Greenberg expressed admiration for the current version of the team that once depended so much on his big bat.

"They led wire to wire," Greenberg said. "That's quite an accomplishment. Nobody's done that since the '27 Yankees. That's fast company. We had some good teams, but we never did that."

One of the best Tiger teams was the 1945 club, winners of the World Championship in seven games over the Chicago Cubs. That was the last time the Cubs won the National League pennant and Detroit has won just one AL flag since then. Greenberg is rooting for these Tigers and Chicago to create a 1984 rematch.

"That'd be great, to have them in there against each other again," he said. "It would be an interesting Series."

The 1945 version wasn't exactly boring. It went seven games and produced heroes like Phil Cavarretta, who batted .432 for the Cubs and Roger Cramer, who hit .379 for the Tigers. Greenberg, who had rejoined the Tigers in midseason after being discharged from World War II service, batted .308, but five of his seven hits went for extra bases including three doubles in Detroit's fifth game victory. He hit a home run to win the second game and drilled another one tying the sixth game, forcing it into extra innings. "I got a few key hits," he said. "I remember we were evenly matched."

UCLA's Bruins still struggling

The Associated Press
Will the real UCLA football team please stand up.

"The 1984 UCLA team just hasn't found itself yet," Coach Terry Donahue said after the Bruins struggled past unheralded San Diego State 18-15 and Long Beach State 23-17 and slipped from fourth to eighth in the rankings.

Saturday's opponent, however, is No. 1 Nebraska and another so-so performance just won't do. Especially since the Cornhuskers have averaged 563.5 yards a game — 422.5 of it on the ground — in trampling Wyoming 42-7 and Minnesota 38-7.

The Cornhuskers are six-point favorites. And wouldn't it be ironic if they won the national championship this season without Rozier, Gill, Fryar & Co. after coming so close last year with them... Nebraska 28-14.

Last week's score was 36 right, 15 wrong and one tie for a percentage of .706, and two of the four Upset Specials covered the spread; on the year, it's 91-32-2—740. Against the spread, last week was 14-12—538; for the year, 28-28—500.

No. 2 Clemson (favored by 3 1/2) at No. 20 Georgia. Clemson 21-17.

No. 15 Florida State at No. 4 Miami (by 2). Miami 35-31.

No. 14 Iowa at No. 5 Ohio State (by 3). Ohio State 20-13.

No. 6 Brigham Young (no line) at Hawaii. BYU 37-14.
William & Mary at No. 7 Penn State (no line). Penn State 45-0.

Ali vows to lick illness

NEW YORK (AP) — Three-time former world heavyweight boxing champion Muhammad Ali has been diagnosed as having minor symptoms of Parkinson's disease and not a fatal illness, his doctor said.

And the charismatic and controversial ex-boxer has vowed to overcome his undiagnosed problem.

"I'll whip this thing. I'll whip it," Ali promised Wednesday, adding he was not frightened by the prospect of fighting the disease.

"I'm not scared. They could tell me tomorrow, 'Ali, you have cancer of the heart, you've got six months to live.' I'll say I'm glad," the 1960 Olympic gold medal winner said. "I had a good life and was good to people and I'll be glad to meet Allah."

Ali was given test drugs at Columbia-Presbyterian Medical Center earlier Wednesday "to see if it helps him and how much it helps him," said Martin Ecker, a diagnostic radiologist consulting on Ali's case.

"He's not in any danger. It's not a fatal disease," said Ecker.

medical director of Ali's boxing management company. "You don't die from what he has and I feel very optimistic that what he has can be controlled by medication."

The 42-year-old ex-boxer said that his slurred speech and slow body movement could be the result of his boxing career.

"I've been punched a lot of times," he said. "I've been in the boxing ring now for 30 years and taken hard punches in fights and also in training preparing for the fights, so there's a great possibility something could be abnormal."

Ali underwent five days of tests at the Manhattan hospital this month before leaving Sept. 11 for a brief trip to Europe. He returned Tuesday for more tests and treatment.

He said while it was possible boxing had caused his problems, he never regretted his ring career because of the good it had allowed him to bring to other people.

"I'm glad I've been charitable all my life. I'm glad I gave away a lot of money. I'm glad I helped a lot of poor people," Ali said.

The boxing great said he expected to be hospitalized for two more days.

Because Ali's condition was apparently not worsening and he lacked classic symptoms, doctors ruled out both Parkinson's disease, a degenerative brain disease, and "the punch-drunk syndrome," caused by repeated blows to the head, Ecker said.

