City manager lists suggestions for changes

By LARRY HOLLIS
Staff Writer

In a workshop session this morning with city commissioners, City Manager Bob Hart presented a number of suggestions and recommendations for improvement of city government operations.

Hart said the ideas were based "on my observations of the past two weeks" since he took over the city manager position.

He stressed the ideas are generally recommendations, with the city commission having the final say on his suggestions and proposals.

In a written report presented to the commission at the non-action workshop, Hart addressed four basic sections: departmental realignment, personnel changes, issues for commission consideration and work required by staff and department heads.

Under departmental realignment, Hart suggested changing the Public Works Department to the Community Services Department. The Public Works Director would become the Director of Community Services.

The department would include the Street, Utility, Water Distribution, Waste Water Collection, Water Production, Waste Water Treatment, Sanitation, Parks and Recreation, Engineering, Internal Services and Shop departments.

Administrative Services would be under the direction of the Director of Finance. The department would include Finance, Data Processing, Municipal Court, Utility Office, Central Stores and Purchasing.

The Code Enforcement Department would be a separate department answering directly to the city manager and would be composed of Building Inspection, Health and Animal Control departments.

The library, Director of Personnel and Police Departments would answer directly to the city manager. The Fire Marshall would be a part of the Fire Department, with the fire chief being responsible to the city manager.

The warehouse building and grounds would be known as the Service Center, with the Warehouse Department being known as Central Stores.

The Internal Services Department would be created with a Director of Internal Services. This department would be responsible for all the custodial work in most city buildings, including City Hall, the library, the Service Center, the Parks building and the M. K. Brown Auditorium. The new department also would be responsible for force account capital improvement construction projects across departmental lines.

Hart also suggested some personnel changes to accord with the changes in department organization. A number of offices would be moved in City Hall to have related services nearer each other and to make certain departments more accessible to the public.

In the third section of his submitted written report, Hart presented a number of issues for consideration by the commission.

Hart proposed the city conduct a comprehensive review of its city charter and ordinances to update them, check aspects in conflict with state law and provide an indexing system which would make it easier to locate specific ordinances and sections.

Other suggestions included improving storage of records, developing a city logo, reviewing traffic control within the city, supporting economic revitalization of the central business district, improving fund equities, assessing water needs through 2030, expanding the parks system, replacing equipment and vehicles on a regular basis and making improvements in the city's landfill operations.

Under work requirements by staff and department heads, Hart

'Devise a fairer plan'

Stockman issues challenge on budget

WASHINGTON (AP) — Budget Director David Stockman, conceding "problems in many places" in President Reagan's 1986 budget, is challenging a skeptical Congress to try to devise a fairer plan.

"There aren't many good alternatives and I think Congress will discover this," said Stockman. He was arguing the case for the president's $974 billion budget before the Senate Budget Committee today.

Republican House and Senate leaders have made it clear they're not about to swallow the president's $974 billion budget whole and will use the document more as a starting point in their own deficit-reduction efforts.

At least two major programs spared from Reagan's budget knife — defense and Social Security — will be "on the table" along with other federal spending, budget leaders in both chambers said Monday.

But Stockman said that, while he anticipated "a very noisy debate on defense," the administration felt it had already gone as far as it could go on Pentagon spending restraint.

"Our plan is balanced and it's fair," Stockman told a press briefing. "I have no doubt political resistance and opposition will be strong. And maybe that is an understatement. But there are no alternatives."

Stockman was the only witness before the panel as it began a full week of hearings on the president's budget.

Committee Chairman Pete V. Domenici, R-N.M., said that neither Reagan's defense budget nor the president's vow not to touch Social Security benefits was sacred.

However, even with further cuts in defense spending and even if Congress goes along with a freeze on Social Security cost-of-living benefits, "we still have to find a big chunk of domestic spending," said Domenici.

"There's going to be problems in many places. The politics of this are going to be difficult," Stockman told reporters after he met Monday with House and Senate budget leaders.

Asked whether the administration would be willing to reduce its Pentagon spending request, Stockman said the increase in the budget is "what we think is needed. It's too early to say what we're going to give on."

Reagan's budget, which would abolish, freeze or slash scores of familiar federal programs, found few outright champions on Capitol Hill, even among Reagan's usual allies.

House Republican Leader Bob Michel described the plan as a "starting point," and said, "I do not endorse every recommendation."

Senate Democratic Leader Robert C. Byrd of West Virginia, called Reagan's budget "unacceptable."

'Wet gas' problem for White Deer

By CATHY SPAULDING
Staff Writer

WHITE DEER — With chilling temperatures and moisture freezing residents' gas lines, city officials decided Monday to ask an expert what they can do about it.

According to mayor R.W. Standerfer, the frozen lines are caused by "wet gas" flowing through the lines.

"The wet gas gets into the lines and when it hits the gas regulator, it freezes it and shuts it off," Standerfer said, adding that the city is going to ask a gas consultant for advice on how to keep the moisture out of the lines. Public works director D.E. "Junior" Williams reported that city work crews spent 100 hours overtime working on the gas lines during the latest spell of freezing temperatures.

City officials discussed the wet gas problem at their regular meeting Monday night. Although city clerks have received a number of reports by residents with no gas, nobody appeared at the alderman's meeting.

City officials also agreed to spend up to $60,000 on a street improvement project. Standerfer said the money will be spent paving or repairing the city streets that are in the worst condition.

Standerfer said that an engineer recently made a survey of the condition of city streets. The last time the city paved any streets was in 1981.

"And guess what, the worst street was the last one paved: Jackson," he said, referring to a street in the southwest part of town.

According to Standerfer, the engineer estimated that it would cost $165,000 to repair or pave all the streets in town.

Standerfer recommended spending only about $60,000 and get the worst streets repaired. The remaining streets would be repaired later.

Aldermen also discussed a possible ordinance banning aluminum wiring in new buildings. Alderman Dean Wyatt made the proposal as he expressed concern about the safety of aluminum wiring. Pampa has such an ordinance, he said.

Pampa also has a building inspector. Alderman Dwight Huffman noted that "without a city building inspector, you can't enforce it."

Standerfer said Wyatt's aluminum ban was a "good idea."

"But we have a jillion regulations and we can't enforce what we got," he added.

In other business, the state of Texas does not think the White Deer dump is tidy enough for their regulations. The city recently received a letter from the Texas Health Department ordering them to comply with state regulations that stipulate that there be areas for combustible items, areas for junked appliances, areas for trash that should be buried.

"We are trying to get all that done," Standerfer said, adding that a representative with the state health department is expected to come to town in April to work with the city on how to tidy up the trash pit.

Standerfer also reported that 84 percent of the city taxes have been collected.

"That should be about 95 percent by now," he said, reporting that the city has received about $108,742 in taxes with $21,257 remaining uncollected.

City officials agreed to wait until summer to discuss renewal of insurance policies. The idea is to make all policies effective with the start of each fiscal year.

They accepted a bid of $7,822 for a pick-up truck from Culberson Stowers Chevrolet of Pampa and a bid of $600 for a heater for the city offices.

Frozen youth's recovery historic

MILWAUKEE (AP) — A 2½-year-old boy who froze almost to death after wandering outside his house in 20 below weather wearing only pajamas is back to his playful self, kicking toys and balloons around his room as he makes medical history, doctors say.

"Our son was dead and he is alive," says Judy Troche, the mother of Michael Troche.

On Monday, Milwaukee Children's Hospital upgraded Michael's condition from critical to fair.

Michael was found the morning of Jan. 19 after he wandered from his parents' home in the subzero cold. His body temperature was 60 degrees, compared with the normal reading of 98.6, said Dr. Kevin Kelly, associate director of the pediatric intensive care unit at the hospital.

"When he came in, the legs and arms... felt like blocks of ice, and as you squeezed the tissue, you could feel ice in the blood, as you would crush ice under the skin," Kelly said. He said the blood plasma appeared to have frozen.

At a news conference with the boy's parents Monday, Kelly said there was no known case of an accidental victim of hypothermia surviving a body core temperature that cold.

MICHAEL TROCHE

"Accidental hypothermia has been reported down to 19 degrees Centigrade (66 Fahrenheit), as best we can tell in the world's literature," he said. "No one has any reports less than that."

Michael faces another three to four weeks in the hospital because of frostbite and skin grafts to his arms and legs, the doctor said.

Camp residents evacuated during Schafer plant fire

By CATHY SPAULDING
Staff Writer

A dispute about whether to use a special foam on a gas fire reportedly kept fire fighters from quickly putting out a blaze that burned an oil heating unit late Saturday at the Getty (now Texaco) Schafer gas plant west of Skellytown.

The fire was contained to the heating unit, but "it could have gotten a lot worse," a spokesman with the White Deer Volunteer Fire Department said.

The fire was discovered after 11 p.m. Saturday by Carson County Deputy Sheriff LoVell Kennard of Skellytown, who was on patrol near the plant, located a half mile east of Skellytown. Kennard said that he and Skellytown city marshal Ken Robinson then reported the fire to officials at the Getty (Now Texaco) plant. Kennard said he is not certain about what time he called the fire in.

Residents of a camp near the plant were evacuated during the three-hour fire. Kennard said he stood by to evacuate the homes and to direct traffic during the fire.

Volunteer fire units from White Deer and Skellytown stood by as the fire burned itself out by 2:15 a.m. Sunday. Plant workers later doused the embers with water.

However, the fire could have been put out sooner if fire fighters had been allowed to use a special foam, a White Deer fire fighter declared. The volunteer, who declined to be identified, said that the White Deer fire vehicles were equipped with A-FFF, a foam the U.S. Navy uses to put out petroleum fires. He said that the Pampa Fire Department uses the foam.

"They would not let our people fight the fire with the foam," he said. "The people at Getty do not know about the foam. They ended up putting out the fire themselves."

He added that the Phillips petroleum plant later sent a fire truck that was also equipped with

Guerillas turn out lights during pope's visit to Lima

LIMA, Peru (AP) — Guerrilla saboteurs blacked out Lima's airport shortly before Pope John Paul II's plane landed, and then cut power to the sprawling capital of 5 million, police and airport control tower officials said.

Moments later, a huge hammer the foam, but, like the Skellytown and White Deer units, was not allowed to use the foam on the fire, according to the White Deer spokesman.

Describing the the oil heating unit as being 75 to 100 feet long by 25 feet wide, the man said the fire could have been put out in minutes if they were allowed to use the foam.

"It was a terrible looking fire, and it could have gotten a lot larger," he said, adding that there were no injuries in the fire.

All inquiries to plant officials about the fire were referred to Texaco's public relations office in Houston, where a spokesman defended the plant's refusal to put the foam on the fire.

"We opted to let the fire burn itself out," said Phillip Blackburn, a Texaco public relations officer.

"We decided against the foam so we wouldn't have the possibility of the fire reigniting."

He explained that the foam on top of the burning materials would have prevented the fire fighters from seeing were the trouble spots were.

listed a number of suggestions for work hours, budget preparation, public relations, improvement of relations with the county and school district, finance matters, renovation and construction projects, annexation matters and employee relations.

Hart said his suggestions would require development to turn them into workable programs. But most are designed to result in financial savings to the city and better utilization of personnel, he said.

In other business, the city commission held a special called meeting Monday morning for a public hearing on a request for annexation of a tract of land near Coronado Community Hospital.

Hospital officials have indicated the land would be subdivided to provide sites for medical and health care related services.

No one appeared at the hearing to voice any objections to the annexation.

and sickle — the symbol of the Maoist Shining Path Movement — was set ablaze on a mountainside north of Lima.

The show of sabotage appeared to be a dramatic rejection of the pope's call for an end to violence in Peru.

