Four survivors, 50 bodies found

AIKIMURA, Japan (AP) -Search and rescue teams found four survivors and recovered the bodies of 50 people from the wreckage of a Japan Air Lines jumbo jet that crashed on a wooded mountain ridge with 524 people aboard officials said today.

The crash of the Boeing 747 on Monday was believed to be the worst single-plane commercial air disaster ever. Airline officials said that among the passengers were six Americans

The aircraft's pilot reported a broken cabin door and that he was losing control as the jetliner turned north from its normal course and crashed in Japan's rugged central mountains.

One of the survivors of Flight 123, a 12-year-old girl, was reported found in the branches of a tree. One woman was pulled from the crushed fuselage of the aircraft. Airline spokesman Geoffrey Tudor told NBC's "Today" that the survivors were seated "fairly close to the tail. How they survived is a miracle

The helicopter-borne rescue teams suspended the search for the night and reported no sign of other survivors. Shinji Watari, general manager of JAL's public relations, told a news conference the cause of the crash remained a mystery.

Koichi Sugita, a spokesman of the Japanese Defense Agency, said a ship spotted what appeared to be part of a vertical tail fin bearing a portion of JAL's red crane symbol. He said the object was seen in the sea off the Miura Peninsula, south of Yokohama.

No explanation was offered, but the 747 was headed out to sea on its normal route from Tokyo to Osaka

before going off course

The 747-100SR can seat up to 550 people and has heavier landing gear and strengthened wings that the ordinary 747, according to Boeing. Jal's Tudor said no when asked if the size of the plane or its makeup could have limited the pilot's control once something went JAL's Tudor said about an hour after the crash, "We had a call from someone who identified himself as a member of a revolutionary Marxist faction and claimed responsibilty for detroying the plane.

Tudor said the information was passed on to police, but added: 'There's some feeling it may have been a hoax.

Airline spokesmen, U.S. Embassy officials and relatives said the Americans included two

Colorado men, a 26-year-old graduate student from the Los Angeles area and three members of a Korean-American family

Vol. 78, No. 111 18 pages

Two women and two girls were known to have survived the crash. All were taken by military helicopter to a hospital in Fujioka, 25 miles east of the crash site, said hospital official Kyomi Shinozaki.

Shinozaki reported that the hospital was expecting three other survivors to arrive, but later said the report of three more survivors may have been based on rumor.

State police said they could confirm only the four survivors, and Tokyo police and a local fire official both reported that there had been confusion on the number of survivors.

A Japan Defense Agency official who spoke on condition he not be identified, said that as of midafternoon local time workers had found at least 50 bodies around the scarred mountaintop

Television pictures showed two of the survivors on stretchers, dirty, battered and bandaged. Police identified them as Mrs. Hiroko Yoshizaki, 35, and her daughter, Mikiko, 8

Another survivor, Keiko Kawakami, 12, was said by Fuji TV to have been rescued from the branches of a tree. A woman who found alive and extricated from the crushed fuselage was identified as Yumi Ochiai, 26

Officials said 15 crew members and 509 passengers were aboard JAL's domestic Flight 123 when it crashed on the 6,929-foot peak about 70 miles northwest of Tokyo.

Television film of the site showed debris scattered along the ridgeline and a large piece of JAL spokesman Geoffrey Tudor identified two of the Americans on board as Edward Anderson, 47, Englewood, Colo., and Michael Hanson, 40, Aurora, Colo. Both were employed by Stearns Catalytic Co., Denver. Neil McLagan, a Sterns vice president, confirmed that Anderson and Hanson were on the flight.

Later, airline spokesman S. Yoshida identified the four other Americans as Ward Wallach and three members of a family, Mrs. Okja Kim, Scott Kim and Christopher Kim.

Wallach's sister-in-law, Ginger Wallach of Los Angeles, said in a telephone interview that Wallach, a graduate student at the University of Tokyo, had been on his way to Osaka for a seminar.

Etheredges allowed use of home

By Paul Pinkham

If he ever shows up in Pampa, Thomas C. Etheredge has the use of his home and the items left in it for at least six months.

In an agreement reached Monday between attorneys for Etheredge, founder of the failed Bethany Trust and Co., and his wife Deborah and Texas Banking Commissioner James Sexton, the Etheredge's agreed to the appointment of Sexton as receiver for Bethany Trading Co., a Bethany Trust subsidiary. Sexton is already receiver for the trust company.

Also under the agreement, the Etheredge's will be allowed use of their homestead and those items in it that have not already been seized by the district attorney's office, which is also involved in the Bethany Trust case. However, as receiver, Sexton has control of the property and the company's assets.

The company was shut down in April by the banking commission and since then. indictments involving securities violations have been handed down against Etheredge,

Bethany Trust president Timothy J. Bortka and the company. Bortka pleaded not guilty to the charges against him at his arraignment

Meanwhile, Etheredge continues to elude attempts to serve him with papers. He reportedly has surfaced in England, British Honduras and now Pakistan

A Gray County grand jury was expected to consider further indictments in the case this 223rd District Judge Don Cain accepted Monday's agreement after two trust examiners who investigated Bethany Group companies testified both Bethany Trust and Bethany Trade are insolvent. Both Wreno S. Wynne, trust examiner for the state Department of Banking, and Kevin E. Coston, a former associate trust examiner with the department, testified the trading company owes about $149,000 to Bethany Trust. Coston said further expenditures raise the indebtedness to $152,000.

The Bethany Group's 1984 report says the trading company "acts as our international division and under it we have other fully scheduled to determine the Sexton's petition to seize the Etheredge property and to restrain the company from doing business under the name Bethany Trading Co. David Hooper, of the Texas attorney general's office and representing Sexton, said the agreement between himself and Etheredge's lawyers will postpone for six months a hearing on the permanent injunction to seize the property.

Representing the Etheredge's in court Monday were attorneys Corky Roberts and Joe Jernigan. Mrs. Etheredge and her father in - law. George Etheredge, were in the courtrooom but did not testify

Roberts told the court most of the items left on the Etheredge's property northwest of town were too big to be removed. He mentioned a hot tub and a satellite dish.

Neither Bortka, his wife Rita or the trading company, all listed as defendants in the state's action, were represented in court Monday, Harold Comer, a Pampa lawyer appointed to represent Mr. Bortka on the criminal indictments, would not comment on any aspect of the case.

Proof of 'commitment' asked

Roberts delays ambulance decision to be taken to the hospital a time or going, to man it," said County By CATHY SPAULDING

MIAMI - A petition with 234 signatures may show community interest in a local ambulance, but Roberts County Commissioners want a show of commitment before they decide to support such a service.

On Monday, Miami residents Wayne Bright and Toni Bailey presented commissioners with a petition calling for county support of an ambulance service equipped with medical supplies and a two-way radio. Miami has no ambulance service and residents must rely on Pampa or Canadian both 25 miles away — for emergency services

Bright bolstered the petition with price lists for used ambulances and information he had gotten from the Lefors Volunteer Ambulance Service.

Roberts County Judge Newton Cox agreed that the city and county need an ambulance, but questioned residents' willingness to man the service 24-hours a day.

'No doubt that an ambulance is needed," Cox said, adding that a need has existed for nearly 40 years. "And you never know when you're going to need one. I've had two in a private car

But Cox wondered if a paramedic or an Emergency Medical Technician would be available when one was needed. Would a staff be on call? He suggested that before the county could agree on an ambulance, that Bright form a committee or an organization and to get enough qualified EMTs to be on call. Bright had a list of six qualified EMTs, two Emergency Care Attendants and two people who were trained in cardiopulmonary resuscitation. "You're going to need as many people as you can with EMT said Precinct 2 training. commissioner Ronnie Gill, who had EMT training in the early 1970s. He said later that he would be willing to take the training again.

Precinct 3 commissioner Don Morrison said he needs to see how committed volunteers would be.

"Dollars are easier to get than people," he said, asking for the possibility of getting "say, 10 people qualified.

"I think there can be a lot of people interested." secretary Eva Noble said

"I think you need an organization

Attorney Bob McPherson. "It will take some full-time volunteers, it's not once a year

Bright agreed to set up a meeting to see how many petitioners or other residents would be willing to take the EMT training necessary for an ambulance service.

"If I could get people qualified, would you get the ambulance?" he

Commissioners agreed to take it under consideration but wanted to know what other types of funding Bright has considered

Bright answered that he has not yet presented his proposal to the city. But he feels he can get provate donations "I think if we can get donations for a museum, we can get donations for an ambulance service," one commissioner said.

The court is not in a position to take action today," McPherson said. "I'm sure there is a need There has been for 40-50 years.

McPherson suggested that the county or committee must be mindful of the heavy liability involved with an ambulance

'Lefors told me ambulance services are covered by the Texas Good Samaritan Law, but they were encouraged not to rely on the law," Bright said.

That's one thing that worries me," Cox admitted. "How much water does this Good Samaritan Law hold?

"The Good Samaritan Law, we're finding out, is not holding water," Bacher answered. "There is some litigation now concerning the Good Samaritan Law.

"You need to have malpractice insurance, and that is becoming increasingly difficult to get," he said figuring $350 to $650 per member per year, according to

When I took the EMT course. the instructor told me 'you're going to be sued if you have training and you mess up'." Gill said.

Bacher also advised that the ambulance service have liability insurance, in case the vehicle is in an auto accident

He also explained what type of training is needed for EMTs and what can be offered in Pampa.

"The volunteers need training for first respondents," he said. "We can provide training in CPR, mouth-to-mouth, basic bandaging techniques, placing victims on

Sanders pool repairs given top priority by parks board

The Parks and Recreation Advisory Board ranked repairs for the Marcus Sanders Pool and installation of a sprinkler system in North Crest Park as top priorities for inclusion in the 1985-1986 budget

Meeting in a special called session Monday afternoon, the board listed the pool as number one and the park as number two for budget expenditures for improvements and betterment to land in the parks systems.

The board suggested the city include an estimated $30,000 for repairs of the southside pool, which was shut down last year because of maintenance problems. The board also recommended including $9,500 for the installation of a sprinkler system in North Crest Park, located around the water tower in the North Crest Addition.

The department budget is in the final stages of preparation for presentation to the city commission for adoption in

Vice Chairman Gary Meador reported plans are underway for the formation of a city fall volleyball league. organizational meeting will be held at 7 p.m. Tuesday, Aug. 27, in the Lovett Memorial Library auditorium

Meador presented projections for the formation of the league, based on 15 teams with a minimum of six players per team. Proposed fees would be $75 per team for sponsor fees and $7.50 per player.

