Hearing on Etheredge property postponed

BY CATHY SPAULDING Staff Writer

A hearing on a state's writ of attachment to seize property belonging to Thomas C. Etheredge, owner of the collapsed Bethany Trust Co., and on an order restraining the company from doing business under the name Bethany Trading Co., has been reset to 9:30 a.m. Aug. 1 in the 223rd District Court.

On Monday, District Judge Don Cain reset the hearing on an order for a writ of attatchment from the Texas Banking Commission, which is trying to seize Etheredge's home northwest of Pampa and furnishings worth about $300,000 to repay Bethany Trust investors who lost money with the collapsed firm.

At the hearing Monday, attorney Corky Roberts, representing Etheridge and other defendants — his wife Deborah Etheredge and Timothy and Rita Bortka — claimed that he had not been served notice that any hearing was to be held.

"Our notice came through a third party, the newspaper," Roberts told Judge Cain. Neither the Etheredges nor the Bortkas were present at the hearing.

The order for the writ of attachment, filed July 12, said that notice would be given to all defendants by certified and regular mail and by certified mail to their attorney Doug Mulder, a Dallas attorney.

However, representatives of the court clerk's office say that they have no proof of service on file.

Assistant District Attorney David Hamilton said that he has spoken with Mulder on several occasions about the case, adding that Mulder has never made it clear who he's representing. Hamilton suspects that Mulder will represent the company in pending criminal matters.

A 14-count indictment was returned against Bethany Trust in May charging that the firm violated the state securities act. The company was assessed a fine of $500,000.

Among the items requested in the writ of attatchment are a three-acre tract of land west of Price Road on 23rd Street, an account in the name of Bethany Trust & Co. in the First Bank & Trust Co. of White Deer, a 1978 Plymouth Voyager Van, 1984 Dodge pick-up truck, a Kobota tractor, three Curtis Mathis VCR video-tape recorders, a hot tub and a 19 inch television set.

The temporary restraining order petition, filed July 12 by the Texas Attorney General's office, seeks to keep Bethany Trading Co., an affiliate of Bethany Trust & Co., from doing business in Texas.

The petition charges the Etheredges and the Bortkas with illegal transfer "of monies of Trust to Trading and to each other of their individual accounts."

The petition contends that the firm has lost at least $300,000.

Hamilton believes such permission from the Attorney General is needed to stop Bethany Trust (Trading) representatives from liquidating any assets that might duly belong to the 140 investors who put nearly $700,000 into the company.

"One thing the attorney general's action has done was to force them to come out into the open," Hamilton said, adding that he feels Roberts was

"solely here to represent Etheredge on the writ"

'solely here to represent Etheredge on the writ.''
On July 12, 31st District Judge Grainger McIlhany fined Bethany Trust half a million dollars after it failed to appear in court to answer various charges of illegal securities transactions.

The charges on which the company was convicted include the sale of unregistered securities, failure to divulge material facts in securities transactions and use of fraudulent and defrauding devices in the sasle of securities.

Bethany Trust was closed April 2 after investigations by the local district attorney's office and the Texas banking commission. According to Hamilton, the company was a "ponzi pyramid" type scheme with money from new investors used to pay off previous investors.

Neither Etheredge nor Bortka have been made themselves available for comment since the April

RECORD JUMP? — These two enterprising Pampa youngsters, Donnie Hicks, 14, (on bike) and Jay Weeden, 15, have launched an ambitious undertaking. They discovered that the Guiness Book of World Records doesn't list a record for the "bunny hop," leaping a bicycle without benefit of a ramp. They plan to try to claim the record and needed proof of their accomplishment. So here is photographic evidence that Donnie made a leap of two feet, five inches off of level ground. (Staff photo)

South African police holding 441 activists

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — The leading white anti-apartheid activist in strife-torn Cape province was arrested today, an hour before she was to meet with three former U.S. Cabinet members, a witness said.

Meanwhile, police said they had detained 441 activists without charge under state-of-emergency powers invoked Sunday for the first time in a quarter century. Col. Jaap Venter of national police headquarters in Pretoria said a list of those detained would be issued later.

Anti-apartheid activist Molly Blackburn was detained at her home in Port Elizabeth for allegedly attending an illegal gathering July 14, said Mike Calabrese, an American lawyer who was at her house when she was arrested.

She had been scheduled to meet with former Secretary of State Cyrus Vance and former U.N. Ambassador Donald McHenry, both of whom served in the Carter administration; and Robert McNamara, secretary of defense in the Kennedy and Johnson administrations.

They are in South Africa on a fact-finding tour for the Ford Foundation.

Calabrese quoted Mrs. Blackburn as asked the officers before they took her away, "Do you mind if I take my knitting?"

Mrs. Blackburn, of the opposition Progressive Federal Party, is a member of the Cape province legislature. She made a brief court appearance in Port Elizabeth, and was released on $50 bail.

She was not asked to plead, and the case was postponed until Aug. 13. Andrew Savage, a member of Parliament from Mrs. Blackburn's party, said the arrest was under the Internal Security Act, and did not fall under the three-day-old state of emergency.

Calabrese, who was held by police for an hour Monday in Graaff-Reinet while he traveled with Mrs. Blackburn, said three policemen arrived at her home this morning.

He said they told her she was under investigation for having attended an illegal gathering in the black township zwide in honor of four prominent activists killed last

Mrs. Blackburn, besides being a member of the provincial council, is a member of the Black Sash anti-apartheid organization. She is the best-known white activist in the riot-torn eastern province, and frequently intercedes for black leaders in trouble with the authorities.

Thousands of blacks were gathering in Kwa-Thema township, east of Johannesburg, for a funeral for 14 or 15 victims of anti-apartheid riots, reporters said. No violence was reported. Most adults heeded a call for a one-day strike to coincide with the funerals.

A government spokesman said about 120,000 black students were boycotting classes across the Priscilla Jana, a well-known Indian lawyer from Johannesburg, said she was detained briefly Monday on her way home from the airport after a trip to the United States. She said police searched her home, and told her to "keep my bags packed."

Police said about 4,000 people attacked a black policeman's home in the township of Tsakane, east of Johannesburg, on Monday, and police killed two blacks and wounded five others.

Another black was killed east of Johannesburg when officers fired into a crowd attacking them, police said.

"(President P.W.) Botha's desperate actions signify the beginning of the end of the apartheid system," African National Congress' secretary-general, Alfred Nzo, said in Lusaka, Zambia. "The proclamation constitutes an open admission by the Pretoria regime that it is losing control."

The African National Congress is the main guerrilla group fighting apartheid, South Africa's system of racial segregation.

Panel okays cul-de-sacs despite ordinance

By LARRY HOLLIS Staff Writer

Despite city ordinance regulations on streets, members of the Planning and Zoning Commission gave approval Monday night to a final plat including cul-de-sacs on three streets in the north section of the city.

The zoning commission voted on a split decision to recommend the plat for approval by the city commission on condition that the city study the cul-de-sac issue and consider relative ordinance restrictions on the street design.

Last night's meeting was a continuation from last Thursday when approximately 40 people attended the public hearing regarding the zoning of the Sanders Park North Addition, located east of Duncan and Perryton Parkway and north of existing developments.

Most residents attending that meeting supported constructing cul-de-sacs on the north ends of Aspen, Beech and Chestnut streets to prevent access onto 29th Ave. Developer Gail Sanders had incorporated the dead-ends into his final plat submitted for zoning commission approval.

