Jobless rate stuck at 7.3

WASHINGTON (AP) — Civilian unemployment was stuck at 7.3 percent in June for the fifth consecutive month, the Labor Department reported today, the longest period the jobless rate has remained at the same level in more than 15 years.

The overall civilian unemployment rate would have gone up significantly if it had not been for the fact that nearly 600,000 people, mostly teen-agers, dropped out of the labor force last month. That offset generally stagnant job growth in a continued deterioration in the manufacturing sector, the Bureau of Labor Statistics figures showed.

The service sector continued to add employment in June with 85,000 new jobs.

But total employment, which had hit a record 106.96 million in May, fell to 106.37 million in June. Although total employment plunged by nearly 600,000, the ranks of those officially unemployed held steady at 8.4 million for the fifth consecutive month because of the sharp dropoff in the number of people looking for work. These factors, including the less-than-expected surge of youthful job-seekers, combined to produce the net overall seasonally adjusted civilian rate of 7.3

percent. The fifth consecutive month of standstill unemployment was the longest such streak since joblessness was frozen at 3.4 percent of the labor force from the fall of 1968 to the spring of 1969.

An alternate unemployment rate, which combined the 114.7-million-member civilian labor force with the 1.7-million-member armed forces contingent stationed in the United States, likewise remained unchanged last month, at 7.2 percent.

In testimony prepared for delivery before the Joint Economic Committee today, Janet L. Norwood, the commissioner of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, said, "The household survey data for June are especially difficult to interpret because of fairly wide swings each year in the number as well as the timing of young people who leave school and enter the labor market."

"I believe that we will have a better understanding of the summer labor market developments when data for July become available next month," she added.

Manufacturing employment declined by 45,000 from May to June.

New drilling safety proposal shelved

WASHINGTON (AP) — Top Occupational Safety and Health Administration officials failed to defend a proposed oil and gas drilling safety rule, resulting in regulatory rulemaking delays of a year or two, Labor Department sources say.

The proposal is supposed to protect 95,000 workers in the oil and gas drilling and servicing industry, which is one of the most hazardous of all occupations, according to the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics.

The OSHA rebuttal was shelved after the White House Office of Management and Budget sided with the International Association of Drilling Contractors and attacked the safety proposal as too costly to industry, according to the sources and public documents.

IADC continued its attack on the rule after winning the current round of delays, and two weeks ago OMB tried to direct the Labor Department to kill OSHA's proposal completely, the sources said.

It took the intervention of career civil servants at OSHA and Michael Baroody, a newly appointed top aide to Labor Secretary

William Brock, to keep the safety rule on track, said the sources, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

The proposal, five years in the making, sets out an array of protective measures for workers, including requirements for handling pipe and other drilling equipment, training employees and planning for medical emergencies.

OSHA has estimated the cost of the rule to industry at $24 million a year. IADC has estimated the cost at $588 million a year.

Last Oct. 10, in a letter quoting the drillers' cost figures, OMB directed the Labor Department to reassess its own cost estimates and said that the OSHA proposal contained "serious flaws."

The proposal, OMB said, should be considered a major rulemaking, costing industry more than $100 million a year.

Nearly a dozen Labor Department officials and OSHA staffers helped draft a written response, which concluded that the drillers' figures on the rule's costs to industry were inflated by hundreds of millions of dollars.

But OSHA's rebuttal needed OSHA chief

Robert A. Rowland's approval before becoming part of the public record in the rulemaking case.

The response sat in the offices of Rowland's staff most of last winter. Rowland never approved the rebuttal and it has never been issued.

According to sources in the department, OSHA officials told their staff in February that the agency had delayed too long to file a response and that the Labor Department would have to acquiesce to OMB's requests.

The officials told their staff that the proposal would be considered a major rulemaking and would be re-proposed — completely re-written with additional public hearings.

Rowland said through a spokesman, Jack McDavitt, that he didn't recall OMB's letter. McDavitt said that when Rowland late last month asked another OSHA official about the matter, the official said the agency had never sent a response.

Rowland, a former campaign fund-raiser in Texas for President Reagan, owns at least $130,000 in petroleum industry stocks.

Independence Day gains new favor

By MARK BERNIS
Associated Press Writer

Millions of Americans hit the beaches, belled up to backyard barbecues and watched spectacular fireworks displays as the nation celebrated its 209th birthday with a renewed appreciation for Independence Day triggered by the freeing of the 39 hostages held in Beirut.

For many of the former TWA Flight 847 hostages, the Fourth of July was a day for town parades, backyard picnics and quiet times with family.

Vice President George Bush, after leading a parade in Bristol, N.H., offered a message for the seven Americans who remain captives in Lebanon.

"The message is we are going to keep working diligently doing absolutely everything we can until you're free," Bush said.

A black convertible with an empty back seat symbolized the seven kidnap victims in the 81st Fourth of July parade in Huntington Beach, Calif., home of David Jacobsen, one of the remaining hostages.

A million people flocked to Southern California beaches to enjoy the sea and surf, according to county lifeguard spokesman Don Rohrer.

But fireworks displays were canceled in parts of California where fires raged out of control after charring thousands of tinder-dry acres and destroying more than 140 homes.

Thousands of people lined New York City's East River for one fireworks display and watched from New York and New Jersey as bursts filled the sky over the Statue of Liberty, which is closed for renovation.

It was one of hundreds of pyrotechnic demonstrations that drew Americans celebrating 209 years of independence.

Crowds gathered early at the Mall between the Washington Monument and the Capitol in Washington, with 550,000 flocking to shows featuring performers from Leonard Bernstein to Mr. T and the Beach Boys, who have been a fixture at Washington's Independence Day fetes in recent years.

Later, a fireworks display illuminated the Washington Monument.

President Reagan's message to the nation asked citizens to "pray for God's blessing and his help in safeguarding the precious legacy of the Declaration of Independence."

He and Mrs. Reagan spent the day quietly in the White House with a small group of friends invited for dinner.

Former hostages George Lazansky and his wife, Joann, of Algonquin, Ill., and Isabelle Carpio of Aurora, Ill., spent the day at Wrigley Field in Chicago, where Lazansky tossed out the first ball in the Cubs' game with the Giants.

Lazansky, whose Cubs cap was taken by terrorists aboard the hijacked flight, got a new cap and a standing ovation.

TWA 847 pilot John Testrake spent part of the day in a barber's chair. He felt "like a woolly bear" in captivity, his son, John, said.

OPEC tries to stop drop in oil prices

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — Oil ministers from 13 OPEC member nations met today in a downtown Vienna hotel in yet another effort to find a new pricing formula that would avert a further drop in oil prices.

The ministers convened without their aides, who usually participate in Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries' meetings from the outset. The aides were expected to join the conference later in the day.

Analysts have said the conference may turned members to cut production to reduce the glut on the world market and make their crude competitive with that produced by non-OPEC members, such as Britain.

But United Arab Emirates oil minister Mana Saeed Oteiba said Thursday that the OPEC ministers would seek a different answer this time.

"We are suggesting a new way. This time we are not talking about prices or production," Oteiba told reporters.

"We are talking about income, constant income," he said following a meeting of the six-member OPEC monitoring committee.

Oteiba, who chairs the committee, would not elaborate on the steps it would propose to the full ministerial conference.

Ahmed Zaki Yamani, the influential Saudi Arabian oil minister, said on arrival in Vienna Thursday that his country would "defend prices."

Asked if he would consider a change in production limits, Yamani replied: "That's another matter."

Laredo hostage can't get back to work soon enough

LAREDO, Texas (AP) — Vicente Garza could not get to work soon enough.

Twelve hours after arriving in this South Texas city, the man who had been held captive for more than two weeks in Beirut was busy at work.

"This is business every morning whenever I'm here in Laredo," Garza told a news conference Thursday. "I make my rounds. I made them this morning. In fact, I wanted to make sure I wouldn't forget about my job."

Garza is a developer and president of Associated Cos., which operates several retail and grocery stores in South Texas.

Garza and his son-in-law, Robert Trautmann Jr., were among 39 Americans held in Beirut since the hijacking of a Trans World Airlines jet over the Mediterranean on June 14. They were released earlier this week and Trautmann and Garza arrived in Laredo on Wednesday night.

A crowd of about 600 greeted the pair as they stepped off the plane into a pouring rain and talked briefly to reporters.

At the news conference at a shopping mall on Thursday, Trautmann, also a developer, said he supported the Reagan administration's handling of their captivity, did not fully agree with statements made by a hostage spokesman and does not favor military retaliation.

Asked how he would unwind, Trautmann said, "Just really do what I did before I took a vacation. Just fall back in a daily routine, getting up, going to work and trying to stay busy, trying trying to forget about it."

"But I don't think I'll ever forget it," he said.

Both Garza and Trautmann expressed concern for the seven remaining American hostages in Beirut and urged their quick release.

About 200 people watched as the two men, frequently smiling, told of their captivity.

Garza said he was lucky that his group was housed in various private homes. He said the eight members of the group were very professional and did not think too much about escaping.

Garza, seen several times on television, wore a tie and appeared very neat during his captivity. He said that was possible because the hostages had hot water and lived in homes of Christians.

Texas unemployment up

DALLAS (AP) — A large influx of teen-agers seeking summer jobs and a sluggish state economy pushed the Texas unemployment up 3 percentage points in June to 7.2 percent, a federal labor analyst said today.

It was the third consecutive rise in the state's jobless rate, said Nic Santangelo, chief economic analyst for the Dallas office of the federal Bureau of Labor Statistics.

"Texas is obviously going through a rather stagnant period of growth as a state," he said.

Santangelo said the Texas unemployment rate, which is adjusted for seasonal variations in the labor force, has gone up in five of the last six months.

"What we saw in Texas continued to reflect the slowing pace of the state's economic activities seen in the last six months of 1984 and first six months of 1985," Santangelo said.

The Texas rate closely tracked that of the nation as a whole, which had a June unemployment rate of 7.3 percent, the fifth consecutive increase.

Santangelo said that the Texas labor force included 573,000 people without jobs in Texas last month and 7,358 million who were employed. The size of the labor force as well as the unemployment rate usually rise in June, he noted.

"Both increased as a result of the influx of teen-age job summer job seekers," he said.

Although many youths found jobs, "there were many more who did not," he said. "In fact, there were many adults who did not find work."

The June jobless rate showed a dramatic rise from the previous year, when it was 4.9 percent, Santangelo said.

"It's a significant jump," he said.

Santangelo said that there is little new in the state's economic picture — and little prospect for quick change.

"The best I can say is when I look at the state of Texas, I would be prone to say there would be little change in the way things are now," he said. "Through end of the year I would expect to see a very slow pace of economic growth."

For the past two years, the Texas economy has suffered from a trade slump linked to the devaluation of the Mexican peso, agriculture problems in the Rio Grande Valley and a slowdown in energy and manufacturing along the Gulf Coast, he said.

Is the Perdido Key Mouse something to write about?

By HARRY F. ROSENTHAL, Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Among the things to worry about this holiday weekend is the near-extinction of the small, secretive Perdido Key beach mouse.

At least, the government thinks so. It released information about the mouse getting a place on the threatened and endangered species list at a time when news is in the summer doldrums and hardly anybody cares anyway.

A yawn of a yarn to one person is news to use to another. So let us look into some of the things that press agents — public and private — think might intrigue a reporter desperate for something to write about.

In this great big country of ours, the population of the Perdido Key beach mouse totals only 26 and it has the distinction of being the most critically endangered mammal of them all. So says the Fish and Wildlife Service.

The mouse originally was all over the key, which straddles the Alabama-Florida border. Now, it is found only at the western end. If the plight of the mouse isn't enough to get you upset, how about giving some thought to lightning.

Every year, while outdoor activities are at their peak, the weather bureau people — formally, the Commerce Department's National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration — scare us with stories about lightning.

In the past 25 years, according to NOAA, the United States has been struck by one and a quarter billion lightning bolts. The agency didn't say who counted the bolts — any more than the Interior Department listed how it got the 26 beach mice.

