It's nice today...but look out tonight

By The Associated Press

Don't be fooled by the sunny skies and mild temperatures that were on the agenda for most of Texas today.

Readings across the state were headed into the 60s and 70s this afternoon, but the National Weather Service said another arctic cold front would hit on Wednesday, accompanied by winds of 20 to 30 mph that could drop the chill factor to 20 or 30 degrees below zero.

Highs are expected to be in the 50s in North Texas on Wednesday before the front arrives, the weather service said. Then, the weather will turn sharply colder Wednesday night and Thursday, with a chance of freezing rain Wednesday night and a chance of snow Thursday, weather experts say.

Up to two inches of snow are expected in the Panhandle.

Once it hits, the cold spell is expected to linger well into the weekend.

The front was still a long way from Texas early today. It was in southern Canada and along the northern United States, where it continued to draw upon the bitter cold of the snow-covered land, growing colder every day and readying for its southward plunge.

Weather experts said the front would quickly pick up momentum after beginning its move this morning, gaining speed as it tracks southward along the eastward edge of the Rocky Mountains.

The weather service said the front's strong and gusty north winds probably will be similar to those earlier in the month that sent lawn chairs, barbecue grills and empty cans sailing. Officials said residents should take precautions against freezing and broken pipes, faucets and lawn watering systems.

Texas' weather today was being influenced by high pressure over the Ohio valley, and a developing area of low pressure across West Texas. The combination was allowing warm, moist air from the Gulf of Mexico to stream northward across the state.

As a result, low clouds blanketed much of Texas early today. Dense fog reduced visibility to a quarter of a mile or less in the Panhandle and South Plains.

Temperatures overnight were generally in the 30s and 40s with the 50s confined to deep South Texas. Temperatures at 4 a.m. ranged from 29 at Amarillo and Lubbock to 41 at Brownsville.

Legislature's leaders study tax proposals

AUSTIN (AP) — Three new proposed revenue raisers are under study by legislative leaders as they concentrate on ways to wipe out the expected $1 billion difference between state spending and income.

The staff of the Joint Select Committee on Fiscal Policy briefed Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby, Speaker Gib Lewis and other committee members on Monday.

There were no recommendations from the staff, and committee members made no decisions.

Highlighted in the two-hour session were:

— Increased taxes for the fast-growing telephone industry, possibly a combination of sales and gross receipts taxes to raise $115 million a year.

— Levying fees and charges to repay the state for handling storage and disposal of hazardous wastes.

— Putting professional services and advertising under the state sales tax.

"We are making no recommendations as these proposals are explained, just giving you results of our research," said Tom Scott, director of the briefing session.

Scott said expanding the current gross receipts tax to cover all aspects of telecommunications in addition to regular local and long distance telephone service would produce about $128 million a year.

Probably the best received of the proposals considered would be a hybrid sales and gross receipts tax that would produce $116 million a year.

Two spokesmen for the industry also recommended the two-pronged approach.

"The hybrid tax falls short of the equity of the sales tax but is better than the expanded gross receipts tax," said Vaughan Aldridge of the Texas Telephone Association.

"The industry is radically different from what it was a few years ago," said Jim Eads, AT&T, "and the combined sales and gross receipts tax probably would be better accepted."

Steve Stagner of the committee staff said the main problem with hazardous waste is that no one knows how much there is. "There's probably 50 million tons generated now in Texas but with the present reporting system, we don't know."

He said a major concern of any legislation should be to increase the reliability of reports on waste disposal and sites.

A flat charge of $2 a ton might raise $44 million to $53 million a year.

Stagner said the most workable legislation probably would combine charges for each load of waste plus annual fees for those who handle and treat it.

John Kennedy of the privately-financed Texas Research League said a special report showed sales taxes for professional services and advertising would raise revenue but it would be a problem to administer and might adversely affect business.

There also is a question of federal constitutional problems — whether it would violate the freedom of the press guarantee.

"Fourteen states, other than Texas, plus the District of Columbia, tax advertising in some manner via a sales or gross receipts tax," the report said. "Arizona is the only state that has a specific, direct tax on advertising space and time and that has been repealed and is in the last year of a four-year phaseout."

In the 1984 special session, the House approved a tax bill that would have removed the exemption for advertising taxes in Texas' current sales tax law. The exemption on advertising was restored in final conference committee negotiations.

The league study said officials in other states, without exception, commented on the difficult administrative problems involved.

Ethics officials summoned to testify on Meese report

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Senate committee, opening hearings on Edwin Meese III's controversial nomination as attorney general, wants to know why a report concluding Meese violated ethics rules was rejected after being shown to his lawyer and the White House.

Two government ethics officers who wrote the report were called to appear today before the Senate Judiciary Committee as it resumed hearings on Meese's nomination for the second time in a year.

The conclusion of the two Office of Government Ethics officials, whose names were not released, was kept secret by their boss — office director David H. Martin.

Without mentioning the staff findings, Martin overruled his staffers and wrote committee chairman Strom Thurmond, R-S.C. last week that Meese complied with ethics rules.

Meese's chief attorney, Leonard Garment, on Monday confirmed the report's existence and also defended his role in persuading Martin to reverse his staffers. The report was reportedly first shown to White House counsel Fred Fielding.

Thurmond summoned all three ethics office officials to testify about the still-secret report.

The committee's confirmation hearings are expected to concentrate on Meese's ethical conduct, especially any role he played in helping those who aided him financially in obtaining federal jobs.

The hearings will also mark the first ideological clash of President Reagan's second term between the chief executive's conservative philosophy and moderate-to-liberal senators.

Reagan's philosophy is epitomized by the 53-year-old Meese, a strong law-and-order advocate who has called the American Civil Liberties Union a "criminal's lobby."

The panel first took up Meese's nomination last March, but postponed action after an independent counsel was appointed to investigate allegations of financial misconduct and conflict of interest. Independent counsel Jacob A. Stein concluded last Sept. 20 there was "no basis" to prosecute Meese on criminal charges.

Until Monday, only Sen. Howard Metzenbaum, D-Ohio and the self-styled citizens' lobby, Common Cause, publicly contended that Stein's report showed Meese violated ethics rules.

Police seek suspect in attempted assault

BY JEFF LANGLEY
Senior Staff Writer

Police have asked for the public's help in finding a scruffy, bearded man who tried to sexually assault a 13-year-old Pampa girl walking to school this morning.

It was the second time within a week that the same suspect has tried to assault the child, police said.

About 7:20 a.m. today, the girl was walking to school in the area of Starkweather and Foster when the man tapped her on the shoulder from behind. When the girl turned to see who it was, the suspect grabbed her and ripped her blouse, police reported.

The girl broke away from the suspect and ran toward her house, officers said. The man chased her about three blocks to her home in the 300 block of East Browning, according to reports.

When the panicking child reached her home, she turned and saw the man approaching her from across the street, authorities reported. The girl's parents weren't home, police said. Fearing the man would follow her inside, the child ran from her home to a neighbor's house, where police were called, officers said.

At about the same hour on Jan. 21, the same suspect approached the girl with his car. He stopped, got out, and threatened her with a knife, the reports said. The middle school student ran to her house. The suspect got back into his car,

Composite drawing of suspect and the child watched him drive past her home. He was driving an older - model, two-tone green Buick with four doors and a broken window.

The suspect is described as white, about six feet tall and 170 pounds. He has dirty, long blonde hair and a scraggly, light-colored mustache and beard. He has a mark or scar tinged with blue on his nose and a mole on his left cheek. The girl told police the suspect has bad breath and a pot belly. The suspect is reportedly in his late 20s or early 30s.

Police have asked anyone with information about the suspect to call Lieutenant James D. Laramore at 669-7407.

Authorities say youngsters locked in bus with dogs

EAST JOSEPH, Mich. (AP) — An excrement-strewn bus where police found three shoeless, nearly savage children dressed in dirty rags was inspected last summer by welfare officials and cleared for limited migrant housing, authorities said.

The children, ages 8 months, 3 years and 4 years, were removed from the bus, examined and put in state custody after they were discovered locked inside the rusted-out vehicle with several dogs, said State Trooper Larry Krieger.

Their parents, Donald and Eva Monk, were arraigned Monday on three counts of child abuse and neglect. Monk posted $3,000 bail and was released, but his wife remained in custody early today.

Social services workers told police the family was living in the bus last summer but that their living conditions apparently had worsened considerably since.

When the children were found Sunday, they were "dressed in dirty rags," said State Police Sgt. Larry Seman. "They are nearly feral children with practically no communication skills and no knowledge of eating utensils."

Their parents were away pruning fruit trees when the children were found, police said.

Seman said the bus offered little protection from the elements and was "full of human and animal fecal material generated (by the family) and their two dogs."

Wes Bowerman, a spokesman for the state Department of Social Services, said the bus, parked 500 yards off a road near abandoned shacks in the community of Berrien Springs, had running water and that its windows were intact when it was inspected last summer.

There also was a toilet outside and the department declared the vehicle suitable for summertime migrant housing, Bowerman said.

"The children were clean at the time, well-dressed..." Bowerman said.

But when people on a sleigh ride spotted a child's face in one of the bus windows on Sunday, the bus' windows were broken. It had electricity and a space heater, but the family had been using a can for a toilet, said State Police Sgt. James Uebler.

Bowerman said Monk told the department that he and his family had planned to drive the bus to Florida for the winter. In September, Bowerman said, workers confirmed with Monk that he was making preparations to leave before cold weather set in.

Krieger said Monk told him he originally was from Florida and his wife was from Kentucky. Monk gave conflicting statements about his age, saying that he was 64 years old, born on Jan. 17, 1920.

Krieger said Monk appeared to be in his 30s, and his wife said she was 32.

Monk told Krieger that he and his family lived in the bus because they did not want to accept welfare. Monk, who called himself a "self-taught reader," said he had lived in Berrien County off and on for about 10 years, and worked in fruit orchards.

Legalized horse racing bill introduced in Texas House

AUSTIN (AP) — A bill to legalize horse racing in Texas, along with pari-mutuel betting, has been introduced in the Texas Legislature.

The bill, sponsored by Rep. Hugo Berlanga, D-Corpus Christi, and Rep. George Pierce, R-San Antonio, would put the state in charge of regulating racing.

A similar bill was passed by the Senate in 1983, but failed in the House by two votes.

Sen. Ike Harris, R-Dallas, is planning a similar measure in the Senate.

Berlanga said he thinks the House will favor his bill this time because of the need for new state revenue sources and because in 1981 and 1983 the House broke a psychological barrier by voting on horse racing.

"Primarily, we feel like we're operating from a position of strength," Berlanga said.

House Speaker Gib Lewis, D-Fort Worth, said he favors pari-mutuel betting as "something that is overdue, especially with the financial problems facing the state."

Former President Gerald Ford addressed a group of thoroughbred horse breeders in Austin Saturday and urged them to work for legalization of horse racing and pari-mutuel betting. He said legalized racing would help both the Texas economy and the horse industry.

Berlanga, the speaker pro tem, also sponsored the pari-mutuel bill in 1983. His new bill differs in several ways, including on the question of securing public approval.

The 1983 bill would have required first a statewide referendum on whether to permit betting on horses. If that had been approved, a county could have held an election on whether to permit pari-mutuel gambling locally.

The new bill provides for no statewide election, only the local election.

Berlanga acknowledged that his new bill is at odds with Gov. Mark White, who has said he wants a statewide vote before pari-mutuel gambling is permitted. Berlanga said he is going to meet with White in hopes of getting his support.

Another difference in the new bill is that in 1983 money earned by the state from the gambling was to be earmarked for poverty and water programs. But none of the state share is earmarked for a particular use by the current bill, Berlanga said. The tight state fiscal situation makes it unfair to lock the money into one use, he said.

According to the bill, its purpose is "to encourage agriculture, the horse-breeding industry, the horse-training industry, tourism, and employment opportunities in this state related to horse racing and to provide for the strict regulation and control of pari-mutuel wagering in connection with horse racing in counties on a local-option basis."

The Texas Horse Racing Association has said pari-mutuel betting eventually could bring the state $75 million to $100 million annually in new revenues.