In the fourth and final day of his visit to Peru, the pope was going today to the shantytown of Villa El Salvador and the Amazon city of Iquitos. He then travels to Trinidad-Tobago, the last stop on his 12-day, four-nation journey.

Police tightened security after the Monday evening incidents which started, according to police and airport control tower officials, after two explosions occurred northeast and east of the city as the pontiff's twin-engine jet returned from northern Peru.

The officials said the runway lights went out at 8:45 p.m., but the pontiff's plane landed safely in the darkened military section of Lima airport. They said power at the airport was restored almost immediately by a back-up generating system.

Shining Path guerrillas have caused blackouts in the past by blowing up utility poles, and it was believed those might have been the explosions the air controllers saw.

The chief Vatican spokesman, Monsignor Pierfranco Pastore, gave a different account of the incidents, saying the pope's plane was on the ground 10 minutes before the runway lights went out.

Sub-zero temperatures grip wide area of Great Plains

BY STEVE ELLWANGER
Associated Press Writer

The northern Great Plains remained locked in the grip of sub-zero temperatures today as a storm that dumped 7 inches of snow on Kansas churned across the Mississippi Valley and threatened to dump a half a foot on the mid-Atlantic Coast.

More than a dozen cities broke cold temperature records Monday as a brutal cold snap blamed for 65 deaths since Wednesday continued to pump frigid arctic air into the heart of the nation.

"We need more snow like we need two left-handed golf clubs," said Highway Patrol Cpl. Jerry Crimmon in Missouri, where more traveler's advisories were issued today and the snow has long since worn out its welcome.

It was 28 below zero this morning in Craig, Colo., making it the coldest spot in the nation. In Worland, Wyo., it was minus-22. Sub-zero temperatures prevailed through the Great Lakes region, where it was minus-24 at International Falls, Minn.

There were two major storm systems at work today: one in the Southwest that buried parts of Texas and New Mexico under 6 inches of snow, the other consisting of warm, moist air from the Gulf of Mexico that collided with an upper level disturbance over the upper Mississippi Valley.

"The second one will cause the most problems today," said Pete Reynolds of the National Severe Storms Forecast Center in Kansas City, Mo. "It's very hard to tell just what it's going to do."

In Mississippi, the Highway Patrol had opened all the state's highways Monday night, but closed portions of U.S. 82 when more ice formed on the roadway. When Interstate 20 from Vicksburg to Jackson was reopened, many scurried to get back on the road.

"It was just a rush to get out of here," said Fred Shirley, day manager of Presley's Truck Stop in Vicksburg. "It was like slopping time at a hog pen."

Bad weather of a different kind brought headaches to residents of San Diego, Calif., on Monday. What was initially labeled a funnel cloud was later redesignated a tornado when it was learned the raging winds had touched ground.

The whirling wind damaged 10 mobile homes in the Mission Gorge area, ripping several carport covers loose and sucking up pieces of aluminum siding. There were no reports of injuries from falling debris, police said.

Jean Steffan, whose mobile home was the most seriously damaged, didn't see the tornado but she felt it.

"I was lying down and I heard rolling thunder," she said. "I thought it was lightning, too. Then the thunder crashed and my mobile home shook... About two minutes after that my neighbor came and knocked on the door and said, 'You know your roof is off?' I said, 'No.' And I came out and there it was, standing straight up in the air."

Record low temperatures in a dozen cities extended from Yakima, Wash., at 7 below zero, to Newark, N.J., at 7 degrees above zero. Monday's low of 12 below zero at Boise, Idaho, shattered a record that had stood since 1899.

Students oppose tuition increase

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas university students, insisting that a tuition increase would prevent some people from attending college, say the Legislature should look at the long-term effects of a tuition hike.

"The rush to raise tuition has not been a careful, deliberate study of Texas' policy. Rather, it has been treated as a revenue issue in a nearsighted attempt to balance the budget and avoid political difficulties," said John Tarbox, 25, Houston, a member of the Texas Student Lobby.

Tarbox and other members of the students' group on Monday said a proposed tuition hike for public universities could damage the state's future economy.

"The future prosperity of Texas is directly related to the education of its citizens. For Texas to emerge from an economy based primarily on oil and agriculture to a more broad-based economy bolstered by the strength of the high technology industries, education will be essential," Tarbox said.

The state is facing a $1 billion shortfall between the revenue it expects to take in during the 1986-87 budget years and the amount agencies currently spend.

To help offset that difference and generate more money for universities, Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby proposed raising undergraduate resident tuition from $4 per semester hour to $8 per hour in 1986 and to $12 per hour by 1987.

Tuition for other students also would be increased, and the hikes would raise about $120 million more for higher education, lawmakers say.

At present, Texas undergraduate tuition is the lowest in the country. But the students said tuition makes up only a small part of the total cost of a college education.

"The (total) cost of attending a four-year, public institution in Texas is almost identical to the national average," said Mitch Kreindler, 22, Dallas, a former student body president at the University of Texas.

Lobbyists fight smoking ban bill

AUSTIN (AP) — A state ban on smoking in most indoor public places would be an unfair burden on owners of restaurants, hotels and bowling alleys, lobbyists told a House committee.

The "Clean Indoor Air Act" authored by Rep. Erwin Barton, D-Pasadena, would allow smoking only in designated areas of public places. It would require separate smoking and non-smoking areas in workplaces.

Barton also asked the House Committee on Public Health to raise the legal age for buying cigarettes from 16 to 21.

Texas Restaurant Association lobbyist Richie Jackson told the committee Monday that small restaurants would have trouble setting aside the no-smoking areas required by the bill.

"Free enterprise incentives are the most effective means," he said, adding that many restaurants are set up smoke-free zones because it's good for business.

Herbert Wilson of the Texas Hotel and Motel Association also said the state should not force no-smoking areas on private businesses.

The committee sent the smoking-area bill to subcommittee and took no action on the cigarette purchase age. Several committee members said they would amend the bill to set 18 as the minimum age.

The American Cancer Society, Texas Medical Association, Texas Retailers Association and the Legislative Task Force on Cancer backed the Barton bill as effective measures.

"There's mounting evidence that inhalation of tobacco by non-smokers increases the risk of lung cancer," said James Dannenbaum of Houston, chairman of the task force appointed by House Speaker Gib Lewis to look into cancer in Texas.

Frank Jackson of the Texas Medical Association said "anything that discourages people from smoking will save the state money."

Texas retailers back the public place smoking ban as a good way to protect merchandise. Consumers now wind up paying for goods damaged by smoke and ash, said Mickey Moore, Texas Retailers Association lobbyist. The law would be a relief for "merchants who are reluctant to offend customers" by asking them not to smoke, he said.

Texas Association of Business lobbyist Ronnie Volkening said the ban could be costly for employers who might have to hire engineers to help set up the "artificial segregation" of smokers and non-smokers.

Joe Ratcliff, vice president of the Texas Association of Tobacco and Candy Distributors, said government should not be involved in such efforts.

"In trying to regulate social policy there haven't been very many successes," he said, calling for a "courtesy campaign" to prevent smokers from bothering non-smokers.

It is pointless for legislators to pass laws mandating healthier lifestyles, Ratcliff added.

"You might as well tell the commissioner of health to tell us to fall out in the morning in our pajamas for exercises," he said. "You cannot pass a law and say 'Don't do this' and suddenly all the health problems disappear."

A ban on smoking in grocery stores would be "almost totally impossible," according to Texas Retail Grocers Association lobbyist Johnnie B. Rogers. He also testified that grocery checkers would waste time checking identification if the legal age for buying cigarettes is raised to 21.

J. Manley Head, representing the Texas Bowling Centers Association, said, "There's no way in the world we could put up non-smoking areas in a bowling house."

In unanimous votes, the committee sent to the House bills setting up a Texas Cancer Council and requiring reporting of cancer data to a state registry.

War-on-drugs bill revived, while park funding rejected

AUSTIN (AP) — The Senate has voted to re-enact a 1981 law that was part of Texas' war-on-drugs campaign.

Senate sponsor Ray Farabee said the 4-year-old law to stem forged prescriptions for drugs such as Quaaludes and amphetamines had been "a very effective deterrent."

The law requires the use of special triplicate prescription blanks issued by the Department of Public Safety. One copy is kept by the doctor, one by the pharmacy and the other goes to the Department of Public Safety.

In the first year of the program, according to printed material, pharmacies showed a 48 percent decrease in prescriptions for drugs "with a valid medical excuse but a high potential for abuse-addiction." Prescriptions fell an additional 13 percent the second year.

The law would expire next Jan. 1. Farabee, D-Wichita Falls, said one change in the bill re-enacting the law requires that a written prescription be delivered to the pharmacy within three days of a prescription being called in. Triplicate prescriptions would have to be filled in legibly.

Also, the DPS could keep names in its system for 12 months, rather than six months as in current law.

It was estimated that as a result of the 1981 law the state saved just over $1 million in DPS investigators, because fewer investigators could do more work.

Farabee's bill was sent to the House on voice vote Monday.

In another matter, Sen. Tati Santiesteban, D-El Paso, became an apparent victim of the state budget crunch as he failed in an effort to get the Senate to consider a bill that would remove a ban against spending state funds on Franklin Mountains State Park.

The 25,000-acre El Paso County park was created in 1979, and Santiesteban said $202,891 would be needed over two years. Chairman Grant Jones of the Senate Finance Committee questioned the expenditure, and the 22-7 vote was three short of the total needed to suspend the rules and debate the bill.

The money would open a few areas for public viewing, repair damages and provide security.

Santiesteban's bill would not require that money be spent but would authorize expenditures by the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department.

Panel amends water bill

AUSTIN (AP) — Passage of a proposed water bill is in sight as lawmakers filled the loopholes during a four-hour session in which $200 million was added to please coastal areas.

The House Natural Resources Committee on Monday reviewed about 40 amendments and a vote to send the bill and constitutional amendment to the House is expected on Tuesday.

"It pretty well gives something to everybody in the different areas of the state," bill sponsor Tom Craddick, R-Midland and committee chairman, said.

The committee raised the water package's price tag to $800 million worth of bonds, $200 million more than the original proposal put together by the state leaders. The additional money would be earmarked for flood control projects, especially in coastal regions.

IDENTITY CRISIS—A town hall suffering an identity crisis has settled a long-standing controversy over a community never quite certain of its own name. The community, located approximately 50 miles north of

Hot ton, had various spellings. "Cut 'n' Shoot," for example, until the city fathers consulted the town's chronicles and corrected the spelling on the town hall. (AP Laserphoto)

Town settles name controversy

CUT AND SHOOT, Texas (AP) — A town hall suffering an identity crisis has settled a long-standing controversy over a community never quite certain of its own name.

Documents now prove the tiny town just east of Conroe is Cut and Shoot — with the "and" fully spelled. So the structure is officially the Cut and Shoot Town Hall.

The rustic log cabin had looked like anything but the municipal government meeting place that it is.

"People thought it was nothing but a beer joint, right there by the fire station," said alderman Gene Douget. At a meeting a few months ago, he suggested a sign to clear up any disreputable misconceptions.

But the town suffers its own identity crisis, if not in name at least in spelling. Various sources refer to it as Cut and Shoot, Cut 'n Shoot, Cut & Shoot, or Cut 'N' Shoot, and there are probably others.

"We started getting the sign together, so we thought we better get it right," Douget said.

The city fathers consulted the not-so-ancient chronicles and spoke. They checked the charter, drafted in 1969 when the town was incorporated, and found it spelled Cut and Shoot.

Not Cut 'n' Shoot, And not Cut 'n' Shoot. And not Cut & Shoot.

Cut and Shoot, with the "and" spelled out fully and with no capitalization. The charter's spelling made it onto the town hall's sign and into official use.

