

Texas, Louisiana killers executed

By The Associated Press
 Convicted cop killer Thomas Andy Barefoot, who had believed God would spare him life a fifth time, asked forgiveness for "any wrong I've ever done" and then was executed by injection early today.

The former roughneck from New Iberia, La., was pronounced dead at 12:24 a.m., some 14 hours after the U.S. Supreme Court refused to block the execution and eight hours after Texas Gov. Mark White declined to grant him a 30-day reprieve.

Barefoot died minutes after Earnest Knighton Jr., who said he was "going home to heaven" was put to death in Louisiana's electric chair for the murder of a service station owner.

Knighthon, 38, who had studied pictures of the chair to give himself

"a little bravery," died at 12:17 a.m. CST, said prison officials in Angola, La.

Barefoot, 39, who had claimed that God would intervene, died seven minutes later, said Texas Attorney General Jim Mattox at the state prison at Huntsville.

Death-penalty opponents and supporters marched outside the sites of both executions. Pro-execution demonstrators in Huntsville carried a cardboard model of a hypodermic needle and chanted, "Hit me with your best shot."

The U.S. Supreme Court on Monday voted 7-2 in both cases not to stay the sentences, the 11th rejection in more than five years for Barefoot, who became the 28th person put to death in the United States since the nation's highest court in 1976 allowed states to restore the death penalty.

This week also could see the first U.S. execution of a woman in 22 years. Velma Barfield, 52, is scheduled to die Friday by lethal injection for poisoning her fiancé in 1978, and her attorneys have asked the North Carolina Supreme Court to stay the sentence.

Barefoot was convicted in the Aug. 7, 1978, shooting death of Carl LeVin, a police officer in the tiny central Texas town of Harker Heights. Prosecutors claimed Barefoot killed LeVin, fearing the officer would discover he was a fugitive from New Mexico, where he was wanted on a charge of raping a 3-year-old girl.

As he lay strapped to the gurney, Barefoot told 22 witnesses, "I hope that one day we can look back at the evil we are doing right now, like we do the witches that were burned at the stake."

Barefoot, wearing dark green trousers, a lime green shirt, black shoes and white socks, also said he had been praying for the wife of the slain police officer "because the bitterness in her heart will send her to hell just as surely as any other sin."

"I'm sorry for anything I've ever done to anybody in my entire life. I hope they will forgive me," he said.

As the poison injection flowed into his veins, he said, "Tell all my friends goodbye. You know who they are — Charlie Bass, David Powell," referring to two death row inmates.

Local officer had reason to support execution

Pampa detective sergeant Ken Neal dressed in red, white and blue colors this morning to show his support for the execution of Texas inmate Thomas Andy Barefoot.

For the Pampa police officer, the convicted killer's date with death today was cause for celebration: Neal was the partner of the police officer Barefoot murdered.

"It just tickles me to death...It's fantabulous," the Pampa officer said of the lethal injection administered to the cop killer just after midnight today.

Neal was the partner of Carl

Sgt. Ken Neal's partner was Barefoot victim

LeVin, the Harker Heights police officer whom Barefoot shot to death on Aug. 7, 1978.

Neal and LeVin both worked the midnight shift on the Harker Heights police force and often rode together, he said. Neal wasn't working the night his partner was killed, because he had been transferred to criminal investigations and the day shift just the previous day.

The officer and LeVin also were close friends off the job, Neal said. They often visited in each other's homes and would get together at the end of their graveyard shift.

The officer was at home asleep on the night he would have normally patrolled with LeVin.

"They called me around 5 a.m. and told me Carl had been killed...I said, 'What the... happened?'"

Neal drove out to where his slain partner lay dead on the ground.

"I could see him laying there...and the blood coming out of his head," Neal said, adding that the sight angered him greatly, though not in those words.

Barefoot was convicted of shooting LeVin once in the head with a .25-caliber pistol after the officer stopped the man in Harker Heights, a central Texas town of about 10,000 people near Ft. Hood and Killeen.

"He was a good officer, a damn careful officer," Neal said.

Prosecutors have said Barefoot feared LeVin would find out he was a fugitive from New Mexico, where he was wanted on a charge of raping a three-year-old girl.

Neal said his partner had stopped Barefoot to question him about the firebombing of a Harker Heights night club minutes before the slaying. He said the officer had apparently asked for the walking suspect's identification, because the officer's clipboard and pen were found on the ground next to the body.

The kiffer pulled the pistol from a back pocket and blasted the officer once in the head. He fled on foot.

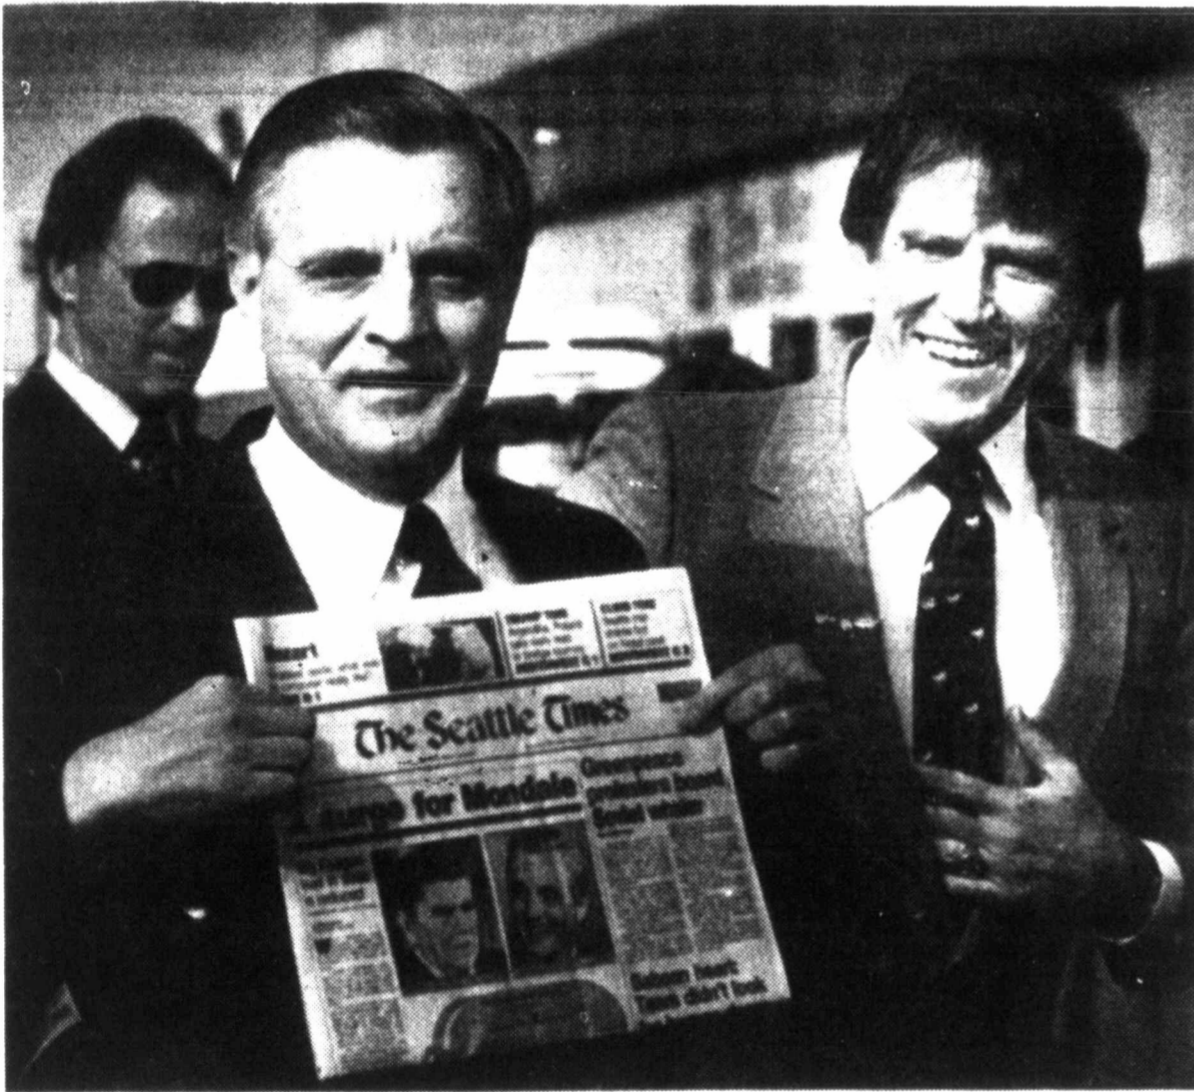

A witness saw the shooting and radioed for help from the officer's car.

HAPPY WITH HEADLINE—Democratic presidential candidate Walter Mondale holds up a Monday edition of The Seattle Times which said he has made gains in the state of Washington. Thousands of people showed up to greet Mondale at a downtown rally.

Crowds encourage Mondale, but Reagan aides eye sweep

By WILLIAM M. WELCH
 Associated Press Writer

Walter F. Mondale, encouraged by his crowds as he struggles to catch up, says President Reagan is "in for a big surprise" while the president's aides talk not just of winning but of winning everywhere.

Even as Reagan cautioned supporters against overconfidence, his campaign aides were signalling supreme confidence and saying they "consider" it possible for the president to win all 50 states, an unprecedented feat.

Reagan campaign spokesman James Lake wouldn't flatly predict such an outcome, but he said Monday that private GOP polls show Reagan leading in 49 states and "dead even" in Minnesota, the Democratic challenger's home.

And Lake said Reagan's schedule this week has been tailored to put him in several small states with few electoral votes, with the aim of winning all 50 states.

"The more states you win the more likely you will have a mandate to govern," Lake said.

For his part, Reagan said he was only "cautiously optimistic" about the election one week from today. Urging voters not to become complacent, Reagan said he tries not to read the polls that show him 17 to 24 points ahead.

"Don't you read them either," he said. "Don't let anything keep you on Nov. 6 from getting out there and doing what we need to do."

Campaigning in the Pacific Northwest on Monday, Mondale was buoyed by the large crowds he drew — 10,000 people, wall-to-wall for two city blocks in Seattle — and predicted a voter shift the polls haven't detected.

"I think Reagan is in for a big surprise," Mondale said.

Mondale also unleashed one of the most personal criticisms yet at Reagan and Vice President George Bush.

"Most of the time, Reagan is sleeping at Camp David," Mondale said, suggesting Reagan was so overconfident he spent the weekend at the presidential retreat rather than campaigning.

"And they've got old George Bush locked up in the cellar because he makes a mistake every time he goes out," he added.

Retorted Reagan: "If I hadn't been overnighting at Camp David, I would have been overnighting at the White House. Either place, it's good sleeping."

Reagan was remaining in the White House today and planned no more campaign trips until Thursday, when he departs on a trip West that will take him to 10 states, ending in California on Election Day.

Bush and Democratic vice presidential candidate Geraldine Ferraro were out on the hustings.

Panhandle counties survey reveals fear of nuke dumps

AUSTIN (AP) — A state survey in two Panhandle counties shows half the residents interviewed think there could be a nuclear explosion in their backyard if the federal government places a high-level nuclear waste dump there.

Twenty-six percent said it would be "very likely," and 24 percent said they thought it would be "somewhat likely."

State Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower said an "absurd proposal" by the U.S. Department of Energy to put a nuclear waste dump in Deaf Smith or Swisher counties threatens to chase away 44 percent of the population.

Hightower released at a Monday news conference a survey by the Texas Department of Agriculture of 841 residents of Deaf Smith, Swisher, Crosby and Moore counties.

The DOE has proposed narrowing the area in Texas for a possible nuclear dump to two nine-square mile areas near Vega in Deaf Smith County and near Tulia in Swisher County.

Nine other sites are being considered in Louisiana, Mississippi, Nevada, Utah and Washington, and the DOE is expected to choose the first national high-level nuclear waste dump by 1987 or 1988. The federal Nuclear Waste Policy Act gives a state veto power over the location of a site, but the veto could be overridden by a majority vote of both houses of Congress.

As part of its search, Congress is obligated to help states evaluate the federal government's site-selection methods, and it paid for the Department of Agriculture survey.

Hightower said one claim by the DOE was that "people on the High Plains were good Americans, and therefore they want to do their patriotic duty. This survey finds that the people themselves in that area do, indeed, consider themselves to be good Americans but that their real patriotic duty is to produce the food and fiber that this nation depends on rather than try to raise nuclear waste in that area."

Hightower said the survey showed "intense opposition across the board. They say, in essence, 'We don't care if you wrap this stuff in the American flag — we don't want it on the High Plains.'"

The survey asked, "If it were up to you, would you allow construction of a high-level nuclear waste repository?" Seventy-three percent of those surveyed in Deaf Smith and Swisher counties said "definitely no," and 8 percent said "probably no."

About 80 percent believed a dump would cause farmland values to decline, and 72 percent believed it would cut agricultural production. About 60 percent said they thought it "very likely" that radioactive wastes would escape into their underground water supply, and 54 percent thought soil contamination is "very likely."

Fifty percent said it was "very likely" the dump would lead to health problems, and 25 percent said it was "somewhat likely."

Asked about the quality of life, 45 percent said it would "go down," and 44 percent said it would "stay the same."

"It will eliminate the need for street lights in some of these towns," Hightower quipped.

Asked if they had thought of moving out of the area because of the dump, 44 percent said they had.

"Just by the consideration the proposal hangs over West Texas like a nuclear cloud," he said. "It's creating a dark shadow on the economy out there."

"People are postponing plans to buy land, expand businesses, drill for minerals and pass farms on to their children. They're having to change all their long-range plans because of the threat of having nuclear trash buried in their backyard," he said.

While free on bond Rape suspect arrested on additional charges

A 23-year-old Pampa man free on bond in connection with the rape of a teen-age housewife was arrested again Monday, police reported.

Lloyd Dean Remy, 23, 1321 E. Foster, was charged earlier this year in connection with the March 28 rape of an 18-year-old Pampa woman.

With the charge pending, Remy was free on bond. On Monday, Pampa police arrested the man again, this time on charges of public intoxication and fleeing and evading arrest and in connection with an investigation of an attempted burglary.

Police previously charged that Remy is the "marathon rapist." They have charged that the man burst into the young woman's home and committed a series of sexual assaults over a period of about three and a half hours.

