Park board endorses 2 projects

By LARRY HOLLIS Staff Writer

Two citizens-initiated projects relating to parks were endorsed this week by the Parks and Recreation Advisory Board during its regular monthly meeting.

One concerns the establishment of a new park in the north part of the city, and the other involves improvements at an existing park in the southern section.

Joe Warren, a resident in the Northcrest Addition, asked the board Tuesday evening about the possibility of developing a park on a triangular tract of land around the Northcrest water tower. The tower is fenced off from the surrounding property.

Warren said the area would make a good park since it is centrally located for residents in the neighborhood. He said the project idea had received support from residents he had contacted.

It wouldn't take much effort to get rid of the weeds and there was already good grass in the area, he noted. In addition, some playground equipment would benefit the children in the neighborhood, he added.

"It's an ideal place to have a park," Warren stated. "There's lots of kids in the neighborhood." And the plot size is sufficient for a neighborhood park.

Warren said he thought the city-property land was already designated for park uses, but he wasn't certain.

Board member Gary Meador suggested Warren contact other residents and prepare ideas for landscaping, needed equipment and other matters for developing the park.

Warren said he felt many of the residents would be willing to volunteer labor to help prepare the property. David Callison, Parks and Recreation Department director, said the city probably would be willing to help supervise the development of the area if the park is approved by the city commission.

residents on what type of volunteer efforts - time, labor, money, ideas could be obtained and to report back to the advisory board.

The board approved two motions on recommendations to submit to the commission. One recommends designating the property as a city park if it is not now designated. The other suggests that if the land is already designated for park use, the city pursue plans for its development.

The other citizens project was submitted by Citizens for Better Government representative Floye Christensen concerning Marcus Sanders Park.

Christensen said the CBG members were wanting to help with maintenance of the park area, located east of Octavius and between Oklahoma and Crawford

She said members are willing to trim grass and plants in the park, reseed the grass, put out flowers and fill up holes in the ground. In addition, the group wants to donate some playground equipment for the park and possibly even put in some barbecue equipment, she explained.

Christensen said the citizens group was asking if it could undertake the project under the supervision of the city. She said the group would provide funds to help with the improvements.

The citizens group wants to undertake its park project to help revive interest in similar projects throughout the city and "rejuvenate the coals" of more citizen involvement in developing and maintaining places of beauty in the city, Christensen stated.

She said the CBG was issuing a challenge to other groups, civic organizations, clubs and churches to help with other parks or to develop other similar projects.

Derington said he was glad to see the interest expressed in the project by the citizens group, with other board members expressing

Health care bill for poor wins approval

Lewis' tie-breaking vote gets plan through House

AUSTIN (AP) — Acting in less than two minutes, the Senate today gave final approval to a health care plan for the poor and adjourned. ending the Legislature's brief special session.

Senators endorsed the $70 million plan on a voice vote after Sen. John Traeger, D-Seguin, said minor amendments added by the House on Wednesday had improved the

"I am delighted," Traeger said after the legislation was approved.

The House passed the plan on a 90-54 vote Wednesday after conservative members unsuccessfully sought to delay most major aspects of it for two

Speaker Gib Lewis, who cast a dramatic tie-breaking vote Wednesday to kill conservatives' efforts to dilute the bill, sent House members home after the vote.

The House vote came on the second day of the specision that Gov. Mark White piggy-backed onto the regular session that ended at midnight Monday without a final vote on the health plan.

White looked on today as the Senate finished legislative action. Under the plan, if a county without a public hospital spends over 10 percent of its taxes for indigent health care, the state would cover 90 percent of additional expenses. There are 132 counties without a public hospital.

The plan sets aside $70 million in state money - without a tax hike - to help provide health care for the poor. Repeal of the state law against Sunday shopping will provide $40 million for the Schoolcraft said.

The initial vote on the substitute bill offered on behalf of the Texas Conservative Coalition was 73-71 in favor of killing it. But a roll call verfication wound up 71-71.

'Show the chair voting aye,'' said Lewis, stifling the conservatives' effort by using his power to break ties. 'You just do what you have to do when you have to. ... You always hope you don't have to," Lewis said after the vote. The three most substantive amendments, tacked on by Killeen Rep. Stan Schlueter were, according to Lewis, added to "prohibit the counties from increasing taxes and blaming the Legislature.'

White added two items to the agenda Wednesday. The House responded quickly, approving a bill to keep the Department of Aging in operation and approving creation of a new river authority.

Dallas Rep. Jesse Oliver's health care bill had died as the regular session ended.

Senators quickly approved the measure Tuesday, shortly after the special session began. Rep. Alan Schoolcraft, R-San Antonio, pushed the conservative alternative, a package that included postponing most of the state money for two years. "We're trying to jump head-long into a program with no cap on it and will grow and grow and grow,"

The highlights

AUSTIN (AP) — Here are highlights of the indigent health care bill approved by the House Wednesday:

- Provides procedures for resolving conflicts between public hospitals and the home counties of patients who can't

- Requires the Texas Department of Human Resources to set eligibility standards for patients from counties without a public hospital.

 Counties without a public hospital are required to pay for only 30 days of hospitalization or $30,000 in services per patient per year.

If a county without a public hospital spends more than 10 percent of its tax revenues on indigent health care, the state will pay 90 percent of additional expenses.

- About 70,000 people in counties without a public hospital will become eligible.

 Those counties will pay about $25 million over two years for care of their poor.

- A state Indigent Health Care Assistance Fund will be established to cover the state share of the costs and to help public hospitals that treat a disproportinate share of the indigent patients.

"We're not saying write it off, forget it, never," he said, adding that the indigent health care issue needs further study.

Oliver's plan was the product of a 71-member task force that studied the topic for two years.

"If we continue to study we will be impacted negatively by the pain and sufFering and death of children who will be born handicapped," Oliver said. "We've studied it. We've made the compromises."

Oliver praised Lewis for making a "gutsy vote."

'He makes the critical decisions when they need to be made. And he makes them right," Oliver said.

If the Schoolcraft amendment had been approved, Oliver said he would have withdrawn the bill touching off possible legislative turmoil Schoolcraft said his intent was to prevent establishment of a costly state program in a time of tight

Tree replacement plan studied

By LARRY HOLLIS

Staff Writer The Parks and Recreation

Advisory Board discussed a tree replacement program for city parks during their regular monthly meeting Tuesday Chairman Duane Harp said he had been approached about the idea of the city developing a tree replacement cycle to replace park trees on a regular basis. He said dead and diseased trees should be removed first, with other trees checked regularly to see if they needed replacing. A regular schedule would help "keep the trees going" instead of letting them reach deteriorated and unattractive conditions, he stated. Harp asked David Callison,

Parks and Recreation Department director, if the city currently had a specific tree replacement program. Callison said the city had no formally organized schedule, but park crews check trees periodically. Dead trees are marked, and other trees are checked for dead limbs which need to be removed, he said.

Because of the increased maintenance and upkeep occurring during the summer months, the removal of dead trees and limbs is usually taken care of during fall and winter months when the crews have more time to handle such operations, he explained. Board member Mrs. Robert H. Sanford asked if the city spends much time trimming trees back to promote better growth. Board member Joel Derington noted that could create a labor problem because of the number of trees involved and the limited personnel available

Board member W. A. Morgan said if tree trimming is done, it should be conducted under proper horticultural practices instead of 'just chopping off limbs.'