But it did have some common-sense advice for not becoming a lightning statistic. Get into a house or an all-metal vehicle. Stay off the phone. Avoid projecting above the surrounding landscape, such as a hilltop. Don't stand under a natural lightning rod, such as a tall, isolated tree.

And this: "If caught in a flat, open field and your hair stands on end, drop to your knees, do not lie flat on the ground." No substitute is offered for those who have no hair to stand on end.

This may be a unilaterally declared long weekend for many Americans but that doesn't stop newspapers from publishing or press agents from trying to get their stories in those newspapers.

That's what makes the national Radio Broadcasters Association monthly Washington Memo so appealing. The Memo, from the association's lawyers, tells members and journalists about penalties against broadcasters who break federal rules.

"Take heart," said the latest edition. "There were no announcements during the past month of any broadcast fines or forfeitures."

To broadcasters, that's news. It may be news to you, too.

Texans celebrate Fourth in style

By The Associated Press
 From Willie Nelson's "picnic" near Austin to Sweetwater's impromptu, first-ever Fourth of July parade, millions of Texans braved a mix of rain and sunshine to help celebrate the nation's 209th birthday.
 Some 12,000 people muddled around in a rain-soaked Austin field for Nelson's concert Thursday, but at least one problem usually associated with the event — heat prostration — never cropped up as the city tied its coolest July 4 high-temperature record of 79 degrees.
 "The rain don't matter a bit," said Steve Johnson, a soaked Oklahoman standing in the middle of the soggy field to hear Nelson and a couple of his friends — Neil Young, Kris Kristofferson, Johnny Cash, Jerry Jeff Walker and Waylon Jennings — perform at Nelson's 13th picnic since 1971.
 And in Sweetwater, with less than three days notice, more than 100 people turned out to join in an impromptu Independence Day parade in this West Texas town Thursday morning.

 The parade was the brainchild of Dr. Al Densmore, a Sweetwater resident who, disappointed that the town was planning no festivities for the Fourth of July, decided late Monday to plan a parade himself.
 But Densmore, a dentist who is also a World War II veteran, never expected the parade to be as popular as it was.
 "This is about 100 more (people) than I thought," he said. "I'm very thrilled."
 Parades also trooped down main streets in scores of other Texas cities, but scattered showers and thunderstorms interrupted many celebrations as unstable moist air moved in from the Gulf of Mexico.
 In San Antonio, officials said cloudy skies may have kept many away from the largest military procession held there since World War II. About 3,000 people turned out for the first-ever Independence Day Veterans Parade.

 Skies were clearer in Dallas, where motorists jammed highways for hours to make their way into Fair Park for a spectacular fireworks show next to the Cotton Bowl.
 In El Paso, a 50-gun salute at Fort Bliss honored the nation's 50 states. And at Chamizal National Memorial, a fireworks display topped events that included an arts festival and a rodeo.
 About 500 spectators watched as 13 men and 13 women competed in the Eighth Annual Sun City Suntan Showoff Contest at an El Paso shopping mall. With judging based on contrast between tanned and untanned spots, contestants drew thunderous applause when showing tan lines.
 As many as 10,000 turned out for a day at Lake Casa Blanca in Laredo. Highlighting the day's events were a concert by local performers, a pie contest, a fajita cook-off and bikini contests for men and women.

 Wichita Falls, meanwhile, hosted a bike and antique-car parade that traveled from downtown to the historic Kell House, a former residence of city pioneers that has been converted to a museum.
 Austin police said they believed the crowd at the Austin Symphony performance and the Fourth of July Fireworks Show at Auditorium Shores was the largest ever — more than last year's estimate of 60,000.
 In the evening, boaters in rafts, canoes, and an armada of other non-motorized craft set themselves adrift off Auditorium Shores to listen to the Austin Symphony and watch the fireworks. By the time the music started at 8:30, the lake behind the orchestra's stage was shore to shore with boats.

Search continues for man convicted in kidnapping case

CLEBURNE, Texas (AP) — A man condemned to life in prison in the kidnapping of an Alvarado girl was still at large today after he scrambled over a barbed wire-tipped fence to freedom, authorities say.

James Wesley Foote, 34, scaled an eight-foot fence around the Johnson County Jail Thursday after being transferred there earlier this week for questioning in a robbery, Johnson County Chief Deputy Malcolm Southerland said.

Before that, Foote had been held in a Texas Department of Corrections unit after receiving a life sentence March 28 in the kidnapping of 13-year-old Amy McNeil.

Southerland said Foote, clad in orange TDC trousers and no shirt, climbed over the fence about 2 p.m. as he and about 50 other prisoners were in the jail's exercise yard.

"He had to be cut up pretty bad," he said. "We had a guard there but the guard was unable to stop him."

Roadblocks were erected throughout the area as more than 100 lawmen searched for Foote, but he was still at large shortly after midnight, Southerland said.

Foote, of Arlington, and Michael Lynn Mills of Dallas, 28, were convicted of aggravated kidnapping in the Jan. 11 abduction of Miss McNeil. The abductors were demanding a $100,000 ransom from her businessman father until she was rescued 2½ days later after a high-speed shootout. Mills, too, was sentenced to life.

The way to stop terrorism

In the wake of another hostage crisis, American politicians desperately search for ways to insure it won't happen again. Their proposed solutions are not encouraging because none address the underlying causes of terrorism against American citizens.

There are just two:
 1. Some people and some nations consider the United States their enemy.
 2. Terrorists feel they can attain certain objectives through aggression against American citizens.

The only way to halt terrorists acts against our people is to eliminate those two causes.
 Liberals say terrorists strike against the United States because we create enemies by being on the wrong side of too many issues. But changing sides is no solution. Our current enemies might become our friends, but our friends would then become our enemies and the potential for terrorism would still exist.

Conservatives urge military strikes into terrorist strongholds, even though that would mean killing innocent people. But that would make us terrorists, too, and create even more enemies.

President Reagan is toying with the idea of prohibiting American citizens from traveling in certain areas. But if he does, he will be imposing the same authoritarian measures he claims to despise in other countries, such as Nicaragua.

The only sensible proposal I've seen came not from government leaders, but from a libertarian writer Alan W. Bock. He said before the next crisis the United States should issue a statement similar to this:

"Citizens of the United States are free individuals who are responsible for themselves and their well-being. It is insulting to the dignity of free people to treat them as wards of the state. When citizens go abroad, therefore, for whatever reason...the U.S. government assumes no responsibility for their safety. If they get into trouble, whether through their own actions or no fault of their own, the government will do precisely nothing...No negotiations, no retribution, no attention. And no exceptions."

Bock says there would be little point in terrorists taking U.S. hostages if such a policy were adopted because their violence is calculated to elicit a reaction. "Denied a reaction, they would likely turn their attention elsewhere," he wrote.

Bock is right, as far as he goes. Such a policy would eliminate one of the reasons for terrorist actions against U.S. citizens. But it would not deter those who consider the United States their enemy and seek revenge against residents of this country.

But there is also a way to erase the revenge motive. First, the United States government should sever relations with all nations. There has never been a compelling reason for government-to-government relations in the first place and they should be ended.

The U.S. should tell the leaders of other countries that it will no longer act in the name of all the people of this country because all the people don't agree what its actions should be.

It should stop signing treaties, entering into alliances, or making trade agreements. And it should abrogate all such arrangements it has made in the past.

It should tell other countries if they want to deal with Americans they should deal with individual citizens, not the government. And it should tell American citizens who want to influence affairs in other nations to do as they wish, but the government will not participate.

If the Russians want to buy wheat from America, let them go directly to the American farmer, not to the government.

If certain American citizens want to provide military assistance to Israel or the Nicaraguan rebels, then let them do it on their own. But keep government out of it.

Once our government had withdrawn from all foreign entanglements, there would be no reason for retaliation against our citizens for things done by their government, simply because our government would not be doing anything involving citizens of other countries.

This "country" would have no preferred friends and no preferred enemies. Individuals, not an entire nation, would then bear the responsibility for their own actions.

If those steps were taken, the following situation would occur: Those who engage in terrorism would no longer have reason to regard the United States as their enemy.

They could no longer demand that the United States government influence governments of other nations to do anything because the United States government would have no influence.

And, they would understand that they could not extract anything from this government by the taking of hostages.

In short, they would no longer have anything to gain from terrorist activity against citizens of this country. And it would stop. Immediately.

Cat burglar outfoxes pets and police

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — Arlington police say it may be an ego problem that's making a cat burglar the bane of their lives.

They say he has struck at least 40 times in south Arlington since May, boldly entering homes while people sleep, slipping off with up to several hundred dollars in cash and jewelry — or with nothing at all.

"Nobody's seen him come," Arlington burglar Sgt. Art Livermore said. "Nobody's seen him go. This old boy is something else... He moves quietly — in and out."

No one has heard the burglar, even when he crawled over a drain full of dishes to get into a kitchen. Police say they don't have a clue as to when he'll strike next.

"He's got an ego problem," said Livermore. "It gives some of these old thieves a thrill to go in a house when they know someone is in there. It increases their adventure."

Police suspect the cat burglar struck on May 20, 25, 26, 29 and June 8 and 30, hitting between four and eight homes a night.

"Every now and then, he'll get a good score and get a couple of hundred dollars," Livermore said. "But most of the losses have been less than $100."

The burglar typically pries the screen off an open window or finds an open patio door to enter homes, Livermore said.

America should retaliate against hijackers, murderers: Conwell

HOUSTON (AP) — Former TWA hostage Allyn Conwell says he is in full accord with the United States wanting to retaliate against the Shiite hijackers and those who murdered Navy diver Robert Stethem.

Conwell, 39, told reporters at an invitation-only press conference Thursday, he totally supports the Reagan administration's efforts to seek retaliation.

"I have absolutely no sympathy for and I have absolutely no understanding of the act of murder. I have no compassion for, understanding of, and I have never voiced any compassion, sympathy, understanding or tolerance for murderers or the hijackers," Conwell said.

He said the comments he made at a Damascus press conference, which were construed as being sympathetic to the Shiites, dealt with only one group — the Amal militia.

"They entered this situation reluctantly," Conwell said. The other Shiite groups consisted of the hijackers and supporters of the hijackers, he said.

Conwell said the Amal were wrong in holding them hostage, but he said he understood how they would consider the holding of Americans equal to that of Israel holding 700 Shiites as prisoners.

"(Nabih) Berri and the Amal were acting against the law," Conwell said. "I also think the Israelites were working against the law."

As elected spokesman for the American hostages, Conwell said he was used to a certain degree by the Amal.

Conwell has been the target of much criticism by former hostages for the "sympathetic" comments he made about his captors and for the apparent special treatment given him by the Amal.

"Apparently, after reviewing tape there is tremendous amount of confusion over my role as spokesman — perhaps some debate over my political affiliation. I want to clear this up as soon as possible," Conwell said as his wife, Olga, and brother, Ron, sat next to him.

Several former captives have said they didn't agree with Conwell's statements about the cause of the Amal, who held the passengers and three crew members of TWA flight 847 for 17 days.

Some hostages also have said

Conwell received special treatment compared with the rest of the 38 hostages. Criticisms made about Conwell included that he had a separate room, had his laundry done for him while others did theirs in a sink, had better food and was privileged to drive a car.

Conwell, however, said that he was treated no differently than any of the other hostages. The only exception, he said, was that he ate a few slices of watermelon once.

"There were no special considerations afforded me," Conwell said. "I slept with and lived with my fellow hostages when I was able to sleep."

EVER STRIVING FOR TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Our opinion

Have we forgotten this declaration?

Yesterday America celebrated the anniversary of the signing of perhaps the most remarkable document man has ever produced, the Declaration of Independence.

We invite you to carefully and thoughtfully consider the concept of man, liberty and government expressed in that great work.

