

Eastern jetliner missing in Bolivia

LA PAZ, Bolivia (AP) — U.S. and Bolivian planes searched the snowcapped Andes today for an Eastern Airlines jet that disappeared 10 minutes before its planned landing at La Paz airport. Authorities said at least seven Americans were among the 33 people aboard.

A U.S. government plane returned to La Paz airport this morning after its crew scanned the crevices and passes of the Andes but found no trace of the Boeing 727, said the U.S. consul in La Paz, Royce Fichte, who was aboard the search craft. He said the Beech 200 aircraft had searched for two hours and 15 minutes and would search again today, probably in the afternoon, when visibility was expected to be better.

Fichte said heavy clouds hampered the searchers, who thought they spotted some wreckage but after circling for a closer look decided that it wasn't wreckage. He said the search plane flew over the flight route that the Eastern jet had planned to follow.

The Federal Aviation Administration said in Washington that wreckage believed to be that of the Eastern jet had been spotted about 50 miles from the airport in "the general area" of the plane's last known location as established by radio contact.

But Fichte said "the FAA reports about finding the plane are false."

He said he believed the FAA report was based on the radio conversation in which crew aboard the U.S. search plane said they had spotted something that looked like wreckage and were going to take a second look.

An Eastern spokesman, Bob Hunter, said in Miami after the U.S. flight returned from its first search run that "our information is simply that we have no wreckage, found."

The last contact with the crew of the Eastern flight was a radio conversation with the pilot 11 minutes before the jet's scheduled landing Tuesday evening, said Richard McGraw, an Eastern senior vice president in Miami. The pilot said in that transmission that he planned to land a minute early.

Airport officials said fog at an elevation as high as 30,000 feet blanketed the region. The hunt was concentrated in the Bacon region of Cochabamba state, about 60 miles south of the Bolivian capital.

They said five or six Bolivian air force planes took off this morning after a search by car and jeep of the area surrounding the airport failed to turn up the 727.

Eastern's Flight 980 left Asuncion, Paraguay, at 5:57 p.m. Tuesday and was due in La Paz at 7:48 p.m. on its way to Miami, said Rene Osorio, director of Eastern's office at El Alto.

Bolivian officials said there were reports from Asuncion that Marian Davis, the wife of the U.S. Ambassador to Paraguay, Arthur Davis, was on board.

Asked about this, Paula Musto, an Eastern spokeswoman in Miami, said: "There have been such reports, but at this time I cannot confirm it. We have to talk to the State Department. I think someone in the State Department in Washington is working on it."

Robert Minutillo, a spokesman at the U.S. Embassy in Asuncion, was contacted by telephone from New York and said he could not give out any information about the plane's passengers.

Bolivian officials said there was no indication the plane was having technical difficulties and the skies were clear when the plane was clear.

McGraw did not rule out a hijacking, but Bolivian officials said a hijack was considered unlikely. They said there were no reports of the landing at any nearby airport.

La Paz, the capital of Bolivia, is in the western part of the South American nation in the Andes near Lake Titicaca. El Alto, at more than 12,000 feet above sea level, is one of the world's highest major airports and La Paz is the world's highest capital.

DUMPIN' ON DUNCAN — Pampa city workers were temporarily thwarted in their efforts to de-ice slick city streets this morning when, instead of simply dumping the load of dirt, the entire bed of a city truck came loose and heaped its load at the side of Duncan Street. Although conditions are not bad enough to call for mounds of dirt such as this, travelers advisories remain in effect. (Photo by Ed Copeland)

Texas temperatures plunge; another cold night expected

From Staff and Wire Reports

Icy blasts sent temperatures plummeting past zero in parts of Texas early today and ushered in 1985 on a frigid pillow of snow that blanketed much of the state's northern half.

An inch of snow covered Pampa New Year's Day afternoon, with a high of only 19 for the day. The low this morning dipped to 8 degrees, with a light breeze dulling the chill factor.

With a low here of 15 Tuesday morning, winds dropped the chill factor to below zero under cloudy skies. The light snow followed a very light freezing rain, making road conditions hazardous.

Clear skies this morning brought sunshine to the region again, but cold weather will continue through tomorrow. Forecasts predict fair skies and a little warmer temperature through Thursday, with a high today near 30 and a low tonight near 12 degrees.

High Thursday should approach 40.

The snow brought .02 inch moisture to Pampa.

As dawn broke, the National Weather Service said snow was still falling in a band about 50 miles wide running from Tyler in East Texas into the south central sections of North Texas.

The weather service said the snow, which was slowly moving eastward, would continue over most of North Texas with additional accumulations of one to three inches possible.

Snow also covered the Panhandle and West Texas while freezing rain and freezing drizzle fell as far south as 20 miles north of San Antonio in the Hill Country.

A winter storm warning was in effect for North Texas and travelers advisories were posted for the eastern and south central portions of the South Plains.

Winds howling from the north at near 40 mph in some places only added to the problem, dropping the wind chill to near zero.

Ice and snow made driving conditions hazardous from Austin north to Dallas, northwest to Midland-Odessa and east to Bryan, said Lisa Fields of the Texas Department of Highways and Public Transportation.

Around two inches of snow fell during the night over a large portion of North Texas, including the Dallas-Fort Worth area, Hamilton, Comanche and Eastland counties had four to five inches overnight.

Amarillo received one to two inches of snow, with Borger and Stinnett reporting two inches.

Forecasters said snow accumulations in the Dallas-Fort Worth area could top 10 inches if the storm resurges.

Snow also was falling at daybreak in Midland, San Angelo and Abilene, where the temperatures were hovering around 20 degrees and wind chill indexes were below zero.

Fort Davis, Marfa and Alpine also had snow. Interstate 10 and 20 east of Van Horn were snow-packed and icy and Interstate 20 east of Big Spring also was icy.

Roads and windshields iced badly throughout the night and early morning, sending scores of autos into wild skids, authorities said.

Sleet and freezing rain fell on Austin throughout the night, making streets hazardous when morning commuters awoke. Numerous accidents were reported on the ice-slicked roads and parts of Interstate 35 were closed.

Ice frosted roads in San Antonio, forcing the closure of part of Loop 410 around the city and of freeways inside the Loop.

By midnight, the temperature had already fallen into the teens and 20s as far south as San Antonio.

Reagan appeals to Japan to open markets to U.S.

PALM SPRINGS, Calif. (AP) — President Reagan, concluding his West Coast visit, is appealing to Japan to take urgent action to open its markets to U.S. goods in an effort to cut America's "staggering" trade deficit.

Winding up his vacation in this desert resort, the president was flying to Los Angeles today for a working luncheon with Japanese Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone at the Century Plaza Hotel.

After the three-hour meeting, the president was returning to Washington.

Reagan, meanwhile, in a conference with his top foreign policy advisers, gave final instructions to Secretary of State George Shultz for his meeting next week in Geneva with Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko.

"The president finalized instructions on how Shultz should represent the United States' position at the arms control meeting, assistant White House press secretary Mark Weinberg said.

That was the only characterization from the White House of the hour and 45 minute meeting also attended by Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger and national security adviser Robert McFarlane. Earlier, a senior White House official had said that U.S. strategy for the Geneva meeting was all but set and the conference would focus on possible "Soviet gambits."

Shultz had been reported earlier to be carrying a plan to Reagan under which he would propose to Gromyko two sets of arms control talks, one on offensive weapons and the other on defensive weapons.

Looking ahead to Reagan's talk with Nakasone, a U.S. official said the meeting was occurring "at a time of mounting frustration over our continued inability to gain full access to Japan's market."

Julie Ann Craig first baby of 1985

A potential White Deer Doe was the first Top O' Texas baby of 1985.

The infant, Julie Ann Craig, was born at 12:18 a.m. New Year's Day at Coronado Community Hospital.

The daughter of Michael and Ann Craig of White Deer, Julie weighed six pounds and nine ounces, according to Linda Haynes, CCH public relations director. The "Does" is the nickname for White Deer girls athletic teams.

The girl's grandparents are Jim and Dorothy Jeffries of Pampa and Robert and Betty Craig of Kingsmill.

Michael Craig is a farm and ranch hand in the Kingsmill, White Deer area. Ann Craig is a homemaker.

Later that day, a baby girl was born to Brad and Lisa Ann Gibson of Lefors. No New Year's babies were reported at Shamrock General Hospital or at Parkview Hospital in Wheeler.

22 revelers get free rides

Coronado Community Hospital's first effort at providing free rides for holiday party-goers was deemed a success today, according to Linda Haynes, public relations director.

Haynes reported the hospital's Friendship program received 14 calls during the holiday period from people needing rides home from various celebrations, with 22 people sent home in taxis by the hospital.

The biggest night was New Year's Eve, she said. Eight calls involving 15 people were received between 11 p.m. and 1:15 a.m. that night.

"We think it's really good for the first time here," Haynes said.

"We're delighted."

She said reports from other corporate hospitals conducting similar programs indicated the next year of the program "is usually heavier." The hospital will conduct its Friendship program again next December, Haynes said.

No major accidents were reported in Pampa New Year's Eve.

Haynes said publicity of the hospital's public service program probably helped to make people aware of the program.

The hospital offered to send people home by taxi, with the only stipulation being that the taxi driver would not take the people to another party or bar.

Upsets abound in bowl games

By The Associated Press

Led by Heisman trophy winner Doug Flutie, Boston College won its first bowl game in 44 years and the Pacific 10 conference put three teams in the winner's circle as upsets abounded in the annual New Year's college football extravaganza.

Flutie battled 32-degree temperatures and high winds to lead Boston College to a 45-28 win over Houston on Tuesday in the Cotton Bowl. Flutie tied a Cotton Bowl record with three first-half touchdown passes.

Because of the elements, the eighth-ranked Boston Eagles switched to their ground attack in the second half, getting a 4-yard touchdown run by fullback Steve Strachan and an 18-yard score by Troy Stradford.

Flutie finished the regular season with all-time NCAA records in total yards, 11,074, and passing yards, 10,579.