Harp suggested the city staff look at the feasibility of developing a regular tree replacement cycle. In other matters, the advisory board discussed the possibility of developing a city volleyball league program for the fall months. Board member Gary Meador said the volleyball program would operate under similar procedures for the city's softball leagues. He said there was no city facilities available where the games could be played, but there's a possibility of using school gymnasiums. Meador said the league could be self-supportive through team and player fees, as with the softball program. The fees could cover the costs of equipment, trophies and rental of the school gyms for the eight to ten week season.

He said he felt there was a lot of interest in the volleyball program, with a number of teams from surrounding area cities which could come to Pampa to play with the league teams.

"The city has been successful with its softball leagues," Meador said. "Perhaps it could be so in the volleyball league.

Harp asked Meador to check on the use of school gyms and rental costs. The league will be discussed again at the June meeting. The board also discussed problems arising from stagnant water pools in creeks in some parks. Sanford said the pools are causing smells in the summer months and creating breeding places for mosquitoes. "The mosquitoes are terrible" near many park areas, she said. She said the creek beds used to be dredged by the city in past years, but she hasn't known of any

Louis Wouters, president of the Belgian Soccer Federation, demanded an autopsy for two whom he said were either stabbed or shot. The Belgian government in a statement said it was "very seriously reconsidering" giving permission for matches involving British teams. It said it had taken all the necessary precautions "in the light of the presumed risks and previous experiences.

On May 11 a grandstand fire, possibly started by hooligans, killed 53 people and injured 200 at Britain's Bradford stadium

European sports officials and newspapers questioned whether Britain should be allowed to compete in international events. One British legislator said his country's team should be banned from the 1986 World Cup final.

In London, Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher

issued a statement saying those responsible for the rioting "have brought shame and disgrace to their country and to football.

Premier Wilfried Martens said on television that the decision to go ahead with the game "may have astonished the Italians, but it was taken for security reasons." He sent a telegram of condolence to Italian Premier Bettino Craxi.

The two teams played the game after a 90-minute delay, and Juventus, of Turin, Italy, won the European Cup, the continent's leading soccer competition, defeating Britain's Liverpool by a 1-0

The riot broke out in a grandstand where British fans of the Liverpool team and Italian backers of Juventus were separated only by a makeshift 10-foot-high fence.

Witnesses, including many sports reporters, said bottles and cans were tossed over the fence, and that the British fans pushed down the fence and crushed some Italians under it.

Most of the Italians tried to escape, and many of them got onto the field. However, hundreds were crushed and suffocated against a wall at the end of the grandstand. Some climbed the wall and jumped to the ground 10 feet below, only to be crushed when the wall collapsed.

Both British and Italian fans alleged that in the chaos after the wall collapsed, police attacked fans with their clubs rather than helping the victims.

Interior Minister Charles Ferdinand Nothomb said 2,000 policemen were mobilized for the game, but "the violence began before the match and most police officers were outside the stadium to protect people who were coming in."

The Interior Ministry and a European soccer association started work today on separate inquiries to determine responsibility for Wednesday night's deadly riot. Most of the victims were Italians trampled or crushed to death under a wall that collapsed when panicked fans tried to escape Brussels' Heysel stadium when the riot broke out before the match. "People were trapped by rubble and dead bodies." said John Welsh, 27, of Toxteth, England. "It was terrible and nobody seemed to be doing anything. We were trying to pull people out, but idiots were still pushing.

Callison said the city could consider looking for someone who had the proper equipment and could do the mowing on a regular contractural basis.

The stagnant pools problem will be discussed again at the board's next meeting. In other business, the board recommended the city engineering staff make studies on improving the accessibility of the Central Park complex to handicapped individuals.

The problems of accessibility to the park arose in relation to the large attendance at the annual Chautauqua activities held on Labor Day, Callison explained.

Callison said access for the handicapped is a need that should be addressed for that event. He said there are no curb cut-outs for wheel chairs, making it hard for many handicapped people to get into the park by themselves.

Other problems for the handicapped are the steeply sloped sides in the main park area and the wooden bridge on the hike and bike trail, he noted

Meador said approaches could be located in the more level areas of the park complex, with accesses developed into the other areas. Harp said trails also should be provided to help the handicapped get across the grass to the asphalt-surfaced hike and bike director there.

The district director is in charge of all personnel in the office, assuring that activities are carried out on a daily basis, Rogers said. The main goal of the office is to see that rules and regulations are observed to aid the conservation of oil and gas.

Rogers has seen the office increase in the number of staff members. Clerical personnel have grown only from four to five, he said. But the field staff has increased from about five to about 13, he said, with some fluctuation arising from periodic vacancies.

The office now has 22 employees. Rogers said the growth has come about as the Legislature became more serious about providing jobs for the policing of the oil and gas

'There's been a huge increase in public awareness of pollution," Blakeney observed, leading to more responsibilities "of what we're required to do in this field."

Rogers noted the duties and work of the office staff have changed over the years, too. "I've seen them go from posting production records in ledgers to using computers . . . from the Stone Age to the Machine Age, nearly," he stated

Blakeney said there are more duties now for the clerical staff, more responsibilities than that of formerly just being in charge of keeping the ledgers.

Rogers said oil and gas production in the Panhandle area 'has been on an even keel' for the most part during his time here. Oil production has decreased slightly, he noted, while gas production has been on a slight incline.

As new District 10 director. Blakeney will be facing some new requirements arising out of the recent RRC decision regarding the use of low temperature separation units (LTX units) on many oil wells by independent producers.

"I think it's going to be a chore right here at the beginning until we get this gas-oil ratio testing out of the way," Blakeney said. "And then I'm going to like it."

If finally put into implementation, the RRC decision will require the retesting of all wells using the LTX units in the Panhandle Field.

Current RRC regulations classify a well as an oil well if it produces less than 100,000 cubic feet of gas for each barrel of oil produced from the well, Blakeney explained. Any wells producing less than the 100,000 to 1 ratio will be subject to reclassification.

Only wells with the LTX units will be retested for its gas-oil ratio production, he said.

Rogers said the office has no complete list of the wells using the units, but the RRC decision requires all producers with the units to report their use to the district office.

Rogers estimated "a little over a thousand wells appear to be up for retesting," but there's no way of knowing for sure until the list is completed.

"But most of the time still will be spent on field inspections for waste and pollution" matters, Blakeney said. And the office will still continue to spend of time" handling complaints about waste and pollution from wells in the territory, he said.

Rogers was honored Wednesday with an open house in the RRC offices, located on the second floor of City Hall.

TEXAS/REGIONAL

Analysts: Texas could gain industries under tax proposal

WASHINGTON (AP) - If they were in the real world, the Colorado Carringtons might move their "Dynasty" to "Dallas" under President Reagan's tax reform proposal.

The Texas Office of State-Federal Relations did a quick analysis Wednesday of the effects of the ambitious tax reform package on the state and found that eliminating the deduction for state and local income taxes "might trigger migration by businesses or well-off families from high-tax to low-tax states." like Texas.

But the proposal to begin taxing municipal bonds could have a "severe effect" on the Texas economy and a limitation on preferential deductions for the oil producers could have a "chilling" effect on the industry, the state analysts said.

