

Checks ordered on Boeing engines

MANCHESTER, England (AP) — British Airways said today it had ordered immediate computer checks of the jet engines on its 30 Boeing 737s following an engine explosion and fire that killed 54 people on a charter flight to Greece.

U.S. officials also revealed that the manufacturer of the engine on the 737 that caught fire Thursday on takeoff from Manchester Airport had been ordered last month to conduct a safety survey because of a fire in a similar engine.

Alan Solloway, a spokesman for British Airways, told reporters in Manchester that the state-owned airline was making what he called immediate "computerized checks" on the engines of its Boeing 737 fleet.

He said none of the planes had been grounded, however.

British Airways said it had not been told of a U.S. government directive to check the U.S.-made Pratt & Whitney engines.

However, Britain's Civil Aviation Authority said all British airlines that use the Pratt & Whitney engine had been informed of the order, although it was not mandatory in Britain.

"The airlines were informed for their information only," a CAA press officer who did not permit use of his name told The Associated Press.

The 4-year-old plane that burned at Manchester had about 12,000 hours flying time, and would not have been subject to the checks if they had been mandatory, the aviation official said.

He said only planes with more than 17,000 hours flying time would have been affected.

The exploding engine created a fireball that engulfed the rear of the British Airtours jet as it sped down the runway. Officials say 54 people died in the searing heat and poisonous black smoke. Eighty-three aboard survived.

British Airtours is a charter subsidiary of British Airways.

The U.S. Federal Aviation Administration ordered Pratt & Whitney to carry out a survey of its engines after an incident this spring involving another fire, said FAA spokesman Dennis Feldman said.

Pratt & Whitney, of East Hartford, Conn., will present the results of a month-long internal investigation to federal investigators next week, Feldman said in Washington.

He said the incident that prompted the order occurred in May, when the pilot of a Saudi Arabian jetliner was forced to abort a takeoff from Qatar after an engine failure and fire.

Air experts were at the Manchester airport today to begin the "rigorous inquiry" promised by Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, who visited the scene of the disaster on Thursday.

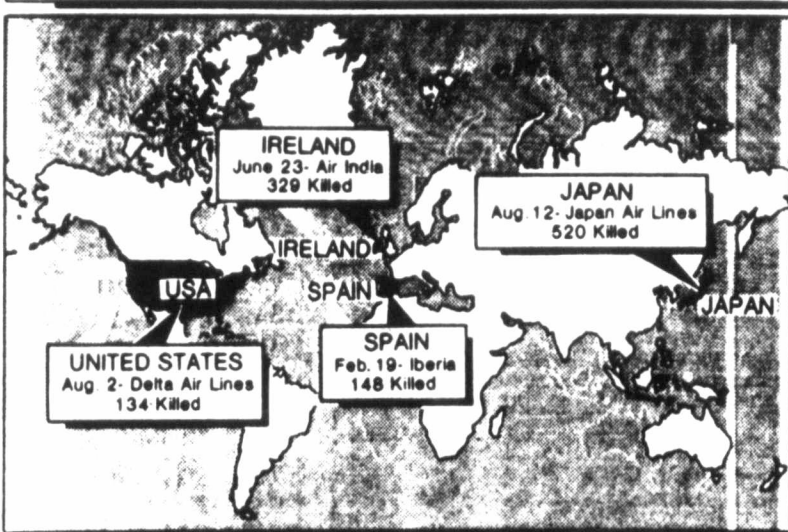

Mrs. Thatcher said the probe would be carried out by the Accident Investigation Branch of the government's Department of Transport.

AIB spokesman David Deas described the cause of the disaster as "uncontained engine failure." But he added that only detailed investigation will establish exactly what happened.

He said the intense heat of the fire melted the aluminum frame of the plane but would not comment further.

After visiting survivors, Mrs. Thatcher told reporters, "It brings it home to you as nothing else can. You read about these terrible accidents, and there's something that happens on the other side of the world, and then it happens on your own doorstep, and you realize the agony that every person suffers."

Passengers trampled over each other as they tried to flee the raging flames and poisonous black smoke from burning upholstery in Thursday's disaster at Manchester airport in northern England.

The American Pratt and Whitney JT8D-15 was heading for a holiday flight to Greece.

The London Times quoted one of the survivors as saying: "There were loads of kids on board but everyone was trampling over everything and everybody to get out. It was like being in hell."

The disaster confirms 1985 as the world's worst year ever in civil aviation history. Fifteen accidents so far this year have killed more than 1,400 people, according to the International Civil Aviation Organization in Montreal.

The United Nations-affiliated agency said that until now, 1974, with 1,299 deaths, ranked as the worst year for scheduled, commercial airline services.

Thursday's disaster was the third involving a Boeing aircraft in the last two months. But Boeing 737s, which have been in service since 1967, have a good safety record. Over 1,000 now in service are used by 133 airlines worldwide. Boeing spokesman Dick Schlen said of the twin-jet plane's safety record: "It's ... one of the best in the industry."

U.S. and British aviation authorities already have told airlines they must modify passenger seats to reduce the risk of quick-spreading fires.

A CAA statement said that "studies have shown that the flammability of seat upholstery is a major and, in many cases, the most important factor in spreading a cabin fire."

Top German intelligence officer flees

BERLIN (AP) — A top West German intelligence officer, sought in a widening spy scandal, has crossed the border and requested asylum from East Germany's communist government, East Germany's official news agency said today.

Hans Joachim Tiedge, who had been West Germany's top counterespionage officer for East Germany, was the fourth person to disappear since Aug. 6. There are growing suspicions they also were East German spies.

"Hans Joachim Tiedge, who for many years was in charge of counter-espionage in the Federal Constitutional Protection Office of the Federal Republic of (West) Germany has crossed over into the (East) German Democratic Republic and has sought asylum there," ADN said in its dispatch.

ADN said East German officials were reviewing his request for asylum. The news agency did not say when Tiedge had arrived in East Germany. He had been missing since Monday.

Kurt Rebmann, West Germany's chief federal prosecutor, immediately announced that investigators were searching Tiedge's home and that a formal spy probe had been opened against him.

The announcement came a day after West German officials said they had launched a major search for Tiedge. Reports had said he vanished Monday after calling in sick to work.

Colleagues could not reach him at home by telephone, and family members could not locate him, said Hans-Gerd Lange, a spokesman for the Constitutional Protection Office.

Earlier today, the Cologne Express newspaper reported that Tiedge had been in charge of surveillance of one of the other three people who disappeared, a bookkeeper for a lobbying group.

The bookkeeper, Ursula Richter, did not show up at work Monday. The Cologne Express, quoting unnamed "security experts," said she may have fled after being tipped off by Tiedge.

Alexander Prechtel, a spokesman for Rebmann, had said that as of Thursday Tiedge was not under suspicion of spying.

Chancellor Helmut Kohl issued a warning to East Germany about possible damage to relations between the two countries because of espionage. "Those in East Germany who are interested in good neighborly relations with West Germany should consider the effect on us ... of spying," Kohl said in an interview with West German television.

"Espionage is bound to sow mistrust," said Kohl.

East and West Germany, the product of opposing Soviet and Western occupation zones at the end of World War II, often alternate between accusations and quiet diplomacy to improve economic, cultural and family ties.

Where black leader held

Apartheid foe plans march on prison

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Police firing rubber bullets and shotgun blasts today battled what they called a large mob of stone-throwing blacks in northern Cape Province, killing six blacks and wounding 20, authorities said.

In Cape Town, the Rev Allan Boesak, a leading opponent of apartheid, announced a mass march next Wednesday to the gates of Pollsmoor Prison, to demand the freeing of black leader Nelson Mandela, jailed for 21 years.

Residents of Soweto, near Johannesburg, said the army for the second day in a row was arresting youngsters who were on the streets, boycotting classes. Hundreds of parents, aided by clergymen, gathered at a main police station to locate their children, the residents said.

The Star newspaper reported without attribution that police today were holding "about 300" youngsters from Thursday's operation. Police refused to say how many they held.

The fighting that killed the six blacks appeared to be one of the bloodiest confrontations in weeks as South Africa heads toward its second year of anti-apartheid rioting that has killed more than 600 people, most all of them black. The riots began in August 1984.

The latest clashes were in a black area near Aliwal North, 316 miles south of Johannesburg, police said.

This was the second day of disturbances in the area, and police had said fighting between blacks and police left another man dead there before dawn Thursday.

On Thursday, Boesak, a minister of the Dutch Reformed Church and president of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches, said that anti-apartheid activists planned to hold a protest that would "turn this country on its head."

Mandela, imprisoned for life after being convicted of planning sabotage, is head of the African National Congress (ANC), the main guerrilla organization fighting the white government.

Homeland policy at heart of dispute

By JAMES F. SMITH
Associated Press Writer

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — For 52 of his 59 years, Dr. Nthato Motlana has lived in Johannesburg's Soweto township. But he speaks Tswana, and that makes him a citizen of Bophuthatswana.

When that tribal homeland accepted independence from South Africa in 1977, Motlana lost his South African citizenship.

Now if the physician and anti-apartheid activist bequeaths his Soweto house to his grandchildren, they can own it but not live in it. Like other children born after Bophuthatswana's independence, they are foreigners, ineligible for rights to live or work permanently in "white" South Africa.

The citizenship status of the black majority lies at the heart of the current political turmoil in this white-ruled nation.

There have been recent hints of change in policies, dating back to the 1950s, that declare blacks in South Africa to be citizens of tribal homelands, not South Africans.

AP news analysis

But, to the frustration of black leaders, President P.W. Botha, in a long-awaited speech Aug. 15, offered nothing firm on the question. And he made clear that even if blacks become citizens, that does not mean they will get the vote, a right most Westerners assume comes with citizenship.

Under the homeland policy, the cornerstone of South Africa's apartheid system of racial separation, blacks have been "denationalized," made citizens of 10 tribal homelands with varying degrees of self-rule. The nation's 24 million blacks are denied the vote and other political rights in South Africa on the theory that they have rights in the homelands.

For many blacks, not having the vote is less important than the web of laws that limit their ability to leave the barren homelands, seek work in white areas and live in the black townships that surround white cities.

To settle legally in Soweto or other townships, a black must hold a one-year job contract. Eventually, if he works for 10 years as a migrant laborer, he can acquire the coveted right to reside permanently in urban areas.

The government says more than 160,000 blacks were arrested last year for violating these "influx controls," trying to illicitly settle and work away from the homelands. But many more among the estimated 11 million blacks in the townships are there illegally, having become over the generations the vital manpower of South African industry.

The homeland system is scorned by blacks here and rejected abroad.

No foreign government recognizes Transkei, Ciskei, Bophuthatswana or Venda, the four homelands.

Batting center gets support of parks board

The Parks and Recreation Advisory Board gave its support Thursday to the installation of an automatic batting center at Hobart Street Park.

Al Ferguson, representing the City Ball Club, Inc., said the club wants to erect and operate a batting facility in the park adjacent to the softball facilities.

He said the club has proposed installing the batting center on the old tennis court at the park. The court has not been used in several years because of its poor condition, he noted.

Ferguson said the coin-operated, slow-pitch softball facility would be constructed solely by the club at its own expense, with no cost to taxpayers. The club, if the city commission approves the facility, would lease the land from the city, with the city receiving 10 percent of the proceeds.

Ferguson said as far as he knew, a facility of this type has never been placed in a city of Pampa's size. But there's great interest in softball here because of the softball leagues, which draw a number of out-of-town residents to the city for tournaments, he said.

He said the club expects great use of the facility because of the large number of softball players who could use the batting center for practice. The center is designed mainly for adults aged 18 and up, who would probably be the biggest users, he said. But youths could also use the facility, he added.

The center would have seven cages, but only five machines will be installed initially, Ferguson said. The two outside cages would remain empty, allowing the club either to add two more softball machines or to add two hardball machines in the spring.

The club currently is in the process of installing a 12-cage facility in Amarillo and has built other batting centers in Farmington, N.M., and Atlanta, Ga.

The club would carry comprehensive liability insurance for personal injuries and an umbrella coverage for the premises, Ferguson said.

If approved by the city, the $68,000 center could be constructed in 15 days.

The parks board gave its support to the facility and recommended that the city's share of the proceeds be earmarked for parks improvement projects.

In other matters, the board recommended that the city locate an additional wading pool in Beech Park.

Jackie Harper, recreation coordinator for the Parks and Recreation Department, reported that renovation work on the Pioneer Cottage is progressing. She said the cottage had been roofed and the sides are being caulked. Painting should begin soon, she said. Some repair work is still left on the porch, since materials for the porch have not yet arrived.

The Act I theater group has volunteered to repaint the city's Nativity scenes for use at Christmas time, she reported.

Harper said the parks crew would be working on Central Park next week to get it ready for Chautauqua '85 on Labor Day. Grass will be mowed and trees will be trimmed. A temporary access route for handicapped persons will be located on the south side of the park, with ramps for the main bridge.

The M. K. Brown Pool will close today because no lifeguards could be found to work at the pool next week, Harper said. The wading pools in Central Park and Marcus Sanders Park will remain open through the Labor Day weekend.

An organizational meeting for the formation of a city volleyball league will be held at 7 p.m. Tuesday in the Lovett Memorial Library auditorium, Harper reported.

University employees latest to be kidnapped in Beirut

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Two Lebanese Christian employees of the kidnap-plagued American University of Beirut have been abducted, university spokesman Radwan Mawlawi said today.

He identified the pair as Semaan Gaddaa, who worked in the university hospital's admissions department, and Simon Skaff, a university librarian. Both are Christians aged in the mid-30s.