The victim's husband was reportedly at work about 1 a.m., when the woman opened her front door to let out a cat.

A man wearing a nylon stocking over his head and socks on his hands burst through the door, according to the initial police reports.

The attacker forced the woman to strip and commanded her to "shut up or die," police have said.

The assault continued until the suspect just got up and left about 4:30 a.m., police reported.

Remy was arrested at his home three days after the assault. He was charged with burglary of a habitation with intent to commit sexual assault, and bond was set at $20,000.

Remy remained in custody in the city jail this morning in connection with the latest charges.

Nigeria blocks agreement on OPEC production cut

GENEVA, Switzerland (AP) — Nigeria's refusal to join in a proposed 9 percent cut in OPEC oil production was blocking agreement today on how cartel members would share the sacrifice, Indonesian Oil Minister Subroto said.

Subroto, chairman of an emergency meeting of OPEC oil ministers, told reporters after a morning session that "progress has been made" toward a formal agreement to reduce the 13-nation cartel's production ceiling.

The ministers agreed in principle Monday to lower the ceiling by 1.5 million barrels a day to 16 million, starting Thursday. But they faced a bigger hurdle in agreeing how the cutback — aimed at shoring up oil prices by reducing supply — would be shared.

Subroto said the ministers discussed a sharing formula, but that Nigeria's reluctance to go along was creating problems. He would not provide details of the formula.

Nigerian Oil Minister Tam David-West said before the meeting began Monday that it would be "suicidal" for his country to join in the production cuts.

Subroto said Nigeria presented its arguments to the conference.

"We listened ... but on the other hand I think we try to show that what we do should be carried by every member of OPEC," he said.

Subroto added, however, "We are very confident that we will be able to reach agreement on the production cut of 1.5 million from the 17.5 ceiling."

The current production ceiling is 17.5 million barrels, representing about 40 percent of the non-communist world's oil production. But estimates of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries' actual output vary; even the oil ministers themselves do not agree.

Most estimates put the cartel's October production at about 17 million to 18 million barrels a day. Actual figures are unavailable because none of the OPEC member countries publishes official numbers.

"A consensus has been reached that a cut of 1.5 million is sufficient, and we do not want to overdo it by having a larger cut," Indonesian Oil Minister Subroto told reporters after Monday's agreement.

Subroto said the ministers had yet to decide how long they would hold production to the 16 million-barrel-a-day level. He added, however, that he believed that within "a couple of months" the tightening of supplies would force prices back to OPEC's official level of $29 a barrel.

The cartel's aim is to produce about 2.5 million barrels a day less than projected demand during the final months of this year.

Prices on the free market, where oil not under OPEC's control is sold to the highest bidder, have been well below the official prices quoted by OPEC nations. As a result, the cartel has been losing sales.

Britain and Norway cut their prices earlier this month, and Nigeria — one of the major OPEC producers — followed with an even larger cut. That has thrown the OPEC pricing system into chaos and opened the door to a possible price collapse.

Nigeria has refused, in the face of intense pressure from OPEC kingpin Saudi Arabia, to rescind its price cut. Nigerian Oil Minister Tam David-West also said on his arrival in Geneva that his country would not join the rest of OPEC in any cutbacks in oil production. He said his economically distressed nation could not afford it.

That left the cartel with one main alternative — squeeze supplies enough during the peak season for oil use this fall and winter to force up prices on the open market. That, in turn, could allow Nigeria to restore its former price and avert a possible price war among other oil producers.

But Monday's agreement to cut the production ceiling will not hold up unless the 13 ministers also can agree how the proposed cutback will be shared.

Many industry analysts doubt OPEC has the discipline within its ranks to resist selling more oil when demand picks up.

Personal income up in second quarter

WASHINGTON (AP) — The average personal income of Americans rose a healthy 2.1 percent from April through June despite an earnings drop among residents in six farm states, the government reports.

The overall increase was slightly less than the 2.9 percent gain posted in the first three months of 1984, the Commerce Department said Monday.

Buoyed by payroll gains at manufacturing and construction jobs that were double the national average, Georgia and Vermont led the nation with 3.6 percent increases in personal income, the department said.

States with strong income gains also included Florida at 3.3 percent and Connecticut and North Carolina, both at 2.9 percent.

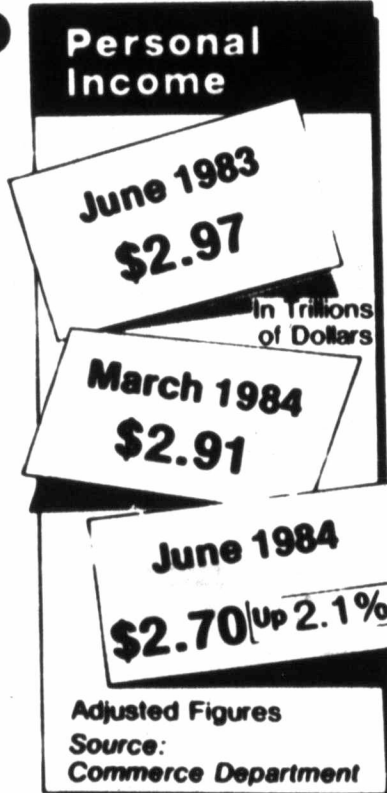

The drop in personal earnings in the six Farm Belt states was blamed on the end of the government's payment-in-kind farm subsidy program, which disbursed $9.8 billion in surplus crops to farmers who took land out of production.

The worst hit was North Dakota, where earnings slumped 8.1 percent. Montana residents saw personal income go down by 3 percent, followed by declines of 2.7 percent in Nebraska, 1.6 percent in Iowa, 0.5 percent in South Dakota and 0.02 percent in Mississippi.

Even in states without an actual decline, the Farm Belt lagged behind.

Another government report issued Monday showed that average weekly earnings of Americans with full-time jobs rose by an average 5.2 percent between the third quarters of 1983 and 1984, also beating the 4.2 percent inflation rate over the year.

Former policeman's body found

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP) — The body of a former North Carolina policeman who was named on a warrant in his wife's murder case was found floating in a pond after he apparently killed himself, authorities said.

The body of Alan Briones, 36, of Raleigh, N.C., was found Monday in a brush-covered area near here by mounted officers, said Christopher Kirk, a Brazos County Sheriff's investigator.

A Sheriff's Department statement released Monday said

Briones apparently took his own life, said Ron Huddleston, a spokesman for the department.

Briones is named on a first degree murder warrant in the death of his wife, who was shot to death Friday in a west Raleigh parking lot.

A car that Briones rented on Friday in Raleigh was found abandoned in southern Brazos County.

Kirk said a sheriff's posse searching near a farm pond found Briones' body Monday morning in a pond about 100 yards away from the rented car. Briones apparently suffered "a massive wound to the head," he said.

Kirk said no weapon was found, but divers were combing the bottom of the stock pond searching for the two pistols Briones was believed to have been carrying.

"My information is that he had suicidal tendencies and that he was heavily armed," said Kirk.

Huddleston said autopsy results were not yet available Monday night.

Neal recalls Barefoot

Barefoot getting off a bus in Houston the day after the murder. The condemned man had claimed he was set up by roommates who wanted to "put a feather in their own caps."

"He got snatched off by a homosexual he had partnered up with," Neal said.

The gun used in the killing was in Barefoot's pocket when he was arrested.

Neal said the investigation in which he participated revealed Barefoot "had boasted the only thing he wanted to do was kill a cop."

"It just happened to be Carl," he said.

In the more than five years of appeals, Barefoot's case was reviewed 11 times, and he won four stays of execution.

Neal said he believed Barefoot's time was up the fifth time around.

"I felt good about this one. I felt they were going to go through with it, and he was going to get his comeuppance," the Pampa officer said.

Neal said he first heard of the execution while watching a newscast over coffee early this morning.

"I put on my red, white and blue. I thought, 'It's about time,'" he said.

Neal's only regret is that Barefoot no longer has to squirm in doubt about whether the state would execute him.

"Maybe it's better to leave them alive and let them wonder," he said.

Before receiving the needle of death, Barefoot reportedly "prayed" for LeVin's wife, saying her bitterness would send her to hell.

"I bet that made her feel real good," Neal said.

Jury selection continues in restaurant slayings trial

DALLAS (AP) — Jury selection continued today in the murder trial of Abdelkrim Belachheb, whose attorneys say he was insane when six people were shot to death at a nightclub last summer.

On Monday, the 39-year-old man pleaded innocent to six counts of murder and one of attempted murder. He is on trial for the June 29 shootings of Ianni's Restaurant and Club. If convicted, he could spend the rest of his life in prison.

State District Judge Gerry Meier, who had earlier imposed a gag order, banned cameras from the fifth floor of the courthouse Monday. A metal detector framed the entrance to the courtroom.

Several potential jurors were questioned, but none was selected.

The trial is expected to last at least three weeks.

Frank Jackson, a Dallas attorney who in two highly publicized Dallas trials built a reputation for successfully using the insanity defense, is Belachheb's defense lawyer.

Belachheb, dressed in a three-piece suit, looked pale and drawn in court Monday. He appeared without a thick, black toupee he had worn in the past.

Belachheb sat with his eyes downcast throughout most of the proceedings Monday. But he peered intently at Assistant District Attorney Rider Scott as Scott read six murder and one attempted murder indictments.

"Not guilty," Belachheb

responded to each in his heavily accented English.

In preliminary skirmishing, the state won a ruling from Ms. Meier banning references to psychiatrist Dr. James Grigson, a frequent witness for the prosecution, as "Dr. Death."

What became the worst mass murder in Dallas history apparently began when Marcel Ford, 32, of Grand Prairie apparently refused a man's advances at the club.

Besides Ms. Ford, other victims included Linda Lowe, 43, Janice Arbuckle Smith, 46, Ligia Kozlowski, 45, all of Dallas; Frank Lance Parker, of Arlington, and Joseph Minasi, 37, of Garland.

Expert: Ogallala Aquifer to decline 30 percent by 2030

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — The volume of water in the Ogallala Aquifer, which spans eight states and serves a large portion of West Texas, will decline almost 40 percent by the year 2030, a water expert said.

Although individual wells may run dry, the aquifer will not suddenly expire and will provide water for decades to come, said Tommy Knowles, an official with the Texas Department of Water Resources.

Knowles made the remarks to a symposium of 150 water officials from Texas, Louisiana and Oklahoma on Monday. The symposium is being sponsored by the Center for Research in Water Resources of the University of Texas and the Texas Water Resources Institute of Texas A&M University.

"A sudden loss of a resource such as the Ogallala will not occur," Knowles said.

Individual wells may dry up, but only because the aquifer level dips below pump level or the well has collapsed, he said.

"The aquifer can continue to be a source of substantial amounts of groundwater for several decades," Knowles said.

The aquifer underlies 46 counties in West Texas and spans parts of

New Mexico, Oklahoma, Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, Wyoming and South Dakota.

Knowles said 1980 estimates showed the aquifer contained 420 million acre-feet of drainable water, 91 percent of which was recoverable from wells. The total is down from 470 million acre-feet in 1960.

By the year 2000, he said, the volume of water in the aquifer is expected to be down by 19 percent. By 2030, it would decline 38 percent from 1980.

In an earlier session, Charles Nemir, executive director of the TDWS, said increasing demand and reduced availability will combine to force most Texans to seek surface water supplies rather than underground sources.

Currently, Nemir said, one out of two Texans drinks and uses water drawn from underground sources.

By 2030, he said, the number will dwindle to one in five.

"Generally, cities are convinced that although surface water supplies are more expensive, they are more reliable," Nemir said.

Nemir said as late as the 1960s, most Texas cities were using groundwater rather than surface supplies.

"Now, it's just the opposite. The major reason for the shift has been severe water level declines," Nemir said.

"Total groundwater use in Texas has remained fairly constant in the past 25 years, largely because of the limited amounts available," he said.

Total water consumption in Texas in 1930 was 1.4 million acre feet. The figure was up to 10 million acre feet in 1960 and has held at that level.

Industry has long been concerned about conserving groundwater and farmers have joined the effort in recent years.

Are you better off today?

Election Day, 1984, is one week from today and candidates from all offices, parties and political leanings are imploring you to ask yourselves one question:

Are you better off today than you were four years ago?

I don't know how I would answer the question. Until March, I was a citizen of Oklahoma, that mythical Shangri-la where a Democrat is defined as a Republican who wants to be elected.

And fate has been funny. Both good things and bad things have happened since 1980. So, I'll have to take it year by year.

Am I better off than four years ago?

No. I was a college senior and the club and entertainment editor for the campus newspaper. While the managing editors got all the flack for the anti-administration stuff they printed, I got to attend movie premieres and champagne art showings in Oklahoma City.

My roommate and I spent our evenings munching granola clusters and thinking of devious ways to harass the director of the Wesley Foundation where we belonged. Nobody is better off than when they were a senior in college.

Am I better off than three years ago?

Yes. In 1981, my finances were kaput, my car wasn't working and I had to leave family, friends and city life for a job in — heaven help me — Woodward, Okla.

Am I better off than two years ago?

No. In 1982, I discovered that Woodward was not the armpit of the world. I was attending a Methodist Church with a close, loving congregation and a dynamic minister. I lived in this adorable little garage apartment with antique furniture, glass-paned French doors and a sun room. And my finances were secure enough to afford a new 1982 Plymouth Horizon. But the good times weren't going to last.

Am I better off than one year ago?

Yes. I was living in Tulsa, Oklahoma's answer to Big D, and was attending a good Presbyterian church, so that part of my life was okay.

But I was not at peace with myself. I was still paying for the car I bought the year before. My apartment was a boring efficiency rat trap. And my unstable job was driving me loony tunes.

So, looking back, I can't say life has gotten better or worse over the last four years. A 1981 tax cut enabled me to buy a better brand of paper towel once a month, but that was two jobs ago. My family has neither been invaded by the Russians nor destroyed by the Bomb, so no problem there.

Instead of asking yourselves if you're better off, challenge your mind. Ask other people how they're doing.

Ask the unemployed steelworkers in Pennsylvania if they are better off; then ask the young couple who can now afford a home and new car if they are better off.

Ask the single mother who must feed her children on a pittance if she is better off; then ask the single mother who can now spend less for food and clothing if she is better off.