Details, Pg. 9-10

In the other games, the Pacific 10 conference scored big as fourth-ranked Washington upset No. 2 Oklahoma, 28-17, in the Orange Bowl, 14th-ranked UCLA edged No. 13 Miami, Fla., 39-37 in the Fiesta Bowl, and No. 18 Southern Cal upset sixth-ranked Ohio State 20-17 in the Rose Bowl at Pasadena, Calif. Nebraska, ranked fifth, rallied to crush No. 11 Louisiana State, 28-10 in the Sugar Bowl.

The Associated Press will announce the national champion at 6:30 p.m. EST today, but Washington's triumph may have settled the month-long controversy in favor of No. 1-ranked Brigham Young, at 13-0 the only unbeaten major college team.

Reagan has many reasons for seeking new arms talks

WASHINGTON (AP) — Encouraged by allies and prodded by American public opinion, the Reagan administration has decided the time is right to seek a nuclear weapons agreement with the Soviet Union.

From all accounts, President Reagan is sensitive to criticism that he is the only American president since the start of the atomic age who hasn't negotiated an arms control accord with the Soviet Union or met with the top Soviet leader.

Reagan also has declared himself satisfied that his rebuilding program for the nation's military is sufficiently on track to enable American negotiators to deal with the Soviets from a position of considerable strength.

Moreover, there's pressure on Reagan from the allies. Soviet expert Helmut Sonnenfeldt of the Brookings Institution said that in Reagan's meetings with leaders such as Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher of Britain and Chancellor Helmut Kohl of West Germany, "All he hears from them is negotiate, negotiate, negotiate."

So Reagan is dispatching Secretary of State George Shultz to Geneva next week to meet with Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko to plan for comprehensive talks aimed at controlling strategic, intermediate and space weapons.

The administration has negotiated with the Soviets before, but there is more commitment in Washington to reaching an agreement than there was previously, experts say. The Soviets broke off the last round of negotiations in late 1983, although it was clear they weren't going anywhere anyway.

Signaling a changed attitude, Reagan has softened his harsh anti-Soviet rhetoric. Beginning with a television address a year ago — on Jan. 16, 1984 — Reagan declared he was ready for a "constructive dialogue" with Moscow on arms control and other issues.

Moscow, perhaps still smarting from Reagan's "evil empire" blasts or perhaps simply being coy, spurned American feelers for a pre-election summit between Reagan and Soviet leader Konstantin Chernenko.

But in September, two significant events occurred that built momentum toward an arms control meeting.

Reagan delivered an address to the United Nations on Sept. 24 in which he proposed comprehensive negotiations with the Soviets. And Gromyko accepted an invitation to meet with Reagan at the White House on Sept. 28, setting the stage for next week's meeting with Shultz in Geneva.

One of the most important spurs to serious negotiations, however, is pressure from the NATO allies, particularly West Germany, Britain and Italy, which have recently deployed new American nuclear missiles.

The deployment has gone forward in the face of a strong anti-nuclear movement throughout Europe which has worried European leaders.

One anti-nuclear political party in West Germany, the Greens, exploited its opposition to the U.S. cruise and Pershing 2 missiles to gain a measure of political power for the first time. Both the Belgian and Dutch governments are dragging their heels in advance of scheduled deployments there.

Mrs. Thatcher and President

Francois Mitterrand of France have also raised questions about the wisdom of Reagan's proposed "Star Wars" missile defense plan.

A senior State Department official, close to the negotiating process, acknowledged that arms control was "certainly not a priority" during the first two years of the administration.

Congress has linked further development of the controversial MX missile to progress in arms control talks with Moscow.

The official, who asked not to be quoted by name, also said the administration is in a better position to negotiate an equitable and verifiable agreement with Moscow because the military rebuilding program is on track, giving the administration added psychological clout in the talks.

Dimitri K. Simes, a Soviet expert at the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace here, said in an interview that Reagan met the test of sincerity on arms control when he proposed in his United Nations speech that the superpowers join in "umbrella" negotiations covering all issues.

Simes said that gave Moscow a graceful way out of the dilemma it had created for itself when it walked out of arms control talks in 1983. Soviet negotiators said they wouldn't return until the United States had withdrawn its new cruise and Pershing 2 missiles from Europe.

The "whole purpose" of the umbrella proposal, Simes said in an interview, "was to give the Russians a way to go back to the bargaining table without losing face." He added that this amounted to "a sufficient display of seriousness on the administration side."

Mexico's ruling party faces tough tests in coming year

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Violent protests of alleged electoral fraud close to the U.S. border are an uneasy reminder to the ruling Institutional Revolutionary Party that tough tests of its long domination lie ahead this year.

Its opponents are finding new strength among those disgruntled by economic crisis, austerity and traditional corruption in government.

The party, known as the PRI, was declared the winner in 35 of 38 mayoral elections held in December in the northern border state of Coahuila.

But disgruntled supporters of the main opposition party, National Action, in Piedras Negras — across the border from Eagle Pass, Texas — burned the municipal building in a Saturday night protest that ended with at least one dead and nearly 80 injured.

In Monclova, an industrial city 155 miles (249 kms) to the south, National Action supporters occupied the plaza and municipal building and swore in their defeated candidate as mayor.

Army troops patrolled there and in at least two other Coahuila cities.

The PRI has provided Mexico its presidents for more than 50 years, controlled the Congress and held the governors' offices in all 31 states. Its extensive grassroots network running parallel to the government reaches into virtually every hamlet in this country of 72 million people.

Electoral reforms instituted by President Jose Lopez Portillo during his 1976-1982 administration were intended to open further the system to minority parties in the face of steadily dropping voter turnout, but clearly preserved the majority role for the PRI.

Lopez Portillo's administration ended with Mexico mired in its worst recession in half a century. President Miguel de la Madrid took office in December 1982, immediately instituting an austerity program intended to restore economic health.

Inflation of 100 percent in 1982, 80 percent in 1983 and nearly 60 percent in 1984 has battered the purchasing power of most Mexicans, hitting the poor the hardest.

De la Madrid also started a campaign of "moral renewal" to rid the government of the endemic corruption that was seen in ostentatious spending during the Lopez Portillo years and has caused the most bitterness in the average Mexican.

Part of the campaign was a promise that elections would be clean.

In July 1983, the first major electoral test for the government since the start of the economic crisis, the PRI suffered unprecedented setbacks in local elections in the northern states of Chihuahua and Durango.

National Action, commonly known here as PAN, won the mayors' offices in Ciudad Juarez, the twin city of El Paso, Texas, and in the two state capitals.

Since then, PRI has registered nearly clean sweeps of local elections. Opponents charge that, wary of the prospect of further setbacks, the government has returned to the electoral manipulations that historically have taken place.

Jesus Gonzales Schmal, international relations secretary for the PAN, told reporters Monday in Piedras Negras that the ruling party after Chihuahua "decided to put pressure on and organize a systematic campaign to intimidate the people. ... They are trying to make people lose faith in the vote."

National Action is a center-right party accused by its critics of having too close ties to private enterprise, the Roman Catholic Church and U.S. interests. But unlike the smaller, splintered parties of the left, it has been able to present itself fairly free of ideology.

A vote for the PAN is as much an anti-PRI vote as it is pro-National Action.

De la Madrid recognized this in a recent interview with the Mexico City newspaper Novedades when asked about the results of local elections since he took office.

"I think that in certain cases, or in a certain proportion that I don't have a way of measuring, the vote was an expression of a nonconformity, either regarding the conduct of previous authorities chosen by the PRI or to the candidates presented by the PRI," the president said.

Seven governors' races are scheduled in 1985, two of them along the U.S. border where National Action has its strongest traditional bases. Those races in Sonora, south of Arizona, and Nuevo Leon, south of Texas, are expected to present unprecedented challenges to the PRI.

The election in San Luis Potosi state in north central Mexico also could be tough for the governing party.

The violence in Coahuila is a clear sign that many citizens are no longer willing to accept old-style, one-party domination.

A self-employed businessman, told the Piedras Negras municipal building had been burned, chuckled and replied: "Well done."

The PRI, however, commands vast resources and its control of the government make it difficult to challenge. Mexican newspapers, for example, have been generally low key in their coverage of the events in Coahuila.

State's grim highway death count now stands at 30

By The Associated Press
At least 30 people will have died on Texas highways by the time the Department of Public Safety finishes its New Year's holiday death count this morning, officials say.
The reporting period started at 6 p.m. Friday and ended at midnight today, and the DPS was predicting a final death tally of 41. Last year, 39 people died in a 72-hour period.
DPS spokesman David Wells said the nasty weather that lay siege to North and West Texas Tuesday night may swell the grim toll by the time authorities around the state finish their reports this morning.
"But we're hopeful that final report will be substantially below 41," Wells said. "We're getting better cooperation from people as far as drinking and driving are concerned."

Among the latest reports that upped the toll to 30 Tuesday night: Victoria Alvarez, 65, of Roma, Texas, died in a three-vehicle collision at 2:45 p.m. Tuesday in Pharr in Hidalgo County. Four others were injured, one critically, Wells said.
An unidentified male pedestrian died in a hit-and-run collision at 3:30 p.m. Tuesday near Farm-to-Market Road 681, about four miles north of Mission in Hidalgo County.

Annie Birdson, 82, of Winnsboro, was killed about 8 a.m. Tuesday when the car in which she was a passenger struck a tree. The accident occurred about a mile northwest of the Wood County community when the car failed to negotiate a sharp curve, left the roadway and struck the tree.
Henry McCuin, 62, of Bullard, was killed when the car in which he was riding went out of control, ran off the road, became airborne, struck several trees and burst into flames. The accident occurred about 4:30 a.m. Tuesday about 6 miles southwest of Mount Selmon on Farm-to-Market Road 855 in Cherokee County.

Couple gains $84,000 in resale of Dallas' nuclear survival supplies

DALLAS (AP) — City officials said after they decided that nobody would really survive in fallout shelters in the event of a nuclear war, they decided to get rid of all the survival kits that they equipped the city's 815 official shelters with in the mid-1960s.
They finally sold them, clearing about $30,000, but at first had trouble even giving away the thousands of water cans, sanitation kits, medical kits, crackers and hard candy.
"The only stipulation was that they had to go get it. Nobody was interested," said John Pickett, director of the Dallas Office of Emergency Preparedness.
"We couldn't find anybody willing to go down in to the several hundred places and scrounge around in dark basements," he said.
Finally, the city sold 2 1/2 million pounds of crackers to five area hog farmers and cattle ranchers in 1977 for about $25,000, then sold 9,000 water cans, 1,000 medical kits and 5,000 sanitation kits to a Lincoln, Neb. couple, Jim and Colleen Burden, in 1982 for $3,600.
Burden, interviewed recently by the Dallas Times Herald, said he would like to stumble onto another deal like that. He and his wife turned around and sold the survival equipment for $88,000, he said.