The words, "Town Hall — Cut and Shoot, Texas," now grace the building's front, over the unpainted cedar exterior. Looking at the 30-foot by 40-foot hall made out of logs, you can see how it might have caused confusion. As Douget says, "You know the old Western saloon with the porch on it? It looks just like that."

Citizens need wonder no more. "A lot of people wanted to know where the town hall was. It's been sitting there all the time," Douget said.

And they need wonder no more how to spell their town's name, though a host of references offer conflicting advice on the correct form.

But now, a person posting a letter could look at a sign on the post office on Highway 105 and get the return address correct. The town's community center also shows the municipality's name spelled correctly as do many maps.

But the town fire station has the wrong spelling on its garage doors. So do phone books listing Cut and Shoot numbers. So does the Texas Almanac.

New look at the old days

So, February is national American History Month, big deal. We have more important things on our minds than the trivialities of something that happened "back then."

Or do we? American history is a required subject in most junior high and high schools. And the classes are popular. Often, all students have to do in history class is read the chapter, answer the review questions, pass the test and forget it. Whether they learn anything from what they read is doubtful.

American history is more than the narrow view found in a textbook. Textbooks talk about presidents, explorers and generals. True history is about people — all people. Blacks want a history that goes beyond slavery and civil rights. Women want to know that America's past is "her story" also. The Asians and Europeans who added to America's cornucopia of cultures were more than just immigrants.

What the textbooks don't say, the songs, slogans, poems, paintings, films and fashions will. Even the buildings have a story to tell.

Textbooks tell about how pioneers braved the elements to settle the great plains, but Willa Cather's "O Pioneers" and "My Antonia" breathe life into the names, dates and places. Textbooks say Chicago was a busy place in the early 20th century, but Carl Sandburg's poem turns the town into "the city of big shoulders." Textbooks discuss small town life; but Edgar Lee Masters' "Spook River Anthology," Grant Wood's "American Gothic" painting and Thornton Wilder's "Our Town" introduce us to the people who live there.

Textbooks discuss history in one-dimensional terms. Music doesn't. Listen for the complexities of the Depression in the blatant optimism of Hollywood musicals, the fun escapism of Swing and the honest uneasiness of Woody Guthrie. Listen for the moral chaos of the 1960s in the rock 'n' roll music. Listen for the loneliness of Chisolm Trail cattle drives in such cowboy songs as "Get Along Little Dogie." Listen for the slaves' yearning for a better life in negro spirituals.

It's time to take a new look at the old days. The best place to start — as Judy Garland would say in her old movie musicals — is right in our own back yard.

Students at Mooreland High School in Oklahoma have an interesting, albeit faddish, way to study history. They devised their own local Trivial Pursuit game by looking through old issues of the local newspaper, pouring through minutes of early city meetings and early bank records and interviewing area pioneers. They made history come to life by taking it personally.

History classes in Miami, Mobeetie, McLean, Panhandle and Pampa should regularly take advantage of the museums in their towns. Other treasures can be found at the library, the newspaper office, old buildings, even grandma's attic.

By preserving and restoring known historic structures, such as the Statue of Liberty, history becomes a continuing process. Restoring Pampa's decaying Pioneer Home — a historic structure that's being ignored by the people who are responsible for its upkeep — is a way to bring local history to life.

History is a look into the future as well as the past. It shows why petroleum is so vital in the Panhandle. It shows why Texans think differently than folks in New York. It shows why this country should, or should not, be involved in international affairs. It shows what is happening to the American family.

Yes, February is American History Month. But don't just read about it. Experience it.

Teacher reprimanded for tying pupil to chair

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — A teacher at Glen Cove Elementary School has been reprimanded for tying a 7-year-old pupil to a chair, school officials say.

Principal Richard Gore said Cynthia Goodman, 27, was reprimanded and the pupil was assigned to another classroom.

The teacher told The El Paso Times Monday that she tied the child to the chair last Wednesday and Thursday as a "reminder" to sit up straight. She said she did not tie the girl to be cruel, but the girl's father was furious.

Dwight Jefferson, father of Jardine Jefferson, went to the school Monday for a conference with Gore.

Ms. Goodman said the jump rope was tied around the girl's waist in a "seat belt-type situation."

"There was no hatred. It was not done in cruelty, and not taken (by the children) in cruelty. It was not that much a disciplinary thing. It was a reminder," she added.

Gore said tying children is not sanctioned by the school, and it was "an unfortunate incident" that will not be repeated.

Jefferson said his daughter pretended to be sick last Friday because she didn't want to go to school.

The child's father said his wife was contacted Sunday by the parents of another child in Jardine's class. That child had told her parents that Goodman had tied Jardine to her chair, Jefferson said.

"I found out from other people instead of from the school," he said. "As far as a little girl being tied in front of everybody, I don't think that's right. I'm awfully upset."

Gore said he didn't have a clear reason why the teacher tied her pupil to the chair.

"It's an unfortunate thing that happened. She (Goodman) didn't stop to think it shouldn't have happened, but it did," Gore said.

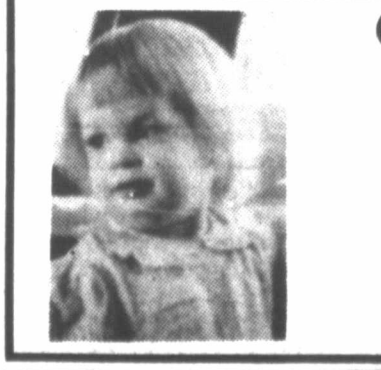

Goodman said Gore had her sign a written account of the incident that will be placed in her file.

She said she recently sent home a possible retention form to the Jeffersons, warning that the girl might not be passed on to the third grade this year. She said the little girl was not keeping up with the other children in the class.

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

President given some good advice

A lot of voices compete for the president's ear. We hope the voices of a 13-member group dubbed the Committee on the Next Agenda were heard loud and clear when it met with Ronald Reagan last week.

The members of the group represented some of the country's most respected think tanks, politically and philosophically stretched along the liberal-conservative axis from the Brookings Institution to the Heritage Foundation.

The group presented to Reagan its recommendations for an agenda of action of his second term.

What it boiled down to is that Reagan should take bold steps to reduce the burden of government's intrusion into American life and encourage growth of private institutions.

Here is what the report of the committee said, in part: "Concentration of power in the hands of government has undermined two fundamental traditions: reliance on individual responsibility as the force for economic progress, and reliance on the family as the source of social stability.

The report urged that private-sector alternatives be considered for Social Security, health care, education and welfare. On other specific issues, the Committee on the Next Agenda endorsed the president's Strategic Defense Initiative and called for the elimination of the corporate income tax. "recognizing that corporations do not pay taxes but only act as a conduit for collecting taxes from the providers of labor and capital."

None of this is very new. Most of it has been part of Reagan's own rhetoric. But it is sound advice, given new prominence and weight because of the diversity of political views held by those who arrived as such a remarkable consensus on such difficult and often divisive public policy issues.

William Murchison

Why funds for culture?

The president's men have scoured around for ways to cut the federal deficit. They have looked high and low. And would you believe it? Critics of the proposed budget say the job can't be done. There is not one program that can be cut. Not one!

Farm supports can't be reduced, because this would hurt family farmers; cuts from Amtrak would play havoc with passenger-train service; freezing Social Security payments would devastate the elderly.

So the farmers', train-riders', and retired people's lobbies have declared in response to lustful glances cast their way by David Stockman and his budget-cutters.

Other lobbies have reacted with equal alacrity and indignation. The cultural lobby, for instance. When it was announced that the administration plans to cut by 11.7 percent the $114-million budget of the National Endowment for the Arts (NEA). The cultural establishment lapsed into shock. Protests were warbled fortissimo.

"I'm just appalled," said Beverly Sills of the New York City Opera. The chairman of the New York City Ballet, Orville Schell, suggested the deductions be made instead from the Pentagon's budget. (If the Soviets invade, maybe we can throw dancing shoes at them.) The Chicago Lyric Opera's Ardis Krainik objected that "Any cut from the already low level of assistance is too much."

The NEA debate provides a splendid vantage point for viewing this whole question of the size and cost of the federal government - a question of burning importance as Capitol and White House wrestle with the deficit.

The popular presumption since the Great Depression has been that if a project is worthy, why, the federal government should take it on. The framers of the Constitution - whose bicentennial we mark in just two years - operated under a different presumption: that government's functions were limited; that government itself was little more than a necessary evil.

"If men were angels!" sighed Madison. Alas, they aren't, and that's why government exists - to do grimy, earth-bound things like administer justice, ward off foreign enemies, coin money, and build roads.

From which it follows that a worthy undertaking is not automatically a government responsibility or duty. Who can be Against the Arts? No civilized person, that is for sure. Yet to be FOR the Arts implies no duty to SUBSIDIZE the Arts.

The National Endowment for the Arts dates back only two decades, to the balmy days of the Great Society, when federal money ran like water. The idea was to promote national prestige and international understanding, succor economically hard-pressed arts organizations and even fight poverty.

Always before art had been a private, or at most a local government, function: never a federal matter. Indeed, Sen. Strom Thurmond (R.-S.C.), during debate on the NEA proposal, made bold to inquire which article of the Constitution justified this particular expansion of government power.

Nevertheless, the NEA was duly formed (along with the National Endowment for the Humanities). One would suppose it must have done some good in twenty years - though Professor Edward Banfield, in a recent book, "The Democratic Muse," points to considerable harm it has done (e.g., the promotion of art as entertainment and psychotherapy).

Anyway here we are; it's 1985, the deficit swells, and cutbacks are necessary. Is the arts budget untouchable?

An even grander heresy: Is it necessary to have an NEA, period? Should the federal government give anything at all to art?

Maybe it is time we as a nation rethought the whole premise of federal support for culture. Maybe, in consideration not just of the deficit but of the Constitution, the whole idea - a nouveau idea, at that - is defective.

Maybe. But then the culture lobby cries out indignantly - one more vested interest in a whole gallery of interests erected over the years through federal munificence; fiercely protective of present living standards.

The federal money spigots are easy enough to turn. Turning them off, or down, is the trick - never mind whether federal farm programs hurt agriculture (as they do), or federal rail passenger service perennially loses money (as it does), or arts programs contribute more to the well-being of artists and actors than to international understanding and the fight against poverty (as the case certainly is).

A federal program, once begun, is seemingly forever. And aren't you glad you aren't David Stockman?

Five years ago: Attorney General Benjamin R. Civiletti asked House and Senate leaders to delay their investigations related to the FBI's Abscam probe.

One year ago: More difficulties plagued the mission of the space shuttle Challenger. A target balloon released from the shuttle burst into shreds, and engineers found the missing Westar 6 satellite that had been launched from Challenger in an unusable orbit.

Today's birthdays: Actor John Carradine is 79. Actor-comedian Red Buttons is 66. State Department spokesman Bernard Kalb is 63. New York Times publisher Arthur O. Sulzberger is 59.

Saga of a barroom Romeo

She sat across the motel bar, cute as she could be, sipping on her drink and reading from a paperback, possibly a romance novel featuring steaming passion and that sort of thing.

The place was crowded with weary travelers, and the band was too loud.

Two men in suits tried her first, but she would not even look up from her paperback. They went back to their table and sat down.

The man sitting next to me, who looked to be in his late 20s, had been watching her during a couple of martinis, both of which he had insisted come with two olives.

He made his first move.

"See the blonde behind you, the one reading the book?" he said to the bartender. "What's she drinking?"

"Whiskey sour," said the bartender.

"Send her one on me," said the man.

The girl didn't acknowledge receipt of the drink when it arrived in front of her. She simply pushed her old glass away, took a sip from the new one and went back to the paperback.