Mawlawi said Gaddaa was abducted Monday on his way home from Moslem West Beirut, where the university and hospital are located, to Christian East Beirut.

Three American University officials have been kidnapped in recent months. They are Peter Kilburn, 60, a university librarian missing since Dec. 3 last year; hospital director David Jacobsen, 54, kidnapped May 28; and Thomas Sutherland, 53, dean of the university's agriculture faculty, abducted June 9.

Up to 900 inmates slated for parole

HUNTSVILLE, Texas (AP) — The Texas Department of Corrections, struggling to meet housing requirements set up under a federal court order, plans to parole as many as 900 inmates next week.

Some 600 of the inmates will be freed under a new parole law, according to John Byrd, executive director of the state Board of Pardons and Paroles. The other 300 normally would have been released next week, department spokesman Phil Guthrie said Thursday.

Earlier this summer, the Corrections Department agreed to settlement of a 13-year-old prison lawsuit by establishing deadlines for easing overcrowding. The attorney for inmate plaintiffs in that suit, William Bennett Turner, has threatened to seek contempt of court charges against prison officials if certain Sept. 1 deadlines are not met.

The Texas prison system, with 37,821 inmates as of Thursday, is the nation's second largest. According to the federal court settlement, population at existing units may not exceed 34,212.

Groom schedules ambulance benefit

GROOM — A benefit dance featuring the Homen Brothers band from Amarillo is slated for 9 p.m. Saturday at the American Legion Hall with proceeds going to buy a new ambulance.

Darlene Jones, a spokesman for the Groom volunteer ambulance service said the organization lacks $12,000 to pay for a new ambulance, which costs more than $39,000.

Jones expects the ambulance — a type three vehicle with a cab and a square chassis — within 90 days and to get the unit paid for by Nov. 1.

The Groom ambulance service must get the new unit because their current one, a 1974 Dodge Van, does not comply with federal guidelines on size and noise levels.

A fund has been set up at the State National Bank of Groom to receive contributions which may be made in the form of regular donations or memorial funds.

Police investigate armed robbery try Pampa police are continuing to investigate an attempted armed robbery early Thursday morning at Allsup's Convenience Store, 859 E. Frederic.

A white male, described as dark-haired and about 6 feet tall, apparently entered the store at about 2:30 a.m. wielding a small handgun. He was scared off by the headlights of a vehicle that pulled into the parking lot to purchase gas, police said. The suspect is believed to have fled on foot.

A spokesman at the Allsup's supervisor's office said she was not at liberty to discuss the case at this time.

Commissioner says

Sierra Club trying to trade support for water package

AUSTIN (AP) — The Sierra Club says it will decide whether to back the proposed state water package when it sees who Gov. Mark White appoints to the Texas Water Commission.

But the commissioner about to be replaced says the Sierra Club tactic is political "extortion."

"The Sierra Club's position has drifted toward extortionistic negativism — it seems opposed to everything until bought out of the way," Commissioner Lee Biggart said Thursday. "It now threatens to oppose the water plan unless bought out with a commissioner."

Biggart, who was appointed by Gov. Bill Clements, completes his term next Friday. He has not asked Gov. Mark White to reappoint him.

"I would strongly urge Gov. White to ignore amateur attempts at extortion and simply appoint the best person possible from whichever source the person's name appears," Biggart said.

"I feel compelled to speak out against the manner in which the paid leadership of the Sierra Club has tried to manipulate this appointment in return for support of the Texas Water Plan," he said at a news conference.

Stuart Henry, the Sierra Club's water resources chairman, said Thursday that the appointment is crucial because the three-member Water Commission would interpret and administer the proposed $1.4 billion water plan. The package, approved by lawmakers this year, faces voter approval in November.

One commissioner could ruin the plan, said Henry, who denied Biggart's allegations and said the club is merely protecting its interests.

"The Water Commission is going to interpret the water plan. It's not a good plan unless you get a good commissioner to go along with the other commissioners," Henry said. "The language is so vague that one commissioner, and all three, are critical."

The Sierra Club, in general, is pleased with the work of commissioners Ralph Roming and Paul Hopkins, according to Henry.

"But one commissioner can make a difference when you have only three," he said.

The Sierra Club has given White a list of four or five candidates backed by the club.

Biggart, who does not want to be reappointed, said the water plan has drawn widespread support and could win voter approval without Sierra Club backing. But Henry said, "If we work against the plan, we are going to beat it."

Biggart said the Sierra Club's efforts could backfire by upsetting the other commissioners.

"I am concerned that the paid leadership of the Sierra Club is seeking someone who is obligated personally to them rather than someone who is responsive to environmental interests," he said.

El Paso grand jury foreman upset at challenge of district judge indictment

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — The foreman of a grand jury whose indictment of a state district judge was immediately challenged by prosecutors says he had a feeling the jury was "fighting a losing battle, but we had the courage to pursue it."

Just minutes after the indictment of Judge Enrique Pena charging official oppression, attorneys representing the state filed a motion Thursday to dismiss the charges.

Jury foreman Francis Daugherty said grand jurors had decided against the prosecutors' urgings.

"It does take courage on the grand jury's part to continue to pursue something like this when you have the dissent of the whole judicial system against you," Daugherty said.

The indictment of Pena stemmed from a courtroom dispute that led to the handcuffing of a court clerk's employee.

Attorneys Joseph Calamia and Charles Mallin, who were appointed to represent the state in the case, filed the motion to dismiss the indictment because Pena merely "made an erroneous judgment."

The two lawyers were appointed because the district and county attorneys, who usually prosecute cases, declined to handle it.

"It was so damned obvious that this thing was pre-planned and pre-played," Daugherty said Thursday night. "United we stand in that league," he said, referring to members of the legal profession.

Plea bargain scrapped in teen's perjury case

DALLAS (AP) — A teen-ager who pleaded guilty and got a three-year probated sentence will have to stand trial after all because of conflicting statements he made to reporters following his guilty plea to perjury.

State District Judge Larry Baraka Thursday set aside Lonnie Leyuas' guilty plea and ordered him to stand trial on the charge that he lied to a grand jury about a controversial police shooting last year.

After pleading guilty to perjury Wednesday, Leyuas contradicted himself in two separate interviews.

He told the Dallas Times Herald that he had lied to the grand jury last year "because it was the thing to do at the time. I'm sorry it happened."

But in a television interview later, the 19-year-old said he had lied to the judge in pleading guilty because an attorney advised him to.

Leyuas and two other teen-agers were indicted last year after their grand jury testimony about the shooting death of a black man by a white police officer.

The three were accused of telling the grand jury that officer Melvin

D. Cozby struck and handcuffed Michael Frost before shooting him twice in November 1983. Police and grand jury investigations cleared Cozby of any wrongdoing.

But the teen-agers became a cause celebre among some black leaders, whose protests prompted a city-ordered review of all Dallas police shootings in 1983 and has resulted in sweeping changes in the racial makeup of grand juries and the way police shootings are investigated.

After Leyuas' guilty plea Wednesday, City Councilwoman Diane Ragsdale, one of the black leaders protesting the case, said she believed the youth had been pressured into the guilty plea.

On Thursday, Baraka summoned Leyuas to his courtroom for a special hearing where he said he was nullifying his guilty plea and ordered him to stand trial, preferably before a jury, on the perjury charge.

"I don't take pleas from people who say they are guilty," Baraka told Leyuas. "I not only have to see to it that justice is done, but I have to see that people don't plead guilty or are forced to plead to something they didn't do."

Controllers say they were helpless to prevent crash

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — Two air traffic controllers who handled the Delta Air Lines jet that crashed, killing 131 people, on final approach to the Dallas airport, said in a report published today there was nothing they could have done to prevent the disaster.

The controllers, in their first public remarks since the crash, said they also had no idea how severe the weather was at Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport until 100 mph winds were clocked three minutes after the Boeing L-1011 went down.

"That night going home, I felt like there was nothing I could have done or should have done that would have changed anything," said a 46-year-old Garland man who controlled the flight until six minutes before the crash.

"I don't think any information was withheld from the pilot that he would have made a different decision than he did" to fly into the rain, he said.

Two of the three controllers monitoring Delta Flight 191 on Aug. 2 were interviewed by the Fort Worth Star-Telegram and spoke on condition they not be identified by name.

"It's just a feeling of helplessness," said a controller from Irving, who had given the pilot clearance to land, then futilely commanded, "Go around."

"You're standing there looking at an airplane explode and you know that people are dying. You don't have any idea how many," he said.

"There's not a ... thing you can do for them. Zero."

Thirty-one people survived the crash of the jumbo jet.

National Transportation Safety Board investigators have not determined the cause of the crash, but wind shear — a sudden shift in wind speed and direction spawned by severe thunderstorms — is a prime suspect.

But the first thought for each controller, veterans of 24 years or more, was whether he had done something wrong.

Utah senator is given VFW's space award

DALLAS (AP) — Utah Sen. Jake Garn, accepting an award from the Veterans of Foreign Wars, said finding a cure for a major disease while in space would justify the costs of the space program.

The Republican senator, who went on an April space shuttle mission, received two standing ovations Thursday after he was given the VFW Space Award during the group's 86th national convention.

Garn, chairman of a subcommittee that oversees funding for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, said he would "make no apology" for advocating continued funding for the space program.

"If a cure for a major disease is discovered because of the space program, it will be worth all the expense that has ever been incurred in connection with it," he said.

The senator — a former Navy aviator who is also chairman of the Senate Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs Committee — said space research already has been advanced by experiments made possible for the first time because of zero gravity.

When he was named as part of the Discovery crew, Garn shrugged off criticism accusing him of using his political influence over NASA to win the assignment.

Garn, 52, told VFW members that one of the first speeches he gave after the Discovery returned to earth was to a kindergarten class.

I felt impressed to tell them that some of them would someday step on Mars, that some would live on a space experiment station.

The senior Utah senator recalled watching television with his father in July 1969 when Neil Armstrong became the first person to walk on the Moon.

Tears came to his father's eyes, Garn said, and when he asked why, his father said he was overcome with emotion over the huge strides that had taken place in his lifetime.

His father said he remembered when, at the age of 10 in 1903, he listened as his father read a newspaper account of the Wright brothers' first airplane flight.

During the flight of Discovery, "it was the only time in my life I have ever wished I were younger," Garn said, "because I would like to be one of those to go to Mars, and I know I won't."

It was love at first sight

A week ago this evening, I stood on the apron at Perry LeFors Field and fell in love with an airplane.

The wind seemed to be blowing harder than usual and the setting sun cast long shadows, playing havoc with the light meter built into my camera.

I wandered all around her, peering into the glassed nose, the engine cowl and up into the wheel wells. I ran my hands along the fuselage, feeling the rivets bump gently and wondered how many hours had gone into keeping this lovely aircraft flying.

Now I stand at the end of a long line of men and women who gave their hearts away years ago to this Mitchell B-25.

The B-25 was not the biggest, or the fastest of World War II aircraft, but it was (in the immortal words of a girl named Goldilocks) just right. Right for use in every theater of the war, and just right for flying off carriers, a function for which it was not designed. And while Jimmy Doolittle led 16 of these land-based B-25 bombers off the deck of the USS Hornet to deliver their packages to Tokyo, they could not land once again on the Hornet's rolling runway. Instead they had to fly on, to rendezvous in China. Some of them did not make it.

So it was that many of the soldiers from the Pampa Army Airfield gathered again to visit and recall the days of bright sunshine and wind, when they learned to fly B-25's into the sky.

The "General" was the guest of honor at this reunion. The personal transport for Gen. "Hap" Arnold, it was the first B-25 commissioned and now belongs to the Fighting Air Command, a flying museum at Hartlee Field in Denton, Texas. As a member of the press, I was invited to fly in the General. It was an experience I'll never forget.

I pulled myself through the tunnel, pushing my camera bag in front of me to find myself in the bombardiers' area. This particular aircraft was never armed. Instead of controls, there was a chair for me to strap myself into. As the engine roar increased and we rose up into the air, I found myself crying from the exhilaration. I have seen Pampa from the air many times before, but seeing it through the multipaned glass nose of a B-25 rates as an all-time high for me. The pilot gently manoeuvred her back and forth across the city and I wondered how many Pampa residents recognized and remembered the sound of this twin-engine beauty.

It was an emotional day for me; meeting and visiting with returning airmen and listening to their stories. And like most WWII veterans I've met, they talked about the good times, and very little about the bad times.

Late in the afternoon, I passed by the hangar where a Stinson L-5 is being restored and chatted with members of the DEW Line Squadron of the Confederate Air Force.

As I was leaving there, I stopped again and visited with a DPS trooper from Perryton. I asked him if he had been a soldier assigned to the Pampa Army Airfield. "No," he replied, "I was too young." He'd graduated from high school in the spring of 1945 and joined up. After basic training, he and his mates were informed they would soon participate in the invasion of Japan, an event reckoned to be more costly in men and equipment than Overlord, the Normandy invasion. Before they could leave the states, Hiroshima and Nagasaki were bombed and Japan surrendered. Years later, he met Col. Paul Tibbets and thanked him for saving his life.

His story and 400 frames of film were the coda to my day.

Budget resolution a big joke

By CHARLES VAN EATON

After months of often bitter wrangling, Congress has finally passed a budget resolution which calls for total federal spending of $967.6 billion in fiscal year 1986. However, this does not mean that the matter of 1986 spending is sealed. A budget resolution and a final budget are not the same thing. In fact, over the past few years the two have come to bear little or no relationship to one another.

A budget resolution does nothing more than establish the overall parameters within which the sums finally passed by the various and sundry House and Senate authorization and appropriation committees are supposed to fit. The operative word in this context is "supposed" because there is no hard and fast rule - no penalty system - which compels the old and entrenched authorization and appropriation process to fall in line with the relatively new budget resolution mechanism.