Oil companies would fare better under the new reform proposal than they would have under the one proposed by the Treasury Department late last year, the state office said.

The old proposal would have eliminated a deduction for intangible drilling costs. Though under the new proposal the oil deduction (based on the presumption that oil will run out), would have to be spread over the life of a well that produces more than 10 barrels a day, the intangible drilling costs deduction remains.

Nevertheless, oil companies would prefer the

"Besides chilling a major Texas industry, the change also would slightly reduce state revenues derived from oil and gas activity," said the state

The proposed limitation on preferential treatment of capital gains could affect the venture capital supply, and consequently the expansion of high-technology industries Texas is trying to draw But for those who do develop or expand, Texas could look more attractive because of its low taxes.

Local governments could be adversely affected by the elimination of the local tax deduction, but would be most affected by the proposed elimination of tax-exempt status of municipal bonds for non-government uses.

'Tax-exempt bonds are a critical source of economic development financing, so eliminating this tax preference could have a severe effect on the state economy," the analysts said.

Rent and utility bills could go up, they predicted. Utilities companies would have to find "alternate sources for the lost revenue" from the elimination of the investment tax credit, presumably through higher rates, the state analysts said.

A lowering of the depreciation rate for housing construction could result in higher rents as real estate investors offset the loss of their tax

A proposed shorter write-off period for depreciation could benefit businesses and farmers.

'Too long a depreciation schedule would have hampered economic expansion and growth," said the state analysts

Like the majority of other Americans, about 79 percent of Texans would feel no impact on their individual tax bill if the tax reform package were enacted. About 21 percent would pay higher taxes, those at the upper and lower ends of the income

EVER STRIVING FOR TOP O' TEXAS" TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment

Chinese are not capitalistic yet

It is difficult to know what is going on in China these days. Many commentators have noted with hope that Chinese authorities have permitted an increase in private ownership and competition. Yet China's leaders continue to speak the language of socialism and

In the March 18 issue of the Beijing Review, for example, an article about a speech by Chinese leader Deng Xiaoping is headlined, "Deng says China sticks to socialism. Deng's speech includes the following paragraph

"The four modernizations were are striving for today are none other than socialist modernizations. All our policies concerning opening to the world, invigorating the domestic economy and structural reform are directed towards developing a socialist economy. We allow private businesses, joint ventures with Chinese and foreign investment and wholly owned foreign enterprises to grow in China, but we see to it that socialist public ownership always remains the mainstay.'

The newspaper paraphrases Deng's central message thus: "The country is building socialism with the ultimate purpose of achieving communism.'

Some commentators suggest that mainland China will permit the emergency of a capitalist economy while covering the development with socialist rhetoric, and that the new economy will have a dynamism and popularity that will prevent socialist retrenchment. Deng's works give one pause, however.

When you get down to cases, communism is more a political system-embodying a monopoly of power for the Communist Party—than a coherent economic theory. Communist leaders have permitted the emergence of market-like conditions from time to time since Lenin's New Economic Policy in the 1920s, often turning pragmatic when desperate for a little production.

What is happening in mainland China now may be—and we hope it is—a genuine, long-term move away from discredited socialist fantasies. It may be, however, a temporary "one step back" from dogmatic Maoism. Optimism about mainland China should be tempered

Volcker keeps dollar high

A funny thing happened last month that should give all "economy-watchers" something to think about

On April 22, U.S. short-term interest rates plunged to 7.62 percent on T-Bills, lowest in two years, and down nearly 80 basis points since the

If the "conventional wisdom" were sound, this rapid drop in interest rates should have caused the dollar, already under attack, to fall still further. Instead, the dollar "soared," putting on a robust rally on April 23 and 24, rising almost 4 percent against the German mark, and 2 percent against the French franc, and, despite a little "back - off" in early May, restored these gains on May 9.

Yet, on April 22, CBS economy-watcher Robert Krulwich was telling morning news viewers that "high U.S. interest rates are the main reason for the strong dollar." Krulwich obviously knew something the market definitely didn't.

What the money market was paying attention to, of course, was not U.S. interest rates, but Federal Reserve Chairman Paul Volcker, who on April 24 scotched speculation that the Fed might ease monetary policy in light of the slower economy - and told investors "interest rates will remain firm." He did the same thing on May 9, when the dollar was trying to back down.

It was a grim reminder that once again it is Volcker, not the market or the administration, that runs the U.S. economy. And if Volcker wants a strong dollar, he can have it.

It was also a reminder that the baloney purveyed by liberal economics commentators, such as Krulwich, about the "direct" connection between the high dollar, and high interest rates and deficits, is just that - baloney

In fact, in nine of the last twelve quarters, the dollar has responded either in exactly the OPPOSITE way that Krulwich and others have argued, or not at all. For example, since last August, T-Bill rates have fallen 300 basis points, from 10.65 to 7.62 percent, a huge 28 percent decline.

If Mr. Krulwich were right, the dollar should have plunged with equal speed - but it didn't. Instead, the dollar soared by another 13 percent against the trade-weighted average of all currencies - and against the German mark, a massive 20 percent, from 2.64 marks - dollar to 3.15. In fact, the faster interest rates fell, the stronger the dollar got!

In short, the whole notion that the dollar is strong because U.S. interest rates are high, is simply disproved by factual history. For example, in the last half of 1982, T-Bill rates plunged by 34 percent, from 12.1 percent to 8.0 percent, 400 basis points. But in that period, the dollar, already strong, rose another 7 percent, and its biggest rise coincided with the sharpest interest rate drop!

In only 3 of the last 12 quarters has the dollar moved predictably in tandem with U.S. interest rates, but in all three cases, the dollar was moving, not because of the rates, but because the Fed was actively tightening U.S. credit. Money speculators are betting, not on the actual

U.S. credit markets, but on what they think Volcker's next move will be

Furthermore, these international speculators know that the Fed's first commitment is to the big U.S. banks, who in turn are in heavy hock to the less-developed countries (LDC) and the Third World, and therefore dependent on a high U.S. dollar to get those bad debts repaid. That's why Volcker deliberately keeps the dollar high.

As Volcker admitted at a meeting with legislators from fifteen farm states back in March, "Look, the fact is, your constituents (farmers and small banks) are unhappy, and mine (big bankers) aren't."

This is precisely why on May 14, the House Republican Policy Committee, at the urging of Rep. John Kasich (Ohio), finally abandoned its slavish support of Fed "independence." It specifically blamed the high dollar on the Fed's failure to apply a consistently sound monetary policy," and called for "a monetary policy that will not slow, but rather promote growth." It further warned: "No policy-making body should place a ceiling on economic growth as a part of the nation's monetary policy.

This was followed on May 16 by the House Budget Committee's adoption of Jack Kemps resolution asking the administration to "convene an international monetary conference this year with the express purpose of exploring options to stabilize currency exchange rates, reduced interest rates, promote maximum world economic growth, and help assure domestic price stability.

The next day, Volcker, who is nothing if not 'political," finally got the message, and lowered the Federal Reserve Discount Rate to 7.5 percent, the lowest since 1978 - but it took some tough-minded Republican congressmen with bipartisan support to put the Fed on notice to stop choking the economy.

Today in History

By The Associated Press Today is Thursday, May 30, the 150th day of 1985. There are 215 days left in the year

Today's highlight in history: On May 30, 1431, Joan of Arc, condemned as a heretic, was burned at the stake in Rouen, France.

