

District planning tax foreclosures

By LARRY HOLLIS
Staff Writer

Spurred by a desire to keep taxes down by collecting delinquent accounts, the Gray County Appraisal District has initiated a series of tax foreclosures on property.

"As far as I know, there's never been a tax foreclosure in Pampa," said Charles Buzzard, chief appraiser for the district.

Collecting property taxes for the city and the Pampa Independent School District, Buzzard said records indicated there are at least 500 properties which have taxes owed on them for seven years or longer.

Some delinquent accounts date back to 1939, he said, but the majority are from the 1960s and early 1970s. He estimated that some $440,000 in taxes are owed to the city from these properties, and approximately $649,000 is owed to the school district.

In an effort to collect a large portion of the money owed to the two entities, the GCAD has begun steps to initiate tax foreclosures on the properties. In addition, seizure of personal property is being planned for some businesses and other properties to collect the delinquent taxes through public auctions.

Some notices of the foreclosure proceedings have already been sent out after filings in the 223rd District Court here, Buzzard said.

Buzzard said the foreclosures and seizure of personal property is being conducted to collect additional tax monies in an effort to keep taxes down. He said the failure of some people to pay taxes "has been done at the expense of the citizen who does pay taxes."

Collecting on these delinquent accounts can help keep taxes down, he claimed, since it would bring additional tax revenue into city and school district coffers.

Buzzard said he contacted the city and PISD about the proceedings to collect on back property taxes and received their support for the program.

Since his office handles only city and school collections, he has not initiated lawsuits against back taxes on property owners owing taxes only to the county. That decision will be up to the county, he said.

There is a variation on the delinquent taxes on the properties,

Buzzard explained. Some may owe taxes only to one governing entity while taxes have been paid to the others. But under the law, the property can be seized and sold to recover any back taxes, whether owed to one, two or all three entities.

He said the governing entities had been averaging about 95 percent collection of property taxes, leaving 5 percent yearly that was not paid. He said he hoped his efforts, with the support of the governing entities, will cut down the percentage of unpaid taxes.

Buzzard said the filings have already brought some success. People getting their notices have started coming into the GCAD office to pay the back taxes or to make arrangements to pay them off.

He mentioned one owner of a number of commercial properties in the city who owed $10,000 in back taxes. The owner came into the office and is paying off the delinquent taxes now.

A number of rental houses are involved in delinquent accounts, he said. Owners bought the houses cheaply and have collected the Older veterans' free medical care may end

WASHINGTON (AP) — The head of the Veterans Administration plans to ask Congress to consider repealing a law under which all veterans become eligible for free medical care in VA hospitals upon reaching age 65.

VA Administrator Harry Walters said that when he examined that law in light of statistics suggesting that the number of veterans over age 65 will triple in the next 15 years, "I thought to myself, 'Good Lord, if I've got to treat them and must deny care to those who are most in need of it, I find it almost immoral.'"

"I think that law has to be re-examined, not just because of austerity but in fairness," Walters said in an interview last week.

Under the law, even veterans who can afford to pay or have insurance, or those who served in uniform for only a few months, become eligible for treatment in VA hospitals — regardless of whether their ailment is the result of something that happened to them when they were in uniform. Veterans under 65 are treated for non-service-connected ailments only if they sign a certificate saying they are too poor to pay for their own care.

Walters plans to tighten up on treatment for these veterans, too.

Three years ago, Congress directed the VA to impose a "means test" to screen out veterans under 65 who were getting free care for non-service-connected medical problems even though they had the means to pay for it.

But when a draft of proposed VA regulations leaked out, there was so much protest from veterans' groups that the VA pulled back.

Under the revised proposal, those under 65 "able to defray the expenses of necessary care in a non-VA facility" would no longer be treated at VA hospitals for non-service-connected problems. Generally, Walters said, that meant veterans with income of $15,000 a year or more.

He said he had submitted the proposed regulations to the American Legion, Veterans of Foreign Wars and other service organizations and expected to have their reactions within a few weeks, but it would probably take a year before final regulations are promulgated.

At present, he said, the rule would have little impact on the demand for VA services because relatively few financially comfortable veterans go to the VA for medical treatment.

But as the population of World War II veterans grows older and more in need of medical care — and perhaps as people on Medicare are required to foot a larger part of their hospital bills — the demand for VA services is likely to increase, Walters noted.

With 79,000 beds, the 172 VA Medical Centers treat about 1.3 million patients a year and get 1.4 million outpatient visits a month — about half of them for treatment of non-service-connected ailments. About 67,000 nursing home patients get treatment annually.

Ken Dulaney named director of advertising

Pampa native Kenneth W. (Ken) Dulaney has returned home to assume the position of advertising director of The Pampa News, publisher Louise Fletcher announced today.

Dulaney, 43, is moving back to Pampa from Borger, where he has been advertising director of the Borger News-Herald since 1983. His assumed his new position at The Pampa News Jan. 1.

A 1960 graduate of Pampa High School, he has 18 years of experience in the newspaper business in positions ranging from sales representative to publisher.

"We are glad to be moving back to Pampa and look forward to becoming involved in the community," Dulaney said.

After graduating from high school, Dulaney attended Texas Tech where he majored in advertising. He and his wife, the former Vera Smith of Stinnett, met there and were married in 1965. They have three children, Kenda, 18, a freshman at Tech, Wesley, 17, and Collin, 14.

Dulaney started his newspaper career in 1967 at the News-Herald in Borger immediately after his college days at Texas Tech.

He was associated with the News-Texan newspaper group in the Dallas area from 1969 through 1977, first as advertising manager of the Suburban News in Farmers Branch. He was then promoted to publisher-general manager of the Richardson Daily News, and later held the same position with the Garland Daily News.

The News-Texan Group is owned by the A.H. Belo Corp., publisher of the Dallas Morning News.

After leaving the News-Texas, Dulaney was publisher-general manager of the Pecos Enterprise from 1977 through 1980.

He moved to Tulsa, Okla., in 1980

DPS spokesman now says agency has policy on chases

By JEFF LANGLEY
Senior Staff Writer

Officials with the Texas Department of Public Safety have given conflicting and confusing statements about whether or not the agency has a written policy regarding the high-speed pursuit of suspects.

The law enforcement agency's chief spokesman in Austin, Larry Todd, made it clear Friday that the department does have an official, written policy about traffic pursuits, although he told The Pampa News last week that it does not have a policy.

The policy issue came up following a Dec. 21 traffic accident here that involved a DPS trooper and claimed the life of a Pampa mother of three and seriously injured two members of her family.

The district attorney's office,

Pampa police and the DPS have investigated the accident that resulted in the death of Candice Ruth Smith, 35, and seriously injured her husband, William Smith, 40, and their daughter Andrea, 13.

The fatal accident happened about 6:25 p.m. when a speeding patrol car driven by Pampa trooper Johnny Garth Carter, reportedly chasing speeders on the busy city street, slammed into the turning Smith vehicle in the 1700 block of North Hobart.

In a phone interview from his home on Dec. 26, Todd first related to this newspaper the gist of the department's pursuit policy, "in layman's terms," without the benefit of materials in his Austin office. Then, in a phone conversation on Dec. 28, the spokesman said the department has no written policy, with the exception of guidelines in a trooper's training manual.

"We have not put any restraints on the officers in telling them not to pursue," Todd said previously.

But Friday, the spokesman said he had made a mistake, and apologized, "with hat in hand," for any misunderstanding.

"We do have a written pursuit policy," Todd said.

He said the agency's official, written policy is contained in Chapter 11 of the Traffic Law Enforcement manual, which he said is issued to all troopers in the state. It reads as follows:

"Members have an obligation to the citizens of the State of Texas to protect their lives and property, especially on the highways.

"On routine assignment, the trooper should always give consideration to the traffic

Top students say they'll survive new rules

Two new state policies on school extra-curricular activities are getting mixed reactions from the people they will affect the most: the students.

The next six weeks may make a difference in the futures of the area's most active high school students.

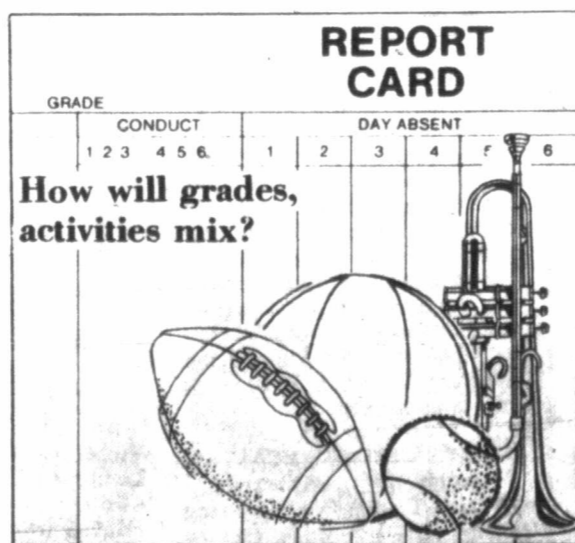

Under one new policy, effective immediately, students may not miss class more than 10 times during the school year to take part in extra-curricular activities.

The other policy, effective at the start of the fifth six-week grading period in February, prohibits students making less than a 70 in any class from participating in any extra-curricular activity or club.

The 10-day and "no pass - no play" policies are part of the Texas Legislature's education reform package. The policies were designed to keep students' minds on their studies and to keep the school day reserved for academic pursuits.

Area high school students contacted by The Pampa News agree that good grades and academic excellence are top priorities. For the most part they support state efforts to upgrade education.

But they also worry that the state may be attempting too much reform too fast. The rules are too strict, they claim. And while most of them say they'll have no problem passing all their classes, they express concern for classmates whose grades may not be so high.

How will grades, activities mix?

"It will affect the teams really bad," observes Lefors High School junior Jeff Wilcox, who is active in football, track, tennis and the student council. "It looks like we will lose a few players because of students not passing every subject."

Band students are also affected, according to Pampa High School senior Hoyt Hammer. "I have no problem," he declares, "but for other people it seems harder."

White Deer senior Todd Lafferty sees the same situation at his school.

"Some students won't be able to play basketball because of failing grades," he says, adding that he's usually been an all-A student. "I think everyone can get above a 70 if they work at it."

"That's the easy part," observes Miami High School senior Leah Gilbert, a former cheerleader who will spend this semester concentrating on University Interscholastic League speech, academic and one act play contests.

"I'm not worried about grades," she says. "I never really had to worry about it."

Grades are also no problem for Miami High School senior Andy Fountain, who admits "I have to work at it."

"No grade is easy," observes Fountain, adding that his teachers "are not as tough as I need, since I'm going on to college."

Carrie Carter of Pampa says that as a cheerleader, she must make above an 80.

Mobeetie's Tina Densberger says it's not hard for her to make higher than 70s or 80s, "but I like them higher."

Wilcox also feels confident that he won't fall victim to the "no pass - no play" rule. Still, he thinks a few of the rules may be too strict. In the past, his school required that students pass four or more subjects in order to participate in extra-curricular activities.

That rule, requiring students to maintain a 70 average or better in at least four courses, will continue through the first six weeks of the spring 1985 semester. Beginning with the fifth six-week period, students must pass all subjects in order to participate in extra-curricular activities.

A student making lower than a 70 is suspended from extra-curricular activities for the next six weeks.

Some educators worry that the rule would discourage students from taking advanced classes. But the state eased such concern by allowing students in "honors" courses to be exempt from the rule. Among the subjects they might be considered an honors class are physics, second year chemistry and biology, trigonometry, linear algebra, calculus, advanced social science programs, world literature and advanced foreign language.

 Still, Groom High School senior Michelle Friemel says she hasn't noticed anyone switching to easier classes to stay involved in extra-curricular activities.

Although the no pass-no play ruling was not in effect last fall, members of the Pampa High School Band were affected by a UIL ruling declaring that a student failing a course 30 days before a music contest cannot participate in a UIL activity if he misses a class in that course. In a letter to UIL officials, senior PHS band members protested that "many students who were failing one class 30 days ago are now passing, but still cannot go to the State Marching Contest because it falls on a Monday."

"There will never come a time when every student is passing every class every day," the letter adds. "Although this is an admirable goal, it is an impossibility."

Declaring that extra-curricular activities are "a privilege and not a right" the state includes contests, games, performances and club activities as extra-curricular activities. Students making less than a 70 are cut from such activities as athletics, band, choir, speech, drama, debate, vocational clubs and livestock shows. They are also suspended from out-of-school practice for such activities.

Practice time is also limited to no more than eight hours per school week per activity or 20 hours a school week total.

None of the students surveyed report much problem with the practice time limits or with the 10-day rule, although one student was under the impression that the limit was 10-days per semester, not school year. But activities in the first semester are not as diverse or time-consuming as second semester activities. In the first semester, students are active in football, cheerleading and band while in the spring, a student's options include basketball, track, cheerleading, honor golf, band, choir, livestock shows, one-act play contests and a variety of UIL academic and speech contests.

Susan Thompson, a White Deer clarinet player who qualified for the All Regional Honor Band last year and this year, sees how the new rule affected her activities.

"Last year, we met twice in January, we got out of school to practice," she says, adding that this year, they may have to practice all day Saturday. Football playoffs kept some WDHS students out of school for two days last semester.

"It's ruining spring break," Gilbert says, noting that the one-act play is scheduled for that week in March. She's worried about how the 10-day limit will affect her ability to make it to state finals. "Last year when I went to the state contest, I know I missed more than 10 days."

Students who qualify for post-district UIL activities may get up to five additional absences, provided the school district asks the commissioner of education for a special exception to the 10-day limit.

Other students, such as Donnie Smith of McLean and John Collingsworth of Pampa, are concerned about spring livestock shows.

Because no extra-curricular activity is allowed during the school day, Carter said Pampa pep rallies are held at 8 a.m.

"I really don't like it," she said. "It hurts students who are usually high in class."

"I guess it's really better," Friemel concluded. "It may hurt us now, but I believe it may be better in the long run."

Texas congressman likely to become federal judge

By The Associated Press

Politicians in Texas' 1st Congressional District are eyeing the seat of U.S. Rep. Sam Hall, who has gone on record as saying he expects to get a federal bench nomination sometime this year from newly sworn-in Sen. Phil Gramm.

"I have not yet made recommendations for judicial appointments for the vacancies that exist in Texas, but certainly Sam Hall is a person who must be considered," Gramm told The Dallas Morning News Friday.

"Sam Hall would be as much a credit to the judiciary as he has been to the legislative branch of government," Gramm added.

The Texarkana Gazette reported in today's editions that after the report surfaced of Hall's possible departure from Congress, the names of six Democrats quickly emerged as possible candidates to succeed him.

The newspaper identified the potential candidates as State Sen. Ed Howard of Texarkana; State Reps. Bill Haley of Center, Sam Russell of Mount Pleasant and Jim McWilliams of Marshall; Bowie County Judge Ed Miller of Texarkana; and former District Attorney Jim Chapman of Sulphur Springs.

Hall, a lawyer and conservative Democrat from Marshall, said he "probably would take" a nomination to the judgeship now held by U.S. District Judge Joe Fisher of Beaumont. Fisher, who was appointed by President Eisenhower, is expected to enter semi-retirement soon, Hall said.

Hall, who led conservative opposition to an immigration reform bill last year, said he will remain in Congress until the appointment is confirmed by the Senate later this year.

Hall, who will be 61 next Friday, recently won a fifth term without opposition. As a conservative Democrat, he was a political ally with Gramm both before and after Gramm switched parties a year ago and became a Republican.

Gramm and Hall were members of a conservative Democratic group known as the "Boll Weevils" that often aligned itself with President Reagan's economic legislation, and Hall stood beside Gramm in the well of the House early last year after Gramm won a special election and was sworn in as a Republican.

School refuses guarantee of candy-free classrooms

AUSTIN (AP) - Parents of two Del Valle kindergarten students say they have suffered seizures after eating candy in a classroom, and are demanding the children be moved to a sugar-free environment.

The children will not return to school until educators can assure that the youngsters will not be given candy in the classroom, said the parents, Kathy and Michael McAuley.

Sugar consumption triggers epileptic-like seizures to which the students are susceptible, the parents said. The McAuleys' two 5-year-olds - natural son, Skyles, and adopted daughter, Evan - are students at I.W. Popham Elementary School in Del Valle, officials said.

The children's diets are restricted to eliminate sweets, Mrs. McAuley said she explained the children's health problems to school personnel when classes started in the fall.

McAuley said that Skyles had five major seizures in a 24-hour period Dec. 18 and 19. He said that before kindergarten, Skyles' seizures were infrequent and mild.

He said two seizures started at school and the school nurse called the parents to come pick up the child.

The parents said their children told them they had eaten candy, cake, and punch at a school Christmas party.

Principal Jack Webb was asked to prevent the children to a sugar-free classroom, Mrs. McAuley said. She made the request Friday when she took the children to school.

Webb said he told the mother that while he would try to prevent the children from getting candy, it was not fair to deny it to their classmates. Mrs. McAuley took the children home.

Webb said teachers have tried to prevent the McAuley children from eating sweets, and that the school is willing to work with the parents.

"We can ensure their kids won't get candy from the teachers, but we can't ensure they won't get it from other kids," said Webb.

He said candy is used as a classroom reward as often as four or five times a year.

"Candy is a tradition," he said. The McAuleys said the request for a candy ban in the classroom is not unreasonable.

The McAuleys said they will keep their children out of school until the problem is resolved.

Pampa family of year nominations are sought

Nominations are currently being sought for the fifth annual Pampa Family of the Year award, presented to a local family in recognition of outstanding achievements relating to family unity.

The selection is made from nominations of local families by Pampa residents.

The award will be presented at 7 p.m. Jan. 24 during a special program in the Heritage Room at M. K. Brown Auditorium.

All Pampa residents are invited to nominate families for the honor, according to Bishop Dale Thorum, pastor of the local ward of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints (Mormons), sponsors of the annual award.

Nominations may be made by completing a nomination form (available on Page 20 of today's issue of The Pampa News). Nominations also may be by sending the name, address and telephone number of the nominated family and by providing comments on why the family should be selected for the award.

Those making the nominations also should include their own name, address and phone number.

Nominations should be mailed to Family of the Year Committee, 424 Red Deer, Pampa, Texas 79065. Nominations should be received by Jan. 18 to be eligible for consideration.

The nominated families should excel in community and church activities and display family solidarity and high moral standards, Bishop Thorum said.

The award is sponsored by the Latter-day Saints as a community service to honor qualities of family unity.

Members of the Mormon Church are not eligible for nomination for the award.

Judge can't believe killer was furloughed

HOUSTON (AP) — A judge says he couldn't believe a man who was sentenced to 99 years in prison after being convicted of killing his wife two years ago, spent the holidays at home on a four-day furlough from the Texas prison system.

James Newton Gay, 41, was sentenced by a state district court jury in July 1982 to a maximum penalty and a $10,000 fine in connection with the Nov. 8, 1981 fatal shooting of his estranged wife, Betty Beal Gay, 34.

Prison officials said Gay was granted the furlough because of exemplary behavior as a prisoner.

"I'm shocked," said State District Judge Michael McSpadden, who presided over Gay's trial. "If I brought (Gay's) jury back, they would come across the courtroom rail if they heard this."

McSpadden said the jury obviously believed Gay was a threat to others since they gave him the maximum sentence.

Phil Guthrie, a spokesman for the Texas Department of Corrections, said officials do not warn the family of victims or local authorities when a prisoner is released on furlough.

