Ride in B-25 bomber 'chance of a lifetime'

By LARRY HOLLIS Staff Writer

A once in a lifetime chance.

That's what I heard about an opportunity for the media to fly in a B-25 bomber Saturday morning as part of the Pampa Army Air Field Association reunion activities for the weekend.

Well, so what? I thought. I've flown in planes before.

Admittedly only once, though, had I flown in a military plane. That's when I left Fort Dix in New Jersey in October, 1969, to be transported over the Atlantic Ocean to Germany.

For some reason, the Army chose to fly us over in some troop cargo plane, its interior redecorated to be more like a regular passenger plane, complete with stewardesses to serve us food.

Though paved with good intentions, the attempt didn't work too well. For one thing, it was still a prop plane, not a jet. And the military green interior lacked the appeal of the "colorful skies" of civilian airlines. I can't say it was an entirely bad experience, but for some reason, I can remember little about the flight over: some kind of memory block, I guess.

But sitting around in the office Friday afternoon, I found myself discussing the "chance of a lifetime" with fellow staff members. Most thought of the opportunity with excitement; others were not so enthusiastic about the chance and graciously even eagerly - bowed out.

Well, if I get up early enough and if nothing else is going on and if . . . I said I'd try to make it out.

But Saturday morning dawned, and the chance seemed more appealing. So I got up, took care of a few matters and drove out to Perry Lefors Field, arriving shortly after 10 a.m.

A small crowd was already there, checking out the B-25, called "The General." I read an information display about the plane, learning it was the fourth one to come off the assembly line and was the oldest one still flying. Only 25 remain out of the approximately 9,800 that had been produced.

More interesting to me, however, was the revelation that the plane had once been owned by the late ultra - rich reclusive Howard Hughes, who had kept it for 16 years.

People stood around looking at it, or climbing inside to check it out. Former military men and employees of the closed Pampa Army Air Field chatted about the B-25s, reminiscing about their flights in the old bombers or their work on it at the old air base

Some talked about how it looked just like they had remembered it. Others complained of modifications in the plexiglass around the nose or the wings or the interior.

Other media representatives were there among the reunion gatherers and their families: Deborah "Red" Hendrick, The Pampa News photographer; Cathy Spaulding, a fellow reporter; Sheila Eccles, KSZN news director; and some Amarillo television news staff members.

Red was running around, snapping up rolls of film. Shella chatted with some of the "old-timers" who recalled their experiences. Cathy walked around checking out the plane.

I mainly stood back except for a once-around look at the plane.
Well, it must be safe or they wouldn't be flying it so often, I thought. And hoped.

We local media members chatted among ourselves, wondering if it was true that we were really going to have a chance to fly in the plane. We had been told to be there by 10:30 a.m., and it was nearing 11:30 without the engines being revved

While waiting I saw school trustee Ken Fields, surprised to see him in flight overalls. I chatted with him, learning he was a member of the Confederate Air Force and had flown in a B-25 just a couple of years ago.

He told me I was in for quite an experience. I believed that, though I was still uncertain as to what kind of experience.

The plane was started, and a group of reunion attenders climbed aboard for the first flight. I still had received no assurance that I would have a chance for a flight.

But then Red waved me over to a small group, and we were told we'd be flying on the second trip. We got our assignments and instructions on where we'd be sitting. Red, with her camera in hand, would be in the plexiglass nose; Sheila and I would be right behind the pilot and co-pilot, and Cathy would be joining others in the back of the bomber.

The plane taxied on the runway for the first flight, the wind from the prop engines creating a wash like the winds before a thunderstorm as it turned around. A few hats were blown

I recalled Sheila saying how the chance for the flight was one of the "perks" we had in the business. Well, sure, I thought, though uncertain that this was one perquisite I really needed.

I watched the plane on its first flight. Take off didn't seem too bad. But in the air, I noticed it taking some wide, tilting banks as it flew off across the city and then later back to the field, where it flew over once before landing.

Our turn came.
We were lined up and then taken to the plane. Crouched to avoid the wash and the plane's low structure, we approached the under-belly entrances, just ladders coming down from the body.

Red, Sheila and I stepped up the front entrance. Red then crawled through a tunnel to get to the nose under the pilot's cabin, while Sheila and I literally climbed up to occupy two side-by-side seats behind the flight cabin.

It looked much bigger from the outside, I thought. It was so narrow I could have stretched out my arms and touched both sides without much effort.

The plane taxied down the runway and turned around for its takeoff. The noise rumbled and the body shook slightly as the plane gathered speed.

The wheels left the earth, and the experience began.

We flew off from the airport and headed out over the city. I had seen the view before when I

U.S. urges South Africans to be specific about reforms

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration is urging South African officials to "put their money where their mouth is" and offer specific reforms toward ending apartheid and the massive violence it has sparked.

President Reagan also believes black leaders in South Africa would be taking only a "low risk" by accepting the government's offer to negotiate, said Robert C. McFarlane, the president's national security adviser.

"I do think it's possible, only possible, that a second-level reflection after a couple of more days may lead these leaders on both sides who are looking into the abyss of massive violence to simply say — does it cost us that much to sit down, challenge this government, ask them to put their money where their mouth is, turn the rhetoric into reality," McFarlane said Sunday on ABC's "This Week with David Brinkley."

"It seems to the president that it is a reasonably low risk for people to challenge the (South African) government now" in negotiations, he said.

McFarlane was interviewed in Santa Barbara, Calif., where he and other officials are monitoring the South Africa situation as they vacation with Reagan.

They have expressed disappointment with a speech last Thursday in which South African President Pieter W. Botha offered to negotiate, but refused to accept specific reforms to his country's apartheid policies of racial separation — even in the face of escalating internal violence and pressure from Western countries.

Moderate black leaders in South Africa have reacted angrily to Botha's speech, decrying his tough tone and saying he did nothing to satisfy the desire for human rights that has sparked the latest violence

"I've never felt more sense of foreboding." Anglican Bishop Desmond Tutu said on CBS" Face The Nation." He added: "We are on the brink of catastrophe. I am scared."

He also denounced the Reagan administration policy of "constructive engagement" — diplomatic efforts to convince Pretoria to change its policies — calling it "as evil, immoral and un-Christian as the policy they are trying to buttress."

"When we become free we will remember who helped us," Tutu warned.

McFarlane also expressed a degree of disappointment with Botha's speech.

The (South African) government this week has labored and produced a cloud," he said, adding, however, that black leaders should give the government another chance.

"I do think basically the problem is to find people to come, a place to meet and an agenda to discuss," he said.

McFarlane reiterated the administration's opposition to a congressional proposal for economic sanctions against South Africa, including a ban on the sale of Krugerrands, South African gold coins, in the United States.

Reagan has not said if he will veto such a bill, expected to be enacted when the Congress returns from vacation in September.

Bishop Tutu refuses to meet with Botha

By MAUREEN JOHNSON

PRETORIA, South Africa — Bishop Desmond Tutu, rebuffed in his bid for a one-on-one meeting with President P.W. Botha, refused to join a delegation of churchmen meeting today with Botha to discuss ways to end racial violence.

Meanwhile, police said anti-apartheid rioting flared up in a half-dozen black townships around the country, but no new deaths were reported. Three blacks died in clashes over the weekend.

Also, police said they had 998 people under detention today, up sharply from the 746 that were held on Thursday and 786 on Friday.

Tutu, the winner of last year's Nobel peace prize, said earlier that he did not believe Botha genuinely wanted to talk to blacks "who don't agree with him."

The black Anglican bishop of Johannesburg and this country's best-known foe of apartheid sought a one-on-one meeting with Botha in late July after the white government imposed a state of emergency on 36 troubled black townships and cities.

Botha snubbed Tutu's request, but invited him to join the other clergymen at today's meeting in the capital of Pretoria led by the Most Rev. Philip Russell, the senior Anglican in South Africa. Russell is white

Tutu said in a telephone interview today that Botha wanted to meet blacks only "of his choosing."

