'White oil' wells retesting begins

By LARRY HOLLIS
Staff Writer

Retesting of Panhandle Field oil and gas wells using low-temperature separation units (LTX units) has already begun in implementation of the Texas Railroad Commission's recent order.

Bob G. Blakeney, director of the Pampa-headquartered District 10 RRC office, said Friday that district personnel started the retesting procedures late last week with "volunteer wells."

Blakeney said a number of well operators have already contacted the office about having their wells retested. "We're testing volunteers now," he said, trying to get ahead of the time period set by the RRC for the retesting order.

The district office has sent a memorandum, dated June 18, to all operators in the Panhandle fields concerning the implementation of the RRC's Final Order in the Phillips Petroleum Co. case.

The RRC proceeded with its order after denying last Monday any motions for rehearing of the case, which has been under consideration for more than 3½ years.

The memo states, "This is to advise that Order No. 10-77,314 became effective on June 17, 1985. The subject order requires the testing, within 75 days from June 17, 1985, of all oil wells which are now utilizing or have utilized LTX Units. In addition the order requires notification to the Commission within 15 days from June 17, 1985 of all leases which are now utilizing or have utilized LTX Units."

Blakeney said the district office did not have to begin any testing until July 2, but the personnel are willing to test any wells before that time.

"With so many wells in such a short period of time" to be tested, the office welcomes the opportunity to test any volunteer wells, he said. Any operator in the area wanting to get his wells tested before the July 2 date may contact the RRC office in Pampa, he added.

The office will handle the scheduling of wells, since only 60 days will be left after July 2 to meet the conditions of the RRC's order, Blakeney said.

District personnel will prepare a list of testing dates for the wells and inform the operators when they need to be ready for the testing, he explained.

"We'll need all the testing equipment we can get," he said. He said the preparation and dissemination of the schedule might help the operators so they won't rent up all the testing equipment before their times.

The office had prepared its memorandum before receiving the official notice of the Final Order to get a head start on having to meet the deadlines imposed by the RRC and developing its plans for the retesting procedures.

Blakeney said the testing should keep the office personnel fairly busy in the next couple of months. However, doing something on paper is not always the same "when you get out in the field," he said.

The district memo to operators notes operators will be required to notify the District 10 office of all leases which are now utilizing or have utilized the refrigeration units.

All equipment used in the testing of the Panhandle Field wells must be provided by the operator. Testing equipment will include portable, in-line orifice meters, test tanks and "any other equipment deemed necessary by the District Director to accomplish an accurate test," the memo states.

Fluid levels in the casing and oil gravities may be taken at random by commission personnel or as directed by the district director.

The memo specifies that wells shall not be treated within two weeks of the test date, and "it will be necessary for all treating fluids to be recovered prior to the start of

Future home of Pampa community building

Community building location told

By LARRY HOLLIS
Staff Writer

The dream of a community building for Pampa residents has drawn nearer becoming reality with the announcement of the location for the building — 200 N. Ballard.

Ed Myatt, member of the board of directors of the Pampa Chamber of Commerce Foundation, Inc., revealed the foundation is fairly close to the $350,000 goal set in the beginning of the fund drive last fall.

"We believe if the citizens of Pampa would make a last-minute effort to get their donations and contributions in, the goal can be reached," Myatt said.

The selection of the site provides a building with more square footage of space than originally planned, allowing for further development of the facilities designed to benefit the community, he said.

The building has in the past been the location of the old Coca Cola building, the auto repair service shop for Montgomery Wards and a car dealership.

The structure has been undergoing some remodeling in the past couple of years, including new windows and doors, with space for development of various sizes of offices and other facilities inside.

"One of the reasons for selecting the site is that we have room to grow upstairs," Myatt said. Another reason is that the building is centrally located in the city at Ballard and Kingsmill.

The foundation conceived the building as a general community facility available for various public events, meetings and receptions and housing for a number of community service, charitable and non-profit organizations.

"It looks like we have enough requests for non-profit organization space that we need to renovate the upstairs also," Myatt stated.

"It's a fairly old building but very well built," he added. The roof and the second story floor are both constructed of poured concrete, he noted, with the rest of the building very sound structurally.

The large, 2-story building has approximately 20,000 square feet, about four times as much space as would have been available in the originally conceived 50 by 100 foot structure. There also will be adequate parking space available.

In addition to space for community meetings and offices for non-profit organizations, the building also will house the Pampa Chamber of Commerce offices.

Facilities planned for community use include a meeting and dining room which can accommodate up to 250 people, with kitchen facilities also available. The meeting room can be used for club activities, small conventions, seminars, small banquets, wedding and anniversary receptions and other similar events, Myatt explained.

The facilities will be available for use by any public residents or groups. The use will not be limited just to the non-profit organizations or Chamber of Commerce activities, he stressed. It is designed to be a general community building for a variety of activities and events.