On this date:

Ten years ago: At the close of a NATO meeting in Brussels, President Gerald R. Ford said he found that the other heads of state believed America's commitment to the alliance to be "firm and vigorous.

Five years ago: The Commerce Department reported the index of leading economic indicators dropped 4.8 percent in April 1980, the largest monthly decline on record.

One year ago: In Nicaragua, a bomb exploded inside the jungle headquarters of rebel leader Eden Pastora, who was holding a news conference. Four people, including U.S. journalist Linda Frazier, were killed. Pastora was wounded.

Today's birthdays: The man of a thousand voices, Mel Blanc, is 77.

How to run a banquet

Sooner or later, most everybody will dress in their spiffiest clothes and attend a banquet, eat fancy food with a lot of sauce on it, see plaques given out and hear speeches being made.

We are a very banquet-oriented society. If two people do it in this country, they have an annual banquet, and pass the rare roast beef, please.

During the past seven or eight years, I have attended somewhere in the neighborhood of 600 banquets. Every banquet must have a speaker, and that is what I usually do when I go to a banquet. It's inside work, there is no heavy lifting involved, and you get to meet a lot of nice people.

Because I attend so many of these affairs, I have become somewhat of an expert on how banquets should be run. There are some very definite do's and don'ts when it comes to putting on a big sitdown dinner. Because I figure there are many in the reading audience who arrange banquets, or will have to arrange one in the near future, I have decided to offer my guidance in this area. Pay close attention or you might foul up your firm's banquet and get fired.

WHAT TO SERVE: If you are planning a seafood buffet, never serve those hard-shelled crabs that you have to break open to eat.

I was at a banquet and they served those things, and eight people had to be hospitalized. They were injured trying to get past the crab's shell to get to the meat, which there isn't very much of after you've gone to all the trouble of digging down to it.

Under no circumstances serve barbecue chidken. The only way to eat barbecue chicken is if you are naked and can take a shower immediately after eating. Serve barbecue chicken at a banquet and your guests will have sauce and grease in their hair and all over their ties and dresses, and you could be held responsible for a rather large dry-cleaning bill.

HOW TO SERVE THE FOOD: Make certain the breads, salads and desserts already are on the table when the guests sit down. Otherwise, your banquet will run two to three hours longer than you planned while five waiters attempt to serve four courses to 800 guests. That happened at a banquet I attended recently. It wound up lasting longer than the Last Supper

SHOULD YOU HAVE A COCKTAIL HOUR BEFORE THE BANQUET? Look at it this way. If you get 'em drunk enough, they won't care if the food is lousy

HOW SHOULD PLAQUES AND AWARDS BE HANDED OUT? Quickly. There is nothing more boring to people who aren't getting a plaque or an award than watching people who are.

WHAT TO DO ABOUT LOCAL POLITICIANS SITTING IN THE AUDIENCE: Introduce them if they are not under indictment. But under no circumstances allow them near the microphone Nobody can outtalk a county commissioner who has just come from a cocktail party

IS THERE ANYTHING I WOULD LIKE TO HEAR AN EMCEE SAY AT A BANQUET THAT HAS NEVER BEEN SAID BEFORE?

Yes. Ladies and gentlemen: I realize some of you haven't finished your meals, but in the interest of time we are going to start the program. so put down those knives and forks and listen. (c) 1985 Cowles Syndicate, Inc.

Germans oppose use of military force

By Don Graff

KASSEL, West Germany (NEA) -In an opinion poll on the question of whether military force should ever be used, 37 per cent of German respondents said no.

The corresponding negative percentages from France, Britain and the United States were, respectively, 8, 6 and 4. The figures are not exactly late news. The poll was taken in 1983 by the International Institute for Comparative Social Research in Berlin. But the discrepancy between the reaction by West Germany and its three closest allies to the question of use of force is still interesting and revealing. Whether it demonstrates a newly developed and exceptionally broad streak of pacifism in postwar Germans, a simple recognition of geopolitical realities or a combination of both, any and all are understandable - especially here.

Kassel is a medium-sized industrial city in what used to be roughly the center of Germany. Today, it is smack on the border with East Germany, the most advanced outpost of the Soviet empire in Europe.

Bonn and the Ruhr are only a couple of hours away by Autobahn, a short drive that takes you from one side of West Germany to the other. A few miles to the south is the Fulda Gap, a break between two ranges of hills that has been of historic military significance. The last time an army passed this way it was commanded by Gen. George S. Patton who was heading east. The next time, should the very worst scenario ever be played out, the commander would almost certainly be Soviet, striking toward the heart of the allied European defense structure around Frankfurt, a quick 50 miles to the west.

The geography points up the paradox of West Germany's role in Western defense. It is both the linchpin of the alliance and the member most acutely vulnerable to direct attack. It is not simply on the front line, it is the front line.

Superficially, there is little visible indication of this vulnerability. Although there is concern about a sluggish economy and a stubbornly high unemployment rate, the impression given almost everywhere in West Germany these days is of prosperity and contentment.

The countryside, reflecting the German passion for order, is a vast, well-tended garden. Towns and villages, all reconstructed since the war, look even newer. Immaculately painted houses - everything might have been built yesterday, certainly no earlier than last year.

It does not look like a front line. Yet should worst come to cataclysmic worst, these houses and this perfectly manicured countryside would be the first to go.

There is no putting that completely out of mind. Especially not at the Ful-

Because of a House Bill 72 requirement that a school must have at least one teacher per class, the Marfa school board voted in February to shut down the elementary school in Redford, which is 15 miles southeast of Presidio on the Rio Grande.

But that would have meant busing students 75 miles north to Marfa, and school trustees reconsidered and voted unanimously on May 14 to keep the school open after all, in spite of state regulations.

"We had time to think about it," Aim Rushton, vice president of the Marfa School Board, told the San Angelo Standard-Times.

We had a lot of input from concerned citizens, and after considering it for a long, long time, we feel like we'll try it one more year. I have no idea about 1987."

The Redford elementary school has three classrooms and three teachers for 30 to 35 students in kindergarten through eighth

"We were going to have some little bitty ones getting up early and coming home late. They would leave about 7 and get home about 5 or 6 in the afternoon. That's a long time for anyone to be away from home every day five days a week," Ms. Rushton said.

The school also could be in violation of a regulation that requires teachers to spend a given amount of time on particular subjects. Marfa superintendent Carl Robinson said. The three teachers currently must juggle. time spent with each subject in each grade, he said. Ms. Rushton said she did not know what disclipinary action, if any, the state will take against the school district and did not know what the school district will do if the state does act against the school district.

"I think that will be taken care of when it arises," she said. "We're having to educate children, and that's our main concern."

People living in Redford applauded the decision.

'It would have complicated my life." said Lucia Viramontes, who has two children in the school

"My first reaction was, 'They're not going to bus my kids," she

"There's very steep mountains on the way. It's dangerous in the winter," she added. "It was a ridiculous idea, I think."

Arrests break up major cocaine smuggling ring, DEA officials say

DALLAS (AP) — Federal agents said the arrests of eight people, including the co-owners of a Dallas oil company, have broken up a ring that was one of the major suppliers of cocaine to the United States.