"I had hoped I could talk to him as a South African to a South African, as a Christian to a fellow Christian, even as a grandfather to another grandfather... It would have been possible to hope for a real dialogue, a real speaking to each other, a genuine meeting of minds," Tutu said.

Tutu on Sunday told The Associated Press that he wouldn't meet with Botha "under an umbrella of a delegation when he couldn't see me on a one-to-one basis."

The churchmen, who began meeting with Botha in private at about 10 a.m., planned to discuss the year of bloodshed.

In continuing violence Sunday, police said a black woman was run over and killed by a truck speeding away from black looters throwing stones in the township of Bongweni.

Youngster says others survived initial crash

TOKYO (AP) — An account by one of the four survivors offered the first solid indication that others aboard the Japan Air Lines 747 had survived the crash, only to perish before rescuers reached the scene, nearly 14 hours afterward.

Keiko Kawakami, 12, told reporters from her hospital bed that her father and a 7-year-old sister were both alive, trapped in wreckage and talking "for a long time," but that both died during the night night.

The mass circulation Yomiuri Shimbun said the 12-year-old also reported hearing the murmur of others in the wreckage — people asking each other, "Are you all

Yoshinobu Shibakawa, a police spokesman, said in a telephone interview today that 484 bodies had been recovered and sirlifted out, and 363 had been identified.

Government investigators began airlifting debris off the remote mountaintep crash site, 70 miles northwest of Tokyo, Shibukawa said.

Meanwhile, Boeing Co technical experts were reported today to have discounted a theory that the failure of a cabin pressure bulkhead caused the Japan Air Lines 747 disaster in which 520 people died.

JAL's own chief 747 technician, Hiroaki Kohno, meanwhile, told a news conference that yet another theory was being studied — that the plane's vertical tail fin was initially damaged by "external pressure" rather than from a sudden rush of pressurized air from inside the plane.

Budget main item on school agenda

Approval of the 1985 86 budget will head the agenda when members of the Pampa Independent School District Board of Trustees meet Tuesday at 5 p.m.

The proposed budget calls for expenditures of about $12.348 million, an increase of about $554,765 over the preliminary 1984-85 budget, according to Supt. James Trusty. This amounts to about a 4.7 percent increase.

Trusty predicted a small tax increase will be needed to fund next year's budget. He cited as part of the reason the fact that the district will receive $162,000 less in state aid next year, although the district's tax base is up slightly.

"Even considering that (the tax base) it appears that a very small tax increase is going to have to be (levied)," Trusty said. The board will also meet with Cal Barbaree, president of the Pampa Tennis Club. Barbaree plans to discuss maintenance and repairs he feels are needed at the Pampa High School tennis courts.

In other action, the board is scheduled to:

receive a budget report.

 consider and take action on due bills and invoices.

receive committee reports.
 consider and take action on personnel matters, including resignations, leaves of absence and employment. A possible executive session is planned to discuss personnel matters

Car bomb kills 22 in Beirut

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — A car bomb ripped through a restaurant in Moslem west Beirut today, killing 22 and wounding 77 and triggering fighting along the Moslem-Christian dividing Green Line, police said.

The blast came a day after Christian militia commanders vowed revenge on their Moslem foes for a car bombing that killed 55 people, mostly women, and wounded 119 in Christian east Beirut's Antelias suburb on Saturday.

That was the fourth car-bombing in the Christian sector since May Altogether, 118 people were killed in those attacks.

Moslem-controlled radio stations reported another explosion today in Beirut's Shiite Moslem suburb of Ghobeiri, and the Christian Voice of Lebanon radio said the second blast was also caused by a car bomb. Police could not immediately confirm the reports. Police said they believed that today's first explosion, in the neighborhood, was caused by a bomb-laden green Peugeot car. The explosion, just after noon, wrecked the first two floors of a six-story building, including the Hamadeh restaurant, and set three floors of an adjacent nine-story residential Karakol el-Druse apartment building on fire. AP newsman Samir Ghattas, reporting from Karakol El-Druse, said the force of the blast hurled passing cars on top of each other. At least 15 were set ablaze.

The residential district is controlled by Druse militiamen, who Christian leaders blamed for Saturday's supermarket bombing. The Ghobeiri area where the second explosion was reported is controlled by Shiites, allies of the Druse against the Christians in Lebanon's 10-year-old civil war.

Within minutes of the Karakol explosion, Christian and Moslem gunners began shelling each others positions along the 3-mile Green Line that bisects the city in Moslem and Christian territory.

There were no immediate reports of casualties from the fighting, but the clashes forced the closure of the Museum crossing, the main gateway between Christian and Moslem sectors of the embattled Lebanese capital.

Ghattas said a filling station near the devastated restaurant was blackened by smoke. He said local Moslem militiamen cordoned off the area around the blast, firing in the air to clear the streets for ambulances.

The owner of the wrecked restaurant, Ihab Hamadeh, told Ghattas there were no customers in his place when the car bomb exploded. His staff survived with minor cuts from flying glass Civil defense rescuers and Moslem militiamen on the scene said most of the casualties were passing motorists.

Meanwhile, a Christian ex-president threatened today to cut off" President Amin Gemavel's head. Former president Suleiman Franjieh said in an interview in the leftist Beirut newspaper as-Safir: "We will need no help from anyone to cut off the head of the sick man at the helm. There are 101 ways to achieve this.

Franjieh, 75, was president when the civil war broke out in 1975. Like Gemayel, he belongs to the Maronite Catholic sect, which has dominated Lebanon since independence from France in 1943.

His threats against Gemayel, 43, came amid mounting pressure from the president's Christian and Moslem foes for him to step down. He has refused.

The ex-president's Marada, or Mountain Warriors, militia controls the Cedars Mountains in north Lebanon and he is closely allied with Syria, the main power broker in Lebanon

Franjieh blames Gemayel's Phalange Party for the 1978 massacre of his eldest son, Tony, along with Tony's wife, 3-year-old daughter and 32 bodyguards.

Franjieh said he has launched a drive with Parliament members to ensure a majority vote for a constitutional amendment that would shorten the presidential term from six years to three "in order to oust him (Gemayel)

Six people were killed Sunday in heavy artillery and rocket exchanges between Christian fighters and Druse militiamen in hills east of Beirut.

It was revealed Sunday that Alfred Yaghoubzadeh, a Paris-based photographer for the French photo agency, Sipa, was freed Friday night by Shiite Moslems after being held hostage for 50 days. News organizations cooperated with a Sipa request that Yaghoubzadeh's release not be reported until Sunday, when he left Yaghoubzadeh said his Shiite captors kept him in a cell but gave him plenty of food. He would not say where he was held and described his jailers only as Shiites who accused him of being a spy.

City seeks Main Street Program

By BOB HART

Pampa City Manager

We will be completing our application for the Main Street Program this week.

Although we have received a number of letters of support, I would encourage you to send the mayor and commission a letter indicating your support for the Main Street Program so that it can be included in our application.

One aspect of the Main Street approach that differs considerably from other community revitalization methods is the belief that the responsibility for the downtown does not rest solely with City Hall or building owners or major employers.

Main Street is the town's crossroads, center of the community's identity. It belongs to everyone - elected officials. merchants, bankers, senior citizens, churches, civic groups, fraternal orders and school children. We all share responsibility for its future health.

The Main Street Program does not produce instant change and physical improvements are desirable to build and sustain momentum, but they are only part of the story

The Main Street approach requires careful realignment of every aspect of the downtown through gradual implementation of the four points: Organization, Promotion, Design and Economic Restructuring.

Moreoever, the order in which a community implements the four parts can play a crucial role in the project success

Sometimes there is a natural tendency to leap immediately to economic restructuring recruiting new businesses, creating jobs and developing real estate.

The towns that have achieved the most impressive and lasting results, however, have worked first for organization, leadership development, promotion and public relations and improvements in design and visual appearance of the downtown before engaging in the more sophisticated process of economic restructuring. In doing so, they have built the necessary foundation of working together, which attracts and sustains new business confidence and activity.