"That would defeat the purpose," Guthrie said. He said the purpose of the inmate furloughs was to keep in touch with their families.

Guthrie said the TDC sends the inmate to a specific county and asks for a phone number where they can be reached but it is not a policy to always call the furloughed inmate.

Bobbie Todd, a sister of the victim, said she found out about Gay's furlough because of a family friend, Dallas attorney Maurice Acers, who periodically checks on Gay's status as a precaution.

"I feel the family of the victim should know because they need to protect themselves and so they could be able to object," Todd said. "I think this is terrible. I think it's color television and two weeks paid vacation a year."

Mrs. Gay was slain one day before the couple was scheduled to begin a court fight over custody of their two sons.

Guthrie said the crime a prisoner commits does not have much bearing on whether he gets a furlough.

"It's not how violent they are or their sentence, it's a matter of the individual," Guthrie said.

Gay's earliest parole date is supposed to be 2024 but he can apply for two, four or five-day furloughs each year until then, officials said.

DPS policy conditions existing, the terrain, and the condition of the roadways in his area. The mission of apprehension cannot be accomplished if the officer is involved in a collision.

"There are many times when it is not practical to continue the pursuit of a violator. The decision of when to abandon pursuit can only be made by the officer involved. When, in the judgment of the officer, the mission of the department can no longer be served or when it becomes evident that continued pursuit will bring about unwarranted danger to the public or to the officer, he should abandon pursuit and take whatever legal action is practical.

"The law provides certain exceptions to the speed limits, parking, stopping, and turning movements, when such activities are necessary for an officer to carry out his duties," the DPS manual says in part.

"The above exceptions for emergency operation do not relieve the officer from the duty to drive with due regard for the safety of all persons, nor shall such provisions protect the officer from the consequences of reckless disregard for the safety of others," it continues.

Todd said the instructions constitute the department's official policy regarding the high-speed pursuit of suspects.

"And then, of course, every trooper is trained in the basic academy in all driving skills...in the classroom and by hands-on driving," the DPS spokesman added.

The DPS supervisor in Pampa, Sgt. Jim Powell, also said he was unaware of his department's policy about high-speed chases, according to Acting City Manager Allyn Moore.

Because the accident occurred inside the city, the Pampa Police Department is listed as the investigating agency.

The city administrator said he asked Powell for a copy of the DPS pursuit policy, "and he advised me that they had no written policy," Moore said. "He said in lieu of that, they rely on the training and supervision of his people."

But the city official said Powell gave him a copy of the pertinent section of the DPS policy manual on Friday. Pampa's DPS supervisor "forgot about the instructions in the policy manual, until contacted by his supervisors about the matter, the acting city manager said Powell told him.

District Attorney Guy Hardin has said he will hire an independent crash investigator to reconstruct the wreck before presenting the case to a grand jury.

Carter has said he was chasing two drag racers north on Hobart at a high rate of speed and that the Smiths' southbound car, driven by Mrs. Smith, turned left in front of his patrol car. The trooper said he had his lights (in the front grille) and siren on during the pursuit. He said his vehicle likely had reached at least 55 mph before the accident in the 35 mph zone. The major city street was jammed with last-minute Christmas shoppers when the nighttime accident happened.

The DPS has refused to release a description of the two reported speeders.

Mrs. Smith sustained serious injuries and died the next day at Northwest Texas Hospital in Amarillo. Her husband and daughter have continued a slow recovery.

Trooper Carter was treated for minor injuries and released.

With Occidental Petroleum

Diamond Shamrock may merge

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Directors of Occidental Petroleum Corp. and Diamond Shamrock Corp. said they will meet next week to discuss further a corporate merger — a combination that would form the nation's seventh largest oil company.

One source close to the parties, who spoke only on condition that he not be identified, said Friday it was "an accomplished fact that Occidental would either acquire or merge with Diamond Shamrock."

However, in a joint statement, the companies said only that directors would meet Monday to consider the proposal and that "a further announcement is expected to be made shortly thereafter."

Trading in the shares of both companies was held up for several hours Friday morning at the request of the firms. When trading resumed, shares of the two companies were among the most active on the New York Stock Exchange. Diamond Shamrock rose $3.25 to close at $21 a share while Occidental Petroleum slipped $1.75 to close at $25.

The action came just one day after Occidental Petroleum's 86-year-old chairman, Armand Hammer, in an interview with The Associated Press, revised his previous prediction that oil-industry mergers had "run their course."

Although he gave no hint of a Diamond Shamrock-Occidental combination, Hammer said he expected more takeovers because oil reserves are limited and "it is cheaper to buy new reserves on Wall Street than to discover them yourself."

He said the cost of finding new oil is $12 per barrel. According to figures released last year by Texaco Inc., prices paid in three recent huge industry mergers ranged from $4.69 a barrel to $6.48 a barrel for oil reserves.

Diamond Shamrock has experienced the financial drain of looking for new oil. In 1983, it posted a net loss of $56.2 million because of a $194.3 million pre-tax writeoff of its entire investment in the highly touted Mukluk well in the Beaufort Sea off the coast of Alaska. Diamond Shamrock and its partners lost $1.6 billion on the project, which turned out to be the most expensive dry hole in history.

Hammer also said he expects Congress to pass legislation limiting such oil-industry mergers on antitrust grounds.

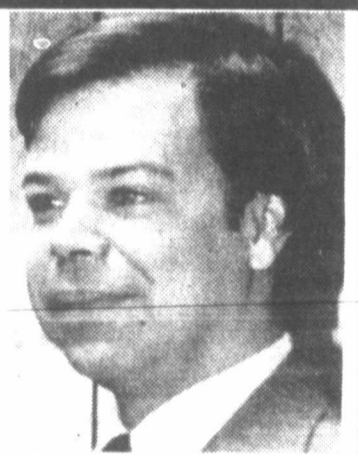

"It's just a question of what comes first — the mergers or the legislation," Hammer said.

Organ donations important

The American Council on Transplantation wants your vital organs, your heart, lungs, kidneys, pancreas, liver, bone marrow, corneas and blood.

The organization will understand if you choose to wait until you're dead to give them up. But the group hopes you will make the decision to donate now and tell your family to give up the organs if the time comes.

The ACT organization was formed in 1983 to educate families and doctors about organ transplantation.

Thanks to advances in surgery and new wonder drugs, more than 80,000 kidneys and 20,000 corneas have been transplanted to date. Add to that total the transplants of 800 hearts, 700 livers and 400 pancreases and 5,300 bone marrow surgeries. However, many more transplants could be done each year if more organs were donated, ACT says.

ACT, a group of medical professionals and laymen working to further understanding of transplant surgeries and the need for donors, was formed with $100,000 seed money from the Department of Health and Human Services. Continuing funding has come from a $1 million contribution by the Dow Chemical Company and other sponsors.

ACT wants medical personnel around the country to identify donors and put their families in touch with organ procurement organizations.

"Primary donors are between the ages of 15 and 55, who, in good health, have died suddenly, usually in accidents, and are declared 'clinically brain dead.' Brain death may be confirmed by testing the brain waves through electroencephalography (EEG) and cerebral blood flow studies. In this condition, brain functions cannot be sustained without the use of artificial life supports," the group said in a news release.

Families must make the decision to give up a loved one's organs, even if the donor has previously signed an organ donor card. Without the next of kin's consent, the cards legally aren't worth the paper they're written on.

Giving up the organs often helps the family make some sense out of the loss of a loved one, ACT says.

The group illustrates the consolation to families with the case of a 15-year-old boy struck by a car and killed while riding his bicycle. Mindy S. Malecki, who works for an organ procurement program at St. Luke's Medical Center in Chicago, reports that the boy's family decided to donate his organs.

The boy's heart was successfully transplanted into a 51-year-old man. A 49-year-old woman got another chance at life by receiving the liver. One kidney was given to a 10-year-old boy; the other went to a 54-year-old man.

"One month after the donation occurred, the donor's mother called me," Malecki reports. "She asked about the progress of the recipients, and I gave her the information. She again told me that she was very grateful to the nursing staff for presenting her with the option of organ donation, because she would not have thought of it on her own. The donation made her feel better about the death, because it lessened the finality of it for her."

"This was not an isolated case," Malecki said. The importance of organ donation was brought home to area residents in the story of former Miami resident Terri Lenz, Lenz, 22, a Laverne, Okla., mother of three, got a second chance with a heart-lung transplant at the Presbyterian Hospital in Pittsburgh. The operation was possible only because the family of a Cleveland, Ohio teenager killed in a traffic accident approved the donation of Lenz's new heart and lungs.

For more information about ACT and the various organ procurement networks, contact Neal S. Frank, 500 N. Michigan Avenue, Chicago, Ill., 60611, 312-836-7159.

Tax foreclosures

rent, but they haven't bothered to pay the property taxes.

The program also has received support from Clean Pampa, Inc. Kirk Duncan, chairman of the organization's Municipal Committee, said the tax foreclosures could help to improve some of the unkempt abandoned properties in the city.

Buzzard said about 10 to 15 percent of the properties facing tax foreclosures now probably can be classified as abandoned property.

Most of the abandoned properties are overrun with weeds and unkempt trees, with many having building ruins on them, Duncan noted.

Many have become unsightly, with the abandoned buildings offering hazards where children might play.

Duncan said he hoped many of the abandoned properties will be bought at the public auctions by people who will clean up and take care of the property.

The GCAD has hired the statewide law firm of Perdue, Brandon, Blair, Fielder and Williams to handle the filings of the tax foreclosures and seizure of personal property. Buzzard said the law firm has experience with such filings and could handle the cases efficiently.

The firm handles notices to property owners with delinquent taxes, makes the needed filings in the district court and conducts all the necessary legal work. The appraisal district handles the actual collection of the taxes.

Under the tax foreclosure proceedings, notices of the delinquent taxes are sent to all interested parties. If the owner (or owners) makes no effort to pay the taxes, a suit is filed. Then if the owner still refuses to pay, a tax warrant is issued.

A tax warrant, according to the tax code, directs a peace officer (usually a sheriff's officer) or other official to sell the property at a public sale, usually at the courthouse.

The minimum bid accepted on the property must cover the delinquent taxes, penalties, interests and other costs. If a sufficient bid is not received, a taxing unit may bid on the property. The unit takes title to the property and may resell it at a later date.

If real property — as a parcel of land — is to be sold, the owner may request the property be divided and only those portions sold as are necessary to satisfy any taxes and related costs. But the owner is still responsible for keeping taxes paid on the remainder of the property.

Proceeds of the sale are used to pay court costs and then the taxes and accrued penalties and other costs, with each taxing unit receiving its share proportionate to the taxes owed it.

Owners of the property and their relatives are not permitted to bid on the property at the auction.

In cases where taxes are owed on personal property — equipment, furnishings, business inventory and the like — a tax warrant may direct a peace officer to seize as much of the person's personal property as may be reasonably necessary for payment of all taxes and related costs.

Notices of the sales must be made public knowledge, either by posting a notice in a public building or by publishing in a local newspaper. The owners also must receive notice of the sale.

Prior to the actual auction, the owner may stop the proceedings by paying the delinquent taxes and costs or by making a signed agreement with the GCAD to make payments on the amount involved.

Under the law, if a person's real property is sold at a public sale, he has two years in which to redeem or buy back the property. The owner must pay the purchaser the amount of his purchase price and deed recording costs, plus 25 percent of the aggregate if redeemed in the first year or 50 percent in the second year.

Purchasers of such property in public auctions must be aware of this situation, Buzzard said. The purchasers probably wouldn't want to improve the property much in the first two years in case the owner buys it back. Also, it would be hard to borrow money on the property until the purchaser has clear title on the land.

There are other matters involved, such as a statute of limitations, deferred collections for those over age 65 and change of ownership for property having back taxes. Buzzard said his office can provide any needed information.

Buzzard said persons who know they owe delinquent taxes can come in to make arrangements for paying them, whether a notice has been received or not.

Under the law, if property is subject to taxation, the people are expected to know there are taxes on it, whether a tax notice is received or not. It's the responsibility of the owner to keep aware of taxes on property and to pay them.

For now the GCAD is concentrating on accounts which have been delinquent for seven years or more for the foreclosure and seizure of personal property, Buzzard stated.

But under the law, such proceedings can be initiated at anytime after the taxes become delinquent, generally after Feb. 1.

EVER STRIVING FOR TOP O' TEXAS TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me.

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Our opinion

Action of county was exactly right

"There is not much commendable about the way the Gray County commissioners handled the issue of shouldering responsibility for indigent medical care Wednesday in Pampa."

So read a Saturday editorial in our neighbor newspaper to the south, the Amarillo Daily News. The headline over the editorial read, "Gray commissioners dodged medical debt."

The Daily News was complaining because the commissioners didn't jump at the opportunity to immediately sign an agreement presented by Northwest Texas Hospital in Amarillo obligating Gray County to pay medical bills for all indigent patients transferred from Pampa to the Amarillo hospital.

With all due respect to our big-city colleague, we think the local commissioners' action was totally commendable and we would have been one of the first to criticize them if they'd done otherwise.

Gray County did not say yes or no to the Northwest Texas request. They simply took no action. If they had agreed to use Gray County taxpayers' money to pay medical bills at an Amarillo hospital without spending a considerable amount of time studying and considering the proposal, we think that would have been the height of irresponsibility.

If the commissioners had signed the agreement, it appears to us they could have been writing a virtual blank check to Northwest Texas Hospital. The proposed agreement calls for Gray County to pay the bills of any resident transferred to the Amarillo hospital who is classified as an indigent under Hill-Burton guidelines. It does not say whether Gray County or Northwest Texas would have the authority to determine which patients met the guidelines that would qualify them as "indigent."

It is not even clear at this time whether Gray County has any obligation or authority to pay the medical bills of patients at Northwest Texas, even if everyone involved agrees that they should be classified as "indigent."

The Daily News, practicing law without a license, made the flat statement that "as a matter of law, counties are responsible for indigent care in Texas." It is strange that the Amarillo newspaper knows that as an absolute fact, while Judge Carl Kennedy is not aware of any law that requires counties to pay hospital bills for anyone. We are aware of lawsuits that have been filed attempting to force counties to pay medical bills of all indigents, but we are not aware of any that have been successful. To flatly state that the law requires counties to pay such bills it a bit premature, it seems to us.

Northwest Texas also requested that Gray County pay 10 percent of each $100,000 in costs of treating indigent county residents in Northwest Texas neonatal unit. Judge Kennedy said the commissioners might have approved that expenditure, but couldn't buy the entire package.

"It is an open-ended situation over which we would have absolutely no control," the judge said. He was exactly right.

Another reason the county did not jump at the chance to pay Northwest Texas is the widespread expectation that the Texas Legislature will pass legislation clearly defining a county's responsibility in this area. It is completely understandable for commissioners to wait and see what their legal responsibilities will be, rather than commit Gray County taxpayers' money for something that may not be necessary.

What really concerns the Amarillo Daily News is that taxpayers in its area might have to subsidize the reported $616,000 in bills owed to Northwest Texas by Gray County residents. That newspaper, of course, wants Gray County taxpayers to pay those bills.

We don't think, though, that either Northwest Texas Hospital or the Amarillo Daily News has any business telling Gray County or its residents how to spend their tax money.

If the Amarillo newspaper really wants to lessen the burden on taxpayers in that area, it could call for abolition of the hospital district and sale of Northwest Texas to private enterprise, which could operate it much more efficiently.

Until then, we must recognize that the newspaper is simply blowing smoke to impress taxpayers in the Amarillo area with editorials such as the one published Saturday.

'Flat tax' won't set us free

Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan, introducing the U.S. Treasury Tax Reform for Fairness, Simplicity and Economic Growth, said, "The present U.S. tax system desperately needs simplification and reform....It's too complicated...."

The secretary is absolutely right. Our tax code is so complicated, inconsistent, and ambiguous that not even Internal Revenue Service (IRS) agents understand it, and the law sympathizes with them. IRS agents can give you erroneous information and by law YOU are subject to whatever fines and penalties there are. Furthermore, parts of the tax code, such as estate taxes, are so complicated and ambiguous that a PH.D. accountant can't fully understand it; for the rest of us, it's all Greek.

A simple flat tax with few or no deductions and credits, or even the Treasury's modified version, has a lot going for it. First, compliance is cheap. It has been estimated that if you took the amount of time Americans spend recordkeeping and filling out tax forms and put that same time in a Detroit auto assembly line we could produce more than our entire annual output of cars.

Second, as Secretary Regan observed, our present tax code causes considerable resource misallocation. Millions of Americans do many things that don't make much sense economically but make a lot of tax sense. There's the businessman who buys a Mercedes for his business travel, the Hollywood star who buys a cattle ranch, the family that buys a house much more expensive than they need, and the employee who turns down overtime work because it means higher taxes. People do these things because they're victims of that bad habit of wanting to keep all they produce. And, finally, tax code simplification would make the IRS' job of tax collection more efficient.

But before we rush to criticize our complicated, inconsistent, loophole-ridden tax code, we ought to consider its only advantage: thanks to Congress it makes us freer than we otherwise might be. The reasoning is: suppose we had a simple flat tax of 20 percent enabling us to do our tax returns on a postcard. What's to stop Congress from raising it to 40, 50, or even 60 percent?

If Congress did, the IRS job enforcement would be made easy by the simplicity of the code. Americans would be up the proverbial creek without a paddle. With our current, cumbersome and complicated tax code, there are all sorts of clever ways Americans can legally - and illegally - hide their money from the revenuers.

Furthermore, there's so much paperwork involved that every tax form cannot be thoroughly scrutinized. As my colleague and friend, economist Milton Friedman, reminds us, we should thank God government is not efficient, or put another way, "We should be thankful government doesn't do to us all we pay it to do."

The real sleeper in Treasury Secretary Regan's tax plan is the proposal to develop what the IRS calls a "return - free tax system." Under this system IRS would compute individual tax liability based on withholding and information reports. This would eliminate the actual filing of tax returns for more than half of all tax payers. During World War II we went to a tax withholding system. The result is few Americans know what taxes they pay. Now the IRS wants to increase tax ignorance by having a "return - free" system. We need to eliminate withholding altogether. Each American should be required to report to a tax collection agency to pay taxes in cash.

Today in History

Today is Sunday, Jan. 6, the sixth day of 1985. There are 359 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Jan. 6, 1838, Samuel Morse publicly demonstrated his telegraph for the first time, in Morristown, N.J.

On this date:

Ten years ago: Edmund G. Brown Jr. was sworn in as California's 34th governor.

Five years ago: During debate in the United Nations Security Council, the United States called on the Soviet Union to withdraw its troops from Afghanistan immediately, and asked the council to denounce the Soviet intervention.

One year ago: Former San Francisco Supervisor Dan White, who had shot and killed Mayor George Moscone and Supervisor Harvey Milk in 1978, was paroled after serving five years in prison for voluntary manslaughter.

Today's birthdays: Comedian Joey Adams is 74. Actress Loretta Young is 72. Actor-comedian Danny Thomas is 71.

Thought for today: "Time is what keeps everything from happening all at once." - Anonymous.

A sweet lady and her food

Often in this space I have lauded the many luncheon meals I have taken at the eating establishment of Ann Smith.

That establishment is the Techwood Soda Company located near a low-rent housing project in Atlanta, the city in which I live.

The address certainly is not prestigious, but when the food is as good as Ann Smith has been turning out for the past 35 years, the address is no more important than the color of the dishes.

Ann Smith, who is 67 and a grandmother, adopted me several years ago. She adopted a group of my friends, too - bachelors all, who, were it not for her, would rarely have known a square meal.