Legislator proposes forced consolidations

AUSTIN (AP) — Sen. Hector Uribe says his bill to consolidate smaller school districts would save money for the state by eliminating the duplication of services.

Uribe, D-Brownsville, said State Comptroller Bob Bullock has estimated that the bill could save Texas over $50 million a year.

The bill, which was filed Monday, would require school districts in Texas with fewer than 500 students to consolidate with adjacent districts.

Uribe said figures compiled by the Texas Education Agency for 1983-84 indicate that 432 smaller school districts would be targeted for consolidation under his bill.

"The consolidation of school districts with few students would produce needed savings by eliminating the duplication of facilities, services and personnel," Uribe said.

FCC refuses to mandate signals before commercials

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal Communications Commission has rejected a proposal that would let parents install electronic boxes on their TV sets to delete commercials aimed at children.

The FCC denied a request from two activist groups to require TV stations to broadcast special signals before and after the commercials that would trigger the electronic boxes. The device would decode the electronic signal and make the TV screen go blank while the ad is running.

The FCC decided to leave the ads alone because "advertising supports children's programming," Freda Lippert Thyden, a commission attorney who worked on the case, said Monday after the decision was announced.

Deleting TV ads aimed at children would prompt sponsors to spend their money elsewhere in an effort to reach the young consumers of toys, cereals and hamburgers. And if the shows didn't have sponsors, they wouldn't last long, a commission statement said.

Peggy Charren, founder and president of Action for Children's Television, said the ruling did not surprise her "since we lost on every other bright idea we've brought before the commission in the last three or four years."

Ms. Thyden said the decision did not necessarily reflect the FCC's current philosophy that favors deregulation. "This is the kind of thing we never would have done even in the liberal heyday when they were making a lot of regulations," she said.

Ms. Charren said the decision proves that "neither the industry nor the FCC means it when they say the option should be in the hands of the parent."

Nevertheless, Ms. Charren said she had no plans to appeal the commission's decision in federal court.

The traditional argument has it that a TV has an on-off switch and parents are welcome to use it if there is something they don't think their children should watch.

Ms. Charren said her proposal would have made the off switch automatic. The FCC, with Reagan-appointed Mark S. Fowler as chairman, has depended on parents and the marketplace to make sure there is a varied menu of programs available for children.

Before 1983, TV stations were required to present children's programming that was informative, directed at a specific age level and scheduled throughout the week, not just on weekends.

The commission decided in 1983 to alter those guidelines and give commercial stations more leeway in scheduling shows for kids.

Defending the changes recently in court, the FCC said expansion of children's programming on cable and public television means it is no longer necessary for government to specify programming requirements for commercial broadcasters.

Action for Children's Television, which filed the detector signal request along with Public Advocates, Inc., has other children's TV issues before the commission.

One petition asks the FCC to rule that shows featuring cartoon characters like Masters of the Universe are actually program-length commercials for toy action figures that should be banned.

Another asks the commission to decide whether broadcasters should be offered a share of the profits when toys featured on TV shows sell well.

New jury will be selected in A&M cadet death trial

BRYAN, Texas (AP) — Attorneys will pick a new jury to hear the trial of a former Texas A&M University cadet accused of hazing another student.

District Court Judge Carolyn Ruffino on Monday dissolved the six-woman jury chosen hours earlier after an attorney complained some members of the panel discussed the case outside the courtroom.

A gag order is imposed in the case.

"A new trial, with new jurors and everything will be selected on Wednesday," said a court spokeswoman who refused to give her name. She characterized the incident as "an infraction on the gag order."

Gabriel Cuadra, 21, of Houston, is charged with hazing and tampering with evidence in connection with the Aug. 30 death of Bruce Dean Goodrich, 20, of Webster, N.Y.

Authorities said Goodrich died of heat stroke after three upperclassmen got him out of bed and forced him to take part in early-morning "motivational exercises."

An indictment alleges that Cuadra, the senior personnel officer in Goodrich's cadet unit, knew about plans for the motivational exercises, which had been banned by A&M, and later destroyed an exercise roster after officials began investigating Goodrich's death.

Ruffino declared the mistrial after Hank Paine Jr., Cuadra's attorney, complained that jurors had discussed the case with spectators during a five-minute afternoon recess.

Bryan attorney Bill Vance, who represents three other cadets charged in the case, testified he saw an employee of County Attorney Jim Kuboviak talking to jurors in the hallway outside the courtroom.

Killer, 13, sent to reformatory

BELTON, Texas (AP) — A 13-year-old Killeen youth — who killed two schoolmates in November because they wanted to go home the morning after they had run away — has been sent to a state reformatory until he is 18.

It was the stiffest punishment possible for him under Texas law. State District Judge J.F. Clawson said in passing sentence Monday. The boy will be free upon reaching his 18th birthday.

Under state law, no one under the age of 15 can be tried as an adult. He was also found guilty of being a runaway.

During the hearing before Clawson Monday, the youth pleaded "true" to charges of murdering Travis Earl Stafford, 14, and Jay Wook Kim, 13, last Nov. 7. It was the equivalent of a confession in juvenile law, Bell County Attorney Pat Ridley said.

After the court found him guilty, the youth and his attorney, Kay Colburn, waived appeal.

The youth was one of five boys who played hooky from Rancier Middle School in Killeen and spent the night in crates at the Harker Heights landfill adjoining Killeen. The boys involved were Stafford and Kim, the youth accused of killing them, and two 14-year-old companions.

Before they started out, the boys took clothing, more than $100, a 20-gauge shotgun, and a 44-caliber hunting rifle from Stafford's home.

When an argument occurred the next morning because Kim and Stafford wanted to go home, Kim was shot in the chest with the rifle, authorities said.

Superintendent kills himself

CLEVELAND (AP) — A school superintendent who reportedly feared he would lose his $80,000-a-year job left a note saying his life's purpose "seems to be lost" because of politics before shooting himself to death in a high school stairwell, police said.

The body of Frederick D. Holliday, 58, superintendent of Ohio's largest school system, was found Monday inside Aviation High School, a magnet school of 325 students where he kept his private plane.

Of his love for flying, Holliday told an interviewer in 1983, "I forget everything about Cleveland when I'm up there. I just look at it and the problems seem to diminish. It's a different story when I'm on the ground."

Holliday's suicide note, was one of "petty politics, racial politics, greed, hate and corruption."

Although Holliday was reportedly worried about his job, he had been assured by City Council President George Forbes that he would be rehired, according to Forbes.

"I told Fred he had another year, and he seemed pleased," Forbes said Monday. Forbes said he had met last week with a school board member who agreed to be the swing vote for a one-year extension of Holliday's contract, which expired in July.

A graduate of Harvard and Temple universities, Holliday had just given a mostly upbeat interview to a radio station before he went to the high school on Saturday and shot himself.

Town unimpressed by namesake movie

PARIS, Texas (AP) — An award-winning movie named "Paris, Texas," doesn't bother the residents of the real Paris, Texas, too much.

In fact, the only part they find unsettling is the fact that the movie wasn't even filmed here, and has little to do with the small northeast Texas town it's named after.

"It might as well be titled 'Kokomo, Ind.,'" said Patrick Ryan, manager of the Paris Chamber of Commerce. "None of it was shot here."

Another resident also wondered why they named the film after the town. Only one glimpse of Paris is included in the 145-minute movie — a snapshot of a vacant lot.

"It's about a man who wants to come to Paris, Texas — God only knows what for," said Bill Lamb, managing editor of the Paris News. "If they used us for the title, they should have filmed some of it here."

The movie, which won the 1984 Cannes Film Festival, was made by a German director and financed by French investors.

The film's main character, Travis, turns up wandering in the Texas desert after a mysterious, four-year absence. He tries to reunite with his family and dreams of moving to Paris, Texas — the town where he believes he was conceived.

At one point, Travis holds a snapshot of a vacant lot in Paris where he plans to build a home. But Travis never reaches Paris, which is in the Red River Valley about 100 miles northeast of Dallas.

His quest becomes a symbolic search for lost roots. Portions of the film were shot in Texas — "just about everywhere except in Paris" — said Joel Smith, Texas Film Commission director. Locations included Port Arthur, Houston, Nordheim, Terlingua and El Paso, Smith said.

"There's no question we'll get lots of exposure," said Paris banker Thomas Steely. "But will it be good or not?"

Steely's great-grandfather founded Paris in 1839. He said he is protective of the reputation of the 25,000-population town.

"Our character froze in the 1920s. It may sound strange to you, but I like seeing the people I've known for 50 years," Steely said.

Paris has escaped much of the turmoil of modern life, he said. During the 1930s, Paris was a cotton-farming boomtown and railroad center. The cotton gins stand idle now and the railroads have long declined.

Industry is now the town's major employer. Campbell's soup and Huggie's diapers are made in Paris.

"A Campbell's soup plant is nothing to sneeze at," Steely said. "It's better than an oil well."

Industrial growth has slowed the exodus of workers who left Paris in the past. Between 1920 and 1960, the town's population shrank from 55,000 to 34,000. But hundreds of soldiers stationed in Paris during World War II stayed when the war ended.

"My husband was a Bostonian," said Mildred Plummer, 78, who married a soldier. "He liked good old Texas. He never had a desire to go back to Yankee land."

Fire destroyed the town in 1897 and 1916. Disaster struck again in 1982 when a tornado killed 11 Paris residents, injured 165 and caused at least $50 million in damage.

The town rebuilt within a year. "There's a stickability here," Ryan said. "That's the best way I can describe it. People keep on keeping on."

To attract tourists, Paris celebrates Bastille Day. The festival includes a quiche supper served at the local YMCA.

State lawyer opposes rule proposal of AT&T

AUSTIN (AP) — A rule change proposed by AT&T Communications would allow the long distance company to raise its rates before undergoing Public Utility Commission review, according to a state lawyer.

"This would leave AT&T free to use its monopoly power to raise rates for captive rural customers and drive competing long distance companies out of business," said Public Utility Counsel Jim Boyle, who represents home and small business customers.

The AT&T proposal would allow a "dominant" long distance carrier to change its rates immediately upon filing with the PUC. The rates would go to a commission hearing if any objections are filed within 15 days.

"We proposed a set of rules that would remove a bunch of the regulations that exist today and would reduce the cost of regulation, which ultimately the customers have to pay for," said Tom Jones, an AT&T vice president.

Boyle on Monday asked the commission to throw out the AT&T request.

"AT&T seeks to achieve a virtual deregulation of their rates," he said.

Under current PUC rules, AT&T cannot change rates or services until after a commission hearing. The process can take six months or more.

"There are ample safeguards built into what we have proposed," said Jones, pointing out a provision barring long distance companies from charging higher rates in noncompetitive areas.

AT&T has complained it is at a competitive disadvantage because other long distance companies — such as MCI and GTE Sprint — are not regulated by Texas.

The commission in February will decide whether it has the authority to change the rules.

"Our objective is to have the flexibility to operate as anybody does in any kind of competitive market," said Jones.

Lower interest rates helping home builders

HOUSTON (AP) — The housing industry went "back to work" during the Reagan administration, but the future of the nation's economy will depend upon reduced federal spending, the secretary of Housing and Urban Development said.

"We want as many people as possible to be homeowners," Samuel R. Pierce said Monday during the 41st annual convention of the National Association of Home Builders.

Home ownership is the "American dream," and the Reagan administration's success in lowering interest rates has helped the housing industry, Pierce said in a news conference.

However, Pierce said, the nation's economy is not as healthy. "If we don't get deficits down, our economy is going to go straight to hell," Pierce said. "We have to decrease spending if we want to keep our economy strong."

But he would not say what concessions he would be willing to make for his department in the upcoming federal budget to be proposed by President Reagan.

"I don't want to get into that," he said of the budget battle. "It's the president's business."

Pierce reminded home builders that housing starts have been up dramatically for two straight years now and that mortgage rates have fallen and continue to fall.

"We must be doing something right," he said. "Together, we've succeeded in putting the housing industry back to work. When you're working, it radiates throughout the economy — pulling other industries forward with you."

A Treasury Department tax reform plan recently released would, among other things, eliminate state and local property taxes as deductions, a move seen by builders as a hindrance to their business.