The man ordered another two-olive martini and waited.

The band rocked on. My ears ached. Maybe 20 minutes passed, and the man sitting next to me hailed the bartender again.

"Send the lady another whiskey sour," he said.

I wonder why more bartenders didn't write books. They see and hear so much.

Again the girl didn't look up to see who her bartender might be.

If it had been me I would have quit right there, but I was never any good in bars in the first place.

I heard "Buzz off, creep" a few times, which killed my confidence, and without his confidence, a man is no match for a woman in a dimly lit arena.

The band announced a slow song.

The guy sitting next to me was off his bar stool in a heartbeat. He went directly to the girl reading the book and asked her to dance.

They danced closely, and when the music ended they returned to the bar and he sat down beside her and ordered still another whiskey sour and they seemed to be getting along famously. After a few moments, she excused herself and walked out of the room. The man sat there as if he was expecting her to return. I figured her for a quick trip to the ladies room.

The man waited and he waited, but she never came back. Finally, he summoned his tab. As he walked past me, he muttered something about the entire female gender.

I watched as the whiskey sour lover disappeared out of the door and headed back to his room - probably to call his wife.

Progress made on state water plan

There is still little activity on the floor of the House and in the Senate chamber this week.

The big news is the compromise by the directors of the Lower Colorado River Authority with interest from South West Texas (San Angelo country) on the proposed state water plan. The downstate interests, in a long fought battle in the courts, had prohibited the proposed Stacy Dam, located near San Angelo, from being built.

The state water plan for the first time is being pushed by downstate interests after a several-year drought that has created critical water rationing in areas like Corpus Christi. West Texas legislators refused to support the state plan unless we were allowed to use part the water that falls on us in dry arid West Texas. Deep East Texas, with abundant water, has never been enthusiastic about any water bill. The Dallas - Fort Worth area was not too interested in the dispute concerning the Stacy Dam project.

To pass a state water plan, it will take 100 votes in the House and 21 in the Senate. West Texas had its clout this time and used it. I am told that other protective measures are being added in the bill to prevent downstate hogging of water rights from arid West Texas. West Texans should continue to see that our underground water is left solely in our control.

The other big news is Lieutenant Governor Hobby's proposal to free some $510 million in the budget to restore the 20-30 percent cut in the Legislative Budget Board's budget for the state-supported colleges and universities. Included in his proposals is a plan to raise tuition from $4 to $12 per semester hour. This would raise an additional $120 million in state revenue.

Other proposals include abolishing a dedicated cigarette tax to fund the Parks and Wildlife services in order to create another $36 million. Raising district court filing fees would create an additional $54 million. Lowering the contribution rate to the Teacher Retirement System to 8 percent would save an additional $86 million. Other items such as a better management practice by Land Commissioner Garry Mauro would create an additional $21 million.

Other dedicated funds and cost savings boosted the total amount to over one-half-billion dollars.

There has been no outcry voiced by any group affected by this proposal.

Another bill proposes to increase tuition by $2 per semester hour over a several-year period until it hits $24. If tuition was set at $24 per semester hour, the tuition and fees for the average Texas student would be about 24th in the nation of all colleges and universities.

Murchison corporation files for bankruptcy protection

DALLAS (AP) — Bankruptcy protection has been sought by a corporation controlled by Clint W. Murchison Jr., former owner of the Dallas Cowboys and named in 1984 by Forbes magazine as one of the nation's richest men, a Murchison lawyer says.

The filing for bankruptcy protection under Chapter 11 of the Federal Bankruptcy Act Monday came only hours after the land surrounding Murchison's Dallas mansion was deeded to Klimanorm Corp., the Dallas Times Herald reported today.

Murchison attorney Phillip Palmer said the action may be the first step in a voluntary liquidation of much of Murchison's empire to satisfy creditors.

Palmer told the Dallas Times Herald the action was taken to prevent a dissident creditor from foreclosing on the property and disrupting an out-of-court arrangement Murchison is trying to reach with his other creditors.

If the plan proceeds as Murchison interests believe it will, Palmer said, Murchison would be left with several operating companies. The value of the companies remaining would not qualify Murchison "for the Fortune 500, but probably (would) leave him a millionaire many times over," Palmer said.

Estimates that Murchison's creditors number around 30 and his total debt exceeds $175 million are "in the ballpark," Palmer said.

Forbes Magazine in 1984 listed Murchison as one of the nation's richest men and estimated his worth at $250 million, down from $350 million the previous year.

Murchison was sued last year for more than $100 million by creditors who claimed he defaulted on loans in connection with real estate and business ventures around the country.

Murchison, who suffers from a degenerative physical condition, sold the Dallas Cowboys National Football League team and the rights to Texas Stadium last year.

A hearing has been scheduled in state district court here Thursday on whether creditors can force the public auction of the Murchison estate to recoup their debts.

Although the Murchison corporation filed for bankruptcy, his creditors still could seek a judgement of involuntary bankruptcy against Murchison. If that happened, his assets would be frozen and a court eventually could determine how his debts would be met.

Palmer said Klimanorm was formed in September for another his clients, but it had not been used. When Palmer was unable to file the corporate name Forest Equities with the secretary of state in time for a bankruptcy filing on Monday, Palmer said, he used the Klimanorm entity instead.

A meeting at Murchison's home last Friday between Murchison and the creditors had yielded encouraging results, Palmer said. He said it had increased the possibility that Murchison would be allowed to reorganize unofficially with the cooperation of the creditors.

"Going out to that meeting Friday morning, I thought there was a 90 percent chance Clint would be flipped into involuntary bankruptcy today (Monday)," Palmer said. "When I left the meeting, I thought there was a 40 percent chance. Now we've gone another day without a filing."

Palmer said creditor cooperation is being won because Murchison has offered to liquidate virtually all his assets "in an orderly fashion and invited them to work with us."

The filing of the bankruptcy action Monday was not an attempt to shelter the land, but was taken in view of a threat to the orderly liquidation, Palmer said.

"What we're going to do is proceed to sell the real estate, although in an orderly fashion," he said.

In the papers filed Monday, Palmer said "the attorney for the corporation ... has been unsuccessful in obtaining an adequate assurance from one of the three creditors threatening to foreclose upon the 25,119 acres acquired by the corporation, and that some means would be required to halt the foreclosure or suffer loss of title."

The Dallas Times Herald identified the creditor as Surety Savings of El Paso, one of 16 creditors who have filed abstracts of judgement against Murchison.

An abstract of judgement, obtained when a debt is confirmed by a court, automatically puts a lien against any unattached real estate held by the debtor, in this case the Murchison mansion acreage on Forest Lane.

The 16 creditors have claims against Murchison amounting to more than $53 million.

As a result of the action taken Monday, neither an unfavorable state court action nor an involuntary bankruptcy filing by creditors would affect the acreage surrounding Murchison's home, at least until a decision is made on the Chapter 11 bankruptcy petition.

Under Chapter 11 bankruptcy proceedings, creditors are temporarily enjoined from taking action against protected assets. If the bankruptcy court grants the Chapter 11 petition, the petitioner typically has four months to file a reorganization plan.

Doctors fear epidemic of litigation

DALLAS (AP) — The cost of medical care is being driven up by a surge in the number of medical malpractice lawsuits and awards over the past 18 months, medical insurance experts say.

The rash of suits has triggered a 10 percent to 50 percent increase in insurance premiums for doctors statewide and reignited the debate over who is responsible for booming medical costs, the officials said.

Most of the increase in insurance premiums shows up patients' bills.

"The only place to pass it on is to the patients," said Jack Murphey, president of the American Physicians Insurance Exchange, which covers 6,000 doctors and plans a 35 percent rate increase.

For the state's largest malpractice insurer, the ratio of lawsuits has increased in the past five years from one out of 23 doctors insured to one out of 17. The average settlement has quintupled, the Dallas Times Herald reported Monday.

"In our urban areas, we have a real problem," said Donald Wilcox, attorney for the Texas Medical Association. "The physicians believe we are at a crisis stage."

The medical community blames the lawsuits on a greater eagerness by the public to go to court. The wave of claims is prompting some Texas doctors to avoid taking difficult cases and to abandon high-risk specialties such as obstetrics, the Herald said.

The doctors want the Texas Supreme Court to uphold a 1977 state statute that limits the damages to $500,000 excluding medical, hospital and custodial care expenses. A district court ruled the limit unconstitutional last year and the issue is on appeal.

Civil lawyers maintain the claims and judgments are fair recourse for patients who have been harmed.

Dear Abby

*Angry divorcee to widows:
You are lucky he is dead*

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1985 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: Lately your column has been filled with letters from "poor widows" who are having a hard time coping. I, for one, am tired of these whining widows who don't know how lucky they are. They cry that they are alone, but they don't know what "alone" really is. I would rather have my husband dead than know that he left me for a cocktail waitress. That is alone!

Widows don't have to live with the pain of rejection. Widows don't have to lie in their beds alone at night, knowing that their perfectly healthy ex-husband is sleeping with another woman. A widow gets sympathy and invitations from old friends who knew her when she had a husband. Divorcees are avoided like they have leprosy.

A widow has a better chance of remarrying because no man wants a woman who has been publicly dumped. (He also knows that a widow has the whole pie—financially—while a divorcee has just a piece of the pie.)

Widows have no reason to cry about being alone. I see ads for tours and clubs for widows and widowers, but I've never heard of a club for 60-year-old rejects; have you?

I know there's no answer to this, but I feel better just getting it out of my system. Sign me...

SEATTLE DIVORCEE,
OR I'D RATHER BE A WIDOW

DEAR RATHER: I know you're hurting, but don't measure every divorce by your own yardstick. Not all divorcees are "rejects"—some divorcees have dumped their husbands.

And yes, I've heard of tour groups and clubs for "singles" of all ages without regard to why they are single.

A word of unsolicited advice: If you don't want to be alone forever, lighten up and get rid of all that anger and bitterness. Group therapy could help you. Please give it a try, and good luck.

DEAR ABBY: While traveling in Europe last summer, I met a girl from New York, and we hit it off so well that we traveled around together for a week.

When she told me her age, I didn't want to scare her away by telling her mine, so I lied about my age to make up the difference. (She's five years older than I am.)

She's planning to visit me in Minnesota soon. Even though it will be embarrassing to tell her the truth regardless of when I tell her, I wonder if I should tell her before she comes to visit me. Or should I wait until she gets here? I'd hate to lose her.

MINNESOTA SWEDE

DEAR SWEDE: Tell her before she makes the trip. If you were sufficiently mature to have passed yourself off as five years older, I doubt that you'll lose her.

...

DEAR ABBY: I'm a mechanic with a problem I've never seen in your column. Please help me before I go nuts.

Have you ever worked with a whistler?

At 10 minutes to 8 in the morning, I can hear whistling as he is coming into the shop. And he whistles for eight hours continuously! No tune—just whistling. I don't know whether to cry, throw something at him, choke him or what. One day he was out sick, and I thought I had died and gone to heaven!