We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights, that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. That to secure these rights, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed. That whenever any form of government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the right of the people to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new government, laying its foundation on such principles and organizing its powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their safety and happiness. Prudence, indeed, will dictate that governments long established should not be changed for light and transient causes; and accordingly all experience hath shown, that mankind are more disposed to suffer, while evils are sufferable, than to right themselves by abolishing the forms to which they are accustomed. But when a long train of abuses and usurpations, pursuing invariably the same object evinces a design to reduce them under absolute despotism, it is their right, it is their duty to throw off such government, and to provide new guards for their future security.

Even more remarkable than the philosophy of human freedom expressed in the Declaration of Independence is the fact that citizens of a country which produced such a document can, 209 years later, tolerate the type of government we have today.

"I don't like going up against guys who have drug AND saliva problems."

BY CHARLES VAN EATON

Is the Administration's proposal for tax reform more likely to foster economic growth, job creation, and economic opportunity for those at the bottom of the income ladder than the system currently in place? Is it more equitable than the present system?

The answer to both questions is the same: The President thinks so. But whether or not he's correct remains to be seen.

With regard to the first question it depends upon what, exactly, his plan causes to happen to the cost of capital. With regard to the second it depends upon whether or not some general agreement can be reached regarding the term "equity" in a nation where it tends to have as many different definitions as there are people who bother to take the time to carefully and systematically define it.

I HAD HOPED that the President would present a plan which clearly reduced the cost of capital and avoided arguments over "fairness". But at the moment I have the unsettling feeling that the President has chosen to base his political case for tax reform on the grounds that it is, in some vague way, more "fair" than the one it is intended to replace. His nationally televised speech on his plan made that clear.

In choosing that path Mr. Reagan established both the tone and the terms under which his plan will be debated, and that tone and those terms virtually guarantee that the "tax reform" package which finally emerges from Congress will fall far short of what is needed to accomplish the economic ends the President seeks. When the political process has played itself out and this one - to use the President's own words - "Magnificent moment for tax reform", has passed unrealized, he may have no one to blame but himself.

DURING HIS televised speech, as well as many times since then as he has traveled around the country seeking support for his proposal, Mr. Reagan kept referring to the current income-tax system as one which allowed certain unnamed groups to "avoid their fair share of the tax burden". When he referred to it as a case of "special interest raids of the few" he clearly established grounds based on gross appeal to envy - which, while it may be good politics, never can lead to good policy.

It seems that President Reagan sees the current tax system as one massive zero-sum game in which one taxpayer's reduced tax liability must be exactly offset by some other taxpayer's increased tax liability the same year. Although it happens to be the case that the income-tax system doesn't work that way at all, thinking about it that way and talking about it that way holds far more political appeal than thinking and talking about it in a more dispassionate and analytical manner. But, unfortunately for a nation which needs more, not less, investment and capital formation, politics doesn't thrive on analytics, it thrives on politics, and "tax reform" holds the promise of being good politics.

Congressman Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.), Chairman of the powerful House Ways and Means Committee, knows all this as well, if not better, than the President. In his nationally televised response following Mr. Reagan's speech, he characterized the current tax system in terms and tone little different from that of the President. "For years," Chairman Rostenkowski said, "we have used the tax system to fuel the economy with good intentioned tax breaks, but those with accountants have beat the system."

According to Rostenkowski, tax reform, if it is to mean anything at all, must stand for "fairness and lower taxes". To assure this he insisted that those who "draw their great wealth from this country should pay their fair share" rather than be allowed to use tax shelters because, he argued, "their gain is our loss."

That did it! From that evening of high television drama until this moment, debate on the President's tax-reform proposal has not deviated from that frame of reference. To portray people of wealth and high income as persons who "draw" (not "earn") their wealth, from this country is zero-sum mentality gone to seed. It presumes that there is some fixed sum of wealth out there which generates automatically some fixed stream of income every day. Anyone who "draws" more than someone else leaves that much less for others. Naturally, if that's the way income and wealth are to be envisioned, it makes sense that those who "draw" more should pay proportionately greater taxes so that everyone's after-tax income is, more-or-less, the same.

BUT MR. REAGAN'S tax proposal calls for a reduction in the number of income-tax brackets from 14 to three, with the top rate being reduced from 50 percent to 35 percent. (The two other tax-reform proposals under discussion - one Republican the other Democrat - do the same.) Objections are already being raised that Reagan's proposal is "unfair" because it gives the greatest proportional rate cut to those in the upper-income bracket. When Treasury Secretary James Baker offered testimony on the Reagan bill before the House Ways and Means Committee, Representative Richard Gephardt (D-MO) co-author with Senator Bill Bradley of the Democrats' alternative reform proposal, charged that under the President's plan middle-income people would still hear an "unfair" share of the nation's tax burden. (i.e., the proportionate rate drop is less in the middle brackets.)

Representative Andy Jacobs (D-IN) offered a similar objection and House Speaker Tip O'Neill said that a bill which "offers more help to the working poor" would be preferred. Even a former Republican representative, who once served on the House Ways and Means Committee, has argued that with Reagan's "sweeping reform" the only big winners would be "the rich among us."

In response to the spirit which has been engendered, the House Ways and Means Committee has begun to draft an alternative to Mr. Reagan's proposal - an alternative which raises rates at the upper end and reduces the rate at which capital goods may be depreciated for tax purposes. In a word, the President's proposal is beginning to take on a familiar shape under the hands of Congress - a shape much like that of the system currently in existence.

Mr. Reagan deserves it! The American people don't! By choosing to establish his tax-reform proposal on grounds of "fairness" rather than on grounds of economic growth and capital efficiency he has plunged debate into the swamp of mindless envy where everyone ends up a loser.

A highway of solid gold

WASHINGTON (NEA) — "Westway is No. 1 in the nation," says an official of the Army Corps of Engineers here. "No other project is comparable to it. There is no competition."

He's referring to the country's most ambitious, extravagant and outrageous proposed public works project — a new highway in New York City that would traverse only 4.2 miles of Manhattan's West Side.

The most reliable estimates place Westway's projected price at $4 billion to $6 billion, while inflation, cost overruns and other unpredictable factors could readily boost that figure to $10 billion.

That's almost $2.4 billion per mile or more than $450,000 per foot for a 12-lane interstate highway in a senseless location — from the Battery, at the southern tip of Manhattan, to 42nd Street.

The explanation for Westway's outlandish cost lies in the fact that it's actually a private real estate development masquerading as a publicly financed highway — with up to 90 percent of the funding coming from the federal treasury.

Instead of building a thoroughly adequate eight-lane highway along an existing right-of-way (at a relatively modest cost of $60 million to $100 million) Westway's promoters want to pave over the Hudson River instead.

Extending Manhattan about 1,000 feet into the river would provide 227 new acres of land suitable for development. Although 94 of those acres are to be park and another 36 acres would be consumed by highway interchanges and ramps, the remaining 97 acres would be set aside for residential, commercial and industrial development.

That land would be parceled out to politically well-connected real estate developers anxious to construct luxury apartment towers, office building and assorted other structures.

For about half of its length, Westway would be confined to a tunnel dug through the middle of the newly created landfill.

Although scores of local politicians in New York as well as more than 50 members of Congress publicly oppose the project, pressure from land developers and construction unions presumably is responsible for the Westway endorsements from prominent public officials.

In addition to both of New York's senators — liberal Democrat Daniel P. Moynihan and conservative Republican Alfonse D'Amato — the list of Westway supporters includes:

— President Reagan, who abandoned his oft-proclaimed frugality when he endorsed Westway during a 1980 campaign visit to New York City, then returned the following year with an $81 million federal check as a down payment.

— New York Gov. Mario Cuomo, who is backing the project despite the fact that two independent state studies he commissioned demonstrate that even in its planning stages Westway has become riddled with fraud, deceit and illegality.

— New York City Mayor Edward Koch, who aptly characterized Westway as "an economic and environmental disaster" during his 1977 campaign but abandoned his opposition after being elected.

All of those politicians have summarily rejected a logical alternative: If the grandiose development scheme is abandoned before Sept. 30, slightly more than $1.7 billion worth of interstate highway funds earmarked for Westway can be "traded in" for an equivalent amount of federal funding for the city's mass transit system.

New York's rapidly deteriorating subway system, which millions of people use daily to travel between their homes and work, is desperately in need of that money to pay for long overdue improvements.

Westway's future now may be determined by the outcome of a trial underway in U.S. District Court in New York City

Today in history

By The Associated Press
Today is Friday, July 5, the 186th day of 1985. There are 179 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history: Fifty years ago — on July 5, 1935 — President Franklin D. Roosevelt signed into law the National Labor Relations Act, designed to promote organized labor's right to collective bargaining.

On this date:
In 1801, American naval hero David G. Farragut was born.
In 1810, showman Phineas T. Barnum was born.

In 1811, Venezuela became the first South American country to declare its independence from Spain.

In 1830, the French occupied the north African city of Algiers.

In 1865, William Booth founded the Salvation Army in London.

In 1940, during World War II, diplomatic relations were broken between Britain and the Vichy government in France.

Ten years ago: The Cape Verde Islands officially became independent after 500 years of Portuguese rule. And Arthur Ashe won the men's singles title at Wimbledon, defeating Jimmy Connors in four sets.

Five years ago: Tennis star Bjorn Borg won his fifth Wimbledon singles title, defeating John McEnroe in five sets.

One year ago: The U.S. Supreme Court weakened the 70-year-old "exclusionary rule" by deciding that evidence seized with defective court warrants can be used against defendants in criminal trials.

Today's birthdays: Actress Katherine Helmond is 52. Actress Shirley Knight is 49. Julie Nixon Eisenhower is 37. Baseball's Rich "Goose" Gossage is 34.

Editor's Note: We resume Gena Walls' column, Gena on Genealogy, after a month's delay. She has been in the midst of a move to Oregon, but is now ready to resume her column each week in The Pampa News. We regret any inconvenience to our readers and appreciate their patience.

By GENA WALLS

Independence Day is the time for many family reunions and an opportunity to "climb" more branches of the family tree. Perhaps your ancestor chose not to fight and moved west with the family accounting for a division of your relatives.

At the same time, many remained loyal to England and as in the Civil War, families were torn apart with relatives fighting on opposite sides. Do not assume but search for proof for each ancestor, being careful not to group together simply due to kinship.

Usually, my husband and I have advance notice of our moves and I plan for them. This time, however, the move was sudden. I apologize for my delay in responding to my mail. I have a new address. We will be living her approximately a year. Please address your correspondence to Gena Walls, 8635 S.W. Maverick Terrace, No. 1009, Beaverton, Ore., 97005.

Mrs. Doreen Baker, P.O. Box 515, Briscoe, 79011, will provide details of a PINKSTAFF family reunion to be held in Flat Rock, Ill., during the Labor Day weekend. Be sure to include that self-addressed, stamped envelope when requesting information.

A REDMON-REDMAN, REDMOND reunion is scheduled sometime this month. The person to contact is Evelyn Redmon Davis, 248 New Leicester Hwy., Asheville, N.C., 28806.

The 38th annual reunion of the NEWMAN ELLSWORTH PARKER and PRISCILLA JANE LACKEY was held June 8 and 9 in Lawrenceville, Ill. My move prevented advance notice of this reunion and I apologize. If you are interested in this reunion, contact Mrs. Becky Montgomery, P.O. Box 3, Flat Rock, Ill., 62427.

If you are related to these families, contact Mrs. Baker in Briscoe and share information. You might provide a missing piece of the ancestor puzzle.

Remember my new address. I need your help in continuing the column.
Happy Hunting!

Dear Abby

Couple gives parents a key and opens a door to trouble

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1985 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: My husband's parents live next door. We gave them a key to our house in case of emergencies. This was the worst mistake we ever made. Before they had the key we had a good relationship, but no more.

His father is a very early riser, so he lets himself into our home while we are still in bed. He reads our mail and invades our privacy. His mother also lets herself in and looks around. Last Sunday morning I walked into our kitchen stark naked and my father-in-law was standing there! We never know when they are going to surprise us. When we have company, they walk in as though they lived here.