Ask the father whose son was killed in a Beirut bombing if he is better off; then ask the father whose child was saved from the ravages of drug abuse if he is better off.

Ask the first grader who's just learned how a nuclear bomb can destroy the earth if he's better off; then ask the high school senior who aced her college entrance exam because of stiffer education standards if she is better off.

Ask any farm family, anywhere, if they are better off.

It gets a little confusing when you look outside of your own pocketbook, doesn't it?

Girl becomes the first liver transplant recipient in Texas

DALLAS (AP) — A 2½-year-old girl, the first liver transplant patient in Texas, is resting comfortably after a 10-hour operation, her doctors at Children's Medical Center said.

"Our young lady is doing very well," Dr. Walter Andrews said of Melissa Lively, who received a new liver Monday. "Her vital signs are looking extremely well. The operation was uneventful and we're looking forward to an uncomplicated recovery."

Melissa, the daughter of Jeff and Denise Lively of Missouri City, suffered from biliary atresia, which did not allow her liver to secrete bile. She was diagnosed as having liver problems as early as 8 weeks old, said Andrews, who was assisted by Dr. Jack Chang.

The girl received the liver from a 4-year-old Texas girl during an operation that began at 6 a.m. Monday and ended at 4 p.m., Andrews said.

He and assistant Dr. Jack Chang extracted the donor's liver at an undisclosed location and returned to Dallas with it, said Andrews, who declined to elaborate how the donor died.

"This is a wonderful day for us," the girl's parents said in a prepared statement. "... We owe a deep thanks to a family we do not know who looked past their own tragedy to provide our child with a liver."

Although other liver transplants have been performed successfully at hospitals in Memphis, Minneapolis and Pittsburgh, this was the first successful transplant at a Texas hospital.

"I think it's fantastic," Andrews, who trained at Pittsburgh Children's Hospital, told a news conference Monday. "It shows we're able to pool our resources here in Texas and do a job as well as the major centers across the country in transplantation."

On Oct. 10, a 57-year-old Dallas man died during liver transplant at Methodist Central Hospital.

In August, Children's Medical Center announced plans for a liver transplant program, projecting a successful transplant before the end of the year, hospital spokeswoman Linda Harris said.

Monday.

Two other children are on the waiting list at Children's Medical Center, Andrews said.

Andrews said he expected the child to be walking within 4-5 days and out of the hospital within 60 days.

He said rejection could occur within the first 10 day or up even up to three months.

Andrews said he didn't know how long the girl had to live if she had not had the transplant, but said she seemed happy.

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Are the taxpayers really at fault?

A 22-year-old man recently successfully sued the city of Newport Beach in California for damages after he suffered a paralyzing neck injury while diving head-first into the ocean. His claim? The city should have warned him of the possible hazards of swimming and diving at a city beach.

Although the amount of the damage award has yet to be determined, the precedent it sets is troubling. In such cases, it is not city officials who end up paying, but residents of the cities involved—the taxpayers. How responsible are they for the actions of a diver who didn't look before leaping?

Are the taxpayers of that city responsible for the actions of a swimmer who is hurt swimming in waters off city beaches? If we follow the logic of the jury, the answer is "yes." Court cases in the past have resulted in the operator of an amusement park being held liable for the welfare of the park's patrons, and individuals have been held responsible for accidents on their property in other cases.

We believe the proper answer is "no." There is no way to warn every individual of every possible potential hazard. At some point society must say that individuals are responsible for their own actions.

Almost every city has a natural hazard somewhere, be it a cliff, a beach, or simply a road such as Somerville here in Pampa.

Does this mean that cities must go to the expense of warning every possible passer-by or user that there are risks involved. We would hope not. At some point individuals have to take responsibility for their own welfare. Even the most socialist of societies have not yet found a way to eliminate all the risks.

It might be noted that the very concept of "public" property invites situations in which taxpayers, who don't have the option of selling "their share" may find themselves liable for the use or misuse of property over which they have little if any effective control.

In Newport Beach, the mayor jokingly suggested putting a sign at the city limits saying, "Enter at your own risk." We would hope we have not come to the point where that would be necessary, but judgments such as the one in Newport Beach give cause to wonder.

Abortion 'bomb' ticks away

The real "bomb" in Campaign '84 has no warhead - nuclear or conventional. What it has is political TNT and a lengthy fuse along which a flame travels faster, ever faster. The "bomb" is the abortion issue.

The Democratic party and its presidential ticket want this particular bomb disarmed and tossed on the scrapheap as speedily as possible. Uh - uh. No way. Not this issue.

Permit me to switch the figure of speech: concerning abortion: the Democrats have a biting, clawing tiger by the tail.

A half - dozen years ago, the abortion controversy seemed containable. Abortion was viewed as "a Roman Catholic issue," and the practical politician could get by with sketching the controversy as a purely theological one. The Supreme Court Had Spoken, and that was that.

Yet abortion, since the national political conventions, has been all over the news. Ronald Reagan is the first president forthrightly to oppose the Supreme Court decision and to affirm the sanctity of unborn life. The Mondale - Ferraro ticket, which supports freedom of choice in the matter, has been dogged by anti - abortion picketers.

New York City's Archbishop John J. O'Connor has meanwhile criticized Roman Catholic politicians who, on the personal level, oppose abortion so strongly that they won't, at the practical level, lift one finger to stop it.

A New York Times - CBS Poll asserts that 43 percent of Americans support a constitutional amendment that would allow abortion only to save the mother's life; 48 percent oppose such an amendment. Not much of a lead for a social policy supposedly central to the pursuit of happiness.

The great canard, not just of Campaign '84 but also of the whole decade since the Supreme Court decision, is that abortion is a theological question - like, say, the Real Presence in the Eucharist. You wouldn't have Congress decide a particular view of mortality, would you? So there.

Rep. Geraldine Ferraro and Gov. Mario Cuomo of New York have represented the matter in just such terms. Which doesn't say much for their understanding of the particular issue. Is the right - to - life advocate like the old - time Methodist who was agin' dancing and card - playing and thought everybody else should be too? Is life - specifically, the value of life - one of those six - of - one, half - a - dozen - of - the - other questions best left unanswered by the state?

Gov. Cuomo and Rep. Ferraro, on the evidence of their public statements, seem to think the answers are yes and yes. Archbishop O'Connor, his theological credentials notwithstanding, is nearer the mark. As he asked a few days ago: "Is my grief over abortion born merely of what I have been taught as a Catholic? I can't believe that. I know that millions of Jews, Protestants, Orthodox, Muslims, people of many other religious persuasions and people who profess no religious faith at all, grieve as I do over this destruction of life."

Certainly it wasn't the Roman Catholic Church that wrote the abortion statutes enacted by mostly Protestant state legislatures in the 19th and 20th centuries. These were the statutes that protected unborn life until, in 1973, along came the Supreme Court to strike them down - in essence, replacing one moral judgment with another.

Is abortion a topic dangerous to national unity and civility? Possibly. But let us remember who picked the fight. Not the Roman Catholic Church - rather, the Supreme Court. By weaving out of whole cloth the constitutional right to abortion, the court started all the acrimony that so many nowadays find so distasteful.

The court's decision made possible the 1.5 - million abortions that take place each year in America - 4,000 a day, as O'Connor puts it. That's what all the yelling is about.

In terms of the strong divisions it generates, abortion as an issue has been likened to the slavery controversy of the 1850s. Not that there is the remotest chance of a civil war breaking out over the Human Life Amendment.

But there is no doubt that abortion, like slavery, is daily forcing Americans to examine first premises and to choose where they themselves stand. "Once to every man and nation," wrote the anti - slavery poet James Russell Lowell, "comes the moment to decide." So it may be coming once again.

Today in History

Today is Tuesday, Oct. 30, the 304th day of 1984. There are 62 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history: On Oct. 30, 1938, Orson Welles' radio play, "War of the Worlds," caused panic around the country among people who thought we were really being invaded by Mars.

On this date: Five years ago: A presidential commission that studied the nuclear accident at Pennsylvania's Three Mile Island called for fundamental changes in the way reactors are constructed, operated and regulated.

One year ago: Lillian Carter, the 85-year-old mother of former President Jimmy Carter, died in Americus, Ga.

Today's birthdays: Actress Ruth Gordon is 88. French movie director Louis Malle is 52. French movie director Claude Lelouch is 47. Rock singer Grace Slick is 45. Actor Henry Winkler is 39.

Thought for today: "To be a great champion, you must believe you are the best. If you're not, pretend you are." — Muhammad Ali.

Rookie writer scores big

It is not necessary for you to be a hard - core wear - your - colors, college football fan to enjoy a new book titled "Fourth and Long Gone," which was written by Pepper Rodgers, published by Peachtree Publishers, and which is a bargain at $12.95.

Pepper Rodgers was a head football coach at Kansas and at UCLA and, of course, at his alma mater, Georgia Tech.

At Georgia Tech, the tweed jacket crowd didn't like his lifestyle - he wore his hair in a perm, rode a motorcycle around campus, and didn't wear socks on his television show - so he got fired.

Rodgers currently is the head coach of the Memphis Showboats of the professional United States Football League, and it has been noted on many occasions before that Memphis is one of the few towns ever to name its team after its coach.

After his firing at Tech, Pepper found himself with a great deal of time on his hands, so he sat down and wrote his first novel, which, according to Sports Illustrated, is "real, as any good novel should be."

Pepper Rodgers should be in the running for rookie of the year in the novel - writing business. His book is intriguing. It is revealing. It is fun.

It is about two rival head collegiate football coaches - one of whom the reader can't help but identify with Bear Bryant and the other of whom Rodgers himself may have modeled for - attempting to recruit the nation's top high school player.

Above that, the book is about "two grown men...strangling each other over the pursuit, development and exploitation of teen - age boys."

There are recruiters dropping $100 bills into collection plates at church to impress recruits' mothers.

There is the kid who has the IQ of a turnip and wants to major in premed. Unfortunately, one of the schools recruiting him has no premed program.

A real estate man, a recruiter for the school, poses as a brain surgeon and takes the kid to the vet school to see a hog castration. The kid throws up and that's that for his wanting to be a doctor.

Pepper Rodgers has been a showboat for most of his life, and it has gotten him into trouble. This book likely won't make him any new friends in the college coaching fraternity, and there may be whispers about his disloyalty. But Rodgers never has worried that much about what anybody had to say about him.

Rodgers was playing high school baseball and stepped to the plate. The opposing catcher said, "Well, look who we got here, the big hotshot, Pepper Rodgers. Know what they say about you, Rodgers?"

"What?" asked Pepper. "They say you really think you're somebody. They say you really think you're great."

"Know what they say about you?" Pepper asked back.

"What?" asked the catcher. "Nothin'," he replied.

"Fourth and Long Gone" is a winner, and I hope Pepper Rodgers will give us more.

The age issue isn't valid

In the final weeks of the presidential election campaign, President Reagan's opponents are pulling out all the stops in asserting that he is too old to be the nation's chief executive.

It is odd that this is the case because the American population is aging and age discrimination is now against the law.

But what about the age factor? Is it true that men in their seventies should not exercise political leadership? To judge whether this is a correct perspective, it's worthwhile to review political leadership in the post - World War II era. Asked to name three of the political giants of the era, one undoubtedly would mention Winston Churchill of Britain, Charles deGaulle of France, and Konrad Adenauer of West Germany.

What do history books tell about these giants? Well, Churchill was reelected Prime Minister in 1951 at age 77. Gen. deGaulle was President of France in 1969 at 79. Chancellor Adenauer held office in 1963 at age 87. No responsible historian has even charged that Churchill, deGaulle and Adenauer were unfit to hold the highest offices in their countries when they were in their seventies or, in Adenauer's case, in his eighties.

Congress is also full of older Americans. One of the most active liberals in Congress is U.S. Rep. Claude Pepper who is age 84. Congressman Pepper plays a key role for the Democratic Congress.

Consider the U.S. Supreme Court. It includes a number of justices in their seventies. They give no indication that they can't bear up under the judicial load or plan to retire. One wonders how many citizens realize that federal judges are elected for life. Many stay on the bench and carry out their duties in a very satisfactory manner until well into their eighties.

Many supposedly elderly men are active leaders of major corporations.

The truth is that chronological age is not an accurate indicator of a person's ability to perform his duties. Some people burn out and become incapable in their forties. Others, like President Reagan, have the constitution of people twenty years younger. Anyone who has seen the President close up, as has this writer, knows that he has the manner of a much younger man. He took a bullet from a would - be assassin and recovered with amazing speed.

Those who disapprove of the President's policies would do well to focus on those and drop the criticism based on age. Being over 70 isn't a black mark against a candidate. Age is equated with experience and judgment. Gone are the days when anyone over 30 was not to be trusted, or so the liberals said in the 1960s.

DA glad execution is over

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — "I'm so glad to get it over with," District Attorney Arthur "Cappy" Eads said late Monday night as he waited word of the execution of Thomas Andy Barefoot.

Barefoot, 39, died at 12:24 a.m., CST, today in Huntsville, while Eads, who prosecuted Barefoot, sat in one of the offices occupied by the state attorney general in Austin, 165 miles away.

Eads, visiting with four reporters and two members of Attorney General Jim Mattox's staff, said Barefoot, charged with the shooting death of Harker Heights police officer Carl LeVin, went to trial six years ago to the day.

After the trial, Eads recalled, it took the jury only 28 minutes to hand down the death penalty.

Barefoot, a former roughneck from New Iberia, La., died today from a lethal injection, and Eads reflected, "I thought about what I would say tonight, and I haven't thought of anything spectacular or original at all. I'm so glad to get it over."

Eads said he had "wrestled hard" with the decision of whether to go to Huntsville for the execution but added, "Curiosity would not be enough to make me go to Huntsville. I have no personal desire to be there and chose not to be there."

"The Thomas Barefoot case is very a personal thing to me, but Thomas Barefoot is not a personal thing to me," said Eads.

Asked if he knew LeVin, the officer who was killed, Eads said, "Not intimately, but personally — 'How are you officer LeVin?'"

"In death penalty cases, it's very, very difficult to be emotionally detached from the case," Eads said. "It's such a significant part of your life, so many years."

Eads said he had successfully prosecuted five capital murder cases but the other four death penalties had been commuted to life in prison.