When asked if boxing should be banned, Ali replied: "I think boxing is one of the less sports where people die, and if you're going to start protecting people because they're hurting each other then you got to stop a lot of sports and I don't think they can stop boxing because I'm ill. . . . There are sports much rougher than boxing. . . ."

Ali, the only fighter to have won the heavyweight boxing championship three times, had a 21-year career from 1960 to his retirement in 1981. His title was stripped in 1967 when he refused to be drafted into the Army for the Vietnam War. He won it back from George Foreman and later lost and recaptured it from Leon Spinks.

Campbell hears trade rumors again

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston Oilers offensive coordinator Kay Dalton gets enough distracting advice on how to operate the Oiler offense.

What he didn't need Wednesday was a distracted Earl Campbell, who once again is hearing rumors that he is about to be traded.

"It's distracting to me because it got to be distracting to Earl," Dalton said Wednesday following published reports that Campbell is being sought by the Miami Dolphins. "I feel sorry for Earl to have to listen to that all the time."

While Dalton and Campbell were more interested in preparing for Sunday's game against the Atlanta Falcons, they were instead having to deal with a published report that the Dolphins would trade draft choices or front-line players for Campbell or the rights to Mike Rozier.

"Rumors are a part of pro football," Houston head coach Hugh Campbell said. But the Campbell said he had no knowledge of any trade talks with the Dolphins.

"The three of us normally discuss these things," Campbell said, referring to General Manager Ladd Herzog, Assistant General Manager Mike Holovak and himself. "We have not discussed it."

Earl Campbell met briefly with the media following Wednesday's workout.

"If something happens, I'll have to handle it," Campbell said. "I guess after going through these things for four years it turns into a routine situation. I've heard worse."

Rozier currently is under contract to the United States Football League's Pittsburgh Maulers but the Oilers selected the former Nebraska All-American in the National Football League supplemental draft last June.

WILL CREATOR—Attorney Luis Kutner, creator of the "living will," a legal document that allows a person to specify under what conditions the use of life support systems should be discontinued, talks about the living will's history in his office in Chicago recently. Society's ideas about death with dignity have come a long way since Kutner first advanced the idea in 1927. (AP Laserphoto)

Originator of 'living will' reflects on idea's progress

By JAMES LITKE
Associated Press Writer
CHICAGO (AP) — Luis Kutner's musings about death anticipated the day when medicine would cross the line from prolonging life to prolonging dying.

More than 50 years ago Kutner wrote his first "living will," a legal document that allows a person to specify under which conditions the use of life-support systems should be discontinued.

Today, some 17 years after a New York-based organization decided to promote the acceptance of Kutner's "living will," laws have been enacted in 22 states and the District of Columbia recognizing the legal validity of some form of such a will.

Earlier this month, the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws drafted a "Right to Decline Life-Sustaining Procedures Act" aimed at making the "living will" a legally enforceable document in the remaining 28 states.

"People do not want to accept the notion of death being final and doctors, for differing reasons, have become obsessed with denying it," said Kutner, 76, an attorney specializing in international law.

"But where there is the possibility of continuing a life without value, when heroic measures will keep someone alive without any hope of restoring that life, it is barbaric, cruel and costly to do so," he added.

"He certainly deserves credit for the concept (of the living will)," said Alice Mehling, executive director of the New York-based Society for the Right to Die, a national, non-profit organization which promotes such laws. "The language in the jurisdictions varies, but the concept is the same — to extend the common-law right to end medical treatment if an individual so wishes."

"As much as anything, the proliferation of life-prolonging technologies in medicine made death with dignity an issue," she said. "This society, for instance, was founded in 1938 and many writers and thinkers had taken up the cause before the (Karen) Quinlan case put the issue before the public."

Miss Quinlan, now 30, remains in a coma, eight years after she was taken off a respirator in a landmark case that tested the right of a family to allow a seriously ill person to die. She lapsed into a coma in 1975 and, after doctors said she would never recover, her parents sought court permission to disconnect her from a respirator.

The New Jersey State Supreme Court agreed in March 1976, and the respirator was disconnected two months later. Miss Quinlan has remained in what has been described as a "chronic vegetative state" since then.

Later that year, California became the first state to pass a law that specifically recognized the "living will" as enforceable.