The season would last eight to 10 weeks or longer, depending on the number of leagues and teams established, Meador said.

He said the games probably would be played in the Austin Elementary School gym; there are too many conflicts with use of the Pampa Middle School gyms, he explained

The gym can be leased at $20 for three hours, with other charges for custodial fees and additional time over the three-hour period. Other expenses include game balls, net, trophies and the use of umpires and scorekeepers, Meador said.

But the collection of fees should cover those expenses and make the league self-supporting, he said. Persons or groups interested in the volleyball league should attend the organizational meeting. In discussion of the proposed budget, Charlie Smith, technician with the Engineering Department, said the department has planned for capital outlay expenses to purchase new materials and equipment.

He said a number of sprinkler heads in the parks need replacement to improve the watering systems. The department also hopes to replace some equipment, including tractors, mowers and trucks, which are in poor condition. In addition, the department has proposed purchasing new equipment,

Director of Community Services Nathan Hopson announced the city had hired a new Parks and Recreation Department director, Reed Kirkpatrick of Ennis, who will take over the position on Sept.

Kirkpatrick has his bachelor of science degree in forestry from Stephen F. Austin University, with emphasis on parks and recreation administration. He has been employed in parks administration and is a member of several related organizations, Hopson said.

'We're really excited about getting a man of his caliber," he

In response to questions from board members, Smith, who has been helping with the parks administration until the new director arrives, said efforts have been made to get water to planted trees in the parks.

He said the city needs to make certain in the future that donated trees are located in places where they can be watered regularly without dependence on the sprinkler systems. He explained planted trees need extra water in the first three years, and the sprinkler systems don't always provide the needed amount of water for best growth.

Smith said temporary plans will be implemented to improve access to Central Park for handicapped persons for the upcoming Chautauqua on Labor Day. He said a curb cut-out will be made on Sunset Drive with a packed-dirt lane to aid access to the park. Ramps will be located at the wooden bridge to improve access there, he said.

The measures will be temporary this year, with more consideration given for permanent improvements later.

The board also discussed improvements or replacements of tennis courts in the parks, but noted that probably will have to wait for later budget years. More studies are needed to determine what surfaces to use for the courts and how many should be constructed.

Board member Joel Derington presented estimates from the Pampa Tennis Club estimating a cost of $55,000 for two post-tension courts with a Layco surface and fencing, and $106,800 for a four-court complex.

The board agreed more planning would be needed to insure funds are available for the large expenditures.

Discussing the proposed budget further, Smith noted a five-year capital improvements plan includes expenditures for modular playground equipment, restroom buildings, bridge replacements, ballfield renovation, renovation of the Hike and Bike Trails, and tennis courts.

FORT WORTH, Texas — The southwest regional director for the Federal Aviation Administration says the air traffic controllers directing Delta Flight 191 were highly experienced and their professionalism shows in tapes of their conversations with the plane before it crashed.

'One thing that is important that will come across (the tape) is the high degree of professionalism that existed in the cockpit of the aircraft and with the air traffic controllers," said "Tex" Melagin, FAA Southwest Region director.

He said the controllers' experience ranged from a minimum of eight years to more than 20 years.

The FAA released on Monday a transcript and tape of the Aug. 2 conversations between the controllers and the pilot of Flight 191, which crashed on final approach to the Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport, killing 134 people.

Their comments showed the pilot had little concern over a threatening thunderstorm shortly before the jet crashed.

At one point a controller issued a general advisory

"Yes sir - all aircraft listening except for Delta 1291 (another Delta flight) is going to go across the airport. There's a little rain shower just north of the airport and they're starting to make ILS (instrument) approaches...'

Delta Flight 1291 asked controllers for permission to go around what the pilot called "a buildup.

But Norm Scoggins, manager for the airport tower, said the jet was avoiding a storm cell separate from the weather cell that Flight 191 encountered.

At one point, controllers directed all pilots to begin using flight instruments to approach the runway instead of relying on visual approaches, a common procedure when visibility is impaired by poor

At 6:03 p.m. CDT, 21/2 minutes before the crash, controllers announced some "variable winds" at the north end of the airport.

Controllers then told the pilot of the jet to reduce 'Tower Delta 191 heavy out here in the rain. Feels good," the pilot responded.

After telling the pilot of : Learjet to make room

'Delta go around.'

At that time, the controller made a "spontaneous judgment" and probably didn't know the jet had hit the ground yet, said Earl Wolfe, assistant manager for the air traffic division of the FAA's southwest

Wind shear — a sudden shift in winds — has been discussed as a possible factor in the crash. In a wind shear, a strong flow of air rushes toward the ground, then hits the ground and shoots violently outward in

The regional FAA will continue working with the National Transportation Safety Board during the investigation that should continue for at least two. more months, Melagin said.

Two planes collide in East Texas

QUINLAN, Texas (AP) - A Hunt County Sheriff's investigator said there was no immediate explanation for the midair collision over northeastern Texas that killed three Jackson, Miss., men on a business trip.

Two Dallas area men survived the crash Monday by making an emergency belly landing of their plane in nearby Van Zandt County, authorities said.

The Hunt County Sheriff's Office identified the three Jackson men as broadcast executive Owens Alexander, 63, the pilot; his son, Doug Alexander, no age available, and son-in-law Kurt Baskin, 33, who were partners in a landscaping business

Hunt County Sheriff's Lt. Bryan Henson said federal investigators were trying to find the cause of the crash, but "there's no explanation right

Texan tells story of prison camps

War II prisoner John Allen McCarty does not like to tell his war stories. But he is recounting them on behalf of fallen soldiers who cannot tell their own.

"I feel like I owed it to them to tell it the way it was," the 70-year-old Henly rancher said during a break at a book-signing

McCarty's 33 months in a prison camp in the Phillipines are recounted in the new book, 'Cabanatuan, Japanese Death Camp.

McCarty was captured when Bataan fell April 9, 1942. After a 65-mile forced march, he was loaded onto a box car and sent to a POW camp in the Philippines.

"During the first hour I was captured, the Japanese killed seven Americans and a Filipino. Any soldier who had any article made in Japan or Japanese money was tried and executed on the spot They were bayonetted and clubbed to death," McCarty said.

Today my column will adress the importance of finding out what happened to the 2,464 Americans who are listed as missing in action in Southeast Asia

Rambo meets Ross Perot

Recently the U.S. House set up a special commission to see whether American servicemen are still alive in these infested jungles. Heading the commission will be Texas' own H. Ross Perot. 'Hey, now wait a minute.

Well, if it isn't Rambo, the macho mound of muscle who single-handedly won the Vietnam War in "First Blood II." Yeah, dat's me. Say, who is this H. Ross Pee-rot, anyway? Some wimpo the government sent to keep me from embarrasing them? No, he is a well-respected, generally patriotic right wing Dallas billionaire who makes a name for himself by heading state panels and buying famous ancient documents. It was his Select Committee on Public Education that changed the face of Texas public schools.

'Yeah. I know, I know. I met the guy at a reception for Bill Clements. We shot the bull for a second and he left. Seems like a nice enough guy, but, what's he ever done for the good of his country? Well, a lot of Texas educators are debating that. But, with the exception of such cockamamy ideas as the no pass-no play rule and the 10 day extra-curricular activity limit, he seems to be an intelligent, well-meaning man. What I wanna know is, does he have what it takes to brave the jungles of 'Nam, get our men out of captivity and whip the Cong?' Well. I don't think whipping the Cong is what the commission is set

"He got a woman? If you're gonna whip the Cong, you gotta have a good woman to comfort you and scrape the bloodsuckers off your back after a hard day in the swamp

I think he's been married for many years "How good are his pecs?

How good are his what?

"Y'know, his pectorals. They as big as mine? Can this guy wield a pointed machine gun the way I do in the movie posters? What we need is a guy with wavy hair tied up in a sweaty headband, who can flex his muscles and look defiantly into the camera. Y' know to instill a true sense of patriotism in the hearts of America's adolescents. A real hunk who can beat up Mr. T and who looks good in sweat.

Well, from what I've seen, Perot is kind of a scrawny fellow in his late middle age and he wears a business suit.

"And the government expects to rescue our MIAs with him?" Well, I don't think he's actually going to rescue anybo.

"Hey, I been there. Those commies ain't gonna listen to some wimp in a business suit. The only thing they listen to is this. That was my car! You just blew up my car with a hand grenade "That's right. Power. They listen to power. If you're gonna get the job done, you better not expect to use any logic. I don't think he'll use any of that. After all this guy was put in charge of changing Texas public schools and he sent his kids to private schools.

"Yeah, knowing him, he probably won't let the MIA's come home unless they made 70 or above in boot camp. Well, I don't think he'll go that far.

"That does it! If he's goin', I ain't goin'. I got more important things to do. Really, like that

State employees face sexual abuse charges criminal investigation of some center in January, Ms. Timmons male employees at the West Texas said. Children's Home has led to indictments being handed down against two men for allegedly promising a teen-age girl an early release from the center in exchange for sex.

Charges of sexual abuse by male staff members first surfaced at the center for delinquent youths in late June, said Joan Timmons, chief of media relations for the Texas Youth Commission in Austin, which operates the home.

'After our people at the children's home began an investigation into the matter, and determined it required more than they normally would do, we at the Texas Youth Commission started an investigation with the Texas Rangers," Ms. Timmons said. The probe prompted the firing of four male employees, the transferring of a fifth staff member to another TYC facility, and disciplinary action being taken against two others, she said It also led to the case being presented to a Ward County grand jury in nearby Monahans, said McGowan, who prosecutes cases for the state in Reeves, Loving and Ward counties.

Last Friday, the panel handed down bribery indictments against Esequiel Valadez Jr., no age or hometown available; and Ismael Mendoza, 27, of Pecos.

Both were accused of soliciting sex in January from a "15- or 16-year-old" girl confined at the center, McGowan said

The indictment alleged that Mendoza and Valadez offered the girl an earlier release date in exchange for the sex.

PYOTE, Texas (AP) - A Valadez had resigned from the Arrest warrants were issued last Friday, but Ward County sheriff's officials said that the men had not been picked up Monday

McGowan said no other charges were filed against the men because these were the best charges to fit the offense at hand.

He said that because the sexual history of a girl older than 14 can be considered as a defense in cases of alleged sexual abuse, "bribery charges fit best. 'These girls are not put into the children's home for missing Sunday school," he said.

The West Texas Children's Home is one of four centers for non-violent juvenile criminal offenders operated in the state by the TYC, Ms. Timmons said.

The home has been in this small. isolated town, 26 miles east of Pecos, since 1966, but was a center for neglected children until July 1. 1980, when the youth commission turned it into an institution for delinquent youths, she said.