We have met at her place each day for lunch. We have had the same table, and we have feasted on the meats and good vegetables, and we have eaten under the watchful eye of Mrs. Smith, who always made certain we had plenty and never failed to warn us of the dangers the night life holds.

"What you boys need," she would say, "is a good woman to take care of you and keep you home at night."

Easier said than done, Mrs. Smith, but we always appreciate the thought.

It happened a couple of weeks ago. Mrs. Smith, who had a bad knee, slipped and broke her ankle.

She faces months of rehabilitation and she has had to close Techwood Soda Company, which she and her husband opened in 1946.

And there is worse news for me and for my friends and for all others who lunched with her.

"I'm going to have to give it up for good," Mrs. Smith said to me the other day.

I can't blame her. She's been up at four in the morning all these years, she's had break-ins, and she's been robbed at the point of a gun.

"What worries me the most is my help," she said. "Some of those folks that have worked for me have never worked anywhere else. I'm going to see if I can find them something to do."

Memories. She's got some.

"When me and Frank (her husband) decided to start serving cafeteria food, it was '51, I think," she began, "I told Frank we ought to give the food away the first day. He looked at me kinda funny but agreed to do it."

"There were a lot of poor people living in the projects down the street and the word got out we were giving away free food. Lordy, we served steak to 3 o'clock in the morning, but we had a good time doing it."

Not all the memories are good ones, of course.

"We've got that labor pool next door to us," Mrs. Smith said, "and every morning about five, all the men looking for work come in for coffee. We've had fights and everything else, and after I was robbed, I went down to the police station to look through the mug book. I didn't find the one that robbed me, but I must have seen 20 of my regular morning coffee drinkers in that book."

The robbery. It was just a couple of months ago.

"You know what I did?" Ann Smith recalled. "That man stuck a gun right at me, and I argued with him. Wonder I didn't get shot or beat up lots of times. My mama's 87, and she's been so worried about that. She didn't want me to hurt my ankle, of course, but she's beside herself I'm not going back down there."

In a way I'm glad she's not, too. She can get some rest now, maybe even travel some, and, Lord knows, she will be safer.

On the other hand, I'll miss that sweet lady and her grub. We all will.

Dismantling of welfare system urged

BY ED CLINE

"None of us knew just how the plan would work, but every one of us thought that the next fellow knew it. And if anybody had doubts, he felt guilty and kept his mouth shut - because they made it sound like anyone who'd oppose the plan was a child-killer at heart and less than a human being. They told us that this plan would achieve a noble deal. Well, how were we to know otherwise?"

These were the words of Jeff Allen, a starving hobo in Ayn Rand's novel, "Atlas Shrugged." The plan Allen referred to was the social policy of a great motor company, a policy based not on merit but on need. His story was a tale of horror. The noble ideal behind the social policy drove the company's customers away, bankrupted the firm and turned its employees, once decent, prosperous, self-reliant men, into embittered pauperized, scheming animals. Allen, who had once been a skilled lathe operator with the motor company, was now a hobo in search of work in the U.S.A., a country that had adopted a similar social policy and was suffering the same consequences. It is here that fact and fiction meet.

The fictional America described in "Atlas Shrugged" bears a strong resemblance to the America described in Charles Murray's nonfictional book, "Losing Ground: American Social Policy, 1950 - 1980" (Basic Books, 323 pp., $23.95).

The "lost ground" of the book's title refers to the advances which the poor, especially the black poor, had made in education, in the economy, and in civil rights prior to the late 1960s. It was at this time that the full effects of the Great Society and the War on Poverty began to take hold.

Mr. Murray, a senior research fellow of the Manhattan Institute for Policy Research, contends that Federal patronage of the poor has worsened their situation. In the long run, Federal aid to the poor has made them dependent on a system that will never fulfill its original noble intentions.

The idea that welfare does not work is a popular topic of debate these days. The idea that welfare exaggerates the plight of the poor is a much bolder idea which is abundantly documented and admirable argued in "Losing Ground."

Murray traces the origins of the welfare paradox back to Roosevelt's New Deal innovations of Social Security, Workmen's Compensation, Unemployment Insurance and Aid to Families with Dependent Children. Until the late 1950s, certain criteria were consistently applied to one's eligibility for aid from these programs. There was only a single set of standards to be met in order to receive aid.

In the 60s and 70s the eligibility standards came under harsh attack from critics and intellectuals who regarded them as racist, arbitrary or too stringent. So the criteria were first tampered with, then relaxed, and finally all but dropped. The result of the less stringent eligibility criteria was an explosion of welfare spending and the number of people on the dole.

This new ideology had a profound impact upon the administration of welfare programs. Distinctions between the "deserving poor" and the "undeserving poor" vanished. It was reasoned that if the system prevented people from being self-sufficient, then people must be taught the skills and values of self-sufficiency. Hence, job training programs proliferated, as did anti-poverty programs designed to inculcate among the poor dignity and other incentives toward self-sufficiency.

But instead of people becoming more self-sufficient, they are becoming more dependent. See CLINE, Page Six.

Officer Carter saved son's life

Dear Editor,
The time, 11:35 p.m. The place, Price Road and Borger Highway. Two highway patrol officers are called to the scene of an accident where two boys are trapped in a 1973 Pontiac, both in critical condition. One of the officers was DPS officer Johnny Carter.

The people around the car just shook their heads, sure that both boys were dead. But not Officer Carter.

With the help of "The Jaws of Life," both boys were removed from the wreckage, taken to Coronado Community Hospital, treated and then transferred to NWT Hospital.

One of the boys was our son, Leslie Weaver. Officer Carter stayed with our son from Pampa to Amarillo. Three times our son's heart stopped! Officer Carter didn't give up. He continued CPR and when they reached NWT, he helped carry him into the emergency room. There was blood on his uniform and a worried look in his face when he handed his mother and I our son's personal effect, a class ring and his billfold, and a few words of encouragement.

Because of this officer, our son is alive and doing well. Before anyone judges any officer in the Department of Public Safety, then they better take a second look. They lay their lives on the line and often it is above and beyond the call of duty, as it was Junly the 4th, 1983.

We need and must have officers that are dedicated to their duty; no, must have officers that are willing to say "I won't give up, I won't let this boy or girl die, or bleed to death if they can help it."

What happened in the accident in Pampa is hard to say. But we cannot, and must not lay the blame on Officer Carter or anyone else. Accidents happened. We all know that. But when it comes home and you see your son laying on the table, his blood spilling onto the floor and watch the DPS officer stem that flow of blood, then and only then does it come home. When you kneel in the hospital chapel and pray and ask God to please let your son live; when you know that is your only son and your wife cannot have anymore children—then it really reaches home.

To Officer Carter, we have said "thank you" several times...and to God we have said "thank you" for men like officer Carter.

BILL WEAVER

Put the blame where it should be

Dear Sir,
It's very disappointing to me to think our community voice has nothing but destructive criticism for the Department of Public Safety officer who was involved in the accident while in pursuit of the two hotrodders.

I have to wonder what would be said by the same voices in this community if this situation had ended in a different tragedy—that tragedy being Patrolman Carter deciding not to pursue the hotrodders and they continue down the street in excess of 50 mph and run over your child.

I think I could predict the headlines. "Where were the cops." I have not read or heard one comment from these voices that put the blame where it belongs, for the loss of life, personal injuries suffered by both families and loved ones, and the nightmares they will live with for sometime to come.

That nightmare will be shared by the two dragracers knowing they were the real cause for it all.

LONNIE SHELTON

EDITOR'S NOTE—Because of the reference to headlines, we assume the writer is referring to The Pampa News as the "community voice." We have not criticized any individual in connection with this incident. Our only criticism was directed at the Department of Public Safety after its chief spokesman told us it has no policy restraining officers from participating in high-speed chases regardless of the circumstance. Since then, the DPS spokesman said the department has such a policy. If it does, we are glad. If it doesn't, we think it should have. We have never seen a headline in this newspaper, or any other paper, saying "Where were the cops?"

Aspin may oppose Reagan on defense

WASHINGTON (AP) — Many House Democrats predict President Reagan's defense initiatives will be subjected to tougher, more critical scrutiny as the result of the generational battle that brought Pentagon gadfly Les Aspin to the chairmanship of the House Armed Services Committee.

In a series of votes that ignored the pleas of House elders and battered the traditions of the congressional seniority system, Aspin on Friday unseated ailing, 80-year-old Chairman Melvin Price of Illinois and bypassed other committee veterans.

The Wisconsin congressman, a former Pentagon official who ranked only seventh in seniority among the committee's Democrats, said his election on a 125-103 secret tally by the House Democratic Caucus is "a sign we ought to be taking a serious look at defense...trying to balance the federal budget deficit and national security interests."

But one Democrat, echoing the party's conservatives, said that in choosing the 46-year-old Aspin, the Armed Services Committee "now has as its chairman a person who doesn't support an adequate defense."

Under Price's leadership, the committee leadership had been criticized by younger and more liberal Democrats for showing little or no vigor in examining the Reagan administration's military policies and programs.

"Only time will tell, but I bet there are people at the Pentagon bashing their heads saying, how do we play the game now," said Rep. David Garcia, D-N.Y., a member of the Democratic Steering Committee.

"There's no question in my mind that Congress finds itself now with a chairman who's going to question from time to time what goes on the Pentagon (and) I think that's healthy," he said.

Rep. Nicholas Mavroules, D-Mass., an Armed Services committee member, said he ultimately voted for Aspin in the caucus because of Aspin's support of a plan to put the panel on record on overall national defense policy instead of dealing with Pentagon recommendations piece-by-piece.

"It's vital that we not be a rubber stamp to the Pentagon or to the White House, any White House for that matter, Republican or Democrat," Mavroules said.

Mavroules said he hopes the committee now can take the lead in mandating the cuts in defense spending he said are needed to reduce the looming federal budget deficit.

IF YOU THOUGHT RETIREMENT PLANS WERE COMPLICATED AND COST A LOT, THINK AGAIN.

Your retirement plan shouldn't have to be complicated to be effective. Security Federal has several retirement plans that make it easy for you.

As little as one hundred dollars can start your Individual Retirement Account. And you can put in the amount you want, when you want.

Your I.R.A. from Security Federal is insured safe, and it earns money market interest. That interest is tax deferred till you retire. You also get real tax savings each year on what you deposit.

There's really no reason to wait on starting a retirement plan. You can do it right now. And it's as simple as walking into your nearest Security Federal office. When you think about retirement, think Security.

Major East Texas foundation started with check in bible

By PAUL RECER
Associated Press Writer
LUFKIN, Texas (AP) — Early in the 1960s an East Texas timber heiress decided she had little need for any more money from her father's estate, so she'd start giving it away.
Twenty-two years later, more than $4 million in charity grants is being distributed annually in East Texas, thanks to Georgie Temple Munz of Texarkana, one of five children of millionaire T.L.L. Temple, the founder of a company that became Temple Industries.
Mrs. Munz was receiving regular payments from her father's estate, but had so little need for the money that she frequently failed to cash the checks. The drafts sometimes were around her house for months and she once used one as a marker in her Bible.

Ward Burke, then a lawyer for the Temple companies, remembers Mrs. Munz' nephew, W. Temple Webber Sr., chuckling over his aunt's apathy toward the money.
"He would laugh about his aunt not cashing the checks and he would have to go out there and get the checks," Burke recalled.
Mrs. Munz was then a widow. She had two daughters and both were handicapped. The daughters received all of her attention, said Burke.

"She didn't want to fool with any business," said the lawyer. "She just wanted to take care of those two daughters. She was active in the charitable activities there in Texarkana. But so far as being interested in society or travel..." Burke shook his head.
Eventually, Webber and another nephew, Arthur Temple, suggested to Mrs. Munz that she use her earnings from the lumber, paper and container businesses to start a private charitable foundation.
"That's what she wanted to do," recalled Burke. "She just wanted her money to be used to help people. I know that personally."
Thus was born the T.L.L. Temple Foundation, a charitable organization that has grown to be one of the largest privately controlled foundations in the country. At first, the foundation received money only from the payments to Mrs. Munz. Other donations were added, but the bulk of the foundation money came from the estate of Mrs. Munz, who died in 1982.

The foundation now is valued at about $90 million and annually gives grants to 50 or 60 projects, with awards ranging from $1,000 to $500,000.
Giving away money — lots of it and more each year — is a full-time job for Burke, now the executive secretary of the foundation and one of three trustees.
"A lot of people say, 'well that really must be easy,'" says Burke. But, he notes, it isn't. Giving away foundation money is carefully controlled by federal law and often is like walking through a mine field — any false step can cause an explosion.

Burke said he and the other two trustees, Temple and W. Temple Webber Jr., annually get almost 500 applications for funds. Each request is evaluated to assure its legality, that it meets the terms of the foundation charter and that it is for a legitimate cause.
"If you are not careful you get to feeling like you are God when you can distribute as much money as we can in this area," he says. "We try to keep it in perspective because you can suddenly get treated awfully nice by a lot of people."
The foundation is required by federal law to give away annually 5 percent of its net worth. The trustees, said Burke, have imposed some self-enforced limitations: They will not give to any religious organization "for the propagation of their faith."

"Once you let one in, you couldn't turn any of the rest of them down," he said.
Burke said the trustees also found a verbal request by Mrs. Munz, who wanted practically all of the income used in the East Texas area where her father established the timber enterprises.
Most of the grants given by the foundation go to East Texas projects to build the areas "quality of life," said Burke.
Thousands of dollars have gone to libraries, a particular interest of the Temple family for decades.

Fighter pilots to train for supersonics

VALENTINE, Texas (AP) — Residents in this sparsely populated region of West Texas say they're "holding our breath" now that Air Force pilots can begin supersonic training flights over their heads.
In an agreement worked out in September, fighter pilots from Holloman Air Force Base in New Mexico can begin the flights over West Texas and southwestern New Mexico anytime after New Year's Day.
They haven't started yet, however, and Holloman officials say the actual number and frequency of the low-level test flights won't be known until the F-15 fighter wing uses all available flight time within White Sands Missile Range.
In West Texas, some residents still oppose the flights and at one time had said they might file a lawsuit against the Air Force to stop them.
But Ralph Voigt, a Fort Davis-area rancher who led opposition, said Thursday no court action has been initiated.
"We're not going to do anything until they start and we get some reaction from the people under the flights," he told the El Paso Times. "We're just holding our breath."
For five years, the Air Force and officials from New Mexico and Texas disagreed over a plan to expand Holloman's airspace to restricted areas over Catron County, N.M., and Valentine, Texas.
Under the new Air Force plan, the 49th Tactical Fighter Wing is authorized to fly up to 300 missions per month over each area. The flights will be performed at 15,000 feet above sea level, or about 8,000 feet above ground in Catron County.
The test flights, to be conducted between 7 a.m. and nightfall on weekdays, will be phased in over a nine-month period, Holloman spokeswoman Linda Shepard said.
In the past, Holloman conducted up to 900 supersonic flights a month over the Army-controlled White Sands range. The available flight time, however, is expected to drop to 600 flights per month because of increased weapons testing at the range, according to recent Air Force studies.
Albuquerque lawyer John Kelly, who has represented Catron County in the Air Force dispute, said Thursday a monitoring system required by the September agreement will be set up in the county by April 1.
If results from the Air Force-sponsored monitoring show noise levels beyond military estimates, the Air Force has agreed to adjust the training plan.
No such monitoring system has been proposed for the Valentine area, a Pentagon spokesman said Thursday.

Kept gun on hostages

Woman skyjacker shot

CLEVELAND (AP) — A woman who tried to commandeer a jetliner kept her gun trained on her hostages and said little before being shot by police who stormed the plane to end the 6½-hour ordeal, passengers said Saturday.

"The gun was always at our faces," said Bonnie Esterquest, 75, one of the last four hostages aboard the Pan American Airways Boeing 727 on Friday. "She was totally uncompassionate."

The assailant took control of Flight 558 bound for New York about 3 p.m. Friday and took seven hostages after shooting an attendant at a boarding gate.

She released three hostages about two hours into the ordeal, and police stormed the plane after she threatened to harm an 8-month-old baby. One of her bullets hit an officer but did not seriously injure him because of his bullet-proof vest.

Oranette Mays, 42, of Cleveland, was shot in the chest by SWAT officers from the FBI and Cleveland police to end the standoff, said John Dunn, an FBI spokesman.

Mrs. Mays was in stable condition Saturday at Cleveland Metropolitan General Hospital after surgery, the hospital said. No charges had been filed against her, Dunn said.

"She continually pointed the gun at us," said Frank Esterquest, 75, at a news conference given by police and the hostages. "She was rather impassive all the way through. She didn't say much more than 'No' the whole time."

The assailant refused to let him get food from the galley for the baby, he said. Esterquest, his wife Bonnie, Cynthia Shisler, 27, and Mrs. Shisler's daughter, Laura, were the last four hostages aboard.

Mrs. Esterquest said the woman mumbled, usually answered questions by shaking her head, and ignored Mrs. Shisler and her baby. She said the woman's demand to go to Rio de Janeiro seemed to be an afterthought.

"She wanted to go to Brazil but she had to think for a long time before she came up with that word," Mrs. Esterquest said.

"We're trying to run down some background on her," said Dunn. He said authorities had trouble determining the woman's first name, which was listed on various papers she had as Dorothy, Loretta, Oranette, Ornetta and Oranette. Authorities settled on the name Oranette.

Dunn would say nothing about the woman's mental history. A psychiatrist who helped in the negotiations described the woman as paranoid-schizophrenic.

Mary Ray, a neighbor who moved a year and a half ago into the four-unit apartment building on the city's east side where Ms. Mays lived, said she scarcely knew the woman.

"She lives across the hall," Mrs. Ray said. "She was here when I moved in. She spoke now and then, but sometimes you'd speak to her and she wouldn't even say anything. I got so I wouldn't even say anything to her. I don't know anything about her."

The wounded gate attendant, Jeanette Rivera, 32, of Bay Shore, N.Y., was listed in satisfactory condition at Southwest General Hospital with gunshot wound to the hip, a hospital spokeswoman said.

'Do-gooder' finds parents of over 1,000 lost children

CARSON CITY, Nev. (AP) — Some were parted by war, others by the stigma of out-of-wedlock pregnancy. But 1,200 of those adopted children have been reunited with their biological parents by Emma May Vilardi, who has 25,000 more people waiting "for a face resembling their own."

"The most frequent reaction is that they feel free for the first time and feel like a great weight has been lifted from them," said Mrs. Vilardi, a former municipal historian from Kearny, N.J., who has been matching children with their natural mothers for a decade.

Mrs. Vilardi, 62, runs the International Soundex Reunion Registry, and she contacts agencies worldwide for help. She charges no fees, but accepts donations.

"I've been accused of being a do-gooder, but I believe everyone has equal rights. And I feel denial of genetic and biological information is a denial of a person's own heritage and own self-identity," said Mrs. Vilardi, who has a 41-year-old son.

Most people who seek Mrs. Vilardi's help were given up for adoption as infants. Some come from families split up by divorce, war or institutionalization.

Mrs. Vilardi tries to match background information supplied by the applicant with her reference material. Until recently, she did it all manually. Now she is beginning to use a computer, but, to protect confidentiality, she never places names in the computer.

Sometimes adopted children and their mothers simultaneously seek help from Mrs. Vilardi. When the background check reveals strikingly similar information, the two are told how to contact each other.