As early as 1906, a bill that would have legalized voluntary euthanasia was introduced in Ohio. The intervening years, said Mrs. Mehling, were filled with fights between well-meaning organizations, many of them religious, battling misunderstood and sometimes-ridiculed pioneering groups like the society for public sympathy over the controversial issue.

Kutner's involvement began in 1927, when his friend and mentor, Dr. George Thilo, was attacked and fatally beaten by robbers while answering a phony house call.

"They kicked him in the groin, severing his urethra and gangrene had set in," Kutner recalled. "He said he knew enough that he didn't want any life-support systems used to keep him going and he extracted a promise from me to fight efforts to do so."

Three years later, Kutner helped found an American chapter of the Euthanasia Society, modeled after an English counterpart that included such members as playwright George Bernard Shaw, author Julian Huxley and economist Harold Laski.

The idea did not catch on. By 1938, however, when the Rev. Charles Potter founded the Society for the Right to Die, the well-known writers Sherwood Anderson and Rex Stout and poet Robert Frost were receptive to the idea. Their credibility, in turn, gave the movement a foothold on this side of the Atlantic.

"The society itself really evolved from a group helping people to die with dignity to allowing them to die," she said. "And Mr. Kutner's document made a dramatic leap by providing a tool that could actually be used to protect people's rights."

Last April, a team of prominent doctors published in the New England Journal of Medicine a set of guidelines for treatment of gravely ill patients.

Carpenter likes to travel, do projects for churches

By RENAY SAN MIGUEL
San Angelo Standard-Times
SAN ANGELO, Texas (AP) — Motels prices are a little too steep these days for Bill Eggemeyer. He prefers to sleep in his car while he wanders across West Texas looking for a church that needs a carpenter.

Eggemeyer, 71, recently measured out a piece of wood for a cabinet destined for Sunday school teachers at Holy Angels Catholic Church. His good hand holds the wood in place. He lost his other hand in a cotton gin accident about 20 years ago, but a hook-like prosthesis doesn't slow him down. "The motel rent is too high," he said. "I park the car in a cool place, and I keep close to my tools."

The Rev. Mark Woodruff, pastor of Holy Angels, watches his old homeless friend as he speaks. "He's built four pulpits for me. Our teachers told me they needed cabinets where they could put their stuff, and the next day he drove up."

When Woodruff was at St. Joseph's Catholic Church across town, Eggemeyer was there doing carpentry work on an altar. Before that, he was at St. Lawrence's Church in Garden City, and at St. Mary's Parish in Fort Worth, and in Robert Lee, Crane, Rowena ...

If he's not working at a cotton gin, you'll find Eggemeyer working a hammer and saw for some of his favorite friends — priests. "They're always nice people to work for," he said. "That's the reason I like to work for them. They're really good and intelligent people."

"And handsome," Woodruff added with a grin.

"Some of them know more about woodworking than I do," Eggemeyer said.

Priests provide most of his contacts with civilization. He has a son working for a telephone company in Houston. His 90-year-old mother lives in Hillsboro with his sister. And that is the extent of his family.

Where does he call home? "Where I hang my hat," he said. He glances at his white station wagon, and the blue wooden trailer that holds his tools.

Eggemeyer's good hand is a large, knobby piece of Nature's work. He grips a hammer and works at a stylized cross engraved on the front of the cabinets. He said he hasn't had to modify his tools to accommodate his prosthesis, the result of a cotton gin accident on the Arizona-Mexico border in 1948.

"Those cotton gins, they're pretty dangerous, especially the saw," he laughed. "It happened just a little before Christmas," he recalled. "On Christmas Day, I was back ginning. I've done pretty good with it."

He looked at his prosthesis. "I guess if I get this thing close to the saw, it won't hurt me," he said with a laugh.

Reagan an isolated leader

By TERENCE HUNT
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — Even though President Reagan has a fat lead in pre-election polls, the White House is showing signs of uneasiness about charges he is one of the most isolated presidents in history.

Without being prompted by the press, White House spokesman Larry Speakes has said he had calculated how much time the president has spent answering questions from reporters since Sept. 2.

The total: about 40 minutes. That included answering questions for 14 minutes at a brief question-and-answer session when Reagan announced he would meet with Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko; five minutes with two correspondents from the Sunday Times of London after responding to written questions; seven minutes on the way to a helicopter last week, a chat with space journalists; and the remainder unspecified.