But Forrest Cloyd, senior technician with the city's Engineering Department, said current city regulations prohibit cul-de-sacs in most instances.

He explained that subdivision regulations in Ordinance No. 839, Section 8, Paragraph 9, adopted in 1979, does not permit cul-de-sacs "except in unusual cases." The ordinance requires that streets must connect with adjoining streets in a subdivision.

Cul-de-sacs are permitted only where the contours of the land or unusual design development of adjoining land make them appropriate, according to the ordinance requirements.

Cloyd said the continuing streets are designed to be an aid to the access of emergency vehicles, such as fire trucks and ambulances, into a subdivision.

Cloyd said City Attorney Don Lane had indicated the zoning board did not have the authority to approve cul-de-sacs outside of the current zoning ordinance requirements. An ordinance change approved by the city commission would be required to permit the development of the cul-de-sacs, Cloyd said Lane had told him.

Zoning board member Jerry Noles said he supported the cul-de-sacs at the end of the three streets. They would insulate that neighborhood from other development to the north, he said.

Cloyd said the north-south streets were originally intended to extend out into future developments. Cul-de-sacs would end that, he said, and interfere with the access of emergency vehicles.

Resident Billy Hawkins said it wouldn't be much out of the way for such vehicles to reach the blocks cut off by cul-de-sacs. It only takes 10 minutes to drive through the city from the bowling alley south of the city to the hospital on the north, even if you hit every light red, he claimed.

Mahunta Hills, who lives west of Perryton Parkway across from the proposed development, said the residents had indicated a general agreement that the cul-de-sacs are wanted.

Commission member Milo Carlson said he could understand the reasoning of both the residents and the city staff but noted the ordinance would have to be changed to permit the cul-de-sacs in the neighborhood.

Commission member Jay Johnson raised other

Energas announces lawsuits against Cabot, subsidiaries

AMARILLO—Energas Company has announced that it has filed suits against Cabot Corporation, Westar Transmission Company, Cranberry Pipeline Corporation and Gas Marketing, Inc., alleging that those firms have violated state and federal trade laws.

The suits, filed in both U.S. and state district courts, allege that Cabot and some of its subsidiaries committed the violations by manipulating the calculation of gas costs under provisions of a 1983 contract between Energas and Westar which require Energas to purchase all gas for its West Texas System from Westar.

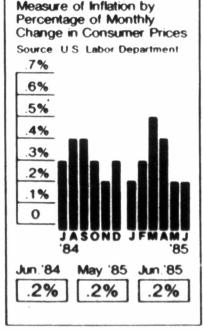

By refusing to grant Energas relief from an "all requirements" provision of the contract, the defendants have restrained Energas' ability to purchase lower cost gas for the West Texas System from other potential suppliers, the suit claims

An Energas news release says this has resulted in Westar having absolute contol over the price Energas pays for gas for its West Texas System, while at the same time, Westar and its affiliates are in direct competition with Energas for certain large volume customers' business.

Energas seeks damages based on what it calls "artifically high prices" it paid for natural gas under provisions of the contract.

The company said it is seeking the awards on behalf of its customers and any damages awarded based on past costs would be refunded to Energas customers based on a formula to be determined later.

Energas is an independent natural gas distribution company headquartered in Amarillo. It serves approximately 288,000 customers in 90 West Texas communities.

June's inflation rise small

WASHINGTON (AP) — Prolonged moderation in food and fuel costs held the June inflation rate to 0.2 percent at the retail level, the government reported today

Grocery prices fell for the fourth straight months, but food and beverage prices overall edged up 0.1 percent, mostly because of a 0.6 percent increase in the price of restaurant meals. Prices for food eaten in the home declined 0.2 percent.

Gasoline prices rose a small 0.2 percent, despite the slackness in world crude oil prices. Transportation costs overall, however, were down 0.1 percent, largely because of a 1.6 percent decline in used car prices.

Analysts have noted that gasoline prices have been rising slightly in the face of falling oil prices, a phenomonon the experts attribute largely to aggressive price increases following the government's July 1 tightening of allowable lead levels in leaded gasoline.

All in all, the Labor Department's Consumer Price Index report for June was a reaffirmation of analysts' longstanding assessment that inflation is unlikely to be any more of a problem this year than last, when prices rose 4 percent.

For the first six months of 1985, prices have risen at a moderate 3.7 percent annual rate. Prices have also risen at the same pace over the last 12 months.

This year opened with monthly price increases of 0.2 percent and 0.3 percent in January and February before jumping 0.5 percent in March and 0.4 percent in April. But the huge advances in fuel prices that produced those large increases evaporated, as predicted, and the May increase was a more typical 0.2 percent.

The department provided these additional details on consumer price activity in June:

—Fresh fruit and vegetable prices declined 1.6 percent, but the meat, poultry, fish and egg category rose 0.1 percent because continued declines in beef and pork costs failed to offset increases for poultry, fish and eggs. Alcoholic beverage prices were unchanged.

— Housing costs, which accounted for virtually all of the May increase, rose only half as much in June — 0.3 percent. Within that category, the index for fuel and utilities climbed 0.6 percent in June compared to a 0.2 percent gain in May. The sharp change was due mostly to a 1.3 percent jump in electricity costs and a 4.6 percent increase for local telephone service.

The Labor Department said the telephone cost spurt was mostly the product of the $1 long distance access charge added to most local bills in June.

Overil, costs for both homeowners and renters rose 0.4

questions about the submitted plat concerning the development of a restricted access enclave. Sanders' plat indicates a proposed residential development on the east end of the addition that would probably be surrounded with a brick wall with only one entrance into the residential area

Johnson raised questions about utility easements into the area and expressed concern about having only one entrance into the area. He also questioned about trash collection dumpsters having to be placed around the surrounding wall fronting other residences' vards

The wall also might create vision problems for traffic in the area, he said, and he expressed concerns that the wall meet height limitations under city regulations

Commission Ralph Milliron said access had to be made for utilities and maintenance people.

Sanders said he was aware of the height requirements and access for utility needs. He said he was considering perhaps enclosing the dumpsters and even hiring a private contractor to take care of the trash collection

After all the discussion, Milliron moved to approve the submitted plat, saying the commission should not redesign the plat. "We either approve or disapprove" and send it on to the city commission, Milliron, Carlson and Leo Braswell voted to approve the plat, with Johnson, Noles and Ken Shearer voting against recommending the approval. Zoning board chairman Nolan McKean broke the tie and voted for approval.

The commission then considered the requested zoning changes from the current Agriculture District, having voted to approve the plat first out of its order on the agenda.

Sanders had requested Commercial for three large lots abutting Perryton Parkway and Duncan, Multi-Family for two large lots to the east, Single Family 2 for a middle area and for lots just north of the current developments, and Single Family 1 for the restricted access enclave on the east end of the

The Commercial designation for the lot off Duncan drew protests from residents at both meetings, with objections voiced to a commercial area adjoining residential homes. Sanders said "the highest and best use" for the land abutting the highway is commercial or at least Shearer had proposed including Retail and Office zones in the central lot off the highway to serve as a buffer zone. Sanders objected to zoning one tract in several ways. Some residents had suggested that all the land be zoned for residential use, expressing objections to any commercial development in the addition. But Sanders said he would have trouble selling the lots on the highway for residential use McKean said he felt there was a general consensus against the south lot off Duncan being commercial, with some objections also voiced against a MF area. Attorney David Martindale argued for keeping the south lot commercial, noting there are other areas in the city where commercial areas back up against residential areas. Cloyd said most of those had come in under a "grandfather clause" nonconforming status when the current city zoning codes were adopted.