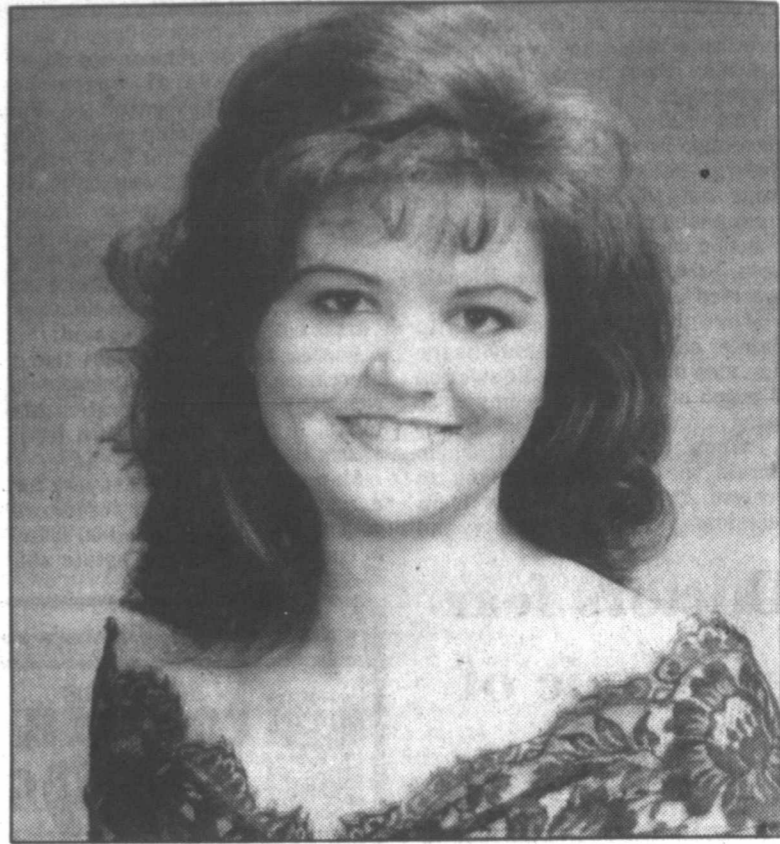

I finally told the boss. He said if I didn't like it, I could quit. (The whistler is his brother-in-law.) I need this job. What do you suggest?

GOING NUTS IN DUNKIRK, N.Y.

DEAR GOING: (1) Complain to the whistler—not the boss. (2) Wear earplugs. (3) Feed him crackers.

Liberty Loan posters exhibited

"Liberty Loan Posters" exhibit is to open at the Carson County Square House Museum in Panhandle on Feb. 3. The exhibit of 25 original posters brings back images that were a part of the daily life in the United States during World War I.

In an era before radio and television, the most striking communication device was the poster. Liberty Loan Posters were an integral part of the campaign to finance America's efforts in the first world war.

"Designs for the posters primarily resulted from a committee of designers and illustrators known as the 'Division of Pictorial Publicity,'" explained P.J. Pronger, museum director. "The committee was formed in 1917 by Charles Dana Gibson who is best known as the creator of the 'Gibson Girl' in magazine illustrations of the day." Pronger also said no member of the committee accepted a fee for his work although the committee met weekly to discuss new designs and new methods to fulfill requests from the different government departments.

The posters are characterized by a strong and unvarying emotional appeal to patriotism and civic duty and were astonishingly successful in promoting the Liberty Loan campaign. Largely through the efforts of the poster committee, the Treasury Department received more than $21.4 billion from the five Liberty Loan campaigns. This money represented more than 66 billion individual subscriptions; more than 1/4 of the United States possessed one or more Liberty Bonds.

The Liberty Loan posters, brought to the Square House through the State Historical Society of North Dakota, is to be exhibited through Feb. 28.

Also on display at the museum are selections from the Chief Wolf Robe collection recently presented to the museum by Dare Locke of White Deer. Wolf Robe was born on the Acoma Indian reservation in New Mexico. He is known as one of the finest Indian silversmiths and costume makers known. Items on display include a ceremonial headdress, beaded leatherwork, selections of Acoma pottery, and many pieces of jewelry. A video tape of Chief Wolf Robe is also available at the museum for public viewing.

A free class on making bobbin lace is scheduled Feb. 19 from 1 p.m. to 4 p.m. at the museum. Anyone interested in attending should contact the curator of education at the museum, 537-3118, by Feb. 11.

Garvey new national MS Society chairman

NEW YORK, N.Y. — Steve Garvey, star first baseman for the San Diego Padres, has been named national campaign chairman of the National Multiple Sclerosis Society.

The National Multiple Sclerosis Society is a 350,000 member organization with chapters in every state. The society has a twofold purpose: to help people who have MS by providing, at the chapter level, a wide range of counseling, therapy and referral services, and to fund international research efforts to find the cure for multiple sclerosis and more effective treatments for those who already have the disease.

Garvey has been an active volunteer for the society for many years. He is vice president of the board of trustees of the Southern California chapter (Los Angeles) area and serves as the society's national sports chairman. He also organizes and sponsors an annual Steve Garvey Sports Classic, a tennis tournament and 10K run featuring show business and sports personalities, that benefits the society.

Multiple sclerosis is a chronic neurological disease of the central nervous system (the brain, spinal cord and optic nerves). It most frequently attacks men and women between the ages of 20 and 40 and is, often called the "disease of young adults."

Home gym most recent development in physical fitness boom

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

First came running shoes, cute jogging outfits and marathon races through the centers of cities. Then it was free weights and a run on health club memberships.

Now there is the home gym, the most recent development in the physical fitness boom. But this may be one of the fastest growing segments of the market. According to the National Sporting Goods Association, Americans spent $960 million in 1983 and were expected to increase it to $1.2 billion in 1984 for home gym equipment.

The craze appears to be part status symbol and part convenience. The advantages of a home fitness center over one found in a local health club include convenience and efficiency. Having a home gym means never having to stand in line to use a popular piece of equipment, says Patrick Netter, author of "High-Tech Fitness." The book describes and rates different kinds of equipment and provides exercise routines geared to different age groups and fitness goals.

According to Netter, who has been setting up home gyms in California for about 10 years, as little as $250 will get someone started with an exercise mat, a jump rope, some free weights and a chinning bar. However, expect to pay $500 or more to acquire a more complete set of equipment, including an aerobic exercise machine such as a stationary bike, a rowing machine and a pulse monitoring device.

Some of Netter's clients have spent thousands of dollars on home fitness centers that rival the facilities of a health club. His own well-stocked home gym is in a room that measures 12 by 18 feet.

A space no larger than 3 feet by 6 feet can accommodate a rowing machine or bike and a floor mat, and a chinning bar. Areas in the home which are popular for home fitness centers include a basement recreation room, a part of the master bedroom, a guest room or sewing room or, at a pinch, part of the living room or dining room. Portable screens can be used to hide the equipment.

If at all possible, Netter suggests choosing a location where the equipment can remain set up and ready for use. Having to pull it out of a closet or from under the bed each time sets up barriers to frequent use. A smaller space that can be left as-is is preferable to a larger space you have to rearrange each time, he says.

Other factors to consider when locating a home gym include good ventilation and access to nearby electric outlets for equipment that runs on electricity.

Most floors will support the weight of any machine you are likely to buy.

If possible, select a flat-weave carpet for the floor. Thick carpets and padding should be avoided because the equipment is likely to make dents that will not disappear when you rearrange the room. Avoid slippery floors and wood floors that could splinter if you plan to do any floor exercises, he said.

If you are doing floor exercises or working out with weights, a mirror is necessary so you can make sure you are doing the exercise properly. Ideally, mirror one wall in the home fitness center. At least, opt for a full length mirror at least 24 inches wide, he suggested.

Though good for body and spirit, exercise is repetitive and can become boring. That's why Netter suggests providing for home entertainment. A personal stereo cassette player with earphones is excellent. The music can energize the exercise without disturbing the rest of the family. Reading racks can be purchased to attach to a stationary bicycle and for the ultimate in luxury a television and videocassette recorder are excellent.

Netter advises careful consideration before purchasing any exercise equipment. Consider your goals, who and how many will be using the equipment. Make sure you understand how to use the equipment. Used improperly, exercise equipment can lead to serious injuries, he said.

Netter said his own home gym included a stationary bike, a rowing machine and treadmill which he had built into the floor, gravity boots and a variety of free weights. His exercise routine includes at least three hour-and-a-half sessions a week.

Here's the Answer

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

Q — I soon will be putting down a concrete patio at the rear of my house. I have worked with concrete before, but this time I want to try something I have never done. I want to make the concrete a grayish color. I have heard there are several ways concrete can be colored. I also have heard that sometimes the result is not as good as expected. Am I correct on both counts and is there some special way I can avoid any trouble?

A — Everything you have heard is correct. But you should not have a problem because you have chosen gray as the color of the concrete. All you have to do is to be sure you purchase the kind of portland cement for your mixture which will produce a gray color. Usually it is marked "gray," but to be sure, confirm it with your dealer. Sometimes, if you do not check the writing on the bag or ask, you will get a white portland cement and sometimes the gray. If you want the concrete to come out white or you intend to add a mineral oxide pigment to give it a color, you need the white portland cement.

Q — My grandfather used to tell me about getting an especially good stain on pine wood with tobacco. I have some staining to do on pine, and I have been wondering about what he told me. Have you ever heard about a tobacco stain?

A — Yes, but never having tried it, I can only tell you what I know without making any recommendation. A plug of chewing tobacco is placed in a one-quart bottle along with a pint of ammonia. Forget about it for 10 days, then take it outside, remove the cover and let the ammonia fumes escape. As I understand it, it is ready to use in a few hours, but the liquid must be strained through cheesecloth or something similar to get rid of any tobacco particles. It can then be used just as a regular stain. Sounds a bit messy, but I knew a man who swore by it. Nevertheless, test it first.

ROLLS TO GIBRALTAR—Gibraltar police struggle Tuesday to keep a crowd of people from a Rolls Royce as it passes through the iron gated border from Spain into British-held Gibraltar. The gate was opened to traffic Tuesday for the first time in 16 years.

Reagan touts economic recovery

WASHINGTON (AP) — In a "told-you-so" message on the economy, President Reagan is reminding Congress about the two-year-old recovery and promises an even better performance if lawmakers and the Federal Reserve Board would only help.

Reagan, in his annual Economic Report of the President sent to Capitol Hill today, takes full credit for "the strongest recovery in 30 years," mentioning the severe recession that preceded it only long enough to blame the Federal Reserve for making things worse than they needed to be.

Other references to the Federal Reserve provide two of the very few new policy suggestions in Reagan's brief message and in the report's 200 pages of economic analysis by his depleted Council of Economic Advisers.

The president himself says the administration expects "to cooperate closely with the Federal Reserve in defining and carrying out a prudent and predictable monetary policy" — a provocative statement in light of other officials' suggestions that the board's independence be curtailed.

William Niskanen, sole remaining member of the council, told reporters the idea of pushing for White House representation on the board — as suggested by new presidential Chief of Staff Donald Regan, among others — has not been considered at high levels of the administration.

Pressed for elaboration,

Court reverses

sheriff's conviction

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — A state appeals court has reversed and remanded for a new trial the 1982 official misconduct conviction of former El Paso County Sheriff Ray Montes.

In a four-page opinion, the appeals court in Eastland said the reversal was based on improper jury instructions given in Montes' 1982 trial.

Montes was convicted Dec. 10, 1982, of a felony count of official misconduct in the misappropriation of a $1,900 cashier's check from the proceeds of a sheriff's abandoned auto auction.

He was sentenced to two years adult probation.

The appeals court dismissed contentions made by Montes in requesting a new trial that insufficient evidence was allowed at his trial.

But the court agreed with Montes' appeal arguments that state District Judge Jerry Woodard improperly instructed the jury by including in his submission of certain points of law.

The opinion written by Associate Justice Raleigh Brown said that by including instructions on the law of parties, which deals with the possibility of other people being found guilty as a result of a trial, Woodard erred.

"Such instruction operated to enlarge (Montes') criminal responsibility and lessen the state's burden," the appeals court said. "Such action constitutes reversible error."

The opinion ordered a new trial for Montes.

However, District Attorney Steve Simmons said Monday his office was preparing a brief asking the state Court of Criminal Appeals in Austin to review the appeals court's decision.