Today, 161 boys and 35 girls are confined at the center, she said. adding that no action was taken against any of the youths at the home in connection with the commission's investigation.

Ms. Timmons said that of the three other employees fired last month, two were terminated for inappropriate sexual behavior, and the other for "lying during the investigation about what happened.

Reagan must get his veto pen ready

The best that can be said for the budget resolution approved by Congress is what Sen. Robert Dole said: It's a small step forward." And lest even this faint praise be misconstrued, the emphasis in that description belongs on the word "small." In truth, the budget Congress cobbled together after President Reagan said no to a package that included tax increases is only marginally better than no budget at all.

The budget outline's best feature is its lack of a tax increase. But then, Congress hardly deserves credit for that. It was Reagan who insisted that House and Senate negotiators keep trying to shrink the deficits by cutting spending, not raising taxes. Let it be said that they did not try very hard.

On paper, but budget resolution calls for $55.5 billion in spending reductions next year and $276.2 billion over three years. That would leave a deficit of $113 billion in fiscal 1988, assuming we can believe the economic forecasts adopted by the House and Senate conferees, somthing that requires a considerable leap of faith.

Privately, the budget drafters say a fiscal 1988 deficit in the range of $150 to $160 billion is more likely—hardly less than next year's expected $175 billion in red ink. And ever those higher estimates are predicated on claimed spending reductions that come close to deliberate misrepresentation. For example, the resolution assumes $7.9 billion in savings from farm programs over three years. Yet Congress is now considering, and will likely pass, farm bills that would wipe out that savings.

The fiscal 1986 budget proposed last February by the Reagan administration called for elimination of more than a dozen federal programs and agencies. Is anyone surprised that Congress' version of the budget rejected all of these proposed cuts?

All of which demonstrates once again that Congress is close to being institutionally incapable of reducing spending on domestic programs with vocal constituencies back home. More than half of the claimed savings cited in the budget resolution reflected cuts in defense spending—a total of $137.3 billion in defense cuts during the next three years. Congress was tough on the Defense Department but turned to pudding when it coinsidered what might be pared from the $600 billion and mbre being spent each year for domestic programs

What the budget resolution proclaims is that CVongress hasn't a prayer of meeting President Reagan's stated goal of shrinking the deficits to $100 billion within three years. While leaves Reagan with no choice but to begin vetoing appropriation bills that spend more than the government can afford if the deficits are to be brought under control.

Bomb is not the problem

William P. Murchison, Sr., - Billy, his friends called him - on the summons of President Roosevelt, entered the U.S. Army in August 1942, eight months after the United States declared war on Germany and Japan. He underwent basic training at Fort Wolters, Texas, serving subsequently at Fort Bliss, Texas, Camp Callan, California, and Fort Bragg, North Carolina.

August 1945 found him at Fort Ord, California, awaiting embarkation to the Pacific theater of Japan had rejected formal demands to surrender. And so the Joint Chiefs of Staff had slated the invasion of the home Japanese islands for November 1. The initial landing was to be on Kyushu, followed by an assault on Honshu in March 1946.

A general slaughter was expected. Japanese military leaders, having lost the war, were in a suicidal mood. Civilians were said to be sharpening bamboo spears for use on the Americans. Gen. George Marshall expected the invasion would cost a quarter of a million American, and at least as many Japanese, lives.

Then on August 6 and August 9 - but we all know about that, do we not? On President Truman's orders, the United States dropped the atomic bomb over Hiroshima and Nagasaki, killing between 120,000 and 250,000 Japanese. On the 10th, Japan surrendered

That was the day my father knew for a certainty that he was not going to die on some Japanese island: that instead he was going home to his family and a life of peace and freedom and opportunity. Hundreds of thousands of other American soldiers, sailors, and airmen made the same rapturous discovery.

I do not think that among them, or among their children and grandchildren, there is even today much fretful moralizing over President Truman's decision. May I add, his very courageous, very correct decision?

Entirely too often The Bomb is made out to be the central curse of the late 20th century. This is nonsense. The Bomb is cold and inanimate. The Bomb is not the problem. People are the problem people who might use The Bomb to extend their dominion, rather than, as in 1945, to save lives.

Absent the Japanese and Nazi threat in the '40s, the atomic bomb would not have been built. Absent the Soviet threat today, the United States would have not one nuclear weapon in its arsenal. For that matter, it would have a standing military force of about 200,000 men, all of them stationed in this country.

There is today almost perpetual talk about nuclear warfare, yet here is the thing to remember: There has been no nuclear attack since Hiroshima and Nagasaki. The Soviets have understood that, by attacking the United States, they would bring down nuclear retaliation on themselves. Thus, they have held back. The Bomb for now keeps us free and at peace

Not that it necessarily will keep us so forever. The problem, again, is people. What if someone miscalculates the risk of war? Alternatively, what if the Soviets so far outstrip us in nuclear weaponry that they force our surrender?

Against such prospects the Reagan administration proposes an end run around the nuclear deadlock. It is called the Strategic Defense Initiative. Using "smart bullets," laser beams, neutral particle beams, electromagnetic railguns, and X-ray lasers, we could knock down any nuclear weapons fired at us. Maybe not all, but so many as to make nuclear warfare unwinnable, hence unstartable.

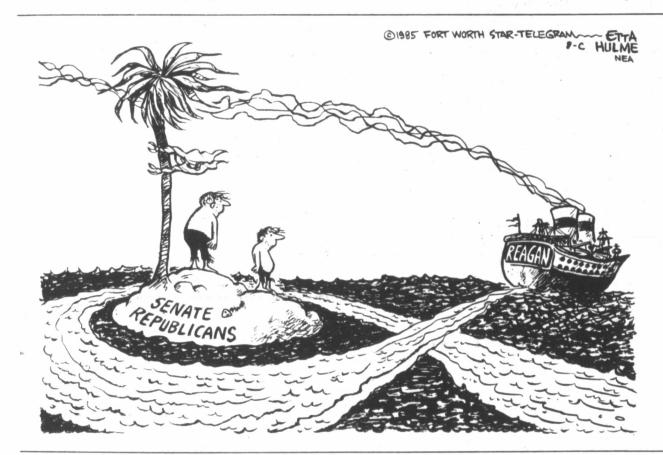

Irony of ironies, though - American nuclearphobes sneer at strategic defense, preferring instead to negotiate "mutual arms reductions" with the Soviets, fearing lest ANYBODY have nuclear weapons of ANY kind. Not that the Soviets, whenever they sit down at the bargaining table, do other than stonewall and obfuscate and generally show contempt for real disarmament.

The mushroom cloud of Hiroshima still transfixes - and paralyzes rational thought. The Bomb, The Bomb! Won't someone take it away? But that is just the purpose of strategic defense - to neutralize The Bomb once and for all.

Ambiguities aplenty clutter the nuclear debate, as they have since Hiroshima.

What shall we think on during this week of commemoration? Each to his own: my particular thoughts being fixed on a particular life likely saved by The Bomb, and on the lives touched by that life ever since.

Today in History

By The Associated Press

Today is Tuesday, Aug. 13, the 225th day of 1985. There are 140 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history: On Aug. 13, 1961, Berlin became a divided city as East Germany sealed off the border between the eastern and western sectors. East German police and troops used barbed wire and barricades to block crossing points to halt the flight of refugees. Two days later, work began on the Berlin Wall.

On this date:

Ten years ago: General Motors Corp. announced it was raising prices on its 1976-model cars an average of 4.4 percent.

Five years ago: At the Democratic National Convention in New York, President Jimmy Carter endorsed most of the party's platform just hours before his renomination.

One year ago: At a breakfast in Los Angeles honoring U.S. Olympic athletes, President Reagan hailed them as heroes who had given their country unforgettable memories.

Air travel can be safer

As soon as I finish writing this, I have to catch an evening flight to the West Coast. It's a Delta

I probably wouldn't go if I didn't have to. The chances of another accident involving Delta so soon after that awful crash at Dallas-Fort Worth are slim, but if you read the gory details of that mishap you can understand why I'm nervous about the flight

We've all been there before. The plane is landing in rain and thunder and lightning and is bouncing all over the skies, but we remind ourselves if flying wasn't safe, the people in the cockpit wouldn't do it as a full-time job.

But something can go wrong and something does go wrong occasionally, and when an airplane crashes, when there are explosions and fire, when there are charred bodies and dismembered bodies, the horror is magnified a thousandfold.

I will always remember a picture I saw on a private pilot's wall once. It was a picture of an airplane in a tree. The airplane had crashed headlong into the tree

Under the picture were these words:

"Aviation itself is inherently safe, but in many ways it can be less forgiving of human error than

Human error did cause the crash in Dallas-Fort Worth. It was human error that somebody hasn't determined how to detect wind shear around an

My God, we can put a man on the moon, but we can't find a way to detect wind shear, which has caused countless air tragedies?

It was human error that the plane was landing in the violent thunderstorms in the first place. I know we have all that sophisticated radar and that computers do most of the flying these days anyway, but why doesn't the FAA make a rule that says, thou shalt not try to land or take off in weather that has the potential to cause a plane to

So my plane takes of late. So my plane is diverted to another airport to land. I can handle it. can handle it. The usual reference to the 'charred bodies'' after an air disaster allowed me to accept the aforementioned inconveniences.

I don't believe that "if it's your time to go, there's nothing you can do about it'' nonsense You can buckle your seat belt when you ride in a car. That's controlling your destiny. You can refrain from driving when you are drunk or riding with a drunk who is driving.

You can put fire alarms in your house. You can get checkups for cancer. You can go to the hospital and doctors will insert a catheter into your heart to find out whether or not you are a likely candidate for a heart attack.

And you can say to the government and to the airlines you are well aware of the brilliant safety record of American passenger carriers, but that won't comfort the friends and relatives of those who died in the Air Florida plunge into the icy Potomac because of snow on the wings, of those who died in the Pan Am crash in New Orleans because of wind shear, and of those who perished in the Delta crash, again because of wind shear. Air travel is safe, but I want it safer.

Now if you will excuse me, I have a plane to

Superfund certain to get an increase

By Don Graff

Here are some budget-type figures for you: $5.3 billion, $7.5 billion, $10

They probably don't ring any bells at the moment, not being in the same megabuck league as the moneys for defense and Social Security that have been the focus of such prolonged dispute in Washington. But they just may be the first to tie Congress into a knot or two upon its return from summer recess.