In a recent OP-ED piece in the New York Times, Lance Simmens, a professional staff member of the Senate Budget Committee, praised the current budget process by arguing that by pointing congressional energies toward one total budget figure, "the process becomes the focal point for action and effectively supplants the old-fashioned authorization and appropriations process." But he added that "Congressional committees can, if they so choose, ignore its (the budget resolution's) guidelines." Nevertheless, he concluded, the new budget process with its creation of a final budget resolution "has served and will continue to serve a useful purpose, if only by educating us to the magnitude of our (deficit) problems."

I think Mr. Simmens is blowing smoke. The Senate Budget Committee which employs him is itself a product of the 1974 Budget Control and Impoundment Act which established the very budget process he extols. Naturally he likes it - what else could he say? But what does the record show? Has the budget resolution process produced greater control over federal spending?

There is absolutely no evidence that federal spending has been controlled by the current budget resolution system. The general rule over the past four years has been for the authorization and appropriation committees to begin by authorizing and appropriating the sums specified in the budget resolution and then, when the funds have been spent by the various agencies and departments, returning to fill in the fiscal gap by granting additional funds through supplemental appropriations. Thus, without exception, total federal outlays have ended up being far greater each year than what Mr. Simmens' much-praised budget resolution would indicate.

Economists William Orzechowski and Cesar Conda recently released a study showing how close Congressional appropriations and actual federal outlays have come to matching the spending levels specified by Congressional budget resolutions since 1980. For starters, they show, federal spending has more than tripled since passage of the 1974 Budget Control Act. More specifically, Congress has outspent its own budget resolutions under this Act by an average of $28 billion each year over the past four years. Even at this moment, as fiscal year 1985 comes toward an end, actual federal outlays are running about $10 billion over what was proposed in the fiscal year 1985 budget resolution. Add to this the fact that President Reagan currently faces a supplemental appropriations bill for $13 billion. If he refuses to veto this bill (and he's in a very real corner with little room for maneuver on this issue since aid for the "Contras" has been attached to this bill) actual fiscal year 1985 spending will end up exceeding the relevant budget resolution by at least $23 billion.

Every year since he's been in office, Mr.

Reagan has offered Congress a budget which calls for annual current and out-year reductions in the growth rate of federal spending. On the surface, therefore, it would appear that real movement for spending control has been underway. After all, under former President Carter, federal spending increased at an inflation-adjusted rate of 17.5 percent a year. Yet the record shows that federal spending has maintained the same pace in inflation-adjusted terms under Ronald Reagan even while Mr. Reagan's spending requests and Congress's budget resolutions have called for a sustained deceleration in federal spending. Clearly the system has changed nothing.

Yet there is one thing which can be said for the national joke known as the "budget resolution process." Even if it hasn't done a thing to bring federal spending under control it has at least opened the system to public view and has allowed everyone to see who really cares about cutting federal spending and who is only interested in using the federal budget as a vehicle for political rhetoric. On the record it has become painfully clear that it's not just Tip O'Neil who talks budget discipline while practicing fiscal irresponsibility. President Reagan is in the same camp.

He has spent four years presenting a budget and then walking away from it. He has refused to fight for it in the day to day battle which goes on in the authorization and appropriation committees where spending is actually determined. And he has refused to use his veto power. Sorry to say, he is part of the reason why this year's budget resolution will not be worth the paper it's written on. Now he tells us that he's going to travel the country to rally support for budget discipline. I'm convinced that the nation would be better served if he stayed in his office and tended to his primary business which is to keep spending within the limits established by his own budget proposal.

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the covering commandment.

Opinion

Public not buying protectionist laws

We are indebted to syndicated columnists Jack Germond and Jules Witcover for one of their patented analyses of last year's Democratic presidential primaries.

In a recent column, they analyzed the performances of Walter Mondale and Gary Hart in states where foreign trade was a threat to failing domestic industries, and in states where foreign trade was a key element of the economy.

In short, Mondale did well in states, especially the industrial Northeast, where his support of protectionist legislation such as the domestic content requirement for cars, coincided with industries that were losing ground to foreign imports.

Mondale did less well, and Gary Hart much better, in states dependent on a vigorous foreign trade and fearful that protectionism would trigger foreign retaliation, states in the West like California and Oregon, for example.

Germond and Witcover issue a warning to Democrats that, while protectionist legislation might continue to appeal to some elements of the old Democratic coalition, they ignore at their own peril changing economic and political realities in the country.

While we are not especially interested in the fortunes of the Democratic Party, it takes no special insight to recognize that Mondale's narrow appeal to selected interest groups was a monumental failure.

In the area of protectionism, however, it is a timely point to reiterate, since protectionist sentiment has been at something of a fever pitch in the nation's capital in recent months.

The latest domestic manufacturing industry to go begging to Washington for protection is the American shoe industry, which last year claimed only 29 percent of the U.S. shoe market.

The U.S. International Trade Commission has recommended stiff new tariffs on imported shoes. Domestic shoe manufacturers are arguing for actual limits on the number of foreign-made shoes allowed into the country.

Either system would add considerable to the costs of both foreign and domestic shoes for the consumer, and could trigger protectionist retaliation by shoe-exporting nations.

In the incestuous world of Washington politics, the lobbyists and bureaucrats and politicians—Democrats and Republicans—may well persuade themselves that writing protectionist legislation for the shoe, or the textile, or the automobile industry adds up to sound public policy and electoral victories.

But, as Germond and Witcover only barely suggest, beyond the Potomac, more and more people are acknowledging the long-range and wider costs of such protectionism, both in higher prices of consumer products and in the rippling effects of trade wars on the economy as a whole.

Nobody is created equal

The niftiest fashion for women in a long time is the shirt-b blouse with a bow tie. I'm told it was designed for women in men's jobs to minimize the inevitable "difference."

And I am told that women in men's jobs are now reverting - giving up any vestige of masculinity - trading business suits for linen and silk, ruffles and dresses.

One woman executive says, "You have to have risen through the ranks all the way to the executive suite before shedding the protective armor of suits."

The United States Department of Labor reports 33 percent of executives, administrators and managers are women; up from 21 percent just a decade ago.

Is "equality" for women about to be realized? Never.

Not all men are created equal. Not all women either.

Sally Ride, our nation's first woman in space, is convinced that "women have adapted." But she acknowledged that only two of 13 astronaut candidates are women.

Former United States Ambassador to the United Nations, Jeane Kirkpatrick, says, "Sexism is alive and it is bipartisan."

She remembers that men at the U.N., with lesser academic credentials than hers, were addressed as "Doctor" or "Professor." She was addressed as Mrs. Kirkpatrick.

A woman doctor recently related to the Journal of the American Medical Association her experience. "I know now that I am not equal to my male colleagues."

She was 35, accomplished, respected, happily married - but - her 6 1/2-year-old gentle, vulnerable, sensitive son developed a stutter; a stammer.

A speech pathologist's prescription was for the mother to alter her schedule to spend more time with the child.

Without a moment's hesitation, she did. She modified her work load, curtailed her teaching and publishing activities, eliminated most social and athletic activities - to spend more time with her children.

She says, "I am as good a physician as my male colleagues and better than many. However, I will not be allowed to prove that because first I am a mother and a wife - and then I am a physician."

So - equal? No.

There is what Jeane Kirkpatrick calls "a double-bind." A woman who seems strong is called "tough." If she does not seem strong, she is labeled "not tough enough."

She says, "A woman's best bet is to avoid getting and staying angry - avoid wasting energy on rage and paranoia - and hang in there until she can prove her competence."

Today in History

Today is Friday, Aug. 23, the 235th day of 1985. There are 130 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

In the early morning hours of Aug. 23, 1927, Italian-born anarchists Nicola Sacco and Bartolomeo Vanzetti were executed in Boston for the murders of two men during a 1920 payroll robbery. The case had drawn widespread controversy, with many people convinced that Sacco and Vanzetti had been convicted for their political beliefs.

On this date:

Ten years ago: Former Greek President George Papadopoulos and two officers who helped him engineer the 1967 military coup were sentenced to death by a special court. The sentences were later commuted.

Five years ago: In a major concession, the Polish government reversed itself, saying it would negotiate directly with the chosen representatives of striking workers.

The Marcos' home away from home

By Don Graff

Should the Philippines blow - and even in Washington they are reluctantly coming to think that it may come to that - the country's presidential couple should have no difficulty settling in at a suitable address in exile.

A good bet would be 13 East 66th Street, New York, NY 10021.

Imelda Marcos, the sleek and scheming wife of President Ferdinand Marcos, owns the six-story town house there, according to an impeachment motion against her husband in the Philippine National Assembly.

The motion charged Marcos with taking unconstitutional advantage of his office and powers to enrich himself, his family and close associates at the expense of the Philippine people. It failed to pass, to no one's surprise since Marcos's ruling New Society Movement has a 2-to-1 hammerlock on the 183-member assembly. But it was a shrewd move by the opposition, focusing public attention on the corruption that pervades his 20-year-old regime and is feeding a rapidly expanding communist rebellion.

Marcos himself, refusing to relax political restraints or clean up his own house, is widely regarded as the rebellion's greatest asset - not only by the domestic political opposition and his increasingly alarmed mentors in Washington, but by the rebels themselves, the Maoist-inspired New People's Army. As a high-profile target, he could not be easily replaced should he be removed or die. (Marcos suffers from an undefined ailment, believed to be kidney disease.)

His regime is fast losing all public credibility. It is openly looting the economy and is apparently incapable of responding to the spreading guerrilla war except by military repression, which only drives more of the back-country population into the rebel ranks.

Human rights abuses have drawn complaint from the American Bar Association, not particularly noted as a champion of liberal causes at home or abroad. But the ABA has protested the systematic disappearance and killing of Philippine attorneys courageous enough to take the cases of Marcos's political opponents.

The administration, concerned about big U.S. bases at Subic Bay and Clark Air Force Base, if nothing else, and American business interests, with $1 billion of Philippine investments at stake, have been exercising their influence on behalf of reforms quietly but ever more urgently.

To no apparent effect as yet on Marcos. But that doesn't mean some sort of message isn't getting through.

The house on 66th Street isn't the only place First Lady Imelda has to call her own. The impeachment papers also credited her with several large office buildings in Manhattan, a mansion in London and an estate in Italy.

Nor is she the only one close to the president to be dabbling in foreign investments. Several Cabinet members, the head of the national airline and a number of businessmen, longtime beneficiaries of Marcos' "crony capitalism," are reported to be doing very well.

Meanwhile, the looted Philippine economy is virtually bankrupt, another basket case for the anything but painless remedies of the International Monetary Fund.

CDC: seat belt laws likely saving lives

ATLANTA (AP) — Health and safety researchers say mandatory seat belt laws have been introduced in 47 states and passed in 14, but it's uncertain how many meet the government's criteria for canceling air bag requirements.

Last year, the U.S. Department of Transportation said it may scrap the requirement that all new cars are to be equipped with automatic passenger protection systems, such as automatic seat belts or air bags, by 1989 if before then states representing two-thirds of the U.S. population adopt seat belt laws meeting certain requirements.

Those requirements include mandatory seat belt use for front-seat occupants and a minimum $25 fine for violators.

Fourteen states have now passed seat belt laws — New Jersey, New York, Connecticut, Hawaii, Illinois, Indiana, Louisiana, Michigan, Missouri, Nebraska, New Mexico, North Carolina, Oklahoma and Texas — but "it's difficult to say whether any of the laws passed to date actually meet the minimum DOT requirements," Centers for Disease Control researcher Ken Williams said Thursday.

For instance, many of those states have set their fines at $20 — not the department's minimum of $25, he said.

Although the CDC has taken no official position, some health and safety researchers with the agency have suggested publicly that states pass seat belt laws that do not meet the department requirement so that the requirement for an automatic restraint system for all new cars will take effect as scheduled in 1989.

The states whose seat belt laws do not meet department standards have likely made "a very conscious decision" along those lines, Williams said.

The CDC said Thursday that every state but Idaho, Nevada and Kentucky either enacted or introduced legislation this year requiring at least some auto passengers to use seat belts.

All 50 states now have laws requiring some sort of restraint for children and infants riding in automobiles, the CDC said.

"Current data suggest that mandatory-use legislation has increased seat belt use rates and decreased highway fatality rates," the CDC said in its Morbidity and Mortality Weekly Report.

In New York, where seat belt use became mandatory on Jan. 1, the number of drivers buckling up increased from 16 percent before the law took effect to 57 percent four months after, the CDC reported.

In 1983, the latest year for which statistics are available, nearly 30,000 Americans were killed in auto wrecks, the CDC said. Just 484, or 2 percent, were wearing seat belts.

Reagan, saying he's 'feeling fine,' makes plug for GOP

LOS ANGELES (AP) — President Reagan has used his first major appearance since cancer surgery to bounce back into partisan form, decrying the Democratic party as one that "just keeps going in circles."

Before retreating again to his mountaintop ranch to finish his three-week vacation, Reagan gave an upbeat speech Thursday night to about 1,000 supporters of the California Republican Party at a $1,000-a-plate fund-raiser.

"I am feeling fine and when we get back to Washington it's going to be full steam ahead," the president told the crowd.

It was the president's only major public appearance of his California stay, and the first time he has addressed such a large group outside the White House since physicians removed a two-foot section of his colon on July 13.

Reagan said the Republican Party has brought about a change in America's political landscape.

"Realignment is real," Reagan said. "What the American people see is that the other party just keeps going in circles. Of course, that's what happens if every time there is a decision to make, you keep leaning to the left."