Returning to the question of why he had not gone to Huntsville, Eads said, "I've done all I feel I'm empowered to do. If I went to Huntsville, how could I answer the question, 'What are you down here for?'"

"He's going to be executed whether I'm there or not," Eads said. He paused, took a puff off a cigarette and sought to explain why he had left his home in Belton to come to Austin.

"I had an empty feeling. I've got to be somewhere, and I wanted to be where I can receive the news (of Barefoot's death) as soon as possible," Eads said.

Death penalty advocates outnumber opponents

By The Associated Press
As the state of Texas executed Thomas Andy Barefoot, the fourth man to die by injection since December 1982, advocates of capital punishment outnumbered opponents.

About 200 pro-death penalty demonstrators rallied outside Huntsville's Walls Unit prison Monday night, with some urging a stronger ultimate punishment. Anti-death penalty protesters were almost unseen.

About 50 members of an anti-death penalty group held a vigil in Austin, while similar vigils were held in Houston and Huntsville.

At the prison where Barefoot died at 12:24 a.m. today, a crowd consisting mainly of students from Sam Houston State University carried a large cardboard model of a hypodermic needle. They also bore signs reading "Bring Back Old Sparky" and "I'd Rather See the Lights Dim," referring to the electric chair that was used in the past.

"Hit me with your best shot," they chanted. The demonstrators were kept about 250 feet from the prison by a yellow plastic ribbon.

Security was tight, with 200 Texas Department of Corrections guards supported by troopers from the Department of Public Safety and officers from the Huntsville Police Department and Walker County Sheriff's Office.

"I don't think this method (lethal injection) is painful enough," said Chris Nelson, 18, a Sam Houston State student from Spring. "The chair would be adequate."

The students from Sam Houston, a local college, began arriving in droves after 11:15 p.m., less than an hour before Barefoot was to be given a fatal dose of chemicals. He was pronounced dead at 12:24 p.m.

Death penalty protesters were almost unseen. One, David Dunne, a Bexar County adult probation officer, said he opposed the death penalty and debated the issue quietly in the street near the prison.

In Austin, members of a group against capital punishment held a candlelight vigil early today on the steps of the Capitol for Barefoot.

About 50 members of Austin's Amnesty International waited in silence with candles in hand until word came that Barefoot had been executed.

Barefoot died by lethal injection for the Aug. 7, 1978 killing of Harker Heights police officer Carl LeVin.

Rita Williamson, a charter member of the Austin group, said her group is opposed to cruel and unjust punishment.

"Capital punishment is not the only form of punishment," Ms. Williamson said. "Our government officials are getting away with it because the public thinks it's right. It's an emotional issue."

Ms. Williamson said her group is a watch dog for human rights. The vigil waiting marked the fourth time the Austin group has gathered on the Capitol steps during scheduled executions to show their opposition to capital punishment.

The public right now is thinking about the death penalty more seriously and considering it morally and ethically since there's been more executions, she said.

Several hours before members of Amnesty International met, the Capitol steps were occupied by another group which memorialized officer LeVin and the other 35 police officers who have been killed while on duty during the past six months.

"We are not here to support or endorse Barefoot's execution but to honor LeVin," said R.L. Stearns, state chairman of the 120-member People Against Violent Crime. "Our group's purpose is to provide aid to families and to try to make improvements in the criminal justice system to protect society."

Nell Myers, founder of the group, said, "Our group's first priority is to gain equal rights for victims." She said she founded the group two years ago after her 20-year-old daughter was raped and murdered in June 1979.

About 30 group members were present including two widows of law enforcement officers, co-founders of Texans For Victims' Rights. Members of LeVin's family were not in attendance.

Shirley Barrett, secretary and co-founder of Texans for Victims' Rights, said she supported the death penalty even before her policeman husband was stabbed and killed in Waco in 1978.

"The death penalty is punishment for the crime that's committed," she said. Her husband's assailant received the death penalty but the sentence was overturned by a 1982 Supreme Court ruling in which suspects have a right to remain silent.

Neighbors helped to protect immune-deficient youngster

HOUSTON (AP) — The love and care of neighbors and friends helped prolong the life of David, the young boy who spent most of his life inside a plastic sterile bubble to protect him from the germs his body couldn't fight.

David, whose last name was never revealed, was born without natural immunity against disease and lived in a plastic bubble filled with sterile air. He died last February, just 15 days after a serious illness forced doctors to remove him from his bubble.

In a copyright story published in the Houston Chronicle Monday, David's parents said friends provided the heat and power needed to keep David safe and comfortable in his bubble when bad weather or mechanical failures arose.

The bubble, built into the dining room of the family's Conroe home, required a constant flow of filtered air. David's parents said they constantly feared a power failure that would cause the air pumps to stop.

If the air flow was stopped for too long a period, David would have to be taken from the bubble and face the threat of infection from outside world.

The boy's parents, David Sr. and Carol Ann, set up a system to guard against an electricity outage. They had a main auxiliary generator, then a series of back-ups.

But even this system failed when Hurricane Alicia roared into Houston in August 1983.

The storm knocked out power over a wide area and blocked streets with fallen trees. The reserve generators failed, one by one, and the air flow stopped.

"We capped David off in one little bubble and he stayed there for hours," the boy's father remembers. "After a while, it was getting critical."

But the family was trapped. "We couldn't transport David either way (south or north). We couldn't get to Conroe or to Houston. The trees were all down," David Sr. added.

"It was beginning to get uncomfortable for David," said Carol Ann. "The air circulation was weak. He was perspiring heavily. He could not have sustained himself in that one bubble for much longer."

A radio appeal was broadcast and soon, two big trucks pulled into the family's front yard. Connections were made and power surged to the pumps. For two days, the trucks stayed there, keeping air flowing for that small boy.

"I guess if they hadn't given us their generators, they could have supplied their own homes with electricity. They could have saved their own freezers. But they didn't. They gave it to us," said Carol Ann.

Hurricane Alicia wasn't the only close brush, but the family always had friends who were ready to help.

"I've had periodic champions," said Carol Ann. Once, the family furnace failed on a cold night. A neighbor who had the same type of furnace dismantled his heater and brought the right part needed to fix the furnace at David's house.

"He fixed ours just so David would be warm," David Sr. recalled.

David lived in the bubble from his birth, Sept. 21, 1971, until last February. Doctors placed him in a bubble at a Houston hospital and the boy received a bone marrow transplant. It was hoped the transplant would give him an immune system. Instead, a serious illness developed.

The boy helped doctors break the seal on his hospital bubble and he was taken to an isolation room. For the first time, his family could hold him outside the bubble, although they still had to wear surgical gloves.

David's condition worsened and, after just 15 days of freedom from the bubble, the boy died.

There was an outpouring of sorrow for David.

"We had 12 years with David, virtually unbothered and undisturbed," said the boy's mother, Carol Ann. "God gave us 12 years."

Pinochet threatens martial law

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) — President Augusto Pinochet mobilized thousands of police and soldiers, banished 140 people to a remote fishing town and threatened to impose a state of siege to counter a leftist-led protest against his military regime.

On Monday, two teen-aged boys were seriously wounded and 116 people arrested, including five prominent leftists, on the first day of a two-day protest by a Communist-Socialist coalition. The Catholic human rights agency Solidarity reported 25 injured.

The protest was preceded by 18 scattered bomb blasts that caused no casualties.

Early today, police held positions along major thoroughfares to keep them open for morning commuter traffic. Army units patrolled subway stations, bus depots and rail bridges.

The opposition was divided, with the mainstream unions, independent truckers, shopowners and the main opposition Democratic Alliance, a coalition led of six non-Marxist parties, refusing to support the leftists' call for a national strike.

The rallies, centered in Santiago but also undertaken in the Pacific coast city of Valparaiso, were contained by the weekend arrest of dissident leaders and the largest mobilization of government security forces in Santiago since August 1983. Pinochet also broadened censorship of the national press.

Police dispersed leftists in Santiago's main square, on several university campuses and at flaming street barricades set up after dark in scores of working class districts.

A 17-year-old student suffered abdominal wounds from an exploding device hurled by police at Catholic University in Valparaiso, witnesses said, and unknown gunmen shot an 18-year-old boy in the chest in Santiago.

Dissident labor leaders in the leftist-dominated National Workers Command had called a national strike to press for a return to democratic rule but failed to get rank-and-file support for the illegal action that could have cost workers their jobs.

Independent truckers and shopowners refused to go along because the strike lacked the backing of the Democratic Alliance.

All those groups had supported two major anti-government protests earlier this year, in which 14 people died. They backed away this time in opposition.

Student in Stephenville overcome deafness

By DOUG WINTERMUTE
Stephenville Empire-Tribune
STEPHENVILLE, Texas (AP) — When the announcer read the results of 1984 Stephenville High School Homecoming queen election, Yvette Crosby didn't hear her own name.

Instead, she looked down the row of other homecoming nominees to see which one of the girls would step forward to receive the crown.

Then Yvette's father, Larry, her escort, tapped her hand and told her she had won. She didn't hear her father either, but she asked him to repeat it, then burst into tears.

Yvette is deaf — the first-ever homecoming queen at SHS not to hear the announcement.

"He (her father) had to tell me three times that I had won," she said. The student body nominated 29 candidates, then voted on the top five. Dark-haired Yvette, who wears her hair long enough to cover the hearing aids she must wear when she drives, won by about 30 votes.

Besides being the first deaf homecoming queen at the high school of nearly 900 students, Yvette also holds the distinction of being the first deaf person to attend all twelve grades in the Stephenville Public School system.

But don't look for someone tagging along with Yvette in the classroom, using sign language to communicate the day's lessons. Yvette reads lips — she knows sign language but doesn't use it.

Yvette has been deaf since birth and in different schools since she was 14 months old.

"She attended a special school for the deaf in Dallas that didn't use sign language, but read lips and learned how to speak," said Yvette's mother, Pattie.

"The only other place we could have sent her would have been the school for the deaf in Austin," said Mrs. Crosby. "Most of them go to school there for 12 to 14 years and then get out and can't cope with the real world. I figured that if she was going to be in the real world, she needed to learn how."

And Yvette has learned how to cope in the real world. The only special arrangement she has at school is a person that attends three of her classes with her to help her take notes and explain things Yvette doesn't understand. Ida McAfee drives to Stephenville every day from DeLeon to help Yvette, and is paid by the state for her services.

But Yvette doesn't need much help. She ranks in the top five percent of her class academically and participates in extracurricular activities.

Yvette tries to live life normally, and seems successful.

"It's amazing how many students don't know she's deaf," said Yvette's boyfriend Brad Benne. He graduated from SHS last year and attends Tarleton State University in Stephenville.

"She isn't handicapped — she just doesn't hear well," said Brad. "That's how she will survive — she doesn't want people to know. She's just as normal as anybody else."

Although she is classified as profoundly deaf, the most severe classification of hearing loss, Yvette has a car and drives. The only requirements, in addition having a driver's license, are that her car have two outside mirrors and that she must wear two hearing aids.

Yvette is also a member of the Stingerette drill team. Yvette says she keeps time by counting and watching a captain who is always in front of her.

She has closed-captioned television on which she enjoys her favorite programs "Hotel" and "Dynasty." She likes to play volleyball, read romances, write, dance (she feels the beat) and "ride around."

Her deafness doesn't stop her social life, said Brad, who was introduced to Yvette by a mutual acquaintance. "I worked with her best friend, and Yvette came up to where we worked," said Brad. "We rode around that night for about 15 minutes, and I asked her, 'Can I call you tomorrow?' and she said 'Yes.' I didn't realize till later that if I did call her she wouldn't be able to hear me."

"She can communicate in person," said Brad, "but the telephone is her only drawback."

"It was hard at first, because she hadn't gone out with anybody before," said Brad. "When I first started dating her, I had to keep remembering to look at her (so she could read his lips). I felt like I had to learn a new language when I listened to her speak."

Yvette said other guys had asked her out, but she didn't go out with anybody before Brad.

The television blitz is on WASHINGTON (AP) — It's the bear vs. the red phone. The chanting Iranian students vs. the bombed Marine headquarters in Beirut. The man digging a hole vs. the welder on the job.

All of these scenes come from television advertisements aimed at attracting voters for President Reagan or Walter F. Mondale, his Democratic challenger.

Television spots for the presidential candidates will inundate the airwaves for the next 10 days as the campaigns wind up their multimillion-dollar advertising efforts.

The Reagan campaign says it will spend $25 million for advertising, more than half the $46 million total each campaign is allowed to spend. Mondale's people say they won't spend that much although they are not releasing their exact figure in advance. Industry sources say Mondale won't spend much less than Reagan.

The men have touched on many of the same issues — the economy, foreign policy and unemployment. But Reagan has tried to defend the past four years; Mondale has attacked it.

The Reagan ad that has drawn the most comment, according to Doug Watts, the campaign's media director, is the bear. "It's gotten the most cocktail talk," he said.

The ad shows a big bear wandering around the woods. "Some people say the bear is tame; others say he's vicious," says the ad. "Since no one can say who is right, isn't it smart to be as strong as the bear?"

The message is that the bear is the Soviet Union.

The advertisement was pulled off the air on Oct. 25 to make room for new advertisements, said Jim Travis, head of the Tuesday Team Inc., the campaign's advertising arm. Another Republican source, who asked to remain anonymous, said that some members of a test audience group apparently didn't understand the meaning of the ad.

Reagan uses pictures taken several years ago of chanting Iranian students burning an American flag around the time the U.S. Embassy in Tehran was seized to point out that America was "held in contempt by foreign nations" before he took office in 1980.

Now, he says, America is stronger, prouder.

BUSHMEN HAUTE COUTURE—Xakadio, right in both photos, and an unidentified friend display two forms of dress favored by the last of the South African Bushmen who live around Deception Pan, Botswana. The Bushmen are down to a few surviving groups, and their old ways are nearly gone. (AP Laserphoto)

People of short blanket diminishing

EDITOR'S NOTE — When white men first reached southern Africa, they found the Bushmen, an ancient people who lived in the wilds. But the Bushmen have been reduced to a few thousand now. They call themselves "the people of the short blanket."

By MORT ROSENBLUM
AP Special Correspondent

DECEPTION PAN, Botswana (AP) — Xakadio the Bushman dressed carefully for work. First, a wool baseball jersey, and a black tuxedo over that. Then the piece de resistance: huge round sunglasses of the sort favored by aging movie queens.