We hate to hurt their feelings, so we haven't said anything to them, but we will not feel comfortable until we get our key back.

NEEDS PRIVACY
DEAR NEEDS: Yes. With as much diplomacy as he can muster, your husband must tell his parents that their surprise visits are disturbing and often inconvenient, so would they please return the house key. It won't be easy, but it's the only way you can regain your privacy.

DEAR ABBY: A good friend came to visit me with her two children, both under 3 years of age. By the time they left, my stereo was damaged, my carpet stained, and an antique clock broken—and that was just in the living room. The rest of the house looked like a tornado went through it. All this occurred while my friend sat and talked, apparently oblivious to the whole thing.

I was afraid if I asked her to control her kids or leave, our friendship would be over because she is very sensitive about her kids.

Please don't think I'm an old fuddy-duddy who hates kids. I'm not. I love kids, and hope to have my own someday. However, my husband and I have worked hard to furnish our home and don't appreciate it being destroyed by kids like hers. I'm beginning to wonder if the friendship is worth it. Surely I'm not the only one with this problem. A printed solution might help.

READY TO SCREAM
DEAR READY: Screaming will not restore your clock, repair your stereo and clean your carpet. Kids usually tear around like tornados because they are bored. A few toys and some coloring books in full view of you and their mother might be helpful. And should the child get out of line, a firm reprimand would not be out of order.

DEAR ABBY: I have one child who is 8 years old. We live next door to a family with six kids. (I'll call them the Joneses.) My daughter plays with the Jones girl, who is also 8. Whenever I give the girls a treat and one of the other Jones kids sees it, the news spreads like wildfire, then Mrs. Jones sends one of her kids over here to get treats for the rest of her kids who are in the house watching TV or whatever. They say, "Our mom says one of us can't have anything unless we all have it; everything has to be fair and equal!"

Abby, I came from a family of nine kids, and when a playmate's parent gave one of us a treat, we said "Thank you" and felt grateful; we'd never dream of asking for eight more for the kids at home!

I am raising my daughter to know that she can't have everything her playmates have—that life is not always "fair and equal," but Mrs. Jones is putting me in a terrible position.

FRUSTRATED
DEAR FRUSTRATED: Tell Mrs. Jones that you admire her for treating all her children equally, but a neighbor who gives one child a special treat should not be expected to provide all the brothers and sisters with identical treats. And if Mrs. Jones doesn't understand, don't give her child treats where she will be seen and envied.

Safety seat on vacation makes sense

When loading the luggage and family in the car for summer vacation, don't forget to make room for a child passenger safety seat for younger children, urge Texas Department of Health officials.

Texas law requires children under age two to be buckled in a child safety seat, while toddlers between ages two and four must be secured in a safety seat or by a seat belt. As of July 1 when a safety seat law goes into effect in Wyoming, safety seats will be required statewide. Wyoming was the 50th state to pass such legislation.

Texas' safety seat law, effective in October 1984, has helped lower the number of children age four and under killed in vehicle crashes, according to a release from the TDH. In 1983, 77 children age four and under died, and 6,603 were injured in vehicle crashes. In 1984, the number of deaths dropped to 68, nearly a 12 percent decrease. Another 6,629 children age 4 and under were hurt, but several of these youngsters might have been killed if they had not been secured by a safety seat or seat belt, TDH officials said.

To protect children, department of health officials said safety seats must be installed and used according to the manufacturer's instructions. Safety seats must be secured to the vehicle with the seat belts, they said. If a tether is required on the safety seat, it should be bolted or belted in place, they said. Infants should ride in safety seats that face the rear of the vehicle, TDH officials added. And, all children in safety seats, including booster seats, should have their seat harnesses fastened properly, they said, adding that parents should review the seat maker's instructions to ensure that seats are secured and used correctly.

TDH officials suggest that on a long ride, children in safety seats can be entertained with soft toys.

Cuddly teddy bear quilt

By STEVIE BALDWIN

Davy Crockett and Goldilocks both had problems with bears. Davy believed he could grin down a bear before the critter began beating him vigorously about the coonskin hat. Goldilocks made herself at home with Baby Bear's food and furniture. Like Davy Crockett, who lived to grin at less dangerous game (such as congressmen), Goldilocks escaped just "bear-ly!"

I'm convinced that creatures who live in quaint woodland cottages or who "bear" with grinning American legends can't be all that scary. After all, The Three Bears did dine at a table. Such civilized bears probably even dressed for dinner. The nine extremely tame teddy bears featured on this adorable quilt are also formal and fun in their calico bow ties. The quilt measures approximately 44 inches square.

You can easily make your own teddy bear quilt, using our detailed plans. They include full-size patterns for the teddy bear figure and heart- and - scroll quilting design, a complete materials list, and fully illustrated, step-by-step instructions. The quilted top is sewn by machine.

If you would like to order the plans, please specify Project No. 1582-2, and send $4.95. We are also offering plans for our calico baskets, Project No. 1520-2. Trimmed in lace, these quick- and - easy baskets are made from calico fabric remnants and quilt batting. If you would like to order both plans, please specify both project numbers, and send $8.90.

Our color catalog lists hundreds of additional craft and woodworking projects, and is available for only $2.95. All prices include postage and handling. Mail your orders to: Makin' Things, Dept. 79065, P.O. Box 1000, Bixby, Okla., 74008.

To make the teddy bear quilt, you will need 3/4 yard of white cotton fabric, a 44x56 inch piece of calico for the quilt backing, and 1/2 yard of brown cotton fabric for the bears. We used nine different calico prints for the quilt top and bow ties. Each finished calico patch measures 10 inches square.

If you are making this quilt without benefit of our plans, begin by drawing a 4 inch wide by 7 inch tall teddy bear. Trace the design onto the brown fabric and cut two pieces for each bear. Place two teddy bear pieces right sides together, and stitch around the contoured edge, leaving an opening for turning. Turn right side out, and press the seam allowances to the inside along the opening edges.

Cut nine 1 1/2 x 22 inch pieces of calico for the ties. Fold each tie piece in half lengthwise with right sides together and stitch along the long edge. Turn the tie right side out (a loop turner is helpful), fold the seam allowances at each end to the inside, and press. Topstitch along the edges of the tie. If you prefer, use 1/2 inch wide grosgrain ribbon for the ties.

Pin a teddy bear to the center of one calico patch, placing the center of the tie underneath the bear's neck. Blind stitch around the edge of the bear. Tie the ends in a bow on the front of the bear. Assemble the remaining eight teddy bear patches in the same manner.

To make one row of the quilted top, assemble three teddy bear patches side to side, each separated by a four inch wide, white border piece. Assemble two more rows in the same manner. To form a dividing strip, sew together three more white border pieces end to end, each separated by a four inch square calico piece. Assemble another strip in the same manner. Stitch together the rows and strips to complete the quilt top.

Place the assembled quilt top and the calico backing piece wrong sides together, with the quilt batting sandwiched between. Baste through all layers along both diagonals. To quilt, run a line of straight machine stitches through all layers, over each existing seam in the top. I hand-quilted the heart and scroll design onto each of the white border strips. Remove the basting stitches, trim the edges, and use four narrow strips of calico to encase the raw edges of the quilt.

Firefighters await reinforcements

By DENNIS ANDERSON
Associated Press Writer

Armies of battle-hardened firefighters struggled today to control stubborn blazes that have laid waste to more than 150,000 acres of brush and rangeland in 10 parched Western states, forcing the evacuation of thousands of people.

Thousands of firefighters battled blazes today in Arizona, Idaho, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, New Mexico, Oregon, Washington, Wyoming, and California, which has been the hardest hit since the waves of fires began June 27.

Encouraged by reduced winds and temperatures that dropped into the 90s after days in triple digits, 2,700 firefighters worked for a fifth day today to control a blaze that has charred 78,000 acres in Southern California.

"If the weather holds, we should be in pretty good shape," said U.S. Forest Service spokesman Max

Reed. "The winds have laid down. It's the first bright spot we've had."

The fire, which was about 40 percent contained Thursday night, rolled into coastal Santa Barbara County after threatening Ojai in Ventura County and forcing cancellation of area fireworks displays.

The Santa Barbara fire, in the Los Padres National Forest, was a few miles from the outskirts of Carpinteria, a beach town 12 miles east of Santa Barbara and 40 miles east of President Reagan's ranch.

Resources had been stretched so thin by the Ojai fire that the Forest Service offered civilian truck and van owners $7 an hour and up to 35 cents a mile to haul supplies. The response triggered a traffic jam of trucks and vans headed toward the ranger station and the offer was canceled two hours later.

"It was just overwhelming," said spokesman Steve Beck. "We really appreciate what people did."

Numerous other fires burned across California, including a 1,600-acre blaze in Yosemite National park that was about three-fourths contained Thursday, said park dispatcher Darlene Hales. It started Sunday with an unattended campfire.

The state's worst damage was done by suspected arson fires that destroyed or damaged a total of more than 140 houses in Palo Alto; San Diego's Normal Heights; and Baldwin Hills in Los Angeles, where three people were killed.

Damage in those three fires has been estimated at more than $31 million.

In Nebraska, firefighters from dozens of towns today fought lightning-spawned blazes that have charred 11,000 acres of grass, crops and forest since Wednesday. One, in the Pine Ridge area of northwest Nebraska, covered 5,000 acres. Smoke from a forest fire in Dawes County was visible for 30 miles.

An 837-acre blaze touched off by fireworks in south-central Washington was under control Thursday after burning three homes near Goldendale.

Two fires, totaling 800 acres, burned out of control on Casper Mountain, near Casper, Wyo., threatening a bald eagle habitat.

Two blazes, totaling 2,000 acres, burned today in Helena National Forest in Montana, where authorities said the fire danger, based on temperature and wind and soil moisture, was the worst on record.

Firefighters doused all but a few spots of an 8,200-acre fire that burned southwest of Tucson, Ariz., in the Baboquivari Mountains since last week.

In New Mexico, firefighters fought 31 lightning-caused fires in the Gila National Forest. One, burning since June 13, had consumed 3,500 acres of mostly grass and brush. More than 3,000 acres of the Salmon and Challis national forests in Idaho have burned since Sunday, despite the efforts of up to 1,200 firefighters.

In Nevada, a 100-acre brush fire burned 40 miles southwest of Las Vegas.

WATERMELONS RECALLED—Supermarket clerk Philip Peneyra displays watermelons which were pulled from store shelves Thursday afternoon in Los Angeles after state health officials ordered all green and striped watermelons removed from grocery shelves and advised people not to eat them because of an outbreak of illness possibly caused by pesticide poisoning. Watermelons recalled, illnesses reported in three western states

LOS ANGELES (AP) — California grocers responding to a state-ordered recall stopped selling watermelons during the peak Fourth of July sales season after more than 35 people in three states became ill from melons apparently tainted by pesticide.

Fifteen to 17 people became ill after eating striped watermelons in the Portland, Ore., area, including part of southwest Washington; 21 illnesses were reported in California by people eating green melons, health officials said Thursday.

"The numbers are fluid and they'll probably get bigger," said California Department of Health spokesman Peter Weisser.

The state health department issued the recall late Thursday afternoon during the melon's peak of popularity — the Fourth of July holiday. Officials also urged people not to eat melons already purchased.

Dr. Kenneth Kizer, health department director, said Thursday that he made the move to guard against further illness.

"It's a statewide recall that means all watermelons are recalled as a precautionary measure," Kizer said in a telephone interview from Sacramento. "Occurrences in Oregon came from people who ate striped watermelons, but the ones here in California have been from solid green watermelons."

The illness, which induced symptoms including nausea, diarrhea, dizziness and muscle spasms, was not considered life-threatening, and was consistent with exposure to pesticides, said Dr. Larry Foster of the Oregon Health Division.

The melons may have been contaminated by the pesticide aldicarb, Weisser said.

Traces of the pesticide, sold under the brand name Temik, were found in melons taken from a grocery store and a wholesaler's warehouse, said Dalton Hobbs, spokesman for the Oregon Agriculture Department.