Pierce promised home builders to "work to keep your interests understood and fairly dealt with at Treasury and within the Administration. We want to be certain that they and the Congress fully realize what various tax reform proposals will do to housing."

He said his department has allocated grants to areas experiencing housing shortages, encouraged foreign investment in the U.S. mortgage market and trimmed assisted housing debt to about $230 billion, down by $20 billion.

"The housing industry is on the grow again, and more and more people are better off because of it," he said.

Meanwhile, a survey of 1,081 builders attending the 41st annual convention indicated 71 percent of them planned to increase the price of the houses they build this year. The average price increase would be 6 percent.

Only game in a small town

I have a bone to pick with Lance Lahnert, the Amarillo newspaper sportswriter who said that girls' basketball is BORING.

I don't know how boring the girls' games are in Amarillo, but for excitement-starved small towns in Oklahoma, they used to be the only games in town.

The Deer Creek Antlerettes seldom played "ette" basketball at its finest, but the girls always gave their fans something to watch.

Like most Oklahoma small schools in the 1970s, Deer Creek played six-man girls' basketball. I know that sounds weird, but what it meant was that each team had six players on the court: three guards on one side and three forwards on the other side.

The two girls who made the best of the "half-court" format were Kimi and Crystl. Kimi was a guard and one of the meanest girls on or off the court. Every time an opponent forward would make a free shot, Kimi would snatch a rebound, pop across the end line and hurl the ball clear across the court to Crystl, who would be standing under the goal ready to sink the ball in the basket. All the opponents could do was stand there looking dumbfounded at this orange comet that was flying above their heads.

Carol was another interesting rebounder. After the ball would hit or miss the hoop, Carol would jump up spread-eagle, then curl herself around the ball. She wasn't really that exciting, but she always had such a cute confused look on her face when she stood behind the end line wondering who she should pass the ball to.

Then there were Sissy and Linda, two girls who were supposedly so good that when they were in the fifth grade, they would play in junior high scrimmages. At least that's what Sissy always told me. Linda always made higher scores than Sissy — 36 points in one game — but Sissy was the one who became Homecoming Queen. Actually, Janice could dribble circles around both of them, but nobody cared because she was just a guard.

Carol, Linda, Sissy and Janice were members of the Conference Champion 1972 team. At the beginning of each game, Mary, the team captain, would poke her head out of the dressing room and shout "What's the big word?" And the pep club would answer "Beeat Latta (or other opponent)!" Then the team would stream out of the dressing room chanting "Go Antlers. Beat Latta. Go Antlers. Beat Latta."

But the girls didn't make it to state that year. Maybe it was their spirit song: the instrumental version of "Love Potion Number Nine."

The bad thing about girls' basketball during those early 1970s was that it depleted the cheerleading squad. As a result, the girls never got as many organized rah-rahs from the pep club as the boys did. Oh, Kathy tried, but as the only non-basketball playing cheerleader, her half-time cheering routines were so unspectacular.

As the school grew, so did the number of girls who went out for basketball and cheerleading. By 1974, the year "Our Boys" went to state, there were no basketball players on the cheering squad.

No self-respecting Deer Creek lady roundballer would ever call herself an "Antlerette." But if you were one, you were a somebody. If you weren't, you were a misfit. I was a misfit.

Basketball is no longer the only game at Deer Creek. Now the school has wrestling, football, golf, tennis and money. The Antler priorities are different now; all the heroes and somebodies are on the football field.

I haven't seen an Antler girls' game in years. They've just gotten to be too boring.

Farm Bureau: water bill needs some changes

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Farm Bureau says the current water bill before the Legislature will pose some problems for farmers and ranchers unless some modifications are made.

A six-month water study released by the bureau on Monday pinpointed water rights, the formation of water districts not controlled locally and the control of ground water as the bill's main problems.

"We believe the key issue in new water legislation for farmers and ranchers will be to maintain the existing ownership of ground water rights and to give no further grounds regarding surface water rights," said John Baker of Temple, who headed the water study committee.

The House Committee on Natural Resources on Monday continued its review of the water pack luncheon. Baker said water should remain the property of the landowner and the state should not regulate underground water conservation districts. The Farm Bureau would rather see the districts controlled on a local level, he said.

Other issues of concern to the Farm Bureau are conservation program research, agricultural loan programs, provisions on bays and estuaries, future water storage facilities and water quality and pollution, said Baker.

"We use 72 percent of the water that is consumed for irrigation and livestock watering," he said.

The bay and estuaries provision in the water bill is of major concern to farmers and ranchers, especially those who use reservoir water, he said. Coastal interests want any water bill to include protection of fresh-water flow to bays and estuaries.

During the 1984 drought, Baker said Gulf Coast rice growers were hurt when reservoir water was sent downstream to help shellfish nurseries.

"The consequence was less water for rice growers at a critical time in their production cycle," Baker said.

S.M. True of Plainview, Farm Bureau president, said his group also will monitor farm labor legislation, tax changes and farm-to-market road bills.

"These are vital issues to agriculture because they affect our costs and the way we farm," True said. "We must hold down costs now because agriculture is in an economic crisis that threatens to put a lot of good farmers out of business."

Legalized horse racing bill introduced in Texas House

AUSTIN (AP) - A bill to legalize horse racing in Texas, along with pari-mutuel betting, has been introduced in the Texas Legislature.

The bill, sponsored by Rep. Hugo Berlanga, D-Corpus Christi, and Rep. George Pierce, R-San Antonio, would put the state in charge of regulating racing.

A similar bill was passed by the Senate in 1983, but failed in the House by two votes.

Sen. Ike Harris, R-Dallas, is planning a similar measure in the Senate.

Berlanga said he thinks the House will favor his bill this time because of the need for new state revenue sources and because in 1981 and 1983 the House broke a psychological barrier by voting on horse racing.

"Primarily, we feel like we're operating from a position of strength," Berlanga said.

House Speaker Gib Lewis, D-Fort Worth, said he favors pari-mutuel betting as "something that is overdue, especially with the financial problems facing the state."

Former President Gerald Ford addressed a group of thoroughbred horse breeders in Austin Saturday and urged them to work for legalization of horse racing and pari-mutuel betting. He said legalized racing would help both the Texas economy and the horse industry.

Berlanga, the speaker pro tem, also sponsored the pari-mutuel bill in 1983. His new bill differs in several ways, including on the question of securing public approval.

The 1983 bill would have required first a statewide referendum on whether to permit betting on horses. If that had been approved, a county could have held an election on whether to permit pari-mutuel gambling locally.

The new bill provides for no statewide election, only the local election.

Berlanga acknowledged that his new bill is at odds with Gov. Mark White, who has said he wants a statewide vote before pari-mutuel gambling is permitted. Berlanga said he is going to meet with White in hopes of getting his support.

Another difference in the new bill is that in 1983 money earned by the state from the gambling was to be earmarked for poverty and water programs. But none of the state share is earmarked for a particular use by the current bill, Berlanga said. The tight state fiscal situation makes it unfair to lock the money into one use, he said.

According to the bill, its purpose is "to encourage agriculture, the horse-breeding industry, the horse-training industry, tourism, and employment opportunities in this state related to horse racing and to provide for the strict regulation and control of pari-mutuel wagering in connection with horse racing in counties on a local-option basis."

The Texas Horse Racing Association has said pari-mutuel betting eventually could bring the state $75 million to $100 million annually in new revenues.

Legislator proposes forced consolidations

AUSTIN (AP) - Sen. Hector Uribe says his bill to consolidate smaller school districts would save money for the state by eliminating the duplication of services.

Uribe, D-Brownsville, said State Comptroller Bob Bullock has estimated that the bill could save Texas over $50 million a year.

The bill, which was filed Monday, would require school districts in Texas with fewer than 500 students to consolidate with adjacent districts.

Uribe said figures compiled by the Texas Education Agency for 1983-84 indicate that 432 smaller school districts would be targeted for consolidation under his bill.

"The consolidation of school districts with few students would produce needed savings by eliminating the duplication of facilities, services and personnel," Uribe said.

FCC refuses to mandate signals before commercials

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Federal Communications Commission has rejected a proposal that would let parents install electronic boxes on their TV sets to delete commercials aimed at children.

The FCC denied a request from two activist groups to require TV stations to broadcast special signals before and after the commercials that would trigger the electronic boxes. The device would decode the electronic signal and make the TV screen go blank while the ad is running.

The FCC decided to leave the ads alone because "advertising supports children's programming," Freda Lippert Thyden, a commission attorney who worked on the case, said Monday after the decision was announced.

Deleting TV ads aimed at children would prompt sponsors to spend their money elsewhere in an effort to reach the young consumers of toys, cereals and hamburgers. And if the shows didn't have sponsors, they wouldn't last long, a commission statement said.

Peggy Charren, founder and president of Action for Children's Television, said the ruling did not surprise her "since we lost on every other bright idea we've brought before the commission in the last three or four years."

Ms. Thyden said the decision did not necessarily reflect the FCC's current philosophy that favors deregulation. "This is the kind of thing we never would have done even in the liberal heyday when they were making a lot of regulations," she said.

Ms. Charren said the decision proves that "neither the industry nor the FCC means it when they say the option should be in the hands of the parent." Nevertheless, Ms. Charren said she had no plans to appeal the commission's decision in federal court.

The traditional argument has it that a TV has an on-off switch and parents are welcome to use it if there is something they don't think their children should watch.

Ms. Charren said her proposal would have made the off switch automatic. The FCC, with Reagan-appointed Mark S. Fowler as chairman, has depended on parents and the marketplace to make sure there is a varied menu of programs available for children.

Before 1983, TV stations were required to present children's programming that was informative, directed at a specific age level and scheduled throughout the week, not just on weekends.

The commission decided in 1983 to alter those guidelines and give commercial stations more leeway in scheduling shows for kids.

Defending the changes recently in court, the FCC said expansion of children's programming on cable and public television means it is no longer necessary for government to specify programming requirements for commercial broadcasters.

Action for Children's Television, which filed the detector signal request along with Public Advocates, Inc., has other children's TV issues before the commission.

One petition asks the FCC to rule that shows featuring cartoon characters like Masters of the Universe are actually program-length commercials for toy action figures that should be banned.

Another asks the commission to decide whether broadcasters should be offered a share of the profits when toys featured on TV shows sell well.

White House wanderer found in dining room

DENVER (AP) - A man who followed the Marine Band into the White House on Jan. 20 because he wanted to see President Reagan's inauguration was arrested after he was found sitting in the First Family's private dining room, published reports said today.

Robert Latta told aides to Rep. Pat Schroeder, D-Colo., on Monday that he had just been released on $1,000 bond after spending eight days in jail, the Rocky Mountain News and The Denver Post reported.

Latta, 45, wandered freely through the White House until he was discovered sitting at the dining room table in the Reagans' second-floor family quarters, the reports said.

In Washington, D.C., Secret Service spokesman Mike Tarr confirmed today that Latta is facing misdemeanor proceedings on a charge of unlawful entry, but refused to elaborate on the incident.

Latta, who is from Denver, reportedly told Schroeder's aides that he was unable to obtain a ticket to tour the White House where the private swearing in ceremony took place, so despite the heavy security in place for the inauguration he walked in the company of the Marine honor band.

New jury will be selected in A&M cadet death trial

BRYAN, Texas (AP) - Attorneys will pick a new jury to hear the trial of a former Texas A&M University cadet accused of hazarding another student.

District Court Judge Carolyn Ruffino on Monday dissolved the six-woman jury chosen hours earlier after an attorney complained some members of the panel discussed the case outside the courtroom.

A gag order is imposed in the case.

"A new trial, with new jurors and everything will be selected on Wednesday," said a court spokeswoman who refused to give her name. She characterized the incident as "an infraction on the gag order."

Gabriel Cuadra, 21, of Houston, is charged with hazarding and tampering with evidence in connection with the Aug. 30 death of Bruce Dean Goodrich, 20, of Webster, N.Y.

Authorities said Goodrich died of heat stroke after three other cadets got him out of bed and forced him to take part in early-morning "motivational exercises."