Reagan also made a pitch for his Strategic Defense Initiative of space-based missile defense systems, known as "Star Wars," saying the proposal would "permit us to shift our focus to saving lives, rather than avenging them."

"We seek an anti-nuclear shield, using technology to make us safer," the president said. "Our success will be measured by the number of people we can save, not destroy."

Reagan said that "some self-declared experts and some of those blame-America-first crowd" have charged that his proposal is unfeasible and a waste of money. But he drew applause from the crowd by asking, "Well, if that's true, why are the Soviets so upset about it? As a matter of fact, why are they investing so many rubles of their own in the same technologies?"

Guests at the head table in the Century Plaza Hotel included such show business notables as "Rambo" star Sylvester Stallone; Roy Rogers and his wife, Dale Evans; and Fred MacMurray and his wife, June Haver.

In the speech, Reagan made a plea to Republicans in his home state to send a GOP senator to Washington next year and end the career of Senate Democratic Whip Alan Cranston.

The president took note that several Republicans have expressed interest in the seat, and reminded them of his own so-called "11th Commandment" — "Thou shalt not speak ill of another Republican."

"Have a spirited primary, but don't campaign against each other," the president said. "Campaign against the incumbent but stand united behind our party's choice."

The president's remarks were his first political appeal since his old friend, Sen. Paul Laxalt, R-Nev., announced that he will not seek reelection.

IRANIAN PATROL — Iranian soldiers using small boats with outboard motors patrol the Howeizeh marshes of Southern Iraq, some 75 miles north of Iraq's port city of Basra recently. The Iranians have recently changed their battlefield tactics, replacing massive offensives involving thousands of troops in favor of lighting thrusts into Iraq by relatively small units. The Iranians claim that in the last series of such thrusts they occupied an area of nearly 100 square miles and killed more than 100 Iraq troops. (AP Laserphoto)

Austin trading nuke shares

AUSTIN (AP) — Austin is proposing to trade its share of the South Texas Nuclear Project to the Houston Lighting & Power Co. for a comparable share of other power sources, including part of a lignite-fueled plant planned in East Texas, the Austin American-Statesman said today.

If a trade were made, Austin would accept the $120 million being offered as its share to settle a suit against the former builder of the nuclear project, said sources close to the negotiations.

Austin has been holding out in accepting the settlement proposal, partly because city officials have wanted the settlement to include getting Austin out of the project.

It has not been indicated whether the Houston utility company is taking the trade proposal seriously, the American-Statesman said.

But if the Houston utility agreed to a trade, Austin also would likely agree to stay out of an expected battle before the Texas Public Utility Commission over settlement of the suit.

In addition, the city could be expected to drop a separate suit against Houston Lighting & Power, managing partner of the nuclear project, the story said.

One power source reportedly being considered by Austin is the Malakoff project, a lignite-fired power plant proposed

Mattox asks federal probe into San Antonio police

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Attorney General Jim Mattox has asked the U.S. Justice Department to investigate the San Antonio police department.

In a letter to the Texas branch of the American Civil Liberties Union, Mattox said he asked that the probe focus on three areas.

First, Mattox asked for an investigation into allegations the police department failed to notify the State Department of Human Resources of a suspected case of child abuse. Such reporting is required by law.

Second, the attorney general said he asked for a probe into a decision by Police Chief Charles Rodriguez not to dismiss a police officer accused of having a homosexual relationship with a 15-year-old boy.

And third, Mattox asked for an inquiry into the San Antonio Police Officers Association's practice of sending letters threatening legal action to citizens who persist in complaints against police officers.

Mattox sent the letter to the Texas ACLU's legal director James Harrington. The organization had asked Mattox to handle such an investigation.

But Wednesday, Mattox said his agency does not have the resources to do so.

"The scope of the investigation would exhaust the resources of my office," he said in the letter to Harrington. "I am nonetheless very concerned."

The attorney general's request was sent to the criminal section of the Department of Justice's civil rights division in Washington.

Meanwhile, the victim of the alleged sexual abuse, now 19, told a San Antonio newspaper he had a continuing homosexual relationship with a police officer for two years.

He told The San Antonio Express-News he became a ward of the officer in 1981.

Officers find body on charred briquettes

THREE RIVERS, Texas (AP) — An autopsy has been ordered on the body of an unidentified man found lying on a bed of flaming barbecue briquettes, authorities said.

A motorist on the way to work noticed the flames early Thursday and called the Live Oak County sheriff's office.

When authorities arrived at the scene eight miles north of Three Rivers, they tried to douse the flames with a fire extinguisher and then with water.

"He was laying on the briquettes like a pillow" in a bar ditch, Sheriff Larry Busby said.

The victim "had been placed in a bar ditch and his head, neck and shoulders had been laid on briquettes. He had been doused with some kind of flammable liquid and set on fire," Busby said.

"We are reasonably sure he was either unconscious or dead when the fire was set," the sheriff said.

No identification was found on the victim, who was about 5-10 and about 30 years old, Busby said.

The fire had burned an hour or two before officers arrived.

Ousted chancellor says he's scapegoat

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Demoted Alamo Community College District chancellor Byron McClenney says he is surprised he lasted as long as he did in his job.

McClenney was forced out of his job Tuesday by the district's board. He was reassigned to head up fund-raising for the district's foundation.

His ouster came in the wake of controversy over the appointment of a new president for St. Philip's College. Black leaders had objected to the selection of Stephen Mitchell, a white, to head the school. The college traditionally has had a black president.

"I took the heat," McClenney said Wednesday.

McClenney said when he took command of the district in 1981, he figured his chances for "surviving for long were slim to none. I never guessed I would be chancellor for four years."

Woman protects stray cats

NEW YORK (AP) — Edith Katz is in the cat business. Well, sort of. She's a one-woman rescue squad and cat broker for hundreds of people.

"Want a kitten? Call Edie, she'll get you one. Suddenly become allergic to your Siamese? Call Edie. She'll find someone who wants a Siamese. Want a jet black cat? Don't call Edie. She won't help you unless she knows you or you come with pretty good references."

"People use jet black cats in some kind of worship services, so I'm always suspicious when someone calls and says they want a jet black cat," says Mrs. Katz. Edie to her friends. "I ask them for their name and number and call them back."

As well as brokering cats, Edie feeds strays, neuters them when she can, takes obviously pregnant female strays into her home — where seven cats she just couldn't give away reside — so she can more easily tame and feed the kittens to give away.

She pays the expenses out of her own pocket, but won't say how much it costs.

"You can't count the cost of love," says the 56-year-old mother of two children and grandmother of two.

It all started almost eight years ago when she moved from Brooklyn into a new apartment complex in Manhattan, close to the Hudson River. The land all around her was vacant, awaiting development, and there was quite a cat population.

One day Edie saw a sign announcing poison was going down to get "super rat."

"It was up to me to keep those cats' bellies full, so they wouldn't eat the poison," she says. "Each night I put more food down and more food disappeared."

"One day I counted 53 cats and that's when I decided the entire West Side should be spayed."

She started catching the females and taking them to a low-cost pet care center to have them neutered.

As the neighborhood was developed, she moved the feeding station from one open lot to another. Now she's down to feeding two tom cats she can't catch on the school parking lot next door to her apartment.

Gentle cat becomes a celebrity

By JACK KEEVER
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN (AP) — Orlando the cat, who once must have wondered where his next meal was coming from, has parlayed his looks and a gentle disposition into celebrity status.

A former stray without identification, the black-and-white cat has become an advertising symbol for a women's specialty clothing store. His face and form appear in the local newspaper, and on T-shirts and television.

His adoring owners credit him with rising sales and talk of adding a "voice" to Orlando when he does radio, and possibly more television, this fall.

Often his message is simple: "When in doubt, groom."

The story of how Orlando became the spokesman for St. Germain began when a skinny cat with no ID peered around the corner of a backyard deck and watched four family cats — Mildred, Mo, Tyrone and Mr. Yellow — bend over their dinner dishes.

The hungry visitor was not encouraged to stay, but did, and insisted on his share of the food, attention and indoor privileges. He would stand on his back feet and paw the glass doors to the deck until he was admitted. It was an irresistible stunt.

Five cats did seem a bit much, however, and the visitor's lean and hungry frame was so unattractive that he had to submit at first to the name of Ugo, for "ugly." Consequently, when the owner of St. Germain, Mary Gayle Stromberger, expressed interest in acquiring a shop cat, the deal was done. The name Orlando, from Shakespeare's play "As You Like It," was the first step in a new image.

He was ensconced at St. Germain, in a small shopping center, and within days had the run of the store. Customers writing checks at the front counter often had to "write-around" Orlando, who liked to recline there. He also picked out a sweater to sleep on, Ms. Stromberger said, and it was viewed as his sweater "until one day a woman came in, grabbed it up, tried it on and bought it."

"It was not easy to say, 'This is Orlando's sweater. You can't have it,'" she recalled in an interview.

Orlando made friends on his excursions into the shopping center, and was often sighted at a delicatessen, a travel agency, watching women having their hair done at Jezebel's and gazing at expensive crystal at Napoleon's antique store.

A woman at the deli treated him to a bowl of tuna juice daily, and Orlando put on so much weight that the woman was urged to stop. Later she said she never had the heart to tell him no, and it was not until the delicatessen changed hands that Orlando trimmed down to 17 pounds.

Sunday baths were added to Orlando's schedule when St. Germain manager Clara Heironimus began taking him home on the weekend.

After a few weeks and a few pounds, with a sleek coat, his good looks emerged.

Then in April, with the help of advertising man Larry McGinty, a former speechwriter in Mark White's 1982 gubernatorial campaign, Orlando began to develop as a symbol of women's fashion.

McGinty recalled that Ms. Stromberger and co-owner Shelley Dumas said "they had a wonderful cat and wanted something catchy, that they hadn't been able to establish any intrigue in the store."

Sketches of Orlando by artist Cassandra James, the store's name and messages appeared in the newspaper, and were flashed on the screen in TV spots. To wit: "St. Germain invites you to meet Orlando the cat, philosopher of fashion," and "Of life, two things only can I know: I am a cat... and you really do need that new dress."

"Orlando is as eye-catching as a full-page advertisement and is the heart of the campaign," McGinty said.

A first edition of 76 Orlando T-shirts sold out at $15 each, and a more expensive Orlando sweater of Angora wool already has orders even though the design is still in the works.

It was thought that Orlando would "autograph" the T-shirts with a paw blackened by ink but he kept licking off the ink, and a rubber stamp of his paw had to be made to get a "signature."

Friends from the shopping center and others gathered recently for his birthday party, and Orlando was presented with catnip roses and Catviar.

"Our sales have increased considerably since Orlando," said Ms. Stromberger. "I think that he has really given the store a personality. He's just wonderful, that's all."

Union collects signatures to recall mayor

BEAUMONT, Texas (AP) — A nursing home workers union handed city officials signed petitions to recall Mayor Bill Neild after he refused to intervene in an 8-week-old strike involving the group.

Service Employees International Union Local 708 said Wednesday it had collected more than 2,400 signatures on the petitions, more than enough to force a mayoral recall election.

"He's the mayor and he should show concern for the citizens of Beaumont," said Doris Smith, a member of the workers group that began the petition drive last Friday.

The striking workers claim Neild has not been responsive to the needs of the city's working people and has ignored their pleas to settle a strike against the Schlesinger Geriatric Center.

Bengals meet Lions in exhibition game tonight

By The Associated Press

Coaches Sam Wyche of the Cincinnati Bengals and Darryl Rogers of the Detroit Lions carried a realistic approach into their pre-season National Football League meeting. They treated tonight's game as an exhibition.

The Bengals had only six offensive linemen ready for the Lions. Detroit also had several hobbling blockers.

"I'd rather not play some of these people, if I can help it," Wyche said. "It's important that they be healthy for the start of the regular season."

So the Bengals were without All-Pro tackle Anthony Munoz (sore shoulder), and three knee cases — center Dave Rimington, guard Gary Smith, and tackle Bruce Reimers.

"We're going to do all we can to stay healthy," Wyche added. "We'll punt on first down if we have to."

Missing for the Lions were guard Don Greco and tackle Keith Dorney.

The Lions sought their first victory, following a 10-10 tie with Buffalo and last week's 28-3 defeat to Seattle. The Bengals lost their opener 35-27 to Kansas City, then beat the Jets 24-20 last week.

Running back Wilbert Montgomery, who reported to camp Thursday after being acquired from Philadelphia, was not expected to play.

In other NFL pre-season games tonight, New England is at Washington, Pittsburgh travels to St. Louis, and the Los Angeles Rams play the Eagles in Columbus, Ohio.

On Saturday, it's San Diego at San Francisco, Cleveland at Buffalo, Atlanta vs. Green Bay at Milwaukee, Indianapolis at Denver, the Jets at the New York Giants, Tampa Bay at New Orleans, Seattle at Minnesota, Kansas City at Houston, and Miami at the Los Angeles Raiders. Chicago visits Dallas on Monday night.

The Rams were without star running back Eric Dickerson, while Philadelphia was minus All-Pro receiver Mike Quick for a game that was moved to Ohio State because the Philadelphia Phillies have a baseball game in Veterans Stadium.

Dickerson, who ran for an NFL record 2,105 yards last season, is holding out for a contract extension. Barry Redden has 203 yards in the Rams' two exhibition victories as Dickerson's replacement.

In team moves on Thursday, the Dolphins signed veteran quarterback Joe Pisarcik. With regular QB Dan Marino and third-stringer Jim Jensen holding out, Miami's only quarterback with NFL experience has been Don Strock.

Detroit signed cornerback Clarence Chapman and waived Al Latimer, also a cornerback, and tight end Burt Muehling. Indianapolis waived nose tackle Jim Merritts and claimed another nose tackle, Dallas Cameron.