Among those arrested Wednesday on various counts of conspiracy to distribute cocaine and marijuana were Joe Bill Bennett, 39, of Dallas and James Jefferson Bennett Jr., 32, of Carrollton, owners of Bennett Resources Inc., and at least one of their employees, authorities said.

Phil Jordan, a special agent with the Drug Enforcement Administration in Dallas, said multi-kilo quantities of cocaine and marijuana were shipped from South America and Mexico into Dallas and then distributed to Austin, McAllen, St. Louis and New "Dallas was one of the major cities," Jordan said. "These people are significant violators." He said the group was suspected of trafficking "multi-kilos of cocaine and tons of marijuana.'

Jordan said DEA agents last year joined an investigation that local and state officials began eight

The arrests followed a 19-count indictment. The indictment, which named 13 people, will remain sealed until the whereabouts of at least four suspects still at large could be determined, officials said. Authorities declined to publicly identify the others who were indicted. However, a federal source who asked to remain anonymous said one of the five is in federal custody under another sealed indictment that alleges drug crimes. The source identified the man as Jose Luis Ramirez Hernandez of Mexico.

The eight arrested were brought before U.S. Magistrate John B. Tolle, for a preliminary hearing Thursday. He denied bone on seven of the suspects, but allowed the eighth, Peggy Onstatt Baugh, 50, of Grand Prairie, released on her own recognizance.

During a morning raid near Addison Airport, agents seized a twin-engine airplane registered to Joe Bill Bennett and kept at Million Air, an aircraft ground servicing company that also contains an office for Bennett Resources Inc.

"The whole thing came as a surprise to us," said Carl Paris, director of operations at Million Air. "We don't normally watch what they do. It's no concern of ours.

He said he did not know how long Bennett had been a tenant at Million Air, a luxury hangar facility that opened in the spring of

Baby-sitting kids not part of grandmas plans

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: This is for "No Names, Please," who couldn't understand why neither her parents nor her in-laws would take her kids once in a while so she could have a little vacation. I am a grandmother, and I won't the other. keep my grandchildren either. I raised five by myself, and I was never ashamed to take them anywhere because they were taught how to behave. I'm sorry I can't say the same about my grandchildren.

I love the little tykes and it's not their fault that they weren't trained right, but I refuse to baby-sit or take them anywhere. If they don't get what they ask for in a store, they fall down and kick and scream. When they were at my house, they walked on the furniture, stood on the table and pulled things out of cupboards and drawers. I was exhausted trying to watch them. Meanwhile their mother (my daughter) paid no attention to them

My neighbor and her husband just retired, and they were so afraid they might be drafted to baby-sit their grandchildren, they sold their home, got a post-office box and bought an RV. They keep traveling in self-defense.

Please print this so some young parents will understand why their parents won't help with the kids. NO NAMES, EITHER

DEAR NO NAMES: You have lots of company. However, there are some people who are lucky enough to be able to write a letter like this one:

DEAR ABBY: I'm sorry for "No Names." My husband and I are only children, so our children are the only grandchildren on both sides.

We have twin daughters and one son-all under 10-and both sets of grandparents beg to baby-sit, or keep the kids for days or weeks if we'd let them. We actually have to be careful not to favor one set over

LUCKY IN LONG BEACH

DEAR ABBY: I am a high school senior who will be 18 in June. I have been going steady with a 17-year-old girl for six months and want to give her a gold ring with two small diamonds and two small rubies.

My parents think it is improper to give a girl a ring at my age, and would rather see me buy her a bracelet. To me a ring is just a piece of jewelry, and has no more significance than a bracelet, necklace or earrings.

A KID FROM NEW YORK

DEAR KID: A ring may be "just a piece of jewelry" to you, but to most people it symbolizes a serious commitment. And until you're ready for one, give necklaces, earrings or bracelets.

Ballroom dancing campus hit

CARLISLE, Pa. (AP) -Students at Dickinson College are taking a step back in time - back to the romance and glamour of the '40s and '50s.

What Dickinson students are using to capture that bygone era is dance, and a fellow student - a former Ice Capades figure skater - is leading the way.

Richard Sherwin, a senior from Cleveland Heights, Ohio, began teaching a ballroom dance class on campus at the start of the spring semester after being disappointed with the way students got all dressed up to attend formals and then danced only to rock 'n' roll music.

"I thought, 'Wouldn't it be neat if you could get dressed up and go to a ballroom dance?" Sherwin, 23, said. "My friends said they thought it would be fun, but they didn't know how to do it (dance).

The response to Sherwin's ballroom dance class has been overwhelming. Nearly 80 students preregistered for the class, which was limited to 10 couples. Another 40 students registered for a second class offered because of the great demand. As word of his classes spread, Sherwin was invited to campus sororities to give dance lessons to members.

Sherwin said that though he was surprised by the amount of interest in ballroom dancing on campus, he could understand why students found this type of dance appealing.

"It's more romantic and nostalgic. I think that's a nide kind of change," Sherwin said. "There's also more interaction. Dancing with another person, you feel like you're a couple rather than alone, and you have that interaction with both uptempo and slow dances."

There also is a wide range of special occasions, such as weddings, where the ability to do the various types of dances taught in the class comes in handy, he

Buzz Jones, director of the Dickinson College Jazz Ensemble and leader of the Buzz Jones Big Band, which has been playing in the central Pennsylvania region for the past five years, said he has seen a growing interest in ballroom dancing in the last two to three

"I've found that people are really clamoring for this type of thing. There is really a resurgence, and it's really among young pepole," Jones said. "Part of it has to do with the tunes. People like to hear good melodies. People also tend to get dressed up more, and you need that for ballroom dancing.

John Bouton of Darien, Conn., who was among the first students to take the class, said he believes student interest in ballroom dancing is part of a distinct new style emerging among college students, which already has been reflected in students' dress and political views "With the growing conservatism that's going around, you're seeing the development of a whole style, a classic style, and ballroom dancing embraces that style," Bouton said, adding, "It's not only fun, it's a skill worth having.'

Other students in the class said they became interested in formal dancing while studying in Dickinson's programs abroad.

Round two arms talks underway

GENEVA, Switzerland (AP) -U.S. and Soviet negotiators today began a second round of arms control talks that the Soviets say are threatened by U.S. research into a space-based defense system.

The U.S. delegation headed by Max M. Kampelman arrived at the Soviet mission, where they were greeted by the Soviet delegations headed by Victor P. Karpov.

Karpov, before the U.S. delegation arrived, told reporters he was a "practical optimist" about possible progress at the talks. The "common goal" of the superpowers is "not allowing an arms race in space," Karpov said. "Now our countries should practically agree how to do so."

Kampelman faced Karpov across a negotiating table and said, "Let's hope this session will be a constructive one.'

The meeting was a joint plenary session of all six key negotiators and their aides, comprising 42 people.

The resumption of talks follows a five-week lapse during which both sides returned to their capitals for consultations after a first round that showed little progress.

In Moscow on Wednesday, Communist Party leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev called for a renewal of superpower detente. However, he said U.S. research into a space-based missile defense could lead to "the scrapping of every prospect for an end to the arms race. The U.S. research program, known as e Strategic Defense Initiative, has been dubbed "Star Wars.

Karpov said Wednesday as he arrived in Geneva that the Star Wars program "sharply reduced" chances of an agreement.