"If anybody says there's so many tons of something somewhere and the price is free or cheap, I'm there," Burden said. "When I heard shelters were being cleared out, I said there has to be money in it."
It took the Burdens six months to clear the 129 stocked shelters, they said. They hauled the booty away in 18 tractor-trailer loads and spent the next year peddling it, mostly to members of the Mormon church.
"If there was a nuclear war, the Mormons would be better prepared than anyone," Burden said.
The couple also sold supplies to a survivalist group in Utah, they said.
"They had a clandestine meeting with us that smacked of all kinds of intrigue," he said. "They had people watch the traffic on the highway to make sure nobody knew they were stashing it."
Ronald Sampson and his two sons, who have a cattle and hog operation at Greenville, 50 miles to the northeast, happily paid $12,000 to take more than a million pounds of crackers off the city's hands.
They hauled the crackers away in three truckloads and stacked them in three barns.
"It was a good source of protein," Dean Sampson, who now runs a stereo and electronics business in Dallas, told the Times Herald. "We mixed 'em with wheat and milo, put it in a hopper and mixed it all together as dry feed for the hogs."

The hogs required milk with their crackers, but the cows ate them dry, Sampson said.
"We'd just open up the can. The cows took to them real well. They didn't taste too good for humans. They got a little stale after a couple of years, but the cows really enjoyed them. They'd fight you for 'em even."
Along with the crackers came 100,000 pounds of "carbohydrate supplement," mostly cherry and lemon drops. The Sampsons sold some to beekeepers at $4 a can and ate the rest.
"Some of them were pretty good," Sampson said.

Texan plans cattle auction on plane bound for Hawaii

MERIDIAN, Texas (AP) — More than 300 people will get aboard a Honolulu-bound 747 jet one week from today to take part in what is being billed as the world's first airborne cattle auction.
Steve Harrison Sr., a purebred Santa Gertrudis breeder and owner of The Bee Creek Ranch here, organized the auction, which he said he expects to bring up to $1 million in winning bids.
There won't actually be any cattle aboard the plane — just videotape and seven large video screens. And the Santa Gertrudis cattle in the films aren't for sale — just their frozen semen or embryos, Harrison told the Waco Tribune-Herald.

But other than that, he said, the auction will be conducted like any other, with an auctioneer and ringmen working the crowd for the highest bids.
"The purpose of the auction is to make a statement of our commitment to the marriage of the traditional cattle and the high-tech world of genetics and embryo transplants," he said. Next Wednesday's eight-hour flight will depart from Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport.
"Doing a videotaped auction on board a 747 will be a relatively small wonder when compared to some of the achievements we are about to see coming from genetic engineering laboratories," Harrison said.
Embryo transplants will change cattle production from survival of the fittest to production of the finest, Harrison said.
Through the transplants, the best cows will be able to produce 50 or more calves in a lifetime, five times more than normal, he adds, and genetic engineering will allow breeders to capitalize on their best cows' best traits.
The airborne cattle auction began as a fun trip and ended with a serious purpose, Harrison said.

"Our breeders association president asked me last year to put together a trip to Hawaii for our members," Harrison said.
"He wanted to have seminars on cattle production on the plane over, but we go to seminars all the time. Then we hit on the idea of an auction, and things just went from there."
After arriving in Hawaii, the group has eight days of activities scheduled before returning.
The videotaping of the cattle took several months, Harrison said, and special approval had to be obtained from the Federal Aviation Administration to show the video during flight. United Airlines had to alter its chartered plane so that everyone aboard could see one of the plane's seven screens, he said.
"The plane holds 429, and we have about 340 reservations so far," Harrison said. "We don't want to fill the plane up, though, because we want to be able to move around."
To entice participants even more, Harrison put together more than $50,000 in prizes, ranging from a western tuxedo with a mink hat to five frozen Santa Gertrudis embryos. There also will be a women's fashion show and sale and a men's fashion show during the eight-hour flight.

Inmate dies from stabbing

LOVELADY, Texas (AP) — The first fatal stabbing of 1985 in the Texas Department of Corrections occurred Tuesday when a 33-year-old prisoner was stabbed by two inmates who reached out of their cells as he was being escorted to a shower, a prison spokesman said.
Jose Benavidez was stabbed about 9:30 a.m. in an administrative segregation area of the Eastham Unit near here, prison spokesman Charles Brown said. Benavidez died at Hermann Hospital in Houston at 7:47 p.m. Tuesday, Brown said.
Benavidez was serving a life sentence from Hereford, in Deaf Smith County, for escape and for aggravated robbery with a deadly weapon.
Brown said Benavidez was stabbed in the right side and in the right shoulder. He was taken to a hospital in Crockett and then transferred by helicopter to Hermann Hospital, where he was first reported in stable but serious condition, Brown said.

Prison officials said they recovered two weapons — a steak knife and a homemade shank.
Benavidez was the first stabbing victim this year in a TDC facility. In 1984, TDC's most violent year on record, 395 Texas prison inmates were stabbed and 25 were killed.
Prison authorities said they were questioning a 27-year-old inmate serving 10 years convictions of criminal mischief and aggravated assault in El Paso and theft in Odessa and a 27-year-old inmate serving a life sentence for a San Antonio murder.

Requiem for alarm clock

Vic threw away his old alarm clock yesterday. I heard it ticking forlornly from the depths of the trash box it had been relegated too.
And as much as I hated that clock, it made me sad to see it go in such an ignominious way.
The little brass clock had a large open white face perched on squat little legs. Two brass bells flanked the brass ring in the center. It was cute in it's own short, ugly way.
I'm pampered I guess. I want to be awakened in the morning by the soothing music of an FM radio station, the very thing which puts Vic sound asleep.
So for most of his teen and adult life, he has had this brass alarm clock which has the most obnoxious tick-tock and belligerent alarm that I have ever heard. The ticking kept me awake all night and when the alarm went off, I practically jumped out of my skin. My pulse rate was double what it should be for the next two hours.
But I have to admit, that clock would get you going in the morning. And it was just what Vic needed to wake up. He's a night owl, you see, and mornings are not his best time.
I guess he decided that the alarm clock was no longer necessary, or else he was tired of hearing me gripe about it.
Vic has a wonderful alarm now. A wife and two children. We do a great job of waking him up every morning. The dead couldn't sleep with us stirring around.
Don't be surprised if you hear of a report of a bomb in a dumpster sometime in the near future. Some poor soul will probably pass by the dumpster behind our house, hear it ticking and rush to the police station to report a bomb. But it's okay. It's only Vic's alarm clock.
Or some other poor person will end up going to the funny farm, thinking they had stepped into Edgar Allen Poe's "The Telltale Heart." It's just possible that they'll lay awake at night, hear the alarm clock ticking in the dumpster and think that some ghost from their past has returned to haunt them. That darn clock can tick that loud!
New Year's Day must have been what made Vic throw it away. Something about a new year makes one want to clear out the unnecessary and start anew. I'm like that, but it doesn't take a new year to make me do it.
If I haven't used an item in six months, out it goes — usually to my chagrin another six months later. I guess I've had to move too many times in my life. There's nothing worse than packing up and moving things you don't really need. It simply goes against my grain.
I'm also a lazy housekeeper. I hate to clean house, but I hate a dirty house more. So I figure that the fewer things I have to get out of place, the easier it is to clean up.
Thank goodness for the packrats and the junk dealers of the world, for if everyone were like me there would be no Mona Lisa. I would have tossed her out as soon as I saw a new Renoir I wanted.
Do you suppose that somewhere in the future, someone will find Vic's clock during an archeological dig? Once they get it ticking again, (and I have no doubt that they will), and the alarm goes off, they'll conclude it was some sort of ancient torture device. They'll never know how right they'll be.
Rest in peace, little alarm clock — something you never allowed me to do.

EVER STRIVING FOR TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Least resistance path followed

A news service story recently provided a telling reminder of one of the more unfortunate, though predictable, effects of government regulation of private enterprise: the tendency to create a class of government-dependant private businesses.

The story described in general how some lobbying groups in Washington, D.C., are beginning to mount campaigns to have Congress and federal agencies re-regulate—or slow the pace of deregulation—in certain industries that have experienced an easing of government regulations since the late 1970s.

Three likely targets of the born-again regulation movement, the story said, are the trucking industry, railroads and banking.

And who is behind the enthusiasm for re-regulating these industries?

As one might suspect, some "consumer-advocate" activists are in the thick of it. But in two cases specifically mentioned in the story, it is industry lobbyists themselves calling for reinstating government controls on their own industry and others. Lobbyists for the large trucking companies, for example, are reported to want regulation of new independent truckers reinstated and some rate regulation to prevent price wars.

And it is insurance company lobbyists—the same group that has fought government intervention in its own business for years—who have been quietly working to restore some restrictions on banks, which have made inroads into the insurance market.

The established elements of the trucking and insurance industries are no more guilty than hundreds of other industries of seeking government regulation from time to time to protect themselves from competition, to guarantee their profits and to shelter them from the risks of a free market.

But it is instructive to note that when government and the climate of public opinion allow such protection to be offered, it is no more than rational self-interest for industries to seek it.

Analysis of the failure of social-service programs in recent years has emphasized not the presumed shiftlessness of recipients, but, rather, their rational economic behavior in choosing welfare over work when the system offers few incentives in the opposite direction.

American businesses are no less rational in their economic behavior. We might hope that they should know better, but if they can protect their profits more economically by lobbying Washington than by competing freely in the marketplace, we should not be surprised that some will choose the path of least resistance.

Work of a slum priest

"The last thing I thought I wanted to be when I came out of seminary," I once heard Dr. Jerry Hill say. "I was a slum priest." And so he became one. Inscrutable are the ways of the Almighty. Also felicitous.