The commission voted to recommend amending the zoning change requests to give SF-2 designation to the south lot off Duncan and the south MF lot to the east of it, where a church will be built, leaving the rest as Sanders had requested.

In other matters, the commission approved recommending ordinance amendments concerning oil and gas well drilling inside the city limits. The amendments would establish a filing fee, set required information for permit issuance, and set

Texas town rations water

CRANE, Texas (AP) — The mayor of this West Texas community says residents will be forced to conserve water three days a week because they are using more water this summer than a year ago. "Even though we're rationing, and even though our customers haven't increased all that much, we're using more water this summer than last summer," said Mayor Jack Atkinson on Monday.

Reagan, China leader talk about nuclear cooperation

President Reagan, in his first high-level diplomacy since his cancer surgery 10 days ago, was receiving Chinese President Li Xiannian today to discuss a nuclear cooperation agreement and basic strategy toward the Soviet Union.

Officials said the long-stalled nuclear agreement probably will be signed this week, although not by the two presidents.

Reagan's schedule for his meeting with the 76-year-old Li has been somewhat abbreviated because of his surgery

White House South Lawn welcoming ceremonies for the Chinese leader - normally heralded with trumpeteers, military bands playing national anthems and booming cannon and gun salutes — were to be cut back by about five minutes from the normal 30 minutes

The two leaders were to meet afterward in the Blue Room, a formal reception room on the White House first floor, accompanied by their top advisers. Reagan will host a formal state banquet in Li's honor in the evening, but in order to shorten the normally scheduled four-hour event, the Chinese leader and his wife, Lin Jiamei, will arrive about 15 minutes later than usual.

Reagan planned to deliver a toast in Li's honor after the state dinner, but would not remain for the entertainment that follows such functions, said White House spokesman Larry Speakes.

A senior administration official said the nuclear cooperation agreement, first initialed during Reagan's visit to China 15 months ago, would be discussed by the two leaders, but they would spend most of their time on broader issues 'like basic strategy of how we are both going to approach the Soviet Union.

Sino-Soviet relations have improved considerably in recent months. The two communist giants recently concluded a major trade and economic cooperation agreement. However, the official, who insisted on anonymity, said the Reagan administration sees no cause for alarm.

He said a reduction in tensions between Peking and Moscow "makes sense for them just as our current effort to engage the Soviets in a dialogue makes sense for us. "

The official said he saw nothing to block signing of the nuclear cooperation agreement during Li's visit to Washington, which continues until midday Thursday. The signing would be conducted by high ranking officials from the two nations, officials said.

The nuclear agreement would clear the way for the sale of American nuclear reactors and other nuclear technology that China wants for an ambitious nuclear power electricity program. The official said the maximum potential for American sales would be between $10 billion and $12 billion, but that the actual amount would probably be codsiderably conducted for Congress concludes that age 65 is no longer the standard retirement age for most people with private pensions.

Instead, the median age for workers to start drawing private pensions is 62, according to an analysis of Census Bureau records by the General Accounting Office.

'Almost 60 percent start receiving (private pensions) before reaching 65," according to Richard Fogel, director of the GAO's human resources division. "Thus, 65 no longer appears to be the retirement age chosen by most their own pension plan that allows them to retire at the age of 55 after 30 years' service. The Reagan administration has argued that this is out of sync with private sector practices and that the retirement age for full benefits should be raised to 65 for all federal workers. Most Social Security beneficiaries also claim reduced benefits before 65. They can get 80 percent of full benefits at age 62, with the amount increasing each month that they wait until 65. The GAO cited a government survey of those collecting Social I've gotten so many offers, I've lost count," the 22-year-old senior at Pan American University in Edinberg said.

About 4.5 million children nationwide speak so little English, they need bilingual education. But there are only about 158,000 bilingual instructors in the country, The Dallas Morning News

As a result, school districts are offering bonuses of up to $6,000 a year and other perquisites to bilingual teachers.

"They offer good money. They say their bilingual programs are good. They say their campuses are nice," Ramirez said of the recruiters. "But I haven't really looked into any of them. I want to stay in the (Rio Grande) Valley."

National bilingual education experts say the number of bilingual teachers would almost have to double to reach the ideal ratio of one teacher for every 15 students.

'We are all competing for the same scare resource," said Ross Taylor, head of the multilingual education department for Chicago public schools.

Taylor said that the bonuses offered by some schools in Texas, which is second only to California in the number of pupils who speak little English, "are going to wipe us off the map.

The vast majority of students needing bilingual education are Hispanic, according to the U.S. Department of Education

Texas education officials estimate the state has 285,000 children who qualify for bilingual education, but only 7,500 teachers 1 for every 38 pupils.

Bonuses aren't the only lures. Some school districts offer free college tuition to high school students who pursue a degree in bilingual education, The News

According to Sarah Melendez of the National Association of Bilingual Education in Washington, the situation isn't getting any better because the number of students who need bilingual teaching is growing at such a rapid clip.

'And there is a very small number of bilingual teachers being produced,'' she added. ''The number is under 2,000 a year.''

The competition for bilingual teachers in Texas has become even fiercer since the passage of a new state law requiring districts to offer free bilingual classes to preschoolers.

Texas law also requires school districts to offer bilingual instruction in any grade that has 20 or more children who speak little

In Houston, where bilingual teachers are offered bonuses of up to $6,000 a year, the ratio of bilingual teachers to pupils is 1 to 44. In Dallas, where school officials say they need at least another 100 bilingual teachers, the ratio is 1 to

In San Antonio and Corpus Christi schools, the ratio is 1 to 11. In Brownsville, which offers bonuses of up to $1,000, it is 1 to 19.

The ratio in Chicago schools is 1 to 28; in Miami, it is 1 to 76; in Los Angeles it is 1 to 25; in Philadelphia, 1 to 18 and in Denver, to seek U.S. approval for election

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Justice Department, continuing a legal battle with Texas Democratic Gov. Mark White, asked a federal court Monday to order the state to seek "within five days" U.S. approval for a special congressional election.

Assistant Attorney General William Bradford Reynolds, who heads the civil rights division, maintained that the failure of the state to get federal clearance for the scheduled Aug. 3 special election violates Section 5 of the Voting Rights Act of 1965.

On Monday, the Justice

Department asked a U.S. District Court in San Antonio to issue a temporary restraining order requiring submission of the plan for the election to fill Texas' 1st Congressional District seat vacated May 27 by Rep. Sam B. Hall, a Democrat who resigned to become a federal judge.

This followed the department's filing last Friday of a civil suit against White and Secretary of State Myra A. McDaniel, seeking a court order to require Texas to submit the election plan for review.

The civil suit filed earlier said that the Voting Rights Act requires preclearance of the special election schedule to insure that the schedule does not discriminate against minority voters.

White and McDaniel have taken the position that no advance approval from the Justice Department is necessary under the Voting Rights Act.