An indictment alleges that Cuadra, the senior personnel officer in Goodrich's cadet unit, knew about plans for the

motivational exercises, which had been banned by A&M, and later destroyed an exercise roster after officials began investigating Goodrich's death.

Ruffino declared the mistrial after Hank Paine Jr., Cuadra's attorney, complained that jurors had discussed the case with spectators during a five-minute afternoon recess.

Bryan attorney Bill Vance, who represents three other cadets charged in the case, testified he saw an employee of County Attorney Jim Kuboviak talking to jurors in the hallway outside the courtroom.

Killer, 13, sent to reformatory

BELTON, Texas (AP) - A 13-year-old Killeen youth - who killed two schoolmates in November because they wanted to go home the morning after they had run away - has been sent to a state reformatory until he is 18.

It was the stiffest punishment possible for him under Texas law, State District Judge J.F. Clawson said in passing sentence Monday. The boy will be free upon reaching his 18th birthday.

Under state law, no one under the age of 15 can be tried as an adult. He was also found guilty of being a runaway.

During the hearing before Clawson Monday, the youth pleaded "true" to charges of murdering Travis Earl Stafford, 14, and Jay Wook Kim, 13, last Nov. 7. It was the equivalent of a confession in juvenile law, Bell County Attorney Pat Ridley said.

After the court found him guilty, the youth and his attorney, Kay Colburn, waived appeal.

The youth was one of five boys who got hooked by Rancier Middle School in Killeen and spent the night in crates at the Harker Heights landfill adjoining Killeen. The boys involved were Stafford and Kim, the youth accused of killing them, and two 14-year-old companions.

Before they started out, the boys took clothing, more than $100, a 20-gauge shotgun, and a .44-caliber hunting rifle from Stafford's home.

When an argument occurred the next morning because Kim and Stafford wanted to go home, Kim was shot in the chest with the rifle, authorities said.

Town unimpressed by namesake movie

PARIS, Texas (AP) — An award-winning movie named "Paris, Texas," doesn't bother the residents of the real Paris, Texas, too much.

"In fact, the only part they find unsettling is the fact that the movie wasn't even filmed here, and has little to do with the small northeast Texas town it's named after."

"It might as well be titled 'Kokomo, Ind.,'" said Patrick Ryan, manager of the Paris Chamber of Commerce. "None of it was shot here."

"Another resident also wondered why they named the film after the town. Only one glimpse of Paris is included in the 145-minute movie — a snapshot of a vacant lot."

"It's about a man who wants to come to Paris, Texas — God only knows what for," said Bill Lamb, managing editor of the Paris News. "If they used us for the title, they should have filmed some of it here."

The movie, which won the 1984 Cannes Film

Festival, was made by a German director and financed by French investors.

The film's main character, Travis, turns up wandering in the Texas desert after a mysterious, four-year absence. He tries to reunite with his family and dreams of moving to Paris, Texas — the town where he believes he was conceived.

At one point, Travis holds a snapshot of a vacant lot in Paris where he plans to build a home. But Travis never reaches Paris, which is in the Red River Valley about 100 miles northeast of Dallas.

His quest becomes a symbolic search for lost roots.

Portions of the film were shot in Texas — "just about everywhere except in Paris" — said Joel Smith, Texas Film Commission director. Locations included Port Arthur, Houston, Nordheim, Terlingua and El Paso, Smith said.

"There's no question we'll get lots of exposure," said Paris banker Thomas Steely, 66. "But will it be good or not?"

Steely's great-grandfather founded Paris in 1839. He said he is protective of the reputation of the 25,000-population town.

"Our character froze in the 1920s. It may sound strange to you, but I like seeing the people I've known for 50 years," Steely said.

Paris has escaped much of the turmoil of modern life, he said.

During the 1930s, Paris was a cotton-farming boomtown and railroad center. The cotton gins stand idle now and the railroads have long declined.

Industry is now the town's major employer. Campbell's soup and Huggie's diapers are made in Paris.

"A Campbell's soup plant is nothing to sneeze at," Steely said. "It's better than an oil well."

Industrial growth has slowed the exodus of workers who left Paris in the past. Between 1920 and 1960, the town's population shrank from 55,000 to 34,000.

But hundreds of soldiers stationed in Paris during World War II stayed when the war ended.

"My husband was a Bostonian," said Mildred Plummer, 78, who married a soldier. "He liked good old Texas. He never had a desire to go back to Yankee land."

Fire destroyed the town in 1897 and 1916. Disaster struck again in 1982 when a tornado killed 11 Paris residents, injured 165 and caused at least $50 million in damage.

The town rebuilt within a year.

"There's a stickability here," Ryan said. "That's the best way I can describe it. People keep on keeping on."

To attract tourists, Paris celebrates Bastille Day. The festival includes a quiche supper served at the local YMCA.

State lawyer opposes rule proposal of AT&T

AUSTIN (AP) — A rule change proposed by AT&T Communications would allow the long distance company to raise its rates before undergoing Public Utility Commission review, according to a state lawyer.

"This would leave AT&T free to use its monopoly power to raise rates for captive rural customers and drive competing long distance companies out of business," said Public Utility Counsel Jim Boyle, who represents home and small business customers.

The AT&T proposal would allow a "dominant" long distance carrier to change its rates immediately upon filing with the PUC. The rates would go to a commission hearing if any objections are filed within 15 days.

"We proposed a set of rules that would remove a bunch of the regulations that exist today and would reduce the cost of regulation, which ultimately the customers have to pay for," said Tom Jones, an AT&T vice president.

Boyle on Monday asked the commission to throw out the AT&T request.

"AT&T seeks to achieve a virtual deregulation of their rates," he said.

Under current PUC rules, AT&T cannot change rates or services until after a commission hearing. The process can take six months or more.

"There are ample safeguards built into what we have proposed," said Jones, pointing out a provision barring long distance companies from charging higher rates in noncompetitive areas.

AT&T has complained it is at a competitive disadvantage because other long distance companies — such as MCI and GTE Sprint — are not regulated by Texas.

The commission in February will decide whether it has the authority to change the rules.

"Our objective is to have the flexibility to operate as anybody does in any kind of competitive market," said Jones.

Lower interest rates helping home builders

HOUSTON (AP) — The housing industry went "back to work" during the Reagan administration, but the future of the nation's economy will depend upon reduced federal spending, the secretary of Housing and Urban Development said.

"We want as many people as possible to be homeowners," Samuel R. Pierce said Monday during the 41st annual convention of the National Association of Home Builders.

Home ownership is the "American dream," and the Reagan administration's success in lowering interest rates has helped the housing industry, Pierce said in a news conference.

However, Pierce said, the nation's economy is not as healthy.

"If we don't get deficits down, our economy is going to go straight to hell," Pierce said. "We have to decrease spending if we want to keep our economy strong."

But he would not say what concessions he would be willing to make for his department in the upcoming federal budget to be proposed by President Reagan.

"I don't want to get into that," he said of the budget battle. "It's the president's business."

Pierce reminded home builders that housing starts have been up dramatically for two straight years now and that mortgage rates have fallen and continue to fall.

"We must be doing something right," he said. "Together, we've succeeded in putting the housing industry back to work. When you're working, it radiates throughout the economy — pulling other industries forward with you."

A Treasury Department tax reform plan recently released would, among other things, eliminate state and local property taxes as deductions, a move seen by builders as a hindrance to their business.

Pierce promised home builders to "work to keep your interests understood and fairly dealt with at Treasury and within the Administration. We want to be certain that they and the Congress fully realize what various tax reform proposals will do to housing."

He said his department has allocated grants to areas experiencing housing shortages, encouraged foreign investment in the U.S. mortgage market and trimmed assisted housing debt to about $230 billion, down by $20 billion.

"The housing industry is on the grow again, and more and more people are better off because of it," he said.

Meanwhile, a survey of 1,081 builders attending the 41st annual convention indicated 71 percent of them planned to increase the price of the houses they build this year. The average price increase would be 6 percent.

Only game in a small town

I have a bone to pick with Lance Lahnert, the Amarillo newspaper sportswriter who said that girls' basketball is BORING.

I don't know how boring the girls' games are in Amarillo, but for excitement-starved small towns in Oklahoma, they used to be the only games in town.

The Deer Creek Antlerettes seldom played "ette" basketball at its finest, but the girls always gave their fans something to watch.

Like most Oklahoma small schools in the 1970s, Deer Creek played six-man girls' basketball. I know that sounds weird, but what it meant was that each team had six players on the court: three guards on one side and three forwards on the other side.

The two girls who made the best of the "half-court" format were Kimi and Crystl. Kimi was a guard and one of the meanest girls on or off the court. Every time an opponent forward would make a free shot, Kimi would snatch a rebound, pop across the end line and hurl the ball clear across the court to Crystl, who would be standing under the goal ready to sink the ball in the basket. All the opponents could do was stand there looking dumbfounded at this orange comet that was flying above their heads.

Carol was another interesting rebounder. After the ball would hit or miss the hoop, Carol would jump up spread-eagle, then curl herself around the ball. She wasn't really that exciting, but she always had such a cute confused look on her face when she stood behind the end line wondering who she should pass the ball to.

Then there were Sissy and Linda, two girls who were supposedly so good that when they were in the fifth grade, they would play in junior high scrimmages. At least that's what Sissy always told me. Linda always made higher scores than Sissy — 36 points in one game — but Sissy was the one who became Homecoming Queen. Actually, Janice could dribble circles around both of them, but nobody cared because she was just a guard.

Carol, Linda, Sissy and Janice were members of the Conference Champion 1972 team. At the beginning of each game, Mary, the team captain, would poke her head out of the dressing room and shout "What's the big word?" And the pep club would answer "Beeat Latta (or other opponent)!" Then the team would stream out of the dressing room chanting "Go Antlers. Beat Latta. Go Antlers. Beat Latta."

But the girls didn't make it to state that year. Maybe it was their spirit song: the instrumental version of "Love Potion Number Nine."

The bad thing about girls' basketball during those early 1970s was that it depleted the cheerleading squad. As a result, the girls never got as many organized rah-rahs from the pep club as the boys did. Oh, Kathy tried, but as the only non-basketball playing cheerleader, her half-time cheering routines were so unspectacular.

As the school grew, so did the number of girls who went out for basketball and cheerleading. By 1974, the year "Our Boys" went to state, there were no basketball players on the cheering squad.

No self-respecting Deer Creek lady roundballer would ever call herself an "Antlerette." But if you were one, you were a somebody.

If you weren't, you were a misfit. I was a misfit.

Basketball is no longer the only game at Deer Creek. Now the school has wrestling, football, golf, tennis and money. The Antler priorities are different now; all the heroes and somebods are on the football field.

I haven't seen an Antler girls' game in years. They've just gotten to be too boring.

Farm Bureau: water bill needs some changes

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Farm Bureau says the current water bill before the Legislature will pose some problems for farmers and ranchers unless some modifications are made.

A six-month water study released by the bureau on Monday pinpointed water rights, the formation of water districts not controlled locally and the control of ground water as the bill's main problems.

"We believe the key issue in new water legislation for farmers and ranchers will be to maintain the existing ownership of ground water rights and to give no further grounds regarding surface water rights," said John Baker of Temple, who headed the water study committee.

The House Committee on Natural Resources on Monday continued its review of the water packu luncheon. Baker said water should remain the property of the landowner and the state should not regulate underground water conservation districts. The Farm Bureau would rather see the districts controlled on a local level, he said.

Other issues of concern to the Farm Bureau are conservation program research, agricultural loan programs, provisions on bays and estuaries, future water storage facilities and water quality and pollution, said Baker.

"We use 72 percent of the water

that is consumed for irrigation and livestock watering," he said.

The bay and estuaries provision in the water bill is of major concern to farmers and ranchers, especially those who use reservoir water, he said. Coastal interests want any water bill to include protection of fresh-water flow to bays and estuaries.

During the 1984 drought, Baker said Gulf Coast rice growers were hurt when reservoir water was sent downstream to help shellfish nurseries.

"The consequence was less water for rice growers at a critical time in their production cycle," Baker said.

S.M. True of Plainview, Farm Bureau president, said his group also will monitor farm labor legislation, tax changes and farm-to-market road bills.