Dr. Jerry Hill, who is of the Episcopalian persuasion, is shortish, with a greying beard and wise, gentle eyes. He dresses as casually as it's possible to dress and still wear a clerical collar. He could be a hip priest from the '60s or a 16th-century missionary to the Americas. Missionary to Downtown Dallas' down-and-outs is more like it.

Hill, along with a Presbyterian minister, the Rev. Bob Lively, presides over the Stewpot, a nearly ten-year-old soup kitchen for winos and other derelicts, located at First Presbyterian Church, a few blocks from the glittering heart of a glittering city.

That isn't all Hill does. Over on Austin Street, not far from the church he helps administer an overnight shelter run by the Episcopal Diocese of Dallas and the Grace Union Presbytery. That isn't all he intends to do. Come the new year, Hill will work with the diocese and the presbytery's shelter for battered women and children, in Oak Cliff.

A few days back, the Sertoma Club, a service organization, invited Hill to drop by. Along with beef and green beans, the club extended him fervent thanks and its Service to Mankind Award. Hill stood up to say a few words.

When you're a slum priest, said he, "your whole day starts with winos and winds up with winos."

That's not necessarily edifying. Concerning the wino, Hill entertains no romantic illusions or hopes. He is not one of those sentimentalists who view the lonely wanderer somehow morally superior to the 8- to -5 office worker, submerged in "materialism."

One-third of Hill's flock are mentally ill. Contrary to myth, few were ever professional men or Shakespeare-spouting professors of English, snared in the fell clutch of circumstance. The vast majority lack self-discipline and work habits. Still, said Hill, "they're going to be with us; they have been in the past; and they will be in the future." That is why Jerry Hill is a slum priest.

The question, for Hill, isn't WHETHER to work with winos. The question is: "How can I work with these people to ease the pain and suffering they experience every day and still not offend the community?"

The Stew Pot started in 1975. It was fine for openers. But then arose the need to provide the shelter's clients, and others, somewhere to stay at night. A citizen board was incorporated to receive a warehouse leased from the city for $1 a month. The "guests" check in at 8 p.m. Each night, volunteers from thirty local churches bring them sandwiches. Check-out time is 6 a.m. The wholly charitable purpose of expelling them is to get the guests off their backside and into, at the very least, the temporary labor pool. The shelter sleeps 200-400—more than any similar local enterprise. Showers presently are being installed.

Hill explains: "There are no public showers in Dallas," hence lice and TB are spreading fast. As for the battered women's shelter, it opens in a few days. "There is a tremendous need for a shelter for women and children whose lives are in danger. Family Place only cares for 15 families. There's a waiting list of 80-100 always."

Try this on for size: a local man tried to kill his wife and three children with a chain saw. The nearest spot that refuge could be found for the family was Jacksonville, Florida. The new shelter—an old firehouse—will not be large, but it will be there. As will Dr. Jerry Hill and the Rev. Bob Lively and all who make possible their ministries.

I wonder: Is there a better moment than the present to reflect on those ministries? The Christmas rush, gaudy toy displays, sheaves of greeting cards—what has all this to do with Christmas? A little. Less, quite possibly, than the Stewpot and the shelter have to do with Christmas.

Let me talk theology a moment, for that is what Christmas is and always has been—a theological occasion, commemorating an astounding event, the enfleshment of the Word of God. Who, in this fleshly life, once said: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren ye have done it unto me." Done what, Lord? Healed. Comforted. Nourished. Protected. Visited.

At the Stew Pot and at the shelter and wherever else—meaning everywhere else—there is human need. At noontime and in the night season; in foul weather and fair—keeping the faith, testifying that love, not malice, made the world, and, one way or another, will bring it through every storm. Hallelujah, brother.

Today in History

Today is Wednesday, Jan. 2, the second day of 1985. There are 363 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Jan. 2, 1942, the Philippine capital of Manila was captured by the Japanese in the early days of the Pacific War.

On this date:

In 1974, President Richard M. Nixon signed legislation requiring the states to limit highway speeds to 55 mph.

Ten years ago: Gold prices hit their lowest level in more than 10 months, apparently because of a lack of interest by American investors and speculators.

Five years ago: President Jimmy Carter recalled the United States ambassador to Moscow in the wake of the Soviet Union's intervention in Afghanistan.

One year ago: W. Wilson Goode was sworn in as Philadelphia's first black mayor, while Raymond L. Flynn took the oath as mayor of Boston.

Today's birthdays: Author Isaac Asimov is 65. Opera singer Renata Tebaldi is 63. Singer Julius LaRosa is 55. Singer Roger Miller is 49.

Thought for Today: "At least half the sins of mankind are caused by the fear of boredom." — Bertrand Russell, philosopher (1872-1970).

Enter the carpetbaggers

When seven people died from taking Tylenol capsules laced with cyanide, Johnson & Johnson went all out to recover its own fumble.

Tylenol pills were removed from the market and kept off the market until the company had developed tamper-proof packages to prevent any further sabotage.

It was expensive to recall the product and rebuild the public image but Tylenol is again available, useful and profitable.

If industries used to try to run and hide from missteps and misfortune, not any more.

Immediately following the terrible tragedy in Bhopal, India, where thousands were killed by a poison gas leak at the Union Carbide pesticide plant, that company's top management raced to the rescue.

The company's chairman, Warren Anderson, flew to Bhopal—even at the risk of arrest.

Immediately his company offered millions of dollars in emergency aid to the disaster victims.

Promptly his company opened its similar but much larger chemical plant in Institute, W. Va., to photographers and media people.

Publicly company spokesmen detailed safety procedures past and present, acknowledged that leakage problems were identified at the plant in India in 1982; that some but not all necessary repairs had been made by the Indian operators of that subsidiary.

While its chemical plants were closed, its stock was plummeting, competitors stalked the wounded and employees were frightened of being jobless before Christmas—Union Carbide did everything possible to reassure them and us.

Including announcing that the plant in India would remain closed permanently if that is what Indians want.

Enter the carpetbaggers:

American lawyers including the King of the Torts converged on the desolate scene, soliciting victims, promising they could sue in compassionate United States courts and collect maybe $15 billion!

But what the lawyers are doing is denying to the victims immediately available reparation in the hope of more later.

And the innocent victims of Bhopal inevitably will awaken tardily to discover they are also victims of a contingency-fee system of American crashes, asbestos, black lung or whatever—the best the victims can ever expect to receive will be about 35 cents on the dollar.

And they will likely wait until 1989 for that!

Bringing out crystal ball

WASHINGTON (NEA) — With the new year upon us, here are some intriguing predictions for 1985:

— A growing number of doctors will resume a time-honored practice the medical profession temporarily abandoned—making house calls.

— The contamination of the country's food supply will become a major environmental issue, if not a scandal.

— Hispanics will surge past blacks in terms of total population to become the nation's largest minority group.

— Texas's San Antonio-Austin corridor will emerge as the country's biotechnology capital as genetic engineering assumes increasing importance.

Those forecasts come from John Naisbitt, a Washingtonian who has transformed the arcane practice of "content analysis" into a thriving consulting business whose clients include many of the country's leading corporations.

Naisbitt is best known as the author of "Megatrends," a book published in the autumn of 1982 which remained on best-seller lists for almost two years and has sold more than 4 million copies worldwide.

For a decade prior to publishing the book, however, Naisbitt toiled in virtual obscurity, refining content analysis as a method of identifying nascent trends.

First used by military intelligence analysts during World War II to determine what was happening inside Germany, the technique constructs a nationwide mosaic from stories in local newspapers.

Employees of the Washington-based Naisbitt Group read and clip articles about local developments from approximately 150 daily papers throughout the country—including those in every city with more than 100,000 people, in every state capital and in selected smaller communities.

"You quickly identify what's new, interesting or different about a situation," says Corinne Kuypers-Denlinger, a senior staff member of the Naisbitt Group.

Naisbitt's analysis is offered to clients in a variety of formats—a biweekly Trend Letter, a quarterly Trend Report and a monthly Bellwether Report which tracks developments in the three trend-setting Sun Belt states of California, Texas and Florida.

The client list includes firms such as American Telephone & Telegraph, International Business Machines, General Motors, General Electric, Control Data, Atlantic Richfield, Sears Roebuck, Merrill Lynch and United Technologies.

What they're paying for are the predictions cited above and other forecasts for 1985 and beyond. Among them:

— Chronic unemployment will begin to give way to labor shortages—a product of the relatively low birth rates of recent decades.

— Decentralized decision-making and informal management increasingly will replace top-down, hierarchical, authoritarian management in the workplace.

— Electronic education will become a major force in the classroom, with robots joining desk-top computers as teaching tools.

Overall, says an optimistic Naisbitt, "1985 is shaping up to be a challenging and exciting year."
Happy New Year.

Link sausage with breakfast

Breakfast has long been considered the most important meal of the day. It's the early morning eye-opener that prepares you for the day ahead.

The addition of sausage to breakfast will provide the nutritional link to protein, vitamins and minerals that will get you off to a good start.

Sausage Apple Pancake is a light and fluffy flapjack topped with juicy sausage links and fresh sliced apples. This colorful skillet-style treat includes selections from all the basic four food groups — flour and cereal, meat, fruit and milk. Other fruit, in season, may replace the apples to vary the taste and color of the pancake.

Corny Link Sticks or Corny Link Muffins will become the main event when served with your favorite style eggs, chilled juice and steaming hot coffee or flavorful tea. Precooked sausage links are baked into the form of sticks or muffins made from corn muffin mix and seasoned with herbs.

Pancakes, corn sticks and muffins made with sausage are simple to prepare and require a minimum of ingredients. All three items are suitable for brunch as well as breakfast.

SAUSAGE APPLE PANCAKE
1 (8 oz.) package breakfast link sausages or ¼ pound bulk sausage, precooked and broken into pieces)

1 c. milk
2-3rd c. flour
2 eggs
¼ c. crushed bran cereal (nuggets, flakes or squares)
1 t. sugar
½ t. salt
2 T. salad oil
1 to 1¼ c. sliced apples

Fry sausages over medium heat for about 7 minutes until they begin to turn golden. Remove sausages and drain on paper towels. Measure one tablespoon sausage drippings and add to mixing bowl along with milk, flour, eggs, cereal, sugar and salt. Beat mixture until smooth.