The department's request Monday also contained a motion for a preliminary injunction to force submission of the plan. But the Justice Department also said that it did not intend to seek postponement or cancellation of the Aug. 3 runoff election between Republican Edd Hargett and Democrat Jim Chapman "at this

Hargett, a former professional football player, and Chapman, a former Hopkins County district attorney, were the top two finishers in a June 29 special election for the seat vacated by Hall. No Republican has been elected to Congress from the district in over a

The request said the Supreme Court as recently as last February had reaffirmed previous rulings that changes in an election schedule and in a candidate qualification period require preclearance under the Voting

The department said that White's establishment of schedule for the special election had resulted in a shortened candidate qualification period ending on May 29, selection of June 29 for the first special election, and selection of Aug. 3 for the runoff

McKINNEY, Texas (AP) - The road through Caddo Park leads to one of the most popular boat docks on Lake Lavon. All day the big fishing rigs come and go, packed with the latest gear guaranteed to bring in the big ones.

James Oby doesn't look up from his rod and reel. Shifting his wheelchair to take better advantage of the shade, he casts his line over the fence to the middle of the tank. Let others have the lake. He's pleased to pond fish in the park developed with people like him in mind. It's safe and accessible. And when the catfish are biting, it's a fisherman's Oby is one of many people with physical handicaps who take advantage of the Corps of Engineers park developed especially for them. He's been coming about once a week for seven or eight years, he said. His wife, Ester, drives him in from Dallas for his favorite sport.

"I'm 76 years old," he said. "I retired in 1974, and I've been steady on the creeks since then. I lost my legs in '79. The doctors tried to replace the veins in my legs, and it didn't work. So they took 'em off. I didn't want to stop fishing, though. That's why I like it here. You can't accidentally fall off. You can just fish and be Cordie and J.D. Harrelson run the park that's open March 1 to Sept. 30 every year. Equipped with three ponds stocked with catfish, the park is set aside for people who have physical handicaps, but every fisherman may have one person on the docks to help. Each pond is surrounded by a concrete ramp to make access easier for wheelchairs, walkers and canes. Each is guarded by fences, and there is plenty of bench space to sit and sun while waiting for a nibble. Everything in the park was built with the handicapped in mind, Mrs.

"We've got several covered picnic areas with barbecue grills. The whole family can come and picnic while the handicapped person fishes," she said. "The picnic tables have concrete benches only on one side, so wheelchairs may pull up to the other side, and even the water fountains are built low, so a person sitting can get a drink. The park opens at 6 a.m. and closes at 10 p.m., seven days a week, and there is a telephone for emergencies, she said.

Albert Simmons, 81, fishes in the park about once a week. His wife, Lorraine, drives him in from Dallas, and she also must cast his line and pull in his fish. A bad back keeps him from moving about freely, but it hasn't dampened his enthusiasm for fishing.

Simmons was trying to fish in Lake Lavon last summer, his wife explained, when he almost fell in.

The man who caught him told him about Caddo Park. He's been coming once a week ever since. Pat Barnard comes out often from his home in McKinney. An artificial knee keeps him dependent on a cane, but the park's facilities allow him the freedom and safety he needs.

"I went to the coast every year for 30 years," he said. "It's too far to go now, so I come here.

The ponds are stocked several times a summer with catfish. Mrs. Harrelson said, and there are a few crappie in the ponds. A limit of four fish a day is imposed. Fishing and park facilities are free to the handicapped, and no one else may use the park.

Nursing home residents from Farmersville and McKinney visit the park and a special scout troop of boys with muscular dystrophy comes each summer. A Vietnam veteran with a war injury recently has discovered the park and, so far, has visited twice a day, Mrs. Harrelson said.

Housewives to go on strike

Harried housewives of the world, unite! Mark Oct. 24 on your calendar, for that is the day you go on strike.

A group of women, led by United Nations worker Krishna Ahuga

Patel (I think that's spelled right) are demanding compensation for housework by — you guessed it — the governments of the world. At a conference of women in Kenya this week, they designated Oct. 24 as the day that women skip their household chores

The work must be compensated by the state, she says, because women are working for the state. (I don't get it, either) Household work — cooking, cleaning, gardening and taking Junior to piano lessons - should be considered employment so that women can enjoy socialist security benefits.

What? This is an outrage! It is a sin against the role models set forth in God's Word.

"I'm Millie Shoo-fly, chairwoman of the Worldwide Women Who Want to be Housewives, and I think that this proposal is the silliest

I totally agree, Mrs. Shoo-fly. Although housework, cooking and child-rearing takes up a great deal of time and effort, I don't think it is something that the government should have to compensate. "How right you are! Housewifery is not a sin, as these Secular Humanists claim. It is an exalted calling from God I wouldn't go that far. Housework is something that just has to be regardless of whether it's done by a woman or a man.

It's just something that has to be done, whether by the husband or the wife or the kids or by a single person. And raising kids is just part of life for both a mother and a father. 'Blasphemer! The fifth chapter of Ephesians says 'wifes be subject to your own husbands as unto the Lord.' Proof positive that Jesus has commanded women to stay home, do the housework and That's not what the scripture means, you know it, and that's beside the point. All I'm saying is that keeping up hearth and home is something that just has to be done. Household chores are not defined

'That's not the way God wants it.''

What makes you say that? Don't you think that Jesus did his own housework, cleaned his own clothes and cooked his own food when he was not helping people? My brother lives alone and does his own housework, and I do too. And neither one of us needs to ask the government to pay us, either.

Housework is neither forced slavery nor an exalted calling. But, by applying sexist role models to such everyday tasks, folks like you and this Krishna Ahuja woman are upsetting the normal stream of life. If this nonsense keeps up, what do you think Junior would say next time he's asked to take out the trash? . . . Pardon me, Mrs. Shoo-fly, but you're wanted on the phone

"Hello?...Yes... What?... I have you know that I am a busy woman who keeps a tough schedule. Remember that I travel all over the country lecturing about a woman's proper place in the world. I simply don't have time to drop what I'm doing to come home to do the laundry every time you dirty your dungarees. dear. (click) . . When did you say that strike was?"

Why did OPEC run out of gas?

The Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries is holding another meeting in a desperate effort to shore up oil prices. The countries involved are apparently still prosperous enough to pay participants' expenses on jaunts to Vienna or Geneva. But OPEC no longer has much significant power.

The collapse of its most recent meeting demonstrates that OPEC can no longer set the "world price" of oil at whatever level it desires. Its ability to do so in the past was temporary and circumscribed. The long, drawn-out story of its demise is a lesson in elementary economics.

Many who have taken a survey course in economics have absorbed the popular wisdom that cartels-conspiracies of producers to raise prices to artificially high levels by controlling supplies—are one of the potential evils of a market system, from which we need government to protect us.

To the contrary, in a competitive market system unhampered by government intervention, cartels are extremely unstable. Contemporary cartels are almost always creatures of government rather than of the marketplace. And, as OPEC demonstrates, even government-backed cartels have problems

The classic problem for a cartel is that individual members may "cheat" on the corrupt bargain that created the cartel by underselling the agreed-upon price. A further problem is that, with prices for a commodity artificially high for a while, it becomes profitable to seek substitutes. Both phenomena affected OPEC

A decade ago the 13 OPEC countries controlled 53 percent of the world oil market. Partially because OPEC used this dominance to raise prices, however, new competition came into being. OPEC's share of the world market is now only 30 percent-largely because of the short-term greed OPEC nations displayed in the mid-1970s. The OPEC price run-up also spurred conservation efforts and the search of alternate energy sources, both of which have dampened the demand for

When OPEC quadrupled petroleum prices back in 1974, there was a great call to "do something," and unfortunately for U.S. consumers that call was heeded. An elaborate system of government price controls and a mind-boggling bureaucracy was erected in short order.