The Jets signed Sid Abramowitz and Steve August, both offensive tackles, while the Super Bowl champion 49ers waived DT Donald Chumley and selected running back Roosevelt Snipes in a special NFL supplemental draft.

Rawley hurls four-hitter as Phils blank Dodgers

By WILLIAM R. BARNARD
AP Sports Writer

Two things bothered Shane Rawley about his six-year stay as an American League pitcher — not getting to bat and not getting to finish what he started.

Now that he's in the National League, he's getting to do both.

Rawley pitched a four-hitter and went 2-for-3, including his first career double, as the Philadelphia Phillies defeated Los Angeles 2-0 Thursday, one night after losing to the Dodgers 15-6.

"It means a lot to a pitcher to go nine strong innings," said Rawley, 10-6, after pitching his fourth complete game of the season and winning his fifth straight decision.

In his last six starts, he has pitched 49 of a possible 54 innings. In his six AL seasons, he completed only 16 of 65 starts.

"A pitcher has to show people that he can go eight or nine strong innings, show that he is in control and strong," said Rawley, who pitched his third career shutout and first since he blanked Minnesota for the New York Yankees on July 17, 1983.

In other NL games, it was San Diego 3, Montreal 0; New York 7, San Francisco 0; Pittsburgh 5, Cincinnati 1; Chicago 3, Atlanta 2; and St. Louis 2, Houston 1.

Mets 7, Giants 0

Terry Leach, pressed into a rare start just 25 minutes before game time, responded with a three-hitter for New York against San Francisco.

The start was only the fourth of Leach's career, which has been spent mainly as a reliever. He also had a 10-inning one-hitter in 1982 and is 3-0 as a starter.

"They raced in and said, 'Hey, Terry, we're sorry to do this to you, but Sid isn't feeling good so you're going to pitch,'" Leach said of his late starting call, which came when scheduled pitcher Sid Fernandez suffered dizzy spells before the game.

Cardinals 2, Astros 1

Houston took a 1-0 lead and Joe Niekro took a four-hitter into the ninth inning, but St. Louis rallied for two runs with the help of two walks, an error and a balk to stay one-half game behind first-place New York in the East.

Niekro had retired 13 straight batters going into the ninth, but Tommy Herr opened the inning by reaching first on an error by first baseman Glenn Davis. With Jack Clark at bat, Niekro was replaced by reliever Dave Smith.

Physicals scheduled Aug. 29

Athletes of all sports — seventh grade through high school — needing physical examinations are to report at 7 p.m. Thursday, Aug. 29 to the high school athletic building.

Under a new UIL rule, all seventh and ninth graders must have a physical exam prior to playing any sport.

Athletes may call their respective coaches if they have any questions concerning the physicals.

Harvesters impressive

Head Coach John Kendall felt pleased with the overall team effort of the Pampa Harvesters in a scrimmage Thursday night against Boys Ranch.

"We played well as a team and I thought our attitude was super," said Kendall, who starts his fourth year as Harvester head coach. "Our execution and timing on offense was good and our defense made a lot of gang tackling."

There was no kickoffs or punts in the scrimmage as each team alternately ran a series of ten plays.

"We have a lot to learn about techniques, but basically I felt real good about the scrimmage. I saw a lot of enthusiasm out there," Kendall said. "Our passing game was a lot better and we made some tremendous catches."

The Harvesters host Amarillo Tascosa in a final scrimmage next Friday. That scrimmage is set to begin at 5:30 p.m.

"I was pleased with everybody's effort," Kendall said. "Everyone played hard."

A film of the scrimmage will be evaluated and used as a learning device to prepare for the Tascosa scrimmage, Kendall said.

Pampa kicks off the season Sept. 6 against Monahans at Harvester Stadium.

A "Meet the Harvesters" night is scheduled for 6 p.m. tonight at Harvester Stadium. The general public is invited to come out and take pictures of the players.

Watson, Maltbie share World Series golf lead

By RUSTY MILLER
AP Sports Writer

AKRON, Ohio (AP) — Denis Watson had sweet memories of the last time he played golf at Firestone Country Club. Roger Maltbie had only nightmares.

Yet each shot rounds of 5-under-par 65 Thursday to share the first-round lead on a day of sub-par scoring at the NEC World Series of Golf.

A total of 20 players bettered par, seven more than the tournament's previous record for one day.

Watson, a 29-year-old native of South Africa, won last year's World Series, thanks in large part to a record 8-under 62 in the second round.

Maltbie, on the other hand, missed the cut in his last appearance at Firestone, in the 1975 PGA Championship.

Asked if the course played easier than he remembered, Maltbie laughed, "The course played a lot easier today than I remember it. Now when I played it back in '75, I was a rookie and I was paired with Jack Nicklaus for the first two days. At that time, it was the toughest course I had ever seen."

"The grass in the rough seemed to be this high" — he held his hand waist-high — "the golf ball looked like a basketball and the hole looked like a thimble."

"I shot something like a 153. Just awful. All I wanted to do was to hide and get out of his way."

One shot back of the co-leaders, at 4-under 66, was Calvin Peete. Another stroke back were Gordon Brand Jr., Woody Blackburn, Tom Kite, Bob Eastwood and George Archer.

Bunched at 2-under 68, three shots off the pace, were Fuzzy Zoeller, Hal Sutton, Scott Simpson, Dan Forsman and reigning PGA champ Hubert Green.

Sandies whip Pampa girls

The Pampa High volleyball team suffered its second straight setback of the season, losing to Amarillo High, 15-2, 15-3, Thursday night in the Sandies' gym.

AHS is now 2-0 for the season while Pampa dropped to 0-2.

The Lady Harvesters are entered in a tournament at Lubbock today and Saturday.

Pampa Coach Phil Hall said Irene Perez and Amy Voyles had consistent performances against the Sandies.

The Lady Harvesters aren't scheduled to play their first game at home until Sept. 10 when Amarillo High comes to town.

New Braunfels falls in Ruth World Series

FREDERICK, Md. (AP) — Mike Richardson's double in the seventh inning scored the winning run for San Gabriel Valley, Calif. as it edged past New Braunfels, Texas 6-5 Thursday in the Babe Ruth World Series for 16 to 18-year-olds.

Kicking off 66th season

When the NFL comes back to basics

NEW YORK (NEA) — There is almost a feeling of euphoria as the 28 franchises of the National Football League contemplate the opening of the 66th season.

Commissioner Pete Rozelle, recently inducted into the Pro Football Hall of Fame, is spending less time than ever in courtrooms.

The NFL is coming off the second best attendance mark in its history. A total of 13.4 million fans attended stadiums during the regular 16-game season in 1984. And indications are that this season the NFL will surpass the record of 13.6 million set in 1981.

All the NFL teams even threaten to make money this year. Owners have successfully held the line against outlandishly inflated salaries for first-round draft choices. This is due less to their perspicacity than the fact that the United States Football League has gone into limbo until the fall of 1986. And it may never come back, eliminating the competition for talent.

Also, peace and relative contentment reign on the labor front. The bargaining agreement between the owners and the NFL Players Association remains in force until August 1987. Currently, the primary NFL concern is to reverse the decline last season in television ratings, which found NBC dropping off 4 percent, ABC, 6 percent, and CBS, a whopping 14 percent.

ABC will try to counter that slippage on "Monday Night Football" with its troika of Hall of Fame personalities: Joe Willie Namath is joining Frank Gifford and O.J. Simpson in the TV booth.

To improve NFL telecasts, efforts have been made to reduce the number of interruptions of play during football games and to shorten the delays.

A sure way of retrieving TV viewer interest is in good game match-ups, for all three networks. Parity is the order of the day — you know, Pete Rozelle's old dictum, "On any given Sunday...."

Although the San Francisco 49ers dominated the league last year by winning the most games ever — 18, losing only once — no one is proclaiming the arrival of a dynasty.

No team has won consecutive Super Bowls since Pittsburgh in 1979-80.

A westward swing of power has been evident with the 49ers and the Los Angeles Raiders winning four of the last five NFL championships, sandwiched around Washington's triumph in SB XVII.

The 1985 regular schedule — which starts on Sept. 8 and ends with a Monday night intra-Los Angeles game between the Raiders and Rams on Dec. 23 — finds only four new head coaches on the job. Rod Dowhower is at Indianapolis, Darryl Rogers is at Detroit, Leeman Bennett is at Tampa Bay, and Bud Grant renews his career in Minnesota. Elsewhere, Raymond Berry of New England and Marty Schottenheimer of Cleveland are starting their first full seasons on the job.

Two new NFL owners will sample the ecstasy of victory and (more often) the despair of defeat — Norman Braman in Philadelphia and Tom Benson in New Orleans.

Tactically, the key change in how the game on the field will be played results from the consciously economic decision of the owners to pare their rosters back to 45 men (from 49 last season).

This will limit the situation substitution made popular by the defending world champions, the 49ers, who changed lineups in drives on almost every play. And some teams won't exercise the luxury of carrying more than two quarterbacks.

The major NFL rules change concerns pass coverage: If both the defender and the receiver are going for the ball and incidental contact occurs, the pass interference flag won't be dropped. Look for the smart old cornerbacks to use this wedge to get in a couple of extra intimidating licks.

The continuing debate over whether instant TV replays should be used to resolve controversial calls by officials is closer to resolution, with a study of its use in key nationally televised pre-season games. Also, in an attempt to counter the effect of crowd noise on signal-calling in some of the more raucous stadiums, electronic transmitters and receivers were tested in the helmets of some quarterbacks and receivers during pre-season games.

This does not promise to be a big year for NFL records.

Walter Payton already has achieved his goal of breaking Jim Brown's all-time rushing record. Other milestones of 1984 — Eric Dickerson's seasonal ground-gaining mark of 2,105 yards, Dan Marino's 48 TD passes in one campaign and Art Monk's all-time high of 106 catches in a year — are unlikely to be passed.

The day Cobb hit No. 4, 191

By Howard Siner

NEW YORK (NEA) — It was Labor Day 1928. Tyros R. Cobb, 41, America's first millionaire baseball star, didn't hold a full-time job.

His legs ached and scarred, Cobb was toiling fitfully as a pinch hitter for the Philadelphia Athletics by the time Connie Mack's White Elephants performed in Washington on Monday, Sept. 3.

Their holiday double-header against the Senators was the start of a month-long, season-ending road trip for the Mackmen. A classic mix of raw youth and savvy veterans, the A's trailed the defending world champion New York Yankees by just 1 1/2 games in the sizzling American League race.

Hopes ran high among the Macks before the big twin bill in the nation's capital. With good reason. Their 66-year-old manager, The Tall Tactician, was beating his way toward a new dynasty after more than a decade.

That afternoon, Ty Cobb contributed one last hit.

Cobb's strong goodbye with Philadelphia — 134 games in 1927 (5 homers, 93 RBIs, .357 batting average) and 95 games in 1928 (1 homer, 40 RBIs, .323) — had deteriorated finally into a painful chore. Keen enough, his batting eye was a stark legacy of 22 fiery years on the Detroit Tigers. In this parting season, he found it difficult to leg his way to an infield hit; to beat out a bunt; to dash for an extra base; to steal.

No longer did old Cobb strike the fear of God into pitchers, catchers and infielders. The Georgia Peach, at last, bruised easier than his foes.

Which didn't mean Cobb had become soft minded.

To the contrary — it took miles of hard-heartedness for the middle-aged investment wiz (rich on purchases of General Motors and Coca-Cola stock) to guard baseball's No. 1 reputation. Neither joy nor money kept him on the baseball field. Until nearly the end, Cobb played out his string with Philadelphia at a furious pace. Mostly because he still had something to prove.

Actually, Cobb first had called it quits following the 1926 season — under, as it quickly turned out, the duress of a betting scandal.

He had been playing for Detroit since 1905 and had been managing the Tigers since 1921. With Cobb as a player-manager, the team posted a home total of 479-444, finishing, consecutively, sixth, third, second, third, fourth and sixth. Apparently, enough was enough. He had long accused Detroit's tight-fisted owner, Frank Navin, of defeatist policies. Cobb, 39, gave up his dream of playing in a fourth World Series while managing the winner. Thanking the fans, he said he still loved the game but felt bone-tired.

At that point, Cobb's deeds included: 2,804 games; 10,586 at bats; 3,902 hits; 2,086 runs; 112 home runs; 1,826 RBIs; 865 stolen bases; and 21 years of batting higher than .300. Personal statistics had lost their appeal. He wasn't chasing anybody. His unprecedented 12 batting crowns (and three 400 seasons) already guaranteed him immortal fame. Vowed Cobb: "I don't want to be one of those men who fade or have to be pushed out." He went home to Augusta, Ga.

In a few weeks, though, it became clear there was more to come. Former Tiger pitcher Dutch Leonard had accused Cobb and Cleveland's Tris Speaker of scheming to win bets by fixing a game in 1919, only weeks before what became known as the notorious Black Sox scandal. Cobb claimed it was a frame-up because he had dropped Leonard from the Detroit roster in 1925. But AL President Ban Johnson privately had forced Cobb and Speaker to resign.

After further investigation, though, the commissioner of baseball, Judge Kennesaw Mountain Landis, exonerated the two stars. Now Cobb, who didn't have any intention of retiring with a cloud over his name, thirsted for vindication. And baseball owners worried that Cobb, widely supported by the public, might take them to court. Instead, he allowed long-time friend Cornelius McGillicuddy of Philadelphia to talk him in coming back as the highest-paid player in the game — with a $70,000-plus salary-and bonus deal. Thus, baseball's fiercest competitor wound up in the City of Brotherly Love.