Libya frees four Britons

LONDON (AP) — As a goodwill gesture to the Church of England, Libya today freed four Britons held prisoner in Libya since May 1984 in the aftermath of the Libyan Embassy siege in London, a Libyan government spokesman said in the Libyan capital, Tripoli.

At a news conference televised live in London, the spokesman said the four Britons "henceforth ... are free either to stay in Libya or leave for any other country."

The prisoners, two of whom were never charged, were turned over to Terry Waite, special envoy of Archbishop of Canterbury Robert Runcie, head of the Church of England.

The release, originally scheduled for Monday, had been delayed for 24 hours, apparently because of Libyan anger over a memorial service held in London for the British policeman killed during the Libyan Embassy siege in April 1984.

The four Britons — engineers Malcolm Anderson and Robin Plummer and teachers Michael Berdinner and Alan Russell — appeared at the news conference after the decision was announced.

The government spokesman, Mohammed Alhijazi, announced their release at a hall packed with foreign journalists and brightly lit by television cameras.

Speaking in Arabic with a sentence-by-sentence English translation, the spokesman said the decision to free the men was made by the Basic People's Congresses, Libya's socialist legislative bodies, "as a courtesy and gesture of good will toward the Anglican Church."

Waite, a towering soft-spoken man, had made four trips to Libya since Christmas to secure release of the men.

"Facts, when combined with ideas, constitute the greatest force in the world."
— Carl W. Ackerman

Niskanen said only, "It suggests that we may have something else in mind."

One thing, apparently, is a recommendation in the council's section of the report that the Federal Reserve calculate this year's expansion of the nation's money supply from a different yearend 1984 base than it has used. The change would have the effect of expanding the board's money growth targets this year by $5 billion.

That adjustment, arcane to most Americans, seems intended to forestall Federal Reserve monetary restraint that some officials fear could cramp the recovery.

Reagan mentions the revival often in his report, crediting it to his longstanding policies of keeping taxes down and scaling back the federal government whenever possible.

What the economy needs now, he said, is more of the same medicine, the president said.

Noting that his new budget assumes steady economic growth through the end of the decade, he said, "We know that economic recoveries have not been stable in either duration or magnitude, in part, because monetary and fiscal policies have often been erratic."

His own fiscal policy, despite record deficits, is properly aimed toward less spending and, eventually, a balanced budget, he said. He asks Congress to cut spending, to give him authority to veto items within bills and to pass the balanced-budget constitutional amendment.

Reagan said another goal of his second term will be passage of a "tax simplification" proposal, which he intends to send Congress shortly.

He reiterated his earlier statements that the proposal would be "revenue-neutral" — that is, designed to bring in the same amount of tax revenue as the current tax code. But his wording also seemed to suggest there might be an attempt to sell the plan as a tax-reduction proposal.

At one point, he said, "Personal tax rates should be reduced further to encourage stronger economic growth."

Bankers seeking more business

By JOHN CUNIFF
AP Business Analyst
NEW YORK (AP) — At their annual meeting in Dallas last month a banker was suggested to homebuilders that banks not only lend them construction money but become financial participants in their projects.

The response was mostly negative.

For James Cairns Jr., who made the proposal, the rebuff isn't likely to deter further attempts. Like many of his cohorts, Cairns, this year's president of the American Bankers Association, is eager to expand banking's role.

Banks as builders? Why not, he asks? And why not, he asks, as real estate agents and insurers, too? "What have insurers done to deserve your protection?"

As Cairns and the ABA see it, the banking industry is restrained from playing its proper role in the marketplace. If federal and state restraints were lifted, said Cairns, added competition and big savings for the public would ensue.

He contends that if banks were allowed to operate as life insurance brokers they could save the public $1.3 billion a year in premiums. Already, he points out, "We have the offices, the computers, the analysts."

If bankers had legal authority to act as real estate brokers, he continues, they could save the public more than $3.3 billion a year in commission savings, and he offers this example of his methodology:

In 1983, the public paid about $13.2 billion in real estate brokerage, based on fees that often were in the 5 percent or 6 percent range, with lower rates for higher priced properties.

"Who knows more about you than a banker?" asks Cairns, president of the Peoples National Bank of Washington, a Seattle-based operation with $2.3 billion of assets. "Who do you give more information to?"

He expects a hard fight to get the goals he mentions. "I have to feel we will have some success, but I don't think it will come early or fast," he says.

drive to build a new office for the Pampa Chamber of Commerce. The new offices will be open to the public for meetings, ceremonies and receptions.

Reagan seeks better way to run passenger railroad

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan wants to cut all federal support for Amtrak, but the administration and Amtrak officials can't agree whether that would mean the end of the nation's passenger railroad.

The two sides also seem far apart on whether the government actually would be saving money by sending Amtrak to the scrap yard — a process Amtrak executives claim would be a complex, difficult and costly enterprise.

Created in 1971, Amtrak carries about 20 million passengers a year and relies on federal money for slightly more than 40 percent of its costs, a figure that has been going down each year since 1981.

Nevertheless it is receiving $684 million from the government this year and plans to ask for a similar amount in fiscal 1986, which begins in October.

"There are a number of programs that we suggest canceling entirely," Reagan said. "Some of these, such as Amtrak, could be run much more efficiently in the private sector."

"At a time when deficit reduction is our highest national priority, we can no longer afford to provide railroad subsidies that primarily benefit passengers in the middle and upper income brackets," Transportation Secretary Elizabeth Dole told reporters Monday as she outlined proposed budget cuts.

"Therefore, we will request no funds for subsidizing Amtrak."

But Mrs. Dole insisted that eliminating federal subsidies for Amtrak would not necessarily mean the demise of the passenger railroad, which was created after the country's freight rail lines made it clear they wanted no part in hauling passengers — virtually always at a loss.

"I think there are alternative ways that this will be handled that are likely to preserve a lot of service," Mrs. Dole insisted, suggesting that if rail passenger service is valuable it somehow will survive without money from Washington.

If federal subsidies are eliminated "all intercity rail passenger service in the nation will cease on Sept. 30 of this year," declared a statement issued by Amtrak, referring to the last day of this fiscal year when federal money would run out.

Amtrak spokesman Clifford Black suggested it would be virtually impossible to persuade state legislatures to come up with required subsidies for interstate train service.

Any system would be "extremely fragmented" and face enormous costs with continuous bickering over which state should absorb what portion of the costs, he suggested.

Meanwhile, Amtrak moved quickly to suggest that shutting down Amtrak would be no easy, or cheap, task.

Hard-hit railroad town is jittery about Conrail sale

By BOB DVORCHAK
Associated Press Writer

CONWAY, Pa. (AP) — Townsfolk who once boasted about the world's largest automated railroad yard are suffering the jitters over the proposed sale of Conrail, the government-owned railroad.

Workers fear that a new owner could eliminate jobs or move the yard straddling the Chicago main line, where about 40 freight trains a day are assembled and routed to their destinations.

"Rumors are flying around. We're almost afraid to look at the newspaper. The morale is really bad," said Sandra Brandenburg, the daughter of a railroad engineer and secretary of the borough of 3,000 residents about 25 miles northwest of Pittsburgh.

"Everybody in town is dependent on that railroad," said Angie Altier, who has seen business slump at her Conway Hotel, Bar and Restaurant across from the sprawling works. "If they move it, we're done. The whole town's done."

The government wants to sell its 85 percent interest in Conrail, formed from six bankrupt Northeast railroads by Congress in 1976 as a freight hauler serving 15 states as far west as Missouri. The region was devoid of rail service when the Penn Central Railroad, the largest carrier in the group, went bankrupt.

Conrail has turned a profit for the past four years, and earnings are expected to reach $500 million for 1984. But its future is unclear:

the sale faces a likely congressional battle.

The 16 unions representing 35,000 Conrail workers want it sold to Alleghany Corp., a New York holding company. Private bids were also made by the Norfolk Southern Railroad and a group headed by hotel owner J. Willard Marriott.

U.S. Rep. Robert Edgar, D-Pa., has introduced legislation for a public stock offering under a plan modeled on a proposal by Conrail management.

U.S. Secretary of Transportation Elizabeth Dole, who is reported to favor the Norfolk Southern bid, is expected to announce her recommendation soon.

Norfolk Southern, a Midwestern competitor of Conrail, has classification yards that do the same work Conway does. The Conrail workers here worry that Norfolk Southern's ownership

Bill would reward vocational teachers

AUSTIN (AP) — A Panhandle senator filed a bill Monday that he said would "clear up one of the big injustices" of the educational reform package passed in the summer special session of the Legislature.

Sen. Bill Sarpalius said his bill would allow vocational teachers who lack a college degree to join others in advancing on the "career-ladder" that rewards teachers for experience and training.

would eliminate their yard.

The proposals dominate the shop talk at Conway, a four-mile-long yard that has a maze of more than 100 tracks laid side by side. The tracks occupy one-third of the borough's land.

Conrail employs an estimated 1,150 workers at Conway, down from a peak of 2,200 in 1976.

"We're worried about our jobs. There's a lot of anxiety. We're all waiting to see what happens," said Bill Brandenburg, 54, who with 37 years invested at the yard is eight years shy of a pension.

"I think everybody just wants to know what's going to happen. We wish the speculation would end so you'd know if you have a job or if you have to relocate," said Brandenburg, a signalman and the father of four. "If they're going to sell it, sell it and get it over with."

Conway, which straddles the Chicago main line, acts as a funnel for much of Conrail's east-west traffic. Grain, autos, beer, tires, produce and iron ore head east while seafood, coal, steel, thumbtacks and gasoline are shipped west.

The yard is still one of the biggest and busiest in the Conrail system, but it lost its distinction as the world's largest automated or "pushbutton" railroad yard several years ago.

The decline of the yard has rippled through the community. Taxes on wages are one-third of what they used to be, and business in Mrs. Altier's bar is down 50 percent.

Mexican consul guards the rights of illegal immigrants

AUSTIN (AP) — Victor Romero-Lopetequi, the Mexican consul in Austin, is a public official with a nearly invisible constituency.

Romero-Lopetequi, 64, is the legal representative of what he estimates are 35,000 to 40,000 citizens of Mexico who live in Austin or in small towns and on farms in the more than 25 Central Texas counties in his consular district.

Most of his countrymen have entered the United States illegally, Romero-Lopetequi says, and he knows he will meet only a fraction of them — usually under the worst circumstances.

The consul's modest office in Austin is where Romero-Lopetequi and four chancellors perform the routine governmental functions needed when citizens of one country live in another.

The office issues new Mexican passports and renews old ones, arranges student visas for citizens of Mexico studying in Central Texas colleges, registers births and deaths, and authenticates documents so that they are valid in Mexico.

Romero-Lopetequi and his staff, like their American counterparts in Mexican cities, often are called when citizens are in trouble. Under a 1943 treaty between the United States and Mexico, the consulate is to be notified when a citizen of Mexico is detained in a U.S. jail.

Romero-Lopetequi often learns the identity of a citizen upon his death. The Travis County medical examiner's office often requests the help of the consulate in notifying next of kin in Mexico. The consulate performed that chore 26 times in 1984.

Much of the consulate's time is devoted to what Romero-Lopetequi calls protection services. Romero-Lopetequi and his staff say they want to ensure that, regardless of immigration status, citizens of Mexico are treated fairly under Texas law.

"It could be a worker's compensation case, an auto accident. It could be a person in jail, an immigration matter, a victim of a crime, or the perpetrator of the crime. We make sure he gets the legal representation that's accorded him by law, to be treated equally like any American," Romero-Lopetequi said.

In civil and criminal matters, the consul encourages citizens of Mexico to hire a lawyer and refers those without an attorney to two Austin lawyers the consul has used in the past.