The M. K. Brown Municipal Pool will close on Friday, Aug. 23. Although the pool is closing earlier than we would like, it is the last day we will have lifeguards available. If you want to get that last - minute swim in, you need to do so this

Residents' discards filling charity's wallet

DALLAS (AP) - Even the junk is upscale in Dallas, professional scavengers say.

"People around here throw out clothes more to keep up with the style than because they are worn out," said Steve Music of United Waste Material, which buys tons of clothing from the Salvation Army

Because Dallas seems to throw away a better-quality junk than most cities, its charities are raking in a respectable income. The combination of affluence and a status-conscious lifestyle make the city one of the nation's leaders in possessions donated to charity

'We buy throughout the Southwest, and the Dallas stuff is far better," said Music. "People throw away better garments here than they do in poorer places,"

In the last four years, the money generated by goods donated to the Salvation Army has grown 32 percent, to $2.2 million in 1984. The amount puts Dallas behind only San Francisco, New York City and Chicago in the value of goods donated, Maj. Larry White of the Salvation Army told the Dallas Times Herald.

At Goodwill Industries in Dallas, executive director Rod Ginther said the Dallas office has been among the fastest growing in the nation in the last four years, averaging about 15 percent to 20 percent

In 1984, sales of donated goods generated $2.9 million for Goodwill, he said.

"I would say over the next 10 years, there won't be another center in the country that could touch this center" in donated goods, White said. Six days a week, 52 weeks a year, a fleet of 17 Salvation Army trucks makes the rounds of Dallas-area neighborhoods to pick up goods, then returns to the 88,000-square-foot warehouse. There, 120 workers sort the salvageable from the worthless. About 20 percent of the goods are thrown away as unuseable, White said.

The rest of the goods are sold at four Salvation Army stores.

"You'd be surprised about the people who shop in our stores," White said. "Interns from Parkland (Memorial Hospital) and young lawyers who need a lot of good suits. You see Cadillacs in the parking lot parked next to jalopies.'

At Goodwill, which focuses more on clothes than appliances, the collection center contains 20-foot piles of clothing and a labyrinth of conveyor belts to sort them for retail sale in seven stores.

Music said United Waste Material Co. resells about three-quarters of the tons of clothing for rags, and ships the rest everywhere from Mozambique to the Ivory Coast, where it is repaired and resold.

What starts as a designer sheet in North Dallas could easily end up as a sari in India, he said.

"I think the border area is a real important area for the whole state and the whole country and it's going to be coming under increased scrutiny," said Jack Elder. "The churches are becoming more involved in identifying with the poor and oppressed and doing something about it."

Elder, who is scheduled for release Tuesday after serving 133 days of 150-day sentence, also said he will continue protesting U.S. government policy in Central America

The rangy Vietnam veteran said he has no regrets for defying immigration

"The government is doing what governments always do. They tend to be tyrants. They tend to step on people's rights," Elder, 41, told the San Antonio Light.

Elder was convicted earlier this year of conspiring to help two Salvadorans enter the country and of transporting them from the shelter to a bus station in McAllen. "I've paid my debt and go back to being a regular citizen. And an ex-convict," he said U.S. District Judge Filemon Vela of Brownsville had earlier sentenced Elder after he refused two years' probation that would have limited his activities in the sanctuary movement.

But Vela later decided to reconsider the sentence when told Elder could not meet other restrictions placed on his sentence, which would have prevented him from speaking out on Central American issues. The former San Antonio school teacher, wearing a white T-shirt with a portrait of the namesake of Nicaragua's Sandinistas and the legend, "Sandino Vive," told the newspaper he was contented with what he had done.

"I think that Diane (his wife) and I and Stacey Merkt, for the period we were down there, we were the right people for the job," he said.

We were direct and honest and dignified with the media. That helped get the issue out. We didn't try to exploit it, yet we didn't back down either when it came time to speak out," he said.

Ms. Merkt, Elder's co-defendant, received a probated sentence. Elder for almost two years was the director of Casa Oscar Romero, a Catholic Church-sponsored halfway house for Central American refugees

His case was a rallying point for the national sanctuary movement, a loose-knit collection of religious groups that shelter Central Americans who come to this

"The whole experience has been, in effect, a kind of a retreat to reflect and read and just get my batteries recharged. So it's been real helpful in that respect," Elder

Elder, until Tuesday, will continue his job as a maintenance handyman for the four dwellings operated by the halfway house, which requires all residents to work fulltime:

Elder said restrictions during his confinement have been loosened, allowing him to spend evenings with his family and stay out as late as I a.m. on weekends

He said he has dinner at home on most weekends, reads his boys to sleep and then catches a bus back for another night at the halfway

He has even attended a weekly peace vigil at San Fernando Cathedral, spoken at a Justice and Peace Convention sponsored by religious orders and handed out leaflets condemning the movie 'Rambo'' for its unrealistic depiction of war

His first trip to the Valley this week will help his former co-defendant, Ms. Merkt, prepare for her Saturday wedding.

Make-believe gunfighters wed during show

CLIFTON, Texas (AP) - Tina Thompson of Hallsburg married a horse thief and saved him from the

But she didn't mind her groom's shady past. She's a gunfighter

Miss Thompson is a member of the Waco Gunfighters, a club that puts on gunfighting skits at an Old West town at Texas Safari. Her husband, Paul Clemons, is the club's president.

Because they both enjoy the make-believe so much, they decided to tie the real-life knot in one of the gunfighter skits

"Since I was president of the Waco Gunfighters, I thought it would make them (club members) feel good to be part of something like this," Clemons said.

"This way, we could have our friends around," said the bride. Even the parents said they liked the unorthodox idea.

"I thought (my son) was pulling my leg at first when he told me about it," Velma Clemons told the Waco Tribune Herald. "I was real thrilled when I heard about (the wedding).

The "wedding" skit opened with townspeople chatting in front of the row of stores. The judge and a the thief sheriff's deputy walked out of the sheriff's office, marching a horse thief toward the gallows.

Arriving at the top of the platform steps, the judge and deputy discovered they didn't have a rope for hanging. Their alternate punishment, they announced, would be to force the thief to marry one of the women in town. A recent war had left the city short of men.

"I think I'd better get back up

But the judge brought out his 'daughter,'' whom the bridegroom agreed to marry. As the justice of the peace read, "If any man can show just cause why they may not lawfully be joined together," a woman in the crowd held her hand over the deputy's mouth. "I was just delighted when they called me and asked me to do it, said Alicia Sheffield, a real-life justice of the peace in Clifton. One of the spectators, Mike Motthart of Dallas, said, "We just happened to be here. I thought it (the wedding) was part of the act. "I thought it was a lovely ceremony," said his friend, Rick Hennig of Dallas. "It was a real surprise for us, and we still don't believe it's true.

Mary Lou Smith of Dallas described the skit as "unusual" and "bizarre.

After the wedding, the bride said family members also took part in the skit. Her mother and her brother-in-law are regular members of the club, but the bridegroom's parents became a sheriff and an Old West townswoman for the day.

Like anything which is a combination of mechanical and electronic, the little gadget has to be cleaned, adjusted and loaded with a new supply of special paper every so often if we expect to continue receiving those pictures from other points in Texas and the remainer of the world. Then there is the problem of having two small computers. Early Sunday morning the Associated Press satelite receiver is busy filling up the number one computer with advance feature stories and other

Since this advance copy nearly fills the number one computer, it is necessary for someone to move this copy over to the number two computer for storage until needed. ### Suspect storm formed quickly, but still avoidable, tapes show

GRAPEVINE, Texas (AP) -The sudden, violent storm that caught Delta Flight 191 could have been spotted and possibly avoided before the jumbo jet crashed, killing 134 people, the Dallas Times Herald said Sunday

The storm apparently formed spontaneously on the airport's north side, increased in intensity, then disappeared entirely in less than an hour

Although crash investigators still don't know if violent winds caused the Aug. 2 crash, weather radar records show the quickly forming storm could have been spotted in advance of 191's arrival and avoided, the newspaper said.