Mrs. Vilardi got into the registry work by helping senior citizens who were having trouble getting Social Security benefits due to inadequate birth records. Her own mother, who was adopted, had a similar problem.

Her mother, who was orphaned at the age of 4, didn't have any interest in discovering who her natural parents were until she was ready to retire in her 60s. Mrs. Vilardi said her mother's pension was held up because she couldn't prove she was a citizen.

Crackdown slated

DALLAS (AP) — Overweight and speeding tractor-trailers will be the target of a police crackdown designed to lower the number of highway accidents in which trucks are involved, officers say.

The program could use surveillance, including undercover officers with radar guns and airplane patrols, as early as March, said police traffic division Capt. Leo Savell.

Police will ask suburbs and state agencies to join in the crackdown, aimed partly at what Savell called the "deadly combination" of trucks with inexperienced drivers and mechanical problems.

Two years ago, a police study showed that trucks were involved in three times as many fatal accidents as cars on Dallas area freeways. Police said trucks, which make up a small percentage of highway traffic, are responsible for a disproportionate share of fatal accidents.

Doctor says hospital employees, not he, are the heroes

By DAVID SEDENO
Associated Press Writer
SAN SABA, Texas (AP) — He's a foul-mouthed, good ol' boy of a doctor who includes Willie Nelson and Kris Kristofferson among his friends and who gave up his fast life for the slow pace of a small West Texas hospital.

But life for Dr. Roy Lee hasn't been very peaceful these days. The county's lone doctor has been jailed three times and sprung by his employees and patients.

He blames his fiscal woes — his jailings have resulted from disputes over child-support payments and delinquent debts — on the system, the bureaucratic delays in Medicare reimbursement that pushes him into a cash crunch.

His battles have turned into a personal crusade, and have won him both backers and enemies.

Lee, 48, maintains he would have been able to pay his bills if the money would have come back in time. Ninety percent of the patients at the 50-bed hospital are on Medicare and very few on private insurance programs, he says.

Therefore, he's behind on his bills, staffers get paid late and, sometimes, he winds up in jail.

But Lee, who four years ago bought the Central Texas hospital from the county when it was losing more than $200,000 a year, doesn't turn anyone away, even if he knows he won't be paid immediately.

"But you can't pay your bills with your emotion, your concern," said Lee. "Everybody, I think, pretty well accepts that I care a lot about these people. And I really do want to do things for them, but I have never yet been able to deposit it in the bank and write a check on it and pay a bill."

"And my creditors, the suppliers of the hospital, tell me that they really admire and appreciate what I'm doing ... but 'we have to have our money.'"

Lee said his employees are the reason the hospital continues operating. He says some worked Christmas Day for half a day's pay.

"They want a hospital; they want health care. Of course, they expect to be paid," he said. "Most of them make a living. They're not out here trying to get a dollar-an-hour raise, plus one month paid vacation ... They're trying to survive. They do it and they're proud. They really care about medicine and people."

Lee's staff is dedicated, hospital employees said.

"I feel a loyalty to the town and Dr. Lee," nurse Riddi Broussard said, adding that townspeople either love or hate the lone doctor for the 6,000 San Saba county residents.

Lee was a bit of an oddity when he arrived here from Pasadena, a Houston suburb, four years ago. He wasn't the stereotypical family physician — no suit, tie or 9-to-5 days, and not conservative, by any means.

Rather, he was a loud, colorful, country boy who liked to play his fiddle and guitar in his spare time and was soon accepted for his medical skills.

"When I came here I told them I was going to practice medicine, not preach. There were already too many preachers here," he said.

Actor Tommy Lee Jones, the star of "The Executioner's Song" and "Coal Miner's Daughter" who has a ranch outside of town, has grown to appreciate Lee.

"What I do know is that we have a good doctor. ... This is rugged country. You can get hurt," Jones said, adding that Lee's diagnoses are excellent.

"It's such a great asset to this county to have a doctor who is aware of that, who is available and who recognizes the symptoms as they appear in this country with our drinking water, with our dietary habits, with our lifestyle," Jones said. "He's familiar with it. He's close to it. He loves us; we know it. I think everybody feels real good about him."

Lee spent 12 years at Pasadena Memorial Hospital, including a stint as chief of staff. In 1976, he was involved in a truck accident, was in a coma three weeks, but six weeks after the accident was performing an appendectomy.

Lee, whose celebrity friends include country-western stars Mickey Gilley and Waylon Jennings in addition to Nelson and Kristofferson, said he had had enough of the good life and wanted to repay his promise to God after he survived the accident.

"I went through that phase, made lots of money, but I didn't find it all that satisfying," Lee says. "Life in the fast track was a lot of fun. I'd had a lot of good things. I had been rewarded until then. I knew I felt something I had to do."

The hospital that Lee runs is located on the western edge of town and is not up to the quality he would like. It has beds for 50 patients, but it rarely is full.

Lee usually sleeps in a hospital room, but does have a large white wood-frame house whose living room is packed with musical instruments that he and friends use frequently to pass the time.

He has pictures of friends at honky-tonks hanging on one of the walls and stacks of newspaper clippings about his tribulations in a box. But he said he doesn't think he's doing anything special, just trying to correct a wrong without much hope of success.

Rural hospitals are greatly discriminated against in federal programs — such as Medicare — that try to control spending at metropolitan hospitals, but that end up hurting rural hospitals even more, he says.

"What it really boils down to is a system that really will not maintain itself in an area such as this — where you have such a high ratio of Medicare patients and a relatively poor agrarian community."

"There is no way in the world you can make it work without some kind of outside intervention," Lee said, adding that he is that only other outside source.

Bill McCutchen, acting regional administrator of the Health Care Financing Administration, the government agency in charge of Medicare and Medicaid payments, said he talks frequently with Lee about his complaints.

"I'm not aware of any immediate problem right now," McCutchen said. "It just takes some time, and it's very important that they (doctors) submit complete documentation."

Claims have been delayed in the past, he said, by incomplete documentation or other questions about procedures at Lee's hospital. In addition, he said Medicare's procedures don't discriminate against small hospitals.

Lee said not all of his problems are connected with Medicare, but reiterates that if Medicare had handled the reimbursements promptly, he would have been able to pay his bills.

In June 1983, he spent about five hours in the county jail over problems dealing with his divorce.

He was jailed again in December 1983 for failing to pay some $4,000 in child support payments for his son.

And last November, he was jailed in Travis County for contempt of court charges for failing to attend several hearings in Austin in a case alleging non-payment of a bill. Lee had paid the bill, although months late, but not court costs. An anonymous benefactor paid the court costs and Lee was released.

Each other time, townspeople and friends, including Houston attorney Richard "Racehorse" Haynes, did what they could to get the doctor out of jail. No patients ever were in danger because Lee was in constant contact with his staff while in jail.

Without Lee, the hospital would lose its Medicare certification and would have to close.

Says Florence Hanks, who bought some of the hospital's stock after it was seized by the Internal Revenue Service:

"Dr. Lee is a good doctor, but the heroes of this hospital are these nurses," she says, pointing to a group sitting at a nurse's station. "People here do not work for diamonds and new clothes and new cars. They're working to survive."

Even Ms. Hanks does what she can to help out at the hospital, calling it her "security blanket."

But others are not as content with Lee.

Mayor Joe Ragsdale told the San Angelo Standard-Times, "He doesn't take care of his doctor business. He's his own worst enemy. He's a good doctor, but he'd rather play his guitar and see his horses than tend to business."

"The town doesn't support him like it did, just because of the jail stuff," Ragsdale said. "When he first came here, everyone like him, and gave him a fair shake. He's brought this on himself."

Lee admits money is the main problem and is considering selling the hospital, but says the problems will not end. Someone else will have to handle the problems.

He says hospital costs need to go down in order to help the elderly in rural areas.

Fight looms over proposed conservation program cuts

By DON KENDALL
AP Farm Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The National Association of Conservation Districts, is gearing up for a fight with the Reagan administration over a proposal to eliminate federal aid to protect the nation's land and water.

According to the proposal put forth last month by the Office of Management and Budget, there will be an effort to "terminate agricultural conservation programs." That would save about $600 million a year, the OMB said.

Steve Meyer, executive secretary of the association, said Thursday that "we were really taken aback when they said do away with it completely." It had been assumed that the administration would continue previous budget routines by targeting specific programs for cuts.

The conservation proposal would affect programs in the 1986 fiscal year, which begins next Oct. 1. President Reagan is expected to send his annual budget recommendations to Congress in late January or early February.

Meyer and other conservationists weren't the only ones taken aback by OMB's proposal to eliminate the programs. Agriculture Secretary John R. Block has been protesting the blueprint for conservation, although he has not gone public with his dissent.

John Ochs, an aide, declined to say whether Block has actively protested the proposed conservation cutbacks.

The overall plan to do away with agricultural conservation money has been attributed to budget director David Stockman, who also wants to prune crop subsidies and do away with milk price supports.

One of the effects of cutting back so sharply in federal conservation spending would be the virtual elimination of the Soil Conservation Service, the USDA agency that has provided technical help to farmers protect land and water resources since the Dust Bowl era of the 1930s.

"As we understand the proposal, Stockman would basically eliminate the SCS," Meyer said in a telephone interview.

If more than $600 million is trimmed from conservation programs for fiscal 1986, it would be "close to total program elimination," Meyer said. "It looks like the technical assistance aspect would be eliminated completely."

The SCS has a nationwide system of state, district and county offices. Its employees work closely with nearly 3,000 local conservation districts, which are run by more than 17,000 elected or appointed officials. Those officials include farmers, business people and others who have an interest in land and water resources.

At the national level, the privately financed, non-government NACD represents the national network — which is tied in closely with the SCS, the federal agency that would lose many of its offices and 14,000 employees if conservation funding is cut as much as proposed.

But Meyer said he thinks "there'll be fairly broad support for keeping the conservation programs" pretty much as they are now.

With conservation programs reaching into the roots over almost every farming and small town, their appeal has become well entrenched on Capitol Hill.

Common market still a trouble spot for U.S. farmers

WASHINGTON (AP) — One of the main trouble spots for U.S. farm exports is the 10-nation Common Market, and a new analysis by the Agriculture Department indicates little chance for open Community or EC — has declined each year since 1980, when the value of the American dollar was relatively low against the currencies of most countries.

In the fiscal year that ended last Sept. 30, sales to the Common Market countries totaled $6.71 billion. That was down from $7.63 billion in 1982-83; $8.89 billion in 1981-82; and $8.92 billion in 1980-81. The record was $9.9 billion in 1979-80.

Although U.S. farm exports in general have been in a downward trend the past few years, sales to the Common Market show some problems of their own.

For example, in the fiscal year that just ended, overall export values actually increased 10 percent to $38 billion. Sales to the Common Market countries, however, dropped 12 percent.

The department's Economic Research Service says this week in a new issue of FATUS — Foreign Agricultural Trade of the United States — that "continued strength of the dollar made it difficult for U.S. products to compete" in the 10-nation trading bloc last year.

"In addition, sluggish economic recovery and continued high unemployment rates in Western Europe hurt the demand for agricultural products, particularly for livestock products and imported feed ingredients," the report said.

Looking at 1985, analysts said the situation is not likely to improve unless the value of the dollar weakens.

"Continued sluggish economic growth, weak demand for livestock products, and a record EC grain crop will depress EC imports," the report said. "A further increase in agricultural self-sufficiency will mean stiffer competition among all exporters for the EC market in 1985."

As to the future, Common

Market policies probably will not encourage greater livestock production because of "the financial and political problems associated with surpluses" of milk and other commodities. Growth in the poultry industry is expected to be slower.

Thus, the report said, demand for corn and other feedstuffs probably will be stagnant. Meanwhile, European farmers have not been idle.

"Advances in technology and favorable fertilizer prices are expected to promote additional surplus grain production," the report said. "This surplus will displace imported corn, and the demand for U.S. corn will likely continue to decline."

Also, the rapid growth in the European imports of protein-rich soybeans and soybean meal during the last 10 to 20 years "is expected to slow considerably as the EC continues to dispose of surplus skimmed milk powder through livestock feeding and promotes expansion of protein feed production."

The outlook for U.S. exports of other commodities to the Common Market countries also is bleak at this time as the bloc's policy continues to seek self-sufficiency in the agricultural sector and a cut in imports.

"Given the pessimistic underlying supply-and-demand relationships, a weakening of the dollar offers the only optimistic opportunity for a significant rebound in U.S. agricultural exports to the EC," the report said.

Although sales values have declined sharply, sales to the Common Market countries are still considered a vital part of the U.S. agricultural export picture.

Sales to Latin America totaled $5.28 billion in 1983-84; Africa, $2.87 billion; European countries not in the Common Market, $2.55 billion.

Noxious weed district balloting underway

Absentee balloting for the formation of a Noxious Weed Control District is underway in the Gray County clerk's office on the second floor of the Gray County Court House in Pampa.

The election will decide whether the district will be formed. Voters also will be deciding on a 6 cents per acre levy for the district, County Clerk Wanda Carter said.

If the district is formed, the levy will be assessed against landowners in the district area.

The Gray County portion of the district would include basically the northeast section of the county, Carter said. The district would extend into Precinct 3 and parts of Precinct 1 (Laketon precinct).

The election will be conducted Jan. 19. Absentee ballots can be cast in the County Clerk's office from 8:30 a.m. to noon and from 1 to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday until 5 p.m. Jan. 15, Carter said.

Only residents living outside the city limits can vote in the election, she said. While the levy will affect all landowners in the Noxious Weed Control District, only those landowners actually living outside the city limits may vote in the election, she stated.

If approved, the district also will include portions of Roberts and Carson Counties.

East Texas herb farm a family operation

By ROY LINSON
Langview Morning Journal
GILMER, Texas (AP) — In the last few years as people seem to have become more appreciative of the past, their nostalgic interest in continental foods, gardening, ecology and crafts has sparked a revival in the growth and use of herbs.

Although herbs have been around as long as mankind many people are unaware of their many uses, says Dan Wilson of Gilmer, who with other members of his family, runs an herb farm. Wilson, who holds a master's degree in agriculture from Stephen F. Austin State University and teaches part time at Tyler Junior College's Ornamental Horticulture Department, serves as production supervisor of The Wilson Brothers Farm, located just off Texas 271, 9 1/2 miles north of the Gilmer city limits.

Began in January 1984, the farm now produces more than 20 varieties of herbs, which are sold both retail and wholesale.

The other farm owners include Wilson's mother, Anne Lindsay, a Spring Hill Junior High counselor who also is president of the Texas Herb Growers Association; his grandmother, Annie Avery, whose husband, John, served as superintendent of the Gilmer ISD in the 1940s; his brother Tim; and his wife, Cornelia.

Each member adds a special area of expertise to the family venture, Wilson said. His mother's primary interest is in the use of herbs, while his grandmother has an almost magical touch when it comes to propagating plants. Tim and Cornelia, both of whom also have other jobs, are the jacks-of-all-trades on the farm.

"When we first started, we started with every kind of herb you ever saw and some more," Wilson said.

"However, some herbs wouldn't sell — there's not a big demand for catnip," he said. So the group cut their inventory back to include only herbs used in cooking, herbs used to make potpourri and sachets, medicinal herbs and a few more that transcend all categories.

"This first year has been an experimental phase," Wilson said. "We've been to a few craft shows for exposure but we have not started an advertising campaign. Next year we'll be advertising for people to come out here."

Over the winter the family is discussing several plans for the springtime. These plans include a pick-your-own operation, which will include a variety of fruits and vegetables in addition to the herbs, and garden tours on how to grow and use herbs.

"When people think of Wilson Brothers Farms I want them to think, 'Let's go see what they've got,'" he said.

Right now what the farm has are a dozen or so outside beds filled with herbs, plowed fields and a greenhouse full of plants whose very names evoke memories of Biblical stories, exotic Arabian Night fables and mystical Oriental adventures.

Shelves filled with such familiar greenery as parsley, oregano, chives and thyme are mixed with the more extraordinary plants such as the licorice-flavored anise marigold, white-spiked hyssop, spicy fennel and the purplish-white-flowered pineapple mint.

To those unfamiliar with herbs, the plants and their uses may seem a confusing maze. But it's all really very simple, according to Mrs. Lindsay.

"Herbs don't take a great deal of care," she said. "You don't need a green thumb." Anyplace, no matter how small, will do — including a hanging pot in the kitchen window or a small plot outside the kitchen door.

And with the renewed interest in herbs has come the publication of many books on the subject. "There are lots of books available but what you need to do is get books written by herb growers in the South," she said.

Although she had been growing a few herbs for her own use for many years, Mrs. Lindsay really became interested about a year ago when she met Odena Brannam of Ladonia, the founder of the Texas Herb Growers Association.

From that meeting, and Dan's desire to go into some type of agricultural business following his graduation, came the idea for the family farm.

"Mrs. Brannam says it's ground floor time for this business," Mrs. Lindsay said, "but I think it's in the basement."

She said growing herbs, whether for one's own use or for resale commercially, is not an expensive venture. "You could start commercially with several hundred dollars like we did," she said. Or a $20-$25 investment in plants would be more than enough to start a private garden.

Currently the association has 50-100 members from all areas of the state. As research into the commercial growth and use of herbs continues at Texas Tech University, Mrs. Lindsay said she expected the industry to prosper and grow in the state.

Right now, however, she and her son agreed that educating the public in the use of herbs is important. When customers visit the farm, both will take as much time as necessary to explain not only how to care for a plant but how to use it as well as providing several handouts filled with recipes and other information.

Also, Mrs. Lindsay has been speaking to garden club groups and is currently co-authoring an herb cookbook with Edith Perry, Gregg County homemaking extension agent.

"I just get more and more excited about herbs," she said. "Herbs have been used since way before Christ and there's lots of tradition behind each herb." For instance, rosemary is the herb of remembrance, while tarragon symbolizes unselfish sharing.

Since the other family members also share Mrs. Lindsay's excitement, Wilson said any and all of them would be glad to work at the farm on a full-time basis.

American meat exports promoted

WASHINGTON (AP) — When it comes to agricultural exports, beef and pork rank far behind the big dollar commodities such as corn, wheat, soybeans, cotton and rice. But a lot of people are working to put American steaks, roasts and chops into big-time foreign markets.

The potential is great, says the U.S. Meat Export Federation, a private association of farm and industry groups. And there has been some success in gaining support.

For example, the Foreign Agricultural Service, an agency of the Agriculture Department, has allocated $1.5 million to the federation for the fiscal year that began on Oct. 1, a 17 percent increase from 1983-84.

The allocation is part of the agency's cooperative program to help finance efforts by private trade groups to boost U.S. market development abroad. Many commodities and associations are involved.

In 1983-84, exports of livestock products — which includes meat — were a record value of $3.46 billion. They are expected to rise further to around $3.5 billion in 1984-85.

Total U.S. agricultural exports last year were worth about $38 billion and are expected to decline in 1984-85 to $36.5 billion. Exports of livestock products, in other words, are still rising despite the overall decline.

One reason for the growing interest in meat exports is a feeling that has existed for years that the United States should, if possible, export more finished or partially finished products instead of relying so much on selling raw materials abroad.

Meat is an example of exporting the finished product. Why not let an American farmer feed grain to a steer or hog instead of selling corn to a foreign livestock operator?

The Meat Export Federation has an overseas network of representatives who help sell U.S. products while keeping an eye on possible opportunities for market expansion.

A recent example has been a decision by Singapore to phase out domestic pork production, which has opened the door to a $162 million annual market for foreign pork. The United States is in the thick of this rush, but so are other countries, including China.