1927 was a good year for Cobb, if not for the Philadelphia A's. At the age of 40, he collected 175 hits, including his 4,000th. He also stole another 22 bases. To the acclaim of baseball fans (particularly erstwhile hecklers in Philadelphia), Cobb finished fifth in the AL in batting, and third in stolen bases. Yet the rebuilding Mackmen — paced also by Al Simmons, Mickey Cochrane and Lefty Grove — climbed into second place only to finish 19 games behind the New York Yankees. It happened to be the year Sultan Babe Ruth swatted 60 home runs out of Murderer's Row.

Even so, Cobb smelled blood. He believed the Athletics, with his help, could go all the way the following season. And he thought their manager ("I revered Mr. Connie Mack") deserved to reach the top for the first time since dismantling his 1914 World Series powerhouse. So Cobb, despite the risk to his health and dignity, tried to put together one more big season.

He almost succeeded. Like their manager, seven players on the 1928 Athletics were bound for the Hall of Fame: Cobb, Simmons, Cochrane and Grove; plus young Jimmie Foxx, old Eddie Collins and newly arrived Tris Speaker.

Nobody could fault Cobb when Ruth, Gehrig & Co. threatened another runaway just three months into the season.

As Philadelphia's regular right fielder, Cobb, who batted second, started all but four of the first 86 games and hit safely in 17 of the A's first 18 games. His batting average topped .350 barely a month into the season.

He belted his only homer of the year (the 118th of his career) on May 16 in Philadelphia off Mel Harder of the Indians; the two-run shot cleared the right-field fence in Shibe Park and landed on 20th Street, helping the A's to a 15-2 win. But the Macks still trailed first-place New York, which increased its lead to 6 1/2 games by winning four of five in Philadelphia in late May.

Perhaps Cobb's finest moment of the year came on June 15 — he stole home for the 35th and last time, his spikes flashing safely under the tag of Cleveland catcher Luke Sewell.

On July 2, Cobb had his last four-hit game, banging a double and three singles while the Mackmen topped Boston, 9-2. They were on their way to a 25-8 month that made summer in the Bronx longer and hotter.

Sweat poured off Cobb, too. Time-worn heroics — he was also striking out, hitting into double plays, making errors, even falling down in the heat of games — left him exhausted. Eventually, Cobb was to describe his last season as "hellishly hard," admitting: "The legs wouldn't carry me around the garden with speed and timing. Old wounds ached constantly. I literally had to grit my teeth and force myself to run..."

As he had the year before, Cobb spent much of his free time on road trips flat on his back in hotel beds. He missed a few games after being hit in the wrist on July 18 while batting against the Tigers in Philadelphia. On July 27, Cobb scored his 2,244th (and final) run in Chicago; but he had to leave early because of a pitch that struck him in the right side of the chest.

Cobb never started another game or played in the field again.

Going into September, Cobb had found time enough to mull his new occupation — benchwarmer. Infrequently used, he was an unproductive pinch hitter. Mack, who had replaced Cobb in the outfield with 24-year old Mule Haas, was forced to turn more to his younger players to keep Philadelphia in the pennant race.

The A's were lumbering at the heels of the injury-riddled Yankees.

On Sept. 2, Washington helped, beating New York, 2-0, while Senator pitcher Firpo Marberry delighted a Sunday afternoon crowd by winning his own shutout with a two-run single.

Now it was Philadelphia's turn to invade Griffith Stadium.

Summer's last hurrah kicked off in Washington on Labor Day in a burst of Roaring '20s hoopla. Sirens howled, bells clanged and gongs boomed while 100 companies of firefighters marched up Pennsylvania Avenue before festive throngs. Threatening skies had given way to bright mid-day sunshine just in time for the parade. Later came the baby beauty contest on the Ellipse and the Mardi Gras pageant at Potomac Park.

Notably absent was President Coolidge. Gone fishing at Cedar Island Lodge in Wisconsin, Silent Cal was keeping mum during the Herbert Hoover-Al Smith presidential campaign. Key issue: enforcing Prohibition against beer thugs like Al Capone. Proud names of the day included Henry Ford, Thomas A. Edison, and Richard Byrd. Plus brand-new Olympic golden boy Johnny Weissmuller, just-retired boxing champ Gene Tunney — and Ty Cobb.

Twenty-five thousand fans, the biggest crowd of the year, jammed into the Georgia Avenue ballpark for the 1:30 p.m. opener to watch player-manager Bucky Harris lead the Senators, way back in the standings, against the A's.

"I prefer to cease active playing," said Cobb, "while there still may remain some base hits in my bat."

The starting lineups: for Philadelphia, Max Bishop, 2b; Ossie Orwoll, 1b; Mickey Cochrane, c; Al Simmons, lf; Jimmie Foxx, 3b; Bing Miller, rf; Mule Haas, cf; Joe Boley, ss; and Howard Ehmke, p. For Washington, Sammy West, cf; Sam Rice, rf; Goose Goslin, lf; Joe Judge, 1b; Ossie Bluege, 3b; Buddy Reeves, ss; Bucky Harris, 2b; Muddy Ruel, c; and Bump Hadley, p.

None of the boozing the high and mighty Yankees had faced in Washington greeted the Mackmen — like Nat rooters, Washington owner Clark Griffith, the Old Fox, was also favoring the Athletics to overtake New York. Good-natured cheers erupted when Hadley, the hard-firing Senator righty, began game 1 by walking Bishop and Orwoll. But Hadley immediately won back the crowd once and for all by fanning Cochrane, Simmons and Foxx.

In the bottom of the third, Harris of Washington singled to left for the first hit in the game; and he scored on Hadley's triple to right. Next inning the Griffs hiked their lead to 3-0: Singles by Goslin, Judge and Bluege loaded the bases; Ehmke, Philadelphia's righty underhand, walked Reeves to force in one Washington run and Judge scored on an infield out.

In the top of the fifth, West, his back to the plate, made a spectacular running catch in deep center to rob Miller of a triple; and Boley was left stranded after he singled with two outs for Philadelphia's first hit.

Three Senator runs in the seventh made the score 6-0 — following Hadley's walk and Rice's single, Goslin's two-out liner to right rolled under a gate for a ground-rule double that scored one run; then Judge's hot double down the third-base line drove in the final two Nat runs.

The A's, meanwhile, couldn't solve Hadley's blistering fastball and hopping curve. After Miller singled to short to open the ninth for Philadelphia and Haas flied out, Mack, exasperated, decided to pinch hit for Boley. Up to home plate walked Ty Cobb.

With a hands-apart choke grip, Cobb, a lefty hitter, long since had perfected a balanced, upright batting stance, keeping his elbows away from his body and slightly bending from his waist up. Trying to concentrate, he would stand motionless in the batter's box, focusing on the ball. And glaring at the pitcher.

Facing Hadley, Cobb swung and blasted what was described as a "soulful two-bagger" to left field.

That was No. 4,191 — his last big-league hit.

Yet Cobb had one trick left to pull on the basepaths. With two outs and Miller still on third, Cobb lagged in front of Reeves while the shortstop tried to field Bishop's ground ball. Screened by Cobb, Reeves hurried and threw wild to first, allowing the A's only run to cross unearned. Final score: Washington 6, Philadelphia 1.

In the second game, the Senators led 5-4 with two outs in the top of the ninth and an A's runner on first. Again Cobb pinch hit. This time he swung three times and struck out.

By the end of the week, the Mackmen rebounded to take a half-game lead on the Yankees. But New York immediately beat the A's three games to one in a Yankee Stadium showdown that decided the AL flag (which the Macks were to capture in 1929-30-31). With the Yanks on their way to beating Lefty Grove 5-3 on Sept. 11, Cobb pinch hit for Jimmy Dykes to lead off the ninth inning. Right-hander Hank Johnson got him to pop up to shortstop Mark Koenig, who made an easy catch in back of third base.

It was the final major-league appearance of baseball's greatest hitter. Six days later, Ty Cobb retired for keeps. He stated: "I prefer to cease active playing while there still may remain some base hits in my bat."

Never has anybody threatened his lifetime batting average of .367.

King leads Pro-Am

DENVER (AP) — Like most of her fellow professional golfers, Betsy King abhors weather delays.

"You're always anxious to get through," she said of the threatening weather that disrupted Thursday's first round of the $300,000 LPGA National Pro-Am.

"You hate to come back the next day and play just one hole. It's tough to get up at 5 o'clock and come out and finish."

King managed to finish, firing a 3-under-par 69 to take the first-round lead, but 18 of her colleagues faced early wake-up calls today.

Weather cleared after the two lightning-caused delays, which lasted slightly more than two hours. But darkness intruded, and the 18 were to complete their first rounds at 7 a.m. MDT today.

Mustangs start getting even in Sept. 7 opener

DALLAS (AP) — Humbled Southern Methodist, having to live with probation jokes and the frustration of knowing it can't win the Southwest Conference football title, starts getting even against the outside world Sept. 7.

The Mustangs, placed on three years' probation by the NCAA, open their season Sept. 7 in Texas Stadium against Texas-El Paso.

SMU then meets Arizona before it plunges into a full conference schedule against the others schools who have a goal the Mustangs don't — the Cotton Bowl.

"We can go 11-0 and that's our goal," said lineman Joe Phillips. "We'll be close together now. We still have something to play for."

They can also play the spoiler. Dutch Baughman, assistant commissioner of the SWC, says SMU's league games will count in the standings.

"Everybody in the conference has to play them (the Mustangs)," said Baughman. "We look at it this way — every time SMU plays a league team somebody wins and somebody loses."

SMU will also be on television this year and has a nationally televised (Dec. 7) date against Oklahoma.

Other SMU TV games include Nov. 2 at Texas A&M and Nov. 16 against Texas Tech.

The Mustangs can't play in bowl games the next two years and will not be on television in 1986. Also, SMU will have no scholarships next year and only 15 to give in 1987.

SMU, the second winningest college football team in the nation the last three years, could be a national power again.

Coach Bobby Collins will decide soon how many of his 15 freshmen to redshirt because of the depth problems the Mustangs will have in three years. The Mustangs will have only 65 scholarship players in 1987, 30 below the allowable.

The Mustangs have 13 returning starters including perhaps the best one-two tailback tandem in the country in Reggie Dupard and Jeff Atkins.

Dupard, a senior, has rushed for 2,448 yards and 27 touchdowns. Last season he was the nation's No. 12 rusher with 1,160 yards and 16 touchdowns.

Also, the Mustangs recruited and signed the top running back in Texas, Bill Jones of Corsicana, a power runner with speed.

Don King, the Southwest Conference's all-conference quarterback, returns to lead a team that averaged 400 yards total offense per game last year.

The swift receivers include Jeffrey Jacobs, Ron Morris and Marquis Pleasant.

The Mustangs will have six senior starters on defense and seven senior starters on offense. Collins has posted a 31-4-1 record since he came from Southern Mississippi in 1982.

SMU has accomplished what no other SWC team has ever done and that is to win 10 or more games in a season for four straight years.

Last year SMU was 10-2 including a 27-20 victory over Notre Dame in the Aloha Bowl and finished eighth in the final Associated Press poll.

Dolphins set workouts for Tuesday, Sept. 3

The Pampa Dolphins Swim Club start workouts for the new season on Tuesday, Sept. 3 from 4:30 to 6:30 at the Pampa Youth Center.

The Dolphins are a certified United States Swimming Association swim club, and a member of the Texas and West Texas Swimming Association. The Dolphins participate in age group swimming competition in Texas, Oklahoma and New Mexico. Swimmers compete in age group competition in both boys and girls divisions. The age groups are 8 and under, 9-10, 11-12, 13-14, and Senior.

Anyone interested in becoming a member of the Dolphins can come to the Youth Center between 4:30 and 6:30 p.m. starting Sept. 3 to receive more information.

Dallas team advances to Connie Mack finals

FARMINGTON, N.M. (AP) — Pitcher Eric Stone hit a solo homer to lead Dallas, Texas, to an extra-inning 9-8 victory over Memphis, Tenn., in the Connie Mack World Series here Thursday night.

Stone's homer in the top of the eighth inning will send Dallas into Friday's series title game against defending champion Cincinnati. The two teams met in the opening game of the double-elimination series a week ago and Cincinnati won that game.

Memphis, which took a 3-0 lead in the first inning, tied the game in the bottom of the seventh on Chris Marable's three-run homer over the centerfield fence. Stone succeeded in striking out the next two Memphis batters to send the game into extra innings.

Dallas appeared to have iced the game in the top of the seventh when Blake Boydston, John Gorman and Kieth Darter singled to give Dallas an 8-5 lead.

Stone's winning homer was off Memphis reliever Chris Burr.

Paul Bakke had three hits in the game and stole home for Memphis in the second inning.

Economic edginess manifests itself

By JOHN CUNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — In announcing plans to eliminate 24,000 jobs over the next 16 months or so, American Telephone & Telegraph Co. added to a feeling of edginess that seems to characterize the economy.

The AT&T announcement was typical of events that Americans have been trying to digest in recent weeks, much of the time unsuccessfully.

Wasn't AT&T succeeding in the information area, which includes computers, consumer communications equipment, business processing systems and the like? It was — is. And aren't information systems the wave of the future? Maybe.

Why therefore the job eliminations, all in AT&T's information systems?

Because, said AT&T, it was simply overstaffed, a realization that manifested itself when the company entered the competitive world after ng been regulated the federal government.

If the economy is in relatively good shape how can so many old-line industries — farming, steel, mining, the thrift industry, banking, medical care and more — have so many troubles?

The news from specific companies, such as AT&T, ranges from shocking to just disappointing, the latter being the description investors applied to the latest earnings statement from IBM, a premier performer.