In analyzing records from the National Weather Service radar station in Stephenville, about 75 miles southwest of Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport, the newspaper said the records confirm witnesses' reports that the storm struck suddenly

Despite the storm's untimely appearance, the radar tapes indicate it had developed well before the jet reached it, the newspaper reported.

The weather information also suggests that although fast in developing, the storm was not unusual for Texas summers, the newspaper said.

The L-1011 jumbo jet entered the storm and slammed into the ground short of the runway, killing 134 people. Dangerous winds spawned by storms and known as wind shear are suspected as a

Witnesses and others interviewed by federal investigators say the storm turned deadly too fast for a timely warning and evasive action.

But National Transportation Safety Board investigators are still probing whether the plane's radar or tower controllers who were informed of the cloud formations could have provided enough warning of possible wind shears.

Fourteen minutes prior to the crash when the storm was first spotted on weather radar 'certainly is not too fast to take action if a pilot knows it's there, NTSB chief investigator Rudolf Kapustin told the Times Herald.

The radar tape was obtained last weeek by the Times Herald and analyzed with assistance from meteorologist Ross Dixon, vice president of Metracom, a weather consulting firm in Oklahoma City.

The tapes show the storm first appearing as a tiny dot at 5:52 p.m. By 6:04 p.m., it had become intense, Dixon said.

The Delta jet crashed at 6:06 p.m. The storm remained on the radar screen for the next 43 minutes, moving a few miles southeast before dissipating entirely by 6:49 p.m., the tapes 'It's a textbook case' of a storm developing in front of a weak front. The NTSB investigation into the crash is continuing, with a crash cause or causes not expected to be announced for weeks

Farm credit crisis is not surprising

The Farm Credit System, supposedly cooperative and controlled by the farmers themselves, through originally financed by the government, is in trouble. And it is not surprising, considering how liberally it has loaned to farmers and their co-ops. In fact, it has oversold credit to the farmer and is one of the reasons why farmers are so heavily in debt, having over-borrowed in the last few Export demand for grain, soybeans and other farm products has been very great, but much of these products have been sold on credit. The farmer who borrows money to plant a crop and then sells the crop on credit is asking for trouble.

Because the farmer has had to ask for extensions on many of his loans, much of the trouble has been passed to the farm credit institutions.

The Farm Credit System was originally set up by the government, with the cooperation of existing farmer organizations. Because the U.S. Department of Agriculture had such a strong hand in setting up this system, it is no more than right that the U.S. Treasury help in its present situation.

Eventually the government should get out of the Farm Credit System entirely. It has no business in the banking

The present world banking crisis is no mystery. International bankers got too generous and dished out loans to every country from Burundi to Bolivia. Our Farm Credit System has no record to brag about, but there is considerable difference between the credit of an American farmer and that of a Bolivian peasant.

Partners in boondoggles

Even as Gov. Mario Cuomo (D.-N.Y.) and the White House wage a bitter war of words over tax reform, they have been quietly playing "footsie" on possibly the biggest taxpayer boondoggle in history, the infamous $4-10 billion Westway project, which candidate Ronald Reagan repeatedly promised to build in his efforts to woo New York's muscle-bound construction unions whose bosses get paid $300-400,000 a year just for labor peace.

(Fortunately, a federal judge temporarily stopped Westway in its tracks on August 7 ostensibly to save the striped bass, but effectively saving more stripes on taxpayers' backs - pending the usual appeals.)

At the same time, another Reagan-baiting Northeast liberal, Gov. Michael Dukakis (D.-Mass.) is quietly snuggling up to the White House for support for an equally obscene boondoggle - the $2-4 billion plan to depress the Central Artery in Boston, presently stalled by the Republican Senate.

Dukakis has not only named the Bechtel Corporation (former home base of George Schultz and Casper Weinberger) to manage the Artery project, he has also retained Boston lawyer Roger Moore to lobby the administration for him. Moore, the financial angel of the Massachusetts GOP, was one of Reagan's earliest and biggest backers.

In reality, neither "Wasteway" (as it is dubbed) nor the Central Artery are "highway projects." Both in fact are real estate development programs in which gasoline excise taxpayers will ante up between $60 and $200 million an acre to create tremendously valuable new downtown urban real estate. This will then be lucratively developed by big-time private developers who, along with their allies in the monopolistic construction unions, are among the most powerful campaign contributors.

New York's 4.2-mile-long Westside highway could be re-built and widened for $100-600 million, about $25-130 million a mile - about par for urban highway renovation.

Instead, the giant Wasteway project would create nearly 230 new acres of Manhattan Island by filling in a vast 1,000-foot-wide strip of the Hudson River for 4.2 miles, putting half of the highway's twelve lanes in a tunnel through the enormous landfill. This would leave approximately 180 acres of the new prime riverfront real estate to be developed by politicians and friends.

The most conservative estimates say it will cost $4 billion to build Westway - a "billion dollar a mile," but history says it will cost at least $10 billion - and probably a lot more

This means that taxpayers would pay up to forty times as much per mile to build Westway as it would cost to re-build the old Westside highway. So, the nation's gasoline excise taxpayers will pay up to $9.6 billion, not for highway construction, but for 180 new Manhattan acres - up to $60 million an

Yet this is not nearly as costly per acre as the Boston Central Artery project. This boondoggle is variously estimated at $1.2 to $2.2 billion, but is much more likely to cost over $3 billion before it is completed. Three-billion dollars for less than eight-tenths of a mile of highway renovation! That's up to $3 billion a mile, 50 percent higher than the worst-case estimates of Westway For this fabulous sum, Boston will get four more useable lanes of north-south traffic, plus, most importantly of all, 12-16 acres of new downtown property. Since the actual cost of completely renovating, re-decking, and widening the present elevated Central Artery is less than $800 million, taxpayers will be paying over $2 billion just for real estate development and the considerable present elevated highway.

The cost per "new" acre in Boston is between $130 and $180 million, two-to-three times that of Westway, and infinitely more than Boston property is now worth - but then, 90 percent of its cost would be financed by the federal taxpayers.

Ma

whe

bed tas Va me

This is why both the Central Artery and Westway are (quietly) but rigorously opposed by the professional bureaucracies within the Federal Highway Administration (FHWA) and the Transportation Department. They do not see how either project, no matter how cosmetically attractive, actually adds to the interstate highway

Fortunately, the Artery project is, thus far, also opposed by Transportation Secretary Elizabeth Dole. Westway, however, has been so thoroughly endorsed at the White House that lower-level FHWA officials have had to cave in and go along with that huge boondoggle. And the army Corps of Engineers obediently granted the landfill permit

And with Dukakis playing the Roger Moore and Bechtel connection, it's not hard to imagine similar White House pressure to change FHWA's minds on the Central Artery.

Fortunately, there is already a bill (HR 1888-S826) to stop "Wasteway" forever, authored by Rep. Claudine Schneider (R.-R.I.) and cosponsored by a curious coalition of liberals like Barney Frank (D.-Mass.) and Ted Weiss (D.-N.Y.) and conservatives such as Vin Weber (R.-Minn.) and Sen. Gordon Humphrey (R.-N.H.). This would void the appeals process.

Now Rep. Frank should develop a similar bill for the Central Artery, and taxpayers should shout their opposition to both boondoggles in this era of burgeoning deficits.

Press' function reporting, not judging

By Don Graff

It's no news that the news business in this country is not in such good repute with the people of the country these days.

The press, if we're to believe what we hear, is widely regarded as arrogant, overbearing, biased, obsessed with sensation and more interested in getting a story than in the rights of individuals and the interests of the nation. And more, much more.

It is not a pretty image for an institution that is also regarded - especially by itself - as a pillar of democratic society. This problem is addressed by Burns W. Roper, of the polling outfit, in the current issue of Freedom at Issue, the magazine of Freedom House, a New York-based organization that keeps watch on freedom's ups and downs worldwide.