They are the competing proposals for the refinancing of Superfund, the long-term, slow-motion effort to clean up the thousands — the number keeps growing - of toxic waste dumps across the nation. Specifically, the Environmental Protection Agency, in charge of the cleanup, is asking $5.3 billion for the next five years. A bill pending in the Senate would raise that to $7.5 billion. And legislation reported out of committee in the House on the eve of recess would go for $10 billion.

The initial Superfund authorization. which expires Sept. 30, provided $1.6 billion over five years. So whatever happens next, there will be a dramatic increase in cleanup funding. Assuming that is, that legislative gridlock does not set in.

The debate in Congress, and between Congress and the administration, involves not only how much to spend in the next cycle but how to raise the money.

The expiring legislation has been funded entirely by a "feed stock" tax levied on the chemical industry, the original producers of the toxic substances in question. These firms are not, however, necessarily identical with the dumpers of the waste that is poisoning the soil and contaminating water supplies. In that respect, EPA's cataloging to date of who's responsible for the sites has produced a who's who of the American economy, some 4,000 companies representing the steel, auto, aerospace and supposedly "clean" electronics industries, among many others. For specific example, of the 25 companies responsible for 95 percent of the mess at California's infamous Stringfellow acid pits, all were primarily non-chemical and therefore were not contributors to Superfund. There is general agreement that the burden needs broadening, which can be accomplished in various ways. One would be to enact a "waste end" or disposal tax which would tap the industrial users as well as producers of toxic materials.

Another possibility would be a general tax on all industry. The pending Senate bill includes such, an "environmental excise tax" to be imposed on all manufacturing companies doing $5 million and up in annual business.

That may, however, be too broad for a White House committed to barring the budget door to new taxes. It might be inviting a veto. There already have been hints to that effect.

EPA justifies its low request of $5.3 billion as the maximum it can effectively spend in the next five years. That may be God's truth, the agency having been more or less born again since the bad old Anne Burford-Rita Lavelle days. That is a tough past to live down and EPA has precious little to show for the first five years and $1.6 billion - 10 completed cleanups out of 800 priority sites.

Still, it may well be that congressional pressure for higher spending expresses a sense of urgency rather than realistic assessment of what is actually needed and can be effectively expended. No one knows for sure at this point how much or how long it is eventually going to take.

The debate, therefore, is essentially over technicalities. There is no real argument on the important point keeping Superfund in business

Manufactured housing attracting Japanese

By MICHAEL HOLMES Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN - Having built big successes in the electronics and automotive fields, Japanese companies soon may try to nail down a share of another American industry - manufactured housing, an expert says.

Utilizing computer design, robotic assembly and sophisticated marketing, Japanese housing companies could have an impact similar to that Toyota and Honda have had in the auto business, says Charles Graham, who teaches architecture at Texas A&M

"I imagine that in time, they would begin to offer some components and features and amenitites that American homebuyers are not accustomed to seeing but would like to have," Graham said.

"I would expect to see more automation, more advanced technology ... I think the house would be a little more of a machine for living.'

Graham, who has studied the multibillion-dollar manufactured housing industry for about three manufacturers appear to be more advanced in some areas than American firms

American executives have traveled to Japan to study their companies, he said.

"One of those persons who had been on a study tour remarked that they we at least eight to 10 years ahead of us in both their marketing techniques and manufacturing,"

Graham also said reports indicate that some Japanese companies are giving the U.S. market a close look.

"They have been in our markets building conventional houses for aproximately 10 years, and they have been quite successful," he said in a telephone interview. "Even building a site-built house, they're able to build them in about half the time American companies do. They use very tight scheduling. They're quite skilled at organization and management."

Should Japanese firms decide to enter the American market. Graham predicts they probably will seek a joint venture with an American company, similar to the recent Toyota-General Motors auto

"I see the Japanese looking more intensely at our housing markets and believe that very shortly we're going to see Japanese housing companies either going into a joint venture with American companies or perhaps building their own plants here," he said.

He said he has heard reports of Japanese executives traveling in the United States looking at possible plant sites and negotiating for financing.

California would be a likely starting place, he said, with Texas and Florida also high on the list because those three states are the nation's largest markets for manufactured housing.

Because of the growth currently taking place, all of the Sun Belt South and Southwest are potential markets for the Japanese firms, he

During the 1970s, he said, the Japanese government developed "Plan 55," and provided incentives and economic support so their companies could build houses in the factories at 55 percent of the cost of a site-built house.

Japanese firms also are very consumer-oriented, Graham said.

barn becomes art center and once it was home to a herd of dairy cows. But nowadays any stray cow who happened to turn up would surely feel out of place.

The Dairy Barn of Athens, Ohio, has become a cultural arts center. In what was once a demonstration barn, artists and craftsmen and their patrons come by the thousands to enjoy activities which range from exhibitions of contemporary art to a national competition for jigsaw puzzle aficionados.

It's one more example of the unorthodox ways in which Americans are working to preserve historic structures by dedicating them to new uses.

When the State of Ohio announced in 1977 that it would raze the classic barn structure constructed in 1914, local residents rallied to save it. The barn once housed dairy cattle used in the Athens Mental Health Center's activity therapy program and was a classic example of barn architecture in the southeastern Ohio area.

The community opted to turn it into a cultural arts center and beginning in 1978 the transformation began. First, the 200-by-35-foot building was placed on the National Register of Historic Places and renovations were Currently over 7,000 square feet of floor space make it the largest exhibition space in the area. Eventually, it is hoped, an amphitheater for performing arts and additional space for offices, classrooms and a shop will be part of the complex.

Since 1978, the organization that administers it has grown from an all-volunteer group totally dependent on grants to a national art center which is 85 percent self-supporting through rentals and admission fees. Volunteers are still important, but the organization is also able to afford a paid staff.

Among programs which draw crowds from all over the country and abroad are "Quilt National," a biennial exhibition of contemporary art quilts, held in July, and the National Jigsaw Puzzle Championships held in Quilt National recently completed its fourth presentation and will be traveling to museums in the Chicago area, Los Angeles, Racine, Wis., and other cities for two years.

The show which was held for the first time in 1979 at The Dairy Barn is credited with being the first important national exhibition of contemporary American pieced quilts, designed as artworks, not as bed coverings. The exhibitions and accompanying catalog helped establish quilting as a contemporary art form, according to crafts authorities.

This year, as usual, there were a number of special workshops taught by quilt artists which attracted quilters not only from this country but also from abroad. Entries to the juried competition (whose prize is exhibition in the show) came from England, Switzerland, France, Australia, West Germany and Japan, as well as from the United States people in four weeks, according to Pamela S. Parker, The Dairy Barn's executive director, who said "45 percent came from Ohio and 55 percent from out of state. Individuals from Japan, Ireland, Switzerland and Argentina visited.'

In August, a different type of event takes place. That's when the fourth annual National Jigsaw Puzzle Championships, jointly sponsored by The Dairy Barn and Hallmark, begin.

Approximately 750 people race one another and the clock to see who can put together a puzzle fastest. Winners of the semifinals compete the next day for cash awards ranging from $100 to $1,000.

Another aspect of the same event is an exhibition of prize-winning designs and of antique puzzles.

These events also bring people from many other states and some foreign countries to the southeastern corner of Ohio in the summer. But other events that attract a loyal local following include a Labor Day Weekend craft and folk music festival and a national exhibition of contemporary works in wood from Sept. 20 to Oct. 20.

Individuals interested in obtaining information about the The Dairy Barn's programs can write to the group at P.O. Box 747, Athens, OH 45701

Dear Abby

Man discovered his marriage is one of convenience for his wife

By Abigail Van Buren

while it lasted.

DEAR ABBY: I have been married for nearly three years to a very beautiful 23-year-old woman. I am 30. Our marriage hasn't been perfect, but I considered it better than average, with one exception-"Betty" has no interest in sex. Once every two or three months is enough for her; then she acts like she's doing me a favor.

When I try to discuss it with her, she gets angry. Despite our differences, I have given her all my devotion and a very comfortable life with all the material things a woman could want-a lovely home, clothes, iewelry and a car of her own.

Two weeks ago I discovered that Betty had been seeing a married man. I was shocked and hurt. When I confronted her, she admitted it, and told me she'd never been physically attracted to me; she married me because I had money and she wanted to get out of her parents' home. She says she "loves me"-but not in a physical way.

Betty doesn't want a divorce. says she's strongly attracted to the married man and will not give him up. She insists that she wants to save our marriage, but needs to see her lover twice a week. I find this totally absurd and unacceptable. Abby, is this marriage worth saving? HURTING HUSBAND

DEAR HURTING: You didn't have much of a marriage in the first place. By Betty's own admission, she used you. You may qualify for an annulment.

DEAR ABBY: Everybody writes to you to get something off their chest; well, now it's my turn.

Does anyone realize how difficult it is for a woman with a child to get a date? Once a man finds out a woman has a child, he assumes she wants to get married and stick him with a ready-made family, then boom! it's all over!

Abby, that's not true. There are some women, like myself, who would just like to go out with a member of the opposite sex once in a while. If marriage is in the cards, then it will work out. If not, well, it was fun

So where does a decent woman meet a decent man? Don't suggest church: I don't belong to one. LONELY IN LEHIGH, PA.

DEAR LONELY: Here we go again. Decent women meet men where decent people go to entertain themselves, do volunteer work, improve their minds and bodies, enjoy sports, music and theater, and even to worship the Lord, whether you belong to a church or not. They also meet through the thoughtfulness of nothing but the truth.

DEAR KICKING: You are no oddball. Quit kicking yourself and have the answer ready. To any question that strikes you as being impudent or out of line, haul out the standard response: 'Why do you want to know?"

Here's the Answer

By ANDY LANG AP Newsfeatures

Q. - I expect to finish my basement sometime during the fall. I plan on using an electric heater. I assume that no flue is needed. Can I install it myself or will I need an electrician?

A. - You are correct. No flue is needed. In fact, all that is necessary is to place the heater where you want it and plug it in. However, if you should decide to have a built-in electric heater, you probably will need an electrician, especially in areas where the code requires it. If you plan on built-in electric heat, the time to have it done is while the framing is up and prior to installation of the walls. Therefore, the electrician should be consulted before you begin work. -

Q. - We are plagued by a toilet tank that drips water in certain kinds of hot weather: that is, when the humidity is very high. My neighbor had the same problem a few years ago, but solved it by using covers over the tank, the bowl and the seat cover. We will use the same solution if we have to, but would prefer not to use the covers. Is there any other way to stop the dripping?