But Singapore is only a small part of the campaign to move more U.S. meat into foreign markets, according to federation officials. Japan is now the leading importer of U.S. variety meats, with shipments up 20 percent to 30 percent the past year.

Another example of the growing support for meat exports is a recent $25,000 grant from the California Beef Council to help the federation complete an in-depth research project on Japan's domestic beef situation.

The federation said in a recent newsletter that the project will identify markets and opportunities for U.S. meat in Japan "for both large-scale and medium-scale U.S. suppliers."

Japan, of course, for years has been the No. 1 foreign market for U.S. agricultural commodities overall. The bulk, however, has been grain and soybean products.

The federation sees some indications that U.S. meat sales continue to show promise in Japan and some other Asian countries:

—Household expenditures in Japan for beef increased 2.3 times between 1978 and 1983.

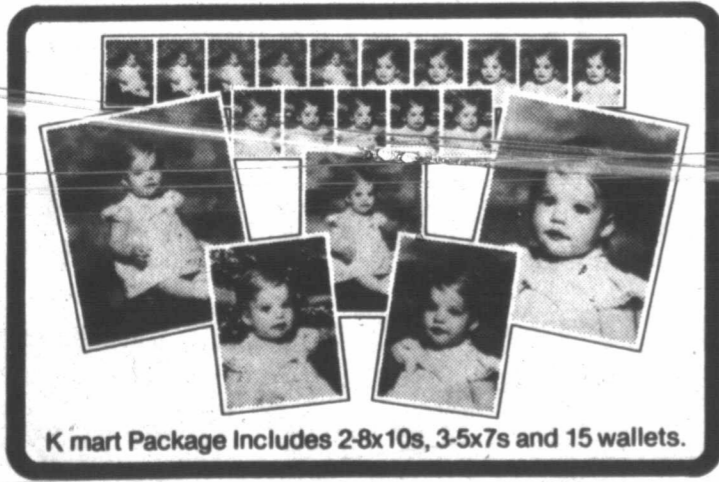

—Growth in Japan's pork industry is expected to be confined to the processing sector, as some sources "believe the market for table pork has reached a saturation level."

—Taiwan, Hong Kong and South Korea are other good markets for U.S. meats in Asia. Imports in Taiwan and Hong Kong have risen sharply from last year.

Other encouraging developments reported by the federation include an increase in U.S. meat sales to the Middle East after some decline in beef sales to Saudi Arabia earlier this year.

"Importers in the region began importing products from other sources, but dissatisfied with the quality, they are returning to U.S. meats," said Buddy Yeiser, director of the federation's European office.

Local school separates 'hot lunchers' from 'carriers'

By CHRISTOPHER CALLAHAN Associated Press Writer

LINCOLN, R.I. (AP) — In the lunchroom of the Saylesville Elementary School, all children are divided into two classes: the "hot lunchers" and the "brown baggers."

The separation of children has caused a feud between the suburban school system and a local family. The Rhode Island chapter of the American Civil Liberties Union has entered the fray, claiming that the school is breaking federal regulations.

At issue is Principal Samuel Williams' policy of segregating children in the school's lunchroom on the basis of whether they bring their lunch from home or buy a hot lunch at the school.

Williams says his policy helps maintain order and gets the children out of the lunchroom faster, giving them more time to play.

But the DeQuattro family and the ACLU say the year-old policy arbitrarily keeps students from mingling freely during lunchtime. Further, they claim, it violates federal law by discriminating against students in the federally subsidized school lunch program.

The town School Committee has refused to change the policy, and the state Education Department has sent the ACLU complaint to the federal Department of Education. A decision from Washington is pending.

The policy requires students who buy lunch, the "hot lunchers," to sit at the six tables closest to the food-server. The students who bring their lunch, the "brown baggers" or "carriers," are required to eat at the far six tables.

The ACLU complaint, filed last September, said the federal law states: "The children (participating in the subsidized-lunch program) shall not be required to use a separate dining area."

"There's much less movement, therefore it's much safer for the children," Williams said. "The children can now eat in a calmer, more relaxed environment because the lunchroom runs more effectively."

That is not the way 12-year-old Sherry DeQuattro, who bought her lunch in the sixth grade at Saylesville last year, saw it. Sherry, who now attends a junior high school, spoke out against the policy and got in touch with the Rhode Island chapter of the ACLU.

"I think it's important for any citizen of the United States to stand up for their rights," said Anthony DeQuattro, Sherry's father. "I teach my kids that they should go out and fight for what they believe in... They live in the United States, not Russia."

The DeQuattros have two younger children in the Saylesville school, which has 320 students. Sherry said she and her friends did not like the policy because it prevented them from sitting with some of their schoolmates. Neither the family nor the school would reveal whether or not Sherry was in the federally subsidized lunch program.

Steven Brown, executive director of the Rhode Island ACLU, agreed with her. "Individual parents say to me, 'keep it up, we think it's good.'"

And teachers serving as lunchroom monitors said they believed the students were unaware of any problem in the lunchroom. "I think it's more of a grown-ups' problem," said one monitor.

In interviews during a recent lunch period, more than a dozen students questioned were split evenly about whether they liked the policy.

Andrew Duffell, a second-grader, said he likes the new policy. "When you have to bring up your trays... you don't have to walk that far," he said.

But third-grader Chris Hunter said he told his mother he does not like the separation. "Before you could sit with anyone we wanted," he said.

"Now we have to sit here," chimed in his classmate, Seth Blais.

Dr. John Ambrogi, superintendent of the Lincoln school system, took issue with Brown. "There's no way of knowing which youngsters are getting free or reduced lunches," he said.

Williams said the policy has the widespread support of parents.

Steelers return steel curtain

MIAMI (AP) — It has been five years since the Pittsburgh Steelers last played in a Super Bowl and just two years since the Miami Dolphins reached the National Football League's championship game.

Yet, with the emergence of second-year quarterback Dan Marino, it is the Dolphins whose character has undergone a major alteration in the years since they were beaten 27-17 by Washington in Super Bowl XVII.

The Steelers, who have won all four Super Bowls they've played — most recently 31-19 over the Los Angeles Rams in Super Bowl XIV — have only four starters remaining from that Steel Curtain defense of the 1970s: nose tackle Gary Dunn, linebacker Robin Cole, cornerback Dwayne Woodruff and safety Donnie Shell. Linebacker Jack Lambert, who missed most of the season with toe and ankle injuries, was reactivated by the Steelers Friday and should see action in a reserve role.

Yet they are winning now the way they did then — with defense.

"There's been a big transition in Pittsburgh's personnel. They've got a lot of young players," Miami Coach Don Shula said as Sunday's American Conference championship game approached. "But they're still playing great defense and that's what they played in the '70s."

And with Mark Malone coming on at quarterback, you see them doing a lot of the same things that they did so successfully in the past," Shula said.

The running game is no longer Franco Harris and Rocky Bleier. The passing game is no longer Terry Bradshaw to Lynn Swann, John Stallworth, who spent so many years playing in Swann's shadow before gaining All-Pro stature on his own, and center Mike Webster are the only starters from the Steelers' Super Bowl offense.

Now it's Frank Pollard and Walter Abercrombie running with the ball and Stallworth and rookie Louis Lipps catching it from Malone, who replaced injured starter David Woodley midseason.

The Dolphins' game today centers on Marino, who broke almost every major passing record in his second pro season and his first full one throwing for 5,084 yards and 48 touchdowns.

In 1984, Miami's offense was first in the league, but its running game was only 16th in the 28-team league.

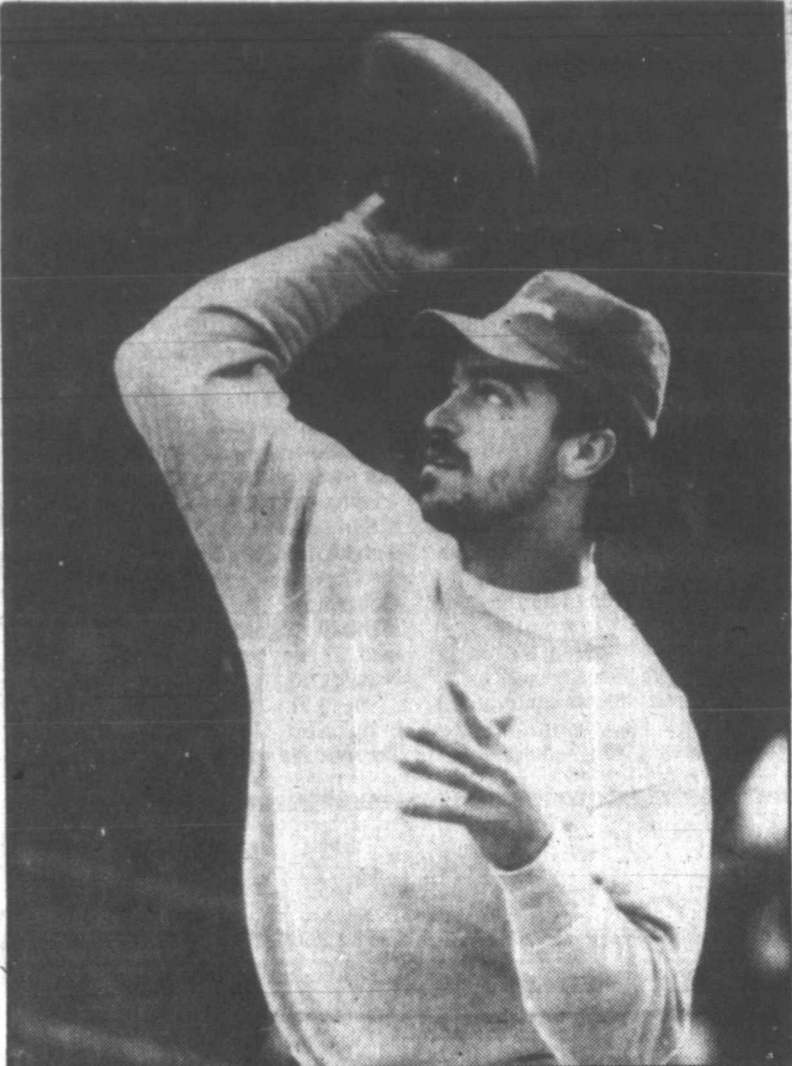

Part of that was due to the loss of Andra Franklin, the Dolphins' rushing leader the past two years, who was sidelined in the second game with a knee injury.

But mostly it was Marino. "Our offensive philosophy is completely different," Shula said.

"We're throwing the ball — that's the basis of our offense, utilizing the strength of a Marino. But it's not only him. Along with Marino, Mark Duper came on and now, this year, Mark Clayton has developed. But I still believe you have to have a running game."

And the defense, once the NFL's strongest and most consistent in the days of Jake Scott, Dick Anderson, Manny Fernandez, Bill Stanfill, Nick Buoniconti, Vern Den Herder and the rest of the "No-Name Defense," finished 1984 ranked a mediocre 19th overall and 22nd against the rush.

Steelers' quarterback Mark Malone prepares for his meeting with the Dolphins for the AFC championship today.

Bears go up against 49ers in unpredictable playoffs

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Quarterback Joe Montana made a 53-yard run for the San Francisco 49ers last weekend, and running back Walter Payton threw a 19-yard touchdown pass for the Chicago Bears.

"In this type of atmosphere, the playoffs," Montana said, "you can't take anything for granted."

The Bears, coming off a 23-19 playoff victory over the Washington Redskins, will play their first championship game since 1963 when they meet the 49ers Sunday at Candlestick Park for the National Football Conference title. The winner will meet the American Conference champion, the Miami Dolphins or Pittsburgh Steelers, in Super Bowl XIX.

Football fans taking things for granted see a Dolphins-49ers spectacular Jan. 20 at nearby Stanford Stadium.

Miami was 14-2 during the regular season, San Francisco 15-1.

Montana and record-breaking Dan Marino of the Dolphins were the NFL's leading passers, and their teams scored a total of 988 points.

But Chicago, which won the NFC Central title with a 10-6 record, has the NFL's all-time leading rusher in Payton, and the Bears ranked first in rushing this season. They were way down in passing yardage, however, partly because of quarterback injuries. Former backup passer Steve Fuller, now starting, hit on nine of 15 passes against Washington.

"He's playing well," San Francisco Coach Bill Walsh said. "But if he has to throw 30 or 35 times in a game, he might not be so sharp, because the Bears are not used to throwing that many times."

Montana, who led the 49ers to a 21-10 victory over the New York Giants in a playoff last week, often throws 30 times per game. His 1984 passing totals through last weekend's playoff game were 3,939 yards and 31 TDs. And unlike 1981, when the 49ers were Super Bowl champions, Montana has the help of a strong running attack, led by Wendell Tyler.

The 49ers' quarterback, sacked only 22 times during the regular season, often scrambles out of trouble and for first downs. He was almost apologetic about the 53-yard dash against the Giants, however, explaining that, "I was too tired to get out of bounds."

Coach Mike Ditka's Bears led the league in defense, allowing only 241 yards per game and breaking a league record with 72 sacks. The key to the NFC title game could be how much pressure that hard-charging defense puts on the elusive Montana.

San Francisco allowed the fewest points, 227, of any NFL team this season, and the 49ers' defensive unit has allowed only two touchdowns over the past three games.

"It's going to be a challenge for us," Ditka said. "But we've been up against the wall a number of times this season, and all we do is respond to the challenge."

"We only play one way. We try to play hard, and they play the same way. It ought to be a great game from that standpoint."

A most embarrassing season for Longhorns

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Longhorns in only three games lost a chance to go to the Cotton Bowl, a Southwest Conference championship and, perhaps more grating to their fans, national respect in football.

Make no mistake: grumbling about coach Fred Akers has started — in spoken word and published letters.

At a recent holiday party, a University of Texas faculty member said he had never been so embarrassed, even when Texas was 1-9 under coach Ed Price in 1956, as he was during Texas' 37-12 loss to Texas A&M before the third largest home crowd in Longhorn history.

A UT regent standing nearby grimaced and shook his head. The latest issue of Texas Monthly magazine briefly mentions complaints about Akers under the headline, "Better Dead Than Fred."

Others say it is ridiculous to come down so hard on Akers, whose winning percentage at Texas in eight seasons is 77.1 percent, only 0.3 percent behind former coach Darrell Royal, who won two national titles in 20 years.

Akers' supporters note that the scholarship limit has been dropped to 30, putting Texas on a more equal footing with other teams. In Royal's years, Texas at times would sign 50 recruits while other teams were getting smaller numbers of leftovers.

Akers was asked how he would like for his teams to be remembered, and he said, "As winning teams."

It hasn't been easy, because his teams have been heavily penalized, and there always seems to be a rash of injuries.

Excluding bowl games, Akers' Texas teams have been penalized 600 times for 5,990 yards, the opponents 437 times for 3,903 yards. Also, each year Texas has been whittled down by injuries.

This year was no different as 20 key players missed at least one game with an injury, and the Longhorns added a new dimension they could not overcome — 51 turnovers, compared with 30 for their opponents, in a 7-4-1 season.

Nevertheless, Akers has never had a losing season at Texas, and at midseason his team was ranked No. 1. Even in November, the Longhorns still led the Southwest Conference race for the host spot in the Cotton Bowl before things began to unravel.

Six Texas turnovers led to a 24-10 Baylor victory at Waco, which loosened the Longhorns' hold on the SWC championship. But a victory over A&M at home would still have salvaged at least an SWC tri-championship.

A&M, however, pushed Texas around for 455 yards total offense, and the 25-point victory margin was the Aggies' largest in the series since 1925.

The loss left Texas with only one bowl choice, the first Freedom Bowl at Anaheim, Calif. By accepting, the Longhorns kept intact Akers' record of going to a bowl game each year, but many fans felt Texas should have stayed home. They were right.

"It's almost a can't-win situation," said a team spokesman who asked not to be identified by name. "If we win against Iowa, we get at most a 60 on a scale of 100. If we lose, we fall to a 20."

What the spokesman couldn't have anticipated was a 55-17 mauling by Iowa, 7-4-1, which knocked Texas out of the top 20 teams in college football.

The loss was the most lopsided ever in a bowl game by a Texas Longhorn team, and dropped Akers' bowl record at Texas to 2-6.

Iowa's 55 points were the most scored against Texas since Chicago's 68-0 victory in 1904, and Iowa's 560 total yards were the most ever against a Longhorn defense.

"That's as perfect as I've ever seen a team play," said Akers, and the future for Texas suddenly looked bleak.

Even though Texas returns 36 of 46 of its top players next season, including all-star kickers Jeff Ward and John Tetschik, it loses its two premier players — tackle Tony Degrade, winner of the Lombardi Award as the college lineman of the year, and two-time All-American safety Jerry Gray.

Degrade, with 147, and Gray, with 103, combined for 250 tackles. Gray had seven of the team's 11 pass interceptions.

Akers predicted in preseason that his backfield would be better than 1983, and he said he was "anxious to see" tailback Norman Nunn, a junior college transfer he called "probably the quickest back" at Texas since Chris Gilbert, a 1968 All-American.

Instead, the rushing total fell from 2,228 yards in 1983 to 1,586 this season, and Nunn sat out with a knee injury after gaining 2 yards on one carry. Ronnie Robinson, part of what Akers call the best fullback tandem he has had, also was hurt and gained just 70 yards.

For the first time in years, Texas failed to lead the SWC in any statistical category.

Instant transfusions are needed on offense and defense in 1985, and it appears no donors are in sight.

Knepper ready

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston Astros starting pitcher Bob Knepper is expected to be ready for spring training in late February following arthroscopic knee surgery Friday, an Astros spokesman says.

Knepper suffered torn cartilage in his left knee Wednesday during a workout that caused the knee to lock. Surgery was performed on an out-patient basis at the Douglas Community Hospital in Roseburg, Ore. where Knepper lives in the off-season.

Dr. Stanley Young, who performed the surgery, said Knepper would be able to begin isometric exercises in two to three days and should be ready for the beginning of spring training.

Knepper compiled a 15-10 record last season and had a 3.20 earned run average, which ranked 14th in the National League.

A SPECIAL HUG—Former Boston Celtic great Bill Russell hugs his former coach, Arnold "Red" Auerbach during a pre-game ceremony Friday night honoring Auerbach, now the president of the Celtics. (AP Laserphoto)

Celtics honor "Red"

BOSTON (AP) — Beneath his feet was the famous parquet floor. Above his head were 15 championship flags. All around him were his players, his family, fans and cheers.

Arnold "Red" Auerbach was surrounded by four decades of memories.

And soon, another memory would be hoisted to "Celtic Heaven." He and Bill Russell pulled on one rope, his wife Dot tugged on another, and together they raised to Boston Garden's rafters a banner bearing a green No. 2 on a white background.

The retiring of that number in his honor climaxed a 38-minute ceremony Friday night in which the cigar-smoking mastermind of the Boston Celtics was hailed by National Basketball Association Commissioner David Stern as "an American legend."

In four corners of the court before the game in which the Celtics defeated the New York Knicks 105-94, 36 Celtic players gathered according to the decades in which they played.

When Auerbach, who won nine NBA titles as Boston's coach and six as its general manager, was introduced, he circled the court to a standing ovation and greeted players, including Bob Cousy and Frank Ramsey from the '50s, John Havlicek and Tom Heinsohn from the '60s, Jo Jo White and Paul Silas from the '70s and Larry Bird and his current teammates from the '80s.

The 6-foot-10 Russell, the center who played on 11 championship teams in his 13 years with the Celtics, hugged the 5-foot-10 Auerbach and lifted him off the ground.