Roper, who is also a vice president of Freedom House, regrets to report that the negative public perception noted above is borne out by his organization's recent surveys. For exam-

On the question of fairness and balance, 50 percent of those polled believe the press doesn't care; 44 percent give it credit for trying.

Sixty-two percent say stories of high public interest but slight importance are given greater prominence than more important stories of low interest; less than half as many, 28 percent, believe the press puts importance first.

Forty-nine percent think the press would knowingly break a story endangering U.S. troops; 41 percent would trust it to keep a secret to save lives.

Forty-one percent think the press is out to get certain groups (frequently, Roper notes, the person polled hap-pens to be a member of the group specified); 49 percent say it's tough on everyone, playing no favorites. It may be some comfort, in view of the above, that 74 percent would not favor revising the First Amendment to eliminate or curtail freedom of the press. But Roper finds the 21 percent who would be willing to do some constitutional tinkering ominously high.

The important point, according to Roper, is not whether the specific criticisms are right or wrong but the public perception that the press is out of line. With rights go responsibilities, he observes, and, as the public sees it, the press is playing loose with the latter while demanding the former.

Every public institution, as he puts it metaphorically, requires a reservoir of good will to function successfully. In the case of the press, he suggests, the reservoir may have sprung a leak. He does not, however, look for anything as drastic as a rewriting of constitutional guarantees. Rather, he sees as quite possible a succession of court interpretations that gradually narrow the application of those guarantees.

I would not be inclined to disagree with any of this. Comment, however, is called for on a couple of points.

One is the definition of term often used, as by Roper, as interchangeable with "media." Print and electronic journalism are, however, very different. Much of what the 'press" is currently being taken to task for applies much more specifically to one than the other.

Lastly, in defense of the press it might be said that it best serves the public interest - which, in a healthy democracy, is by assuring a fully informed public — not by judging what should or should not be properly reported, but by reporting what happens simply because it happens.

Dear Abby

Abusers of language get rapped on knuckles By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Cheers for your column on language abuse! May I submit my own pet peeve? The use of the word "lady" instead of

"Woman" is a perfectly good word and refers to any adult female, whereas the word "lady" is a particular type of woman—one showing "refinement, gentility and good

IN BROCTON, N.Y.

DEAR ABBY: My pet peeve concerns using the word "so" in place of the word "very."

Advertisers do it constantly. Example: "Our (whatever) is so soft, so beautiful, so tasty, so affordable, etc." If a product rates particular merit, the "so" is lengthened, and it becomes "sooooo beautiful, sooooo tasty, etc." My name is Robert J. Vanden-Heuvel, but you may sign

DEAR ABBY: Let's put a stop to using the word "hopefully" as follows: "Hopefully we'll be there soon." The sentence should be, "I hope we'll be there soon.'

I hope we soon rid ourselves of the earsore "hopefully." Please add this to your collection. SMALL-TOWN LAWYER

DEAR ABBY: I'd like to put in two cents regarding the misuse of the English language.

The nonsensical double negative "irregardless" is now so widely used that I actually found it in the dictionary!

DEAR ABBY: Let's get to work on the word "got." My dictionary says "got" is the past and past participle

When one has said, "I have, he has, she has, they have," why "got"? "I got, she got, you got, they got" grates on my nerves. Got the idea? NO MORE "GOTS"

DEAR ABBY: How about people who say they feel "badly"? People can feel good and they can feel bad, but the person who feels "badly" feels with his fingers and is doing a poor job of it. And please deliver me from all these "feelers" who say, "I feel you should do it," instead of, "I think you should do it." Feeling is not the same as thinking. FEELING FEISTY

DEAR ABBY: Please start a campaign to do away with meaningless phrases such as "by and large." What does it mean, anyway? and son of Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Absolutely nothing! Put that one in the same class with "each and every." Another waste of words. FORMER SCHOOL TEACHER

DEAR ABBY: When are they going to bury that corny expression, "Have a good day"? I am so tired of it. It's insincere, meaningless and puts the recipient of that overused 'wish" in an awkward position. What is the proper response? "You have a good day, too"? A simple "Thank you" or "Good bye" is quite enough, thank you.

TIRED OF H.A.G.D. DEAR ABBY: Speaking of misusing the English language: When someone answers the telephone and hears: "This is Dr. Smith's office calling," I am tempted to respond, "And this is Mrs. Karney's house answering." When a secretary says, "I'm sorry, he's tied up right now, I want to ask, "Any suspects? Or did you do it?"

Also, when I hear "At this point in time," I want to say, "Time doesn't have points; it's continuous, it keeps moving, it doesn't stand still."

There's more, Abby, but I wish there weren't.

Why liability costs are rising

DEAR BRUCE - We are the owners and managers of a small business. Up until now, we have been doing reasonably well and showing a decent

We have just returned from a consultation with our insurance broker, however, and are in a state of shock Our general liability insurance has been increased by a factor of seven. That's right ... seven times as much this year as last year. Our product liability has been increased 500 percent. The liability insurance on our fleet of delivery vehicles has been increased over 300 percent.

Obviously, we will have to pass these expenses along to our customers if we're going to pay these additional premiums. But frankly, I don't think we can be competitive with all of handing out huge awards on personal

these insurance pass-alongs

Has the whole world gone crazy? Our old premiums were high enough. but the new ones are totally unmanageable. Where do we go from here, besides belly-up? - N.Y., NEWARK,

DEAR N.Y. — During the late 1970s and early 1980s there was a price war in the insurance industry. At that time, the insurance companies' portfolio profits were so substantial that they were not particularly concerned with earning an underwriting profit.

But now, in the lower-interest era that we are currently "enjoying," portfolio profits have disappeared. The lack of portfolio profits and huge underwriting losses have given us the old one-two punch with regard to liability premiums.

On top of this, juries and judges are panies have not been collecting enough premiums to cover these kinds of awards, so you can guess what they decided to do: raise the premiums.

Are the insurance companies guiltless? I think not. But if a finger must be pointed in one particular direction. it has to be at the inordinate number of huge awards that judges and juries are giving to plaintiffs. These are fast making liability insurance either impossible to pay for or impossible to

Until sanity is restored, by legislation or otherwise, I'm afraid that all of us will be the victims.

DEAR A.M. - Many employers attempt to circumvent the law with regard to social security, workers' compensation and so forth, by calling the people who work for them "independent contractors.

tor, you must, by definition, be free to come and go as you please, work whatever hours you choose, work on a commission basis, and be outside the care, custody and supervision of an employer.

If you are an independent contract

It appears that the job you have been offered meets this criteria, so I have no problem with it.

Remember, however, that you will be obliged to file quarterly income-tax statements. And instead of paying the customary social security tax, you will have to pay a self-employed tax.

Also be aware that you are collecting money and turning it over to another party. If that other party fails to do what you have promised, you might be held responsible.

Aside from that, this seems like a good way to get back into the work force. I hope you knock their socks off.

Scientists look for answer to mystery of wind shear

OLIVE BRANCH, Miss. (AP) -A North Mississippi soybean field has been turned into an observation post in the hunt for a method to warn airliner crews about deadly wind shear.

Using an advanced radar system and an array of computers, scientists are peering deep into summer rain storms to find out how wind shears develop

'The data we are collecting will be used, we hope, to develop some sort of warning device that will get information about hazardous conditions to the aircrews," said Dr. Ronald E. Rinehart, the head of the field team from Lincoln Laboratories of Lexington, Mass.

Lincoln Laboratories, a research arm of Massachusetts Institute of Technology, is conducting the wind shear study for the Federal Aviation Administration. Another team from the University of North Dakota has set up a cooperative study about five miles away.

Wind shears have been blamed for dozens of major airline crashes, including an accident that killed 154 people near New Orleans on July 9, 1982.

'Wind shear is a general term for a change in wind direction or speed," Rinehart said in an interview last week

Most wind shears are harmless, he said, but they become dangerous when they occur over a short distance.

Pilots of heavy jet planes can find themselves forced into the ground when they run into wind shears at low altitude during take off or landing.

A form of wind shear, known as a microburst, is suspected as the cause of the crash of a Delta Air Lines Lockheed L-1011 earlier this month in Dallas.