"These are vital issues to agriculture because they affect our costs and the way we farm," True said. "We must hold down costs now because agriculture is in an economic crisis that threatens to put a lot of good farmers out of business."

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Land of the free, or land of quota?

We can't help but wonder what the reaction of the Pilgrims would have been had they stepped off the Mayflower only to be arrested as illegal aliens by the resident Indians. How many of those who cry loudest about the "sanctity" of national borders owe their existence as Americans to refugees seeking promise in a new land?

Does the land of the free accept people on a first-come, first-served basis only? That's the logic that a few weeks ago led a young Iranian man, a so-called "legal resident" of America, to slip his new bride into a suitcase and try to smuggle her into the country so she could be with him.

The Immigration and Naturalization Service had said she faced a wait of up to a year before the papers could be processed. The couple said their love couldn't wait for the paper pushers. She died in the attempt; in his grief, the young man killed himself a few days later.

Last week, the Justice Department proudly announced 16 indictments and more than 60 arrests in a crackdown on church groups accused of smuggling refugees from Central America into this country. The crackdown weakened the honorable tradition (not enshrined in unambiguous law, but of ancient lineage) of churches being able to provide sanctuary from the minions of the state.

The refugees were fleeing what they believed to be persecution and possible death in El Salvador and Guatemala; some in the Justice Department believe they were only fleeing poverty.

And when in the name of God were the Pilgrims fleeing? Many were fleeing a similar religious persecution. And later came the Jews. In the 1800s, many an Irishman tried to escape poverty in the Emerald Isle by a journey to Ellis Island and beyond. So did the Italians.

There are those who argue that the world has changed since the landing at Plymouth Rock: those who say that this country is too crowded—hang out the "no vacancy" sign and lock the doors.

Nevertheless, persecution and poverty remain unchecked in various parts of the world, and individuals seeking freedom are no less plentiful today than they were in the 1600s and the 1800s.

Apparently there is now to be at least one less place for them to turn, the land of the free has evolved into—in more ways than one—the land of the quota.

A Shiverscrat remembers

Meditations on the death of former Texas Gov. Allan Shivers, and on the course of political events:

When was it exactly that Your Obedient Servant became a double-dyed, Tory-tinted, tool-of-the-vested-interest?

A little more than 30 years ago - very likely the day your servant and his friend J. Thomas Roe sashayed around Corsicana, Tex., on a motor scooter, taking down in a celebratory way all campaign posters that bore the likeness of Ralph Yarborough.

Even at our tender age, we were Shiverscrats, you see - a breed of Southern Democrat loathsome to liberals of the Yarborough persuasion. We believed in our man Allan Shivers, who, just the day before, had turned back Yarborough's bid for the governorship. Wow! The Democratic Party - the party of the revered ancestors - had been kept habitable for conservatives.

Except that it really hadn't been, you see. It merely appeared that way. Gov. Allan Shivers, ardent conservative Democrat, honorable public man, was Canute, bidding the tide retreat. Though we could not know it in 1954, the fallen Yarborough, not the triumphant Shivers, was the wave of the Democratic future.

That of course is not the whole story. Last November two-thirds of the Texas electorate voted for Republican Ronald Reagan. The GOP elected likewise a U.S. senator, four new congressmen and a multitude of other officials. That is in no small part the legacy of Allan Shivers, who died Monday.

Shivers was the man who, three quarters of a century after Reconstruction, made Republicanism respectable in Texas and, by extension, the South.

In 1952, the Democrats put forth as their presidential candidate Adlai E. Stevenson, a hand-tooled, morocco-bound liberal. Shivers found Stevenson unfriendly to a pet project of his - settling in Texas' favor a controversy with the federal government over ownership of oil-rich lands on the Texas Gulf Coast.

The controversy is too dusty now to bear shaking out. Suffice it to say that Stevenson, liberal Democrat that he was, regarded the central government's claims as superior to those of a mere state.

Shivers, a lifelong Democrat, said this wouldn't do; he was backing Dwight Eisenhower for the presidency. With Shivers' help, and that of multifarious other conservative Democrats, Ike carried Texas handily, and, indeed, the once-solidly Democratic South.

The Tidelands duly got returned to Texas; but again in 1956, Shivers backed Eisenhower over Stevenson - again, with the same electoral result.

Without adjusting their glasses, Democrats might have noted the bold handwriting scrawled on the wall. They might have asked whether it was something they had said or done. The answer would have been, "sho' nuff"; the party of limited government had become the party of unlimited government, stifling and expensive. The South's allegiance to such a party could no longer be taken for granted.

Shiverscrats throughout the South, whether or not they so identified themselves yearned to be Democrats, in the tradition of Jefferson, Jackson and Wilson. Fine, said the new breed of Rooseveltian Democrat - so long as the South understood that a new day had dawned.

The new Democratic Party believed in big government, big labor unions and big spending. If the South did not like that, why, the South was free to lump it.

The Shiverscrat uprising, in the most basic terms, was an attempt to send a message, namely that party loyalty went just so far. The message went unrecieved.

On every possible occasion, from Hubert Humphrey on through George McGovern and up to Walter Mondale and Gary Hart, national Democrats danced gleefully on Jefferson's grave. To the devil with the South, and with limited government!

Ah, but as Allan Shivers had proved back in the '50s the South enjoyed alternatives. The Republicans might have perpetrated Reconstruction, but that was way back when. Alongside the new Democratic Party, a new Republic Party was in the making, and conservative Southerners might conscientiously vote for it - not to say join it!

They might, and they do, and Allan Shivers showed them how. We preadolescent Shiverscrats might not have understood that our hero was in some sense an epochal figure. But he was.

When men prefer hugging

Dear Ann Landers:

I read about your recent survey which indicated 72 percent of the women who responded to you said they would just as soon hug as get involved in some real serious fooling around.

Have I got news for you. A lot of us guys feel the same way.

Men always have been thought of as sex-crazed with nothing else on their minds but getting women into bed and then doing unspeakable things to them.

Most of us are not like that at all. There are plenty of other means of affection that interest us as well. I took an informal poll of my own - I talked to some guys at a bar - and they backed up my contentions.

Let's start with hugging. Most men love to hug, unless it's with a real fat girl and when you wrap your arms around her they're in different time zones.

I also enjoy something I called "scrunching," which sounds dirty but isn't. Scrunching is when you get into bed with the woman you love and she turns her back to you and you sort of scrunch up next to her and kiss her on her neck and ears and maybe even whisper something sweet to her.

"Darling," you might say, "how lovely you are when the sun catches your hair just right while you are out mowing the lawn."

Or something like, "You know, sweetheart, you make the best meatloaf in the country."

Snuggling is fun for most men, too.

I've even snuggled at an outdoor ballgame. That is, when the game is one-sided or I didn't bet the over - under and don't have to pay attention.

And whatever happened to just plain old making out? You remember that. It was quite popular when I was a teen-ager.

You went to some quiet, dark place and locked lips for a couple of hours and then you went home and took a cold shower, which also was quite popular in those days.

Something that was fun to do when making out was exchanging chewing gum during a long, passionate kiss.

This was not fun, however, when your partner was chewing clove gum, which made my mouth burn, or when you later found out your partner earlier in the day had been making out with Junior Ledbetter, who had a lot of zits, and hadn't had a chance to put in a fresh stick of gum.

If women would rather hug than have sex, then all they have to do is say so - if they would return the favor.

My survey at the bar indicated men would just as soon hug as have sex in the following instances: When they are watching a ballgame or the Playboy Channel on TV.

When their backs hurt.

When they are late for a card game.

When the sort of sex the woman has in mind might cause them to get an eye put out.

When the lawn needs mowing or they are hungry for meatloaf.

It's just like all our mothers tried to tell us, Ann. You don't have to have sex to have fun.

Fireworks likely over state water bill

By Rep. Foster Whaley

Little has happened in the legislature up to this time. The fireworks are about to start.

On Thursday, the Natural Resources Committee began taking testimony on the State Water Bill. This issue is moving much slower than some would like. An effort is being made to quickly pass the bill through the House and Senate and get it out of the way before other very pressing matters are taken up for debate.

There is a great deal of apprehension from West Texas legislators about the bill. The bill is being pushed by the Governor, Lieutenant Governor and Speaker, all of whom are from down state. The Lower Colorado River Authority, which is responsible for blocking the Stacy Dam project in this West Texas area, has been unyielding to those in West Texas.

I am fortunate to have as my desk mate, Rep. J.W. Buchanan of Dumas. Buck is recognized as the most knowledgeable person in the state on matters pertaining to water. I will be relying on his good judgment and advice as we proceed in this issue. If passed with 100 votes in the House and 21 votes in the Senate, and then finally passed by the voters of Texas, this will be the most historic legislation Texas has ever enacted affecting all aspects of water.

I often do not agree with the Sierra Club on many of its positions, but I do agree with them that conservation of water should have the highest priority of any water plan for Texas.

Over half of Texas is very arid. Chances of a water importation plan from another state are more of a pipe dream than a remote possibility. Available sites for building dams to retain water are relatively few. As the water issue becomes more acute, growing cities down state will have more political power than West Texas. The people from down state will be successful in blocking efforts to build or enlarge reservoirs up state.

There will come a time when we in West Texas will not turn our faucets on full force as we wash our teeth.

We will sod or plant buffalo grass for our lawns.

We will add several bricks to the water closet in our commodes.

There will be no tail water in our bar ditches.

Deep irrigation wells will be silenced.

Many will return to dry land farming. Crops and varieties of crops will be planted that are drought-resistant. Total yields will be greatly reduced. Prices will be much higher. There could be talk of moving underground water (held so sacred in West Texas) down state to cities having pressing domestic water needs.

Colleges respond to need for specialists

Dear Abby

Cowboy and his hat are inseparable companions

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1985 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: I was taught that a gentleman always removes his hat when he is indoors. (The exception is the kind of hat worn for religious reasons.) However, I see the 10-gallon cowboy hat worn in restaurants and even in private homes here in Mesa, Ariz.

Have the rules of etiquette changed? Or is it still considered ill-mannered for a gentleman to wear his hat indoors? And are wearers of the cowboy hat exempt from that rule?

ROADRUNNER

DEAR ROADRUNNER: The rules haven't changed; gentlemen still remove their hats when they are indoors.

When I so stated some years ago, I heard from all of Texas, most of Arizona, and parts of New Mexico, Montana, Wyoming and Colorado advising me that the 10-gallon cowboy hat was not just an ordinary hat, it was part of the western man's uniform—to be worn with pride and honor, remaining on his head as long as he had his boots on.

***

DEAR ABBY: My sister (22) has a 4-month-old baby boy, but she is not married. The baby's father is 24, is supporting the baby, but wants nothing to do with my sister. They have no plans to marry and have nothing to do with each other.

The parents of the young father have no idea they have this grandson. Don't you think they have a right to know? As an aunt to this child, don't you think it's my duty to tell them?

CURIOUS AUNT

DEAR CURIOUS: As an aunt, you have a "right" to be curious, but a duty to mind your own business. It appears that the young parents have worked their problem out to their satisfaction. Do not tell anybody because you think they have a right to know—that right belongs only to the parties concerned.

DEAR ABBY: I'm a 19-year-old female soldier doing a 12-month tour in the Republic of South Korea. Every day I see things that would shock your readers. Elderly men and women, with backs bent from years of hard labor, still toil in the fields and rice paddies to feed their families. These people have no pensions or Social Security.

Every night on the street I see girls and women—scantly clad—trying to pick up male soldiers. Some of these women have high school educations—and some even college—but they become "bar girls" because there are few jobs for women in Korea. A large number of these girls get pregnant by the GIs and have beautiful Amerasian children. Nobody wants these kids; so they either live on the streets or end up in orphanages funded by donations.

Last Halloween, my company had a party for these kids, and I wish you could have seen how thrilled they were to be treated kindly and get all they could eat, plus candy and ice cream.

Abby, Americans who are dissatisfied with the United States should spend a little time in Korea. They'll soon realize how lucky they are to be living in the United States where they have Social Security, pensions, unemployment and welfare benefits, and a foster parents plan for children.