He urged the United States to scrap the program in order to open the way to radical reductions in nuclear arms and, ultimately, to ... complete elimination of nuclear arms everywhere." The Soviets have charged that the United States is using the arms talks as "camouflage for its military preparations." The United States has said it will not give up research on the project while arms negotiations continue, and the issue is thought to be the main stumbling block in the talks.

U.S. officials have said the Soviets have prevented progress in the arms control talks by backtracking on positions they took in previous negotiations.

Kampelman avoided making accusations in hi arrival

Some states, cities cry 'double taxation' over Reagan proposal

WASHINGTON (AP) - Raising the cry of "double taxation," governors, mayors and other officials are protesting a key part of President Reagan's tax overhaul plan - ending the federal writeoff for state and local taxes.

"This portion of the plan is tax shifting, not simplification," said John Bragg, a Tennessee representative and president of the National Conference of State Legislatures. "Eliminating deductibility would be a crushing blow to state and local governments."

Reagan's proposal in the name of tax simplification would eliminate the federal tax provision allowing taxpayers to deduct the money they pay in state, county, and city taxes. It's a provision as old as the federal income tax itself.

In announcing the plan this week. Reagan called the writeoff a subsidy for "the high-tax policies of a handful of states.

Yet the deduction is the most common one claimed by taxpayers - even more than the popular home mortgage interest deduction that would be kept under the Reagan plan, according to the National Governors Association, one of the groups opposing the change. Without change, the deduction is expected to be worth $33 billion next year to taxpayers.

While losing the deduction for local taxes, individuals would see their federal income tax rates lowered. But some questioned whether that would be enough to offset the lost deduction.

"Under Reagan's proposal, California taxpayers will pay more, not less, in federal income taxes," said Los Angeles Mayor Tom Bradley

State and local officials fear taxpayers won't be as willing to pay local taxes when they are unable to write them off on the federal form.

"Every dollar they spend on local taxes will be a real dollar. It won't be a 50-cent dollar as it has been," said Matthew Coffey, executive director of the National Association of Counties. "... You're going to put more pressure on local governments to limit taxes."

Nowhere was opposition more vocal than in New York, a high-tax state that figures to be hard-hit by such a change. Gov. Mario Cuomo said, "It punishes states that are trying to provide essential services in the face of massive federal spending cuts.

Boarding a 62-foot sloop on the East River, New York Republican Sen. Alfonse D'Amato and Democratic Rep. Mario Biaggi staged a mock Boston Tea Party to protest the deduction elimination.

Mule is mascot of new quick-strike division

EDITOR'S NOTE - A new quick-strike infantry division training at a remote post in upstate New York is commanded by a former West Point football star. Perhaps it's appropriate that the old Army mule, the West Point mascot, is coming out of retirement to join the new outfit. By MEL REISNER

Associated Press Writer FORT DRUM, N.Y. (AP) - In the 1950s, he was the famed "Lonely End" of West Point football. During the Vietnam War, he was the officer who won praise from the president when he ordered an air strike on his own position to try to save his men. Today, Maj. Gen. William S. Carpenter Jr. is commander of the 10th Mountain Division (Light Infantry) which was recently activated as a quick-strike force training at this isolated outpost cradled between Lake Ontario and the Adirondack mountains.

Carpenter describes it as a sort of 8,700-member SWAT team, which will have the latest equipment but will also bring out of retirement the old Army mule. The division, he says, will exemplify the Army's thinking about light, rapidly deployable strike forces equally prepared to fight terrorists, Third World rebels, or enemy ground troops.

At age 47 and standing 6-foot-4, Carpenter's style is combat fatigues and wire-rimmed glasses. He is liked by his men.

Carpenter was a captain in June 1966 when he led a company on a search-and-destroy mission in the Central Highlands of wvn a101st Airborne unit expected to find only desultory resistance but instead ran into an estimated 700 troops of the 24th North Vietnamese Regiment, a unit known for its tenacity and ferocity.

With his 130-man cluster about to be overrun, Carpenter ordered an air strike on his own position, a move which wrenched the emotions of listeners at battalion headquarters.

Col. Henry Emerson, his battalion commander, radioed Carpenter, "I just want you to know - I'm putting you in for the Medal of Honor.'

"I've lost most of the company out here," was Carpenter's reply.

The planes dropped napalm. Carpenter said he would not have called in the strike had he known the planes were carrying napalm. But it scattered the Viet Cong and saved most of his men.

Then-president Lyndon Johnson hailed the episode as "an inspiring chapter" in U.S. military history. Carpenter did not get the Medal of Honor, the nation's highest award for battlefield bravery, but emerged from his service in Southeast Asia with two Silver Stars, a Bronze Star, and assorted other medals.

On the West Point football field in the late 1950s, Carpenter was instructed not to return to the Army huddles for signals. He was a split end, a position currently known as wide receiver, and Coach Earl "Red" Blaik reasoned his wideout lost too much time and energy returning to the huddle after each play.

As a senior in 1959, Carpenter won national prominence, succeeding 1958 Heisman Trophy winner Pete Dawkins on most All-America teams. Under new Coach Dale Hall, who replaced Blaik, Carpenter caught 43 passes for 591 yards — still the sixth-best season in the academy's history. After returning from Vietnam, Carpenter, a native of Springfield, Pa., taught at West Point's Office of Military Instruction and advanced rapidly from major to brigadier general as assistant commander of the 9th Infantry Division at Fort Lewis, Wash., where he also commanded the 3rd

Carpenter married early in his career and has three sons. Kenneth, the youngest, is a junior at the Air Force Academy in Colorado Springs, Colo.

Carpenter's new division was activated Feb. 13 with fewer than 100 troops to wear the new blue patch that features crossed swords in red and the word "Mountain" over the top. The new unit will have the latest in all-weather equipment and will train for specialized combat anywhere on the globe - desert or mountains. This 107,265-acre training ground gets an average of 150 inches of snow a year and temperatures can drop to 20 below.

Army Chief of Staff Gen. John A. Wickham Jr. recently ordered the division to begin training soldiers to handle mules preparatory to the assignment of the durable animals

Associated Press Writer SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico (AP) -Some leading Puerto Ricans are concerned that people here have become too dependent on aid from the United States and that only harm can come of it.

At least two of them - a political scientists and an economist maintain that social assistance from Washington has resulted in a loss of incentive and that the U.S. Commonwealth is becoming a tropical ghetto of crime, unemployment and reliance on the federal dole.

An economic slump has hit Puerto Ricans who had lived through the "Operation Bootstrap" boom era that brought them dramatically improved living Despite a high unemployment rate, few Puerto Ricans today will take menial, low-paying jobs. Much of the labor in the sugar cane fields or other suc areas is done by illegal aliens from the nearby Dominican Republic.

Gov. Rafael Hernandez Colon says Washington has been historically generous with aid to its Caribbean cousin, but that more attention must be paid to helping the island become 'self-sustaining.

Political scientist Jorge Heine has written that "the Puerto Rican miracle has turned into Welfare Island U.S.A." Economist Jaime Santiago Melandez has said Washington could be faced with a "South Bronx of the Caribbean."

U.S. interests are significant: U.S. corporations have $15 billion invested here; the 3.2 million people are U.S citizens and free to move to the mainland if the situation worsens, and the Pentagon considers the big U.S. Navy base on the eastern tip crucial to defenses in the Caribbean and Central America.