Utterly unexpected problems have hit some of the best names in business. Coca-Cola was forced by market pressures to resurrect its old-formula Coke. Manville was pressured by lawsuits to seek protection in bankruptcy.

Washington provides little reassurance. If the budget deficits are so dangerous, people ask, why is it that the country cannot manage to get on with the job of substantially reducing the debts?

The economy is in flux. Newer businesses and newer industries are replacing some of the old-line firms. Services account for a growing part of the private economy, manufacturers less. There is a boom within a bust, or vice versa.

Moreover, attitudes toward business continue to change. Product liability suits are more common. Attempts by companies to close outmoded facilities are countered more often by political pressure to remain open.

High expectations play a role in the perplexing scene.

Still another factor accounts for layoffs, and that is the determination of well-managed companies to get themselves as lean as possible, lowering their break-even points and preparing themselves for any future recessions.

Kids sample White House picnic cuisine

DALLAS (AP) — There wasn't a politician in the bunch, but a Dallas-based restaurant chain tried out the Mexican cuisine it plans to serve at the annual White House Picnic on some fledgling gourmets.

The youngsters gave the restaurant chain their opinions of the food and even offered some suggestions of what President Reagan should eat at the picnic.

The El Chico Corp. will cater the Sept. 18 picnic so company officials decided to give the fare a local tryout Thursday and give some children at the Buckner Baptist Children's Home here a special treat at the same time.

The firm needed to test not only the food, but the logistics of serving the food, said Stuart Jochimsen, regional director of the restaurant chain.

"It's an exact duplication of everything we plan to do," Jochimsen said. "We need to make sure we can move a group that size through the (serving) line in 45 minutes. Those people in Washington are always in a hurry."

Asked how the experiment went, Jochimsen said, "Tremendously well. But none of them has talked politics. They've all talked hungry."

Jimmy, 13, one of the children who sampled the Mexican food, said he seriously doubted the president would practice hanging from tree limbs after dinner.

Jimmy and a friend, Kevin, 11, spent the meal not discussing politics, but the "green stuff (guacamole) we got to eat." But they said the president would probably have something else to talk about while he eats.

"I'm sure he'll be smiling, because he's always smiling on TV," Kevin said. "But he'll probably be talking about changing things or putting up buildings, the kind of stuff he's supposed to do."

National security assistant in a rapidly expanding role

By BARRY SCHWEID
AP Diplomatic Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Front and center: Robert C. (Bud) McFarlane, the president's national security adviser. He's had a busy week.

—Chiding South Africa for not undertaking specific changes to match vague promises of racial reform.

—Casting a pall over the U.S.-Soviet summit meeting by declaring that "even incremental improvements" in relations in fact, they have teamed up on major foreign policy issues — on a cautious approach to the Arab-Israeli conflict, for instance, and in a tough but not totally intractable attitude toward the Soviet Union.

So McFarlane may not be stepping on Shultz' toes with his increasing prominence. But the effect on U.S. foreign policy could be pronounced, especially if he and Shultz keep working in tandem within Reagan's inner circle.

In dealing with South Africa, the Reagan administration has been gentle. The policy of "constructive engagement" seeks change through persuasion rather than sanctions or other pressure tactics.

McFarlane was given the sensitive assignment of joining Chester Crocker, the senior State Department specialist on Africa, in talks two weeks ago in Vienna with South African Foreign Minister.

An AP News Analysis

between the two countries would be hard to achieve without changes in the Kremlin's approach to major issues.

—Defending the U.S. decision to test an anti-satellite weapon on a space target — which also may impinge on the summit — as a necessary step to maintain the military balance between the United States and the Soviet Union.

By contrast, President Reagan, the man he works for, was nearly invisible as McFarlane took center stage on key foreign policy issues.

George Shultz, the secretary of state, was on summer vacation.

As McFarlane stars on the TV talk shows and makes headline news in the papers, there is no hint of conflict with Shultz. The two evidently get along, personally and philosophically.

Dear Abby

Stutterers fight ridicule along with their handicap

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1985 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR READERS: My attention has been called to a handicap that afflicts millions of people, but because it isn't life-threatening in the physical sense, it is minimized. It's the only handicap I know of that is openly ridiculed and made the butt of jokes. It's stuttering.

People who stutter are terrified to answer a telephone, speak up in a classroom, apply in person for a job, ask for a date, order in a restaurant, etc.

Because stutterers are afraid to talk, they are thought to be less intelligent than the average person. Some famous people who were stutterers, but overcame it: Thomas Jefferson, Charles Darwin, Jack Paar and Anthony Quinn, to name a few.

When a stutterer stutters, here's what not to do: Don't insert words, or finish phrases for the stutterer. Don't say, "Just think before you speak, and don't talk so fast." These seemingly helpful suggestions don't work.

What can help? There's a National Stuttering Project composed of members who form self-help groups in every state. I have seen their materials and newsletters, and recommend them highly.

For information about this organization, write to: National Stuttering Project, 1269 Seventh Ave., San Francisco, Calif. 94122. Please enclose a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope.

DEAR ABBY: I have not been married very long and I need to know how to handle this:

My husband is a very good-looking man who gets a lot of attention from the ladies. His job (bartending) puts him on display, so to speak, where he can meet a lot of attractive women. Some of them get friendly when they're half-loaded, which is very handy for him because he doesn't have to pay to get them drunk. He also works late hours, which doesn't help our marriage. He should get home by 2 a.m. but sometimes he's not home until 5 or 6. I think he's cheating on me.

Well, I found a strange set of keys in his pocket, so I took them and hid them. I see him going crazy looking for those keys but I don't say anything. I would like to know whose keys they are.

Should I ask him? You can print this. He never reads your column.

NEEDS HELP

DEAR NEEDS: Don't ask him whose keys they are. A man who cheats will also lie.

...

CONFIDENTIAL TO WORRIED IN DICKINSON, TEXAS: You have good reason to worry. According to the Mayo Clinic Health Letter: "Cigarette smoking greatly increases your chances of acquiring bladder cancer. Cigarette smokers acquire bladder cancer two to five times more frequently than non-smokers. The hazard increases with the number of cigarettes you smoke daily and the number of years you continue the habit."

DEAR ABBY: To the woman in Waterloo, Iowa, who is trying to decide whether to have a kid or not, here is the best test: Borrow a kid for two weeks.

I baby-sat my 10-month-old nephew for two weeks. I was 30. It was a revelation. He was really a charming little guy, but, Abby, I made up my mind before the first week was over that no way would I have kids of my own!

My nephew is now 8 years old and I love him dearly, but I have never regretted my decision. He lives two hours away, and although I never see him more than every third weekend, he fulfills all my maternal instincts.

Now I always advise my wondering friends to borrow a kid for two weeks before they decide to have one of their own.

AUNT CASSIE IN OTTAWA

DEAR AUNT CASSIE: "Borrowing" a kid is a good way to get a taste of parenthood, but it's only a taste. When they're your own, you can't send them back at the end of two weeks. It's a wise woman who knows her limitations. Motherhood is not for everyone.

DEAR ABBY: I am due to have a baby very soon and am confused about one thing: The baby's father is the third to have the same name in his family. His grandfather, who is still living, is "Senior," his father is "Junior" and my boyfriend is "the Third."

Since we are not married, can I name my baby "the Fourth"? Or can I name him after his grandfather with no numerals after it?

MOTHER-TO-BE

DEAR MOTHER-TO-BE: To be absolutely certain that you would be acting within your legal rights, consult a lawyer. And regardless of the legal decision, I think you should discuss this with your boyfriend.

DEAR ABBY: Our neighbor leaves for work at 6 o'clock every morning, and when he is picked up by a co-worker, there is a lot of horn beeping, yelling and door slamming.

Their driveway is right next to our bedroom. My alarm is set for 7, but with all this commotion going on every morning, my husband and I are awakened at 6. We have two small children and the last hour of sleep is very important before I start my busy day.

My husband says I shouldn't say anything to them as it might cause hard feelings, and that's the last thing we want. We like our neighbors, but I am disturbed by their lack of consideration for others at that hour.

Do you have any suggestions?

DESPERATE

DEAR DESPERATE: Unless your neighbors are made aware that the horn beeping, yelling and door slamming is disturbing you, nothing will change. I suggest that you tell them in a friendly way what you have told me. It should make for friendlier neighbors—not hard feelings.

Oklahoma is rich in Indian history

Oklahoma is rich in Indian history and many families can trace their Indian ancestry to the territory before it became a state in 1907. Not all settlers were

Indian, nor were those claiming Indian Lands necessarily Indians. For example, during the "Run of 89" persons living in the Cherokee area of North Carolina could claim land in Oklahoma.

If you are researching Oklahoma between 1900 and 1910 pay close attention to the county boundaries as many of the lines were changed in 1907 and new counties formed from the existing ones.

Another possibility would be your Civil War veteran. After the end of the war, especially with families that were divided with members fighting on opposite sides, soldiers were searching for new places to begin a new life without conflict. Many found Oklahoma to be the answer and by 1890 had established homesteads in the area. Check the special census of Union veterans and widows of veterans available from The National Archives. Remember, this census is based on where the person was living in 1890 and not where he fought during the war. It is arranged by state and then county as the other census.

Settlers moving into the Texas Panhandle often stopped for a short time in Oklahoma. A trip to Oklahoma City might produce answers to many questions. The city and state libraries as well as the state historical society could be searched in the same trip. Write for information regarding houses and fees to: Oklahoma State Library, 109 Capitol, Oklahoma City, Okla., 73105.

Note my new address and please remember to include a self-addressed stamped envelope if you wish a personal reply. I answer all letters that include the stamped envelope and hope to hear from more or you. Do you have a query or suggestion for the column? Write Gena Walls, 8825 S. W. Hints on getting ready for school

SAN DIEGO, Calif. (AP) — With the start of school, attention is focused on children and their adjustment to the classroom. But parents need to realize that the transition from summer vacation to school days can disrupt the whole family, says Dr. Gregory W. Brock, a family therapist.

Brock, director of the Marriage and Family Therapy Program at United States International University here, believes that parents and children can better weather the transition if the negative hassles are minimized. "All of a sudden when the school year starts, the belt of routine tightens around the neck; a little planning can loosen the belt a bit," says Brock, who has been a practicing marriage and family therapist for 12 years and is a clinical member and approved supervisor of the American Association for Marriage and Family Therapy.

He offers parents these suggestions, which he says can help both them and their children cope with the annual transition from leisure to a more regulated life and speed the adjustment period:

—If possible, start children on the necessary bedtime and morning routines a week before school begins. In any case, be firm about the bedtime requirements during the early weeks of school, rather than allowing later summer bedtimes to continue once school begins.

—Help your children break the snack habit by sticking with regular mealtimes and limiting snacks on weekends, because after the school year starts children don't have the freedom to nibble at odd times.

—Wait a week or two after school starts before going on a shopping spree. That way children will be able to choose clothes that they will feel good about wearing on a regular basis instead of clothes designed for the first day of school.

—If your children are at a new school this year, take time to go to the school yourself to visit and to meet the teachers.

—Parents should arrange their own schedules the first weeks of school to allow time to talk to children about their day.

Brock urges parents to ask children specific questions about their experiences, rather than just an open question such as "What did you learn today?"

"The younger the child, the more specific the questions. Ask a first-grader if he had milk for lunch, or what side of the room his desk is on," Brock advises.

Once school has started, parents need to remember that the experience is full of disappointments for the children, as well as excitement. Disappointments include such things as finding out that your best friend is in a different class or that you don't get to sit by the window this year.

Parents will find it works best to just listen seriously to the child's complaints, but allow the child to deal with these issues himself, adds Brock, the father of three young children.

Conditions in general will awaken your leadership qualities in the year ahead. Once you step out front and take command, you're not apt to abdicate your authority.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) You have the necessary reserve to draw upon today to finish tasks that require tenacity and dedication. See through to conclusion whatever you start. Know where to look for romance and you'll find it. The Astro-Graph Matchmaker set instantly reveals which signs are romantically perfect for you. Mail $2 to Astro-Graph, Box 489, Radio City Station, New York, NY 10019.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) You could be fortunate now with your newest enterprises, especially if people you're fond of are also involved.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) You're still in a lucky cycle for material acquisition. Give priority to situations that can improve your financial position.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Companions will find you delightful to be around today. When your enthusiasm is aroused, it'll be contagious and lighten others' spirits as well.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Something you've been waiting and hoping for, which has to come through the good auspices of another, is about to break loose. It could even happen today.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Your greatest asset today is your ability to make people feel special and important. You'll do it without flattery.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 19) Conditions continue to favor you as you strive for that important objective. Don't take your eyes off the target.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) This is a good day to put a bold plan you've been contemplating into action. Don't procrastinate any longer if you think you're ready to make your move.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Your greatest possibilities for success today are likely to come from situations where you share a financial interest with another.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Authorship isn't important today, so don't be hesitant about using a companion's idea or suggestion if you think it's superior to yours.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Industriousness and productivity will pay larger dividends today than usual. Put your heart and full effort into work that generates income.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Contacts you'll be making over the next few days could prove helpful. Establish a positive impression.

Shelter concentrating on people, not politics

SAN BENITO, Texas (AP) — Sister Ninfa Garza, the new director of Casa Oscar Romero, tells the caller, "I can't take anybody to the airport and I can't buy tickets for anybody. I just can't."

Three months ago, Sister Garza took over the Catholic Church-sponsored shelter for Central Americans, following in the footsteps of Lorry Thomas, 41, and Jack Elder, both of whom were convicted of transporting Central Americans.