You love going to museums, can draw a little, have a great sense of style and enjoy rearranging the living room furniture from time to time.

These skills once might have been enough for a successful career. Today, they are a good start, but not enough. Though some individuals function without any particular educational credentials, today's emphasis on professionalism and cost effectiveness has created a need for special training in areas that once were lumped together as "the decorative arts."

As a result, college and post-graduate courses in museum studies and interior architecture specialties are increasing. According to David Levy, dean of the Parsons School of Design in New York, today's challenge is to train specialists who can employ the most advanced technology in specific fields.

Parsons is one of the schools providing this training with a number of new programs.

Most recently, the school announced a new four-year marketing, merchandising and product development program that will prepare people for entry-level management positions in manufacturing and retailing of home furnishings and other products. The course of study is scheduled to begin in the fall of 1985 and will offer training in both esthetics and business skills.

Last fall, Parsons enrolled its first graduate class in lighting design. The two-year program will lead to a master's degree and will train students to understand and be able to apply recent advances in lighting design.

Last June, the first class in the history of decorative arts graduated with master's degrees. The program was developed jointly by Parsons and Cooper-Hewitt Museum, the Smithsonian Institution's National Museum of Design in New York. Its goal: to prepare students for careers in decorative arts.

Other schools have also recognized the need for trained museum personnel. Recently, the Fashion Institute of Technology, part of the State University system of New York, announced plans for its own master's program in museum studies to begin in the fall of 1985.

Robert Gutman will run the program. He says students will be able to select a specialty in costume and textiles or in the decorative arts. Within each specialty, they will be able to concentrate on either curatorship or conservation.

Gutman, who has been teaching at FIT for over 30 years, noted that nowadays there is more interest among students in courses that are practical and will lead to jobs that actually exist in the arts.

Henry Joyce, administrator of Cooper-Hewitt's and Parsons' museum studies program, agrees with him. He said that members of the first class of 18 had found work in art museums in Philadelphia, Baltimore, St. Louis, California and New York. Their success in landing good jobs indicates there is a growing need for well-trained museum specialists, he added.

Emphasis on the history of design and decoration is important in museum studies, but when the subject is lighting, a more future-oriented approach becomes important.

Here's the Answer

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

Q. — Our house has a fireplace in the family room. We want to use it soon, but feel it may need cleaning. Is this something I can do myself?

A. — Yes, but it isn't that simple, assuming you mean it is the chimney that needs the cleaning and not just the fireplace. You have to be agile enough to climb on the roof so that you can place chains or other heavy material in a burlap bag, drop them down the chimney and pull them up quite a few times. And you have to have some idea of what you are doing — for example, to close the fireplace opening to keep soot from spreading around the family room. Getting a chimney sweep to handle the job not only is easier, it's safer.

Q. — Our roof has to be redone, and we are thinking about using wooden shakes. Can they be applied over our old roofing, which we think is asphalt? Will this make the whole thing too heavy?

A. — Only your roofer, after making a personal inspection, can determine whether the roof deck can support another layer of roofing material, a lot depending on how many layers already are there. Generally, however, when you reroof with shakes, which merely are another form of shingles, it is necessary to remove the old roofing. Another thing to be considered is whether the fire codes in your area will permit the use of wood as a roof covering. Some will if the wood is made fire resistant, some won't under any conditions. —

Q. — I recently did some lacquering for the first time. I used a spray gun and thought I followed the instructions carefully, but after the job was completed, I discovered the surface of the table I had done looked like the peel of an orange. It had a slightly uneven effect, not exactly bubbly but kind of pock-marked. Can you tell me what caused this and how I can avoid it if I decide to redo the table?

A. — It comes from not having the spray gun the correct distance from the material being finished. Oddly enough, you can get that type of finish if the spray gun is held either too far away or too close to the surface. Before you redo the table, do a little practicing on some scrap wood. Start by holding the tip of the spray gun about 8 inches from the surface. Hold it at right angles to the material, keeping it that distance and parallel to the surface. As you move the gun, overlap each coat about 50 percent. This coat should be across the grain. A second coat should be with the grain. Spraying expertly takes considerable practice. If you find that 8 inches is too far away, move it a little closer; if too close, move it away. After a while, you'll get the hang of it and will automatically know the correct distance.

Task force: too much TV harmful to kids

ELK GROVE, Ill. (AP) — A task force of the American Academy of Pediatrics has concluded that excessive television viewing by children may be harmful, and recommends that parents complain to network officials and politicians about the quality of programming.

The report, released Thursday, of the five-member panel said that American children aged 2 to 12 watch an average of 25 hours of television each week. Excessive viewing could lead to violent behavior, poor school performance and contribute to teen-age pregnancy, it said.

"Most grade school children spend more hours watching television than they spend in the classroom," said Dr. H. James Holroyd, a task force member. "That's not a statistic that most people are aware of — that shocks most people when they hear it."

"We feel that television does a lot of good and television has the potential for a significant positive influence on children, adolescents and families," the La Canada, Calif., physician said Thursday.

"But in spite of that, there are a number of areas of negative impact."

The task force members, all pediatricians, characterized television watching as a passive occupation that reduces the time spent reading and using other active learning skills.

They said adolescents on television are portrayed in a constant state of sexual crisis. Sexual relationships develop rapidly and the risk of pregnancy is rarely considered — a factor that may contribute to teen-age pregnancies, according to the task force.

Repeated exposure to televised violence makes children violence-prone, the task force found. They also said television gives an unrealistic view of problem solving and conflict resolution.

The medium was faulted for perpetuating racial and ethnic stereotypes and doing little to promote a sympathetic understanding of the handicapped and their problems.

And television promotes obesity in children by encouraging them to eat high-calorie junk foods, the doctors said.

George Schweitzer, vice president of communications for CBS, said he had not seen the report, but noted, "I'd say it's not new that the popular media of the time is the focus of many of society's problems."

NBC spokeswoman Helen

Manasian said network officials hadn't studied the report, but she cited a 500-page study by NBC in 1983 that found no evidence of a link between television violence and aggressive behavior in children and adolescents.

A spokesman for ABC said that network would not comment on the report until it had been studied.

Couple imports cold-defying homes from native country

BLOMKEST, Minn. (AP) — When Ettie and Goran Ivarson first visited the United States three years ago, they found that even beautiful homes were drafty and cold. Snow sifted under the door in one motel where they stayed.

Such things do not happen in Sweden, they said.

So when they decided to leave their dairy and chicken farm in Sweden and come to the United States again, the Ivarsons brought a Swedish house with them.

Everything in the three-bedroom house is from Sweden — the carpet, wallpaper, light fixtures, curtains, furniture.

The windows are triple-pane, and can be swung around so both sides can be cleaned from the inside. There are 8 inches of insulation under the floor, 11 inches above the ceiling and 7 in the walls. The roof is made of steel tiles and will last as long as the house.

According to the U.S. Customs office in Minneapolis, this is the first house to come from Sweden they have seen.

The Ivarsons hope it won't be the last. They plan to market the Swedish house in the Midwest, using the warm, energy-efficient home on the west edge of Blomkest as their model.

They intend to bring the homes over, put them up and eventually, depending on the entire family's wishes, settle in the United States. The Ivarsons' son and daughter-in-law, Joakim and Maria, are tending their farm in Lidkopins, Sweden, while the parents test the market.

The Ivarsons' Swedish corporation purchased the prefabricated house, which is very popular in Sweden, and had it shipped to the United States. Their U.S. corporation, EGI Sunshine Homes, then purchased the house and constructed it.

It was a blustery winter day when the house arrived and workers began putting up the walls.

San Antonio considers nuclear plant deal

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — The City Council is considering a deal in which San Antonio would get a bigger stake in the South Texas Project nuclear plant as a settlement in its multi-billion-dollar lawsuit against the plant's first contractor.

The complicated arrangement is one of a number of possible settlement offers the council reportedly discussed Monday night in a two-hour meeting behind closed doors with City Public Service of San Antonio trustees and officials, the San Antonio Light reported.

Mayor Henry Cisneros, who earlier said he would oppose the deal, describes it as one in which builder Brown & Root Inc. would buy Austin's 16 percent share of the nuclear project for $155 million, or 25 cents for each dollar Austin has invested.

The mayor said that, as he understands the Brown & Root offer, the contractor would split Austin's share among the three remaining partners: City Public Service and the private electric utilities in Corpus Christi and Houston, the newspaper reported.

Brown & Root would continue to make Austin's payments on the project until it is complete.

Cisneros is the only official who would discuss the settlement talks publicly, and his comments ended abruptly Monday night after he said he was told that retired District Court Judge G.P. Hardy has ordered the settlement talks be conducted as privately as possible.

Other CPS and City Hall officials declined even to confirm or deny the accuracy of the mayor's description of the settlement offer.

In a copyright story this week, the Austin American-Statesman said the three partners —

CPS, Houston Lighting & Power and Corpus Christi's Central Power & Light — and Austin Mayor Ron L. Mullen have been negotiating the deal with the construction firm.

Cisneros said Monday morning he opposes the proposed settlement because "what San Antonio would get" is something he said it does not need: a bigger part of the STP.

Instead, San Antonio should seek a cash settlement so it can begin working on alternate energy resources, particularly lignite and coal to augment its present, predominantly gas, sources, the mayor told reporters.

Austin has long sought to end its relationship with the STP, a project that has been plagued by numerous construction delays and questions from federal regulatory agencies about safety standards.

Those delays have prompted the utility partners to sue Brown & Root for $6.4 billion or more over the delays.

After an hour-long CPS trustees executive session, reportedly to discuss the same series of settlement offers, Chairman Glenn Biggs only would say that negotiations in the case are "ongoing" and added, "I'm not at liberty to say anything more."

The partners in the $5.5 billion nuclear project are asking for more than $6.4 billion in damages from Brown & Root. But the amount could go higher because the STP partners are taking their case to court under the Texas Deceptive Trade Practices Act, which allows for treble damages.

The case against Brown & Root, and its parent firm, the Halliburton Co., is due to go to trial in Hardy's Matagorda County courtroom this fall. The two-unit STP is being built in that Gulf Coast county, near Bay City.

Brown & Root was pulled off the project in 1981, shortly before the partners filed the suit for damages based on an alleged breach of contract.

In 1973, officials put a $1.1 billion pricetag on STP, but that grew to $4.8 billion before Brown & Root departed. Timetables also were revised, adding six years to initial construction schedules.

In late December 1981, CPS joined HL&P in the lawsuit charging the construction firm with failing to meet engineering and construction commitments.

Democrats wait, watch on budget

WASHINGTON (AP) — House Democrats insist they are "not sleeping" while President Reagan and Senate Republicans try to strike a bargain on reducing federal deficits and may propose an alternative if a budget deal falls through.

In the meantime, Democratic leaders say they'll give Reagan the benefit of the doubt and not seek to engage in partisan battles with him.

"Our strategy is dictated by our circumstances. To be effective, we have to wait," said Rep. Richard Gephardt, D-Mo., chairman of the House Democratic Caucus.

Reagan's budget will be submitted early next week.

The Democratic tactic of biding time on the budget drew criticism on Monday from the assistant House Republican leader, Trent Lott of Mississippi. "At some point, the Democrats are going to have to get on the playing field," Lott said after he and other GOP leaders met with Reagan at the White House.

"What do they perceive is fair? When are they going to start considering the budget issue?" Lott asked.

However, Gephardt told reporters: "We have a role that's to be played. It's not to be played at this time... We're not playing rope-a-dope, we're not sleeping. We will have our alternatives on the table at the appropriate time... You don't want to do that prematurely."

At Monday's White House session, Republican lawmakers told Reagan to hold off on tax simplification until a budget-cutting plan wins approval. Reagan met with GOP members of the tax-writing Senate Finance Committee and House Ways and Means Committee, according to participants.

Sen. Bob Packwood, R-Ore., chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, said Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan, the incoming White House chief of staff, was "quite amenable to the feeling we had to go ahead with the spending cuts first. The president by and large listened, did not specifically respond one way or the other."

Reagan conferred separately on Monday with a group of bankers and home builders as he prepared for the release of his administration's 1986 budget plan.