In 10-inch skillet with oven-proof handle, or nine-inch square pan, place salad oil; tilt skillet to coat bottom evenly. Pour in batter. Arrange sausages and apples on top. Bake in 425 degree oven for about 40 minutes, until pancake is puffy and golden brown. Serve at once.

NOTE: Other fruits, such as bananas, fresh or frozen berries, or any well-drained canned fruits, may also be used.

One recipe may be poured into three small 8-inch skillets. Reduce baking time for small skillets to about 30 minutes. Recipe may be doubled.

CORNY LINK STICKS
(Makes about 12 sausage cornbread sticks)

1 (8 to 9 oz.) package corn muffin mix
1 t. chopped chives
¼ t. dried marjoram leaves
12 small link breakfast sausages, precooked and drained

Prepare mix as directed on package, adding herbs along with liquid. Spoon about 2 tablespoons batter into each well-greased section of cornstick pan, spreading evenly over bottom. Place one sausage link on top of batter in each section of pan. Bake in 400 degrees F. oven for about 18 minutes, until golden brown.

NOTE: Herbs are optional. A favorite home recipe may be used instead of the corn muffin mix.

CORNY LINK MUFFINS
(Makes 8-12 medium-sized muffins)

Fill well-greased muffin pans half full of batter, described above. Cut precooked and drained sausage links in half, crosswise, and stand two half links in center of each muffin. Bake as directed for 22 minutes.

NOTE: A 9 to 12 ounce cornbread mix also may be used for Corny Link Muffins.

SAUSAGE FOR BREAKFAST — The addition of juicy sausage links to breakfast will provide the nutritional link to protein, vitamins and minerals that will get everyone off to a good start. Sausage Apple Pancake, right, is a light fluffy flapjack topped with sausage links and fresh sliced apples. Other fruit may also be used in the recipe. Corny Link Sticks, left, can become the main event when served with eggs, chilled juice hot coffee or tea.

Dear Abby

Old age doesn't have to be an affliction

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1985 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: My dear departed mother, who had a wonderful sense of humor, gave this to me:

A SENIOR CITIZEN'S LAMENT
Thought I'd let my doctor check me
"Cause I didn't feel quite right.
All those aches and pains annoyed me.

And I couldn't sleep at night.
He could find no real disorder,
but he wouldn't let it rest.
What with Medicare and Blue Cross

it wouldn't hurt to do some tests.
To the hospital he sent me,
though I didn't feel that bad.
He arranged for them to give me every test that could be had.
I was fluoroscoped and cystoscoped,

my aging frame displayed,
Stripped upon an ice-cold table
while my gizzards were X-rayed.
I was checked for worms and parasites

for fungus and the crud,
While they pierced me with long needles
taking samples of my blood.
Doctors came to check me over,
probed and pushed and poked around,

And to make sure I was living,
they wired me for sound.
They have finally concluded;
(their results have filled a page)
What I have will someday kill me, my affliction is old age.

(Author unknown)
I REMEMBER MAMA

DEAR REMEMBER: What an amusing poem, but old age never "killed" anybody. Unfortunately, some doctors still equate aging with inevitable mental and physical decline.

Dr. Robert N. Butler, former director of the National Institute of Aging, tells the story of a 101-year-old man who complained to his physician about a pain in his left leg.

"Well," said the doctor, "what do you expect at your age?"
The man replied, "But doctor, my right leg is also 101, and it doesn't hurt a bit."

Appropos aging, I have just come upon a wonderful handbook titled "Help Yourself to Good Health," compiled by the National Institute on Aging—a part of the Department of Health and Human Services, whose secretary is Margaret M. Heckler. This excellent handbook will be a godsend for people 60 years old and older.

Some chapter titles: Accidents and the Elderly; Aging and Your Eyes; Arthritis Advice; Cancer Facts for People Over 50; Constipation; Dealing With Diabetes; Hearing and the Elderly; Urinary Incontinence; What to Do About the Flu; Prostate Problems; High Blood Pressure; The Safe Use of Medicine by Older People; Senility, Myth or Madness?; A Healthy Diet; How to Find Good Medical Care; Protection Against Crime; Sexuality in Later Life; and more.

It is written in large type in simple language that everyone can understand. It contains a wealth of information for everyone over 50 who wants to live a long, healthy and independent life.

It is absolutely free—including postage!

For your book, write to: Pfizer Pharmaceuticals, P.O. Box 3852-DA, Grand Central Station, N.Y. 10163. Ask for the book Dear Abby mentioned for older people. (A postcard will do.) Please print your name and address clearly. And don't thank me, thank the National Institute on Aging and Pfizer Pharmaceuticals, which funded this fine project.

P.S. This offer includes our Canadian neighbors.

Deacon reaching out to help impoverished

STAMFORD, Conn. (AP) — Franklin Marzullo thinks of himself as a modern-day Robin Hood: He steals time, not money; comfort, not food.

Marzullo takes it only from himself — from the rich, easy life he could be spending in one of the wealthiest towns in the United States. And he gives both to the homeless.

The grandson of Italian immigrants who "found the American dream," Marzullo grew up in Greenwich, a New York City suburb where the most recent U.S. Census Bureau figures list annual per-capita income as $20,083. The national average for that year, 1981, was $8,476; statewide, it was $10,368.

Marzullo is proud of his upbringing there, even more so of his success in 15 years in the medical field.

But almost a decade ago, inspired by a religious experience, he quit his high-paying job as coordinator of the nursing staff at Greenwich Hospital. He left to run a health clinic in a depressed section of Houston, known as the Fourth Ward.

His work eventually brought him back to Connecticut, where in 1980 he opened a food co-op in his North Stamford garage "because a church didn't want to dirty its rugs."

"There are Christians and there are Christians," he murmurs.

Marzullo is the director of the Community of St. Luke, a tightly knit, Episcopal group of 41 people, 15 of whom live commune-style in three Stamford houses. They share their living space and possessions; a few hold outside jobs, making enough money to allow the others to volunteer most of their time to the relief operations.

The community works from the once-abandoned St. Luke's Chapel in Stamford's blighted South End, in a neighborhood seldom visited by the well-to-do — other than those, perhaps, whose wrong turns off Interstate 95 brought them to the "other" side of the railroad tracks or whose zeal for a bargain took them to the discount bedding store around the corner.

The shelter can house up to 24 people a night. Most are what Marzullo refers to as the "revolving homeless" — those who are in and out of institutions, who move from one relative's house to another until they are wanted by none or who are chased out of their homes by fire, eviction or other calamities. There are no so-called street people, no drunks, no drug addicts there. All clients are referrals from state and local agencies and they sleep in private rooms on beds with sheets and bedspreads. Curtains hang in the windows and night-tables bear bedside lamps.

St. Luke's, supported mostly by donations and federal grants, also operates a food bank in six places, serving about 300 people every Friday. Its clothing exchange in the chapel's basement can put a topcoat on someone for $5, shoes or sneakers for even less.

From a second-floor window of the building, Marzullo gazed recently at the garbage piled in the back yard of a nearby home, the boarded-up windows of a former Hispanic church and the crumbling brick of a derelict factory. Across the highway stood downtown, framed by the glass-and-steel headquarters of Champion International Corp., three high-rise apartment buildings and a blue-mirrored office tower.

He used the occasion to reflect on how he changed his life's direction.

"I'm here because I'm a Christian," he said, "and the word of God is that we're supposed to house the homeless, feed the hungry, visit the imprisoned and clothe the naked."

"I was very Greenwich for a long time. I was very hedonistic, very self-centered," Marzullo recalled. Religion, he said, allowed him to see what he hadn't before.

"You know, if we all stay in our little ghettos — you in yours, me in mine in Greenwich, these people down here — the twain shall never meet," he said. "We'll never be aware of what is going on."

"Touching people and being touched by them has made me a new person," he said, but quickly stressed that he hasn't repudiated his past.

"I don't want to forget where I come from. I'm very proud of that. I respect and honor my parents," he said. "I want to celebrate the fact that I grew up in Greenwich and minister in the South End of Stamford."

"I'm a bicultural person. I want to believe that I'm a modern-day Robin Hood. I have something that none of these people have, and I feel I can work among them with that."

Despite his religious convictions, Marzullo never chose to be ordained as a priest.

Two mayors prepare to run one city

MONCLOVA, Mexico (AP) — Two men, each claiming to be mayor, prepared to begin running this northern city, one of several in the northern state of Coahuila where the opposition refuses to accept mayoral victories awarded to the ruling Institutional Revolutionary Party.

The atmosphere was tense in the cities, including Piedras Negras, 155 miles to the north and across the border from Eagle Pass, Texas, where the new mayor Carlos Juaristi Septien of the Institutional Revolutionary Party, known as PRI, was to begin work Wednesday.

No incidents were reported in any of the cities on Tuesday.

Violence erupted as Juaristi Septien was sworn in late Saturday. At least one person was killed and nearly 80 others injured, the city hall and jail complex and vehicles burned and windows broken in the protests against alleged fraud in the Dec. 2 mayoral election.

The opposition National Action Party, continuing to challenge the election results, said Tuesday four of its members in Piedras Negras have been missing since the disturbances. Eleazar Cobos, the party's mayoral candidate in the border city, said he has asked for a full investigation.

The two Monclova mayors were sworn in separately Monday, one by the outgoing mayor who is from the National Action Party, and the other, declared the official winner, by a state government representative.

About 200 opposition supporters continued to occupy city hall Tuesday to keep from turning it over to the PRI, state judicial police commander Arnulfo Villarreal said.

Pedro Pascual Esquivel, the National Action mayor, told a public meeting Tuesday that he will ask the public to loan money to his administration under a bond-type arrangement.

"Starting tomorrow I am going to talk with city workers," Esquivel told a reporter, and tell them "if they want to work with us to do it. We know that we do not have the economic resources but the people will give us the support that we will not have from the (federal and state) government."

He said a blockade by party supporters around eight square blocks including city hall and the main plaza would be lifted partially on Wednesday so that cleanup and security crews could work.