A. - One way is to have a plumber install a fixture that permits warm water to flow into the tank along with the cold! When this is done, the water in the tank is never very cold. It is the cold water that produces the condensation drip when warm, moist air settles on the tank and the bowl. An easier and less expensive way to solve the problem is to install insulation inside the tank. Some plumbing-supply houses and home centers sell special insulation kits for this purpose. If you cannot obtain one in your area, get a synthetic foam or regular foam liner, cut to the dimensions of the tank. The inside of the tank must be made dry before the liner is glued on. Get the right kind of glue by buying it where you get the foam.

Q. - After fooling around with do-it-yourself jobs or years, I finally live in a house where I have space for a home workshop. I can utility room on the ground floor. Which do you recommend?

I enjoy being complimented on my clothes, but I bristle when I am Former inmate crafts future in leather FERGUS FALLS, Minn. (AP) -Bill Flietstra talks about his difficult past to remind himself where he's been.

"I'm not the big, bad biker I appear to be," Flietstra says.

He doesn't hesitate to call himself a biker, but his life has taken a turn to the more traditional. He's learning a craft he hopes will allow him to be an independent businessman

"I don't want to work anymore to make somebody else rich," he says. Flietstra is sharpening his leather-crafting skills, using a material that's been used for 33 centuries to make belts, bowling ball bags, wallets and wall hangings.

And he's the new president of the Dakota Leather Guild, an organization of leather craftsmen. Flietstra made his first leather belt while he was an inmate at Stillwater Prison. He's no stranger to jail cells, prison walls and drug treatment programs.

And he's not about to forget his

He remembers times he's started with nothing. He talks of a point in his life when, "all I had was a thin leather jacket and a belief in my heart."

Flietstra has spent most of his life in Minnesota - in and out of jail. But he's also lived a nomadic existence, driving a taxi for a time in Oakland, Calif., and living everywhere from California to Canada, sometimes "sleeping wherever I could find a place.

He has no idea who his real parents are or if he has any brothers and sisters. A minister and his wife adopted Flietstra from a Michigan orphanage when he was 13 months old.

The family moved to Hancock, Minn., when he was a teen-ager, and his scrapes with the law started when he was about 14.

Three years ago, Flietstra entered what he says was his last drug treatment program. He'd just returned from California, where he'd been using a lot of heroin and cocaine, he says.

He wound up in the Otter Tail County jail, where a dream forced him to admit he needed help.Flietstra credits jail officials with recognizing the seriousness of his problem and getting him into treatment.

"I'm OK with myself and where I'm at today," he says. "I don't want to go back.

Flietstra has been looking to the future from a small room partitioned off by blankets in the basement of his home in Fergus Falls, where he set up his workshop and is learning the intricacies of leather crafting.

It's a craft that involves more than tracing a pattern and coloring between the lines, Flietstra says, although that's the basic process.

Shape, dimension, color and pattern enable Flietstra to create personalized leather items pieces he says will last longer than their machine-made counterparts.

A steady hand an artistic eye and a variety of tools and equipment as well as raw leather - are required for Flietstra's work. He says patience has been the most difficult skill to master.

Financial independence is Flietstra's ultimate goal, but for now, he says, he'll concentrate on skill and artistry.

"My main purpose is to better myself and make something that I'm proud of.

Does the U.S. government need top financial officer?

By JOHN CUNNIFF AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) - What organization spends more than $2 billion a day but has no chief financial officer?

Answer: The federal government.

Instead, it has 300 accounting systems, which means that even financial specialists have a difficult time trying to figure out what is going on at any given time.

Concern about what many view as chaos has reached the stage where several organizations. including the Grace Commission on waste in government, say the creation of a new federal position would save rather than cost

Controllers end strike in Mexico

MAZATLAN, Mexico (AP) -Airline traffic in northwestern Mexico has returned to normal after a one-day walkout by air traffic controllers at airports in northwestern cities, controllers and airline employees said.

Controllers ended the walkout ahead of schedule after a meeting with Roberto Kobeh Gonzalez, director of Mexican air navigation services, Jose Galindo, a radar route controller at the Pacific control center in Mazatlan, said in a telephone interview. The strike was planned to last 24 hours but ended after 13 hours as a result of the discussions, said Galindo, who said he attended the

"We did it only to awake the consciousness of the highest authorities of the country,' Galindo said.

"They told us they were going to give us a raise," he said. He said that the amount of the increase and when it would be granted were not specified, but it is not expected before next year.

He said it will "not be even half" the 100 percent the controllers are Controllers currently earn from the equivalent of about $180 to $360 monthly, after deductions, depending on their job and seniority, and raises they have received have not begun to keep up with inflation, Galindo said. They expect to begin receiving soon $17 a month increases authorized for government workers in June.

"Our salary is very devaluated," he said. "It is not in accordance with the activities we carry out." He said the nation's 630 controllers have no effective system of obtaining raises

But opposition exists on several grounds. Critics claim the position might merely add another knot of bureaucracy. Others maintain the federal government is too large for central accounting.

Against the evidence of waste and unaccountability, however, 'arguments against creation of a CFO seem to me to have little merit," says Roland Burris, comptroller of the State of Illinois.

Burris takes on the challenge in an article written for Touche Ross. the public accounting firm, maintaining that "the federal government provides inadequate, unreliable, and untimely financial information."

He contends that taxpaying citizens have a basic right to know how and why the federal government spends that $2 billion a day. But if public auditors, comptrollers and treasurers don't know, he asks, how can the public?

The Grace Commission observed that "this missing link in financial management has been the cause of inadequate agency and governmentwide financial accounting and reporting.'

"Sound, rational financial management is not possible under the current, excessively decentralized system," says Burris.

To illustrate, he points to 100 separate payroll systems now in use, some of which produce a payroll check for $2, others for $14. Such inefficiency, he says, costs the federal government between $5 billion and $10 billion a year.

Decentralization produces other areas of waste too, he says. Introduction of modern computer equipment is frustrated. Information exchange between agencies is difficult. Waste remains hidden until it explodes in scandal.

One of Burris' most potent arguments is that centralized accounting would give information before rather than after money is spent. Currently, he says, "government expenditures can only be questioned after the money

But opposition, including that created by inertia, is bound to give such ideas a run for the money.

Critics say the federal government is too large to be managed by a single office. Others fear that conflicts might develop between the chief financial officer and agencies.

An oft-repeated criticism is that a chief financial officer would upset the existing balance of power between the executive and legislative branches.

Burris counters that a chief financial officer would provide unbiased, consistent data to the public. "making it harder to conceal what the government does with taxpayer dollars.'

U.S. urged to end Pretoria relations

WASHINGTON (AP) -Leaders of a coalition opposing the apartheid policies of South Africa today called on President Reagan to end all economic and diplomatic relations with the Pretoria government.

The leaders of the Free South Africa Movement, beginning a day of mourning and demonstrations, also urged U.S. corporations to halt all business dealings with that nation.

South Africa death toll goes over 600

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) - The home of Winnie Mandela, wife of the South Africa's top jailed black leader, was burned down, her lawyer said today.

Mrs. Mandela was not in her home at Brandfort, a remote black township in the Orange Free State, when the fire broke out late Monday or in the early hours today. A week ago, the house and an adjoining medical clinic were badly damaged in a police raid, lawyer Ismail Ayob

Mrs. Mandela had been at an undisclosed address in the Johannesburg area since the police raid.

No information was available immediately on how the fire

Meanwhile, the unofficial death toll in nearly a year of unrest in South Africa topped 600. Police said arsonists hurled the body of a black man wounded by police gunfire onto a burning truck during serious overnight rioting near East London.

The man was burned to death 'as a result of this barbaric act.' a police statement said.

In racial violence across the country Monday, six blacks were killed.

Three bullet-riddled bodies were found in Durban, and reports said an Indian shot and killed another black man. Fighting between Indians and blacks that began last week has claimed 67 lives in Durban.

At the University of the Witwatersrand in Johnnesburg, 32 white students were injured Monday and eight were arrested when police dispersed protesters at the start of a three-day protest. The students followed the lead of white students in Cape Town who have boycotted classes in support of black demands for equal Anti-government groups, meanwhile, spread their call for blacks to avoid white-owned businesses.

In the black township of Kwa-Thema, east of Johannesburg, witnesses said police went from house to house Monday morning, forcing students back to the schools they had been boycotting. Students said that those who refused were beaten with rubber whips.

For months, young blacks have boycotted classes in areas hit by anti-government rioting.

In Pretoria, thousands of black workers heeded a general strike call that lasted from Saturday to Monday, as well as a consumer boycott that is to last until Aug. 28. news reports said.

The boycotts have seriously affected sales of white-owned shops in Pretoria and Johannesburg.

In Cape Town, 14 anti-apartheid groups appealed for a boycott of white-owned shops beginning Wednesday. A boycott that began in the eastern Cape province a month closed has closed many shops

Shutdown Red is blamed on sensors

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) - Problems that nearly aborted the flight of the space shuttle Challenger were caused by three brittle, broken thermal sensors sending out false signals of overheating fuel pumps, an official

The belief that the sensors might be faulty had prompted flight director Cleon Lacefield to overrule the readings and order the mission to continue.

NASA said after the flight ended Aug. 8 that it believed bad sensors were to blame for the shutdown of one engine and near shutdown of

All three sensors removed after the shuttle landed were defective. Dominic Sanchini, executive vice president for production at the Rocketdyne Division of Rockwell International, said Monday. Rocketdyne is the prime contractor on the shuttle main engines. "We found exactly what we expected," he said

Sanchini said the basic problem involved the way the wire elements in the sensors and the tubes in which they operate are twisted and bent during manufacture before they are subjected to 1,700-degree heat to make them uniform.

"Under certain conditions, we found that the wire can become brittle and break," he said. "Under this circumstance it can no longer properly measure engine temperatures. It's what we call an electrical open; it's like a circuit breaker opening.

Tobacco industry heavily criticized by state journal

AP Science Editor

NEW YORK (AP) - A comprehensive new report on the ethical, social and political consequences of cigarette smoking criticizes medical researchers who accept tobacco industry research grants, a situation the report's editor says is "like a detective taking money from the mob."

The 200-page report, which makes up the entire July 1985 issue of the New York State Journal of Medicine, is a compilation of scientific research and reporting that attempts to underscore the success of the cigarette industry in resisting anti-smoking efforts.

Among the industry's tactics, according to articles by about 75 contributors, are sponsoring sporting events and art exhibitions. directing advertising specifically at women and blacks, and funding scientific research.

The journal, published Monday, includes an editorial by its editor, Dr. Alan Blum, suggesting that anti-smoking efforts might have been more successful "if smoking killed baby seals.