Reagan's last full-scale news conference was July 24. In the first 44 months of his presidency, Reagan has had 26 news conferences, fewer than any other president in recent history.

By contrast, Jimmy Carter had held 59 news conferences by this point in his presidency.

The White House strategy is to keep Reagan shielded from reporters and questions that might take the spotlight away from Reagan's message on any given day. Like many occupants of the White House, Reagan finds it convenient to conduct much of his campaign in the Rose Garden, where he can make maximum use of the incumbency, rather than trooping around the country every day with the other candidates.

With increasing frequency, White House challenger Walter

Mondale criticizes Reagan as an isolated leader who refuses to say what he will do in a second term. Mondale, himself, answers questions from reporters almost every day.

Mondale tried to get Reagan to agree to six debates; Reagan consented to two.

Mondale's hope is that if Reagan is forced to answer questions, he will stumble and make mistakes.

Trying to push the president into a change in strategy, Mondale argued the other day that Reagan is trying to get "re-elected answering as few questions as possible."

Jumping on the bandwagon, House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill, D-Mass., said, "Each day, the lid on the Oval Office is screwed tighter ... the marching orders to the press grow more strict & pictures. No press conferences, boys, just the photo op (opportunity)."

Police may have suspect's photo

HOUSTON (AP) — Police believe they have photographs of a suspect who murdered four people, including a 3-year-old girl, and seriously injured a fifth in an apparent robbery.

Investigators found the pictures Wednesday as they searched the house in a quiet, middle-class neighborhood where the bodies were found, said police spokesman J.C. Mosier. He declined to release the photos or further details.

Officers also were questioning the only survivor, Jesse James Lewis, 35, at a Houston hospital where he was in serious condition late Wednesday with a gunshot wound in the forehead, Mosier said.

After Tuesday night's attack, Lewis crawled through a bathroom window to summon help, police said.

"His information could be vital," Mosier said at a news conference Wednesday. "He is the only living witness except for the suspects."

Killed in the attack were the owner of the house, Larry Gentry, 36; Lloyd Armstrong, 25, who lived in the same neighborhood; Beverly Ann Clark, 21, of Victorville, Calif., and her daughter, Christille Lakey, 3. Each had been shot in the head, police said.

Neighbors said a teen-ager who had been visiting the house walked out as two men in a white Cadillac pulled up. But they said there were frequent visitors at the home.

Border crossings are daily game of 'cat-and mouse'

By CARL MANNING
Associated Press Writer
CIUDAD JUAREZ, Mexico (AP) — Before the sun rises, Mexicans line the banks of the Rio Grande waiting for Armando Martinez or one of his fellow "mules" to carry them to the other side for better-paying jobs.

For 14 years, Martinez has carried people on his back, wading the knee-deep river to the American side. Like the dozen others working within sight of the international bridge spanning the river to El Paso, Texas, he is known as a "mula" or mule.

"I do this because it is easy money. Some days I can make $20, other days I make maybe $40. It depends," Martinez said. He and his fellow workers charge 50 to 100 pesos per person, about 25 to 50 cents.

Women with shopping bags and young men with workers' tools wait their turn to climb onto a large rock and hop on the back of one of the waiting "mules."

The day begins early to avoid detection by U.S. authorities and because many have a long way to travel on the other side to get to their jobs as maids, factory workers, mechanics and dishwashers.

At times 10 mules may be lined up in the river, hurrying to the other side so they can return for their next fare. In this cat-and-mouse game, they keep one eye on the river current and the other on the shore for the Border Patrol, which patrols the American side in vans and flies overhead in helicopters.

Occasionally, the Border Patrol will show up at the right moment and catch somebody trying to cross the railroad tracks on the way to downtown El Paso. But most of the Mexicans make it through each day without a hitch.

Even the Border Patrol concedes it catches only one out of every five Mexicans who cross illegally into the El Paso area. Other estimates put the ratio closer to 1 out of 8 or 1 of 10.

Already this year, the Border Patrol has caught more than 1 million illegal aliens, mostly along the U.S.-Mexican border, a figure which represents a 2.2 percent increase over the same period last year.

The Justice Department appropriation for the fiscal year beginning Oct. 1 includes an additional $35.6 million for the Border Patrol to add 850 employees to help it along the Mexican border.

Border Patrol spokesman Joseph Aubin in El Paso said in a recent interview that most of those caught are returned to Mexico within a couple of hours and often they will be back at the river the same day trying again.