There was no indication of what if any action might be taken to remove National Action from city hall. Salvador Martinez, the PRI mayor, had not announced Sunday where he would set up offices.

Villarreal said three men, including the mayor-elect, from nearby Escobedo, a village of about 500, filed a complaint Tuesday accusing local National Action members of kidnapping them. He said the men were stripped to their undershorts, tied up, their heads shaved, they were threatened with execution and then released after more than 10 hours, still with no clothes, in a cold, isolated area.

The matter was under investigation, but no one had been charged, Villarreal said.

Mayoral elections were held in 38 Coahuila cities. The PRI was declared the winner in 35 cities, National Action in two and the small Authentic Party of the Mexican Revolution in one. In some cities where results were challenged, such as Monclova and Piedras Negras, the winner was decided by the state legislature, dominated by the PRI.

The center-right National Action, the largest Mexican opposition party, won mayoral races in several important northwestern cities in 1983 and is expected to give the PRI a serious challenge in gubernatorial elections in Sonora and Nuevo Leon states this year. The PRI has dominated Mexican politics for more than 50 years and has never lost a governor's race.

This family passes its frontier trade from father to son

CLAUDE, Texas (AP) — Members of the Crowell family of Claude say servicing windmills is possibly the only trade left in American culture that cannot be learned in classes and must still be passed from father to son.

Mike Crowell (they pronounce it "CROH-ul"), 32, was handed the flame by his father, George, in April 1983. As head of Crowell Water Well Service, he continues a family tradition almost a century old.

"And when my husband turned the business over to Mike," his mother, Claire, says, "I turned the bookkeeping over to his wife!"

It was Mike's grandfather, Walter Crowell, who came to the Texas Panhandle in 1896, settled in Groom, and began drilling and servicing the windmills that made human habitation of the area possible.

George Crowell says although technology has made some specific improvements in the field, most drilling and repair of windmills is remarkably like it was 98 years ago when his father began the business.

"We still use cable rigs, similar to what he had, only his were horse-driven," he explained. "We use a spudding unit on the back of a truck, and pull a tower up with a winch."

"They're making changes like going to fiberglass sucker rods," Mike added. "But otherwise, it's about the same. They haven't ever found anything that works as good as the leathers on the valves, for instance."

One improvement he can point to, Mike said, is Teflon-type seals replacing the traditional rabbit.

"A common problem with windmills is running out of oil," he said, "and then the rabbit got eaten up. The Teflon ones will last a lot longer without oil."

Although wood vanes are gone, they said, there are still a few wood

"If we have to repair one of those," Mrs. Crowell said, "we call a carpenter."

Carpentry, however, is virtually the only skill related to drilling and servicing water wells the Crowells don't pass from generation to generation.

"You've got to be able to drill, weld, be a mechanic and electrician, and do a lot of other things, too," Mike said.

George Crowell, shortly after the end of World War II, established the company in Claude, and built the rigs they use for drilling and servicing wells. The rigs purchased today aren't as reliable as the handmade variety, he said.

"The rigs we have are built of old (automotive) rear ends and things, and they don't break down near as often."

Mrs. Crowell explains that only a few companies remain in the business of supplying water well drillers and service companies, and even with these, there are problems.

One established company moved its manufacturing operation to Argentina, she said, "and they don't have any quality control. You can pour oil into one of their castings, and it leaks out all over. It's terrible."

Costs have, of course, risen over the years. Nowadays, George Crowell says, a 10-foot (vane diameter) windmill costs $10,000 — $12,000 to drill and erect.

"Sucker rod used to be a quarter a foot," Mrs. Crowell said. "Now it's $2.50. A cylinder that used to cost $18 is about $180 now. That's the increase in 40 years."

His father "never got less than a dollar a foot" for drilling water wells, George Crowell said, but now the going rate is $14 per foot to drill.

And windmills last, they point out, if serviced properly.

"I still do work on wells my grandfather drilled 80 years ago," Mike said.

They now maintain a large shop for machine work, three truck-mounted drilling or servicing rigs, and a "boneyard" of discarded heads and other windmill parts.

"It stays real busy," Mike said. "We work three crews and can't stay caught up."

He can't estimate the number of windmills in the area they service from Canyon to Stinett, but says in the past year they serviced 34 windmills on the 6666 Ranch alone.

"When it got so cold last winter, a lot of wells froze up and broke," he said. "That kept us busy."

His wife, Cindy, also stays busy, he points out, and puts a lot of miles on the pickup, going into Amarillo for parts.

Servicing windmills in the field on a Panhandle winter day is a case of mixed emotions; one might infer from his description:

"The wind puts a chill factor down to 30 below, but you need the wind to keep the windmills going so they won't freeze up and break on you."

Another complication, George Crowell said, is that, although it is of necessity a family business, often family members don't enter it. His brother Lee, retired from water well work in Groom, and Mike's brother Herb is a photographer in Amarillo.

"But one problem we don't have is people paying," he adds. "You fix somebody's windmill, send 'em a bill, and they pay you."

"George's father had to borrow a team of horses from a farmer to raise a tower one time," she said, "and when they looked back and saw that big thing coming up behind them, they bolted and took off, dragging it across the prairie behind them."

University studies the business of politics

PENSACOLA, Fla. (AP) — The University of West Florida, a 5,000-student state university, has plunged into the world of politics as business.

Two years ago West Florida launched a master's degree program in applied politics, intended to prepare students to enter political life.

Now UWF has created the Rayburn-Dirksen Institute of Applied Politics, named after two politicians — one a Democrat, the other a Republican — who are acknowledged as among the best political practitioners in U.S. history.

The graduate program is one of only two in the nation, according to James Witt, chairman of West Florida's political science department and director of the institute. The other is at Kent State University in Ohio.

The institute and graduate program are aimed mainly at preparing students for jobs in campaign management and related fields.

"Political campaigning is becoming so technical now ... you just don't win elections any more by going door to door," Witt said, emphasizing the increasing reliance on expensive media campaigns, political consultants, political action committees and extensive polling.

Witt, who has a doctorate in political science from the University of Southern California, said the institute also intends to try to improve the quality of candidates.

Well-qualified people who lack detailed political skill or knowledge will be able to even the odds with information gathered by the institute and by hiring professionals trained by the graduate program, he said.

"When you know you've got a chance of winning you are willing to throw your hat into the ring," Witt said.

The institute purposely was named for a Democrat and Republican to emphasize its bipartisan nature.

House Speaker Sam Rayburn, D-Texas, died in 1961 after serving 48 years in the House. Senate Minority Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen, R-Ill., served 16 years in the House and 18 years in the Senate through 1969 when he died.

Their families permitted use of their names and will participate in dedication ceremonies this year.

"We felt they would add the luster to the institute that we wanted to have," Witt said, adding that the institute hopes to capitalize on that aspect for fund-raising. Most funding is expected to come from private sources, he said.

Witt said he hopes that former Senate Majority Leader Howard Baker, R-Tenn., Dirksen's son-in-law will be at the dedication. Sens. Lawton Chiles, D-Fla., and Paula Hawkins, R-Fla., are both members of the institute's board.

The institute will conduct research, provide a base for student campaign experience and work to promote public understanding of political organizations. Plans call for workshops, professional conferences and mock presidential conventions for high school students. The institute has begun to gather political memorabilia and advertising.

The master's program covers such topics as campaign financing, media, organization, budgeting and compliance with campaign laws. Students must get practical experience or write a thesis.

Although only 10 students were admitted in each of the first two years, 25 slots are planned for the next class. Witt said he already has had about 400 inquiries, but only those serious about a career in politics will be considered.

"There's no paucity of employment for these people," Witt said.

Greater chances for success this coming year will be in areas where you already have expertise, experience and knowledge. Stay in your own bailiwick.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Do not let your attention wander today when working with unfamiliar tools or materials. Keep your mind riveted on the job at hand. Looking for romance? The Match-maker set can help you in your search. Send $2 to Astro-Graph, Box 489, Radio City Station, New York, NY 10019.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Have fun and enjoy yourself today but try to do so as inexpensively as possible. Spending lots of bread won't assure you of having a good time.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Take ample time to reason your steps out carefully today. Attempting to move too swiftly in complex situations could prove counterproductive.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Be safety conscious when in motion today. Don't be in such a hurry to get where you're going that you're tempted to take foolish chances.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Resist pressure from companions today to spend money you know you shouldn't. If you give in, you could end up regretting your actions later.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Ambition is an admirable quality but don't be so eager to get to the top today that you do things associates might find distasteful.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Before pointing the finger of blame at others today, be certain that it wasn't your actions that got things all mixed up in the first place.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) If a friend has done something recently that you have found disturbing, bring it out into the open today where it can be resolved. Don't let it fester.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Unless objectives are clearly defined today, you will end up spinning your wheels. Don't decide upon one course of action and then shift to another.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) Strive to be considerate when dealing with subordinates today. If you are arrogant or lord it over them, you'll create a lot of ill will.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Give the one you love the same mobility and independence today that you desire for yourself. Putting restrictions on him will invite rebellion.

Eagles hold off Houston for Cotton Bowl victory

By DENNEH FREEMAN
AP Sports Writer

DALLAS (AP) — It wasn't a highlight film Cotton Bowl Classic for Heisman Trophy winner Doug Flutie, but the results couldn't have been more satisfying.

Flutie, the Boston College All-American quarterback who holds two NCAA passing records, accomplished his final collegiate goal of winning a bowl game.

However, the 45-28 victory over the Houston Cougars — BC's first bowl triumph in 44 years — didn't come without its difficult moments on New Year's Day.

And Flutie didn't even win Most Valuable Offensive Player; that honor went to Eagle fullback Steve Strachan.

Flutie rifled three first-half touchdown passes as the Eagles built a 31-7 advantage and saw most of it melt away in the numbing 32-degree cold under a furious Cougar rally.

The Eagles had to resort to an unheralded running game to hold off the Cougars as Flutie was intercepted twice, once for Audrey McMillian's 25-yard touchdown return.

"It was not one of my better days by far," Flutie admitted.

"But this being the last game of my career and fulfilling a goal will make it very special to me and stick with me the rest of my life," he added.