Xakadio is one of the 1,000 or so Bushmen left in the harsh, dry reaches of the Central Kalahari Desert. They are the last of the nomadic hunters and gatherers who were catapulted from the Stone Age to the Jet Age with no stops in between, and whose way of life is threatened with extinction.

Altogether, fewer than 60,000 Bushmen survive in pockets of southern Africa. Once numbering in the hundreds of thousands and occupying a third of the huge continent, they are but a shadow of populations dating back perhaps 23,000 years.

For 200 years after the Dutch settlers landed in South Africa in 1652, the diminutive Bushmen were systematically decimated. Today, politics, ecological disaster and social change threaten the Bushmen's two last reserves — in Botswana and South-West Africa, or Namibia.

Strapped into a Cessna aircraft one recent morning, Xakadio performed the duties of "gyro-Bushie," navigating by sight as Bruce Williamson, his ecologist boss, flew over the trackless Kalahari.

Every few minutes, Xakadio giggled excitedly and identified in sign language the game below: an undulating fist for ostrich; two fingers curved backward for eland; contorted digits, dipping rhythmically, for giraffe.

"I am happy in the bush, I know it well, and I am not afraid," Xakadio said through an interpreter. But, asked if he would do without the trappings of er-roaching modern civilization, he was equally emphatic: "No."

Generally short with yellowish skin, beardless faces that wrinkle quickly, and tightly kinked hair, Bushmen are routinely scorned and mistreated by other Africans. Some tribes call them subhuman. But they are matchless hunters, using arrows tipped with a homemade poison.

Bushmen, known for their rollicking humor, mimick each other, and strangers, and chat endlessly in a clicking, multi-toned language. But they take their plight seriously. In the Kalahari they call themselves, "the people of the short blanket."

Xakadio, now in his 40s or 50s —

"I was born before the war of Hitler" is the best he can do when asked his age — is dependent on a job, not easy to find. Otherwise, the options are few.

The huge Central Kalahari Game Reserve was established in 1961, not so much for the animals as for the 5,000 Bushmen who lived by hunting them with bows, arrows and stealth.

During long dry months, Bushmen can live for months sucking up water from beneath the dried-up streambeds through straws and storing it in ostrich egg shells. They trap spring hare and chase down antelope. They can tell an animal's age by its tracks.

But, pushed by drought and lured by an easier life, most Kalahari Bushmen have gravitated to "cattle posts," watering points outside the reserve where they tend herds for token pay and survival rations.

Those left in the reserve settle in villages where the government provides schools, clinics, wells and erratic food rations, but no work.

"We will go back to the bush when the rains come, and we can find game and water," declared Tuelo Skalabui, chief of Xade, a village of 500 Bushmen where pastimes range from drinking homemade beer to lounging.

But outsiders who study the Bushmen are not so sure.

Professor Phillip Tobias of Johannesburg's Witwatersrand University has estimated that no Bushmen hunter-gatherers will be left in the next century.

"They are losing their customs, and following other people's cultures," says Gaolathe Thupe, a Botswana teacher at Xade. "In 10 years time, they will be just like the other tribes in Botswana."

Worse, ecologists and sociologists fear, the intense pressure for more grazing land is tempting the government to open up to cattle vast stretches of reserve land the Bushmen no longer use.

Bushmen are encouraged to leave the land and take jobs or live as herders.

"That would be the end of the Kalahari, for the Bushmen, the wildlife, and then the cattle," says Williamson, a South African scientist working for the Frankfurt Zoological Society of West Germany.

"As it is, their way is going fast," he adds. "They are caught between the bush and the new way, educating their children. They want both. It's sad, really."

Anthropologists say old Bushmen ways of life were still widespread a generation ago, often protected by governments which considered them little more than curiosities.

In 1941, South African Minister for Native Affairs Denys Reitz told Parliament:

"It would be a biological crime if we allowed such a peculiar race to die out, because it is a race which looks more like a baboon than a baboon itself does... We look upon them as part of the fauna of the country."

Now, say some experts on Bushmen, change is inevitable.

Already, Bushmen artisans are reserving for tourists much of their talents at fashioning weapons and skin clothing.

"This stuff? They just do it for us," remarked a shopkeeper in Maun, north of the Central Kalahari. "When they make an arrow quiver for themselves, they use polyvinyl chloride. It lasts longer."

Japan expanding production

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States for years has pushed, with some success, for bigger Japanese meat import quotas so that American producers can have a larger piece of the action.

But there is another side to the situation that has to do with the way Japanese farmers produce beef, an expensive system that some believe could change. And if that happens, there may be some ripples in the U.S. trade flow to that lucrative Asian market.

Japan, in recent decades, has been the No. 1 foreign customer of American farmers, particularly as a buyer of grain and soybeans to supply its own growing livestock industry.

The United States has urged Japan to liberalize its restrictive system of import quotas and other barriers, which serve to dampen shipments of other important food items such as citrus and high-grade beef. Some improvements were announced earlier this year.

Meanwhile, according to reports from Tokyo, Japan is proceeding with plans to expand its own high-grade beef production. That could mean greater demand for U.S. feed — and perhaps less dependence on foreign beef.

Shinjiro Yamamura, Japan's minister of agriculture, has given the go-ahead for a five-year project to build the country's biggest cattle operation in Hokkaido.

Horned lizards are subject of study

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — Every morning on his way to school, Wade Sherbrooke stops and collects a jar or two of ants.

He takes the ants to a room in the University of Arizona biological sciences west building and feeds them to the 50 or so horned lizards he keeps there.

Sherbrooke doesn't know how many ants each lizard eats because he's never bothered to count them. But that's one of very few things he doesn't know about horned lizards.

He's been studying the creatures that most people call horny toads since 1976.

Sherbrooke plans to parlay his scientific research into a doctorate in general biology. He has written a book — "Horned Lizards: Unique Reptiles of Western North America" — and several articles about horned lizards.

Biology professor Joseph Bagnara, who is supervising the doctoral project, said Sherbrooke was a "significant young investigator" and "one of the few people in the country who's doing work on horned lizards."

His interest in lizard lore led him to the 44th Annual Coalinga (Calif.) Horned Toad Derby last spring to watch the lizard races. It also has lured him into museums across the Southwest in search of prehistoric depictions of the lizards.

"In all the mythology, no one regards them (horned lizards) as unfriendly; they regard them as powerful," Sherbrooke said.

Sherbrooke said that earlier this century thousands of horned lizards were being shipped all over the world as curios. Horned lizards are now protected and collectors must obtain a permit from the Arizona Game and Fish Department to collect one.

Sherbrooke said the docile creatures were usually welcome in desert gardens because they eat ants, crickets and other insects. But he added that people who poison the insects might be inadvertently killing horned lizards.

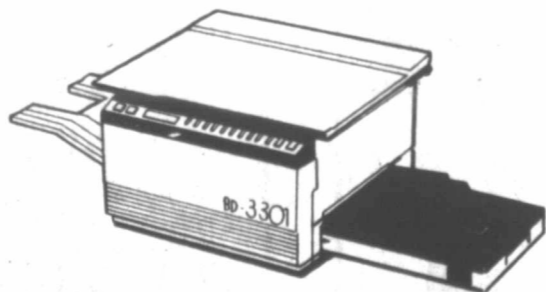

Sherbrooke, a native of Staten Island, N.Y., said his interest in reptiles had begun in high school after he had worked as a volunteer in the Staten Island Zoo snake house.

From 1971 to 1980 he was with the UofA Office of Arid Lands jobaja project on the San Carlos Apache Reservation. He began studying horned lizards on the reservation "because I was curious."

NEW SOLAR CELL—It looks a bit like a flashlight reflector, but it's really a new kind of solar cell collector developed by TRW engineers in Redondo Beach, Calif. Using miniaturized cassegrainian concentrator elements and gallium arsenide photovoltaic material, the new design can provide smaller solar arrays for spacecraft power and may reduce life-cycle costs by as much as 30 percent, the company said. Only 2.5 inches in diameter, each cell produces .43 watts of power. (AP Laserphoto)

Father of 12 goes for doctorate in math

By PHYLLISMENSING
Associated Press Writer
PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Joe Jones was a 49-year-old black high school dropout who couldn't invert a fraction. But the unemployed father of 12 and grandfather of seven decided to get a Ph.D. degree in math.

He said he has never doubted that he could do it since he made up his mind four years ago.

"I'm not into daydreams, understand?" Jones said. "If you really want something and stick to it long enough, I think you can do it."

Today, at 53, Jones holds a bachelor's degree in computer math from the University of Pennsylvania. He has begun work on his master's degree and next fall he plans to start work on that Ph.D.

"Based on his background — he had been out of school at least 20 years — we wouldn't have predicted he'd make it," said Valerie Cade, who met Jones in 1981 as director of PennCap, short for Pennsylvania Commonwealth Achievement Plan for bright but financially disadvantaged students.

The program, funded by the state and the university, provides tutoring, counseling and support services to 150 undergraduate students who have met Penn's admission requirements but, because of their financial background, may not have had college preparation courses.

"By and large, these students are usually the top students in their high schools," said PennCap Associate Director Sharon Harris. "Joe was the oldest student we've ever had, in nine years."

Ms. Cade, now an assistant associate provost at the school, remembered Jones' determination. "He just said, 'I'm going to succeed. I've got a lot of motivation but I need help with the skills."

"We suggested services like tutoring and career advisers. He used the counselors and tutors for about six months — at which time we got him to be a tutor and a counselor."

As a child, Jones, the oldest of eight children, had dreamed of being a doctor. But he had to drop out of high school when he was 17 to help support his family.

He worked in construction, on the railroad, served in the Army and tended bar. For 20 years he was a custom truck maker, then a welder, a spray painter and an assembly line worker. But he hung on to his dream of going back to school.

"I used to cross the Penn campus on my way to work every day," he recalled. "I made up my mind that some day, I would go there."

In 1979, he was laid off from his welding job when the plant at which he worked closed down. He decided it was time to make his dream come true.

"I sat down and talked to my wife," he said. "There were so many people with the skills I had getting laid off. I decided to go for it, and she said 'Go ahead.' She's my best friend, understand."

Vickie Jones said she had no doubts her husband would make it, even though it would mean long hours of studying and a tighter budget.

"If he wants to do something, he can do it," she said. "We've had time together, and we'll have time together, again."

Jones passed the high school equivalency test and enrolled at Community College of Philadelphia, where he took all the math courses he could.

Cooke County family honored for century on the land

By BECKY BEELER
Gainesville Daily Register

DEXTER, Texas (AP) — The crape myrtle is still alive, having grown several feet higher and wider through the decades. The remnants of the old well, now filled with rocks, have become a favorite hiding place for one sly rabbit often chased by the family dogs, and the storm cellar is still leaking after all these years.

Virgil and Louise Welch worried that last year's hard winter would at last kill off the almost century-old East Indian shrub, but the crape myrtle, like Louise's family homestead, has survived.

"I guess that's what makes it so interesting, that one piece of land has stayed so long in a family," Virgil said.

Virgil and Louise and their son, Walter Dee Welch, and his family are among 92 property-owning families in the state whose land will be honored by the State Department of Agriculture and Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower for "maintaining continuous agricultural production for a century or more."

The Welch family are the only Cooke County family to be honored this year by the Texas Family Land Heritage Program. Since the program's beginning in 1974, the state has registered 1,821 farms and ranches. Cooke County communities have been home to about 20 of these farms and ranches.

The 169.77 acres of honored property belonging to the Welch family has a history dating back to the 1800s. A major piece of the land, about 157 acres, was purchased by Louise's great-grandfather, Isham Lamb, from J.M. Lindsay Feb. 25, 1870. Great-grandfather Lamb purchased the remaining 12.77 acres from Lindsay on March 28, 1874.

Louise still remembers playing in one of the huge apple trees that was once a part of her great-grandfather's orchard. The orchard is now only remembered by Louise (and the four remaining pear trees that stand northwest of Virgil's and Louise's home, if they remember such things.)

Louise's grandfather, a corn farmer, is credited with holding the family farm together. After the land passed on to him and his brothers and sisters, he bought out his siblings and added another stretch of land just south of the original property. Grandfather Lamb's purchase brought the family acreage to 352 acres.

Louise and her sister were born in a house built by her grandparents, D. and Elizabeth Lamb. The home was made of hand-hewn oak logs that were held together with clay and wooden spikes.

An 1890 photograph of Louise's grandparents shows the family in the process of adding siding and a new roof to the home. Pictured in front of the logs is the same old crape myrtle bush, then in its infancy.

Virgil said the family spent years wondering before a professional photographer explained to them why the family dog appeared as twins in the picture.

The dog — or dogs as depicted in the photograph — were a product of 1890 technology. Everybody but the dog knew to stand still for the picture. While the shutter was standing open for the correct time exposure, "Spot" moved and a "ghost dog" or double image of the pooch appeared on the print.

Claude and Ola Lamb, Louise's parents, inherited the land and the log house from Grandfather and Grandmother Lamb.

Ola was a lover of flowers. The yard surrounding her log home was either filled with flowers or "swept clean" in the areas where flowers would not grow, Louise recalls.

For her father, it was his fields — corn, cotton, wheat, hay, oats and peanuts.

A believer in the tried-and-true methods of farming, her father at one time finally decided to trade his two mules, Kate and Jude, on a tractor, Louise said. He made the deal with Gainesville's Schad and Pulte, but after a worrisome night returned the next morning and traded back.

"He just wasn't convinced the tractor could do the job," Virgil said, adding that Lamb was eventually won over to farming with a tractor.

Much of the family house was torn down when Louise's sister, Jean, needed the timber to build a new home in Whitesboro, Texas. When Virgil and Louise returned to Dexter to make a home on the family property they tore down the remaining log walls that had been left to sway in the wind.

Virgil and Louise had left Dexter in 1955 for El Paso. Between 1955 and 1976 they lived in El Paso and Hobbs, N.M., working as part-time cattle raisers and full-time teachers.

The couple retired in 1976 and made the decision to return.

"We didn't retire to rest, we retired to go to work," Virgil said.

And work they did. They moved back to the north corner of the family property that had become Louise's after the deaths of her mother and father and set about the task of building a home in what Virgil describes as a "jungle."

"It was just like homesteading new land," Virgil said.