The result was almost certainly to increases OPEC's life as an effective cartel. Instead of running into buccaneering capitalists seeking under-the-table deals, OPEC ministers met bureaucrats concerned with rules and regulations.

With discoveries in the North Sea and Mexico and Alaska coming on line, however, OPEC's days were numbered

The deregulation of most oil prices in the United States made OPEC's demise inevitable. Its meeting now are an exercise in ineffectuality and a pathetic reminder of the glory days of price-gouging. Will the lesson-that a competitive marketplace is the best protection against the impulse to form cartels—be absorbed? One may hope thus immune to immigration control) up to New York City to vote for them and their pals. Welfare payments in New York were set high enough to attract many impoverished Puerto Ricans the way honey attracts flies.

Just as Tip O'Neill undoubtedly predicted to any Democrat who protested, nobody noticed.

President Reagan, of course, wants to repeal our deduction, as part of his "tax reform" package. But Gov. Cuomo, who can be counted on to put New Yorkers' interests first (as a governor should), has denounced the idea. All of us here, and in the other big states that have state income taxes, trust that the rest of you will keep right on paying more than your pro rata share of federal taxes, so we can keep on being extra-compassionate.

More rubbish from Cuomo

The Mario Cuomo thing, I'm afraid, goes on. By the time Cuomo fetched up at Stanford University, in mid-June, he'd delivered no fewer than ten commencement addresses, with unreported effects on the Minds of the Young.

It's what happens when you raise a dead political convention ever so briefly to life, however wrong-headed and ill-natured the things you say in

The university's alumni magazine reported that Stanford loved the guv. Half again as many spectators - 30,000 - turned up as came to last year's commencement.

Cuomo, to say, jumped up and down on the Reagan administration wearing spiked shoes. Cuomo's wont is to paint the president and all his supporters (diplomatically excluding, I suppose, 52-million Reagan voters) as heartless, callous, uncaring, probably caused the SanFrancisco earthquake,too, you never can tell.

My copy of the Cuomo text comes to me three weeks after the fact. Never mind. "Timeless bears inspection on any occasion: Cuomo's all the more so because so many people (doubtless including Mario Cuomo) want him for President.

The enticing thing about Cuomo is his capacity for making the baldest, most outrageous assertions without a scrap of supporting evidence.

Thus we find that, before the federal government got involved in a big way with social policy, "excellence" was "the privilege of a lucky few, the possession of an elite.

Well, that was before the advent in 1981 of "a radically different philosophy of government," a philosophy of "retreat." Suddenly "we had to try to do less. Over and over again we were told about our limitations.

What limitations? Oh, "The unemployed are the price of reduced inflation...The homeless have chosen to be homeless...We can't have tax reform...unless we abandon the struggling parts of this nation, unless we reward the very rich at the expense of a troubled middle class...We can't have a strong defense unless we're prepared to spend ourselves into bankruptcy." You know, the stuff Ronald Reagan says in every speech.

Meanwhile poverty is increasing; likewise homelessness and unemployment - all because of "the nagativism on the part of our government."

What, then, do graduates of one of the country's most expensive private universities do? They "reject the policy of shrunken aspirations." They 'demand a government that will help its people to believe, to work, to give - together.

What gorgeous, shimmering, shining balderdash. What quintessential Cuomo

No widespread "excellence" in pre-New Deal America, hmmm? Everything for the elite, hmmm? Having studied at Stanford's history department, I know it to be cracker jack. I hope all the history graduates present at commencement hissed under their breath at Cuomo's rewrite job on the American past, but I doubt it.

The governor's point wasn't academic: it was ideological. You see, we never had it so good as when Big Government ran everything. Then along came Reagan - Cuomo never reminds his audiences that tidal waves of popular votes put him there - and changed everything.

Cuomo presents Reagan as the prophet of limitations." But wait: Somehow I thought it was Jimmy Carter who talked almost lovingly about limitations. Isn't Reagan the one who constantly preaches the-sky's-the-limit for individual opportunity?

Er, yes, and about unemployment and homelessness and defense. Didn't the economy last year create a record number of new jobs, and isn't the government - Reagan's government spending record amounts on social programs? In fact, don't social programs cost more than twice as much as military ones?

All perfectly true - and, for Cuomo's purposes, perfectly irrelevant. Cuomo knows what a hash Walter Mondale made last year of asking people to accept higher taxes and more government regulation. He, Cuomo, would therefore inspire them with a sense of "community" and "family" and personal commitment.

He is a formidable man, Mario Cuomo formidable for an inborn ability to peddle intellectual rubbish. His trouble is, rubbish when inspected carefully smells like rubbish: the more so in Cuomo's case because the ideas are so old and tired - government regulation, government intervention, government this and that

To read a Cuomo speech is to be reminded of John Randolph of Roanoke's description of a rotten mackerel by moonlight: It shines and

That same thought has occurred to Wayne Smith. Allow me to tell you more about him: Wayne Smith is a native of West Virginia, who now lives in Atlanta. Actually, he is Dr. Wayne

Smith, a former Presbyterian minister. Wayne Smith, who has four children he wants a future for and who wants the same for the rest of us had an idea in 1976 to start something called The Friendship Force, a world-wide citizens exchange program.

He went to then President Jimmy Carter with the idea, and Jimmy Carter said go to it

Nine years later, the Friendship Force has initiated cultural exchanges with more than 40 countries, which has resulted in 250,000 new friendships between Americans and people of

Now, Wayne Smith has tackled the tough one He's making it possible for Americans and

Russians - not representatives of the two governments, but ordinary citizens - to go one on

His newest effort is called ARMS - Americans. Russians, Mutual Survival. Wayne Smith explains:

"Of all peoples, the Russians and Americans need to get along. If we can't get together, then we may all die together, the way it seems today.

'Don't get me wrong. I do not agree with the Communist way of life. I'm three notches right of center, and some say I'm even more than that.

Wayne Smith quit his job as a Presbyterian minister to devote full time to the Friendship Force and to ARMS. He's already had 31 Russians to visit Atlanta a couple of months ago, and a few Americans already have visited Russia under auspices of The Friendship Force. In August, Dr. Smith himself is taking 100

Americans to Russia. They will visit Moscow. They will visit Leningrad. They will visit the townsfolk of Vilnius, a small city near the Baltic. Wayne Smith doesn't think these efforts are going to reduce the threat of nuclear war, but somebody had to start someplace. I'm going on the August trip myself. I've been promised vodka from the Russians. I'm taking

Growth recession an odd economic animal

By JOHN CUNNIFF AP Business Analyst NEW YORK (AP) - Out there in the economic woods a strange critter has been sighted from time is very difficult to tell its head from its tail Most accounts suggest that imagination rather than clear sightings play the larger role in descriptions, similar to accounts of the size and shape of the Himalayan Yeti, or Big Foot of the American West.

But what makes this critter especially weird is that you can't tell the front from the rear. There is no way either that you can get a grip on it in order to study its significance. Nobody can figure it

It is the so-called "growth recession," and based on reports analyzed to date it can be beneficial or inimical to man's interests. Whatever, it is said to be a developing form of economic life that could be good, or perhaps bad.