He told the home builders and bankers his plan would propose $51 billion in spending cuts in fiscal 1986 and would shrink the deficit to $140 billion by 1988. Reagan's earlier plan was to bring the deficit down to $100 billion within three years — a target now being sought by Senate Republicans as they try to forge their own package of cuts.

During Reagan's first term, House Democrats developed their own budgets to compete with proposals offered by the president. But this year, they have generally maintained a low profile on budget matters — a tone set last week by Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill when he told Reagan that he would do nothing to block his second-term initiatives.

Bloody Monday of domestic violence leaves seven dead

By The Associated Press
An Oklahoma man killed his ex-wife and two other women then wounded himself when his divorce became final, while an unemployed father in Mississippi shot his estranged wife, fatally stabbed their three young daughters then killed himself, police said.

Authorities said welder Floyd Ware's shotgun spree in Wynona, Okla., was aimed at the women who had testified at a hearing Monday in which his divorce became final.

Perry Lawrence of Vicksburg, Miss., was apparently distraught after losing his job when he wounded his estranged wife and fatally stabbed their daughters Sunday, police said.

Ware, 50, who had served as a Wynona councilman and sometimes as city marshal, was in critical condition today at St. Francis Hospital in Tulsa with a gunshot wound to the head, said nursing supervisor Linda Burns.

He was divorced Monday from Lilly Belle Ware at a hearing in Osage County District Court in Pawhuska. Wynona, a community of 780, is about 30 miles northwest of Tulsa.

"Apparently, he just decided to get a gun and take care of all those who testified against him in the hearing," said Osage County Undersheriff Bill Mitchell.

Ware's attorney, Jay Byers, said his client was "involved and fixated" in the divorce proceeding. "He was exceedingly wrapped up in the case."

In Mississippi, Lawrence, 24, had argued with his estranged wife shortly before unleashing his violence on her and their children in Vicksburg, about 40 miles west of Jackson.

Authorities said Lawrence had been fired from his job last week because he and his wife, who worked at the same location, had argued.

Detective Capt. Phil Solomon said Lawrence went to a club

Sunday night and ordered his wife, Laverne Jones Lawrence, 24, to leave. "She told him she would not and he drug her out," Solomon said.

"He then knocked her to the ground and opened fire. Witnesses said he fired at her five times from point blank range," Solomon said.

Lionel Richie wins six awards, Prince three

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The mellow crossover sounds of Lionel Richie outpulled Prince's ragged rock edge at the 12th annual American Music Awards, with a surprised Richie winning six awards and Prince, accompanied by a tattooed bodyguard, taking three.

Kenny Rogers won three trophies on the nationally broadcast show, making him the all-time American Music Awards champion with a total of 16. The awards Monday night honored winners of a nationwide public opinion poll.

Tina Turner, Anne Murray, Cyndi Lauper and the Pointer Sisters picked up two awards apiece during the three-hour ABC telecast at the Shrine Auditorium.

Offstage, Richie and producer Quincy Jones announced that several top recording artists including Richie, Bob Dylan and Bruce Springsteen were joining together Monday night to record a song, with the proceeds donated to relieve starving Ethiopians.

Prince and Richie were nominated in eight of the same categories, and Prince had 10 nominations overall, giving him a shot at breaking the record set last year by Michael Jackson, who won seven regular awards and also was the year's Award of Merit recipient for career achievement.

Richie, who was host of the show, was honored as favorite male vocalist and favorite male video artist in both black and pop-rock categories. His video clip, "Hello," was named favorite pop-rock video single and black video single.

"I cannot believe it. I was concentrating so much on making sure the show was going properly that when they kept calling my name I said 'Wait a minute — this is not in the program, this is not in the script,'" said Richie, who had previously won seven of the awards.

Prince, the 26-year-old sensation from Minneapolis, won for favorite black single with "When Doves Cry," as well as top black album and pop-rock for the soundtrack album to his hit film, "Purple Rain." He electrified the audience into a swaying mass with a live performance of the title song.

"For all of us, life is death without adventure," Prince said after his third trip to the podium. "Adventure only comes to those willing to be daring and take chances."

But the slim, androgynous Prince apparently preferred to take no chances at the awards, with a hulking, tattooed bodyguard accompanying him even to the stage to accept his trophies.

My Frames . . .
Givenchy
My Eyes . . .
Simmons & Simmons

I'm a namedropper. When it comes to fashionable eyewear, the designer frames really appeal to me. I feel more attractive in them and quite frankly, my friends say they look good on me.

But frames are only half the story. What you don't see is why I trust my eyecare exclusively to Dr. Simmons & Simmons. Because what you don't see is just as important as what does meet the eye. Probably more important.

So before I frame my eyes with a designer's name, I pamper them with a thorough examination from doctors who have the equipment, modern approach and experience to take care of my eyes from both sides of the lens.

Fashion is important. So is eyecare.

Pope ends Venezuela tour, then journeys to Ecuador

CARACAS, Venezuela (AP) — Pope John Paul II urged 45,000 cheering Venezuelan high school and college students to resist the temptation to seek refuge from reality in drugs, sex and "alien ideologies."

The pope — making his 25th trip abroad and sixth to Latin America — winds up the Venezuelan portion of his four-nation tour today with a brief trip to the southern industrial town of Ciudad Guayana. He then returns briefly to Caracas before flying to Quito, Ecuador.

Late Monday, the pope addressed about 45,000 youths in a packed stadium in Caracas. Speaking in Spanish, the pope told the audience not to "succumb to the easy temptation of escape, of evasion, closing oneself in an attitude of egoistic isolation, seeking refuge in alcohol, drugs, sex, in alien ideologies or those who preach hate and violence."

The youths sang, cheered and waved flags in the lighted stadium, decorated with banners and flowers.

In Ciudad Guayana, founded in 1961 and home to an industrial development zone and gold and diamond mining, the pope will celebrate Mass for an expected 500,000 people. He will tour a steel mill and join workers for lunch at the state-owned factory.

The pontiff arrives in Ecuador this evening and stays until Friday, then moves on to Peru and Trinidad-Tobago. Ecuador, an Andean nation of 8.5 million people along the Pacific Coast of South America, recently has been hit by strike violence.

In Venezuela, the pontiff traveled to the oil center of Maracaibo and the Andean southwestern city of Merida on Monday.

The economy: keeping its shirt on

By JOHN CUNNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — The business expansion, say the economists, is a mature one now, having grown beyond those rambunctious years of youth when you didn't know what surprises lay ahead.

The expansion is quieter, steadier now. Gains are more modest, and they are also more predictable. Few surprises seem in store, but that too is interpreted as reassuring, since surprises can be bad as well as good.

The great pain about all this, of course, is that it cannot last — or you would judge this to be so by viewing the life span of earlier expansions.

In most instances, you will find, they began with a burst of activity, slowed to a pleasant trot after a couple of years, and then gradually gave way to inconsistencies, excesses, and infirmities.

As of now, that latter condition seems a long way off for this expansion, now in its 26th month and running smoothly. As a Merrill Lynch economic letter puts it: "We have not seen the speculative buildup of inventory, the behavior of the commodity markets, or the extremely upbeat mood of business that has often characterized the period prior to a cyclical peak," a term euphemistically used to disguise the grim reality that all expansions end in recessions.

Except for a few diehards who maintain the economy already has begun the descent into recession, you don't even hear that nasty term anymore. Neither do you hear much about a return to inflation, or to double-digit interest rates.

In its maturity, the economy is expected to produce only modest wage gains, but gains that aren't offset by rising inflation. Profits are expected to grow by 8 percent or so, about the same as last year but far below the 49 percent leap in 1983 when the expansion was a rambunctious youngster.

Consumers aren't expected to go on any spending spree — in fact, many of them can't, simply because they've already used up their credit availability. But neither are they expected to go back into a protective cocoon.

Credit costs are foreseen as declining a bit more before rising again, but the rise isn't expected to be one of those explosions that have occurred several times over the past decade.

There are some areas of concern, as there always are, and some of the concerns are big ones, such as the inability of Washington to cut spending.

Ministers edge toward price deal

GENEVA, Switzerland (AP) — OPEC oil ministers entered a second day of emergency talks today in broad agreement on cutting prices but divided on how to do it.

A small cut in the cartel's base price of $29 a barrel appeared increasingly likely after Monday's opening session, although sources said the unanimous agreement needed was not yet assured.

Any cut in prices would be only the second in the 25-year history of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries. The first, to $29 from $34, was in March 1983.

Egypt's oil minister, attending the conference as an observer, withdrew today, saying he was returning to Cairo to review Egypt's pricing. Abdul-Hadi Kandil said he "doubted" his country would follow OPEC pricing directives.

Egypt is not an OPEC member, but its daily oil production of about 870,000 barrels is nearly as large as the major OPEC producers. Kandil earlier had said the ministers' confusing deliberations were pushing prices down.

Kandil walked into the OPEC conference room this morning and then left a few minutes later. "I just went in to salute them, and I told them I'm leaving and please don't invite me anymore to the meetings," he told reporters. The 13 ministers opened their conference on a rocky note, with one Arab minister storming out of the meeting and denouncing the Nigerian representative for breaking OPEC rules.

The rift between Mana Saeed Oteiba, oil chief of the United Arab Emirates, and Nigerian Oil Minister Tam David-West forced an early recess of Monday's session. Oteiba, who later rejoined the talks and said the dispute was over, accused David-West of "stabbing OPEC in the back" by producing more than the assigned share of oil and "undermining the pricing structure."

The acrimony added to doubts about OPEC's ability to act decisively against sliding oil prices.

The price drop indicated that "the market definitely does not have much confidence in OPEC's ability to come up with an agreement," said Andrew Lebow, an oil trading analyst at a New York investment firm.

Georgetown shocked again, loses second game in a row

Georgetown's Patrick Ewing goes high to block a shot by Syracuse's Ron Seikaly.

NEW YORK (AP) — National Basketball Association scoring leader Bernard King didn't let finishing fourth in fan balloting for the All-Star game bother him.

King, averaging 31.5 points per game, trailed Philadelphia's Julius Erving, Larry Bird of Boston and Kelly Tripucka of Detroit in voting for the two starting forward positions for the Eastern Conference in the Feb. 10 game at Indianapolis. But on Monday he was among the 14 players named by conference coaches to fill out the 12-man rosters for the East and West teams.

"I'm very excited about being named to the All-Star team," said King, who has missed New York's last six games with an ankle injury, but is expected to return to action this week. "It was one of my goals for this season. It's always very gratifying to be considered one of the best at your profession. Being chosen by the coaches is very meaningful to me."

In addition to King, the East reserves consist of centers Robert Parish of Boston and Jeff Ruland of Washington, forward Terry Cummings of Milwaukee and guards Dennis Johnson of Boston, Sidney Moncrief of Milwaukee and Micheal Ray Richardson of New Jersey.

Added to the West squad were centers Akeem Olajuwon of Houston and Jack Sikma of Seattle, forwards Alex English and Calvin Natt of Denver and Larry Nance of Phoenix and guards Rolando Blackman of Dallas and Norm Nixon of the Los Angeles Clippers.

The East starters are Erving, Bird, center Moses Malone of Philadelphia and guards Micheal Jordan of Chicago and Isiah Thomas of Detroit.

Boston, which has the NBA's best record at 36-8, is the only team with three representatives in the All-Star game. In addition, the Celtics' K.C. Jones will coach the East.

The West starting team is made up of forwards Ralph Sampson of Houston and Adrian Dantley of Utah, center Kareem Abdul-Jabbar of the Los Angeles Lakers and guards Earvin "Magic" Johnson of the Lakers and George Gervin of San Antonio. The Lakers' Pat Riley is the coach of the West, which has lost five straight All-Star games and trails the series 23-11.

Olajuwon and Jordan, the first and third picks in last year's draft, are the only rookie All-Stars. Blackman, Cummings, Nance and Natt also will be making their first appearance in an All-Star game.

Pampa Red captures 8th-grade victory

Pampa Red defeated Valley View Blue, 57-34, in eighth-grade boys' basketball action Monday.

Kerry Brown and Dustin Miller led Pampa's scoring attack with 14 points each.