The Eagle ground game was the story in the second half as the Cougars pulled to within 31-28. Flutie was just 2 of 13 for 13 yards in the second half. He finished with 13 of 27 for 180 yards.

Strachan rushed for a season-high 91 yards on 23 carries and scored on a four-yard run and Tony Stradford dashed a career-high 196 yards on 20 carries and scored on an 18-yard run.

Boston College Coach Jack Bicknell said the game proved the Eagles were a good overall team.

"I think Doug is happy with what he did today, but it was a team game," Bicknell said. "We tell Doug: 'You are allowed to be less than super sometimes.'"

Bicknell said, "Everything with us has always been offense, offense, offense and Flutie, Flutie, Flutie, but the defense showed it could play well, too. There are many games that are not a Flutie show."

"We have a lot of good players on our team."

Flutie had some problems with a 17 mph wind and so did his receivers, who dropped four passes.

"I was able to grip the ball but it was hard to judge the wind," Flutie said.

Flutie said his fabulous career would have been a little empty without a bowl victory.

"The win fulfills a goal that we set and I myself set coming into the year," he said.

Unranked Houston, 7-5, was impressed with the 10-2 Eagles, who won the second most games in their history.

Defensive coordinator Don Todd of the Cougars said, "I think Flutie is everything everyone expected, but he has a great cast with him."

Houston Coach Bill Yeoman said, "It wasn't a surprise they ran so much. They give scholarships to runners, too. Flutie is great and there are a lot more players on that team than just Flutie."

Only 56,522 fans, the lowest Cotton Bowl crowd since 1948, braved a wind chill factor of 15 degrees.

There were numerous Cotton Bowl records established, including a 98-yard kickoff return for a touchdown by Houston's Earl Allen.

Flutie's three touchdown passes tied a record. BC's total yards of 533 yards and 45 points were records. It was the highest scoring game in Cotton Bowl history.

"Winning the Cotton Bowl is something BC has just never dreamed of before," Bicknell said. "We haven't been to a bowl like this in so long. It gives us confidence for our program."

The No. 8-ranked Eagles last won a bowl game when they defeated Tennessee in the 1941 Sugar Bowl.

"It's a great feeling," said Strachan. "A great, great feeling."

Who's number one?

MIAMI (AP) — There is no shortage of candidates for college football's national championship but second-ranked Oklahoma, leader of the campaign to unseat No. 1-ranked Brigham Young, is no longer one of them.

Brigham Young, third-ranked Florida and Washington all did their final campaigning Tuesday night after the fourth-ranked Huskies upset Oklahoma 28-17 in the Orange Bowl.

In fact, the picture may be more unsettled than ever after a month of steady controversy, most of it involving BYU, 13-0, and Oklahoma, now 9-2-1.

When The Associated Press announces the 1984 national champion at 6:30 p.m., EST, today, it remains to be seen whether BYU's 24-17 Holiday Bowl victory over unranked Michigan on Dec. 21 was enough to keep the Cougars in the No. 1 spot they held for the final three weeks of the regular season.

The national champion is determined by total points in balloting by 60 sports writers and sportscasters, with a first-place vote worth 20 points, 19 points for second, etc.

As soon as the Orange Bowl ended, Washington Coach Don James replaced Oklahoma's Barry Switzer as leader of the opposition party.

"We're No. 1. We have my vote," he said. "I think anybody who beats a team as strong as Oklahoma deserves to be No. 1. But we have to respect the poll people."

Indications in surveys taken by the Dallas Morning News, the Miami Herald and NBC-TV in the last few weeks were that the Huskies, who finished 11-1, had virtually no chance to overtake Brigham Young. BYU Coach LaVell Edwards reiterated that he felt his team deserved to stay No. 1 regardless of the Orange Bowl outcome.

"The point I tried to make all along was that we were No. 1 going into the (Holiday) bowl game and we won the bowl game so we should remain No. 1," Edwards told The AP from Palo Alto, Calif., where he will coach in Saturday's East-West Shrine Game. "That's why I didn't put that much stock in this game (the Orange Bowl)."

Jim Herrmann, a BYU defensive tackle who will play in Saturday's East-West game, said: "We're going to get what we deserve. Hopefully, we'll get No. 1. I'm really happy. To tell you the truth, I felt they (Washington) had a real good chance of winning, but I didn't know their offense was that good."

Coach Galen Hall of third-ranked

Florida put in a plug for his Gators. "I still think at the end of the season we were the best team in the nation," he said from his home in Gainesville, Fla. "We just didn't get a chance to prove it in the bowls."

Florida, 9-1-1 and winner of its last nine games, was banned from postseason play by the Southeastern Conference because of an NCAA investigation into its program.

"It looks like BYU is going to get the vote," Hall told The AP. "We've been out of the focus of people for a month. I just hope they will remember us when they vote."

Switzer, while claiming Oklahoma should have been voted No. 1 if the Sooners had beaten Washington, had said he considered fifth-ranked Nebraska the best team around. But he changed his tune Tuesday night despite the Cornhuskers' 28-10 Sugar Bowl triumph over LSU.

Huskies humble No. 2 Sooners

MIAMI (AP) — Washington has proved beyond a doubt that it is in a class with second-ranked Oklahoma. Now, the Huskies are about to learn if the voters consider them in the same class with No. 1-ranked Brigham Young.

The way they (Oklahoma) advertised themselves, it was like they were supermen with a big 'S' on their chests," tailback Jacque Robinson said after Washington scored twice in the final six minutes Tuesday night and defeated the favored Sooners 28-17 in the Orange Bowl.

"I wasn't surprised, because I knew if we executed we could run on them. We ran a couple of traps that we'd never run before, but we didn't do that much different."

When the final gun sounded, the Huskies were "no different than most teams after a big victory, running around with their index fingers pointed skyward and shouting, 'We're No. 1!'" Lonzell Hill, a wide receiver, held up his jersey, displaying the numeral '1' to one and all.

"I feel like we ought to be No. 1," said Robinson, who carried 28 times for 135 yards and scored on a one-yard plunge against the nation's top-rated rushing defense which yielded only 68.8 yards a game on the ground all season. "But I don't have any control over it now. I don't know any of the writers who are voting."

The Associated Press will announce the 1984 national champion at 6:30 p.m., EST, today.

The champion is determined by total points in balloting by 60 sports writers and sportscasters, with a first-place vote worth 20 points, 19 points for second, etc.

Oklahoma Coach Barry Switzer said his Sooners "obviously didn't play well. We had too many mistakes, too many turnovers, but the ballgame was really closer than the final score, more like 21-17."

That was the score after Hugh Millen came off the bench in the fourth quarter and lofted a 12-yard touchdown pass to Mark Pattison with 5:42 left to play. Washington wrapped it up on Rick Fenney's six-yard run just 54 seconds later.

Orange Bowl

The game, often sloppy, included seven turnovers and one of the most bizarre penalties in the history of college football.

With the score tied 14-14, Oklahoma's Tim Lashar kicked an apparent 22-yard field goal early in the final period. But Oklahoma was penalized five yards for illegal procedure and then socked 15 more for unsportsmanlike conduct when its mascot, a miniature covered wagon drawn by a pair of Shetland ponies and known as the "Sooner Schooner," raced onto the field, as it usually does when Oklahoma scores. The penalties forced Lashar to try a 42-yarder, which was blocked by Washington free safety Tim Peoples.

"Why don't they tell us before the game not to let the wagon on the field?" Switzer griped. "That's tradition. We've always done that. They didn't see a penalty. They saw them signal a field goal and out they went."

"That's the first time we've ever been penalized," said Doug Madden, president of the sponsoring student group. "We can't turn it around very easily. Once it got on the field, that was as fast as we could turn it around."

The triumph enabled Washington to finish 11-1, the first time in its 96-year football history it has won that many games. Oklahoma wound up 9-2-1.

Schooner draws penalty

MIAMI (AP) — The Sooner Schooner, long a symbol of pride for the Oklahoma football team, actually helped the Washington Huskies end Oklahoma's national title hopes in the Orange Bowl.

The Schooner, a small covered wagon pulled by two white Shetland ponies, wheeled onto the field a little too fast for the officials' liking Tuesday night, and possibly cost the Sooners three points.

Early in the fourth quarter with the game tied 14-14, Oklahoma kicker Tim Lashar kicked a 22-yard goal, and the officials raised their hands to signal the

Green leads Trojans' win

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — Tim Green has gone from September's redshirt to January's Rose Bowl hero for Southern California. He knew it was coming.

"When I got up this morning, I opened my hotel room's blinds and saw it was a beautiful day. I knew we were going to win. I had that feeling," said Green, voted Co-Player of the Game with his All-America teammate, linebacker Jack Del Rio.

"I didn't want to make it public to the press. We had the last laugh. We own the town. We're the Rose Bowl champions," Green said.

While Del Rio and his defensive buddies were swarming Ohio State's Keith Byars, Green turned two of four Buckeye turnovers into tight end Joe Cormier and 19 to touchdown passes of three yards to flanker Timmie Ware.

Southern California came out ahead, 20-17.

Originally, Green had planned to bank his last season of eligibility until 1985. But an injury to No. 1 quarterback Sean Salisbury changed his course.

He was forced into the lineup and led the Trojans to a 9-3 record, the Pac-10 title and the team's 21st post-season victory, more than any other school in history.

"Not to take anything away from Salisbury," said Del Rio, "but Tim was the perfect quarterback for our team this year. He's scrappy. He's a fighter. He's a leader."

Southern California had a 17-6 halftime lead Tuesday as the Trojans' defense forced Ohio State out of its game plan.

Earle Bruce, Ohio State's coach, wanted to run his Heisman Trophy runner-up 35-40 times and only pass the ball a maximum of 25 plays. Instead, quarterback Mike Tomczak threw 37 times. Tomczak completed 24 of those for 290 yards. He threw an 18-yard touchdown pass to split end Cris Carter.

Rose Bowl

Tomczak, too, committed four turnovers and had forewarned that would be the difference in the game. Two of his interceptions set up Green's passes.

Bruce blamed the turnovers for the defeat, the Buckeyes' fourth in a row in the Rose Bowl.