"It happens all the time. They are going to keep trying until they get into the interior and evade the Border Patrol," Aubin said.

Last year, border patrolmen in the El Paso district apprehended 215,693 illegal aliens, mostly Mexicans, and through July, they had arrested 126,014 — 3 percent ahead of a year ago at that time, Aubin said. The El Paso district covers a 341-mile-long border in southern New Mexico and west Texas.

Along the river bank, the Mexicans watch. A chain reaction of shouts and banging on the fence separating the two nations signals the approach of one of the patrol's green vans.

But it doesn't stop the mules who say the patrol bothers the Mexicans only after they are on the U.S. side. The river itself is a no-man's land where ferrying people across has been going on for generations.

"I know when they (the Border Patrol) is coming before they do. It is no problem to walk to the United States. I did it once and went to Denver. But I couldn't find a job so I came back," said one mule who did not want to give his name.

There is no Mexican law against people crossing the river, but the mules say the Juarez police sometimes harass them.

"They say pay and I will have no problems. I pay and I have no problems," said Martinez, adding that each day he gives the police 500 pesos, or about $2.50.

Another mule who called himself Jesus nodded in agreement, adding that he, too, pays the police.

Mexicans provide a cheap labor force along the U.S. side of the border since many employers pay less than the $3.35 per hour minimum wage. The Mexicans know this, but they accept it since it is more than they can make at home.

"There, I can make enough to feed my family. Here there is nothing for me," said one young man who said he worked as an automobile mechanic in an El Paso garage.

Aubin said a Mexican who earned $2 an hour in the United States would be better off than a factory worker along the border in Mexico who might make $4.50 a day.

Flood hits family recovering from freeze

LOS FRESNOS, Texas (AP) — It wasn't losing everything she owned that bothered Rebecca Gonzalez. It was losing everything just as it seemed her luck had changed.

Mrs. Gonzalez, 54, and her husband, Joe, were going back to work together for the first time since last December's freeze devastated the citrus industry and destroyed vegetable crops in the Rio Grande Valley.

"We were planning to pick cucumbers in about two weeks, but now I don't know, maybe they're all gone in the rain," said Mrs. Gonzalez, the mother of four children.

She and her 53-year-old husband walked a mile through mud a foot thick Wednesday afternoon to see what was left of their home the day after rising waters flooded the Del Mar Heights subdivision about three miles east of Los Fresnos near Brownsville.

Torrential rains that dumped 20 inches of water on some parts of the Valley in the last three days turned Del Mar Heights into an impassable bog. Water flowed into many of the dilapidated, clapboard homes and forced those who live there to seek shelter in two nearby churches Tuesday.

Unlike many of her neighbors who had to be evacuated Tuesday by local authorities, the Gonzalez family got out early when piercing rain began pouring through the makeshift windows and leaky roof of her home.

But because they left before the free evacuation shelter opened, the Gonzalez' have spent $42 out of the $73 a week they receive in unemployment benefits for a motel room in Brownsville in which to wait out the rain.

Mrs. Gonzalez said the shelter doesn't have enough mattresses and she wants her children to have a place to sleep.

"I do the best I can, but sometimes it's not enough," she said.

Mrs. Gonzalez won't know how much she lost until she is able to dry her furniture, clothing and other belongings in the sun next weekend.

"This year was the worst," she said. "We had been working every crop, saving a little money so we could get another place. But then everything went with the freeze ... and now this water."

Even before the flood, the Gonzalez family was looking for another place to live.

Every rain turns the road to a swamp, making it impossible for her children to get to school, she said.

"Right now it's not as bad as in the winter for my kids — when it's cold and wet and they have to come out so early in the morning," she said.

She said missing classes caused one of her teenage sons to fail a grade in school.

"He's ashamed you know because he is so much bigger than the others and is behind. I wanted us to have a place where he could go to school every day," she said.

Mrs. Gonzalez said the flood has convinced her that, with or without work next month, she and her family must move. She'll borrow the money from relatives if necessary, she said.

Texas Instruments finds testing problems

DALLAS (AP) — Texas Instruments is revising several of its testing programs in the wake of tests that found defects in several of its microchips, a company spokesman says.

Of nearly 5,000 kinds of microcircuits under scrutiny after the Pentagon ordered defense contractors to stop using them, fewer than 200 have yielded testing problems so far, TI Vice President Norman Neureiter said Wednesday.