Romero-Lopetequi has been the Mexican consul in Austin since 1979. The post is the latest in a diplomatic career that began in 1947 with Romero-Lopetequi's first assignment at a Mexican consulate in Oklahoma City.

Romero-Lopetequi said that most employers in Texas and other states he has worked in are fair to Mexican workers, but many will take advantage of the worker's illegal status.

Romero-Lopetequi cited a case in Coleman County, a rural area west of Waco. Dozens of workers complained to the consular office that they had been cheated by a labor contractor.

Most of the workers, hired to build fences and do other agricultural work, were not paid, Romero-Lopetequi said. His office was unable to recover the funds after contacting Diaz, and referred the case to the district attorney's office.

This case was one that the Mexican Consulate brought to my attention, and as a result there have been indictment returned and we are doing all we can to prosecute the matter.

Harvesters welcome third-ranked Bulldogs tonight

Pampa continues its quest for a playoff spot tonight when the Harvesters welcome first-place Borger in District 1-4A basketball action.

With three games left, Pampa has a 6-3 record and has sole possession of third place after last Friday night's 61-54 win over Lubbock Estacado.

Borger has a blemished 8-0 district record with four games left to play.

"We're just going to go out and play the best game we can play," said Pampa coach Garland Nichols. "I know it's hard to do, but I told the kids to go out and play like it was just another game. That it's not a matter of life or death."

However, Pampa and Borger usually play like it's a life or death struggle. Borger downed Pampa in its first meeting back on Jan. 7 in a game that was a lot closer than the final 56-44 score indicated.

Borger never trailed after running off 10 straight points in the first quarter, but Pampa cut the lead to three points seven times in the second half before the Harvesters had to start fouling as time was running out. The Bulldogs went to the foul line 21 times in the fourth quarter, hitting 10 shots.

Anthony Jones, a 6-5 senior, topped Borger in scoring with 23 points while Terry Whitcher added 15.

Pampa's Rodney Young and Petey Davis had 15 and 14 points respectively against the Bulldogs.

"We had nine turnovers in that first quarter, and that's what really hurt us," Nichols said. "We're going to try not to get into a running game with them and try to be more selective with our shots this time out."

Pampa shot only 34 percent (16-47) in that first meeting, but Borger didn't do much better...42.5 percent on 20 of 47 attempts. Pampa had only one more turnover (14-13) than Borger, but the Bulldogs had a big 40-29 rebounding edge.

"We've got to work on the rebounding, especially on the free throw rebounds," Nichols said. "They hurt us in that area. We're not going to try any fancy stuff tonight. We're just going to go out and play as hard as we can."

Pampa enters tonight's 7:30 p.m. clash at McNeely Fieldhouse with an overall 18-8 record. Borger is 22-1 overall and currently ranked third in the latest Class 4A state rankings. The Bulldogs' only loss was to Cleburne, currently ranked No. 10 with a 22-4 record.

Nichols said 160 tickets still remain for tonight's game and can be purchased at the high school athletic office between 8 a.m. and 4 p.m. today.

Tickets not purchased at the athletic office will go on sale at the gym at 5 p.m.

Pampa's Lady Harvesters close the season tonight against Borger and can clinch third place with a victory. That girls' game tips off at 6 p.m.

Pampa won over Borger, 49-34, in the first game played.

Redmen rally past Seton Hall

By The Associated Press
For a half, it seemed as if No. 1 St. John's was playing out of uniform.

The guys in the white shirts hit 59 percent of their shots in building a 42-30 halftime edge in Monday night's Big East basketball game. But the guys in white represented not St. John's but Seton Hall, loser of nine previous games.

Order was quickly restored in the second half, however, and St. John's rolled to an 87-76 triumph.

"Seton Hall dominated the first half, but in the second half we kept them to one shot," said St. John's All-American guard Chris Mullin, who scored 20 of his 26 points after intermission. "We wanted to get it down to six with 10 minutes left in the half. We did it a little quicker than that" in breezing to victory No. 18 in 19 games.

Even though his club was down 12 points to a team that had lost 11 of 20 games, St. John's Coach Lou Carnesecca spared the rod at halftime.

"I said, 'Look, I'm not going to yell at you because you know how poorly you are playing,'" he said.

No. 16 Oregon State was faced with the same predicament but didn't have a Mullin to save the day. The Beavers rallied from a 15-point deficit into a tie, but Larry Friend's off-balance shot at the buzzer gave Southern California a 60-58 Pac-10 Conference victory.

It appeared that Southern California's rise into first place in the Pac-10 would be easy after the Trojans rolled to a 40-25 lead over Oregon State early in the second half.

But the Beavers went on a 20-2 roll over the next six minutes to reclaim the lead. Southern Cal regrouped, slowed down the pace and got a chance at the winning points and 11 assists as Duke ran its record to 16-3. The Blue Devils roared to a 43-19 halftime edge and strolled home.

Duke "just has better athletes and things started to snowball," said Harvard guard Bob Ferry, who scored 19 points. "They hurt us on the boards. They just jumped right over us."

In other games, it was Navy 83, Fairleigh Dickinson 74; Pittsburgh 77, Duquesne 61; Rutgers 96, Monmouth 74; St. Bonaventure 64, Penn State 59; Florida 86, Florida State 79; Marshall 90, Furman 62; Mississippi 60, Vanderbilt 55; South Carolina 90, Georgia State 66; Virginia 51, George Washington 42; Virginia Tech 96, Southern Mississippi 80; Creighton 87, West Texas State 63; St. Louis 80, Oklahoma City 51; Fullerton State 52, Fresno State 51; and San Jose State 76, Pacific 46.

In more routine outings, No. 5 Duke smashed Harvard 82-53, No. 13 Kansas ripped Colorado 88-69 in the Big Eight, No. 14 Louisiana Tech took a 73-63 Southland Conference game from Northeast Louisiana, and No. 20 Maryland topped Old Dominion 87-75.

Mark Alarie scored 18 points and Johnny Dawkins contributed 16

Flutie protected against USFL foldup

NEW YORK (AP) — Heisman Trophy winner Doug Flutie, armed with one of the most lucrative contracts in sports history, doesn't have to worry about the solvency of the United States Football League.

Calling the Boston College All-American's $7-million contract with the New Jersey Generals "the most difficult one I've ever done," sports agent Bob Woolf said Monday night that Flutie is protected against all contingencies.

The five-year contract covers everything from injuries to a possible merger between the USFL and the National Football League, Woolf said. "We're in pretty good shape. Every provision has been covered as to every eventuality."

The document was 50 pages long and attorneys for the two sides took 10 days to hammer out the final details.

"Because of the newness of the league and all the contingencies that could happen, I had to make sure that Doug was protected," the Boston-based attorney explained. Though he refused to divulge terms of the contract, Woolf admitted speculation about its length and value was "quite accurate."

Woolf, who has negotiated more than 2,000 sports contracts, said the agreement he reached with Generals' owner Donald Trump was "a contract that is deserving of a Doug Flutie. I've always said that it's something that should be in the vicinity of a Herschel Walker or a Steve Young and that's what it is."

Young, who preceded Flutie as the All-American quarterback, for Brigham Young in 1983, signed last year a contract said to be worth $40 million over 43 years with the Los Angeles Express. Walker, the 1982 Heisman Trophy-winning running back from Georgia, signed in 1983 a four-year contract with the Generals for an estimated $6 million.

With Walker, Mike Rozier and Flutie, who could not be reached Monday night for comment, the USFL now has the last three Heisman winners under contract. Rozier, an All-American at Nebraska, played for the now-defunct Pittsburgh Maulers last season. He is now with the Jacksonville Bulls.

Woolf, whose clients include some of the nation's top professional athletes, said Flutie's contract could be the most significant with which he had ever been involved. "It could be very historic. It could be like Joe Namath coming to the American Football League."

Namath's signing by the New York Jets 20 years ago was credited with giving the AFL the credibility that led to an eventual merger with the National Football League.

Flutie, who at 5-foot-9 3/4 is thought by some to be too short to be effective in pro football, was flying today to the club's training camp in Orlando, Fla.

Top Rank Inc. boxing rated ESPN favorite

By ED SCHUYLER JR.
AP Sports Writer

Every Thursday night fight fans can pretend their living rooms are St. Nicholas Arena or Ridgewood Grove in New York, the Hollywood Legion in California or the Chicago's Aragon Ball Room.

That is, they can if they subscribe to ESPN, the fight club of the airways.

Through Jan. 31, ESPN has televised 250 consecutive Top Rank Boxing shows on Thursday nights.

Since ESPN began the series in association with Bob Arum's Top Rank Inc., it has been the network's highest-rated year-round series. Some seasonal sports, such as college football, which ranks as ESPN's highest-rated series ever, occasionally will rate higher, but boxing heads the list for year-long consistency.

Included in the Top Rank series is the ESPN Boxing Tournament, which also began in 1980 when champions in five different weight classes were crowned. The 1985 tournament, already under way, began with eight fighters in each of 10 divisions. The titles are not sanctioned by any boxing governing body, but are geared to generate interest in the Thursday shows. At the end of each calendar year, all titles are vacated for the following year's tournament.

"The Top Rank Series is designed explicitly to develop young fighters," said Steven M. Bornstein, vice president, programming.

Television interest always means employment for more fighters, but it also means a constant need for fresh faces, and this often produces mismatches.

By concentrating on developing fighters rather than on champions or stars, ESPN can avoid mismatches, although not entirely.

Two of the most active commissions in boxing are in New Jersey and Nevada, and a big majority of ESPN shows occur in those two states.

NBA roundup

Pistons snap Bucks' 11-game win streak

To win in overtime, a team must first get there, said Detroit center Bill Laimbeer in explaining how a third-period resurgence helped the Pistons snap Milwaukee's 11-game National Basketball Association winning streak.

"We weren't hitting the boards in the first half and that was hurting us on offense," said Laimbeer. "But we started getting more aggressive in the third quarter and that turned the game around for us."

The 113-111 overtime defeat of the Bucks on Monday night brought the Pistons within three games of Milwaukee in the Central Division, which made the game doubly important, according to Laimbeer.

"We could have gone five games down. Instead, it was a two-game swing for us," said Laimbeer, who scored 32 points and grabbed 17 rebounds.

In other NBA action, it was Cleveland 121, Washington 112; Philadelphia 106, Atlanta 92; San Antonio 114, Golden State 109 in overtime; and the Los Angeles Clippers 115, Indiana 96.

Milwaukee led 54-50 at halftime, but Detroit's renewed strength on the boards brought the Pistons an 87-78 advantage early in the final quarter.

Milwaukee did some regrouping of its own, scoring the next 12 points to take a three-point lead. It was close the rest of the way, with Terry Cummings' basket with five seconds remaining drawing the Bucks into a 103-103 tie and forcing the extra period.

Laimbeer scored the first four points in overtime and, after Milwaukee tied it at 111-111, Laimbeer hit the winning basket with 42 seconds to play.

John Long had 22 points and Terry Tyler 17 for the Pistons. Paul Pressey had 27, Cummings 26 and Sidney Moncrief 26 for Milwaukee.

Cavs 121, Bullets 112
John Bagley scored 35 points, his career high, as Cleveland took charge in the first half against the outmanned Bullets. Bagley hit nine of 10 first-half field goal attempts as the Cavaliers built a 22-point lead in the second quarter and Cleveland didn't allow the Bullets to get closer than eight the rest of the way.

Washington, playing without injured starters Jeff Ruland and Cliff Robinson, got a career-high 34 points from guard Jeff Malone and 23 points from Greg Ballard.