Nebraska overpowers LSU

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Nebraska quarterback Craig Sundberg, who refused to let a case of the flu put him on the bench, powered the fifth-ranked Cornhuskers to a Sugar Bowl victory over mistake-prone Louisiana State.

Sundberg suffered from the flu Tuesday morning, but hit 10 of 15 passes Tuesday night for three touchdowns and ran for another to earn Most Valuable Player honors in the Cornhuskers' 28-10 victory over the 11th-ranked Tigers.

"I really didn't think he'd play," Nebraska Coach Tom Osborne said.

"I'm just really happy for all the guys," said Sundberg. "The MVP thing doesn't mean a hill of beans to me. I'm just happy for this group of seniors... many of us probably were playing in our last football game."

Sundberg had help from a 102-yard rushing effort by sophomore I-back Doug DuBose and a Husker defense that put the clamps on LSU quarterback Jeff Wickersham and running back Dalton Hilliard.

Wickersham hit 17 of 25 passes for 212 yards in the first half as the Tigers took a 10-7 lead. The Huskers scored on a 31-yard pass from Sundberg to DuBose after Ronnie Lewis kicked a 37-yard field goal in the first period and Hilliard banged in from two yards out in the second quarter for LSU.

"I don't think you ever have a team like Nebraska on the ropes," said LSU coach Bill Arnsparger. "To beat a team like them you have to play well the entire game and we didn't."

LSU missed a pair of short field goals after failing to score twice from two yards out. Wickersham managed only nine more yards passing the second half against Nebraska's nation-leading defense and was intercepted three times in the second half. All told, LSU's was intercepted five times, matching a Sugar Bowl record set in 1967 when Nebraska was routed 34-7 by Alabama.

"That first half, LSU looked like the team that tied Florida and beat Southern Cal," said Sundberg, who rolled out for a nine-yard touchdown run to put Nebraska ahead 14-10 in the third period. He iced the game with a pair of TD passes to Todd Frain in the fourth quarter.

Chad Daffer, a backup linebacker, picked off two Wickersham passes in the second half for the 10-2 Huskers.

LSU, 8-3-1, rolled up more yards than any other team against

Sugar Bowl

Nebraska this season, but couldn't move the ball consistently the second half.

The victory kept Nebraska unbeaten in its meetings with LSU. The Huskers beat the Tigers 17-12 in the 1970 Orange Bowl, 10-7 in Lincoln, Neb., in 1975, tied LSU in Baton Rouge in 1976 and slipped past the Tigers 21-20 in the 1982 Orange Bowl.

SWC warfare tips off tonight

By CHARLES RICHARDS
Associated Press Writer

The preliminary jousting has ended, and a full slate of games will open 1985 Southwest Conference basketball warfare tonight, highlighted by a match-up in College Station between Arkansas and Texas A&M.

Although Southern Methodist, 9-1, is the heavy pre-season favorite to win the title, Eddie Sutton was feeling fairly encouraged by the progress of his Arkansas team, which won eight of its first nine games before journeying to Hawaii last week to play in the Rainbow Classic.

But disaster struck on the islands, and Sutton suffered the two worst losses in his 10-year tenure at Arkansas, being blasted 72-52 by Georgia Tech and 71-52 by Iowa. Arkansas won one of three games in the tournament to fall to 9-3.

"We're terrible. A week ago I thought we were a pretty good team, but we stunk it up in Hawaii," Sutton said.

"We played some good teams, but we shouldn't have gotten beat the way we did. We're just inconsistent. These guys are about to drive me nuts. They're so young. You get by Joe Kleine and Charles Balentine, and they're all underclassmen. They wake up in a different world every day," he added.

It was not the kind of momentum Sutton hoped to build going into conference play.

Texas A&M, the opponent in tonight's 8:00 p.m. game, is 7-3, although the Aggies have problems of their own, with second-leading scorer Todd Holloway doubtful with an ankle sprain.

In tonight's other games, SMU (9-1) is at Rice (6-3) at 7:30 p.m., Houston (9-2) is at Texas Christian (8-3) at 7:30 p.m., and Texas (8-2) is at Texas Tech (6-3) at 7:30 p.m. In a non-conference game, Baylor (7-3), the nation's leading scorer with 94.7 points per game, is at Texas-San Antonio.

The league's nine teams have a combined 69-23 record — an impressive 750 average — going into conference play, with no teams under .500.

"I think that the teams that have been down are all improved," said SMU Coach Dave Bliss, whose Mustangs were undefeated and ranked fourth in the nation before suffering a controversial one-point loss to Chaminade in Hawaii on Christmas night.

"Maybe some teams have loaded up with patsies, but we'll find that out when we start the conference schedule," Bliss said.

Sutton feels his team has to do well against the Aggies, because the Razorbacks go to Dallas Saturday to play SMU before returning to Fayetteville for games with TCU and Texas. Then come road games at Texas Tech and Houston.

"I'm very concerned," Sutton said. "We can be out of the race in three weeks. The discouraging thing is we aren't practicing very well, either. We're practicing twice a day over the holiday break, which is unusual for us. I don't know how much it'll help, but it makes me feel better."

Kleine, the 6-foot-11 center, has been the team's rallying point. Averaging 22.9 points and 8.3 rebounds a game.

A&M's leading scorer is guard-forward swingman Kenny Brown, hitting at an 18.0 clip. Brown has connected on 34 of 36 free-throw attempts (94.4 percent).

PSHOH to honor Bond, Brent

Former Pampa High basketball star Jimmy Bond will be inducted into the Panhandle Sports Hall of Fame during ceremonies Jan. 13 in the Ordway Auditorium on the Amarillo College campus.

Bond will inducted along with former Stinnett grid star and Texas Tech All-American Donny Anderson, and longtime area high school basketball coach Bud Roberts.

Pampa coach Mike Brent will also be honored for leading the Harvesters to the Class 4A state golf title last year. Brent will be honored along with other coaches of state championship teams or state champions.

Bond, now a minister, starred on two Pampa state championship basketball teams in the early 1950s. Bond was the school's all-time scoring leader until Mike Nelson broke his record in 1983.

An overall coach and athlete of the year from among the individual sport winners will be announced during the 2 p.m. ceremonies Jan. 13.

The PSHOF was founded in 1959. It is co-sponsored by the Y Men's Club of Amarillo YMCA and the Amarillo Chamber of Commerce Sports Committee.

Hundreds take the plunge in annual Polar Bear rituals

By The Associated Press
 Hundreds of hearty souls greeted the New Year by hurling their warm flesh into frigid waters from coast to chilly coast in an annual rite popularized by the Polar Bear Club — where no one has cold feet when it comes to a January swim.
 In Milwaukee, about 70 Polar Bears clad in bathing suits and other skimpy garb shivered and splashed in Lake Michigan on Tuesday as several hundred people in beach chairs watched. The air temperature was 27 degrees, and the water wasn't much warmer.
 "We're thrill seekers, I guess, or just plain stupid," said Kevin Pionke, 20.
 In Vancouver, British Columbia, an estimated 1,700 people raced down a snow-covered beach to plunge into the frigid waters of English Bay in the 64th annual Polar Bear Swim.
 This year's swimmers were a little braver than in previous years: The air temperature was 32 degrees, which matched a record set on New Year's in 1929 and 1983. The water was 37 degrees.

 The chilling affair was created by Greek immigrant Peter Pantagos, who swam the bay daily for 40 years. He founded the Polar Bear Club in 1921 for hearty swimmers who thrived on cold water and began the New Year's Day dip to popularize the health benefits of winter ocean swimming.
 Others made winter waves amid less fanfare.
 In Williamsburg, Ky., 73-year-old Ray Gant said he was ending his 51-year streak of winter holiday swims in 40-degree water, but not for lack of zeal.
 "There's no place to go," he said after his final holiday swim in a 5-acre fish pond. "The rivers are polluted. Pollution is going to get us all."

 In Pittsburgh, about 40 people dived into the Monongahela River in what has become a New Year's Day ritual.
 The unusually warm weather drove the mercury up to 57 degrees, but the water was a chilly 44 degrees.
 "It's a good way to start a new year," said Karen Charles, a two-year Divers Club veteran of the annual Mon River dip. "The water was nice and not like last year when there was ice floating around."
 In California, Susan Heim dived off a crowded fishing boat near Alcatraz and beat a mob of 50 swimmers through 49-degree water back to San Francisco in the annual New Year's Day race.
 "Forty Niners win Super Bowl, that's my wish," Ms. Heim mumbled as she emerged from the chilly water.

Friend of alleged bomber charged in clinic explosions

PENSACOLA, Fla. (AP) — A second man charged in the bombings of four abortion clinics acted in conjunction with another suspect who confessed to the attacks but claimed he acted alone, authorities said.
 Matthew J. Goldsby was charged in the bombings over the weekend, and police said he told them he opposed abortion on religious grounds. On Tuesday, James Thomas Simmons, a 21-year-old glazer's apprentice, surrendered because he knew he was being sought, authorities said.

Simmons was to appear before a federal magistrate at a bond hearing today.
 Goldsby, 21, was arrested Sunday and was being held without bond after agents of the federal Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms testified he had admitted planting three bombs on Christmas morning and one on June 25.
 Both men lived in Cantonment, a rural community 10 miles north of this northwestern Florida city, and both attended the First Assembly of God Church, but officials said neither was active in anti-abortion protests.

 Simmons got his job at the Pensacola Glass Co. on the recommendation of Goldsby, whose brother works there, said Jack Sherrill, former assistant manager.
 Simmons was charged with 16 counts of violating federal firearms and explosives laws, said Jack Killorin, an ATF spokesman in Washington.
 "He turned himself in to the sheriff's office," said Dewitt Fincannon, an ATF agent in Pensacola. "He heard we were looking for him."

 Goldsby, who works for Norton-Del Gallo Construction Co., faces similar charges. The maximum penalty for each violation is 10 years in prison, a $10,000 fine or both.
 "They are charged with working in conjunction on the bombings," Killorin said.
 "Our investigation has developed no evidence that would tie these incidents to anti-abortion bombings and arsons elsewhere in the country," said Stephen E. Higgins, national director of ATF, in a prepared statement.