"All microbursts are wind shear events." Rinehart said. "But all wind shears aren't microbursts. Microbursts occur in or near rainstorms as a column of air, cooled by the rain within it, strikes

'It's been compared to pointing garden hose straight down. Rinehart said. "Only the air, instead of going into the ground, strikes the earth and sprays outward in all directions."

The resulting sudden shift in wind can throw large planes out of control at a time when they are most vulnerable - at low altitude and relatively low speeds.

Accident investigators suspect that a microburst struck the Delta jet as it was landing at Dallas and slammed it into the ground short of the runway.

The three-engined Lockheed passed through a heavy rainstorm as it was approaching the airport.

The Lincoln Laboratories station is set up in a series of trailers and temporary structures next to a radar antenna rotating beneath an inflatable dome, about eight miles southeast of Memphis International Airport.

Inside, Rinehart and other members of the team aim their radar beam at rainstorms and study a trio of displays depicting precipitation, wind velocity and rurbulence in bright colors.

By varying the sweep and elevation of the radar antenna, Rineheart and his colleagues can collect data on different parts of a storm as it develops and then

"We scan at various elevations and keep repeating," Rinehart said. "We're getting different layers of a storm and from that we can reconstruct it later on and compare that with data on other

Several times during the week an elaborately instrumented Cessna Citation, a twin-engined jet operated by the University of North Dakota, flew through the clouds to collect information on temperature, size of raindrops, winds, icing conditions and turbulence.

The information collected by the scientists aboard the jet will be shared with the Lincoln Laboratories team.

At one point, Rinehart and his team spotted a developing microburst and guided the jet into

"I was surprised that he went into it, but he did," Rinehart said. There was about a 50-knot downdraft and he lost about 500 feet in just seconds.

Dr. Don Burrows, the flight scientist aboard the Citation, said the trip through the microburst was not boring.
"We kind of leave it up to the pilot to decide whether to go into something like that," Burrows said. "We could tell that we were in a microburst - it got pretty rough. Once the research teams complete their work, Rinehart said, their data will be used to develop a radar system that can developing wind shear conditions. He estimates that such a system could be ready for installation at airports in about four or five years. Once the warning systems are in place, air traffic controllers or meteorologists can relay warnings to pilots in time to avoid dangerous weather conditions.

'The idea is to develop a system that will get the information to the pilots in time for them to do something about it," Rinehart

Abortion protests bringing unrest

TYLER, Texas (AP) - The window to Dr. Anton Lester's clinic in this East Texas city has become a window to an incoming wave of anti-abortion sentiment that has picked up recently in this area of the state.

Lester, who has performed abortions for the past 12 years, has watched protesters during the past five months become increasingly hostile as they picket the clinic and carry signs labeling him a murderer and a Nazi.

Two weeks ago, hundreds of protesters prayed and sang hymns while they displayed a dead, five-month old fetus in a tiny wooden casket.

"I think it's in terribly poor taste," said Lester, 64. " tiny minority of religious fanatics who want to impose their beliefs on the rest of us. Few doctors perform abortions

Mexico dismantling trade barriers

MEXICO CITY (AP) - Enrique Martinez talks readily about his business.

Sitting behind a high table that displays expensive perfumes and colognes, he says he buys his goods in the United States — sometimes flying to New York, other times driving to Los Angeles.

He stocks up at retail and discount stores on well-known brands and comes back to Mexico where he turns a profit on the black

That kind of business is one of the reasons the Mexican government recently made a major change in its trade policy. Martinez is one of dozens of Mexicans selling all sorts of smuggled goods on tables along the crowded streets in the huge Tepito market in downtown Mexico City. Analysts point to the thriving Tepito market as an example of what happens when an economy is highly protected — as Mexico's is from foreign goods.

Mexicans are drawn to the market in search of products most often electronic gear - they can't buy in Mexico or have trouble finding. Prices are often lower than in retail stores but higher than in the United States.

For example, a 14-inch, Japanese-made, color television sells for the Mexican peso equivalent of about $600 at the market. A U.S. discount house advertises a 19-inch TV made by the same company for $150 less. A Mexican appliance store wants $715, which includes a 15 percent sales tax, for a 20-inch set the company makes here - but there were none in stock.

In recentweeks, the government has moved to widen Mexico's a plan to arrest the economy's deterioration.

It's a move feared by many who worry that such steps will lead to a flood of cheaper foreign goods that will knock out local companies and add to the already high unemployment rolls.

Government officials acknowledge that a more liberalized trade policy will be tough on some businesses.

Commerce Secretary Hector Hernandez said recently, "I don't deny that in some cases highly inefficient businesses - which were taking advantage of the excess of protection, which were taking advantage of high prices going to suffer. Yes, yes, they are going to suffer.

But he insisted the harm caused would be less than the economic benefits.

Mexico depends heavily on export sales of its oil to bring in money to pay its $94 billion foreign debt and buy food and other needed goods. But falling oil prices and sluggish demand have cut into those revenues this year. Sales of non-oil exports also have been

Hernandez, in announcing the trade changes, said, "The only viable option to increase the income from foreign currency is the exportation of non-petroleum goods and services, like tourism.'

Government officials also are counting on expanded trade to force domestic industries to be more competitive, helping reduce stubbornly high inflation. 'The opening to foreign trade is indispensable for Mexico," said markets to foreign goods as part of Pablo Garcia Barbachano, president of the Mexican Business ouncil for International Affairs.

Specifically, the government is dismantling a cumbersome system that requires businesses to obtain licenses to bring in foreign goods. Instead, businesses will pay tariffs, or charges, on the imports, ranging up to 50 percent of a product's value.

Licensing permits will still be required for some goods, including basic food products, parts for automobile assembly, basic materials for pharmaceuticals, computers and telecommunications merchandise.

Economist Ignacio Tri neros of the Mexican Autonomous Institute that they were able to establish as of Technology described the move a result of this protection - are not to a tariff system as "very

'The idea is that only with a more liberal policy toward imports is it possible to promote exports,' he said.

Javier Murcio, an economist at the Lexington, Mass., consulting firm of Data Resources Inc., said, 'It's a fact of life: The only way out of the financial (problems) is exporting more.'

With the recent moves, some analysts wonder if Mexico is positioning itself to join the General Agreements on Tariff and Trade (GATT). Ninety countries belong to GATT, following its rules and negotiating trade-expanding arrangements.

Mexico, one of the few big free-market economies outside GATT, nearly joined in 1979-80 but backed off under political pressure from those worried the country would lose some of its independence.

SWC race may be even tighter than in '84

By DENNE H. FREEMAN AP Sports Writer

DALLAS - The Southwest Conference had its tightest football race in 70 years last season and 1985 could be even more pulsating.

Six teams have a legitimate shot at the title with only Texas Tech and Rice considered unlikely longshots, and SMU not eligible

A new conference rule bars schools from winning the title in a year they cannot play in the Cotton Bowl, and SMU is banned from all post-season bowl appearances for two years under terms of its most recent NCAA probation.

How close was it in 1984?

For the first time the champion (Houston and Southern Methodist tied), had two losses and for the first time the five top teams finished within one game of each other

Houston and SMU were 6-2 followed by Texas Christian, Texas and Arkansas at 5-3.

Arkansas came within a point of the co-championship, finishing a game back after a 32-31 lost to TCU

Texas A&M came back strong to whip TCU and Baylor missed out on a co-championship with cliffhanger losses to SMU and Arkansas.

Texas Tech lost close games to Baylor, Texas and Houston.

Rice didn't win an SWC game, but scared SMU,

Baylor and Houston. 'I think it's a wide open race,'' said SMU Coach Bobby Collins. "Arkansas will be stronger, TCU and Texas should pick up where they left off and the other conference teams should be stronger.... Remember Houston came out of nowhere last year."

SMU, which defeated Notre Dame in the Aloha Bowl, is loaded again. The Mustangs are 49-9-1 in the last four seasons under Collins.