According to one bank economist, it is at this point in its development "uniquely ambiguous," since an optimist could use "growth recession" to emphasize expansion, while a pessimist could stress its recessionary aspect.

What 'growth recession' appears to be is one of those things that emerges in the economic flora and fauna when economists don't know what's up, or to put it more politely, what's ahead.

As such, it serves well, because it walks and talks both ways, and probably doesn't know whether it is coming or going or whether it likes people or is their deadly enemy.

As defined clinically, a growth recession is an expansion so puny that unemployment and some other negative indicators, such as business failures, rise a bit, and confidence drops, although not dramatically, as they say.

It is, therefore, a very useful animal still in the process of adapatation. It blends well with any forecast, bullish or bearish, because it takes on the coloration of its environment, much the same as a chameleon.

It has many near-relatives in ambiguity. Disinflation is a familiar one - one that can be good or bad or neutral. It sounds the oppposite of inflation but it isn't; it is, in fact, a degree of inflation - a lesser degree.

Forecasters who wish to sound off about the future, but who don't have the slightest idea of what the future holds, love the word. In proper context it can sound ominous; in another context it can be viewed as good news.

Such critters abound in the hedges, and hedges are thick in the economic world these days. Somewhat related, maybe a

Dear Abby

Mom's training didn't take: Daughter's thanks are late

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: What does the and had two boys, and let me tell mother of an adult (22-year-old) child do when aforementioned adult child is so remiss about acknowledging important gifts that it becomes embarrassing?

I refer specifically to my daughter who was married last November, and has yet to send thank-yous for her wedding gifts. (Her excuse: "I've Abby, she was not raised that way; ever since she was a child, I have stressed the importance of sending thank-you notes promptly. Evidently it never got through to her. It's very embarrassing when friends and relatives ask me if "Ellen" ever received their gift.

Any suggestions? EMBARRASSED MOTHER DEAR MOTHER: First, bear in mind you are not responsible for what your daughter does-or does not do. Some years ago I received a letter from a mother who had the same problem. She enclosed a copy of the letter she had sent to friends and relatives.

Her solution not only got the job done, it made her feel better. The letter:

"Dear (): I think six months is long enough for anyone to wait for a thank-you note, so I am taking it upon myself to thank you for the beautiful wedding gift you sent to our daughter.

"Please accept my apologies for her inexcusable negligence. I assure you, she wasn't raised that way.

MARY SMITH (NOT MY REAL NAME) off the lights?"

DEAR ABBY: Guess what? I have the same problem about a million other people have: in-law trouble.

Mike and I have been married for 15 years and have three beautiful daughters, 13, 12 and 9. When our girls were little, my in-laws had very little time for them, but six years ago, my husband's sister got married but undoubtedly effective.

you, these boys are No. 1 and No. 2! The grandparents take the boys shopping, picnicking and on little trips. The boys get to ride on the tractor with "Pop Pop"—you name it, they do it—while my daughters sit in the window, watching and Abby, my in-laws read your column religiously. I hope they see this because in it is a message for them: "Grandma and Grandpa: My kids need you. It's not too late.

HURT IN MARYLAND

DEAR HURT: And what if they don't see it? Your message is too important to leave to chance.

If you haven't the courage to tell them, write a letter saying: "Our girls feel hurt and left out because you so obviously favor your grandsons. I am hurt because my kids are hurting. Won't you please try to make up for lost time?'

DEAR ABBY: I have a sister-inlaw who likes everything just so, but she dislikes putting her thoughts into spoken words. Example: When you go to her house, the first thing you see in her entrance hall is a sign that says: "You have just entered a no-smoking zone.

In the bathroom, there's a sign above the john that says: "Please keep lid down. Thank you.'

She has little signs on her light switches that say: "Have you turned

And just in case someone missed the no-smoking-zone sign, she has little signs all over the place that say: "Thank you for not smoking." What is your opinion of all this sign language? JUST ASKING

DEAR JUST: It gets the message across. It's not very subtle,

Consider appliances when remodeling

AP Newsfeatures

Remodeling an existing kitchen is much easier than starting from scratch, says Jan Cooper, a home economist who specializes in advising on appliances.

That's because you already know your work patterns. Furthermore, you generally know exactly where the current kitchen falls short.

If you are planning a kitchen renovation or starting from scratch with a new kitchen, Mrs. Cooper, who is consumer education manager for Maytag Co., has a few tips to help you get the kitchen you

First of all, she suggested, take the time to find out about all the options available in appliances and cabinetry. This can be done by reading current publications on kitchen design and by visiting a variety of kitchen specialty outlets to compare what is available in your area. You can also use as a comparison the appliances and cabinets offered by the large national chain retailers found in most communities.

Many consumers have the same basic requirements for their appliances. These include, in order, appliances that will last a long time, that will require few service calls and, finally, appliances with special features for convenience. Easy cleanability, for example, is a feature that appears to be almost universally desired, she said.

Gadgets may be attractive to some consumers, but others eschew them. One group takes the attitude that simpler is better because there is less to go wrong. The other type of shopper is frankly attracted to the Itest features, even though they may raise the price and may not contribute substantially to the appliance's overall usefulness.

Nowadays, the appliance most likely to be added to an existing kitchen is a microwave oven. Industry figures show microwaves are the fastest growing kitchen yellow. Why not use light blue as appliance in terms of sales. Currently, about 39 percent of American households are equipped with a microwave and if sales increases continue at the current rate, then 64 percent of American homes will have them by 1990.

Since most kitchens don't have a special place for this relatively new appliance, finding an appropriate spot is often a poser. There is no single best place for the oven since its placement depends on what use a family makes of it. Some families use it to defrost foods and warm up leftovers; others have integrated the microwave into family meal preparation. If the unit is used primarily by the cook for family meals, it should be located within the work triangle of stove, refrigerator and sink. But if other family members are most likely to use it, it should be placed out of the primary cook's path by Mrs. Cooper and in "The Handbook of Good Cooking," a paperback recently released by Maytag, include: recessing the oven into a wall; dedicating an existing kitchen cabinet to it and refitting the cabinet, or installing the oven on the countertop but recessing it several inches into the

Using a countertop for the oven is one of the least agreeable solutions because it means giving up what is usually sorely-needed working space. However by recessing it (if feasible), the cook gains the use of the front of the countertop and the unit looks less bulky and clumsy.

Another possibility if you are considering a new stove is to purchase one with two ovens - a conventional oven below and a microwave above. The units are available in both gas and electric The presence of more than one major appliance for cooking has raised a new question in the kitchen, says Mrs. Cooper: Which is the best appliance to cook a particular recipe? Often, the best is a combination of several different cooking methods for a single dish, she said. For example, a cream pie with a meringue topping may best be prepared by browning the crust in a conventional oven, making the cream filling in the microwave oven, thus eliminating the need for constant stirring, and browning the meringue under a hot broiler for a minute or two. -

 We are getting ready to redo our kitchen and I want to paint it a fairly dark blue. My husband says it won't look right, but he can't tell me why. He says he just knows kitchens are never painted a dark color. Is there some technical reason why a kitchen can't be done in a dark, rich color?

A. - There is no technical reason, but it is a fact that a dark color in a kitchen is not used very often. The possible reason is that a kitchen often has a high temperature and requires a cool appearance to counteract the heat. That's why the recommended colors for a kitchen are white, light green, light blue, beige and pale lesearcher examines TV DAYTON Ohio (AP) - Thomas Skill, author, teacher, and product of the television age, wants to know how television influences people and vice versa He has written two books and several articles on what many see as the softer side of popular culture and television - the soap opera.