Virgil and Louise built their new stone and brick home about 30 yards from the sight of the old log house.

Dear Abby

Gay lovers are legal strangers if commitment isn't on paper

By Abigail Van Buren
© 1984 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: You recently published a letter from "Heartbroken," a gay man whose lover of 14 years had recently died. The problem he presented was that his lover's family had stripped his home and later sold the items at a garage sale. You pointed out that although he had given the family permission to take "a few mementos," since they had clearly taken advantage of his grief-stricken state, he could probably sue. You rightly pointed out that such a suit would be costly, painful and possibly futile.

I write to amplify your advice. Unless "Heartbroken's" lover left a will, his parents were probably legally entitled to everything the deceased lover owned, regardless of how long the two of them lived together. "Heartbroken" had no legal claim whatsoever on any of his lover's possessions.

The parallel legally is not between a gay "married" couple and a heterosexual married couple, but rather between the gay couple and an unmarried straight couple. Gay people, no matter what the depth of their commitment to each other, cannot legally be married in any state of the union. However, a gay couple can, with the help of a sensitive attorney, legally duplicate marital arrangements in every state.

I cannot emphasize strongly enough the importance of a gay couple (or an unmarried straight couple, for that matter) securing competent legal advice to avoid the situation encountered by "Heartbroken." I have seen a situation in which two men bought a house together after having had a relationship of 15 years. Upon the death of one of the men, his family came in and forced the surviving partner to sell his home to settle the estate. The surviving partner lost not only his lifemate, but also his home and one-half of all the things that he and his lover had accumulated over the years. Such instances are not uncommon.

I hope that this information is of some value to you and your readers. You should also be aware that the Gay and Lesbian Advocates & Defenders Inc. (Two Park Square, Suite 300, Boston, Mass. 02116) publishes a National Lesbian and Gay Attorneys' Referral Directory ($10), and most local affiliates of the American Civil Liberties Union can give referrals to sympathetic attorneys.

R. JAMES KELLOGG,
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW,

DEAR MR. KELLOGG: Thank you for some valuable legal information. Because you cared enough to write, many will benefit from your wise counsel.

DEAR ABBY: I keep getting books in the mail from a book club in Iowa. I do not belong to it or any other book club.

Some of their books are very heavy, and I live too far from the post office to walk there and carry those books. Abby, I have no car and I am 84 years old.

I keep getting bills for these books, some of which are $14 and up. Isn't this some kind of mail fraud?

Please tell me what my rights are.

DEAR WORRIED: You are under no obligation to pay for—or return—any unsolicited material. Ignore the bills.

Simply write REFUSED on the package and give it to your postman. Then write (or call) your local postmaster immediately and tell him exactly what you have told me.

(Do you hate to write letters because you don't know what to say? Thank you notes, sympathy letters, congratulations, how to decline and accept invitations and how to write an interesting letter are included in Abby's booklet, "How to Write Letters for All Occasions." Send your name and address clearly printed with a check or money order for $2.50 (this includes postage) to: Dear Abby, Letter Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

Here's the Answer

Q. — One of our window sills is beginning to rot. We know it was caused by a constantly wet sill in certain kinds of weather when there was condensation on the window pane. We have corrected that situation by installing a storm window there, but now we have a window sill in bad condition. Do we have to replace the sill or can the present one be saved?

A. — If the wood is beginning to rot, you can sometimes prevent the spread of the rot by filling holes in the sill with an epoxy resin sold by boating dealers, usually located near a lake or some other body of water where boats are used. Use a portable electric drill and make holes in the sill every few inches apart, about 3/8ths of an inch or a quarter-inch in diameter. Fill the drilled holes with the epoxy resin, following the directions on the container. This will solidify the sill to a great extent and prevent any extension of the rot. Once you are satisfied the rot has been arrested, you can paint or otherwise finish the sill.

Q. — We are purchasing wall-to-wall carpeting, and we have to do some measuring to see how much we need. The charges are by the square yard, but we aren't quite sure how to determine how many square yards there are in the room. What is the formula for that?

A. — Measure the room carefully, leaning a little bit to the generous side rather than the skimpy side. Multiply the length of the room by the width in feet. When you get the result, divide it by nine

Tips on safety seats

Every year more than 1,000 children younger than five years old die from injuries resulting from highway accidents, reports the Texas Agricultural Extension Home Economics Program.

Tens of thousands more are injured. Small children are top heavy and have softer bones so injuries from falls or tumbles in a moving car can happen easily.

Young children should not be allowed to stand in a car seat. They should sit with their seat and shoulder harness secured in case the car stops suddenly. Several restraints are available for children, including infant carriers, harness restraints, harnessed wrap-around seats and seats with padded surfaces in front.

Lightweight plastic infant carriers used for feeding are not designed to be used as car seats since they lack vital restraints.

When holding a child in the arms or lap, or allow the child to stand on the seat, the child's life is at risk. When using a child's car seat, double check to be sure that all belts are fastened. Even if the baby looks like an astronaut being prepared for blast off, make sure the child is safe.

Last, but no less important, set a good example for children by always using a seat belt.

and you will have the square yardage of the room. —

Q. — I have never used shellac, but have been told it is easy to use. I have a project coming in which I would like to try it. Any tips?

Q. — Don't use it on a day when there is high humidity unless you are sure there is very low humidity in the area where you are working. Don't use shellac that is more than six or eight months old. It is very rare that shellac should be used as is. It should be thinned with denatured alcohol. The first time you use it, make a mixture of half shellac, half denatured alcohol. Later on, you will find which mixtures are best for which purposes. It is much better to apply three or four thin coats than a single thick one. Shellac can be applied with a brush that is kept only for shellac or it can be put on with a clean cloth you are sure is lintless. Shellac makes a fairly clear finish, but if you want a slightly orange shade, use orange shellac. The clear finish type is called white shellac, although it really isn't white as we know it.

(The techniques of using shellac, varnish, lacquer, stain, bleach, remover, etc., are detailed in Andy Lang's booklet, "Wood Finishing in the Home," which can be obtained by sending 50 cents and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to Know-How, P. O. Box 477, Huntington, NY 11743. Questions of general interest will be answered in the column.)

- (5) Loss of sleep
- (6) Stiffness in the back
- (7) Pain between the shoulders
- (8) Stiffness or pain in lower back
- (9) Numbness or pain in the legs.

Book lists ways to care for valuable artifacts

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

You've received a set of valuable wine goblets as part of an inheritance and you're wondering how to take care of them.

Or, perhaps, it's a collection of books in fine leather bindings, a hand-lettered family tree on parchment, or a family Bible. Maybe you live in an old home with the original windows and woodwork which are beginning to look the worse for wear.

The questions are of many different types. What they have in common is a need for disinterested advice on a subject involving historic preservation. You can't afford to make a mistake because doing so would greatly reduce the value of the objects in question.

It has been said that more

Americans are taking a personal interest in some aspect of history — their own or someone else's — than ever before. As a result, more people are seeking authoritative answers to questions once asked only by individuals such as museum conservators.

One possible source of guidance is the American Association for State and Local History. The nonprofit, Nashville, Tenn.-based association has been providing assistance to museums and local historic restorations since 1940. According to Betty Elder, director of publications, a growing number of persons among the general public have been ordering the technical leaflets offered on a variety of subjects.

Among the publications is one on the care and display of old glass, while others cover topics such as rejuvenating and caring for old leather objects, caring for old textiles, how to arrest wood deterioration in old houses, and even how to organize a large slide collection, no matter what the subject, so you can retrieve the slide you want quickly and efficiently.

Though written for museum personnel, most of these publications and others on related topics contain information of interest to consumers with a special collection.

In "Care and Display of Glass Collections" by Barbara Rottenberg, there is a variety of suggestions for displaying and caring for glass in a home. She notes that though glass is chemically resistant to staining and durable, provided it isn't dropped or chipped, it is subject to sudden shattering, especially if it has deteriorated. Possible causes of deterioration include excess heat, light or moisture, or exposure to repeated sudden changes in temperature and humidity.

She advises keeping glass away from radiators, heating outlets and air conditioners, and out of the way of sharp changes in temperature and strong sunlight. (Storing glass in a closed glass-fronted cabinet which admits a great deal of sunlight, for example, can raise the interior temperature to a surprising extent, she said.)

A tip for improving the sparkle of glass is to add a small amount of

2-to-5 percent ammonia to a final rinse. However, don't use ammonia if glass has surface deterioration or any metallic decoration, she adds.

To minimize chances of breakage, keep glass objects well apart from one another. Make sure the shelf on which they rest is truly horizontal. If off only a few degrees, the shelf is dangerous because the glass object will slide with any vibration, eventually ending up against the front of a closed case or perhaps on the floor.

One way to avoid such a danger is to place a small dab of hot wax at the front edge of the object on the shelf. As it hardens, it will keep the piece in place and safeguard it from minor jars.

"Conservation of Metals," by Harold L. Peterson offers advice on caring for old silver and other types of metals. Don't, for example, use soap or phosphate-based detergent on old silver because soap will dull the silver while phosphate detergents will leave a stain.

The publication advises avoiding most commercial silver polishes on old silver, categorizing them as too harsh. In addition, methods are detailed for keeping copper, brass and bronze in good condition and for dealing with corrosion found in ferrous metals.

Besides the technical leaflets, the association publishes books on subjects dealing with conservation, as well as materials offering guidance to those seeking information about a historic home or neighborhood.

For a copy of the association's publications, request "Time Machines: The World of Living History." The address is 708 Berry Road, Nashville, TN 37204.

Designer tips for redecorating the home

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

Everyone knows designers can create beautiful interiors — given a large budget and clients with good taste. But what help can designers provide for the average individual who is planning to do his or her own decorating?

Several designers offered tips to make the decorating process easier.

Milo Baughman, furniture designer associated with Thayer Coggin in High Point, N.C., notes that "most people buy furniture to please their neighbors and friends. If they feel it would be risky to buy modern furniture, for example, they may suppress their own inclinations and go with the tried and true. I think people should have the courage of their convictions."

"Second, have a plan so you know where you want to end up. If you are just starting out to furnish a home, make a three-to-five-year plan and then buy good things, one piece at a time. Take your time to find what you really like."

"As a designer of modern furniture, I would selfishly add: Don't be afraid of innovative designs if you like them."

"Use color comfortably regardless of the trends; don't pay too much attention to what fashion dictates," says Bebe Winkler, a New York designer.

"When I meet new clients, the first thing I do is to determine their color preferences. I always have a selection of color sources with me, such as laminate chips or paint selection charts and sometimes even a box of assorted fabric cuttings in a wide range of colors.

"My clients pick and choose colors that appeal to them from these sources and in no time I have in my hand a deck of color cards. In my final presentation for their home, the colors they have selected are incorporated into the total design."

"Color truly has a psychological effect on people. Therefore it should reflect their lives. A scarlet living room is a great choice for a very vivacious client who loves glamorous evening entertaining. Soft colors work better for clients who need a serene retreat at the close of their hectic business day."

Whatever your color preferences, color is an important component in every room and should be one of your first considerations, according to the designer.

Making decorating choices is easier if you can visualize what your completed room will look like from swatches and samples, says designer Jay Spectre.

Many individuals have a great deal of trouble imagining how a completed room will look. "For example," he says, "they'll look at a patterned fabric sample and forget that this is only going to be one element in the room. They tend to imagine a room with only that pattern in it."

To develop the ability to visualize, he suggests making a practice of studying magazine pictures of rooms, zeroing in on those you like and then examining how the individual elements are put together.

As a designer for 30 years, Spectre already has a pretty clear idea of what is available and what he likes. But when he bought his "dream house" in the country recently, he found it rather difficult to commit himself to decorating choices.

He wanted to do justice to the house that he refers to as an "architectural masterpiece" and he realized that "what I do for myself is a kind of report card on my skill as a decorator." To overcome his anxieties, he pretended he was doing the job for someone else.

"When you want to experiment with changing your environment, start with the upholstered furniture," suggests John Mascheroni, a furniture designer in New York. A change of upholstery fabric can create a new ambience without necessarily committing yourself to the new look if it turns out you don't like it.

You can also use the reupholstering job as a subtle change, initiating a living room redecoration on the installment plan. A reasonable order to adopt would be to change upholstery first, then change accessories; then replace occasional furniture with other pieces in the new style. Finally, change the wood "case" pieces, if necessary.

If you select classic wood furniture in good woods, you may be able to change the look of your room many times without having to replace the expensive wood pieces, says Mascheroni.

If you like to experiment, the designer suggests choosing a sofa shape that is relatively simple and not too extreme. A sofa or a chair is a kind of mannequin for the fabric, just as the body is the form upon which clothing is placed.

You can clothe your body in 18th century or 20th century garb, experiencing and enjoying the contrasts. You can do the same thing with your sofa, says Mascheroni.

To keep your home fresh and interesting, emulate the Japanese who change the art objects in their rooms frequently so they never get tired of looking at them, says Vicki Wenger, a Washington, D.C., interior designer.

Summer to her means lightening the decor. "It's a chance to put things away, like rugs and draperies." She suggests slip covering furniture and taking away at least half the accumulated accessories.

Select a layered window covering so that when summer comes you can remove the outer layer. Then in winter it is time to bring back the darker more textured fabrics and objects.

Summer's treasures — baskets and bamboo blinds — are put away

Check wood furniture for quality

CHICAGO (AP) — Indulge your own taste when it comes to style in wood furniture. But regardless of the style you select, check carefully to make sure of quality before you buy.

The American Furniture Manufacturers Association offers some clues that can help you make a wise choice.

Examine all furniture with the hand as well as the eye. Inspect the finish for overall smoothness with no rough areas suggesting inadequate sanding. Look for a clear, deep and rich finish and for uniformity of color and similar grain patterns with expert matching of veneers.

Operate all moving parts to be sure they function satisfactorily. This includes table leaves, drop lids, flip tops, adjustable shelves, trays, doors and drawers. Make sure that glass panels, grillwork, decorative trim and lights are carefully installed and that lights are convenient to switch on and off.

Check interior storage areas to make sure they are satisfactory. The back panel should be inset and screwed into place instead of nailed or stapled. Check to see if tall pieces such as china cabinets and wall units have levelers to compensate for uneven floors.