"The success of animal rights and wildlife organizations in mobilizing sympathy for the plight of various animals has been far greater than 30 years' worth of publicity about the adverse effects of smoking in human beings," he

"Perhaps the entire anti-smoking campaign should be turned over to Greenpeace," the environmental organization, he wrote. "Who knows what other species might be saved?'

Alan Byrn, assistant to the president of the Tobacco Institute, which represents cigarette manufacturers, said the companies limit themselves to advertising aimed at people who already smoke.

'Certainly the sponsorship of sporting events and cultural exchanges is part of that," Byrn said Monday. "I enjoy attending the Kool Jazz Festival or seeing the Vatican exhibition, and it has nothing to do with smoking a cigarette." The jazz festival was sponsored by Kool cigarettes, and a 1983 Vatican art exhibition was sponsored by Philip Morris

'We're calling for the industry to pay for the wrong that they have done, by being forced to pay for the re-education of the public," Blum said. "Cigarette smoking remains. whether we want to admit it or not. the most serious health problem in the United States.

The department's Crop Reporting Board said Monday the corn crop could produce nearly 8.27 billion bushels, 8 percent more than last year's output and slightly more than the old mark set three

Officials said the estimates were based on surveys taken Aug. 1 and will be updated during the rest of the growing season.

The big crops are expected to further dampen prices at the farm gate and put additional pressure on Congress to come up with new farm legislation that will help protect producer incomes.

"It's not going to change things, to speak of, in terms of food prices," said Ralph Parlett, a too many other things going on."

Parlett referred to the beleaguered livestock industry, particularly cattle producers, who two years ago saw feed prices soar because of the short 1983 harvests. Last year's return to good yields triggered declines in corn and soybeans, but cattle and hog producers had other financial problems. And they have cut back on breeding herds.

As a result of livestock herd liquidations by hard-pressed farmers and ranchers to raise money for debts, consumers have benefited from ample supplies of red meat. That has helped cool food Parlett said the huge 1985 corn crop may dampen feed prices further and help slow liquidations and herd cullings, but "I don't see how we're going to get any real expansion soon.

Meanwhile, he said, retail food prices are estimated to rise an average of 2 percent to 4 percent this year. "Frankly, we're looking at the low end of that" range, he said. Last year, food prices rose an average of 3.8 percent.

Michael Hall, executive vice president of the National Corn Growers Association, said the huge crop "could be the real spark in the haystack" when Congress returns to work next month and tries to complete a new farm bill.

The big corn crop and lower prices will mean rising surpluses. That will make it even more urgent for Congress to adopt legislation to protect farm income, Hall said in a telephone interview.

But that could lead to a rush among lawmakers and possibly result in tough, mandatory production controls. Or it could lead to costlier programs as members of Congress depart from what Hall said was good debate on farm policy.

"When they come back, we will then be in a debate on what is good farm politics," he said

The report said the department's

"all crops" production index as of Aug. 1 averaged 112 percent of the base year of 1977, up from 110 percent last year and a nine-year low of 88 percent in 1983, when drought and government acreage curbs sharply reduced production. The record output was 118 percent

If the August estimate holds, the 1985 corn harvest would eclipse the 1982 record of 8.24 billion bushels. Last year's crop was 7.66 billion

Soybean production was estimated at 1.96 billion bushels, up 5 percent from last year. And cotton production, at 13.8 million bales, was indicated at 6 percent larger than in 1984.

Total wheat production was estimated for the first time this season at 2.38 billion bushels, down 8 percent from the 1984 harvest. The record was 2.79 billion bushel in 1981. A reason for the reduction in wheat - which already was in surplus - is a smaller acreage for

Price of food jumps sharply in July

WASHINGTON (AP) - Analysts see no symptoms of a 1985 inflation epidemic despite an unusually sharp rise in food costs that . ent July wholesale prices up at the fastest clip in

The 0.3 percent increase in the Producer Price Index reported Monday by the Labor Department came on the heels of a revision that showed June prices falling 0.2 percent instead of merely holding steady as originally

"Over the last two months, prices have risen a grand total of 0.1 percent, hardly enough to wiggle your nose about," said David Ernst of Evans Economics Inc., a private Washington

Moreover, the July increase was driven mostly by a 1.3 percent spurt in food prices the largest increase in a year and one analysts say does not signal a new trend.

Food prices have fallen eight of the past 12 months because of underlying weakness in the farm economy and nothing has happened to alter that economic fundamental.

Finished wholesale prices for all consumer goods other than food, a broad category that ncludes energy, were flat in July. Capital equipment costs for businesses also were flat.

"Although the July increase was bigger than expected, I don't think it's a signal that inflation is heating," said Ernest. "The big increase was in food, which doesn't correspond with other information we have about what is happening to farm prices.

Kathleen Cooper, senior financial economist for Security Pacific National Bank in Los Angeles, shared that assessment.

'The picture remains the same," she said. "Inflation is still very, very tame with no real problems yet in sight.

The big jump in food prices was due largely to a 22.2 percent hike in the especially volatile fresh vegetable component - more particularly lettuce, tomatoes and onions because of temporary short supply in some

Union Carbide to pay medical bills

INSTITUTE, W.Va. - Union Carbide Corp. has offered to pay the medical expenses of the 135 people injured in a poison gas leak, but disputed a company memo that said the chemical is as dangerous as the gas that killed more than 2,000 people in Company officials admitted Monday that workers initially thought the leak at the Institute plant was not serious and delayed notifying authorities.

And Senate Minority Leader Robert Byrd, D-W Va , arranged for a delegation of top federal regulatory officials, including Environmental Protection Agency Director Lee Thomas, to inspect the plant today.

Six Carbide employees were injured, 129 residents were treated at hospitals and thousands more were trapped in their homes when aldicarb oxime, the main ingredient in the pesticide Temik, escaped Sunday

Carbide disputed the significance of a 1983 internal memo describing aldicarb oxime as being in the same toxicity class as methyl isocyanate, or MIC, the deadly substance that leaked from the Carbide plant in Bhopal, India. The memo was released by the office of Rep. Henry Waxman, D-Calif.

Carbide spokesman Tom Sprick responded that "the category has considerable range to it and all products are not equal in weight. From what I understand, it (aldicarb oxime) is not as dangerous.

Byrd said he arranged the tour in part to investigate residents' complaints that they were given inadequate warnings and information when the chemical cloud engulfed their homes.

'This incident has raised a lot of questions that need to be answered," he said. "The people of the Kanawha Valley need to know if this situation was handled properly.'

State Air Pollution Control Commission Chairman Carl Beard said Monday the leak raised "serious questions" about the effectiveness of $5 million in 'supposed fail-safe equipment' installed recently at the plant.

Carbide acknowledged that county emergency officials were not notified until 20 minutes after the leak, partly because computer monitoring equipment erroneously indicated that the fumes would not drift.

The company said it would pay medical expenses of all people injured in the leak. And spokesman Dick Henderson said none of the victims would be asked to sign legal releases that could affect their ability to recover damages later.

Most of the injured were treated and released, and doctors predicted quick recovery for the 13 who remained hospitalized Monday.

Carbide officials said Monday they were still trying to determine how the accident happened. Plant manager Hank Karawan said the company suspected that steam somehow entered a storage tank and touched off a chemical reaction that blew out three gaskets, allowing the aldicarb oxime to escape. He said the source of the Bell rate hearings go on ...and on...and on

AUSTIN (AP) — It's the fifth day of testimony by a company official. The on-deck witness is in the small audience, his eyes sporadically flicker and shut.

The questions produce answers that produce more questions. There's no clock on the wall. There's no need for one. You measure Southwestern Bell rate hearings in weeks and months, not minutes and hours.

It was Day 29 and the Public Utility Commission was not yet halfway to figuring out a fair price for telephone service. Another day, another 200 pages of questions and answers — bringing the total to more than 5,300 pages so far.

"Sometimes it can be very numbing, especially to certain portions of the anatomy," said Jon Dee Lawrence of Austin, Bell's lead lawyer.

Bell filed its $323.9 million rate hike request — later reduced to about $277 million — March 22. The hearing began July 1 and probably will nudge October. The commission's final ruling might not come until January.

Opening day of the hearing brought the usual crowd of reporters and TV cameras. Few have returned. Now, it's the lawyers and the hard-to-fathom lingo of the utility world. The proceedings are, to be kind, somewhat less exciting than a crucial, last-second field goal attempt.

"It's not Chaka Khan at Aqua Fest," Bell public relations man Larry Schneiders said, referring to a pop star's recent performance at a local celebration.

A gavel sits in front of the hearing examiner, as if she might need to bang the room back into order after a wild outburst of some sort. On Day 29, the excitement level peaked when a messenger dropped eight cassettes he was bringing to the court reporter.

"My wife came up yesterday. She stayed about a half-hour and left. She couldn't stand it," said attorney Steve Porter, who represents cities challenging the

Some in audience doze during rate hearings

Bell request.

A total of about 20 people were on hand for Day 29, about the usual crowd. The audience does not include any average citizens. Everyone's involved somehow.

"Occassionally someone will wander in we don't know," said Richard Harris, Bell's Texas vice president for revenue. "Sometimes they are looking for another hearing room."

But to company lawyer Lawrence, a large man whose demeanor repertoire does not seem to include open excitement, this is happening. We're on the frontier of very significant public issues. I'm representing one side of those issues. You can spend your life as a lawyer dividing up pots and pans and worrying about bent fenders...

and that's fine," said Lawrence.
"I like to be where the action is and, boy, the action is with my client," he added.

Bell executive Keith Mittledorf blows his nose and the "action" of Day 29 begins. Geoffrey Gay, representing the Office of Public Utility Counsel, is cross-examining. As the state lawyer representing ratepayers, it's Gay's job to show that Bell already makes enough money.

The rail-thin Gay tries to show that Bell is fat with profit. The portly Mittledorf tries to show that Bell needs more. Gay says a company report indicates revenue of $18 million during a certain period. Mittledorf corrects him.

"It's slightly less than $18 million," he says.

Mittledorf remains good-natured, sometimes asking

Gay to repeat his questions because of 'four days' accumulation of cobwebs."

"My mind wanders some, I apologize," he tells Gay.

The topic of "repression and suppression" arises — a theory that says the amount of phone use could change as rates go up. Gay suggests that rate hikes have a different effect on a family with an annual income of $10,000, compared with a family that makes $100,000 a year.

"I'm not sure I can agree one is more than the other," Mittledorf replies. "I often feel that the one with $100,000 manages their money better than the one with $10,000."

Mittledorf also allows as how his five children are "leaned on heavily" when rates go up.