'Soaps, I think, tend to be kind of like sophisticated morality plays,' he said. "Eventually the stories do get resolved, good is rewarded and bad is punished. It may take a year or two years.

'An interesting thing is if a character is so bad that there's no way for them to repent they generally get killed off. That's like the ultimate punishment, falling out of an airplane or getting pushed down a flight of stairs or ultimately having a scheme of theirs backfire and they get killed in the process."

Skill, an assistant professor of communication at the University of Dayton, believes soap operas contain more realism than prime-time series because daily serials revolve more around character development. Weekly series tend to be more adventure and less character exploration, he Skill, 29, began collaborating with a former faculty adviser, Mary B. Cassata, in 1977. Their work at the State University of New York at Buffalo led to a book in 1983 called "Life on Daytime Television: Tuning-In American Serial Drama.

The authors examined lifestyles and demographics of TV characters; images of the elderly; sexuality on television; music in soap operas; and interviewed a television program executive for Procter & Gamble Productions. Now, a second collaboration, a bibliographic essay called "Television: A Guide to the Literature," is being published by Oryx Press. It will be sold as a resource for teachers and students of mass communications

While some may consider TV as a strange topic for traditional, empirical research or serious sociological study, Skill says the automobile and television have been the most profound influences on 20th-century society

'Popular culture is a very important part of our society. It's culture that arises out of interests from many people and it tends to be our source of entertainment. Entertainment has a very important function with us. It's not just work. It has a lot to do with our social well-being and what we think of ourselves," he said.

"America is popular culture," Skill said, noting it is a product of the democratic process and free enterprise: "If it pleases a number of people, it has a very important intrinsic value.

Historically, popular culture has evolved into respected culture, he said

"Shakespeare was popular culture. Today everybody talks about the wonderful films of Frank Capra. At the time, they called them "capra-corn," because they thought it was so corny. It was popular culture." Today, it's respected filmmaking.

"We're saying 'why not study popular culture as it's happening right now.' Why wait for 50 years or 300 years ... to decide popular culture is really high culture?''

He's particularly interested in the role of the family and how it is portrayed on television - an interest sparked in part by criticism that divorce rates have risen as television became popular and that television has led to the breakup of the American family.

More violence is feared at church

LEE, Maine (AP) — A man seeking the return of his teen-age daughter from a fundamentalist church says he will "make another commando raid" even though an attack by pipe- and chain-wielding townspeople ended in a bloody brawl

"We won't be so lenient next time," John W. Crooker, 43, told a radio call-in program Monday in nearby Lincoln, vowing to do whatever it takes to get his 16year- old daughter to leave the congregation.

At least four people were injured when Crooker, accompanied by at least six men, some wielding pipes and chains, barged in on Sunday evening services at Lee Baptist Church, attended by about 85 people.

The next church service is planned for Wednesday, said Debby Dunphy, the Rev. Daniel Dunphy's wife, adding, "The Lord's work must go on."

Rebecca has since married, but her parents said they are trying to have the marriage annulled.

Most townspeople who are not members of the congregation are critical of Dunphy and say police haven't done enough to get Sheila returned to her parents.

Soon after his arrival in Lee. Dunphy created a stir when he preached via a loudspeaker from the steeple of his white church in the middle of town. He was also criticized for sending members of his ministry door-to-door and for baptizing by immersion.

At the time, he said he dreamed people.

Members now say as many as 100 people show up for services. Crooker and his wife, Madeline, said they attended his church but

housands of U.S. dams unsa

WASHINGTON (AP) — Four years after a massive federal study dentified 2,884 unsafe dams in the United States, little is being done to prevent the type of tragedy that claimed about 200 lives in Italy last week, a dam safety expert says.

'You're talking about hundreds of millions of dollars to upgrade dams," said Joe Ellam, director of Pennsylvania's dam safety program and head of the Association of State Dam Safety Officials

"Little is being done to correct these dams," according to Ellam, who says the effort is being hampered by a lack of federal

Ensuring the safety of U.S. dams is a patchwork process, with states responsible for the bulk of the facilities. There is no uniform safety law and little federal assistance, according to Ellam and officials in Washington.

Federal agencies like the Corps of Engineers and the Bureau of Reclamation look after the dams they build, but federal dams account for only about 5 percent of the approximately 67,000 dams — both earthen and masonry across the country.

The rest are either state facilities or privately owned, and their inspections are left to the states only 10 of which have safety programs considered effective by Association of State Dam Safety Officials.

Ellam says that while "things have improved" in his business in the last decade, disastrous failures could happen here. They have occurred. They will continue to occur. Of man-made structures. dams pose the probability for greatest loss of life and economic

His state was the site of the worst earthen dam collapse in U.S. history — the 1889 disaster that claimed 2,200 lives in Johnstown when the South Fork dam gave way nine miles north of the city. In the 1970s, a series of dam disasters caught Washington's attention. In February 1972, 125 people

Tropical storm comes to life Teton dam failed in Idaho, killing

CORAL GABLES, Fla. (AP) — Tropical Storm Bob sent six-foot waves crashing into Naples today and dumped heavy rains on South Florida as the storm's center began edging northeastward in the Gulf of Mexico, forecasters said.

With wind gusts to 50 mph and tides as much as three feet above normal, the National Hurricane Center warned that the beaches of the lower Gulf Coast and the Florida Keys could be damaged by storm-driven waves.

"The big problem is the tide and waves," hurricane specialist Gil Clark said Monday. "There could be some beach erosion.

Bob, the second named storm of the 1985 Atlantic huricane season, forced the closing of the Naples Pier on Monday as six-foot waves pounded the Southwest Florida failure of a mine-tailings dam similar to the one that gave way in Italy. Four months later, 240 people died as Rapid City, S.D., was inundated after the Canyon Lake dam, also earthen, broke

Those disasters quickly resulted in a law establishing a federal program to make an inventory of U.S. dam - big and small - and to inspect those considered "high hazard" -- meaning that lives and property would be lost in a failure.

This program still was not off the ground in 1976, when the earthen reton dam failed in Idaho, killing Reclamation facility.

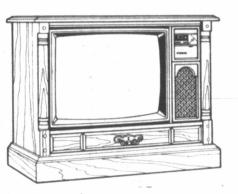

The program still had not begun in July 1977, when disaster again struck Johnstown, Pa., with the collapse of the Laurel Run dam. killing more than 40 people.

The Carter administration's attention was captured in November 1977, when an earthen dam gave way in northeast Georgia, killing 39 people in a wall of water that engulfed Toccoa Falls

Ranger rookie sinks Tribe with home run

Oddibe McDowell called the pitch a mistake and Vern Ruhle said it wasn't, but either way it ended up being the deciding play of the game in the Texas Rangers' victory over the Cleveland Indians.

The pitch, a 0-1 curve ball from Ruhle in the bottom of the eighth inning, was deposited over the right field fence by McDowell, providing the winning run for the Rangers in a 2-1 victory Monday night.

"I wasn't looking for a curve made a mistake and got it up, and I got lucky." Ruhle just called it good hitting on the part of McDowell. "I wouldn't call it a mistake," said Ruhle, who lost for the sixth time in eight decisions. "I threw a curve ball and he swung at it. He did a good job of hitting the pitch. If I knew he was going the hit the ball that good, I wouldn't have thrown McDowell had two other hits and also saved at least one run for the Rangers in the second inning when he made a spectacular diving catch of Chris Bando's sinking drive in right center. The Indians had men on first and second at the time.