Colonized by Spain and ceded to the United States in the 1898 Spsnish-American War, it was neglected for years until politicians led by the late Gov. Luis Munoz Marin worked with Washington to develop U.S. Commonwealth status, which gave Puerto Rico more self-government and to Offered federal and local tax exemptions, U.S. corporations moved in by the thousands and a sleepy sugar-and-coffee economy with few natural resources boomed. The gross domestic product grew from $755 million in 1950 to nearly $14 billion in 1984, annual per capita income from $296 to $4,000, and average life expectancy from 45 to 74 years, one of the highest figures in the world.

But the recent U.S. recession resulted in closure of dozens of factories here, and some U.S. multinational corporations simply moved to foreign nations with lower costs of production.

"I'm a single-idea man," said the 40-year veteran in Corpus Christi's never-ending war on mosquitoes. And city residents can be thankful for his obsession because the result is not even a single suspected case of encephalitis.

Villarreal is bringing a long career in vector control to an end this week when he retires. He has battled the carriers of yellow fever, malaria, typhus, polio and encephalitis.

Because of his efforts, Corpus Christi broke ground on some important fronts. It was the first city in the country to fog underground sewers in the fight against Culex, the St. Louis encephalitis mosquito. It is one of very few cities whose mosquitoes have built up no tolerance to insecticides because diesel oil, not chemicals, is used on standing pools of water.

Looking back over his long career, Villarreal's biggest puzzler was the Culex mosquito's hideout. In 1966, Corpus Christi had an outbreak of St. Louis encephalitis - 100 diagnosed cases with an estimated 40 undiagnosed cases for each of the 100 confirmed cases.

"It was a major outbreak, but we weren't catching enough Culex mosquitoes to account for it," he said. Groups of scientists came here and trapped birds, looking for parasites, but they didn't find a sufficient quantity of virus in the birds' bloodstreams to account for the outbreak. They did identify the host as the English sparrow instead of the pigeon which had been previously suspected. Meanwhile, there were sleepless nights for Villarreal since the entire city was at risk.

"Virtually no one, unless they've had encephalitis, has any immunity to it, so that meant thousands of possible cases," he said. At that time, the only underground attack was periodic fogging of the sewer catch basins at each intersection. Somewhere swarms of Culex mosquitoes were hiding, and their secret nagged Villarreal. The next winter, he concentrated his Culex search on

"The sewers are laid absolutely level, but what happens as the earth shifts is that little dams develop under ground, he said. "That winter, I crawled down there. It would have been too dangerous in summer. As I crawled through, I found 100 adult Culex mosquitoes on the spot. The winds blow down there forever. and it's warm so mosquitoes have a perfect environment.

This discovery prompted Villarreal to make vector control history by fogging the sewers. This required a special machine since a combustion-engine couldn't be used because of the danger of igniting sewer gases. His goal was to break the life cycle of the Culex mosquito, but that couldn't be

"We've settled down to a set procedure; we fog every six weeks,

Villarreal, who talks of his department's achievements in terms of we, is quietly proud of the fact that his department was ecologically ahead of its time. "We have only used diesel oil on standing water, so the mosquitoes have not been exposed to a chemical residue," he said.

Therefore, they have built up no tolerance to insecticides. During the heyday of insecticides, this reluctance was derided. Outsiders called the department the Model T of vector control, he recalled. "They thought we were real old-fashioned, but all the time we were doing the right thing. As a result, a small amount of insecticide is still effective here.

Villarreal's entry into the vector control business was accidental. A lifelong Corpus Christian, he had marched off to fight in World War II. But an accident during maneuvers sent him home with a leg problem and a medical discharge. Jobs open to disabled vets in 1944 included one in vector control with the U.S. Public Health Service.

Vector refers to any organism which transmits disease. Corpus Christi's mosquitoes are actually Corpus Christi's problem, but the federal health agency got involved because the Naval Air Station is located here. And neither the city nor the county had any type of vector control.

After the end of World Wr II, the Public Health Service closed the Corpus Christi program and offered Villarreal a job in Mobile, Ala. Instead, he took the offer of a job with the city in vector control.

Keeping Corpus Christi free of insect-borne disease was a grueling task. "The work was brutal in the early days," he said. 'Everything had to be done by hand. Nueces County was known as 'the typhus county,'" he said. "We had more typhus per capita than any other place in the country. Education centered on getting rid of rats and keeping pit privies clean. When we'd kill the rats, the parasites would all leave and get onto people," he recalled. "So we would have to dust the buildings first and then later after the parasites were all gone, go in and catch the rats.

Making the job a nightmare was the lack of indoor plumbing in some parts of the city. There were 2,500 pit privies, primarily in areas brought into Corpus Christi by annexation. In 1947, a polio epidemic broke out and control efforts were concentrated on the housefly, which was then suspected of a role in its transmission. The first gallon of DDT used in the county was part of that containment effort. The privies had to be hand-sprayed with the insecticide once every week. Since Villarreal was the city's only vector control employee, the city and county lent trucks and laborers to the anti-polio campaign. The end of the pit privies did not decimate the local rodent population.

"Rats are always present in Corpus Christi. Often they are so noisy that people think they have opossums, but it's really rats," he said. If rats are endemic, so are opossums. For more than three years, his department caught and studied 100 opossums a month. This was part of the only study which has been made of Chaga's, a vary rare sleeping sickness caused by a reduviid bug (known as the kissing bug), which usually feeds on rodents and small animals. Though he admits to getting heartily sick of opossums then, he has retained a sneaking sympathy for the little animals. "They're so ugly," he Villarreal's department now has 10 employees working in control and three in surveillance. Three years ago, a secretary was added for the first time. "Everyone used to have to come back to the office and do their reports on their own free time," he said.

Retirement free-time will be a new experience for Villarreal. There'll be time to fish, which he enjoyed on rare occasions when he wasn't busy. And time for research. "There are things I'm interested in, and I'd like to stay on as a consultant," he said. "And Dr. (Christopher M.G.) Buttery said he would like for me to do that." Buttery is the city-county chief health officer Villarreal, who just turned 65, said he never planned to retire. He had open heart surgery four years ago but has made a good recovery. 'I'm fit enough to keep on doing the work," he said. Yet with his 65th birthday, retirement began to sound more attractive, and he finally set a date for quitting.

The Villarreals are long-time members of St. Theresa's parish where their five children attended services. Only one remains at home, a 17-year-old. They have three grandchildrn.

and this provides a very satisfactory control. He became Corpus Christi's only vector control officer

USDA looking for young scientists WASHINGTON (AP) - The Agriculture Department has begun a $2 million drive to recruit 50 promising young scientists for research projects aimed at finding space-age answers to some of mankind's most puzzling questions about the production of food. Terry B. Kinney Jr., administrator of the department's Agricultural Research Service, said Tuesday that the goal of hiring 50 scientists represents a near doubling of last year's program, in which 26 positions were offered.

'We're looking for the best and the brightest scientists ready to start careers working on challenging research projects," Kinney said

Typically, the man or woman being sought will be two years or less out of graduate school. The candidates will be eligible for oneor two-year appointments as research associates in the USDA agency in a salary range of about $26,000 to $40,000 per year, depending upon the individual. Kinney said the 50 will join veteran scientists in laboratories around the country to work on such projects as the genetic coding, physiology and cellular biochemistry of crops and livestock.