"I wouldn't be standing here today if it wasn't for all those guys out there. They're the ones that put the flags up there. I didn't do it."

-Red Auerbach

"I wouldn't be standing here today if it wasn't for all those guys out there," said Auerbach, a member of basketball's Hall of Fame. "They're the ones that put the flags up there. I didn't do it."

Bird spoke for the players and said, "We'd like to thank you for making us a part of this fine tradition. Thank you very much, Red. We love you."

Auerbach's "2" is the 15th number retired by the Celtics. They are arranged on two banners. Like No. 1, retired for the late Walter Brown, the club's first owner, no Celtic player has ever worn No. 2.

Auerbach, 67, coached Boston from 1950 through 1966 and was general manager through last season when the Celtics won their 15th title. He relinquished that post but stayed on as president in an active capacity. "I came out here like it's a swan song," said Auerbach, in his 35th season with the Celtics. "I'm not going anywhere.... I hope I'll be here working with the ball club for many, many years."

In his 20 seasons as an NBA coach, 16 with Boston, he won a record 1,037 games.

Stern announced at the ceremony that the league's coach-of-the-year award would be named the Red Auerbach Trophy because "you're the winningest coach in the history of the National Basketball Association, you're the architect of the most successful sports franchise in the history of all sports and you're the person who has become an American legend, virtually the most important person in making NBA basketball into America's game."

NBA roundup

Bulls halt Bucks' winning streak

The effect was like putting out a runaway fire with a wet blanket as the Chicago Bulls smothered the sizzling Milwaukee Bucks in a National Basketball Association collision.

Quintin Dailey came off the bench to score 26 points and sensational rookie Michael Jordan added 22 to pace the Bulls to a 106-101 victory over the Bucks Friday night, ending Milwaukee's nine-game winning string.

It was only the second loss in 18 games for the red-hot Bulls.

Bulls' Coach Kevin Loughery enjoyed the physical aspects of the game at Chicago Stadium.

"This game is the way an NBA game is supposed to be played—bodies flying all over the place, elbows and arms extended and everybody fighting to get his hands on ball."

Elsewhere in the NBA Friday night, the Boston Celtics, celebrating the retirement of the No. 2 for mentor Red Auerbach, beat the New York Knicks 105-94; the New Jersey Nets tipped the Phoenix Suns 105-98; the Detroit Pistons ripped the Atlanta Hawks 134-111; the Kansas City Kings clouted the Los Angeles Clippers 132-112; the Utah Jazz ran past the Denver Nuggets 118-108; and the Los Angeles Lakers trounced the Portland Trail Blazers 120-95.

The Bulls led just 93-92 with 4:51 left when Jordan hit two layups and a free throw to give Chicago a six-point bulge, and the Bucks never caught up.

Sidney Moncrief led Milwaukee with 29 points and Terry Cummings added 24 points and seven rebounds.

The loss cut the Bucks' lead in the NBA Central Division to four games over second-place Detroit and to five over third-place Chicago.

Celtics 105, Knicks 94
Larry Bird scored 32 points and Robert Parish 21 for the Celtics after an emotional pregame ceremony during which a banner with the number 2 was raised to the rafters of Boston Garden in honor of Auerbach, the architect of nine Boston championships as coach and six more as general manager. He has retained the club presidency.

Danny Ainge added 16 points, Cedric Maxwell 15 and Dennis Johnson 10 in helping offset 28 points by New York's Bernard King and 25 by Pat Cummings.

Nets 105, Suns 98
Michael Ray Richardson scored 26 points and Buck Williams added 23 and sparked a fourth-quarter surge that carried the Nets to the fifth victory in six games.

Trailing 92-90, the Nets settled the game with a 13-1 run during which Williams scored the go-ahead basket and two free throws.

Pistons 134, Hawks 111
Isiah Thomas poured in 25 points and Kelly Tripucka added 20 in the Pistons' easy victory.

Detroit broke the game open with a 23-6 surge in building a 38-14 lead after one period. Thomas scored eight points and handed out four assists to spark the rally. Bill Laimbeer, who finished with 19 points, added six during the Pistons' spurt.

Kings 132, Clippers 112
Eddie Johnson, who finished with 32 points, and Mike Woodson combined for 28 points for Kansas City in the decisive fourth period.

Johnson struck for 16 points and Woodson, who finished with 25 points, added 12 as the Kings came back from a 96-95 deficit at the start of the period to outscore Los Angeles 37-16 the rest of the way.

Jazz 118, Nuggets 108
Darrell Griffith popped in 24 points, Adrian Dantley added 21 and the Utah bench contributed 49 as the Jazz dropped the Nuggets one-half game behind idle Houston in the Midwest Division.

Natt scored 17 points in the third quarter as he led the Nuggets back within two points of the Jazz several times late in the period. But Utah was never headed and was able to pull away in the final period.

Lakers 120, Trail Blazers 95
Kareem Abdul-Jabbar threw in 28 points in less than three quarters as the Lakers cruised to their eighth straight victory, despite playing most of the game without guard Earvin "Magic" Johnson, who left in the first half with a finger injury.

The Lakers scored the first 12 points of the game and were never pushed.

Johnson injured his right index finger in the first half and went for precautionary x-rays at nearby Centinela Hospital. Johnson dislocated the same finger last season.

Duke surges past Virginia

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. (AP) — David Henderson came off the bench to score 21 points as No. 2 Duke used an early second-half surge to claim a 63-58 Atlantic Coast Conference victory over Virginia in college basketball Saturday.

The unbeaten Blue Devils, defeating the Cavaliers for the second time this season, improved their record to 10-0 and 2-0 in the conference. Virginia, losing for only the sixth time in its last 70 home starts, fell to 7-5 overall and 0-2 in the ACC.

Georgetown narrowly escapes defeat

LANDOVER, Md. (AP) — Bill Martin scored 19 points, including two clutch free throws with 1:38 remaining in overtime, as top-ranked Georgetown escaped with an 82-80 victory over previously unbeaten Boston College in a Big East Conference basketball game Saturday.

Martin's free throws gave the Hoyas an 82-78 lead. Michael Adams' 23-foot jump shot with 47 seconds remaining pulled the Eagles within two points, 82-80.

Boston College had two chances to tie the score, but Skip Barry turned the ball over on one possession and Adams, the game's high scorer with 20 points, missed a 12-foot jumper with nine seconds left.

Georgetown, which lost a chance to win in regulation time when Horace Broadnax' 30-foot jump shot bounced off the rim at the buzzer, went ahead 76-74 in overtime on Martin's jump shot and was never headed.

The Eagles, off to their best start in 27 years, are 10-1 and 1-1 in the Big East. Georgetown, 13-0 overall, is 2-0 in conference play. The victory was the 24th in a row over the past two seasons for the defending national champions, the longest winning streak in the nation.

Joining Martin in double figures for Georgetown were David Wingate with 16 points and Patrick Ewing with 15. Ewing also blocked nine shots, including two in overtime.

Dominic Pressley had 19 points for Boston College.

Legend of 'Death Trap Mountain' persists

By STEVE DANIELS
The Arizona Republic
KINGMAN, ARIZ. (AP) — It has become known as "Death Trap Mountain."

Some say it is near Cherum Peak, the highest point in the Cerbat Mountains north of here.

Others place it farther north—in the pass that is the source of Cane Springs.

Hualapai Indian elders say it may be found across the Hualapai Valley in the Music Mountains, so named because of the sound of the wind across rugged rock escarpments.

It is described in the 1956 book,

"Lost Mines and Hidden Treasure," as having been thrust upward from a mass of volcanic rock and having the luster of blue metal.

On moonless nights, the legend goes, the rock—the Death Trap—shines with the brilliance of a neon light.

It is charged, according to legend, with a nameless force. To touch the rock is to die instantly.

"The story is known among my people," said Malinda Powsky, Hualapai Indian teacher and cultural coordinator. "A story very similar to that has been passed down. It is a legend, a warning."

In 1895, a small party of hunters went into the Cerbat in search of mountain sheep, according to Leland Lovelace, author of "Lost Mines."

Late one afternoon, the book says, "in the vicinity of Death Trap, they startled a sheep from the brush below."

"The sheep, in its fright, ran blindly into the narrow gorge ... and, to the great surprise of the hunters, who had not fired a shot, fell dead upon the rock," Lovelace wrote.

According to the book, an old Hualapai appeared from the brush to caution the approaching hunters of the perils of the Death Trap. Pointing out a "vast number of whitening bones lying in the gorge," the old Indian warned them that they, too, would die if they ventured near the stone.

"While they stood gazing at the spectacle, a rattlesnake crawled out from a crevice in the mountain and approached the darkening rock," Lovelace wrote. "Mounting the edge of the stone, the snake writhed, coiled, raised its head and fell lifeless."

Mohave County Supervisor Bill Roper says, "I don't believe it."

Nevertheless, Roper, the retired manager of the Duval Corp.'s Mineral Park copper mine, tried to check out the story a few years back because he thought such a tale might be based on a partial truth that could have meaning to the Duval operation.

"The only thing I could figure," Roper said, "is that there may have been arsenic in that rock emitting fumes or being eaten. Where there is arsenic, there are sulfides, and where there are sulfides, there is ore."

"I called Leonard Neal. If anybody knew, he would, and if it existed, I wanted to take a look at it."

Neal, 73, a rancher whose father controlled virtually the entire Hualapai Valley and who lived at Cane Springs from 1928 to 1973, says he has heard the Death Trap Mountain story "hundreds of times."

Pentagon to be giving more lie-detector tests

WASHINGTON (AP) — Seeking more protection against espionage, the Pentagon is stepping up its use of lie-detector tests for employees and civilian contractors who work on classified military projects.

Defense Department officials, citing a grant of special authority from Congress for a one-year trial, said last week they would administer up to 3,500 polygraph tests between now and Sept. 30 when determining whether employees or civilian contractors should receive or retain access to military secrets.

Richard G. Stillwell, a retired general and the deputy undersecretary of defense for policy, said the tests were a direct response to heightened Soviet efforts to obtain U.S. technology secrets and had been authorized by Congress on an experimental basis.

The tests will be administered to selected individuals who are working on or have been assigned to work on "special access programs" and intelligence programs," Stillwell said. The 101 special access programs currently in existence include such things as research on the so-called Stealth bomber.

Just last month, the Federal Bureau of Investigation arrested an employee of a Pentagon contractor who allegedly tried to sell Stealth bomber secrets to the Soviets.

The tests will be administered primarily to individuals who already have personal security clearances, but who need access to highly classified information, Stillwell said. During the trial, all individuals will have the right to have attorneys present during a test or to refuse to take one.

Those refusing to take a test can continue to work for the Defense Department but will be denied access to the classified project information and could face reassignment.

Stillwell repeatedly stressed Thursday the Defense Department does not intend to use the lie-detector tests as the sole means of awarding security clearances, but the text of a new directive implementing the trial program leaves open such a possibility.

If a person takes a test and fails to pass it, the directive states, and subsequent tests or a "comprehensive investigation" fail to resolve the discrepancies, the secretary of the affected military service may still deny the security clearance.

Stillwell denied the new tests would be used to help identify people who leak information to the news media, explaining the Pentagon would employ "a series of strict rules and safeguards" under the terms of the trial program authorized by Congress.

The Pentagon already has the authority to use lie-detector tests in investigating media leaks, Stillwell explained, and indeed administered almost two dozen tests in 1982 in an unsuccessful attempt to determine the source of a Washington Post story on a meeting of the Defense Resources Board.

Celebrating 1984 in pictures

PAMPANS WORK AND PLAY in 1984. At left, Joe Brewer, an employee of Ingersoll-Rand operates a giant lathe in the corporation's steel plant. During 1984, Pampa saw its more than six percent unemployment rate drop to less than three percent, an indication of a strengthening economy. At right,

no exception. Terri Lenz, a former Miami resident, bottom left photo, recounts her experiences of 1984 which she began with a prognosis of only a few months to live. On Mother's Day she received a heart - lung transplant and today leads a normal life. Weather in the Texas Panhandle for 1984 has been relatively mild, except for the recent ice storm which broke branches from many trees here and in the area.

Weddings

MRS. MARK DOUGLASTOLAR
Doretta Lynn Bruce

Bruce-Tolar

Doretta Lynn Bruce became the bride of Mark Douglas Tolar Saturday, Jan. 5, in the Lamar Full Gospel Assembly Church of Pampa. The Rev. Gene Allen, pastor, performed the wedding ceremony.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wallace L. Bruce of Pampa. Her grandparents are Mrs. M.A. Forde of Pampa and Mr. and Mrs. Wesley Bruce of Amarillo. Her great grandfather is O.L. Lester of Pampa.

Parents of the groom are Mr. and Mrs. Billy M. Tolar of Nederland. He is the grandson of Mr. and Mrs. S.E. Duff and Mr. and Mrs. C.M. Tolar, all of Warren.

Maid of honor was Lori Crawford of Pampa. Matron of honor was Sharon Ward of Pampa, sister of the bride. Bridesmaids were Shelly Flaherty of Weatherford, Okla.; Joan Burns of Pampa, Lisa Clarke of Shawnee, Okla. and Shanna Tolar of Nederland, the groom's sister. Tiffany Bruce was the flower girl. Jennifer Ward and Tammy Bruce were the junior bridesmaids.

Cary Tolar of Nederland, the groom's brother, was best man. Groomsmen included Jeff Berry of Abilene, Gerry Gore of Bridge City, Jerry Tarver of San Antonio, Bruce Brockhoft of Port Neches and Jimmy Morrow of Abilene. Ushers were Wayne Bruce of Pampa, Tommy Bruce of Amarillo, Lakan Mariano of Borger and Tim McCarty of Fort Collins, Colo.

Special music for the wedding was provided by vocalists John Duke of Carthage and Kathleen O'Chester of Austin; violinists, Danny Barefield of Mesquite and Lisa Archille of Dallas; cellist Tina Hames of Fort Worth, pianist Brent McWilliams of Lubbock and organist Jerry Whitten.

A reception followed the ceremony in the home of the bride's parents. Assisting were Heidi Allen, Connie Geeslin, Mrs. Wayne Bruce, Mrs. Tommy Bruce, Angie Baird, Stacie Bennett, Carrie Dunham and Anita Dalton. Lisa Forde of Andrews attended the guest register.

After a honeymoon trip to Pagosa Springs and Wolf Creek, Colo., the couple plan to live in Abilene.

The bride attends Hardin-Simmons University in Abilene where she is a member of the international music sorority Sigma Alpha Iota and Alpha Iota Omega.

Tolar is a senior at Hardin-Simmons majoring in music education. He is a member of Kappa Phi Omega and Alpha Chi honor society. He is employed at M Bank in Abilene and is director of music at View Baptist Church of View.

Latchkey project registration

Registration for enrollment in the Latchkey Pilot Project begins Tuesday from 5 p.m. to 6:30 p.m. and Wednesday, from 5 p.m. to 6 p.m., in the Woodrow Wilson Elementary School gym, announced Glenda Cates, director of the program.

Latchkey is a licensed after school day care for students at Wilson Elementary School which begins Jan. 14. The program is open from 2:30 p.m. to 5:30 p.m. on school days only.

Fees are $15 per week for one child and $10 per week each for more children from the same family. If there is a problem with the hours or fees, special arrangements can be discussed at registration, Cates said. Enrollment will be limited to 30 children.

For more information, call Glenda Cates at 665-0735 during the day and 665-7985, evenings. Cates asks prospective clients to please not call Wilson Elementary School officials about the program.

The Latchkey Pilot Project, which is licensed by the Department of Human Resources, was approved by the Pampa Independent School District board of trustees at their meeting Dec. 18. The program provides supervised activities after school for children whose parents work.

Supervising the project is the Community Day Care Center board which is advised by an advisory board made up from citizens of the community. If the pilot project proves to be successful, the center may expand into other schools, said Faustina Curry, president of the Community Day Care Center board.

Wilson Elementary School was selected for the pilot program because of the number of parents indicating an interest in it during a recent survey by the Latchkey steering committee.

Latchkey results from the efforts of a group of Pampans from all walks of life who were concerned about the growing number of children who were going home after school to an empty house. The reasons for this, the group felt, were because the increase in single parent families, the increase in working numbers and the lack of day care facilities.

Community Day Care Center Inc., officials were aware of the latchkey problem for some time and had enrolled as many children in after school care as their license would allow.

In the proposal presented to the school board, the Latchkey committee's survey identified 414 elementary students in Pampa who were going home alone each day. This represents 27 percent of the elementary school population here.

West-Gibson

Lisa Diane West and Tomas Lance Gibson exchanged wedding vows Dec. 22 in an afternoon ceremony at the First Baptist Church of Lefors. The Rev. Gene Lancaster read vows for the couple.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lee B. West of Lefors. Parents of the groom are Mr. and Mrs. John S. Gibson, also of Lefors.

Maid of honor was Dondi Rothwell of Lefors. Bridesmaids were Tana Trusty of Lefors and Amy Yearwood of Amarillo, the bride's sister.

Ralph Gibson of Roanoke, the groom's brother, was best man. Groomsmen were Richie Smith and Jeff Wilcox, both of Lefors. Ushers were Jeff West, the bride's brother and Chad Bridge. Ring bearer was Kevin, Gibson of Roanoke.

The couple were honored with a reception in the fellowship hall following the ceremony. Assisting were Glorietta Bridge, the groom's sister, and Darla Gibson.

After a honeymoon in Amarillo, the couple will make their home in Lefors.

The bride is a senior at Lefors High School. Gibson is a senior at Lefors High School and is employed by H.K. Fina Service Station at Lefors.

Homemakers News: dealing with children, sugar

By DONNA BRAUCHI
County Extension Agent

Do your children seem to "live" on candy, cookies, pop-sicles, sugared cereal and cola? Like many parents, you may be worried that too much refined sugar is leading to tooth decay and reducing the nutritional quality of your children's diets.

Dealing with the problem, especially if children are still young, could require changing some of your habits and attitudes as well as theirs. Children come by their desire for sweets honestly. Studies have shown that infants are born with a preference for sweetened liquids over plain liquids. This preference will continue, especially if children have continued positive experiences with sweets.

As parents, we create many positive experiences by offering sweets to comfort or reward our child, to express affection and to celebrate special occasions. We sometimes use sweets to compensate when we're busy or tired, or to keep the children distracted or quiet. But that doesn't mean we need to give up birthday cakes! In fact, some recent research from Cornell University shows that giving children sweets in "positive contexts" is not the only reason for their attraction to sugared foods.

Far more important, according to the research study, is how often children actually eat sweets. And this is determined mostly by the parent's own consumption of sweets, and how much television the family watches. What and how parents eat has a powerful effect on children. Children learn to be sweet-eaters from their parents, just as they learn many other food preferences, such as liking meat or disliking vegetables.

The researchers also suggest that children who watch more television tend to eat sweet foods more often because they are bombarded with commercials for highly sweetened foods, especially during Saturday morning cartoons. Children see as many as 10,000 food and beverage commercials a year, and some are directed specifically at them.

Extension home economists at Purdue University did some research on the commercials aimed at children and uncovered some interesting facts. They found that 25 percent of the advertising is for candy and other sweets like cakes, cookies and fruit drinks. Another 25 percent is for cereals, many of which contain more sugar than most candy. About 10 percent of the ads are for fast food restaurants. The remaining ads are for toys. That means almost 2-3rds of the television commercials aimed at children are for snacks, candy and breakfast foods. Less than two percent of the commercials promote a well-balanced diet including fruits, vegetables, milk and meat.