Kevin Dewey and Jay Weatherly had seven and four points respectively for Valley.

Pampa Blue played Borger White in another eighth-grade boys game and lost, 35-32.

Robert Perez and Benny Martinez had six points each for Pampa.

Hunnicut led Borger with 17 points.

In seventh-grade action, Borger White defeated Pampa Blue, 41-32. Borger was led by Jones and Bowie with 14 and 13 points respectively.

Mark Woods had 11 points for Pampa, followed by Richie Byers with nine.

Valley View slipped by Pampa Red, 35-31.

Woods led Valley View with 11 points.

Top scorer for Pampa was Antone Wallace with 16. Greg Lewis added seven.

King excited about all-star selection

SYRACUSE, N.Y. (AP) — While Rafael Addison played the entire game on a roll against second-ranked Georgetown, Syracuse teammate Dwayne Washington had as many stops and starts as a carnival ride.

But few were surprised when Washington kept the ball after a timeout with 16 seconds to play. Eight seconds later he took an off-balance, 15-foot jump shot to put Orangemen ahead. Washington followed with a free throw as ninth-ranked Syracuse dealt the Hoyas a 65-63 loss, their second straight after 29 consecutive victories over two seasons.

"I knew it was going to be something special," said Addison, whose 26-point, 12-rebound performance ranks as one of the finest in his career. "He (Washington) just looks to get the ball in those situations."

Washington, an all-conference point guard last year as a freshman, had hit only four of 10 from the field prior to his winning shot. He also had missed all three free-throw attempts, turned over the ball seven times and had only four assists. But he still got the ball for Syracuse's final shot.

"Pearl's got to be tough to make that shot in the end," Georgetown Coach John Thompson said of Washington.

Syracuse improved to 13-3 on the year and 5-3 in the Big East Conference as it snapped a three-game losing streak to the Hoyas before 32,229 fans — the third largest crowd ever in the Carrier Dome.

Now 7-2 in the league and 18-2 overall, the Hoyas have lost two straight games for the first time in 81 contests and after 29 straight victories dating back to last year. But Thompson, perhaps mindful of a 12-day break from Big East pressure marked by upcoming games against Arkansas and Florida Southern, said he wasn't concerned.

"I don't want to get accustomed to losing, but we'll work it out.

We're not going to go home and cry about it," he said.

Seven-foot Hoya center Patrick Ewing turned in a remarkable performance with 21 points and 17 rebounds — more than half the team's total of 32. But his effort fell just short when Georgetown snipers David Wingate, Michael Jackson and Horace Broadnax went a collective eight-for-28 shooting over Syracuse's zone defense.

Bill Martin scored 15 points for the Hoyas and Jackson, who was five-of-10, had 10 points.

Syracuse Coach Jim Boeheim tried to downplay the magnitude of the triumph by telling reporters. "It's nice to win and I'm happy to win, but it's just another game."

But the thrill was still there for Addison, a junior who has led the team in scoring for nearly two seasons.

"Anybody who tells you it's not a great thrill is sadly mistaken," he said.

Myers can still work magic at Texas Tech

LUBBOCK, Texas (AP) — There is a collegiate basketball magic man in West Texas called Myers, but he's a household name only to purists of the game and followers of the Southwest Conference.

Bobby Knight of Indiana has called Gerald Myers one of the top four coaches in the nation.

Arkansas Coach Eddie Sutton agrees, saying, "He's as good as there is in the conference and one of the most respected in the country."

Myers has been at Tech 14 years but no victory was any sweeter than Saturday night's 64-63 upset of No. 2 ranked Southern Methodist.

The win made basketball fans from the Atlantic to the Pacific sit up and take notice of the news coming from Lubbock, Texas. You know, the hometown of Mac Davis who sang of looking at Lubbock through his rear view mirror.

Down in the southwest, fans just nodded and said "Well, ol' Gerald has done it again."

They know Tech holds a series advantage over every SWC school except Houston. They know Myers gets the most each year out of a talent-limited band of scrappers.

Myers, 48, is 240-148 at his alma mater where he still holds the free-throw shooting record he set as a feisty, crew-cut guard back in the 1960s.

So why has Myers won only one SWC title — 1973 — if he is such a good coach?

Lubbock's relatively isolated location works against him in recruiting. It's hard for him to sell big city kids even though author

James Michener described Texas Tech as "the most beautiful campus in the West — 'til you get to Stanford."

Texas Tech also has to play in Lubbock Municipal Coliseum, built in 1965, which is also used for rodeos and tractor pulls and doesn't have the sparkle of some basketball houses.

The city-owned "bubble" has been improved in recent years with a new floor, lighting and seats — but it's still a recruiting liability.

Myers has difficulty mining the Dallas-Fort Worth and Houston basketball mother lodes.

He has to recruit well in other areas such as Eastern New Mexico where he found Bubba Jennings, Vince Taylor, and Tony Benford for the current Red Raider squad.

However, Myers made the mistake of scheduling New Mexico in December and the local paper called the New Mexico players traitors. Even in New Mexico, Myers has to flit from shadow to shadow.

Other coaches like to recruit against Myers by saying he teaches slowdown, boring basketball.

He has the same theories as Knight and Sutton but what would you do if you couldn't recruit a true center? His last one was Rick Bullock. That was 1976.

What Myers does teach is opportunistic basketball. His teams play tough, hard-scrabble defense and will fast-break an opponent dizzy if given the chance.

His teams have discipline. They are sound in fundamentals.

Other schools know this and have tried to hire Myers, the most recent being Iowa State. Myers almost went but came back to where his heart is.

"Gerald almost went to Iowa State," said Tech Athletic Director John Conley. "He just couldn't bring himself to leave Texas Tech and we're glad he didn't."

Myers, the first Texas Tech player in any sport to earn All-SWC honors (1958), said, "It gets frustrating not being able to recruit with the big schools but we do OK. All you have to do is get a player out here and he sees how great Tech can be."

Tech has a senior-dominated team this season and Myers will have to rebuild the squad into a contender once again next year.

Somehow he always manages.

Harvesters visit Canyon

For the Pampa Harvesters to get into the playoffs this season, it may be comparable to making a halfcourt hook shot. The shot is makable, but the goal is so far away.

The Harvesters are currently tied with Lubbock Estacado for third place in the District 1-4A standings with five games left to play. Both have 4-3 district records.

Borger stands alone at the top with a 6-0 record while Lubbock Dunbar is second at 6-1.

"We've had our backs to the wall for quite sometime and the kids know it," said Pampa coach Garland Nichols. "We're just going to have to go out and play like caged tigers."

Pampa visits Canyon tonight and one more loss would just about do the Harvesters in.

"I've sat around and thought of a thousand possibilities, but it's something you have to take one game at a time," Nichols said. "Borger plays Dunbar Friday night and if Borger wins, we've got a chance. But we can't lose another game."

Canyon, a 70-52 loser to Pampa last week, has dropped to 2-5 in district play.

"Canyon has lost their point guard for the year, so they're really struggling right now," Nichols said. "We're just going to go out and try to do the things we did against them the first game and hope to come away with a victory."

In the girls' game, Pampa's Lady Harvesters are in a must-win situation. Pampa girls are 5-4 in district play and in fourth place behind Dumas (5-3), Canyon (7-2) and Levelland (9-0).

Tonight's varsity action tips off at 6 p.m. with the girls playing first.

Dowhower succeeds Kush as coach of Indianapolis Colts

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Mark Herrmann, the only Indianapolis player who has had experience with Rod Dowhower, is optimistic that the new head coach of the Colts can improve what last season was the worst passing offense in the National Football League.

Colts' owner Robert Irsay announced Monday that the former

St. Louis offensive coordinator would succeed Frank Kush, who resigned the week before the final game of the regular season to become coach of the Arizona Outlaws of the United States Football League.

"He worked with me quite a bit in Denver," said Herrmann, one of three quarterbacks competing for the starting job next season. "He certainly has an excellent background as far as working for people that know how to throw the ball and how to teach quarterbacks."

Art Schlichter and Mike Pagel, the other two signal callers during the 4-12 campaign of the Colts in 1984, also expressed optimism.

"I can only look from where he's been," Schlichter said. "And when you look at St. Louis, they've got one of the better offenses in the league. He groomed a young quarterback, Neil Lomax."

Pagel, who started the club's first seven games, was uncertain about his future.

"From what I understand, he's definitely a player's coach in that his whole philosophy revolves around the quarterback. It could be a good situation for all of us, but I'm not certain if I have a future with this club. I've asked to be traded, but if I'm not I'll give it my best. I guess it comes down to what he (Dowhower) thinks," Pagel said.

"I know the Colts used three quarterbacks last season," said Dowhower, 41, who received a five-year contract. The terms were not disclosed.

"I want them to know that all three have a shot at the job and that there is no number one at this point. It all depends on how hard they want to work, how they adapt to my plans and how they take directions," Dowhower said.

Dowhower's first NFL coaching experience was with St. Louis as a member of Don Coryell's staff in 1973. He then moved to UCLA where he served as offensive coordinator under Dick Vermeil, helping the 1975 Bruins defeat Ohio State in the Rose Bowl. Following a year as offensive coordinator at Boise State, he was named quarterback coach at Stanford under current San Francisco 49er coach Bill Walsh.

In 1979 he coached Stanford to a 5-5-1 record. He joined the Denver Broncos as offensive coordinator under Dan Reeves in 1981, where he coached Herrmann as a rookie. Dowhower rejoined the Cardinals, under Jim Hanifan, in 1982.

"I've been with systems where we throw the ball a lot and that's the type of offense I want here," he said. "I'm prone to the forward pass. I've been brought up that way."

"We want to develop pride and the only thing I ask is that everybody give it their best shot. That's what I'm looking for," he said.

NBA roundup

Aguirre paces Mavs past 76ers

By The Associated Press
The Philadelphia 76ers were gunned down by a sharpshooter out to make his point.

Dallas' Mark Aguirre, snubbed by the All-Star selectors, drilled 17 of 25 shots from the floor and scored a career-high 49 points Monday night, leading the Mavericks to a 111-109 National Basketball Association victory over the 76ers.

"I was kind of upset," said Aguirre, who made last year's All-Star team. "I came out to win."

And he helped nail down the triumph with eight points in the final three minutes after the Mavs saw a 13-point lead disappear to a 98-98 deadlock with 4:36 to play as Julius Erving and Moses Malone rallied the Sixers.

Elsewhere, the Denver Nuggets outlasted the Utah Jazz 104-100, the Houston Rockets downed the New Jersey Nets 97-93 and the New York Knicks trounced the Los Angeles Clippers 117-91.

Besides Aguirre's heroics, which eclipsed his previous high of 46 points, Brad Davis made three free throws and Derek Harper hit a pair in the last 50 seconds. Philadelphia's Maurice Cheeks missed a 25-foot jump shot with one second to play.

Malone and Erving scored 26 points apiece for the 76ers, who had won eight of nine prior meetings with Dallas and fell one game behind first-place Boston in the Atlantic Division.

Fox still denied entry

NEW YORK (AP) — Batting averages and earned run averages are routinely rounded off to the highest number. But the Baseball Hall of Fame's board of directors has refused to change its rules and admit the late Nellie Fox, who wound up just four-tenths of a percentage point short of election.

The Hall of Fame rules require candidates to be named on 75 percent of the ballots cast. Fox got 295 of the 395 votes cast — 74.6 percent — in balloting by baseball writers announced Jan. 8.

He came within two votes of being elected, the closest any person has come to making it to Cooperstown without getting in. Hoyt Wilhelm and Lou Brock were elected in the voting.

Ed Stack, president of the Hall of Fame, said its board of directors on Monday reconsidered the voting at the request of Chicago Tribune sports writer Jerome Holtzman, who had advocated the election of Fox.

Holtzman has pointed out that many numbers in baseball are rounded off, and suggested the same should be done for Fox.

Stack said the board considered the matter at its annual meeting, but let the voting stand.

"The Hall of Fame board of directors expressed its sympathy in the Nellie Fox situation, but did not feel that it was proper to change the rules for election to admit any candidate named on less than 75 percent of the ballots cast," Stack said.