TI is just under halfway through a testing review of microchips sold to about 80 defense contractors, officials said. The Pentagon ordered the halt because it said some of the chips may not have been properly tested.

Neureiter said Wednesday of about 2,200 kinds of chips reviewed by the first of this week, fewer than 200 had testing problems. He said problems found so far stem from the testing programs drawn up by TI officials, and that some programs omitted tests ordered by customers.

Pentagon and TI officials have said the problem does not affect the reliability of the tiny electronic devices, which are used in a broad range of weapons.

TI is revising the testing programs found to be incomplete or incorrect.

Japanese foreign minister to visit

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Japanese Foreign Minister Shintaro Abe today starts a four-day official visit to Mexico, marking the increasingly important commercial and diplomatic relations between the two nations.

The trip has been interpreted as a sign of Japan's growing interest in Latin America. Abe will meet with President Miguel de la Madrid and Foreign Minister Bernardo Sepulveda during his visit.

In a brief statement, the Mexican Foreign Ministry said during Abe's conversations with Mexican officials he will "analyze aspects of the international situation" and "evaluate the current state of the relations between Mexico and Japan."

In diplomatic circles here it also has been mentioned that the Japanese official will be interested in learning the Mexican point of view about the Central American conflict.

The topic of Mexican petroleum exports will be of prime interest during the discussions about commercial ties, since Japan imports all its crude oil while Mexico is the world's fourth largest exporter.

"The geographical position of our countries — both on the Pacific Ocean — encourages such trade," Mario Ramon Beteta, director-general of the state oil monopoly PEMEX, said during a 1983 visit to Tokyo. "I do not need to remind you that the distance from your main sources of crude (in the Middle East) is equivalent to that which separates Yokohama from Salina Cruz."

Salina Cruz is a Mexican Pacific port that has the capacity to load at least 160,000 barrels per day.

"In the short run we look forward to widening our trade to petroleum products and to petrochemicals. For this we have restructured our international division in order to better serve our customers, particularly those situated in Japan," Beteta said on his Japanese visit.

"I firmly believe that the conditions for a wider and deeper participation of PEMEX in the Japanese market are now given," he said.

Japan is Mexico's second largest trading partner after the United States. In recent years scientific, cultural and tourism ties between the two countries also have been increasing.

During his stay in Mexico, the Japanese foreign minister will receive the Order of the Aztec Eagle, the highest award the Mexican government grants foreigners.

On Friday, the first full day of his activities here, Abe will place a wreath on the Altar to the Country monument. A dinner later will be offered in his honor.

chairman of the division of head and neck surgery at the University of Texas Health Science Center, told Hill that relatively simple surgery could correct the problem.

"It was unfortunate that nobody was aware of his real problem all the time, because once he came to the Dallas Rehabilitation Center, they had him diagnosed, and now he's eating again," Schaefer said.

The institute serves physically disabled patients who require evaluation of their illness, medical care, physical restoration, vocational adjustment and psychological support, officials said.

"I can eat almost anything," Hill said recently, "though I have a little problem with meat."

After 30 years man gets new life taste

DALLAS (AP) — Marvin Hill has spent the last 30 years not being able to swallow anything, but now, after a surgical technique that he discovered by accident, he can't get enough of food.

"As soon as one meal is over, he wants to know what's in store for the next meal," says his wife, Patsy-Ruth. "He can't stop eating now."

The 71-year-old former Southern Methodist University teacher still recalls walking along a Dallas suburban street on Nov. 5, 1954, "when I just keeled over and couldn't get up."

He later learned that he had suffered a stroke, but not before discovering he couldn't swallow water a passer-by offered him while waiting for an ambulance.

"He had to learn to tube-feed himself with baby foods and liquids with sufficient calories, just to keep him going," said Mrs. Hill, his wife of 47 years.

Hill credits a casual conversation over a bridge game with leading to the surgery that repaired a paralyzed muscle in his throat.

Doctors said the operation had been available for the past 15 years, but Hill didn't know about it until earlier this year. His daughter happened to mention her father's affliction to her bridge partner, who said she had been successfully treated at the Dallas Rehabilitation Institute.

"I made an appointment to see Dr. Steven Schaefer, who had been performing this surgery for nine years with a 90-percent success rate," Hill said.

He said Schaefer told him the stroke had paralyzed one of the two muscles in the base of his throat that are supposed to relax for each swallow.

Schaefer, an assistant professor of otolaryngology and