"It's called to the family's attention at dinner time," he says.

Gay and Mittledorf spar for a few more hours.

"It's mind-boggling," Gay said during a break, admitting that during the hearing his mind sometimes wonders to thoughts of another line of legal work.

"We are just trying to find out where all the pieces go," he said. "You think you've developed some issues. You've got it in the back of your head. But after five or six weeks of hearings you've pretty well forgotten how you hoped to develop that point."

The process has become so lengthy that Bell moved Lawrence and his family here from Dallas, where they lived for nine years. Lawrence said his son — a University of Texas student — gets "ribbed" about dad's job. The younger Lawrence's friends refer to the elder Lawrence as "the great rate increaser."

"I think he defends me," said Lawrence.

It's all very exciting to Lawrence, but he concedes, "It does seem to move incredibly slow at times."

IDEAS FOR ARRANGING LOVE SEATS

Many love seats that were manufactured years ago were uncomfortable—but in recent years, love seats have real comfort and afford wonderful decorating possibilities, too.

And, today there are so many designs and styles of love seats that can bring both beautiful decor and practical advantages to your rooms.

Here are just some of the attractive ways love seats can be used in your living room.

You might create a grouping by having two love seats facing each other before a fireside, picture window, etc.

You might place one or two love seats in a corner with a lamp table either between or beside.

Or, you can place a love seat at right angles to your sofa, or to another chair for a nice living room setting.

Love seats can also be effectively used in bedrooms, family rooms, playrooms and other rooms, giving you a good decorating touch and answering a seating need.

To see a selection of love seats and other furnishings—and for all kinds of decorating ideas for your home—stop in. There's no obligation, and we look forward to seeing you.

Women find resentment in the mines

TYLER, Texas (AP) — After seven years in the coal mines, Irene Ayers says she still endures hatred and bitter insults — and eating lunch alone.

"I don't think the men have accepted me yet," said Ms. Ayers, 32, a bulldozer operator at the Martin Lake coal strip mine in East Texas. "I wouldn't recommend it to anyone. Most women couldn't stand the pressure I've been under."

However, the picture may be changing. An estimated 20 women work in Texas coal mines and labor statistics show 3,800 women working in underground coal mines, the Dallas Times Herald reported Sunday.

"I think East Texas is finally coming out of its cocoon," said Donna Honeycutt, 38, of Henderson, who has applied for a coal mining job with Texas Utilities Co. "It's catching up with the rest of the world."

The Coal Employment Project, an advocacy group founded in 1977 by women who grew up in the Appalachian coal fields, teaches women the best approaches in applying for jobs in the mines, where to seek jobs, how to use affirmative action programs and how to assert themselves.

The project also provides support services for women who obtain jobs.

"One of the biggest barriers now is that the affirmative action laws are not being enforced by government agencies," said June Rostan, a project spokeswoman. "There's no strong incentive for companies to hire women."

In Texas, the number of women falls below the national average, Ms. Rostan said. Most of the mines are in remote, rural areas where women are homemakers or work in traditional jobs, she said.

The largest coal mining company in East Texas is Texas Utilities Generating Co., which employs 2,000 workers at three strip mines, including the Martin Lake mine near Tatum. About 20 women are employed at the sites, company officials said.

A company spokesman said few women apply for jobs at the strip mines — and the women who do seek such work often lack the needed skills to operate mining machinery.

"There aren't a lot of women in that end of the business, and for some good reasons," said spokesman Dick Ramsey "It's just not a very nice job. It's dirty work."

Ramsey said less than 3 percent of the applicants are women and the company overall has slowed its employment rate over the past year.

Putting bread and butter on the table is a key reason women say they apply for jobs in the coal industry.

"I'm just trying to earn a decent living," said Penny Thornton, 24, of Hallsville, who has applied for work in a Texas Utilities mine. "The time are changing. There's more divorces now, and women can't afford to make minimum wage."

But Ms. Honeycutt said the East Texas economy, damaged by a slump in oil prices and factory closings, has tossed many men into the unemployment lines

"The times have been so bad for everyone," she said. "Men resent women having a high-paying job. They say, "Why don't you go home and cook so a man can put bread on the table?""

Buffalo soldiers recalled

By DEBORAH HURST Houston Chronicle

HOUSTON (AP) - The country that had called them slaves was now calling them soldiers.

In 1866 the men of the 9th and 10th cavalries, the Buffalo Soldiers, began protecting the nation that had just given them their freedom.

They guarded the mail routes and the stagecoach lines and established forts on the Western frontier. They patrolled the Mexican border and protected the settlers from Indians on the warpath and outlaw bands.

They blazed the trails of the Old West with their guns.

But in 1944 the guns were put away. The units, which had been combined into the 2nd Cavalry Division were disbanded, and the old soldiers faded away.

Recently the remaining Buffalo Soldiers got together in Houston to swap war stories and keep alive a page in U.S. history.

Bill Prince, 71, coordinating the 119th reunion of the 9th and 10th Cavalry Buffalo Soldiers' Associaton, says about 360 veterans of the famed units survive, scattered all over the

One of those who recalled the old days was Dr. Wilbert Wilson, 64, of Tulsa, Okla., who patrolled the Mexican border from 1941-43 as a member of the 10th Cavalry.

Wilson's training as a medic helped launch his career as a physician.

Prince, a veteran of the 10th Cavalry, was only 14 when he entered the service in 1928. "I thought experience would teach me more than school, so I dropped out and signed up," he says, adding that his mother had to give her permission because of his youth. And Prince acknowledges, he received quite an education Stationed at Fort Huachuca, Ariz., the young Prince often had difficulty performing his duties as a garrison soldier. He worked alongside his older counterparts unloading bales of hay for the horses, policing the area, building roads and pulling guard duty.

He had to be able to equip his horse with a full pack saddle when they went out on maneuvers. Complete with bedroll, rain gear, food for his horse, rations, a rifle and a saber, the 100-pound pack almost equalled the weight of the 114-pound private. "I was a kid venturing out to do a man's job," Prince recalls. "So many nights I cried wishing I was back home. But I grew to like it. It made a man out of me. John Galvan liked it, too. Also in

He pulled his share of guard duty, kitchen duty and barracks policing; the details designed to keep a military post ready, never

But he, like many others, became disillusioned when the soldiers in the units that had fought Geronimo and charged up San Juan Hill were assigned to perform menial tasks for the officers.

Galvan took care of the polo ponies for the cadets at West Point. Although Prince says he had some military duties to perform, he was eventually assigned to the living quarters detail, which involved cleaning officers' homes. Instead of being full-time soldiers, they were part-time maids, he says.

So in 1932 Prince got out of the Army and stayed out until the beginning of World War II, during which he served in the 3rd Army.

But Prince has good memories of his days as a Buffalo Soldier and is particularly proud of his unit's contribution to the settling of the

Given the name Buffalo Soldiers by the Indians they fought, it is believed the name came from the Indians' comparison of the soldiers' hair to the mane of the much-revered buffalo.

The units patrolled from Montana to Arizona, as well as New Mexico and Texas. From their post at Fort Davis, Texas, one of the first military posts in the West open to black soldiers, the Buffalo Soldiers fought bravely against the Apaches and Comanches

They served on the frontier of West Texas from 1867 to 1885 and were instrumental in the campaign that finally saw the surrender of the Apache chief Geronimo. They also warred against Apaches led by Victorio, and chased him into Mexico, where he later was killed.

Art's Place a haven for oldtimers

'This place is the closest thing to heaven you can find' place of its kind

SURFSIDE, Texas (AP) - The regulars sit around tables, in an interior lit by beer clocks, decorated with dusty fishnets and shells. It would take an afternoon to see all the memorabilia tacked on the walls

It's Surfside's version of the neighborhood bar. Art's Place. A group of 15 or 20 buddies who go way back, either full-time residents or weekenders from Houston, meet up Friday evenings to see who's in town, what's going on. They fill the sun-bleached, wind-blown building on the island with talk about work, good times, bad luck, and the beach.

Art Margiotta's friends visit his place, "the waterin' hole" they call it, have a few beers and move on. They drift toward Mabel Helen's for dinner and drinks. Maybe to the Castaway for a little dancing later.

"They're trying to relax," Margiotta said. Some of them have been stopping by to relax for 30

He calls his bar "an older-person place. It's not a hep joint." But it hasn't always been that way; the bar has aged with its customers.

"They were young 30 years ago! I was young 30 years ago!" Art's Place is a tough old building; the oldest bar in Surfside, the second oldest in the county. The roof has blown off five times. "Another storm's gonna get it,"

The building originally was the home of Margiotta and his wife Bo. They ran a beer joint and convenience store in another building but Hurricane Carla blew it away. They never saw it again, but someone found one of their tables washed up on Bryan Beach and returned it.

Carla blew their house away too. They found it behind the Coast Guard station on top of a stack of wooden flats swarming with rattlesnakes, "sitting up there like it was open for business.

Jackson ties Williams on all-time homer list

The Angels won the second game 4-3, with Brian Downing hitting a two-run homer

Rod Carew advanced on an all-time list of his own. His four hits in the doubleheader left him with 3.009 hits. He moved ahead of Al Kaline into 14th place on the all-time list. Lou Brock is next in It's also the number hit by Willie McCovey, the only man not enshrined in the Hall of Fame besides Jackson to have hit 500 home runs. McCovey becomes eligible next year.

His first time up Monday, Jackson hit a 1-0 pitch from Seattle's Frank Wills into the left-field stands. With one more

His 521st was Jackson's 96th homer with the Angels. He hit 254 with the Kansas City and Oakland A's, 27 with the Baltimore Orioles and 144 with the New York Yankees.

Jackson's 521st home run came on his 8,957th career at-bat. Williams hit 521 in 7,706 at-bats, and McCovey in 8,197.

Jimmy Foxx, with 534 home runs, and Mickey Mantle, with 536, are well within Jackson's reach, After them the list leaps to 573 and Harmon Killebrew

The only players in baseball history with more home runs than Reggie Jackson are Hank Aaron, Babe Ruth, Willie Mays, Frank Robinson, Killebrew, Mantle and Foxx.

In other American League games, Texas tipped Toronto 5-4, Kansas City topped Boston 3-2, Milwaukee stopped Detroit 4-3, New York storged Chicago 10-4, and Cleveland beat Baltimore 8-5. Minnesota swept a doubleheader from Oakland, 4-3 and 5-4.

On cross examination, both said the only evidence they had that a fix was working was the word of Thompson and Kranz.

Both testified, however, that there was a beer and cocaine party at Kranz' apartment after the Southern Mississippi game and that Williams was among them.