76ers 106, Hawks 92
Julius Erving scored 23 points for Philadelphia to move into fourth place on pro basketball's all-time scoring list. Erving's career total of 27,113 moved him one point ahead of Denver's Dan Issel, who has announced his retirement at the end of the season.

The 76ers scored the first five points of the game and never looked back. Philadelphia led 31-21 after one quarter, 57-44 at the half and enjoyed a 21-point bulge early in the fourth period.

Atlanta was led by Dominique Wilkins' 25 points.

Spurs 114, Warriors 109
San Antonio led 63-47 at halftime and enjoyed a 25-point lead in the third period, but needed an overtime before subduing the slumping Warriors.

George Gervin scored 27 points, including five in the extra period, and Artis Gilmore added 25 as San Antonio handed Golden State its 17th loss in 18 games.

Golden State was paced Eric "Sleepy" Floyd with 27 points and Jerome Whitehead had 19.

TCU's Nutt honored

DALLAS (AP) — Veteran backcourt performer Dennis Nutt of Texas Christian, who scored 28 points to lead his team over Houston last week, was honored Monday as Southwest Conference Player of the Week.

TCU's 85-80 victory snapped the Cougars' 43-game homecourt winning streak and marked the Frogs' first triumph in Houston's Hofheinz Pavilion. Nutt equaled his season high, firing in 22 of his 28 points in the second half. For the game, he was 12 of 20 from the field and flawless at the free-throw line on four attempts.

Earlier in the week at Lubbock, Nutt was instrumental in the Frogs' 48-47 victory over Texas Tech, pouring in 17 points.

Student loan reductions worrying educators

WASHINGTON (AP) — College leaders say middle-class families, already strapped by the costs of higher education, could be shut out of many campuses by President Reagan's plan to deny loans and grants to more than 1 million students.

But Gary L. Jones, the acting secretary of education, predicted Monday the cuts would have no effect on college enrollment, which has stayed at a near record high of 12.5 million despite previous Reagan aid cuts.

Jones said administration officials, in aiming most of the cuts at middle- and upper-income families, assumed "that they always have had extra money at home, and the parents have chosen to buy a car or make another form of investment as opposed to applying it to their students' education."

But leaders of the major higher education associations, who held a news conference outside the Education Department after its budget briefing, charged that cuts would wreak havoc.

John D. Phillips, president of the National Association of Independent Colleges and Universities, said, "It is unfair, it's unconscionable for the administration to accuse the parents of this country of failing to make their proper contribution to their children's education."

"We think in one fell swoop the Reagan budget makes the nation at risk," said Dale Parnell, president of the American Association of Community and Junior Colleges, in a play on the title of the 1983 Reagan administration advisory report, "A Nation at Risk," that decried mediocrity in U.S. schools.

The cuts, starting with the 1986-87 academic year, would mean that 1,027,000 of the current 5.3 million student aid recipients would get no help from Washington.

Reagan asked Congress to impose a $4,000-per-student annual cap on the total grants, loans and work-study funds; deny Guaranteed Student Loans to those with family incomes above $32,500; and bar those with family incomes above $25,000 from Pell Grants, Work-Study jobs and National Direct Student Loans.

Also, the Pell Grant allocation formula would be adjusted so that 85 percent of the money would go to students with family incomes under $12,000. Some 808,000 of the 2.8 million current recipients would be knocked out.

The administration would expand a backup loan program called PLUS, under which students or parents could borrow up to $4,000 a year at higher rates, with payments starting while the student is still in college.

Phillips predicted banks would not make the loans. The administration is also asking Congress to cut the banks' special allowances.

Reagan targeted higher education for most of the cuts in the Education budget. Its outlays would drop from $17.4 billion to $16.9 billion in 1986, and its budget authority would dive from $18.4 billion to $15.5 billion.

3 million birds lost in collapse of ice-laden chicken houses

By The Associated Press

The collapse of ice-laden coops housing more than three million chickens has crippled Alabama's $800 million poultry industry, while in Mississippi the loss of hundreds of thousands of birds has wiped out 60 percent of their stocks, farmers say.

National Guardsmen were helping water and feed chickens in five northwest Alabama counties after ice buildup from a weekend storm destroyed 300 to 400 houses, burying more than three million birds.

"It may have been more. The companies that own the birds are still counting," Holley Midgely, a spokesman for the Alabama Farm Bureau, said Monday. "There's no telling what the final figure might be."

Officials in both states said it was too early to determine the impact the loss of the chickens would have at the supermarket.

Chicken house roofs in the northwest Alabama counties of Lauderdale, Colbert, Franklin, Lawrence and Winston began collapsing after a severe winter storm invaded the state Friday night with a heavy coat of ice.

Midgely said chicken farming is an $800 million a year industry in Alabama.

Maj. Jack Underwood, director of National Guard assistance operations, said little could be done to help prevent cave-ins. National Guardsmen were helping to feed and water birds at about 116 chicken houses, he said.

"The only way really to prevent cave-ins is to get on the roof and break off the ice," Underwood said. "But they probably couldn't take the extra weight and we don't want to jeopardize the chickens further."

Across the border in Mississippi, the collapse of chicken houses has caused an estimated $5 million in damage to the structures alone, excluding the loss of many of the 750,000 chickens inside, said Conrad Twitty, Lee County extension agent.

Twitty estimated that 40 to 50 chicken farmers were involved, with losses of $40,000 to $50,000 for each building damaged in the weekend storm that left up to two inches of solid ice on the coops.

Several chicken farmers in Lee and Itawamba counties estimated losses of as many as 70,000 to 80,000 chickens each. Officials estimated losses to 60 percent of the industry's crop.

About 105 chicken houses, capable of housing 1,858,200 broilers, breeder pullets and breeder hens in the Tupelo area, were damaged, said James Williams, production manager for Marshall Durbin Processing.

However, with salvage efforts just beginning, he said he was unable to estimate how many of those chickens died.

"We haven't been there before," he said Monday.

Wayne Burleson of Lee County said the disaster has destroyed the most productive and profitable year he has experienced in his 16 years as a chicken farmer.

Department complying with lawsuit orders

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Department of Mental Health and Mental Retardation is progressing favorably with federal court rulings which called for an upgrading of the department, the department's commissioner says.

MHMR Commissioner Gary Miller told a Senate subcommittee Monday the court orders have "placed extreme pressures on the department."

"We have on occasion been found to be in non-compliance with provisions of the settlement when we believe and still believe that not only were we in compliance but we exceeded in the compliance," Miller said.

Differing interpretations of the settlements in two lawsuits brought by patients of state institutions were to blame, he said.

"We need more dollars to do the job, just to provide quality care for the people we have," Miller said. He said the department has made advances.

The department currently has a $590 million budget to run eight state hospitals, 13 state schools, 31 community mental health centers and other programs with a total of 25,900 employees.

Fannin County labels ready for Texas wines

IVANHOE, Texas (AP) — Reims, Bourgogne, Wolfe City, Collinsville, Beaune, Ivanhoe — to aficionados of fine wines, something about these names doesn't fit. Sure, it's easy to pick the three French wine-producing cities, but why are the names of three North Texas towns included in the list?

If the folks at Texas Vineyards succeed, don't be surprised to see fine wines bearing a Fannin County label. The wine industry is no longer a Texas curiosity — it now holds enormous economic potential for North Texas farmers.

"There's been so much talk about the wine industry in Texas," says Darroll Martin, president of Texas Vineyards. "So many feel it is a sleeping giant getting ready to explode."

Experts expect the number of Texas acres planted in grapes to double by 1995, and the number of gallons produced last year to more than double for next year. Texas' 13 commercial wineries should ferment close to 350,000 gallons in 1985.

The American interest in enology (the art of wines and winemaking) is not confined to Texas. California and New York though. Wineries have sprouted in Washington, Arkansas, Missouri and particularly in New Mexico. For Texas, current interest began around 1976 when agriculture officials with the University of Texas at Austin were looking for a revenue-generating crop for the University's lands in West Texas.

Although oil is the chief source of revenue, another cash crop was sought that wouldn't deplete the declining water table. The hardy grapevine can thrive with an efficient drip watering system.

Vines send root systems as deep as 35 feet into the earth and grow in diverse soils. Martin says not one of these plants succumbed to the devastating freeze of 1983.

Winemaking, though, is not new phenomenon to Texas. Many people made wine from wild grapes, but as early as 1878, T.V. Munson of Denison pioneered scientific approaches to wine-making. Among wild grapes like the Post-Oak and Mustang, Munson started two acres in 1878 and soon expanded his vineyards to hold a great many varieties.

Today more than 350 varieties are credited to Munson, and he was also instrumental in developing more drought- and disease-resistant strains that saved many European producers in lean years.

An outbreak of phylloxera, a root disease, almost devastated French vineyards until Munson and others sent harder plants down the Red River and the Mississippi on barges to be shipped across the ocean. He was decorated by the French government for his work.

Today a 10-year-old viticulture program has been established at Grayson County Junior College in memory of Munson. Director of the program, Roy Renfro, said the college owns five planted acres of grapes and has planned four seminars for this spring and fall.

"We're trying to establish a regular viticulture center at the college so local growers will have a place to go. We are already playing an integral part in Texas. We've had great cooperation with the University of Texas in Austin and Texas A&M University," Renfro said.

Texas Vineyards began in 1982 when Martin retired after 30 years of service for a New York life insurance company. A native of Mission, Martin returned to Texas and chose the Ivanhoe area simply because he liked the land. After planting a few vines, Martin became acquainted with another new grower in the area, Dr. James Bledsoe.

"From wine what sudden friendship springs," as English poet John Gay was fond of saying.

"I put in some grapevines but I really didn't know what I was going to do with them or what kind of vines I wanted. We went to the Texas Grape Growers Convention in Lubbock in 1983 and met some other people who had the same idea we had," Martin said.

"We had to find something to do with our grapes, so we decided to start a little winery, with no idea how successful we would be."

Two years later, Texas Vineyards was established and $400,000 was spent on a facility and equipment such as a wine press, a crusher-destemmer, fermenting tanks and bottlers. This year marks the first bottle of wine produced by the corporation, and many more are being planned for 1985.

Approximately 5,100 gallons will be the final total for Texas Vineyard's initial contribution to the commercial wine market. Nearly 80 acres are cultivated in grapes by the 33 stockholders of the company. Much of their grapes and juice for wine is still being brought in from the Lubbock and Midland areas.

Of locally grown grapes, 67 cases of Muscata d'Canelli were produced — a flowery, light-tasting, semi-sweet white wine. The Muscat Canelli grape is a vinifera variety, which means it is a common European grape that has been grown for hundreds of years.

In America, Martin points out, wines are generally named after the grape used to make the wine, while in France the vintages are labeled after the area or chateau where the grapes are grown.

Martin says this variety "has a very dominant nose to it. It's good with cheese and crackers, fish or chicken."

In the next two years, Texas Vineyards will not only offer the Muscata d'Canelli, but will make their version of a Cabernet Sauvignon, French Columbar, Pinot Noir, Chenin Blanc and Chardonnay. And next year, the Fannin County wines will be available from local wine dealers and liquor stores.

To make the best wine possible from the available grapes, Martin says they have hired an enologist from the Napa Valley in California, Bruce Rector. Rector received his enology degree from the University of California at Davis and has taught viticulture at the Napa School of Cellaring. Martin laughs when he recalls walking through liquor stores with Rector.

"When you walk through a liquor shop with him, he'll point to a bottle of wine and say, 'This guy was in my class, that guy was a student of mine.' He is very well respected."

Rector will divide his time between working at the vineyards and teaching classes at Grayson County College.

While processing the grapes will be Rector's major responsibility, the other growers affiliated with the Texas Vineyards will grow the fruit.

"There's more than one way to open an IRA."