"That man did a helluva job, saved a run and scored two," said Texas Manager Bobby Valentine. "He played one of those games where he displayed his outstanding abilities — speed and power.

"He has a chance to be one of those unique players who can do everything.

The Indians scored first in the third inning when Brett Butler singled, went to third on Julio Franco's single to right and scored on Pat Tabler's infield out.

The Rangers tied the score in the fourth inning. McDowell led off with a single, stole second, took third on a groundout and scored on Gary Ward's single.

Greg Harris, 3-3, picked up the victory for Texas in relief of Chris Welsh, who pitched the first seven Harris, who leads the American League in strikeouts by a relief pitcher, got out of a jam in the top of the ninth inning.

After retiring the first two hitters, Harris gave up a single to pinch hitter Jerry Willard and a walk to Butler. But he then got Franco to fly out to right field on a fast ball for the final out.

Astros give Mike Schmidt just one chance too many PHILADELPHIA (AP) - Mike Schmidt has been in a season-long slump but he's still a dangerous man to give a second chance.

Schmidt came to bat Monday night with two out in the ninth inning of a tie game between the Philadelphia Phillies and Houston Astros and hit a foul pop to the third base side of home plate.

Three Astros — third baseman Phil Garner, pitcher Jeff Heathcock and catcher Alan Ashby - converged at the plate. At the last second, Garner lunged for the ball. It popped out of his glove for an error.

Schmidt returned to the plate and on the next pitch lined a home run over the left field fence to give the Phillies a 7-6 win

"I know you can miss one like that," he said afterward. "I did. Crazy things happen."
It was one of the few times this season Schmidt smiled after a game. He is hitting just .241 in what has been one of the worst seasons in his 13-year career.

It's been a season in which Schmidt, a nine-time Gold Glove third baseman:

-became a first baseman: -wasn't voted to the National League All-Star team for the first time in seven years:

-ripped the fans as "beyond help" and "uncontrollable;" -and has only 13 home runs.

"I can't put my finger on any one thing," said Schmidt, who has hit 30 or more homers in a season 10 times in his career. "Maybe I'm trying too hard with men on base. Maybe I have bad mechanics with men in scoring position and good mechanics with none on.

"I just know I've seen more balls up in the strike zone," he went on. "And I'm a low fastball hitter. It's like the catcher is sitting with his glove over his head. And I'm swinging at them. I usually lay off them. My hitting zone is below my break out of the frustrating slump.

"I've been so close for a month," he said. "I just can't get over the hump. In the last 30 games there were only four when I didn't hit the ball hard twice. I was in the vicinity of hitting in 20 of the 30 games. I never hit the ball so hard in my life and nothing happened."

"I'm so close to being the hitter I've always been," he said after his third game-winning hit of the season. "This home run could be the turnaround. We'll just have to wait and see

The Phillies took a first-inning. 4-0 lead against Houston starter Joe Niekro when rookie outfielder John Russell hit his first major league grand slam.

The Astros started coming back against Phillies starter Charles Hudson with two in the second on an RBI single by Jerry Mumphrey and a run-scoring double from Glenn Davis.

Houston went ahead with four in Theres more for your life at :

AUSTIN (AP) — A private teaching company says it may have the answer for Texas high school athletes worried about staying eligible under the new no-pass, no-play rule.

In newspaper advertisments, the company asks athletes: "Do falling grades mean no pass, no play to you? Help yourself stay eligible."

The 15-hour course focuses on advanced reading and study skills, said Don Fehlis, director of the Austin and San Antonio offices of Improved Reading Center and Staff Training Center. The company, which also offers courses for business executives, has other offices in Houston and Dallas, he said.

"Many parents are concerned because their kids don't like to read, and that hurts them academically." Fehlis said, adding that a number of parents have responded to the company's ads and brochures.

Fehlis said Monday the ads directed at the no-pass, no-play situation began running over the weekend. The courses begin later this month, he said.

The rule, which took effect this spring, prohibits students from participating in sports or other extra-curricular activities if they are failing any class. The prohibition, which lasts six weeks, will be in effect for the first time during a football season this

Many coaches and students across the state have complained about the rule, enacted as part of sweeping school reforms adopted by the Legislature last year. Twenty coaches met with Gov. Mark White last week to discuss the rule.

Fehlis said the course is "an enrichment program designed to enhance a student's ability to read and understand what they're reading ... We also talk about various study techniques and skills and writing, because that's very important in their work.
"In talking to both kids and parents over the years, we've found that many students don't like to read because it's so slow. They get bored with it. When the mind gets bored with something, it shuts down. He said the $125 course is offered for three hours daily over five days. Fehlis said his firm offered the course last year, too, although the no-pass, no-play ads are a new wrinkle this summer.

"Last summer, we didn't talk about no-pass, no-play, but we did talk about the other parts of the course: academic progress, the ability to read, study concepts," he said.

'We've gotten calls from individuals in lots of areas and a variety of backgrounds. We had a coach call us earlier about the idea," he said.

Tournaments reeling in cheating anglers

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP) - Officials at a Galveston anglers' tournament last year smelled something fishy when they found a contestant bloated his prize-winning tiger shark with water to boost its weight.

Cheating in fishing tournaments became so common at one point that honest anglers became discouraged and quit competing, says Granvil Treece, an associate with the Marine Adviosry Service at Texas A&M University.

"There have have been fewer saltwater tournament cheaters caught this year than last, although the number of freshwater tournament cheaters has risen and a good many more of them have been sent to jail," said Treece. "Why do they do it? For the money. As the prize money increases, the incentive to cheat increases, and the incentives to cheat are getting really high.

The prize winner's purse at the Poco Bueno Tournament at Port O'Connor last year totaled more than $615,000, said Treece, who wrote an article on cheating anglers that appeared in the most recent issue of Texas Shores, published by the university's Sea Grant program.

"If there's a will, they'll find a way to cheat," he said, adding some anglers have found clever ways to boost their chances at winning.

Last year, for example, a contestant in a major Galveston saltwater tournament bloated his prize catch - a 9-foot tiger shark - with fresh water to increase its weight.

In the Saltwater Angler's Tournament in Port Arthur last year, tournament officials discovered the first-place 67 pound cobia, and three top-placed red snappers had all been previously frozen.

Tournament cheating catapulted in the 1970s, but officials have cracked down on violators and tournament participation is on the rise again, Treece

Several methods of detecting chearing have been developed byt the Texas A&M Seafood Technology Laboratories. There researchers have found ways to test fish entries for freshness.

The Marine Advisory Service has a mobile laboratory unit that regularly attends many Gulf Coast competitions at the tournament directors' requests, Treece says.

One test uses a device called a Torreymeter to measure electric properties in muscle tissue that breakdown after the fish dies. As the fish ages, it loses the ability to conduct a current, Treece says. If the fish is frozen, the reading is drastically altered. Other tests include checking the fish's eyes for opaqueness to help determine whether the fish has been frozen and examining the blood from the fish's heart through a microscope. If the cell membranes are not intact, the fish likely was frozen. Treece says.

"As all of these testing procedures become standard practice in tournaments, the job of policing them will become easier," he said