Myths surround pennant drives

Judy Simpson rolls a putt toward the hole.

By JOHN NELSON AP Sports Writer

Never was the old axiom, "You go with what got you there," more important than during baseball's pennant stretch. So, here are some myths about that late-season drive that can be dispelled right now:

- Pull out all the stops when August rolls around.

 Drop that No. 5 starter and go to a four-man pitching rotation. - Players gear themselves up for the last part of the season, much the way NBA players rally in the final four minutes of a game. - The team that wants it most usually is the team that wins it all. "The funny thing about this ame," says Chicago Cubs Manager Jim Frey, "is that with 57 or 58 games to go, there are going to be some hot streaks and some cold streaks left. All teams go through them, and they'll go through them yet.'

Last season, Frey led the Cubs to their first National League East Division title. This year, the Cubs are struggling to stay in fourth place, while Dave Johnson's New York Mets and Whitey Herzog's St. Louis Cardinals fight for the title.

"Look at the Mets, for example," Frey says. "Three weeks ago, they were crying the blues. Keith Hernandez was hitting .250. Gary Carter was all banged up. He might need surgery. Mookie (Wilson) was out and (Darryl) Strawberry wasn't playing — and the Cardinals were going to run away with it. Now, you'd think the Mets had already won it."

Johnson sees some managers changing the way they use players too early in the stretch.

"August is a month when some managers quit going to their benches and go into a four-man rotation," Johnson says. "That's too early. ... Sometimes you can go to a four-man rotation, but if you change the work habits of an individual, they feel different, their stuff is different.

"St. Louis has a four-man rotation with veterans, and I think some of them are getting tired. What you really need to do down the stretch is become consistent with your run production.'

Johnson says managers can make some "fine tuning" changes in the last week of the season, but to make changes any earlier can be counterproductive.

"You can go to the whip the last week. That's OK. But when you start changing your philosophy, panic sets in on everyone, Johnson says. "If you make a decision out of panic, it affects the whole ballclub

"The last week you can make some changes, but even then it's sometimes not necessary. ... You try not to make any major

To say that players gear up for a pennant stretch also is just so much bunk. Ballplayers on winning teams have automatic transmissions.

"All the motivation that you need is there, the incentive is there,' says Hernandez, who was on the Cardinals' 1982 World Series champions. "It's easy to get in gear for a pennant stretch. It's a lot tougher to just play the season

Bruins going for four in a row

LOS ANGELES (AP) — UCLA is the only school that can claim a three-game, New Year's Day-bowl winning streak entering the 1985 college football season.

Bruins Coach Terry Donahue knows it won't be easy to make it

He begins his 10th year as Bruins coach Sept. 7 when UCLA faces defending national champion Brigham Young at Provo, Utah.

The Bruins finished No.9 with a 9-3 record last season, including a wild 39-37 victory over Miami in the Fiesta Bowl.

UCLA almost certainly would have missed a New Year's Day bowl game had it not been for a 29-10 upset of cross-town rival Southern Cal, the Pacific-10 Conference champion, in it final regular-season game.

The Bruins won the conference title the previous two years and earned Rose Bowl victories following both seasons.

Donahue's career record of 71-29-5 ranks 13th among active NCAA Division I-A coaches and he needs only two wins to set a school record for career wins. Bill Spaulding guided UCLA to 72 victories in 14 seasons starting in

While the Bruins have some outstanding talent returning from last year's team and recruited well, there are a lot of question marks, not the least of which is the quarterback.

Steve Bono, last year's signal-caller, was graduated and is now playing for the Minnesota Vikings of the National Football League. The starting UCLA quarterback figures to be either junior Matt Stevens or fifth-year senior David Norrie, neither of whom has much experience.

Stevens started three games early last season when Bono was injured and completed 43 of his 84 passes for 583 yards and three touchdowns while being intercepted four times. Norrie was seven of 17 for 46 yards. The starting tailback figures to be sophomore Gaston Green, who spent most of last year as a reserve before gaining 134 yards against Southern Cal and 144 against Miami. Among other offensive standouts returning are wide receiver Mike Sherrard.

Son tries to clear his father's name

AUSTIN (AP) — Twenty-four years after his father's death, Don Marshall is in an Austin courtroom this week trying to clear his father's name by having the death declared a homicide instead of a suicide.

At the time of his death, Henry Marshall, a U.S. Department of Agriculture official, was investigating Billie Sol Estes. Estes, a flamboyant West Texan who claimed ties to Lyndon Johnson, eventually was convicted of fraud over a non-existent fertilizer business.

of See Estes gained more attention last year when he told a Robertson County grand jury that Marshall had been killed on orders from then-Vice President Johnson.

Marshall's body was found June 3, 1961, on the family farm in Robertson County, north of Bryan. Five bullet holes marred his body. He also had inhaled carbon monoxide.

A 1962 grand jury in Robertson County ruled the death a suicide. But a 1984 grand jury reopened the case, heard testimony from Estes, and ruled the death a homicide. The grand jury issued no indictment or comment on the claim that Johnson was involved, saying only that those involved with the murder were dead.

In state District Court before Judge Peter Lowry on Monday, Don Marshall and his mother, Sybil Marshall, asked that the cause listed on Henry Marshall's death certificate be changed from "gun shot wounds — self-inflicted" to "gun shot wounds — homicide."

Marshall said he only recently learned that the listed cause of death could be changed.

Assistant Attorney General Lou Bright said a judge can order a change in a death certificate if there is a satisfactory showing that the information listed is wrong.

Phil Banks, the Marshalls' attorney, said the family believes the investigation was botched by the Robertson County sheriff.

Clint Peoples, a Texas Ranger who investigated Marshall's death, testified Monday that he believed there was no question that Marshall was murdered. "My opinion from the investigation prior and after is that someone went out there to make it look like a suicide," Peoples said.

Peoples said he believes the evidence shows that Marshall had "a terrific struggle" with someone and received several cuts on his head. He then inhaled carbon monoxide, possibly from the exhaust pipe of his pickup. "After that came the finishing off part with the rifle," Peoples

The shots came from a single-shot, bolt-action, 22-caliber rifle. Peoples demonstrated that Marshall, who had a partially crippled right hand, would have had to bolt the gun, aim the barrel at his abdomen, and reach a full arm's length away to pull the trigger. That action would have had to have been repeated five times if the suicide theory is correct.

An autopsy was not done until a year after Marshall's death. Dr. Joseph Jachimczyk, chief medical examiner of Harris County, ruled the death a "possible homicide and possible suicide." A grand jury later determined the death was a suicide.

Peoples and Bryan Russ, who was Robertson County district attorney in 1962, said the grand jury had all the evidence available at that time. Russ said he thinks the sheriff's office did a thorough investigation.

Estes refused to testify before that grand jury. But as Peoples escorted Estes to federal prison in 1965, they talked of Marshall's death. Peoples quoted Estes as saying, "You can bet your life it wasn't suicide. It was murder." He told Peoples to look "towards Washington" for the killer.

When Estes was released from prison late in 1983, he contacted Peoples and gave him new information concerning Marshall's death. Estes said he "wanted to get right with the Lord," Peoples said.

Testifying before the new grand jury in Robertson County, Estes reportedly said he and Johnson discussed the need to stop Marshall from disclosing Estes' fraudulent business dealings and his ties with Johnson.

Estes identified the late Malcolm Wallace, a former University of Texas student president and former U.S. Agriculture Department economist, as the trigger man.

Family and associates of Johnson and Wallace have denied Estes' accusations, and associates say the ties Estes claims he had to the late president were exaggerated.

Don Marshall said his mother "had mixed feelings" about bringing the case up again in order to change the death certificate. "Down deep, she wants it changed. The whole thing has always been upsetting to her." he said

By manning their front stoops or marching in flashlight parades tonight, residents across the country hope to reclaim their neighborhoods at least symbolically from muggers and thieves in the second annual National Night Out.

Greyhounds get homes when racing is done

GULFPORT, Fla. (AP) - From California to Massachusetts, from Minnesota to Florida, an organization of two dozen volunteers in 13 states is finding homes for hundreds of greyhounds that have run their last race.

The volunteers are breeders, animal lovers and adoptive owners committed to preventing the sleek, graceful racers from being destroyed.

Linnea McCaffery, for example, it was not essential that we have borrows a van on weekends for a 140-mile round trip to cart dogs from the Plainfield Greyhound Track to her Manchester, Conn.,

Joyce Milne took in a 2-year-old dog in November. She and her husband David own a college preparatory boarding school in Williamstown, Mass.

"With two setters and a poodle;

another dog," Mrs. Milne said. 'But I was very taken. Charlie was so devoted, trainable and obedient that four weeks ago I got another greyhound. They've got so much love to give."

In Watervliet, N.Y., magician Peter Monticup was so pleased with 3-year-old Sylvan he worked the dog into his show ferrying props on stage. Aleithia Bower uses her greyhound to demonstrate obedience classes at her Houston dog-training school.

In Lutz, near Tampa, Becky and Brad Smeltzer had two dogs when they decided to take in a greyhound. Now they have six, and all of them pile into a king-sized waterbed with the couple at night.

"The first just peeled back those lips in a smile and in three seconds that was it. The next had a leg injury and we were sure nobody would take care of her like us. Then came a brother and sister and my husband said they were just too cute to let go. And so ... '

The Smeltzers said they were impressed with the docile nature of an animal they'd only seen in a muzzle, breaking out of a starting gate for a frenzied 30-second chase after a mechanical lure. They have placed more than 25 dogs in other

The volunteers' efforts have resulted in the placement of more than 1,200 greyhounds since March 1982, most in the last 18 months.

The dogs, mainly between 18 months and 31/2 years old, were marked for an untimely end because they were either too slow, injured or ready to retire, according to Ron Walsek, founder and head of the Florida-based volunteer organization called REGAP, which stands for Retired Greyhounds as Pets.

The successful racers are retired by their fifth year; only the best are kept for breeding.

Although no exact numbers are available, breeders and veterinarians estimate that 8,000 to 10,000 greyhounds die each year by lethal injection or are diverted to animal research.

The National Greyhound Association in Abilene, Kan., says it registers 26,000 racing greyhounds a year.

There is another choice. They make wonderful pets," said Walsek, a horticultural worker who has battled a wary industry over the program. He and his wife Jan keep two greyhounds in a modest one-bedroom duplex.

Dr. Roger Barr, a veterinarian.

has taken in three greyhounds himself and placed 40 from his Coon Rapids, Minn., animal clinic. As pets, he said, they're "outstanding. They're intelligent and they don't have an aggressive bone in their body."