Many nutritionists, dentists, doctors, and parents believe that television's nutritional message to children encourages poor eating habits and tooth decay. It may also increase the demands of children for this type of food and contribute to parent-child conflicts.

In response to the influence of television food advertising, parents need to provide nutrition education too. Young children cannot easily distinguish between promotional material for marketing purposes and reality. But parents can watch for these commercials and talk about them with their children.

If you really want to change some of the sweet-eating habits of your young children, you will probably need to cut back yourself. You may also need to talk with them about the differences in the variety of foods we eat for good health in "real life" and what they see in the make-believe world of television.

History book committee to host training

The Gray County History Book committee is to conduct open training sessions for anyone interested in assisting with the production of the county history book Thursday from 10 a.m. to 8 p.m. in the Lovett Library conference room.

Jesse White, area representative of the publishing firm, is to conduct the training sessions. Each session is to last from 30 minutes to one hour and are scheduled at different times throughout the day to accommodate schedules.

Volunteers are needed to collect and assist with family histories, copy and proof read, telephone, type and help with publicity. There's something to do for anyone interested in helping.

Coordinators for the history book are Elleta Nolte, Eloise Lane and Darlene Birkes. Representatives from McLean assisting on the core committee include Ruth Magee and Charlie Marie Shurley and Norma Lantze of Lefors.

Volunteers interested in helping as field representatives to collect and assist with family histories, telephone, type and do secretarial work can meet at either 10 a.m., 4 p.m. or 7 p.m. for a one hour class.

Editorial assistants who will edit, proof and copy read are to meet at either 11:30 a.m. or 5 p.m. for 30 minute session. Topical history editors who will be doing features for the history section are to meet at 1:30 p.m. or 6:30 p.m. for a 30 - minute session. Publicity volunteers assisting with publicity can attend a 30 - minute training session at either 2:30 p.m. or 6 p.m.

The 520 - page book is to contain general history of the county, communities and organizations in addition to special features on events. A large section is to be devoted to family histories to be written by county residents from the early settler to the new arrival.

Family histories are limited to 500 words, approximately 45 typed lines on 8 1/2 inches by 11 inches paper with one inch margins. Deadline for these will be March 15. They should be mailed to Box 2196, Pampa, 79065.

A brochure with guidelines for preparing family histories will be available to county residents by the end of January.

Deadline for art work submitted for the front cover of the history book is Monday at noon.

4-H: AN AMERICAN INVENTION

An American invention, the 4-H program of the Cooperative Extension Service, originated near the beginning of the 20th century as a result of a vital need to improve life in rural areas.

Introducing improved methods of farming and homemaking, 4-H taught youth to "learn - by - doing." Designed for both boys and girls, the first 4-H "projects" included home canning of tomatoes as well as raising corn and hogs.

The school and the home had a close affiliation in this early 4-H program, and adults in the family often were persuaded to adopt new practices as a result of successes experienced by 4-H youth.

In 1914, the Smith - Lever Act established the Cooperative Extension Service, an organizational entity of the U.S. Department of Agriculture and the land - grant college system. Created by this act and subsequent legislation to conduct educational programs of an "informal, no - resident, problem - oriented nature," the Cooperative Extension Service provided the professional staff and support needed to direct the growth of the early 4-H program.

Today's 4-H program involves youth as the primary audience and adults and teens as volunteer leaders.

No single Cooperative Extension Service program is more widely known or recognized than 4-H. The technique of organizing boys and girls into clubs through such Extension programs could help youth learn practical knowledge and skills in agriculture, home economics and related areas was one of the early innovations in education - and it succeeded admirably.

4-H projects, strictly rural in the early days, have now been diversified to appeal to boys and girls in urban areas as well. They stimulate adults to apply new knowledge and often lead to a closer sense of partnership between parents and their children.

4-H clubs give identity to learning activities, enhance personal development through project work, establish a formula vehicle for involvement of adults, and develop an esprit de corps of great significance. Many clubs today join together in constructive community projects.

In addition to clubs, 4-H uses many other means of meeting the needs of today's youth. Learning opportunities are provided through informal groups, camps, educational television, 4-H programs in schools, family programs and special events.

Through international programs, exchange opportunities and overseas activities also have evolved, and many nations have developed a youth program similar to 4-H.

Peeking at Pampa

DOROTHY AND ED Juenger hosted a dinner at the Pampa Country Club Christmas Sunday. The dinner for family and friends followed the baptismal service at First United Methodist Church for their bright-eyed and handsome grandson Matthew Bowers, son of Debbie and Greg Bowers of New Jersey.

Pampans once again appreciated the Christmas scene strategically placed at the Methodist Church for all of Pampa to see. The late Wayne Lemons made the figures from ordinary oilfield materials several years ago. Thanks, Ann, for sharing it with us again.

Wedding congratulations to Norma Baggerman and Frank Holiday revelers filled their week with pleasures of the season. Here are some items you'll be glad to hear about.

The Holiday Gala hosted by Marian and Jack Stroup and Steve Heare at the Pampa Country Club was all the name implied. Marian, elegantly dressed in an intricately beaded white gown, and Jack greeted hundreds of guests while Steve circulated among them.

The party was on target with heavily laden serving tables full of hearty and beautiful party food. Just a few of the guests ... Beverly and Dr. Keith Teague, Katherine and Natalie, Diane and Rusty Reeve. Jack, still weary from a 44-day business trip to China, stayed home with his visiting grandchildren ... Johnnie and Bob Marx ... Nancy and Jerry Whitten, who later attended a Whitten family reunion at Muskogee.

For Karen and David Cory it was an early celebration of their New Year's anniversary. Close by were Ann Lemons and her friend from Midland, Sara and Doug Carmichael, Marilyn and Paul Brown. Janice, blonde hair gleaming, and Lee Porter danced the evening away. She and Malcolm McDaniel cut a fancy rug, too. Onlookers let one couple have the floor for a specialty dance.

Friends were delighted to see Dr. Charles Ashby looking chipper after recent surgery. Georgia and Ellis Locke and his son and wife were part of a Miami group. Brenda and Lee Cornelison had a lot of fun. Euleen Thompson looked perfectly smashing in black. Chris and Bill Campaigne and Joe Fischer visited all around the club. June and Kay Fancher were there from Amarillo. A beautiful party!

JOE SHELTON'S Christmas gift of an exercise bicycle to replace the one with 12,000 miles pleased him no end. Now maybe several other Pampa adults received exercise bikes for Christmas, but chances are they were not 95-plus years old like Joe is! And I bet they hadn't worn out a first one by putting 12,000 miles on it either!

If she could talk, Sissy, the newly acquired puppy of Mary and Larry McWilliams would speak up about the first week of a bad haircut. When the groomer clipped and clipped her long hair until pink skin glistened, Sissy became cowed and embarrassed in contrast to her normal prissy personality. Only after Mary dressed her in a warm cover-up sweater did the poor darling slowly come out of hiding. Thelma McWilliams, Larry's mother and long time Pampans, came from Austin for the holidays.

On Christmas Eve afternoon Father Joe Stabile conducted a birthday mass to honor the Baby Jesus complete with clowns, balloons, and birthday cake at St. Vincent de Paul Catholic Church. Children brought wrapped gifts that were later distributed to needy families in the direction of Juanita Brower, youth and adults. Later students through grade five presented a Christmas program.

Sue (Mrs. Frank) Snow is deep into decorating yards for special events. When Melinda and Ben Fallon Jr. were married, she and her father decorated the outside trees and house. A couple of weeks ago Sue went to Lubbock with "It's a Girl!" "It's a Boy!" pink and blue ribbons in hand to announce the birth of Melinda and Ben's first baby and her first grandchild. Pinks won with the arrival of Taryn Day. Other grandparents are Frank, of course, Pernie and Ben Fallon plus great grandparents Catherine and Jim Brown of Duncan, Okla., and Eileen and George Cox. Teddy Fallon came home from Washington, D.C. — a proud aunt!

Belated silver anniversary wishes to Shari and Charles Langen who celebrated with a family dinner at the Pampa Country Club.

Majunta and Forrest Hills had a complete family Christmas get-together, partly by phone. Geryl and Kent Klefman and three children from Oklahoma City. Stephanie and Keith Hartman and children of Canyon joined Pampa family members. Calls came from Longview, Tyler, Bryan and from Rocky in Germany. Geryl's daughter Marissa celebrated her first birthday on Christmas Day. Stephanie responded to Majunta's request for a collection of written memories to continue the old family record begun by Forrest's mother, the late Olive Hills, with a gift wrapped dean's honor list certificate from Amarillo College in her LVN course.

"BEST WISHES!!!" "We'll miss you!!!" to Cindy and Clark Grunder and their 11-year-old daughter Andrea Hubbard as they make their home in Austin. Cindy has been supervisor of surgical services at Coronado Community Hospital and current president of the Panhandle Operating Room Nurses organization. They are active members of St. Matthews Episcopal Church where Cindy and Clark sing in the choir and Andrea plays in the handbell choir. Cindy and Jerry Whitten played a piano-organ duet Christmas Eve. Andrea plays the piano, too. Clark, a wallpaper contractor, plans to enter the Episcopal Seminary in the near future. Cindy will be supervisor of an out-patient surgical center.

Here's still another report on a Methodist baptism. Long before the Rev. C.B. Melton became a Methodist minister, he was baptized by Betty (Mrs. Bob) Blake's father. C.B. officiated at the marriage of Carol Blake and Dennis Jackson, now of California. While they were here for the holidays, C.B. baptized little James Blake, their firstborn. A lot of sentiment of long-standing family ties.

Best wishes to Jackie Hefner who returns to work tomorrow recovered from a recent illness, and Nancy (Mrs. Ed) Paronto as she recovers from surgery.

Belated birthday wishes to Janet Warner and Mary Dean Dozier.

A partial list of Pampa holiday guests, dot-dash fashion. Pam and Randy Turner and three children from Utah to visit Peggy Turner, Billie and G.W. James. Rhonda and Larry Hicks, Gruver, completed Peggy's group. Nancy and Ralph Swanson and children from Terre Haute, Ind., plus Floyd and Homer Hodge of Winters to visit Cressie Hood. Three handsome sons from various points to visit Mary and Dr. Roy Braswell ... Renee to visit her parents Marge and O.C. Penn.

LOTS OF PAMPANS celebrated in far away places. Another dot-dash list: Clara and James Quarry, Midland, Virginia and Laven Greer, Houston. Naomi White, Fort Worth. Sue and Bob Keller visited Eddie in California. Margaret and Ed Sweet and Cassandra and husband spent Christmas in Austin with Jim and his family.

The Hal Crees, Jonathan and Lindsey visited Fanny and George in the Honduras. Faustine, John and Faustina Curry visited family in Pennsylvania. As a TV talk show guest, pre-schooler Faustina would be a super star!

Did you happen to see the white Cadillac limousine driving around Pampa earlier in December? Found out it was Ronnie Lyles and Melanie Warner celebrating Ronnie's 16th birthday! Other guests were Roy Lott, Bill Allen, Jason Wilson, Judd Wilson and Deany Waters. That's observing "sweet 16" in style!

May the health, happiness, peace and prosperity wishes for you at the beginning of 1985 remain with you until the sun explodes!

See you next week! KATIE

Women, wine don't always mix

HOUSTON — Wine and women don't necessarily go together, at least in terms of helping prevent heart disease, says a Baylor College of Medicine researcher.

Harley Hartung, Ph.D., has found that alcohol does not raise the level of high density lipoprotein, known as "good cholesterol," which clears out fats in the blood, in inactive women. This is contrary to the findings of a previous study on men, which showed that moderate amounts of alcohol raised their level of good cholesterol.

A high level of good cholesterol in the blood is one factor that reduces a person's chance of developing heart disease. Other studies have shown that moderate alcohol use lowers the odds of having a heart attack.

Hartung, who directed both studies, said this does not mean that men should drink and women shouldn't.

"Women naturally have higher levels of good cholesterol in their blood. It's possible that because the level of good cholesterol is already so high, its not susceptible to being altered."

Hartung points out that heavy exercise also raised good cholesterol in both men and women and does not carry the dangers of heavy alcohol use, such as liver damage.

In 1983, Hartung reported that good cholesterol increased dramatically in inactive men when they consumed three beers a day, after abstaining for three weeks.

His most recent study, which involved 18 active and 18 inactive women, showed that the level of good cholesterol did not change in either group when they consumed three glasses of wine a day for three weeks or when they abstained for three weeks.

High density lipoprotein is made up of two parts. One part, called HDL 2, is thought to offer more protection against coronary heart disease than the other part, HDL 3.

In the study with women, Hartung also found that HDL 2 was twice as high in the women who exercised, than in those who didn't.

Hartung will duplicate his earlier study with men to see if HDL 2 is also higher in active men than in inactive men.

He is also planning to study the effects of alcohol in older women. Good cholesterol levels naturally drop in women after they reach menopause, and they may be more susceptible to the effects of alcohol, he said.

Cystic fibrosis bowl-a-thon bowlers needed

Bowlers and sponsors are still needed for the Cystic Fibrosis Bowl-A-Thon scheduled from 1 p.m. to 3 p.m., Jan. 26, at Harvester Lanes.

Sponsor sheets are available at Harvester Lanes or by calling Sandy Burns at 665-1540. League bowlers who wish to participate but may not be able to bowl at the bowl-a-thon may use their league scores for that week, Burns said. Sponsor sheets should be turned in on the day of the bowl-a-thon, she said. Sponsors can pledge as much as possible per pin, but can not pledge less than a penny a pin.

Burns added.

The bowler who has the most sponsors will win a five-inch black and white, AC-DC television and AM-FM radio set.

Bowlers with five or more sponsors will receive a "Strike Force" patch; bowlers with 15 or more sponsors will receive a cap with the Strike Force emblem and bowlers with 25 or more sponsors will win a Strike Force t-shirt.

Proceeds from the bowl-a-thon will go towards research for a cure for cystic fibrosis.

Dear Abby

Genial jogger hits the road when woman invites him home

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1985 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: It all started one day while I was walking to work. I saw this nice-looking man jogging, and we said hi to each other. Every morning we'd exchange friendly hi's, and after about three months he started asking me questions, such as what was my name and where was I going. I answered him because I saw no harm in the questions he asked. I also asked him a few. He laughed and called himself a "health nut." Then his questions started to get a little more personal. I always answered truthfully—like telling him I was married and had a 6-year-old son, but that didn't seem to bother him.

Finally I invited him to come to my apartment anytime because my husband wasn't the jealous type. He said he'd think about it—but he'd come only if my husband was home.

Well, I never saw him again, and I can't figure it out. Will you please set me straight on what's happening here?

MIXED UP IN MESA, ARIZ.

DEAR MIXED UP: Nothing's happening. And nothing will. The friendly jogger, ever mindful of his health, probably doesn't want to get involved with a married woman. Wise man, he.

DEAR ABBY: My son hasn't had a decent meal since he married a girl I'll call Alice four years ago.

Alice works from 7 a.m. to 2 p.m. She's home in plenty of time to fix a dinner. My son gets off work at 6, comes right home and then the two of them go to some bar that serves snacks and nibbles. My son deserves better, but the fool never complains and says he's happy. How can a man be happy with a wife who's too lazy to heat up a can of soup or put a frozen TV dinner in the oven? Should I tell her mother?

BURNED UP IN SARASOTA, FLA.

DEAR BURNED UP: No. Don't tell anybody. If your son never complains and "thinks" he's happy, he probably is.

DEAR ABBY: Last week, I saw a little girl in church, holding her Cabbage Patch doll, looking around smugly to see who would envy her treasure. On the TV news I saw hundreds of women standing in a line blocks long, then coming to blows to get through the door when the store opened to sell a limited number of these dolls.

The manufacturer is cleaning up, shrewdly making not quite enough to fill the demand—the American way.

My children are grown and I have no grandchildren yet, but so help me, God, I will never buy one of those dolls! They have become a symbol of a sick society in which young women will have an abortion because of the terrible expense of raising a second or third child, but they'll pay $150 to $200 and more for a doll whose only real "beauty" is that not everyone (except their children) can have one.

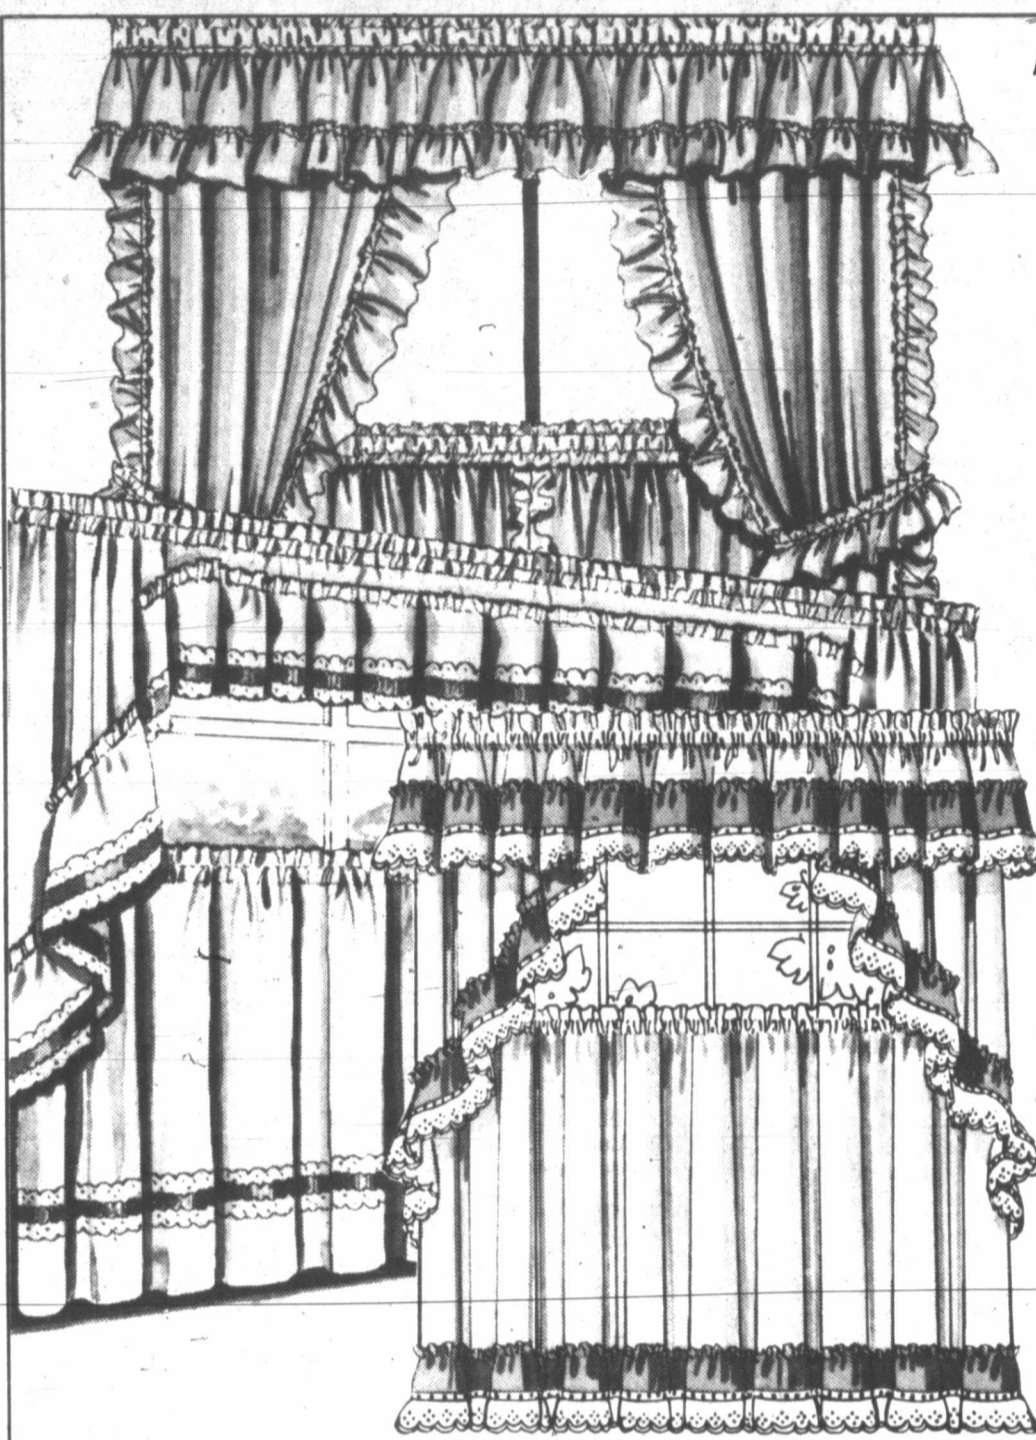

What are we teaching our children? And what does it say about the way we celebrate Christ's birthday? We should be ashamed.