While their title and bowl aspirations are now futile, the Mustangs players reacted to the probation by saying it would make them even more determined to win all eleven games on their Quarterback Don King will again return to lead an offense that averaged 396 yards per game, including 251 on the ground.

Class tailbacks Reggie Dupard and Jeff Atkins will be back to give SMU a 1-2 punch that should be the envy of the nation. Make that a 1-2-3 punch with the addition of freshman Bill Jones, one of the most sought-after Texas high school stars.

While saying that SMU would have been favored, "every team should be a notch better," said Arkansas Coach Ken Hatfield.

Arkansas is loaded on defense, returning nine The Hogs led the SWC in scoring defense and total defense last fall. Hatfield must find a quarterback to replace Brad Taylor and Danny Nutt. Greg Thomas can run and Mark Calcagni can pass. Razorback receiver James Shibest, who caught 51 passes for 907 yards and seven touchdowns, is the cream of the SWC.

Houston, a Cotton Bowl loser to Doug Flutie and Boston College, brings back the exciting Gerald Landry, a veer quarterback supreme. The Cougars have swift receivers and tough running tailbacks led by Raymond Tate.

Tackle T.J. Turner will anchor a respectable Cougar defensive unit.

Don't sell Coach Jackie Sherrill's Texas Aggies short. They closed fast last year and are loaded in talent positions particularly at quarterback where Craig Stump and Kevin Murray can produce instant Sherrill said the final victories over the Horned Frogs and Longhorns "should serve as a good springboard for the next year.

"We reacted well to adversity," he added. On defense, A&M has nine starters returning. Texas could be pesky if Coach Fred Akers can solve his inconsistent quarterbacking. Texas fell from No. 1 in the nation last year during a seige of

Todd Dodge and Bret Stafford will be battling it out with redshirt tailback Charles Hunter expecting to add punch to his position

'The way things went at the end of last year can be turned into an incentive for this year," said Akers, whose team was bombed 55-17 by Iowa in the Freedom Bowl

A non-conference schedule which includes Missouri, Stanford and Oklahoma should tell Texas where it stands. Then there's the return of All-America running back Kenneth Davis and resurgent TCU under wildly enthusiastic Coach Jim Wacker.

TCU's 8-4 record was the best in two decades 'Who would have ever thought the little ole

Horned Frogs would be 8-1 and ranked in the Top Ten last year?" said Wacker. "That was a great experience and one we would like to continue in Speedy quarterback Scott Ankrom is expected to give the Horned Frog Veer offense an added dimension.

'We're still have to completely overhaul our offensive line after graduation losses and we're not deep in the defensive front," Wacker said. "We still have an inordinate amount of speed at our skill positions. We'll have three guys in the backfield with 4.4 speed.

The Baylor Bears have two excellent quarterbacks in Cody Carlson and Tom Muecke. Coach Grant Teaff has retooled his offense to take more advantage of their passing talents.

GRAND BLANC, Mich. (AP) -Among the flock of slim, blond-haired young golfing pros who seem to be taking over the PGA Tour, there now walks Ken Green - a man who lets his sister carry his bag, wears his heart on his sleeve and has the courage to admit he gets scared beyond belief standing over a 4-foot putt

Green ended four years of frustration on Sunday by making the Buick Open his first victory on the Tour. He beat another non-winner, Australian Wayne Grady, by four shots and set a tournament record in the bargain.

Steven T. Trotter, 22, of Barrington, R.I., faces arraignment Aug. 28 in Ontario Provincial Court and a maximum fine of $500 on a charge of performing an illegal stunt.

He may also be charged by American authorities because he is believed to have launched his barrel on the U.S. side of the Niagara River before plunging Sunday over the 176-foot Horseshoe

Lying inside two "Greek pickle barrels" placed end-to-end and surrounded by giant inner tubes, Trotter became the seventh known person to plunge over the falls and survive. He received only a cut on his arm, said Niagara Parks Police Constable John Clark

After the fall, Trotter emerged from the hatch of his barrel and 'waved to us to let us know he was all right," said Clark. He was examined at Greater Niagara General Hospital.

Trotter, who described the trip as "like the best roller-coaster ride you had when you were a 10-year-old" and "like being on an elevator with no cable," said he had dreamed of such a feat since he was a child.

He said his grandfather, who "worked for Bethlehem Steel in a job he didn't like," inspired him. 'He said, 'If you have a dream, do your dream and do it up right," Trotter said.

Clark said at least 10 people and two film crews witnessed Trotter's plunge from Terrapin Point in the barrel, which was equipped with two two-way radios and two oxygen

Trotter, who works as a bartender in Fort Lauderdale. Fla., six months out of the year, said he had worked on the plan with the help of engineers and manufacturers for five years. He said he spent about $6,200 making the 16-foot-long by six-foot-high

Pentagon provides jetliner for a one-man Congressional junket

WASHINGTON (AP) - When members of the House do their globe-trotting at taxpayer expense during the congressional recess, it usually takes at least four or five of them to qualify for a Pentagon

But Rep. Bill Alexander, the No. 4 man in the House Democratic leadership, is currently on a six-day "solo" flight to Brazil on a C-9 transport that the Air Force says costs $2,310 for each hour it's

The aircraft was provided to the Arkansas Democrat on the basis of an Aug. 7 request from House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr.,

D-Mass O'Neill's letter to the Pentagon said that Alexander, the deputy House whip, would be heading a delegation including Reps. Ronnie Flippo, D-Ala., Butler Derrick, D-S.C., Toby Roth, R-Wisc., and Dan Glickman, D-Kan.

Chris Matthews, a spokesman for O'Neill, said that "there's usually a minimum of four or five (members needed) to get a plane' assigned by the Pentagon. When the aircraft took off from Andrews Air Force Base near Washingto last Wednesday, Alexander was the only member of Congress aboard, according to the Glickman says previous commitments forced him to decline Alexander's invitation to join the trip. He said he was pretty confident" Alexander was given this message before Aug. 7. when O'Neill made his request to the Pentagon for a plane.

The other three members were not available for comment but their spokesmen said they knew of no plans for their bosses to ever participate in the trip.

Tom Springer, Roth's press secretary said: "The August recess? He planned long in advance to be in Wisconsin the entire time.

Flippo aide Mike Adcock said he hadn't heard of any Brazil plans by Flippo and believed he would have been alerted had his boss been considering such a trip.

Derrick's administrative assistant, Al Kamhi, said that before the recess began Aug. 2, his boss had turned down several invitations from Alexander to join the trip.

Matthews said that although O'Neill signed the request, assume the names came from Mr. Alexander ... The normal pattern is for the person putting the trip together to justify the trip and put the list (of participants) together.

The Air Force is not happy that the plane, which carries up to 42 passengers, left with only one awmaker aboard

'That's what is so galling,' said one officer who requested anonymity. "It's bad enough that we take the grief for having to provide airplanes for these junkets. But it looks like here that there was a little congressional subterfuge involved.

Another high-ranking officer said: "I think they really rubbed it in our faces on this one.

Judy Smith, Alexander's secretary, said the purpose of the trip is to inspect alcohol fuel production, a major industry in Brazil, in connection with a federal grant recently given the University of Arkansas to study the alternative energy source.

Helping the household budget

AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — In a market where phrases such as "lowest prices in town" and "huge discounts" float from balloons and fly from banners, General Motors has come up with the real thing - a

As most automobile buyers know, real bargains are rarities in any market, no matter how hard seller shouts. In fact, the harder a merchant shouts, it seems, the less likely is the customer to get a good deal.

However, a 7.7 percent interest rate, which GM now offers on many 1985 cars, advertises itself loudly, clearly and credibly, especially when some rates are double that, and where bank card users may pay close to 20 percent on short-term debt

Consumers today are acutely aware of interest rates, and they react strongly to any changes. They know that a point here and a point there soon adds up to more dollars than there are in the budget

Ask housing people, who almost starved when mortgage rates reached the upper teens a few years ago, convincing millions of would-be buyers that a new roof over their heads was less important than avoiding bankruptcy.