Drawers should fit snugly in their frames. Open and close them to see if they move effortlessly. Remove a drawer and examine it as well as the interior of the piece. The best drawers have wood sides and back panels about a half-inch thick, joined by sturdy close fitting joints, preferably dovetailed. Smooth finished drawer interiors help prevent fabric snags.

Drawer bottoms should be rigid. Hardware should have no rough edges and be bolted onto the piece from the inside. Beware of drawers that seem unusually small, lightweight or that are nailed or stapled together and have poorly secured hardware.

The interior of the furniture should reveal good materials and workmanship with smooth sanded surfaces. Excess glue should be removed; corner blocks should be glued and screwed into place. Dust panels between the drawers are a sign of quality and so are double dowel or mortise and tenon joints.

Hangtags and price tags reveal much about construction and quality. In traditional furniture, signs of quality include extensive use of solid wood, intricate carving, heavily shaped moldings, exotic veneer inlays and deep patina finishes. These steps require more expertise, handwork and additional steps that add dollars to the final cost.

Furniture without these extras can also be well-made and provide good wear at a lower price. The type of wood or veneer is another factor in price, but not necessarily in quality. Imported mahogany and olive ash burl veneers, for example, cost more than domestic pecan.

Seahawks shut out Chargers

SAN DIEGO (AP) — In some other season, Seattle's 7-2 record might place the Seahawks atop the AFC West standings. It certainly would put them in commanding position to gain a National Football League playoff berth.

This year, 7-2 is good for only a second-place tie in the rugged division, and Seattle's 24-0 manhandling of San Diego on Monday night was needed simply to keep pace of its peers.

"We've still got some things to do, and some more games left in the season to do them," said quarterback Dave Krieg, who threw for 282 yards and connected with Steve Largent for three touchdowns. "Seven-and-two in this division doesn't assure you of anything."

Seattle remains tied with the Los Angeles Raiders, one game behind front-running Denver in the division. The Seahawks play the Raiders once more and still have two games left with Denver.

Seattle sacked San Diego quarterback Dan Fouts six times for 47 yards in losses and forced the Chargers into four turnovers. It was reminiscent of the teams' first meeting this year, when San Diego coughed up the ball eight times in a 31-17 loss.

"We just didn't execute the way we should," wide receiver Charlie Joiner said. "It was pretty much the same thing (as last time). They play good defense and are very good on special teams.

"Those things happen. We keep saying, 'We have to rebound, we have to rebound,' and we've just got to keep saying it until we do."

The Chargers, playing without injured receivers Kellen Winslow and Wes Chandler and using limping tight ends Pete Holohan and Eric Sievers sparingly, suffered their first shutout since a 7-0 loss to Denver five years ago. San Diego netted 201 total yards, less than half its average.

Fouts was intercepted twice and lost a fumble and running back

Lionel James was picked off on an attempted flea-flicker. All three interceptions were made by Kenny Easley, whose feat set a team record.

"There's not much to say," San Diego Coach Don Coryell said. "All of us are embarrassed we played as poorly as we did. All we can look forward to is getting everybody pieced back together and be a spoiler."

Coryell had acknowledged last week that his team needed to beat the Seahawks to retain any chance of making post-season play.

Golf course meeting scheduled

A meeting of the Pampa Public Golf Association is scheduled for 7 p.m. Thursday at Lovett Memorial Library. Purpose of the meeting is to discuss the fund-raising program for the proposed public golf course and to accept final Charter Club memberships at the current $250 fee. After Nov. 1, the fee will be raised to $275.

The meeting had been originally set for tonight, but it was changed to Thursday night because a meeting place could not be found.

Association president Buddy Epperson said persons interested in helping with fund raising are urged to attend the meeting. "We'll also discuss the construction activities of the course," Epperson said. "Anyone interested in becoming a charter member should also attend the meeting."

Epperson said most of the donations for the estimated $1.3 million, 18-hole course are coming from the private sector, including many from out of town.

Epperson said the Association's board of directors are putting together a package to present later to the industrial and business sector.

"We hope to hit our solicitation program heavier in the coming weeks," Epperson added.

Volunteer labor and equipment will be used to build the course and construction will begin as soon as pledges numbering 75 percent of the total cost is reached.

The course will be owned by Gray County, making all contributions tax-deductible.

Contributions can be made by writing a check to the Gray County Treasurer and designating it for the Public Golf Course. Contributions can be mailed to "Gray County Treasurer, P.O. Box 976, Pampa, Tex. 79065."

Epperson can be contacted in the evenings at 669-6291 for more information on the public course project. Fund-raising chairman is John McGuire and he can be contacted at 665-3031 (home) or 665-8762 (office).

Malone to start as Steelers quarterback

PITTSBURGH (AP) — For the first time in a month, the Pittsburgh Steelers don't have their weekly quarterback controversy.

Pittsburgh Coach Chuck Noll, in an upbeat mood Monday following a 35-10 demolition of the Atlanta Falcons, said Mark Malone will start next Sunday for the second week in a row, against the Houston Oilers.

Malone directed the Steelers' 20-17 upset of the San Francisco 49ers on Oct. 14, his first start in three years, but found himself back on the bench a week later when the Steelers lost to the Indianapolis Colts with David Woodley at quarterback.

Malone was back on the field and Woodley was back on the bench with a bad leg Sunday against the Falcons, who succumbed to three Malone touchdown passes and an alert Steeler defense that forced three turnovers.

Noll said his decision to start Malone isn't a slap at Woodley, who reinjured his right leg in warmups Sunday and isn't ready to practice yet.

Tiger League football roundup

The Colts shut out the Packers, 20-0, in Tiger League football tournament action Monday night and will meet the Raiders at 6:30 p.m. tonight for the championship.

Scoring touchdowns for the Colts were Phil Sexton, Cedric Welborn and Marlo Payne. Sexton and Kevin Marak had one extra point each. Defensive standouts for the Colts were Steve Sanders, Jimmy Mayberry, Tony Bybee, Brian Ellis and Phil Sexton.

Michael Ross recovered a fumble for the Colts.

Defensive standouts for the Packers were Chris Howard, Guy Savage, Cade Phillips and Joseph Yurich, according to coach Dennis Kuepfer.

The Colts will have to beat the undefeated Raiders twice to win the tournament title. The Raiders drew a bye in the city tournament. The Raiders are coached by Wayne Barkley and the Colts are coached by Don Carpenter.

Schoolboy football poll

Odessa Permian unanimous first place pick

Odessa Permian survived a tough district test from former top 10 member San Angelo Central 33-24 last weekend and this week earned a unanimous first place selection in Class 5A of The Associated Press Schoolboy Football Poll.

Bay City in 4A, Daingerfield in 3A, Pilot Point in 2A and Paradise in A also remained atop their classifications in the balloting by an AP panel of Texas sports writers and sportscasters.

Permian is nearing the playoffs with a big statistical advantage over its eight opponents this season. The Panthers have averaged 403 yards per game on offense while its defense has yielded an average of 172.9 yards.

The Panthers are outscoring the opposition 35.3-10.3.

Lewisville was the lone loser among the 5A ranks last week and dropped from a No. 9 position out of the top 10. San Antonio Clark, 8-0, which had been receiving voting support in recent weeks, moved in as the No. 10 ranked team.

Dallas Carter jumped from 10th to eighth and Longview fell from eighth to ninth.

Houston Madison, an easy 41-18 winner over Houston Lamar, retained the No. 2 ranking in 5A and Plano held onto third but Klein, No. 4 last week, slipped to fifth and Bryan moved up one notch to fourth.

There were two casualties in 4A with No. 6 New Braunfels, 6-1-1, falling to New Braunfels Canyon, 20-14 and No. 8 Monahans losing to Sweetwater 31-10.

Both losers dropped from the top 10 but only Sweetwater at No. 10 was a newcomer. Austin Westlake and Cleburne, tied for 10th last week, moved up with Cleburne going to No. 8 and Westlake to No. 9.

Bay City, with a 22-game winning streak intact, received 21 of the 22 first place votes as the 4A favorite and the next four teams, Gregory-Portland, Huntsville, Tombvall and Jasper remained in order from last week.

Daingerfield also was a unanimous first place pick as the top seven teams in 3A remained unchanged from a week ago. Vernon, which fought to a scoreless tie with Iowa Park in a rain-plagued game, fell from eighth to 10th and Navasota moved from ninth to eighth and Bandera jumped from 10th to ninth.

There were no upsets among the A teams with Paradise gaining 17 of the 22 first place votes and Wink holding onto the runnerup spot. Wheeler and Nazareth exchanged places with Wheeler moving up one spot to seventh and Nazareth falling to eighth.

Other teams receiving voter consideration were: 5A, Texarkana 20 points, El Paso Bellaire 13, Irving Nimitz 11; 4A, Denison 20, Lubbock Dunbar 16, Monahans 10; 3A, Medina Valley 18, New Boston 10; 2A, Liberty Hill 10 and A, Aspermont 13.

Landry imposes gag rule, according to Dallas paper

DALLAS (AP) — Dallas Cowboys Coach Tom Landry has warned his players that any more public criticism of their teammates or the coaching staff will be punished by $1,000 fines and suspensions, a newspaper reported today.

Landry's speech Monday during a team meeting was prompted by remarks some of the players made last week after Landry announced he would start Danny White instead of Gary Hogeboom at quarterback against the Indianapolis Colts, The Dallas Morning News said.

Landry referred to a comment made by running back Ron Springs, without mentioning his name, the News said.

Springs, who has supported Hogeboom over White, was quoted last week as saying he was disappointed that Landry was starting Hogeboom, but that, "People must realize this is coach Landry's team, and he does what he wants to do. If I had the opportunity to express myself truthfully, I could say a lot more strong stuff. But I don't want to get fined."

Several players also were quoted last week as saying that Hogeboom would have performed better this season except that Landry "had turned Hogeboom into a tentative player."

Landry said Monday, "I told them all along there'll be no comments about other players or anybody. They listened, and they understood. It's been a problem over some period of time. It's just our policy not to make those kind of comments."

Last month, after the Cowboys were beaten 28-7 by the New York Giants, Landry told his team he was upset at reading comments some of them had made publicly.

Dorsett rushes for over 9,000 yards

IRVING, Texas (AP) — Lost in all the hoopla of Danny White's return as starting quarterback of the Dallas Cowboys was Tony Dorsett's first 100-yard rushing game of the year.

Dorsett rushed for 104 yards in the 22-3 victory over Indianapolis on Sunday — the first time in 12 games he reached the plateau dating back to last year.

Dorsett has 9,034 career yards. He is the sixth player in NFL history to rush for 9,000 yards.

The others are Walter Payton, Jim Brown, Franco Harris, O.J. Simpson and John Riggins.

"We haven't been getting many rushing yards but I haven't panicked," said Dorsett. "A lot of situations have dictated the passing game. When we fall behind, we have a tendency to go up top."

Dorsett said "I'm confident we can do some fine things running the ball. I'm just happy to go over 100 yards. It's the start of the second half of the season and hopefully it's contagious."

White learns today whether Coach Tom Landry will keep him as the No. 1 quarterback.

"I guess I'm the starter until he (Landry) changes," said White. White completed 21 of 32 passes for 262 yards including touchdown passes of 38 yards to Tony Hill and 5 yards to Doug Cosbie in his 1984 starting debut.

Gary Hogeboom had started the first eight games of the season for the Cowboys, taking them to a 5-3 record. However, White relieved Hogeboom in his last three outings.

"I've said all along that I have two starting quarterbacks," said Landry. "I will use 'em when I feel like using them. If I feel like using Gary next week I'll use him."

Landry said he would love to be able to name a permanent starter.

9,000 YARDS—Cowboys' running back Tony Dorsett (33) became the sixth back in National Football League history to rush for over 9,000 yards in Dallas' 22-3 win Sunday over Indianapolis. Dorsett had 104 yards against the Colts. (AP Laserphoto)

College Football Poll

TCU cracks top 20 for first time since '62

By The Associated Press
How 'bout them Frogs?
The Texas Christian University Horned Frogs are part of The Associated Press college football rankings for the first time since 1962.

"It's a great honor for the school and the players," TCU second-year Coach Jim Wacker said Monday night after the rankings had been announced, "but frankly, I'd rather wait until the season is over and see us ranked in the Top 20. Then it would stay there forever."

TCU, now 6-1, last made the Top 20 during a 6-4 campaign in 1962. You have to go back to 1959 to find the Horned Frogs in the final poll. They were seventh that year.

TCU beat Baylor 38-28 Saturday to clinch its first winning season since 1971. Its only loss was to Southern Methodist.

"We had a team meeting yesterday and talked about bowls and polls," Wacker said. "I think the players realize that you can lose it (the ranking) faster than a blink of an eye. We want all their concentration in Houston (Saturday's opponent). If we take care of our business, the polls will take care of themselves."

TCU, which is No. 20, replaced Penn State in the rankings. The Nittany Lions, 19th a week ago, lost 17-14 to West Virginia and fell out of the Top 20.

Washington, 8-0, remained No. 1 by turning back Arizona 28-12. The Huskies received 50 of 60 first-place votes and 1,184 of a possible 1,200 points from a nationwide panel of sports writers and sportscasters.

But Oklahoma, No. 2 a week ago, lost to Kansas 28-11 and fell to 10th place. Meanwhile, Texas moved up from third to second with three first-place votes and 1,121 points following a 13-7 victory over SMU, which fell from 14th to 19th, just ahead of TCU.

Nebraska walloped Kansas State 62-14 and rose from fourth to third with three first-place ballots and 1,076 points while Brigham Young jumped from fifth to fourth. The Cougars received the other four first-place ballots and 970 points after routing New Mexico 48-0.

Ohio State and LSU, the 6-7 teams a week ago, both lost and fell to 16th and 15th, respectively.

South Carolina, which cracked the Top Ten last week for the first time, vaulted from ninth to fifth by trouncing East Carolina 42-20. The Gamecocks' 7-0 start is their best ever.

"These young men are handling all this very well," said South Carolina Coach Joe Morrison. "And I think they'll continue to handle it well going into the game with North Carolina State."

Miami was idle last week but jumped from eighth to sixth. Oklahoma State defeated Colorado 20-14 and went from 10th to seventh.

Georgia, a 37-7 winner over Kentucky, shot from 13th to eighth, followed by Boston College, which defeated Rutgers 35-23 and climbed from 11th to ninth. The Second Ten consists of Auburn, West Virginia, Florida, Florida State, LSU, Ohio State, Iowa, Southern California, SMU and TCU.