The pesticide is approved for use on some fruit but not for watermelons, Hobbs said. It was suspected that the melons became contaminated by absorbing the chemical through the roots, he added.

United Grocers, based in Milwaukie, Ore., ordered all watermelons recalled Wednesday.

Because of the different types of melons people ate before becoming ill, Kizer said investigators worried that contaminated melons might be coming from different areas.

Victims reported the melons looked normal and had no unusual odor or taste, Foster said.

"If individuals were to become ill, they would become ill within an hour after eating the melon," Kizer said. "No deaths would be expected ... although it is a highly toxic pesticide."

Suspect melons were reported to have been shipped from Yuma, Ariz., or El Centro, Calif., but as a safety measure, Kizer asked that shipments of watermelon from Kern and Riverside counties be stopped as well.

Illness thought to be linked to the watermelon was reported by one southwest Washington family and two Portland-area families, according to Hobbs.

United Grocers supplies about 250 independently owned stores in Oregon and southwest Washington.

Refinery fire spectacular

BEAUMONT, Texas (AP) — Mobil Oil officials planned to investigate today to determine the cause of a refinery fire that shot flames high into the air.

No injuries were reported in the blaze Thursday night, officials said.

The fire, shooting flames visible for miles, started in a reforming unit near the plant entrance about 8:30 p.m.

Body identified after 12 years

HOUSTON (AP) — The younger sister of a teenage boy slain in a sadistic mass murder ring in the early 1970s identified her brother's body which has been in a Houston morgue for 12 years, a medical examiner said.

Harris County Medical Examiner Dr. Joseph Jachimczyk said the body of William Karmon "Rusty" Branch Jr. was identified by his sister, Susan McLemore on Wednesday.

Branch, son of a former Houston Police officer, was 18 years old when his family reported him missing in 1973.

He was the 23rd victim identified in the case surrounding the mass murder ring headed by Dean Arnold Corll. Remains of four other young white males are in special containers at the county morgue waiting to be identified, Jachimczyk said.

"Now I can bury him and put him to rest with his family instead of leaving him in the morgue," Ms. McLemore, 26, said.

The infamous murders committed by Corll and accomplice, Elmer Wayne Henley, came to light Aug. 8, 1973, when Henley, then 17, told Pasadena police he fatally shot Corll, 33, after Corll threatened his life.

Henley then led investigators to a boat stall in southwest Houston where police unearthed 17 bodies.

Officials watch sanctuary freedom train

DENVER (AP) — Immigration officials are watching, but are not moving against anyone participating in a public "Freedom Train" protesting U.S. treatment of Central America's refugees, a movement spokesman says.

"We are here to say the sanctuary movement is alive and well, and will not be intimidated," the Rev. John Fish, head of the Midwest Region of Sanctuary Churches, said here Wednesday.

The movement with more than 200 churches and synagogues participating, calls for protection and shelter for refugees from El Salvador and Guatemala.

Supporters are protesting U.S. deportation of citizens of Central America's countries back to torture, imprisonment and death, Fish said.

Fish, speaking on the west steps of the state Capitol, said the group does its work in public, while the U.S. Government "does evil work" in "covert ways and in secret budgets."

"Our government is indicting brothers and sisters for transporting refugees — while our government is transporting 40,000 of them back," he said.

Two Sanctuary workers in Texas have been convicted for helping Central Americans and a dozen more face trial in Arizona in September.

Fish said the federal government "indicts for aiding and abetting ... yet our government aids and abets their killers."

Eight Salvadoran and Guatemalan refugees, their faces concealed by handkerchiefs, and more than a dozen sanctuary workers joined in the rally as the caravan stopped in Denver. It stopped earlier in Colorado Springs on its trip from Phoenix, Ariz., to Northampton, Mass.

Stops are scheduled for more than 20 cities, and Fish estimated 3,000 supporters will help escort the caravan, and 10,000 spectators will hear refugees speak.

Dan Dale, a Chicago coordinator for the Sanctuary movement, said the federal attorneys prosecuting those who helped refugees have been successful in limiting defense arguments.

Lawyers in the Phoenix trial cannot use the religious beliefs of their clients, nor the actions of the federal government in Central America in their defense, he said.

But he said the cause will be taken "to the court of the opinion of the American people," and the caravan will "reach the jury of the American people."

He said after the shootings, fire trucks and firemen arrived to haul away the bodies and wash away the blood.

Grand jury indicts inmates

ANGLETON, Texas (AP) — Four Texas Department of Corrections inmates were indicted by a Brazoria County grand jury, including one dubbed the "Clear Lake Rapist" who escaped from a prison last month.

Lewis A. Bryant, 35, serving a 65-year sentence for raping three Harris County teen-agers, was indicted Wednesday on charges of escaping from a state prison in Brazoria County and stealing a pickup truck he is accused of driving to Louisiana.

Bryant escaped from the TDC Darrington Unit near Rosharon on June 13. He was caught two days later as he left a relative's house near Anacoco, La.

Bryant was dubbed the "Clear Lake Rapist" in Harris and Galveston counties after he was linked to a series of sexual attacks in the Friendswood-Clear Lake area in early 1984.

Virgil Henry Barfield, 29, also was handed an indictment.

Study: cocaine more deadly than heroin

CHICAGO (AP) — Americans are finding "more intensive and destructive" ways to take cocaine, which claimed more than three times as many lives in 1984 as it did in 1980, says an official with the National Institute on Drug Abuse.

"There has been a striking increase in medical emergencies and deaths associated with the use of cocaine," wrote Dr. William Pollin in an editorial in today's Journal of the American Medical Association.

The editorial accompanied a report saying laboratory animals given free access to cocaine died at almost triple the rate of those given access to heroin. Such a result has "obvious implications for human drug abuse," the study's authors said.

Pollin, who recently stepped down as institute director, said in a telephone interview Thursday that deaths associated with cocaine numbered 169 in 1980, but the toll was 598 last year.

No firm numbers exist on whether numbers of users have increased, but "more intensive and destructive patterns of use" are clearly occurring, he wrote. Such patterns include preparing the drug with a technique called freebasing to allow it to be smoked, injecting the drug into the bloodstream and using cocaine in combination with other drugs, Pollin wrote.

"While many drug users recognize the inherent danger of opiate (including heroin) addiction, they fail to recognize the potential danger of long-term cocaine use," said Michael A. Bozarth and Roy A. Wise of Concordia University in Montreal, who conducted the study.

They implanted tubes in the necks of 23 rats so that each animal could press a lever in its cage to self-administer a set dose of drug into its bloodstream. The rats were divided into two groups, one for each drug.

After 30 days, 11 of the 12 cocaine-using rats were dead, a mortality rate of more than 90 percent, compared with only four of the 11 heroin-using rats, a mortality rate of 36 percent, the researchers reported.

Cocaine-using rats lost more weight and suffered a more marked decline in health than the heroin-using rats, said the researchers.

"Cocaine produces a more tenacious dependency," said Dr. Ronald K. Siegel, a pharmacologist at the University of California at Los Angeles School of Medicine. "With unlimited access, you will reach toxic levels faster."

Government estimates put the number of U.S. cocaine users at 5 million to 8 million, Siegel said in a telephone interview Wednesday, but he said his studies indicate 24 million would be a "conservative" estimate. At the end of 1984, 400,000 users were believed to need clinical help, he said.

Administration seeks to reduce emissions

WASHINGTON (AP) — Now that it has agreed with Canada to a joint study of acid rain, the Reagan administration is trying to get Mexico to limit sulfur dioxide emissions from a new copper smelter near the border.
The center of focus is Nacozari, Mexico, the site of a huge new copper smelting plant that a Library of Congress study says will, when it opens, be the largest source of sulfur dioxide emissions in North America.
The study by the library's Congressional Research Service says the sulfur dioxide, a component of acid rain, will harm air quality in New Mexico and Arizona and could hinder future economic development there by making the air too dirty to allow new or expanded U.S. manufacturing facilities.

But in what Rep. Henry Waxman, D-Calif., describes as the first official statement of its kind, the State Department says it will press Mexico to require installation of anti-pollution equipment at the smelter before its scheduled opening in mid-1986.
The commitment came in a June 27 letter to Waxman, chairman of the House Energy and Commerce health subcommittee, from William L. Ball III, assistant secretary for legislative and intergovernmental affairs.
Ball wrote that the Mexican government has indicated it is developing emissions standards for the Nacozari plant, which will emit an estimated 460,000 tons of sulfur dioxide a year.
The continent's largest source of sulfur dioxide is a power plant in Gavin, Ohio, which releases some 376,000 tons a year, according to the study.

"The U.S. will also seek a commitment from Mexico to require installation of continuous emission controls by start-up of the smelter," Ball told Waxman, who has been critical about U.S. response to the situation.
Ball also said the issue will be discussed by a bilateral environmental working group this month and "in the near future" by Secretary of State George P. Shultz and Mexico's Foreign Secretary Bernardo Sepulveda.
The assistant secretary added that if higher level talks are necessary, "we will recommend that the ... issue be placed as an important item on the agenda of the meeting of President Reagan and Mexican President (Miguel) de la Madrid later this year."

Last spring, Reagan responded to increasing Canadian complaints about U.S. sources of acid rain by reaching an agreement with Prime Minister Brian Mulroney for a joint U.S.-Canadian study of cross-border pollution. Canadian officials have complained that industrial air pollution from the northern United States is the major source of acid rain pollution in Canadian lakes.
The State Department, according to Ball, doesn't want to go empty handed to the discussion with Mexico, which has complained to this country about border-crossing sulfur dioxide emissions from a copper smelting plant in Douglas, Ariz.
Ball said officials have asked the Environmental Protection Agency to deny annual relicensing to the Douglas facility.

1st Assembly to show film

"God's Prison Gang," a film featuring Al Capone's getaway driver, the last member of Bonnie and Clyde's gang and two other notorious criminals who have become Christians, will be shown at 6:30 p.m. Sunday at the First Assembly of God Church, 500 S. Cuyler.

The film, shot behind the walls of New York's Attica prison and hosted by Art Linkletter, tells the story of how the work of International Prison Ministry is accomplishing what more guards, higher prison walls and greater financial expenditures have failed to do — keep released inmates from returning to lives of crime.

Telling their stories in the 44-minute film are George Meyer, Al Capone's favorite driver; Floyd Hamilton (Public Enemy No. 1), the last of the Bonnie and Clyde gang; Jerry Graham, the "robber king" of California, and Ted Jefferson, convicted of crimes from drugs and robbery to murder.

Also featured is "Chaplain Ray," whose Dallas-based International Prison Ministry has changed the lives of thousands of inmates over the past 18 years.

Rev. John Farina, pastor of First Assembly, said he hopes all citizens concerned about the problem of rising crime will attend the free screening of the film.

Church plans special series

Evangelist Eddie Hundley of Dallas and his family will be ministering at 7:30 p.m. daily Sunday through Wednesday at the Lamar Full Gospel Assembly Church, 1200 S. Sumner.

Rev. Hundley has been in fulltime gospel ministry for 40 years, beginning with his two brothers as teenagers in a group known as the Hundley Brothers Trio.

The evangelist has attended Southwestern Bible Institute and Wayland Bible College. He has pastored churches in Lubbock, Plainview, Galveston, Waco and Irving in Texas and in Albuquerque, N.M.

For many years he has been a popular speaker at colleges, camp meetings and conventions. The Hundleys have traveled in every part of the United States and many foreign countries.

Rev. Gene Allen, local pastor, said Rev. Hundley deals with prophetic subjects much of the time in his preaching and teaching.

In the crusade here he will be joined by his family, who will be ministering in music. They have developed a unique and enjoyable style of country gospel music, Rev. Allen said.

The pastor invited the public to attend the special series of services.

Church schedules Florida missionary

Brother Carl James, a missionary in Miami, Fla., to the Spanish-speaking people, will be the featured speaker at the morning services of Mary Ellen and Harvester Church of Christ at 10:30 a.m. Sunday.