What did I do? I took half the price of one of these atrocious dolls and bought a lovely "other make" doll for my little niece. The other half of the money I divided between the Salvation Army and the Ethiopian Fund at my church so that some little girl could eat this Christmas.

I am also going to send a copy of this letter to the manufacturer of Cabbage Patch Kids. I doubt that it will change anything, but at least I will have had my say. Am I the only one who feels this way?

Help kids read for fun

The love that some children develop for reading doesn't happen by accident. It is usually something that is carefully planned by parents who want their child to experience the joy of reading.

Many parents start to develop this interest in their child by reading stories during the preschool years. But the parent's role does not end once the child starts school — or even when the child learns to read alone, reminds Growing Up, the child development newsletter for school age children.

Reading is a joint responsibility of school and home. In school, the child learns vowel sounds, grammar, syntax, and all the other skills that are needed through countless workbook pages and drill exercises. What happens after that depends not only on the school, but on the parents.

If parents fail to show an interest, the child will begin to think of reading as just another chore. The drill and the exercises at school seem like torture. A good teacher's efforts to instill a love of reading at school may count for nothing if parents do not provide encouragement at home.

But if parents are willing to create a home environment that encourages the joy of reading, new horizons will be opened for the child's creative mind.

One part of a good reading environment at home is helping a child select an appropriate book. Most children need parental help with this.

Keep in mind when selecting a book:

- The child's interests.
 - The child's reading ability level.
- What a child reads should add something meaningful and important to life. It may lead to either laughter or tears — but in either case it adds new depth and new meaning to life. If the book is too easy or too difficult, the child will soon lose interest.

Here are some more suggestions for increasing the joy of reading:

- Help your child get a library card on his own. Make the library a special place that the whole family visits often.
- Invite your child to talk about a book or a story, not in a questioning manner like school, but in a way that allows the child to talk about it in his own words. Ask, "What did you like most about that story?"
- Parents who enjoy a good book themselves and who share that enjoyment by talking about what they themselves are reading are helping their child develop the habit of reading for fun.

Growing Up follows a child's development through the school years. For more information, write to Growing Up, P.O. Box 620N, Lafayette, Ind., 47902. Include child's school grade when writing.

Easy Spanish cake

During Pampan Nellie Martin's recent visit to her son in Odessa, she discovered this unusual cake recipe which she wanted to share with other local cooks.

This easy recipe, which came from Carolyn Jones of Odessa, is called "Spanish Cake."

SPANISH CAKE

2 c. flour
2 c. sugar
2 t. soda
1 large can (15 1/2 oz.)
crushed pineapple

1 c. chopped nuts
1 t. vanilla

Grease an oblong cake pan and preheat oven to 350 degrees F. (The recipe does not make enough batter for a bundt pan, Mrs. Martin said, but most any other type cake pan will do.)

Mix all ingredients well and pour into greased cake pan. Bake at 350 degrees F. for 30 to 35 minutes or until golden brown.

After cake is completely cool, ice with the following ingredients:

8 oz. cream cheese, softened
1/2 c. soft margarine
2 c. powdered sugar
1-3rd c. fresh orange juice
1 t. vanilla

Stir well and spread on cooled cake.

Mothers read to babies before birth

By TOM MINEHART
Associated Press Writer
GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — Babies may learn to recognize and prefer voices and even poems they hear before they are born, according to a psychologist at the University of North Carolina at Greensboro.

Anthony DeCasper found that children who had heard their mothers read "The Cat in the Hat" to them before they were born preferred it to "The King, the Mice and the Cheese" after they were born.

DeCasper cautioned against "science fiction" interpretations that his research suggests fetuses may someday get a head start on college degrees. He said the research so far only suggested a "good possibility" that humans may have some learning capacity in the womb.

"The information we gleaned from making observations about the effects and role of prenatal experiences in normal development could help us design better treatments; for example, for premature babies," he said.

In tests beginning in 1979, DeCasper and associates devised and gave the babies a nipple that activated a tape recorder. By sucking in one pattern, infants would hear their own mothers' voices and by sucking in another pattern they could hear another woman's voice. The babies tended to suck in such a way as to hear their mothers' voices.

To counter the possibility that the babies were just trying to hear voices they had heard immediately after birth, DeCasper devised another experiment. Six men who had been present at the birth of their daughters spent from four to 10 hours talking to their newborn babies.

When the girls were 2 days old, they were tested with the nipple-activated tape recorder to see if they preferred their fathers' voices to another man's voice. DeCasper said that although they could distinguish their fathers' voices, they did not prefer them.

Another test involving 12 infants indicated that a baby prefers to hear its mother's heartbeat, which it heard in the womb, to a male voice, which it could not have heard before birth.

DeCasper said that if his test subjects were animals instead of human babies, he could use deprivation to test whether a certain prenatal experience is needed for a certain behavior after birth. Instead, he used the "unique auditory experience" of "The Cat in the Hat."

In that experiment, 16 pregnant women read Dr. Seuss' poem to their unborn children twice a day for the last six weeks of gestation for a total of about five hours. After they were born, the babies sucked to hear a tape recording of their mothers reading that poem more often than their mothers reading "The King, the Mice and the Cheese," which has a different meter.

DeCasper said he was currently between tests, but that he would like to do all the tests again with slight variations.

"In the spirit of science, I'd like to see it again, then I'd believe it more firmly and other people would believe it more firmly," he said.

Sweetener workshop set

"How Sweet It Is" is to be the topic of a leader training workshop presented by County Extension Agent Donna Brauchi Tuesday at 9:30 a.m. in the Gray County Annex meeting room. The training focuses on facts and latest information concerning artificial sweeteners as well as how to use them effectively.

The training is especially designed for extension homemaker club program leaders, but any interested person is welcome to attend. Program materials will be supplied allowing participants to present the information to their own club or group.

El Progreso club meets

El Progreso Club met in the home of Mrs. Charles Ford for a Christmas luncheon recently.

Members made a cash donation to the Texas Department of Health Region I for vitamins to be distributed to needy children.

Mrs. Max Presnell presented the program "Christmas in Texas." She said that Texans have witnessed many holiday traditions starting nearly four centuries ago when the Indian tribes near El Paso were introduced to the Christmas holiday by the padres in the Christmas play "Los Pastores."

The Jan. 8 meeting is to be hosted by Mrs. Max Presnell.

Resort sun problem

Why cover up when your winter-weary bones want to soak up that southern sun? Unfortunately, scorching sun will burn you quickly and it can permanently damage your skin.

For cruise or resort, take a lotion with sunscreen with a high SPF factor, 15 or near it, and apply it frequently. Cover up with a beach robe and broad-brimmed hat after 30 minutes during the first few days.

Use makeup foundation and moisturizer with sunscreen ingredients.

Comic actor wanted to be a prize fighter

By JERRY BUCK
AP Television Writer
LOS ANGELES (AP) — As a boy Tom Poston wanted to be a prize fighter. He wound up a comic actor instead.

The gentle, good-natured Poston hardly seems to be material for the ring, but he says he fought several hundred fights during his amateur career.

Poston started fighting in Ohio, "before I even got to high school." He gave up boxing while a student at Bethany College in West Virginia.

World War II came along and Poston and his brother Richard served as pilots in the Army Air Corps. He thought of using his flying skills when he got out, but Poston was hooked on acting when he read an article about Charles Jephling, then creative head of the American Academy of Dramatic Arts.

While still at the Academy he landed a role in Jose Ferrer's Broadway production of "Cyrano de Bergerac." He subsequently starred in such Broadway shows as "Romanoff and Juliet," "A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum," "Forty Carats," "Bye Bye Birdie," "Come Blow Your Horn," "Mary, Mary," "King Lear" and "Fiddler on the Roof."

But, of course, Poston is best known for his comic portrayals on television. He is currently George the handyman on CBS' "Newhart." In the past he was the befuddled Everyman on "The Steve Allen Show." He was one of the men on the street who answered "important questions of the day," along with Don Knotts, Louis Nye, Gabe Dell, Pat Harrington Jr., Dayton Allen and many others. Poston was the one who spent so much time pondering the all-important question, "What's your name?"

When Allen moved his show to Los Angeles, Poston stayed behind in New York. He was appearing on Broadway in "Golden Fleecing," and had his own show on NBC, "Split Personality." For many years he was a regular panelist on "To Tell the Truth." And he didn't want to leave his daughter, Francesca, who is now grown.

Poston and his current wife, Kay, were married in 1968 and have two children, a boy, Jason, 15, and a girl, Hudson, 12.

Since moving west, Poston has added to his portfolio of befuddled characters, playing such roles on "The Bob Newhart Show," "Mork & Mindy," "On the Rocks," "We've Got Each Other," and such movies as "Cold Turkey," "The Happy Hooker," and "Rabbit Test."

'Why go to the moon, try Neptune'

By RICHARD T. PIENCIAK
Associated Press Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — Jazz pianist Sun Ra has spent years searching for stardom, but not the kind found in Hollywood or the Big Apple. What the elder statesman of "intergalactic jazz" wants is his proper place in space.

Native of Saturn — the planet that is — and a transplant to "Magic City," where he says he first entered Earth, Sun Ra isn't just far out, he's outer limits.

Ra recently flew from Egypt to New York for a few weeks of performances with his 15-member Omniverse Jet Set Arkestra at Sweet Basil's, a Greenwich Village jazz bistro.

As a finale to his New York visit, Ra gathered 100 jazz musicians for an all-night jam at the Lenox Chalet, a former wedding hall in the East Village.

No simple Earthling, Sun Ra doesn't do anything on a simple scale, so his big-band orchestra for one night needed a new name. He decided on Cosmo Symphonic Omniverse Arkestra.

Though Ra hasn't made an album in years, the concert was packed.

He played in Fletcher Henderson's band during the mid-1940s and for many years was an active experimentalist in Chicago music circles.

Ra doesn't just play music — he creates, he travels, he flies. It's the same when he talks.

Videos spread to country music

By MARTA W. ALDRICH
Associated Press Writer
NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — The rage for videos to accompany the hottest songs on the charts has hit Music City, but the country music world is looking a bit askance at the flashy art form.

Film production companies have made Tennessee's capital city a "Little Hollywood" for creating the video vignettes for a handful of syndicated television shows that feature country film clips.

All the hoopla has some Nashville music executives intrigued — and worried.

"I'm afraid some of these videos may come back and haunt the artists," said Jim Owen, a leading Nashville television producer. "These artists could be turning off their fans, and I don't think they're really thinking it through."

Owen, who has produced syndicated TV specials for Larry Gatlin, Conway Twitty, Janie Fricke, thinks country musicians should remember that their audiences usually don't watch Music Television (MTV), the 24-hour-a-day, all-rock cable TV service.

"Feedback so far shows that country music fans not only dislike MTV, they detest it," Owen said. "We spend too much time in country music trying to look like MTV, and it's going to hurt us."

Deborah Allen's high-energy "Rockin' Little Christmas" — complete with break dancing, a hot pink outfit and the lights of New York City — was filmed for RCA Records by the video director for pop star Billy Joel.

Miss Allen, whose biggest hit was "Baby I Lied," said her first video is designed for people who enjoy all types of music — not just country.

"Whether it's country or rock or whatever, people react to a product on the basis of whether it's good or bad. And this is a good video that I'm very proud of," Miss Allen said.

RCA vice president Joe Galante agrees. The entertainment industry, he said, should realize country music fans have grown up and are more sophisticated.

"I don't know how many times I've flown over farms and seen satellite dishes in the backyards of people raising cows," said Galante.

The chameleon charm of Sir Alec Guinness

By DOLORES BARCLAY
Associated Press Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — The thick, white brows journey slightly upward over gentle, sleepy eyes. It is the sweet wonder of Herbert Pocket. The cynical intrigue of Hamlet. The wise arrogance of Prince Faisal. The wisdom of Obi-Wan.

Most of all, it is the chameleon charm and wonder of Sir Alec Guinness, whose satiric and tragic roles have delighted audiences here and abroad for five decades.

Guinness, however, eschews praise.

"I'm a very simple person," he said. "I've never thought of myself as what is called a star. In fact, there are very few of them. People like Noel Coward — he was a star. And certain film people are stars, people you're willing to pay good money and prepared to travel to see."

"But I never thought of myself as other than an actor."

He confessed recently that he at first was hesitant to take the role of the Brahmin mystic in David Lean's majestic "A Passage to India." Guinness thought an Indian should play an Indian.

But then he spent time in Bangalore, India, soaking up things Indian. His portrayal, as all of his roles, is infinitely believable.

Part of the British actor's talent clearly is found in his demeanor: He can be King Lear's sublime Fool, a sneering Dauphin in "Saint Joan" or a lovable scamp in "The Lavender Hill Mob."

He was awarded an Academy Award for best actor in 1957 for "The Bridge on the River Kwai," a dramatic role that snapped him from the comedic typecasting of his earlier British film successes.

In 1979, he was honored with a special Oscar for services to film.

Over the years, Guinness said he has not noticed changes in his acting techniques.

"I'm probably more relaxed now, probably more careless. In some ways, I think that's a perfectly good thing," he said.

A slow, but steady, financial growth pattern is in the offing for you this coming year. Refrain from trying to speed things up because they could stall you out instead.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Both you and your mate may hold equally strong views today. Unfortunately, he or she may be on one side of the fence while you're on the other. The Matchmaker wheel reveals your compatibility to all signs, as well as showing you what signs you are best suited to romantically. To get yours, mail $2 to Astro-Graph, Box 489, Radio City Station, New York, NY 10019.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) Your rewards will be commensurate to the work or service you render today. Don't do a little and expect a lot back in return. PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Today you might sense you'll come off better in a small group — and you're probably right. Avoid the crowds and stick to your intimate circle of friends.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Be selective regarding your guest list if you're entertaining at your place today. Try to be extremely careful not to invite someone who doesn't fit.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Gauge your audience carefully today so that you do not make statements that could gore a sacred cow or offend a listener's sensitivities.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) It will prove wise in the long-run to leave well enough alone today in business or financial matters that are presently running smoothly.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Do not allow a biased companion to cloud your judgment today. His views could get you way off target and create complications.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Unless pressured by others, you're not apt to be as industrious as you should today. Don't wait until time runs out before you get going.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Beware of tendencies today to cater to the undeserving, while ignoring or doing little for friends you should be helping.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) Material conditions favor you today but there is a possibility you might not make the most of your opportunities. Do not take your luck for granted.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Facts may later get confused if you are not attentive today when given information meant to be passed on to others.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Do not let yourself be jockeyed into a position today where you feel compelled to underwrite someone who is a poor credit risk. Know when to back off.

Loafer's Hall popular hangout for oldtimers

AUBREY, Texas (AP) - Some of the regulars at Loafer's Hall chipped in last week to harvest the peanut crop for another old-timer who has been hospitalized.

"But when they're not working, the men lounge on bags of feed and old metal chairs in the local landmark drinking coffee and telling tall tales. Unless, of course, someone mentions politics, farming or the weather.

That's the way it's been every morning at Seven Cedars Farm Supply, home of Loafer's Hall for as long as any of them can remember.

"I usually check by here every morning to see who's told the biggest lie," said J.W. "Skeet" Smotherman, who said he was born one mile north of town "under a persimmon tree" 77 years ago. "They're some of the damndest liars you've ever seen. There's just about any of these boys will tell you a lie except me."

Regulars at what some of the men prefer to call the Liars' Corner include bricklayers, carpenters, farmers and ever a retired school superintendent.

"I imagine that two-thirds of the guys who come in here have known each other all their lives," said Kenneth Wilson, who was reared in Aubrey. "The've got to come in here to have a place to talk and loaf," said H.D. Wilson, Kenneth's brother.

Talking, loafing and solving the world's problems are about all the men do during their hours at the hall. "Everybody has to come up and catch up on everybody else every morning - find out what everybody did over the weekend," said Bobby Redfearn, a horseman who has been coming to Loafer's Hall "40 years - since I was 6."

It is the main gathering place in town when it's too cold or rainy. "There were 20-some in here the other morning when it rained," said Carrell Mohon. There's more people gathered right here than all the rest of the places put together. This is where we meet every morning."

"That's the craziest man I've ever seen right over there," Mohon said pointing to Vernon Kruger. "I want you to put that in the paper."

Kruger, the hall's comedian and politician, said he has frequented the store "ever since '22, when I was born. It was an old store then. Younger generations don't realize what this town used to look like in the '30s."

"This is the only place in town you're going to get any gossip," said Doyle Hood, a former Aubrey school superintendent. "If you don't get it here, you're not going to get it. You can get a lot of information here, but you're crazy if you print it all."

Seven Cedars, the oldest feed store in the area, was built in 1912.

WE WOULD LIKE TO SET THE RECORD STRAIGHT... "ABOUT HOME SATELLITE SYSTEMS..."

There Have Been Many Questions Asked About The Legality And The Problem Of Scrambling...

FACT: On October, 1984, President Reagan Signed Public Law 98-549 Making it Perfectly Legal To Own and Operate A Home Satellite TV System...

FACT: During The Week of December 16 thru 22, there were 258 FREE MOVIES available on Satellite TV. Of those HBO & Cinemas offered Only 50.

FACT: Of the 173 Channels Currently Being Broadcast on Satellite, Only 19 Are Scrambled.

FACT: Of the Stations that are Scrambled, the Largest Percentage of those are Canadian Satellites, and Many Are Broadcast in French.

FACT: Vice President of Engineering of CNN Says "At This Time We Have No Plans to Scramble Our Signal"

FACT: Rosa Gatti, Vice President of Public Relations for ESPN Says "ESPN Has Considered Scrambling in the past, but has NO Definite Plans to Scramble in the Future.

FACT: Should Individual Programmers Scramble their Signals, Decoders would be available through SATELLITE DEALERS, as well as Cable Companies.

FACT: The Pleasure Channel and Fantasy Channel which are partially scrambled, are Adult Oriented Channels Showing X Rated Movies.

FACT: There are 23 Stereo Radio Channels Available on Satellite that range from Religious to Country, from Easy-Listening to Rock and from Classical to Jazz.