Last week, it was Boston College, Auburn, Georgia, SMU, Florida State, Florida, Iowa, West Virginia, Penn State and Southern Cal.

The only unbeaten-untied major-college teams are Washington, BYU (8-0), South Carolina and Cal State-Fullerton, the nation's only 9-0 team. The Titans, who never have been in the Top Twenty, finished 21st in this week's voting with 56 points, 57 behind TCU.

Longhorns intense, but imperfect

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas coach Fred Akers says the Longhorns played with "incredible intensity for 60 minutes" in defeating Southern Methodist but that his team was far from perfect.

Akers was asked if the 13-7 victory on Saturday was Texas' best game of a 5-0-1 season, and he said, "I guess because it was the last one it might be. They seem to get a little better each week. As far as playing without mistakes — no."

"We played a good football team, and to me it was a great win any way you want to cut it," Akers told his weekly news conference Monday.

Asked if SMU was the best team Texas has played, Akers said, "I don't think we've played anyone with more talent."

The Texas victory before a sellout crowd and regional television audience kept two streaks going. Texas has won 23 straight regular season games and 17 Southwest Conference games in a row since losing to SMU on Oct. 23, 1982.

The Longhorns go on the road Saturday to play Texas Tech, 4-3, and Akers said, "They play tough out in Lubbock. It's a pretty big happening when Texas comes to town."

Kickoff is at 2 p.m., CST, with a capacity crowd of 50,000 expected.

Akers was asked about a controversial play in which Texas cornerback James Lott collided with SMU receiver Marquis Pleasant in knocking down a pass in the Texas end zone.

"I thought it was a pretty normal play. ... That's a judgment call," said Akers. "It looks like most of them that you see that that involve one-on-one coverage and hanging the ball up."

Asked what films showed, Akers replied, "I'd have been disappointed if they had called it (interference) but on most plays like that down in the end zone you have some contact. Whether it's determined it's interference or not is strictly up to the official."

Asked if he had said there was contact, Akers replied, "Yes, there was contact — not very much. The contact didn't affect anything, I'll tell you that."

"Any time you win a ball game playing teams as gifted as we've played, I don't care what the score is, you need to be thankful and grateful and proud that you won," Akers said.

He said Texas had been playing "aggressive, reckless football on both sides of the ball. It's just you don't know where they're going all the time but you know they're going ... with a lot of effort."

Texas tied Oklahoma 15-15 on a field goal on the last play of the game, edged Arkansas 24-18 with an Arkansas receiver getting to the Texas 4-yard-line on the last play, and held off SMU, which threw three straight incomplete passes into the Longhorn end zone.

Seaver renews contract

CHICAGO (AP) — Three-time Cy Young award-winner Tom Seaver will continue his climb toward the 300-win plateau in a Chicago White Sox uniform now that the American League team has exercised its option to renew his contract for the 1985 season.

In two other moves, the club also exercised its option to renew Tom Paciorek's contract for another season and signed backup catcher Marc Hill to a two-year deal, spokesman Paul Jensen said Monday.

Jensen said it is club policy to not release financial details of the pacts.

Seaver, who turns 40 on Nov. 17, led the White Sox staff with 15 wins this season and finished the year with 288 career major league wins.

Preacher seeks God's help in the Texas Senate race

By The Associated Press
 A minister opened a rally for Phil Gramm at Waco's airport terminal with a prayer that called on God to "put (Gramm) back in Washington."
 The Rev. Richard M. Freeman of the First United Methodist Church of Waco said the previous political victories of the Republican congressman from College Station were "an answer to prayer."
 Meanwhile, in Sherman, Gramm's Democratic opponent for a seat in the U.S. Senate seat continued to portray himself as a Biblical "David" who would fell "Goliath" in the General Election a week from today.
 Lloyd Doggett, a state senator from Austin, said he would cast his fifth and final smooth stone against Gramm today.
 In the Bible, David had armed himself for battle against Goliath with a slingshot and five smooth stones.

 Doggett has presented four smooth stones representing issues key to his campaign — the latest being "trust." He said Monday that his fifth stone would deal with "tax fairness — how some corporations avoid paying any income tax ... why it is that those at the top don't start paying their fair share."
 Doggett attended a family reunion Monday at his father's hometown, Post, 40 miles southeast of Lubbock, and said, "I'm the only one in this race who's ever roped a calf or branded a steer."
 Doggett traced his roots to that area, saying his grandfather had bought a farm in Post in 1921. He noted, as he has on other occasions, that Gramm was raised in Georgia.

"I've heard that when Phil got off the plane from Georgia, he didn't know the difference between a shorthorn and a shoe horn," Doggett said.
 Gramm, during his Waco speech, stressed his close relationship with President Reagan and also focused on Doggett's liberal background and Gramm's support for "basic family values" such as a school prayer amendment.
 Around the state, Democrats and Republicans came out with victory slogans Monday as candidates for state and national office launched their final full week of campaigning.
 Austin Democrats said they would join Democrats in 24 other cities tonight in a nationwide "Countdown to Victory" fund raiser for Walter Mondale and Geraldine Ferraro.

BIG SHOT—A revolutionary new infantry Germany, Monday. The weapon fires shell-less carbine is test fired by U.S. Army Chief of Staff 4.7mm ammunition and is under consideration Gen. John A. Wickham in Koblenz, West as the NATO weapon for the 1990s.

Intoxication contributed to deaths

DALLAS (AP) — A 27-year-old man, killed along with five others when his car crashed, was "intoxicated," authorities say.
 "Death is basically due to multiple injuries and a contributing factor, or part two, was acute alcohol intoxication," Rick George, a field agent with the Dallas County Medical Examiner's office, said Monday.
 Jose Guerrero was driving a 1979

Ford Thunderbird that went off Loop 12 about 10 miles northwest of downtown Dallas. The car traveled about 500 feet on a median before becoming airborne between two bridges and nosediving into a dry river bed, authorities said.
 Two boys looking for aluminum cans discovered the car about 12:30 p.m. Sunday. The six had been dead between six to nine hours, authorities said.

The dead were identified as Guerrero and his brothers, Felipe Guerrero, 34; Salomon Guerrero, 23; Victor Guerrero, 28; their brother-in-law, Antonio Palacios, 34; and a friend, Gabriel Perez, 43.
 The six were from Hidalgo, Mexico, and were living in the northwest Dallas suburb of Irving and working at construction jobs, George said.

Legislator pleads innocent, charges that prosecutors acted improperly

BEAUMONT, Texas (AP) — State Sen. Carl Parker pleaded innocent to four criminal charges, then challenged reporters to dig into the case, promising they would find impropriety in the prosecutors' actions.
 Parker, a veteran Democrat from Port Arthur and one of the Legislature's most powerful members, told State District Judge Larry Gist Monday he was innocent of charges of aggravated promotion of prostitution, aggravated perjury and two charges of wholesale promotion of obscene material.
 Parker, 50, was indicted Sept. 11 on charges stemming from an allegedly pornographic video operation in Port Arthur at a house owned by Parker and another man. He is free on $15,000 bond.
 Outside the courtroom, Parker issued a brief statement to reporters.

 "You can find witnesses who have been threatened, they have been accused, they've been promised rewards," he said.
 Parker said of an unnamed co-defendant, "an investigator told him that all his problems could go away if he'd tell them what they wanted to know about me."
 But Parker said the co-defendant could not do so because the prosecution's allegations are not true.
 Defense attorneys said they expected Gist to set a trial date for January.
 The only other person still charged in the grand jury investigation is Daniel Lee. Lee's attorney, Richard Hughes, said he would not comment on Parker's allegation.

Jefferson County District Attorney James McGrath also refused to comment.
 District attorney's investigator Cal Blanchard said "I wouldn't want to comment directly on anything. If there were allegations of violations of the law, then those allegations ought to be taken to the proper authorities."
 Gist set an evidentiary hearing for 8:30 a.m. Nov. 5 on defense contentions that several grand jurors may have been biased against Parker because of an earlier case.
 Parker represented Bernard Fleener, formerly assistant superintendent of the district. Fleener eventually pleaded no contest to a charge of official misconduct, then filed a federal lawsuit, contending officials of the district conspired to ruin him.

Baby Fae off critical list, life-support is disconnected

LOMA LINDA, Calif. (AP) — Baby Fae, off the critical list for the first time since she received a heart transplanted from a baboon, drank water from a bottle after doctors who disconnected her life-support equipment declared, "Every hour is a miracle."
 The 18-day-old infant headed toward completing her fourth full day with the animal heart at 11:35 a.m. today, making her the longest-living human recipient of a cross-species heart transplant.
 South African accountant Benjamin Fortes, 59, survived for 3 1/2 days after receiving a chimpanzee's heart in 1977.
 Controversy continued to surround Friday's experimental operation, in which Dr. Leonard Bailey's transplant team at Loma Linda University Medical Center replaced the infant's fatally defective heart. The baby, whose real name is being withheld, would have died within hours without a transplant, doctors said.
 The team was criticized first for the death of the baboon, then when it was confirmed Monday they had not sought a human organ and that the heart of a 2-month-old baby was available the day of the baboon transplant.

 Hospital officials took Baby Fae off the critical list Monday afternoon, saying her heart was "working well" as she received an anti-rejection drug. They said she was in serious but stable condition and "breathing easily" after tubes and a respirator were removed.
 They then gave her water from a baby bottle to prepare her for formula feedings every four hours, hospital spokeswoman Brenda Pfeiffer said.
 The transplant team wouldn't predict how long Baby Fae might survive. Dr. Jack Provonsha, director of the university's Center for Christian Bioethics, said 8 days that "she's already lived longer than she was supposed to. Every hour is a miracle."
 Of at least four animal-to-human heart transplants performed previously, all adults, only Fortes survived more than a few hours.
 At a news conference Monday, Provonsha said that even if doctors had known that the heart of a 2-month-old child was available, it would have been too large for Baby Fae.
 Dr. Claude Lenfant, director of the National Heart, Blood and Lung Institute, said in a telephone interview from Bethesda, Md., that the size difference would not have been a significant obstacle, but agreed that the doctors lacked adequate time to test whether the tissue was compatible with Baby Fae's.

 "Most heart donors are accident victims, and most infants don't drive cars," said Dr. Robert Levine, a Yale University medical ethics expert. "So I can understand why they didn't go out to look for a human heart donor. They knew there was a very low likelihood of finding one."
 Dr. Moneim Fadali, a Los Angeles cardiovascular surgeon and a member of the Fund for Animals, called the transplant "another example of human experimentation. It's a disservice to both the baboon and the child."
 In Dallas, the American Heart Association issued a statement expressing hope "that Baby Fae will survive and live a long life." The group declined comment on the controversy, except to express support for animal research and warn that "undue restrictions may retard or even sidetrack valuable research already under way."

BOMB REMOVAL—Two members of the Indonesian Marine Corps carry an unexploded bomb on a street in Jakarta near the location of an ammunition warehouse that exploded Monday night killing about 25 people and injuring more than 100 others. (AP Laserphoto)

Heavy casualties in blast at Indonesian munitions dump

JAKARTA, Indonesia (AP) — Troops sealed off the Indonesian Marine Corps headquarters today after an explosion at a munitions dump filled the night sky with tons of bombs and bullets. The government said 13 people were killed; other sources said the toll could be twice that high.

The explosion Monday night in south Jakarta lit up the sky with wild bursts of mortar and artillery shells, grenades and other explosives. Thousands of people ran into the streets in panic as their houses caved in, or windows and doors were blown out.

Information Minister Harmoko said at least 13 people were killed and 22 injured in the blast. Reports from hospitals, marine sources and relatives of victims put the toll at least 25 dead and more than 100 injured.

There were unconfirmed reports that some marines were among the casualties.

Harmoko said the explosion was caused by a fire in the munitions warehouse that fire brigades were unable to control. He said the cause of the fire was under investigation.

A police spokesman said the area was sealed off today by armored vehicles to protect people from isolated explosions that continued through the morning and to prevent thieves from robbing the homes of residents who fled.

Residents at the district of Depok and Cibinong, about 20 miles south of the city of 6.5 million, felt their windows shake from the shocks of the blasts.

Some residents living near the headquarters were killed by flying shells and shrapnel. The shock from the blasts shattered the windows and pulled off doors at Fatmawati Hospital, a mile from the dump, and two heart patients at the hospital died instantly.

Many patients were evacuated because of the proximity of the explosions.

Earlier this month, bomb blasts at two banks and a shopping center killed 2 people and injured 15 others in Jakarta's China town.

Military authorities blamed those blasts on Moslem extremists, bent on avenging deaths in anti-government rioting in September.

Canadians settle with GM; US Ford workers say yes

TORONTO (AP) — With 36,000 Canadian autoworkers heading back to the job after a two-week strike against General Motors Corp., more than 40,000 U.S. employees laid off because of the walkout may be recalled by the end of the week, a GM spokesman said today.

Workers at 13 Canadian plants on Monday voted 87.1 percent approval for a new contract giving them an average raise of 50 cents an hour in the first year of a three-year agreement, the United Auto Workers union said.

The UAW also said its members had approved a new three-year pact with Ford Motor Co. in the United States by a vote of 33,312 to 18,386, or 64 percent to 36 percent.

Maintenance workers at some Canadian plants were being called in Monday night, with full production expected to resume today or Wednesday, union officials said.

GM spokesman Don Postma in Detroit said early today that callbacks of U.S. workers laid off because of parts shortages created by the strike should begin "by the end of the week. That's what we're hoping."

"We have to get our parts moving. We have to get the 'pipeline' filled, get the system of parts moving so we can get everything assembled," he said. "And until that happens, we won't be able to send them back to work."

Robert White, Canadian director for the UAW, said Monday the new agreement with General Motors of Canada Ltd. is a sign that "the days of rubber-stamping a U.S. agreement are now gone."

The contract gives GM workers an average raise of 2.25 percent in the first year — the same as in the United States — plus a "special Canadian adjustment" of 25 cents per hour. Further adjustments would add 25 cents in the second year and 24 cents in the third year.

At Local 222 in Oshawa, with 16,000 members the largest of the local unions, workers filled a hockey arena to debate the merits of the settlement and ask questions of White before voting.