James will report on the mission work that he and his wife, Edith, are doing in the Miami area. He also will discuss the far-reaching results being reported in Central and South America.

Pastor Gene Glaeser said the Mary Ellen and Harvester Church of Christ "fully supports the James' effort in Miami."

Continuing in the special summer series for the Wednesday evening services, Ron Babbit of Chickasha, Okla., will be speaking at 7:30 p.m. July 10 on "The High Cost of Loving."

Each week an out-of-town speaker brings a message on the topic of his choice. Classes are held for grades 5 and under each Wednesday evening after a short devotional while all others remain in the auditorium for the guest speaker.

Religion Roundup

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Some little children were registered as voting "messengers" at the recent Southern Baptist Convention in Dallas, says registration secretary Lee Porter.

He estimates "75 to 100 children 6 years of age or younger" were registered from local churches, including one 4-year-old. He notes that the denomination's constitution provides only that "messengers" must be a member of the local church that sends them, and sets no age requirements.

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Reform rabbis have voiced "moral outrage" at the continued holding of seven kidnapped Americans in Lebanon and at the ordeal of the airline hostages released this week.

The convention of the Central Conference of American Rabbis condemned "those kidnapers and murderers masquerading as political idealists, who have threatened lives and torn families apart in these recent situations."

Small rural churches share resources

By KAREN SULLIVAN-TURPEN
Sulphur Springs News-Telegram
SULPHUR SPRINGS, Texas
(AP) — A group of small Hopkins County United Methodist churches has been honored for its modern application of an old principle — working together for the common good.

The two-year-old Hopkins County Cooperative Parish recently won the first Marvin T. Judy Award for Excellence in Rural Ministry awarded by the United Methodist Board of Church Development of the North Texas Conference.

The Rev. John Allen directs the cooperative parish, made up of five small churches — Como, Arbala, Reilly Springs, Gafford Chapel and Pickton — that function both independently and together to meet the needs of their rural communities.

The circuit-riding minister serving more than one small church was a tradition in pioneer America, and the cooperative parish is a modern refinement of the idea.

"For 20 years in this area," he said, "the way Methodist churches reacted to diminishing parishes was to combine churches, and people didn't like this."

Marvin T. Judy began studying ways to alleviate this dissatisfaction, Allen said, and a cooperative parish is one solution he came up with. Judy came into this area over two years ago and helped the churches that now make up the Hopkins County Cooperative Parish (HCCP) decide to become a co-op.

Allen was asked to help set it up. A native of Northeast Texas and graduate of Southern Methodist University's Perkins School of Theology, he came to Como two years ago from First United Methodist Church in Wichita Falls where he was assistant pastor.

"They were given a choice to join," Allen said. "This way the churches have a vested interest and are not forced to participate."

There was only one cooperative parish in this area before the creation of the HCCP, Allen said. It is in North Lamar and has been there for 10 years.

Five more began in Northeast Texas last year, and two inner-city cooperative parishes were formed in Dallas.

Many small, rural churches have had trouble keeping a sizable congregation because there are usually too few people to participate in many normal church activities, Allen said.

A cooperative parish maintains the small-church atmosphere and each church's individuality, Allen explained, but the churches work together on ministries that take more people.

For example, each church in the HCCP conducts its own weddings, funerals, worship services, Sunday school classes and vacation Bible schools.

But they cooperate on a newsletter, youth group, children's choir, men's group and older adults' group. The churches also hold joint social events four or five times a year.

"We do together what these churches wouldn't ordinarily be able to do on their own," Allen said.

"Much that we do is just to enable groups to get together," he said. "It alleviates the frustrations of having too few to do things."

"This co-op has encouraged enthusiasm and cooperation," Allen said, "because they know people will show up and participate, whereas before there might have been only a few."

Attendance is up in each church by about 30 percent, Allen said. All churches had seen significant decreases in attendance for 10 years prior to the creation of the HCCP.

The HCCP also enables better pastoral care, according to Allen. Before, only Como and Pickton had full-time pastors, and now Allen and his assistant, John Hicks, provide pastoral services for each of the five churches.

Both pastors share the full-time preaching duties. One week one of them preaches at 10 a.m. in Pickton and 11 a.m. in Como, while the other preaches at 9, 10 and 11 a.m. at Arbala, Reilly Springs and Gafford Chapel. The next week they switch.

The cooperative parish has had positive effects on the churches involved in areas other than attendance.

Last fall Reilly Springs built a new fellowship hall. Gafford Chapel has slabs and sidewalks poured for a new sanctuary, and the old one has been remodeled for a parish hall and Sunday school classrooms.

The youth group recently painted the Arbala church as a volunteer service project, and the cooperative parish as a whole has received a grant from the Visionaires branch of the United Methodist Church, which is a funding group for development of growth.

"Before (the development of the HCCP), the communities wondered what kind of future their churches had," Allen said. "Now they can see positive future developments."

Construction on the new sanctuary began mid-June, and it is expected to be complete by the end of October. A centennial celebration is planned in Pickton July 26, when the new fellowship hall will be officially dedicated.

The HCCP has a constitution, and a parish council — two people from each church, one adult youth coordinator and the two pastors — meets monthly to administer the cooperative parish business.

Projects sponsored by the HCCP have included a Pickton Christmas program, monthly trips to nursing homes for singing and visiting, and last Easter a sunrise Easter pageant brought over 300 people to Reilly Springs at 6 a.m.

"I think there is still room for growth," Allen said. "It just depends on how hard we want to work."

"It has been challenging and rewarding," he said about serving and directing the HCCP, "and the people have been so good."

Pastor-cartoonist does balancing act

By COLEEN NEUMANN
Fergus Falls Daily Journal
NEW YORK MILLS, Minn. (AP) — Ray Johnson says being a small-town pastor and a political cartoonist requires a special kind of balancing act.

"Nothing is sacred in their viewpoint," Johnson says of cartoonists. "While I understand and appreciate that, I have some problems with it. Because of my role in our small town, I naturally can't take that kind of approach. It would be in poor taste."

"But I also kind of envy that freedom."

Johnson combines his avocation as a commercial artist and cartoonist with his vocation as pastor of St. Peter's Lutheran Church of New York Mills. His cartoons appear regularly in the New York Mills Herald and in several daily newspapers and church publications.

While Johnson uses cartoons to express his religious, as well as political, views, he sometimes finds those same religious views complicate his work as a cartoonist.

As art draftsmen, political humorists are free to create outrageous caricatures of politicians, poke fun at human nature and make poignant statements about the inadequacies of our society. Johnson revels in having that natural ability to cartoon, but he strives not to abuse it.

"To me, people are sacred and their lives are sacred, and they have a right to that special kind of dignity. And I don't care if it's Richard Nixon, or whoever," he says. "I suppose that's the danger — to find that kind of balance."

In his cartoons, which take their humor from rural and small-town characters, Johnson says he tries to preserve the integrity of individuals and organizations while illustrating the natural humor of people — humor that helps us cope with life's sorrows and celebrate its joys.

"I really appreciate people — and every small town and every neighborhood has them — people who are humorists. I try to capture some of that. It's not falling-down kind of humor, it's just those things that remind us we ought not to take everything so seriously," he explains.

Johnson sees humor as "a form of grace" at which some people are natural. He focuses on people he's familiar with — cartooning stalwart Minnesotans, or reluctant city officials, or theologians at conventions getting carried away by their own importance.

"I appreciate a total picture of things. There are times when we forget that the average person lives a combination of sadness and celebration. And while we might call a tragedy 'news,' that does not sum up what life is. That's only a part of what life is," he says. "In cartooning, I like to celebrate that joy and dignity and roundness of life."

While Johnson meets a 10:30 a.m. deadline every Sunday to deliver a sermon, he's less comfortable meeting a weekly deadline for cartoons. He sells his cartoons on an "as-available" basis.

Johnson, a native of northern Michigan, got his formal training as a commercial art student in Chicago. He worked there for three years before going into the seminary.

He began cartooning about eight years ago, busying himself at Lutheran Church of American synodical conventions drawing cartoons for church publication.

Johnson's cartoons have won the Minnesota Newspaper Association Best Editorial Cartoon Award (in the circulation category 2,501-4,000) for the past three years. This year's winner is a strong statement against prayer in public schools. Johnson says the cartoon takes a stab at people's hypocrisy and underlines his belief in separation of church and state.

"My concern is that people are really not stumbling all over themselves to pray, but they want their kids to pray in public schools," he explains.

SPORTS SCENE

Sports Forum and Agin 'Um WARREN HASSE

FROM THE NOTEPAD: Thanks but...plaudits for the special Pampa Harvester sports section last Sunday should go to Advertising Director Ken Dulaney, a member of the PHS basketball program in the late 1950s, who put it all together. His older brother, Jumpin' Jim Dulaney was a playmaker guard of Clifton McNeely's 1951-52 squad that went 24-2 and didn't get out of district, both losses to Tex Hanna's Borger Bulldogs. One was a 48-42 defeat in the dedication game at what is now McNeely Fieldhouse. Speaking of the old timers, the Class of '65 is holding a 20-year reunion tomorrow, starting with registration at 9:30 a.m. at the Band Room. Afternoon activities are being held at Celanese, with a banquet at M.K. Brown Auditorium at night. The 20-13 football win over Palo Duro should be the subject of conversation for Teddy Bird, Woodie Leonard, Lewis Meers, Bill Cummings, Jon Windsor, Dan Patterson, Johnny Lofton, T.J. Winters, Berry Craig, Dave Taylor, Jerry Wright, Larry Eckroat, Glynn Abbott, Billy Quarles, Gary Jarrard, Billy Stokes, Joey Roden, Larry Daniels, Roy Harper, and Fighting Heart Award winner Jim Moore. Basketballers can talk about Kerry Roper's basket with one second left to provide a 64-62 win over Haltom City for the bi-district win at TCU's Meyer Coliseum, and forget about the 65-62 loss in El Paso a few night's later in the regional championship, which evolved into a free throw shooting contest with a total of 54 attempted. Seniors on that squad were David McDaniel, Ron Curlee, Roper, Hustling Harvester Lanny Lewis, Carl Harnsberger and Richard Fatheree. At least the border skyline scenic bus ride along the mountain ridge after the defeat was pleasant. Other athletes from that year who will hopefully be present include Skip Warren, Vic Keyes, Mark Westbrook (who set a state mile run record) and Barbara Vickery. Welcome back! Sympathies to veteran sports official James Kile on the passing of his father Tuesday. James is president of the state basketball officials group, and also coaches wrestling at Tascosa HS. Legendary and beloved Coach Odus Mitchell, who started his career in Pampa in the 1920s, called to request a copy of last Sunday's special Harvester section. At age 86, this magnificent athlete who earned 16 letters in sports at West Texas State Teachers College, plays golf regularly at Denton and shoots his age with consistency. Applications for the Texas Tech athletic directorship close July 20, with John Conley's successor to be named by August 15, possibly as early as August 1. Greg Nichols, youngest of the three basketball coaching Nichols brothers, has moved from Carl Albert JC in Oklahoma City to the head post at Canadian HS. Brother Garland, having filled all vacancies in his staff, will head toward a very brief vacation and then working at coach Gerald Meyer's basketball camp July 14-19. Robert Chaney, head coach at Hartley the past 3 years, becomes Harvester assistant succeeding Frank McCullough, who moves to head boys and girls golf coach, succeeding Mike Brent. Brent has been hired as golf coach at Austin Westlake HS; Jerry Davis, a graduate assistant to Bobby Knight at Indiana the past five years, replaces Sparky Roberts, who has taken the head job at Central City, Nebraska; Mark Elms, with 12 years of experience at Hennessey, Okla., succeeds Jamie Walling, who becomes assistant at Richardson HS; and Clay Richerson moves from the Hereford system to replace Mike Traphagen, who is going to teach math at L.D. Bell HS and return to computer school. One coaching vacancy still exists in the football area as the annual shuffle continues across the USA.