Elder was released last week from a halfway house in San Antonio, where he served 133 days of a 150-day sentence. He was to return to the Rio Grande Valley this week, but not to the shelter, which has had a facelift and a change in philosophy since his departure.

"I don't know much about politics, about immigration, and I don't want to," Sister Garza said. "I want to get the refugees to feel comfortable in a house."

"When they come here, I never ask them where they're from. I give them something to eat and a place to sleep and tell them we'll talk in the morning," she said.

Sister Garza is a petite woman, who has been a nun for 26 years. Before she took over Casa Romero, she was director of Hispanic family ministries for the diocese.

She awakes daily at 7 a.m. and doesn't call it a day until after midnight. During the day, she visits with the Salvadorans, Nicaraguans, Hondurans and Guatemalans who seek refuge in a six-room house in this town, south of Harlingen.

She frequently has a black purse slung over her shoulder and a cross around her neck.

After she took over the shelter, she implemented rules in which the temporary residents do chores that Sister Garza said makes them feel at home.

Thousands of Central Americans have passed through the doors of the shelter — named after the slain Archbishop of San Salvador — since it opened in December 1982. Some leave their war-torn countries and others, the depressed economies.

Donations of food, money and clothing always are needed at the shelter and Sister Garza frequently goes to grocery stores and meat markets asking for food donations.

More and more people are stopping at the house. Earlier this week, there were 135 temporary residents, double the number six months ago.

There are three bedrooms, some with queen-size and bunk beds, but many of the transients have to sleep on the concrete floor outside. Sister Garza said soon she hopes another room will be added to the house.

Restroom facilities have been expanded; an awning has been added to the house and electric fans are new amenities in the house.

Sister's Garza's other daily duties include making a seven-mile trip to Harlingen's Western Union office to collect money for the temporary residents of the shelter.

Relatives of the Central Americans send the money to her, and she relays it. She doesn't ask what the money is to be used for.

She lends an ear, gives a hug here and there and occasionally scolds rowdy children and adults who are smoking too close to the house.

"I just love it. I really do. I am in my element," she said.

Sister Garza still gets calls from reporters asking about the progress of the shelter and inquiring about Elder.

Elder was convicted this spring of transporting two Salvadorans from the shelter to a bus station in McAllen. He was replaced by Ms. Thomas, who was sentenced to two years in prison for transporting a Nicaraguan in the trunk of her car and trying to get past Border Patrol agents.

Another shelter volunteer, Stacey Lynn Merkt, 30, was convicted in two trials of conspiring to transport and of transporting Salvadorans. One of the convictions was overturned and the other is on appeal.

Sister Garza said she doesn't fear the possibility that immigration officials might raid the shelter, and authorities said the house was not on their priority list.

"It's not our priority to check places like Casa Oscar Romero," said Jerry Hicks, deputy chief of the Border Patrol in McAllen.

"Our priorities are to apprehend employed aliens. There also is more and more evidence that aliens at Casa Oscar Romero are documented, that they have papers to travel in the Valley," Hicks said.

Sister Garza said the Central Americans trekked across deserts and they can make the trip to an airport or bus station to get further into the United States.

She said the shelter's priorities are not to transport the Central Americans, but to feed, clothe and inspire them.

When one of the residents get ready to leave, Sister Garza gives them a sack lunch, a hug and a prayer.

"You suffer with them and sometimes you feel you can't do anything about it and it hurts. It breaks your heart," she said.

Churches fall short on pay, critics claim

By GEORGE W. CORNELL
AP Religion Writer

Although American churches often complain that society is economically unfair to the poor, it's a rare thing for officials of the church to say it itself is guilty of the same fault.

But that's what two Roman Catholic spokesmen say — that while the church preaches a better deal for the poor, the church doesn't put those words into practice in its own household.

Bishop William McManus, who retired earlier this year as bishop of Fort Wayne-South Bend, Ind., says a "wide, glaring gap" separates what the church teaches about economic justice from the way it treats its own employees.

"The U.S. bishops advocate a 'preferential option' for the poor, but I have seen little preference shown to the church's lowest paid, most insecure employees — janitors, domestics, rectory secretaries and organists," he says.

Citing the latest emphasis on justice for the poor in the draft of the bishops' planned pastoral letter on the U.S. economy, he says it urges the church to set an example, but the church falls far short of doing so.

He said in a recent address, "Getting Our House In Order," at St. James Cathedral in Brooklyn that increased Catholic contributions are necessary to pay church workers better.

Similar criticism was reported by National Catholic News Service in an editorial in the Seattle, Wash., archdiocesan newspaper The Progress.

All levels of the church have a "scandalous history of abusing its workers," who often leave their jobs "burned-out and bitter," said the editorial, written by acting editor Bill Dobbs.

It said church wages have improved over the last 10 years, but further adjustments are needed.

The editorial drew such voluminous reader response, Dobbs says, that a follow-up editorial was published, answering questions and saying the first one "blamed the church for past mistakes but failed to praise it" for recent improvements.

However, the paper stood by its original position, saying: "People have been hurt. Not deliberately, not maliciously, but hurt nonetheless."

Employees of various Protestant and Catholic organizations recently have become more assertive in seeking better pay. Staff workers in New York for the National Council of Churches have organized for collective bargaining.

At the Vatican, lay workers early this year proclaimed a "state of agitation" until officials agreed to consider pay raises.

While most major Protestant, Jewish and Roman Catholic bodies have advocated unionization of workers to obtain improved wages, the religious groups seldom encourage their own employees to join a union.

On the contrary, McManus said, some Catholic hospitals and schools have actively sought to block collective-bargaining processes.

Church to install deacons Sunday

Seven new deacons will be installed at the Mary Ellen and Harvester Church of Christ during morning worship services Sunday.

The men chosen to serve as new deacons are Sammy Coffee, Darryl Hughes, C. V. McQueen, Cliff Sanders, Melvin Smith, Tom Turner and Virgil Webb.

These men will serve along with the deacons who are currently working in that capacity, under the leadership of the elders of the church.

Gene Glaeser, minister, will bring the message on "Appointed to Serve," which will be on the subject of the responsibilities of being a deacon.

The Sunday evening sermon will be brought by Keith Feerer, youth minister of the congregation.

Jerry Lawless, involvement minister of the Southwest Church of Christ in Amarillo, will be speaking at the Wednesday evening services on "Maturing in Christ."

Revival services set

St. Mark Christian Methodist Episcopal Church, 406 Elm, will be holding a revival Monday through Friday with services beginning at 7:45 p.m. each evening.

Pastor H. R. Johnson will be the speaker for the revival.

The pastor invited the public to attend the special worship services during the week.

Pigeon flocks cause problems in Honolulu

By LOIS TAYLOR
Star-Bulletin

HONOLULU (AP) — Waddling across a basket of croissants or nibbling at a french fry, the pigeons of Waikiki patronize the very best restaurants and live at the finest hotels.

Hardly anybody but the pigeons is happy with the arrangement.

The number of pigeons, and to a lesser extent, doves and sparrows, has ballooned in the past 10 years, to the point where they land on restaurant tables and wander into hotel rooms and condos through open lanai doors. They aren't eager to socialize — they're looking for food.

The birds of Waikiki have worked out in their teeny bird brains that it's easier to make a meal off a leftover English muffin than to scrounge around the greenery in Kapiolani Park looking for seeds. Then kind-hearted ladies see the dear birdies munching on human food, and promptly scatter crumbs from their luncheon rolls to attract more of them.

The result is a population explosion. "Flocks of pigeons are enlarging rapidly," said Ralph Saito, wildlife biologist with the forestry and wildlife division of the state Department of Land and Natural Resources. "People are feeding the birds, there are more open-air restaurants making more food available to them, and there are no real predators to reduce the population."

There actually is one predator — man — and for years, the Department of Land and Natural Resources has issued permits to kill birds. The permit is issued only after investigation has determined that the birds complained about are causing health or environment problems.

The destruction of the birds is done with chemicals and by someone certified by the state Agriculture Department to use them. At least 20 hotels, restaurants and condominiums in Waikiki currently have these permits. Corn kernels are poisoned and left on window ledges or rooftops generally inaccessible to humans. Both the dead birds and the uneaten corn must be removed promptly.

Because the birds often don't die immediately and occasionally appear to suffer, there have been complaints by concerned people.

"We don't feel the present system is either a concerted effort or a humane one," said Alex Wade, executive director of the Hawaiian Humane Society. "We realize that we will have to cull the bird population, but instead of doing it piecemeal, condo by condo and restaurant by restaurant, we should look at the numbers and put in strict controls."

It has been suggested that the most humane method would be to trap the birds and release them elsewhere on the island, but Dr. Thomas Sawa, pathologist with the state Department of Agriculture, doesn't think this would work.

"They would probably come right back to Waikiki. Birds are territorial. Furthermore, the farmers of rural Oahu don't want them any more than the Waikiki restaurant owners do."

The objection to the birds is not simply that people don't like them tramping through their chicken curry, but that pigeons carry psittacosis, giarda and salmonellosis, which can be transmitted to man. Psittacosis is an influenza-like ailment, the other two cause intestinal problems, and nobody wants any of them.

"We are now seeing pigeons on the beaches, looking for handouts," biologist Saito said. "They leave droppings in the same sand that people lie on and children play in. This has the potential of a big problem. We eventually have to look at these birds as vectors (disease carriers) like roaches and rats."

Wade feels that management of the pigeon flocks will be possible only when people stop feeding the birds, and this may require legislation making it a misdemeanor.

"Let the birds fend for themselves," he said. "As long as they are fed, the flocks will increase. Feeding the pigeons is not helping them. When they become dependent on humans they no longer forage for themselves."

"We are going to have to bite the bullet, face the fact that the only way to cut down the number of birds is to kill them," Sawa said. "I think we all agree that there really is no good way to control the overpopulation of pigeons."

Wade agrees. "We have to get the flocks to manageable numbers and at the same time educate the public. The message is 'Don't feed the birds.'"

Los Angeles county halts AIDS pamphlet for addicts

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A pamphlet aimed at halting the spread of AIDS among drug abusers has been yanked from distribution after officials discovered it contains advice on how to safely inject drugs and keep needles clean.

"If one student uses this as a guide, this whole pamphlet will be a failure and a flop," Supervisor Kenneth Hahn said Wednesday. "It's like a drunk driving campaign where you say, 'If you do drink and drive, use the side streets.'"

Publication of "Shooting Up and Your Health" was partly financed by federal and Los Angeles county funds, but Hahn said, "The entire pamphlet implies government approval of the use of drugs."

Hahn, a liberal, was joined Wednesday by conservative supervisors Michael Antonovich and Pete Schabarum in calling for an investigation of how the county provided funds for, and helped distribute, the pamphlet.

Antonovich said the pamphlet was "another example of radical liberals using taxpayers' dollars to subsidize deviant behavior and another example of bureaucrats going crazy."

"I am shocked that this publication was put out with the blessings and the sanction of the county," Hahn said.

Irv Cohen, acting director of the county Department of Health Services, said that distribution of the pamphlets was halted as of Wednesday. He said he did not know how many had been distributed.

The county provided about $1,600 for the pamphlet, a joint venture with the AIDS Project L.A., a non-profit group that raises funds for the battle against acquired immune deficiency syndrome, said Andy Weisser, a spokesman for the AIDS Project.

City to discourage X-rated purchases

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — A City Council proposal to make video store operators record names of customers who rent or buy X-rated movies would discourage people from seeking adult movies within city limits, officials said.

The proposal would also allow police to have access to stores' records to ensure that customers are at least 17, city officials said.

"I think the social pressures and mores of this community would be such that people would go elsewhere for these materials," said City Manager Bill Kirchoff, who sent the proposal to city attorneys for review.

Arlington police say they rarely receive complaints about pornographic materials. But reported homosexual activity in past months in a city park has triggered a heated campaign against all forms of adult entertainment. The campaign is led by Councilman Jim Norwood.

"I feel good that we live in a community where we don't have a major problem with this, but that's no guarantee that we won't have any problems at some point in the future," Norwood said.

Last week, the council held a public hearing on pornography, which drew about 200 people, identified as local church members, who called for a ban on adult movie and literature sales.

Council members proposed several possible measures Tuesday to restrict local X-rated movie businesses.

POSTAL EXAM
Clerk-Carrier
 The Pampa Post Office has indicated that they will accept applications for the Clerk-Carrier exam in 1986. The Clerk-Carrier position currently pays $9.20 per hour plus excellent benefits. Serious post candidates should begin preparing now because people are hired for these positions based on their exam score.
WORKSHOP BY POSTAL EXAM PREPARATION CENTER
 Proper preparation is the key to getting hired. In order to make sure that you have enough time to properly prepare, this workshop is being offered before application dates have been set. This workshop was designed by the foremost authority in America on gaining postal employment. Stephen McNally is a former postal employee and a Ph.D. candidate in education. He has averaged 100% on 5 out of 5 Clerk-Carrier exams. One of Mr. McNally's students recently made this statement, "This workshop was well worth my time and money. Using Mr. McNally's techniques allowed me to score 100% on my first 3 Clerk-Carrier exams!" K.A., Summerfield IL.
GUARANTEED SCORE OF 95% OF HIGHER
 The Exclusive P.E.P.C. Double Guarantee: 1. At the end of the workshop, if you do not think these methods will significantly increase your score, your money will be refunded. 2. You will enter a written contract guaranteeing you a score of 95% or higher or your money will be refunded in full.
WORKSHOP TUITION IS $35.00. Payable in cash, Visa or MasterCard. (No personal checks). This fee includes the 2 1/2 hour workshop, the textbook, which includes 3 complete tests, 10 additional practice exercises, tips to make you testwise and more...