In fact, ever since it was learned, by hard experience, that interest rates could reach into the double digits, the American public has probably been more interested in financing costs than ticket prices. They know, for example, that while $25 a month mightn't seem like much, it amounts to $1,200 in four

They are equally aware, of course, that when interest rates are cut by a similar amount that the savings will be identical, and for households spending close to their budget limit that can sound like a raise from the boss. In fact, for the median household earning less than $30,000 a year and living at the limit of its income, a saving or a raise of that size is substantial. GM says it will do better, averaging $1,550 to $2,250 a

Because of this, in-house financing has become a more important factor in the markets.

Lakeside town running dr

HEATH, Texas (AP) - For almost four days, this town of 1,459 near Dallas resembled a wasteland as its water supply dried up.

Residents on the east corridor of Lake Ray Hubbard caught dripping water from their faucets in bottles and pans before it began pouring back into storage tanks Saturday.

"I haven't had a bath in two days," said Betty Casey.

The fire department worried about the scant 2,090 gallons it has on hand to fight a fire.

Heath's water problems are common to many of the rural towns that run along the east corridor of Lake Ray Hubbard. With current pipelines, the North Texas Municipal Water District can pump four million gallons of water each day into the towns.

But it's not enough to meet the peak demands of the nearly 20,000 residents in the area, said David Stephens, water manager for the

"When you get a long, hot summer like you got there, that area is exceeding the capacity of the pipeline," Stephens said.

Unlike last summer's drought, the town has not rationed water and development has caused a 25 percent water-use rise.

"We thought we'd make it," said Benny Abernathy, president of the Forney Lake Water Board.

Monday water pressure dropped allowing less than 200,000 gallons a day, Abernathy said. And overnight the town's reserve

450,000 gallons was drained. But Stephens said by ignoring a warning to ration water, communities are at fault and deserve the situation, Stephens

"There's really nothing we can do about it," he said. "We can't go down there and make them ration water. ... We're pumping every drop of water we can."

Heath Mayor L. Newton Burns is using the shortage to rally support for a city water system.

"Typically these rural water districts are very uncooperative," Burns said. "They want to keep it the same old country it was in

Americans are concerned with violence in the stands

NEW YORK (AP) - Six of 10 Americans say beer sales at sporting events should be restricted because drinking contributes to rowdyism, according to a Media General-Associated Press poll on spectator violence.

Respondents in the nationwide telephone poll were asked to choose between two statements: "The sale of beer at games contributes to spectator rowdyism and should be limited" or "Beer sales should not be limited because it would unfairly inconvenience the majority because of the problems

Sixty-two percent of the 1,517 respondents said beer sales should be limited, while 33 percent said limiting beer sales would be unfair to the majority of spectators who behave. Five percent were unsure. Support for limited beer sales is one indication that many Americans are concerned about violence in the stands. Nearly four in 10 respondents said they had witnessed fights among spectators at a game. Fourteen percent said they had felt personally threatened by rowdy fans.

While many were concerned about violence, 56 percent said last spring's deadly riot at a soccer match in Belgium would not likely be duplicated at a U.S. sporting event. Almost four people in 10 disagreed, saying such riots were likely to occur.

Thirty-eight people were killed and hundreds injured when English fans charged into a section filled with supporters of an Italian team, causing a stadium wall in Brussels to collapse.

Rowdyism also has become a concern in the United States. Uniformed security guards are common sights at stadiums. Alcohol-free sections, low-alcohol beer, and limited sales of beer are being tried in baseball parks this summer

Respondents in the Media General-AP poll were asked if they thought some sports encouraged violent behavior among fans, and 62 percent said yes. More than half cited hockey, 38 percent cited football and 20 percent said soccer encouraged fan violence.

Forty-nine percent of the respondents said sports teams should face disciplinary action if their fans are consistently violent, while 45 percent said the teams should not be blamed.

Respondents in the Media General-Associated Press poll included a random, scientific sampling of 1,517 adults across the country July 5-13. As with all sample surveys, the results of Media General-AP telephone polls can vary from the opinions of all Americans because of chance variation in the sample

For a poll based on about 1,500 interviews, the results are subject to an error margin of 3 percentage points either way because of chance variations in the sample.

questioned all Americans with telephones, there is only 1 chance in 20 that the findings would vary from the results of polls such as this one by more than 3 percentage

Of course, the results could differ from other polls for several reasons. Differences in exact wording of questions, in the timing of interviews and in the interview methods could also cause

"She is the official paper product company," said Anthony Canton. marketing director for the Texas Sesquicentennial Commission. "There were other companies that came forward, but they never formally went through the application process.

Judie Ince's five-year-old company caters mostly to retail stores, offering napkins, cups and plates, hats, greeting cards, wrapping paper and wedding supplies.

'It's quite an honor to be able to serve our state," said Ms. Ince, who operates a paper products showroom at the World Trade Center: "Everyone's real enthused about it."

Canton said the company's selection was based on several factors, including, "method of distribution, how are they going to get it out there in the marketplace; quality control standards; how well will the product hold up; the arwork; the state Sesquicentennial flag; and the royalties to the state.

He said every commemorative product will pay a state royalty. About 300 products have been sanctioned to bear the seal. Canton estimated those royalties would produce at least $7 million.

Simpson's measure includes civil and criminal penalties against employers who knowingly hire illegal aliens in the future; a delayed amnesty program to be instituted after employer sanctions are proved effective; optional record-keeping by employers; and financial aid to state and local governments that would provide welfare and education programs for newly legalized aliens.

Debate festers over immigration reform WASHINGTON (AP) — Forceful Michael Durando, president of lobbying by Western fruit and growers' Farm Labor Alliance, vegetable growers will strongly influence, and may decide the fate, of Congress' latest attempt to stop the ragtag army of illegal immigrants who cross U.S. borders looking for work. Festering disputes over amnesty, employer sanctions and discrimination against Hispanics are still unresolved in this year's immigration debate, but the argument over foreign agricultural workers threatens to eclipse them The Western growers demand that new immigration legislation permit an ample supply of highly mobile foreign laborers to pick perishable crops now harvested by undocumented field hands. As the growers send lobbyists and money to Washington, their opponents from Hispanic groups, the AFL-CIO and the American Civil Liberties Union are digging called the potential loss of a largely unregulated foreign work force "a life-threatening situation" for the perishable crop industry in California, Oregon and Washington. "Western growers have an insatiable need for cheap labor," countered Joe Trevino, executive director of the League of United Latin American citizens. Alan K. Simpson, R-Wyo., chief sponsor of immigration legislation in the Senate, said the Western growers' greed knows no bounds.

But his compromise proposal, which would ease restrictions on the current, highly regulated foreign worker program, is also unacceptable to opponents of the growers.

The full Senate will likely consider Simpson's immigration bill next month. Sen. Pete Wilson. R-Calif., will attempt to amend it with the growers' proposals.

BUSINESS REVIEW & FORECAST

YOU DESERVE THE BEST.

Crawford Roofing and Insulation Co. at 805 South Cuyler has been serving this area since 1957. The company was established in Pampa by Bob Crawford Sr. and has grown into a local family business. The third generation company is now owned and managed by partners and brothers Gary, Steve and Bob Crawford Jr.

Crawford Roofing and Insulation specializes in the following areas to serve their customers' needs: Hot Built-up Roofing, Rigid Spray-on Polyurethane Insulation and Elastomeric Vapor Barrier coatings. Single-ply, shingles and other type roofs are available to meet individual specifications. Seventeen qualified employees and professional management make sure the application of materials for any job is done to complete customer satisfaction. The company can handle any size job from small to large and will be happy to answer all questions the customer has before the project is started. Free estimates are gladly given and recommendations for the right materials to be used insure the customer's needs are completely satisfied.

Being a local firm the Crawfords know their reputation is on the line with every job they do and that their continued success depends on professional quality work being maintained.

Crawford Roofing and Insulation can be reached at any time at the following numbers: 665-0081, 665-0088 or 665-3943.