Canyon ISD is planning to get into the UIL volleyball program, with introduction of the girls' sport at the two junior highs this fall at a startup cost of about $21,000. Payback: Ten years ago Kevin Long, Channel 10 sports anchor, came from New York City to West Texas State on a basketball scholarship. Assistant football coach Jerry Behrens whose duties included athletic dining hall supervision, took the lonely young man under his wing and became a very close friend. Last Sunday Tom Long, Kevin's father, went out to Kennedy Airport in NYC to pick up Phil Behrens, Jerry's son, who was to start an exciting educational-athletic experience Monday at West Point US Military Academy. Alcott leads Mazda tourney

SUGAR LAND, Texas (AP) — Amy Alcott has a valid reason for breaking into a rain dance before today's second round of the $300,000 LPGA Mazda Hall of Fame Championship golf tournament. She won the Dinah Shore Classic in 1983 despite winds which she estimated reached 50 mph, and won the U.S. Open in 115-degree heat.

"I've always played my best golf under adverse conditions because I consider it a challenge," Alcott said. "When the conditions are the toughest, I get tougher. I'm great for plugging away."

Alcott was in her element Thursday, firing a 3-under-par 69 over the rain-soaked 6,470-yard, par-72 Sweetwater Country Club course to take a two-shot lead over the trio of Nancy Lopez, Sally Quinlan and Pat Bradley.

Hall of Famer JoAnne Carner, Beverly Davis and Kay Kennedy each finished another stroke back with even-par 72s.

"You have to play with patience and not expect too much of yourself," said Alcott, a two-time winner this season. "You try to make pars and no bogeys. I really held myself together on those last four holes," when she had a pair of birdies and two par-saving putts.

Rain fell throughout Thursday's first round, leaving the fairways soggy although the greens remained in good condition. Only seven players among the field of 144 matched or bettered par.

Lopez had three birdies on the front side and made the turn at three under par, then ran in a 15-foot birdie putt on No. 11 to go four under. But her round fell apart with bogies on the three closing holes. She two-putted from 10 feet on No. 16, three-putted from 30 feet on 17 and two-putted from 10 feet in the final hole.

"I couldn't read the green on 17 because of the water," Lopez said. "On 18, I thought I'd made it."

Kathy Whitworth, the tour's winningest player and another member of the Hall of Fame, was three under par after 10 holes but wilted under the rain to finish at 73.

"There was no roll at all today," she said. "You hit from one puddle to another puddle. The greens were fine. The course is not unplayable. They've got to get the tournament in."

Ryan closes in 4,000 K's

HOUSTON (AP) — Atlanta's 19-year-old Nolan Ryan of the New York Mets on Sept. 11, 1966, It was Ryan's first major league strikeout and the start of a phenomenal string of batters' swings and misses that is still continuing.

Ryan Express keeps rollin' along.

San Diego's Bobby Brown was the latest to feel the sting of Ryan's arsenal when he fanned in a game Monday to become the 3,990th strikeout victim of Ryan's 17-year career.

Ryan will pitch again Saturday night against Montreal in the Astrodome with a chance to become the first pitcher to reach the 4,000-strikeout milestone.

Ryan, 38, was the leader of an assault on a record many experts thought would never be broken — Walter Johnson's career strikeout total of 3,508 that stood for 56 years until Ryan broke it April 27, 1983 by fanning Montreal's Brad Mills.

Philadelphia's Steve Carlton and Seattle's Gaylord Perry also surpassed Johnson and suddenly the unbreakable record has been broken by three pitchers.

Three other active pitchers, Chicago's Tom Seaver, New York's Phil Niekro and Oakland's Don Sutton, also are well over 3,000 career strikeouts.

How could such an unreachable goal be eclipsed by three pitchers after it had stood for more than half a century?

Ryan says it's better conditioning and nutrition. Philadelphia pitching coach Claude Osteen suggests it's because some of the game's hitting stars have retired from the game.

"We're just in one of those cycles where people are pitching longer," Ryan said. "I think it's from the fact that we are benefitting from increased knowledge in nutrition and conditioning."

"Athletes are more advanced today than they were 20 years ago when I came into the league."

Ryan has trained meticulously throughout his career, especially during the off-season.

"There is a new generation of players," Osteen said. "In the National League, four, five, six years ago, every club had superstars. Chicago had Billy Williams, Ron Santo, Ernie Banks. Cincinnati had (Johnny) Bench, (Pete) Rose, (Tony) Perez, (Joe) Morgan.

"That generation has been weeded out and replaced by all new players. Inexperienced hitters are undisciplined hitters and undisciplined hitters swing at a lot of balls. Consequently, you end up with a lot of strikeouts."

Ryan agrees. "I struck out a lot more people in the 70s than I have in the 80s," Ryan said. "I faced probably as many Hall of Famers or future Hall of Famers in the period I've pitched as any pitcher that's pitched in the big leagues."

Osteen also thinks pitchers coming into the major leagues are more versatile.

"They're coming out of college with more than two pitches," Osteen said. "In addition to a slider and refined curve ball, they also have trick pitches, unorthodox pitches, good screw balls, fork balls, palm ball, split finger fastballs and a variety of off-speed pitches."

Carlton, currently on the disabled list with 3,908, and Ryan, became effective strikeout pitchers when they developed their breaking pitches, Tim McCarver, Carlton's former catcher says.

Longest rivalry continues

Navratilova, Lloyd in Wimbledon showdown

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — Martina Navratilova and Chris Evert Lloyd set up another chapter in the longest-running show in tennis history Thursday, advancing to their showdown in the Wimbledon final with contrasting semifinal victories.

Pressed by the inspired play of eighth-seeded Zina Garrison, Navratilova fought back every challenge to emerge a 6-4, 7-6 winner. Lloyd was never tested in her 6-2, 6-0 romp over Kathy Rinaldi.

The twin victories set up the 66th meeting of their careers, the longest rivalry in the sport. They will clash Saturday for the fifth time for the championship at the All England Lawn Tennis and Croquet Club. Navratilova will be seeking her fourth straight Wimbledon title and attempting to avenge a defeat last month to Evert in the French Open final.

On Friday, the men's semifinals will pit third-seeded Jimmy Connors, seeking his third crown on these famed grass courts, against newly naturalized American Kevin Curren, while No. 5 Anders Jarryd faces the hard-serving, 17-year-old Boris Becker of West Germany.

Curren, a South African expatriate who stunned defending champion John McEnroe in Wednesday's quarterfinals, also upset Connors here two years ago, while Becker, with McEnroe out, has become the favorite of London's bookmakers.

The men's final will be staged at Centre Court on Sunday.

Garrison, the first black American to reach the women's semifinals of this prestigious event since Althea Gibson won the title in 1958 for the second successive year, gave Navratilova all she could handle.

"It was a good mental match because I had to play good, solid tennis," Navratilova said. "I could have lost the second set, definitely."

Instead, it was vintage Navratilova who captured the first five points of the tiebreaker before wrapping it up 7-3 to advance to Saturday's match.

The second semifinal was a complete contrast as Lloyd, going after her third consecutive Grand Slam title, brushed aside her 18-year-old opponent in 63 minutes — the second set lasting just 19 minutes.

"In the first set, Kathy made me work," said Lloyd. "We had some good rallies and she hits the ball really hard, which is what I needed."

So once again it's Navratilova versus Lloyd in a Grand Slam tournament final.

"I think Martina is a little more eager for this tournament," said Lloyd, who beat Navratilova in the French Open final last month. "Whenever you have a loss, like she did the French, you maybe work a little bit harder."

"So I think she'll really be out for a type of revenge."

Navratilova agreed. "I always have something to prove," she said. "That's the trouble and the beauty of it. You put yourself on the line everytime you go out there. You always have something to prove, and you have to keep proving it to yourself as well as everybody else."

Sacks holds off Elliott to win Firecracker

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Sports crowds tend to love an underdog and the fans at Daytona International Speedway were quick to jump on Greg Sacks' bandwagon when he moved in front of superstar Bill Elliott midway through the Pepsi Firecracker 400.

"I knew the crowd was behind me," the jubilant Sacks said Thursday after winning his first Grand National stock car race. "Every time I came by the stands after I got near the front there were arms waving out through the fence and people with thumbs up and waving me on. What a feeling."

It was an incredible victory for the 32-year-old driver from Mattituck, N.Y., who had never finished better than sixth in 40 previous Grand National starts and whose own family-backed team ran out of operating money in May.

Sacks, who earned a career-high $45,350 for the victory, was at Daytona as part of a new research and development effort organized by Bill Gardner, who along with his brother, Jim, owns the DiGard team that fields a car for 1983 Winston Cup champion Bobby Allison.

Gary Nelson, who recently took over the research and development effort full time for Gardner, giving up his team manager duties with Allison, headed a rag-tag pit crew that helped Sacks to victory in the group's first race together.

They beat the red-hot team of Bill Elliott and his brother-crew chief-engine builder, Ernie, who had combined for seven victories in the last nine races on super-speedways — tracks one mile or more in length.

Elliott commanded much of the 160-lap race after fellow front-row starter Cale Yarborough went out with a broken transmission after only 24 laps around the 2.5-mile, high-banked oval.

But Elliott eventually succumbed to a fuel pickup problem that allowed him to use only about 17 of the 22 gallons in his tank between pit stops. His stops had to be made earlier than the other contenders, throwing him out of synch and forcing him to give up the lead for a quick fuel stop just nine laps from the end.

Even with the oar that dominated the Daytona 500 in February and started from the pole here Thursday after qualifying at 201.523 mph, he couldn't make up that disadvantage and finished 23.98 seconds behind Sacks.

"It just goes to show you how competitive it is right now," said Elliott, who still leads the Winston

Cup point standings. "If you make a little mistake or have a little something go wrong with your car, that's all there is between winning and losing."

Darrell Waltrip held onto second place in the season standings with a third-place finish, while Ron Bouchard was fourth and Kyle Petty fifth.

Sacks averaged 158.730 mph.

Norman shares lead

OAKVILLE, Ontario (AP) — Greg Norman, the powerful Australian known to his fellow touring golf pros as "The Great White Shark," posed a question, and then provided an answer.

"Is it time to get another shark attack going? I sure hope so."

Norman, slowed by a bout with a virus early this year, made his first big move of the season with a 5-under-par 67 that provided him with a share of the first round lead Thursday in the $650,000 Canadian Open.

Norman, the defending title-holder, built his score by dominating the par-5 holes on the Glen Abbey Golf Club course. He reached three of them using irons for his second shots, got into a greenside bunker in two strokes on the other and played the long holes five under par with three birdies and an eagle. He missed a second eagle when he two-putted from five feet.

He was tied for the top spot with tour sophomore Jim Gallagher, who plays most of his golf on the Tournament Players Series, a secondary tour, and got into the field for the Canadian national championship by invitation.

Johnny Miller, a former U.S. and British Open champion who hasn't won in two years, had an eagle-par-birdie finish that gave him a 68, one shot off the pace.

Bruce Lietzke, a two-time Canadian Open winner, led a group at 69. Also at that figure were current leading money-winner Curtis Strange, Allen Miller, Bob Tway, Brett Upper and Pat McGowan.

Jack Nicklaus, six times a runnerup but never a winner in the Canadian Open, opened with a 70.

PGA champion Lee Trevino, ambushed by a triple-bogey 7 on the ninth, struggled to a 75.

Mets win 'unbelievable' game

By DICK BRINSTER
AP Sports Writer

The New York Mets have played some long and whacky baseball games in their colorful existence, so any claim that a 19-inning victory over the Atlanta Braves was the most eventful bears careful scrutiny.

But the 6-hour, 10-minute game — which started Thursday night and was extended into the wee hours of the morning by two rain delays and a pair of two-out, two-strike, game-tying home runs by Atlanta — won't soon be forgotten by those who witnessed it.

"It was the most unbelievable game I have ever seen or been involved in," said Ray Knight, whose two-run double keyed the five-run 19th that led the Mets to a 16-13 victory.