The $2 million that this year's program has available is double the 1984 authorization, he said.

Research associates must be U.S. citizens. Applicants can obtain information from: ARS, Personnel Division, c-o Carlene Russ, Room 569, Federal Center Building,

Bird forgotten man in Celtics' big win

By HOWARD ULMAN

AP Sports Writer BOSTON (AP) - Larry Bird finally has run into a team that can stop him. It's his own Boston Celtics.

He hasn't had to score as much as usual because his teammates have been shooting well, and many times his chief competitors for rebounds have been Celtic big men Robert Parish and Kevin McHale.

Though, while Bird's scoring and rebounding statistics have dipped from the National Basketball Association's regular season to the playoffs, his performance hasn't fallen much, said Boston assistant coach Jimmy Rodgers.

"You have to have production out of your other people, and I think that's exactly what's happened,' he said Wednesday after the Celtics practiced with an eye toward taking a 2-0 lead tonight in their best-of-seven championship series with the Los Angeles Lakers.

"Our team is moving the basketball. Everybody's involved in our offense," Rodgers added. "Larry would be the first one to say 'I'll do whatever it takes to win. If I have to score 30 points, I'll look to score 30.' Right now, I think he recognizes that we have got that kind of balance going.'

Bird's shooting was off in the Eastern Conference final against Philadelphia, when he made 41.9 percent of his field goal attempts. Before sinking 8 of 14 shots Monday, Bird had made just 38.7 percent of his attempts in his previous four games.

During the regular season, Bird was second in the NBA with 28.7 points per game and eighth with 10.5 rebounds per game. But in the playoffs, he is averaging 26.4 points and 9 rebounds. In his last seven games, those figures are 20 points and 7.3 rebounds.

An elbow injury hampered him early in the playoffs.

Arkansas Razorbacks under Norm DeBriyn finished second in their only other appearance at the College World Series, so DeBriyn idea of what it takes to capture a national baseball title.

HOUSTON (AP) - After knocking around in the minor leagues for nine seasons, Houston utility ace Jim Pankovits is glad someone finally noticed him.

Pankovits got Pittsburgh pitcher John Candelaria's attention quickly Wednesday night with a grand slam home run in the seventh inning that produced an 8-3 victory for the Astros.

"I knew we were in trouble when he hit it," Candelaria said. "I knew we were behind a lot of runs. But there was nothing I could do about it. I couldn't call time out while he was running around the bases, though I would like to have."

It was the biggest thrill of Pankovits' brief major league career and convinced Astros Manager Bob Lillis that he made the right decision in keeping him on the team.

Arkansas runs into problems at NCAA track championship

By DENNE H. FREEMAN AP Sports Writer

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) - Don't inscribe "Arkansas Razorbacks" on the 64th annual NCAA Outdoor Track and Field championship trophy just yet.

The heavily favored Razorbacks, seeking to become only the second team in history to win the NCAA cross country, indoor, and outdoor in the same year, suffered a series of setbacks during Wednesday's qualifying in Memorial Stadium.

They'll get a chance to bounce back today as qualifying continues in the meet which runs through Saturday night.

"I still don't think we're in bad shape," said Arkansas Coach John McDonnell. "We thought it would be close all the way, anyway."

Mike Conley, the Razorbacks seven-time NCAA long- and triple-jump champion, boosted McDonnell's morale by leading the qualifying in the long jump and 200-meter dash.

Conley ran a wind-aided 20.12 seconds in the 200-meter dash in a race in which Olympic bronze medalist Thomas Jefferson of Kent State failed to qualify. The NCAA record of 20.15 by Mike Miller of Tennessee still stands because the wind on Conley's run was over the Conley also led the long jump qualifying with an effort of 26 feet.

"Conley had a good day for us," said McDonnell. "But we expected either Joey Wells or Michael Davis to qualify in the long jump. I was cunting on three getting into that "It also was disappointing to barely miss qualifying Marty Kobza (in the discus) and Fred Cleary (in the 400-meter hurdles). It was especially disappointing for Fred. It was the second straight year he was ninth (the top eight qualify). He missed qualifing for the finals by two-hundreths of a second.'

Also, Mark Klee of Arkansas failed to make the opening height in the pole vault qualifying.

Conley, who is competing in four events, said he felt fine despite the 90-degree Texas heat and high

"I'm in shape to do it all," he said. "It was my toughest day. I can take tomorrow (Thursday) off. I can come out and take one triple jump and that's it (qualifying). Conley, a senior from Chicago, won the silver medal in the triple jump at the 1984 Olympics in Los Conley also ran a great third leg on the Razorbacks' 400-meter relay team which qualified second in 39.21 behind behind Baylor's 39.20.

"Conley is just unbelievable." said McDonnell. "I hope he can last three more days. He gives

Tne Arkansas team was already hurting because sprinter Wallace Spearman suffered a strained hamstring in the Southwest Conference meet and was not available to anchor the 400-meter

"The final relay made the day for us," McDonnell said. "It was a great way to finish. We're still in position to control our own destiny. We had some bad breaks.

There were several other major disappointments on Wednesday.

Nawal El Moutawakel of Iowa State, who won the Olympic gold medal for Morocco in the women's 400-meter hurdles, failed to qualify in the event. Latanya Sheffield of San Diego State led the qualifying with a meet-record time of 55.39 seconds, eclipsing Moutawakel's old standard of 55.84

Jackie Joyner of UCLA led the qualifying with 56.91 seconds but then shocked her followers by failing to make it in the long jump. She finished 16th with an effort of 20-51/2, a half-inch back of the last qualifying leap. Olympian Carol Lewis of Houston led the qualifying with 21-81/4.

UCLA is seeking its third women's title in four years. Florida State was the winner last year.

Texas-El Paso is the only school to have swept all three men's championships in one year. In the only final on Wednesday, said. The DART board voted Tuesday night to buy the buses - which are used extensively in Europe and the Far East as well as several U.S. cities - for $195,300 each or a total of $8.6 million.

The "articulated" buses, as they are known, carry about 100 passengers, including standing riders, compared with about 60 on a standard bus. To handle the extra load, the buses' elongated rear section is attached to the front with a flexible hinge that bends around corners.

DART planners said many morning and evening buses are already filled to capacity, forcing the overflow passengers to wait until the next crowded bus.

The larger vehicles will cut waiting time and save the authority the expense of adding buses to the routes, they said.

A federal grant will cover three-fourths of the cost, and the buses will be bought from Neoplan USA, officials said.

DALLAS (AP) - Dallas Power & Light and Texas Power & Light customers will be billed an additional 55 cents per 1,000 kilowatt-hours of electricity from June through September, Texas Utilities Electric Co. officials said.

The fee will pay for electricity produced and sold to TUEC by Dow Chemical Co. in Freeport, officials said Tuesday. The utility plans to buy the power to help carry it through the peak summer demand.

The 55-cent charge will be added for each 1,000 kilowatt-hours used in the coming months, officials said.

Joan Hunter, a TUEC spokeswoman, said a typical residential customer averages 1.000 kilowatt-hours of electricity per month over 12 months, although summer usage can be higher.

Customers of DP&L, TP&L and Texas Electric Service Co. — all divisions of TUEC - will pay the additional cost when they begin receiving power in June under the utility's first co-generation project.

Under a contract with Dow Chemical, the TUEC companies will receive