"I saw things I had never seen in a game before in my career," said 12-year veteran Keith Hernandez, only the second Met ever to hit for the cycle. "At the 17th inning, I felt that I just had to call somebody. I called my brother Gary and told him that I just wanted him to know I was still out there playing."

And then there was winning pitcher Tom Gorman, who kept thrilling the dwindling thousands — not to mention Atlanta's Rick Camp and Terry Harper — each time he was within one strike of closing it out.

"I thought then I had seen it all," Gorman said. "I had two strikes on Harper (in the 13th inning) and he hit it out, and then I had two on Camp (in the 18th) and he hit it out."

Normalcy prevailed elsewhere in the National League on Thursday night. It was St. Louis 3, Los Angeles 2; San Diego 9, Pittsburgh 1; San Francisco 6, Chicago 4; Philadelphia 3, Cincinnati 1; and Montreal 9, Houston 3 in 12 innings.

Ironically, the longest game of the 1985 season figured to be a pitchers' battle with New York's Dwight Gooden, 11-3, opposing Atlanta's Rick Mahler, 11-7. As it turned out, they were the first of seven pitchers used by each side. The Braves used 23 players in all, New York 22.

The Mets, who set a club record with 28 hits, were led by Hernandez's single, double, triple and home run; Gary Carter's five hits; and three hits each by Knight and Howard Johnson, who didn't enter the game until the ninth inning, when he ignited a rally with a pinch-hit single.

A crowd of 44,947 came out for the game and a post-game fireworks show. About 10,000 were still around at 4 a.m. when the first skyrocket exploded over Atlanta Fulton County Stadium.

Cardinals 3, Dodgers 2
Joaquin Andujar had some extra rest that created control problems, but the St. Louis pitcher — hoping to become the first NL hurler since Steve Carlton in 1976-77 to win 20 games two years in a row — had it when it counted.

And it really counted in the sixth inning after the 32-year-old right-hander issued three of his five walks. But Andujar escaped a bases-loaded jam by getting Los Angeles catcher Mike Scioscia to ground out.

He was touched for a run in the seventh, but Tom Nieto's eighth-inning single broke a 2-2 tie and an exhausted Andujar hung on to complete his eighth game of the season as the Cardinals won for the 14th time in 18 games.

Padres 9, Pirates 1
It was a sad day for baseball in Pittsburgh where the Pirates, last in the league in attendance and victories, suffered humiliation both on the field and at the box office.

Garry Templeton drove in four runs, three with a sixth-inning double, and Eric Show, 7-5, scattered seven hits as San Diego handed Pittsburgh its fourth straight loss before a derisive holiday crowd of 10,102 at Three Rivers Stadium.

Even Manager Chuck Tanner, the Pirates' resident optimist, sounded a note of alarm. "I didn't like what I saw," Tanner said after a post-game meeting with his coaches.

Giants 6, Cubs 4
Bob Brenly is not an accomplished bunter, and he took the Giants out of a possible second-inning rally when he failed to sacrifice. But his 10th homer of the season, a two-run shot off Steve Trout in the fourth, and his run-scoring single in the eighth led a San Francisco comeback.

Chicago turned a NL season-high five double plays.

Phillies 3, Reds 1
Philadelphia's Kevin Gross wasn't feeling well when he arose, but it wasn't reflected in his pitching.

Gross, 7-7, tossed a three-hitter and Juan Samuel, Von Hayes and Ozzie Virgil hit solo homers off Cincinnati's Mario Soto.

"My head was still clogged when I got to the ballpark," and "I developed a bloody nose in the seventh," Gross explained.

Cincinnati's Pete Rose went hitless and remained 37 shy of Ty Cobb's major league record of 4,191.

Expos 9, Astros 3
It took 12 innings, but Montreal muscled its way past Houston with Tim Wallach's three-run homer highlighting a six-run final inning: Wallach hit his fifth homer off Bill Dawley, who relieved loser Frank DiPino.

Reliever Randy St. Claire, 3-1, was the winner while DiPino fell to 1-5.

Yankees keep Fourth of July win streak going

The New York Yankees just can't seem to lose on the Fourth of July. The way Ron Guidry is pitching, he can't lose on any day.

Both the team and the player continued relentless streaks Thursday in a 3-2 victory over the Minnesota Twins — the Yankees winning their eighth straight game on Independence Day and Guidry winning his ninth straight this season.

Guidry's 10-3 record is his best start since his 25-3 season of 1978, when he won the Cy Young Award.

The Yankees bunched four hits in the first inning to score three runs off John Butcher, 5-8, who lost for the sixth time in his last seven decisions.

In other American League games, it was Chicago 5, Cleveland 0; Seattle 7, Milwaukee 1; Texas 4, Detroit 1; Baltimore 5, Kansas City 3; California 5, Boston 4; and Oakland 3, Toronto 2. White Sox 5, Indians 0

Britt Burns tossed a four-hitter and Carlton Fisk collected two hits and knocked in a run to lead Chicago over Cleveland, only the third victory for the struggling White Sox in their last 14 games.

Burns, 8-6, struck out five and walked two while pitching his fourth complete game and second shutout of the season. The left-hander has defeated Cleveland three times this season without allowing a run in 23 innings.

Bert Blyleven, 7-8, took the loss despite pitching his league-leading 11th complete game. Mariners 7, Brewers 1

Mike Moore hurled a four-hitter and Dave Henderson hit a three-run homer to lead Seattle over Milwaukee.

Moore, 7-4, retired the first 17 batters and didn't allow a runner to reach second base until the seventh when Cecil Cooper doubled with one out. Ted Simmons singled home Cooper for the Brewers' only run. Rangers 4, Tigers 1

Burt Hooton pitched a six-hitter and Pete O'Brien knocked in two runs to lead Texas over Detroit. Hooton was backed by the defensive play of third baseman Buddy Bell, who made three good plays to rob Detroit batters of hits.

Hooton, 4-2, walked two and struck out seven, a season high. Loser Walt Terrell, 9-4, went all the way for the Tigers, walking three and striking out two.

The victory, Hooton's 150th career win, came in front of 42,445, the second largest crowd in Rangers' history. Orioles 5, Royals 3

Floyd Rayford and Eddie Murray drove in two runs apiece, powering Baltimore over Kansas City. Dennis Martinez, 7-5, was the winner with 5 2-3 innings of six-hit pitching, leaving after giving up a three-run homer to Darryl Motley in the sixth.

Nate Snell finished up for the Orioles, recording his fourth save. Royals starter Bud Black, 5-9, suffered his sixth straight loss.

Angels 5, Red Sox 4

Jerry Narron's three-run homer in the seventh inning lifted California over Boston before an Anaheim Stadium crowd of 62,951, the major league's largest of the season.

With Boston leading 4-2, Bobby Grich and Doug DeCinces delivered one-out singles off Dennis Boyd, 9-7, before Narron hit his fifth homer.

The Independence Day crowd was the third largest in Anaheim Stadium history for a regular-season game, and the fifth biggest overall.

A's 3, Blue Jays 2

Former Blue Jay Dave Collins' single scored Mike Heath from third with the winning run in the bottom of the ninth inning, leading Oakland over visiting Toronto before a holiday turnout of 46,770.

Reliever Bill Caudill, 4-4, the fourth Toronto pitcher, had worked out of a bases-loaded jam in the eighth inning before giving up the winning run in the ninth.

Banks open exchange houses to operate on free market

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Some of the nation's largest banks are taking advantage of a new government decision and are buying and selling pesos in the free market, officials said Thursday.

The move is expected to ease recent frantic speculation in the currency, which has driven the exchange rate to record levels by Mexicans apparently nervous about a further devaluation of the currency and the nation's falling oil prices.

But a Mexican banker, who would speak only on condition he not be identified, said transactions in the new "super-free" rate were slow. Wary investors, he said, were waiting to see how the operations fare.

Long lines were still spotted at banks where Mexicans waited to buy dollars at the lower rates set by the government.

A financial newspaper, El Financiero, reported that foreign exchange windows operated by three banks at the city's international airport traded pesos for $2.2 million in the last six days, which mark the start of the Mexican vacation season. The money was changed at the government-set rates and limited to $500 per adult and $250 per child.

The exchange rate offered by banks for free-market transactions was steady in Mexico City at midday Thursday, although still higher than the two rates set by the government.

Financial markets in the United States, where much of the speculation has occurred, were closed for the Fourth of July holiday, however.

The black-market rate earlier in the week had tumbled from the highs of last Friday when investors apparently reacted to rumors about the government's move to let banks buy and sell currency on the free market.

The government announced the decision late Friday in an effort to stabilize exchange rates and some private analysts viewed the action as an unofficial devaluation of the peso.

The new transactions are carried out at the "super-free" rate, a name used to differentiate it from the two exchange rates — the controlled and the free — set by the government.

Arturo Lopez, a spokesman for the Treasury Department, said two or three of the nationalized banks had already set up exchange houses as permitted under the new regulations. More were expected in the coming days, he said.

Banamex and Bancomer, two of the nation's largest banks, opened operations in the "super-free" market on Wednesday. Serfin Bank, another large institution, started operations Thursday, said a foreign exchange trader.

El Financiero said sellers of dollars, operating outside the exchange houses on the "black market," were demanding 335 pesos.

Names in News

BOSTON (AP) — The ex-wife of Sen. Edward M. Kennedy says she feels betrayed by a forthcoming biography written by her former aide that reportedly details her feelings about the death of Mary Jo Kopechne "at Chappaquiddick."

Joan Kennedy, 48, told The Boston Globe in an interview published Thursday that she tried to talk her former administrative assistant, Marcis Chellis, out of writing the book. "Living with the Kennedys: The Joan Kennedy Story."

"I told her I felt betrayed," said Mrs. Kennedy. "I think it is a real breach of confidentiality. In no way have I authorized or contributed to this publication."

OXFORD, England (AP) — Thirteen-year-old Ruth Lawrence had never been to school before she entered Oxford two years ago. Now she has a mathematics degree from the esteemed university.

Ruth learned the good news Thursday when exam results were posted at the 800-year-old school in central England. She finished college in two years instead of the normal three, but cannot pick up her degree until next year because the university has a three-year residency requirement.

She was one of two math students who received special commendation from the examiners.

Reports coup failed

CONAKRY, Guinea (AP) — Radio Conakry said today an attempt to overthrow the 15-month-old military government had failed and the army was in control.

There was no word on the fate of former Prime Minister Col. Diarra Traore, who announced hours earlier that he had seized control of the impoverished West African country. There were no reports of violence.

Since late Thursday, the radio had been alternating martial music with an announcement by Traore that he had overthrown the government of President Lansana Conte. The broadcasts were monitored in neighboring Ivory Coast and by the British Broadcasting Corp. in London.

The radio went off the air early today and then resumed broadcasting with the announcement that the army "has taken control of the situation." It did not mention fighting and gave no details of the attempted coup or how it was put down.

Conte, 52, was in Lome, Togo, attending a meeting of the 16-member Summit of the Economic Community of West Africa, of which he is acting chairman. He arrived there late Thursday night shortly before the coup was announced by Radio Conakry.

His foreign minister, Facine Toure, told reporters before the coup's failure was announced that Conte had no statement to make and still considered himself the country's leader.

Conte was expected to address the opening session of the summit and then fly home this afternoon, a member of his delegation said.

Sources among the Guinean delegation in Lome and Western diplomats who said they had been in contact with their embassies in Conakry confirmed that the coup apparently had failed.

In his statement on Radio Conakry, Traore proclaimed the establishment of a ruling Supreme State Council headed by himself and said he took control in order to end "15 months of total disappointment."

He criticized Conte's regime for "foot-dragging in making political, economic and in particular monetary decisions which are to launch the development of our country."

Guinea, with a population of 5.5 million, gained independence from France in 1958. Its great natural wealth in bauxite, high-grade iron ore, diamonds, gold and uranium remains largely untapped, and the country is one of the world's poorest.