Though the foundation is near its goal, funds are still needed to aid in renovation and remodeling aspects to develop the planned offices and meeting rooms. Included in the renovation will be the installation of an elevator, a fairly costly undertaking, Myatt noted.

Myatt encouraged residents, groups and businesses who have been thinking of contributing to the fund or just putting it off "to step forward and be a part" of See BUILDING, Page two

Pampa woman gets 20 years on sex charge

A Pampa woman was sentenced to 20 years in prison after pleading guilty to a single count of child sex abuse Friday.

Gloria Dawn Killough Rogers, 31, of 631 S. Ballard, who had been indicted on four counts of child sex abuse, received the maximum sentence from District Judge Don Cain after admitting her guilt.

The other three counts were dismissed in return for the guilty plea, although she admitted guilt on all four charges. Judge Cain was allowed to take the other offenses into consideration in determining her sentence.

Rogers, also known as Gloria Dawn Vargas, confessed to two charges of having sexual intercourse with a boy under age 17, one charge of sexual abuse of a girl under age 17 and one charge of "deviate sexual intercourse" with the girl.

The four offenses occurred on March 8, according to the indictments, but the woman's confession, presented in court by Assistant District Attorney David Hamilton, indicated similar incidents had been going on for over two years.

Rogers pleaded guilty to the sex abuse charges immediately after receiving a five-year sentence in a probation revocation hearing. The two sentences will run concurrently.

She received five years probation in 1981 on a theft by taking charge, according to testimony Friday. By pleading "true" to the four counts of child sex abuse, she admitting violating the probation terms that required her to obey all laws of the state.

The children involved were not called to testify. Rogers had agreed to the admission of documents stipulating what they would have said if they had testified.

Her court-appointed attorney, James M. "Rowdy" Bowers, asked the judge to take into account the fact she had spared the children the ordeal of testifying when he determined her sentence.

But Hamilton urged imposition of the maximum 20-year sentence. "She's received all the breaks she's entitled to," he said, noting that she was indicted on a second-degree felony when the grand jury could have returned a first-degree felony indictment.

Rogers was indicted on the four charges April 19. Her case was scheduled to be heard May 23, but 31st District Judge Grainger McIlhenny ordered a delay in the proceedings until she could undergo a psychiatric examination.

She had been free on bonds totaling $12,000. But she was taken into immediate custody Friday after receiving the sentence and waiving her rights to appeal.

Shiite leader says rescue try planned

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Shiite Moslem leader Nabih Berri said Saturday the United States is planning a military operation to rescue the hijack hostages and such a move could "inflict serious harm" on the 40 Americans, now in their ninth day of captivity.

Berri, head of the Amal militia that has taken responsibility for the detained passengers and crew of a TWA jet, spoke as the Lebanese news media reported U.S. warplanes had flown over Beirut and a U.S. aircraft carrier was close offshore.

"The United States is preparing for a military operation," said Berri, who has been negotiating for the Shiite hijackers for an end to the hostage drama. It began June 14 with the commanding of an Athens-to-Rome flight with 153 people aboard.

"It is certain that the air activity and the flexing of muscles will inflict serious harm on the innocent hostages," Berri said in an interview with The Associated Press. "We have information about the arrival of some U.S. officers to (Christian) east Beirut for the military preparations."

In Washington, the White House denied that U.S. warplanes had flown over Beirut.

Pentagon sources confirmed that 1,800 U.S. Marines aboard three ships, including the helicopter assault vessel Saipan, joined the battle group led by the carrier Nimitz in the eastern Mediterranean Friday.

The 24th Marine Amphibious Unit, designated a quick-strike force, had been ordered Monday to join the Nimitz group and departed from Gibraltar and the Spanish coast. Washington sources said at that time the other vessels transporting the Marine unit were the Nashville, an amphibious docking ship, and the Spartanburg County, a tank landing ship. Rental assistance for hotel project approved by HUD

By CATHY SPAULDING
Staff Writer

In its heyday, the Schneider (Pampa) Hotel hosted travelers, diners and celebrities. After standing vacant for more than a decade, the hotel will soon be the home for needy elderly residents.

The U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development has confirmed the awarding of $189,312 for low income senior citizen housing at the hotel.

"It isn't a grant, per se," said regional HUD family housing representative Grover Coulter. "The funding will be made to assist the elderly residents of the hotel with their rent."

Under the system, the tenants pay whatever rent they can afford, based on income and medical expenses. The rest is paid through the HUD funding.

Houston developer Robert Caplan, who owns the 96-unit Pam senior citizen apartments on N. Wells, is hoping to convert the 58-year-old hotel into a 52-unit low-rent apartments for elderly residents. He estimates that it could take $1 million to rehabilitate the historic hotel. None of the HUD money will go for the rehabilitation.

The Texas Panhandle Community Action was seeking the grant to help the agency subsidize the rent of the potential apartment residents.

Although Senator Phil Gramm's office had announced the funding approval in a press release distributed last week, neither Caplan nor officials with the TPCA said they had any official notice that the money had been secured.

Still, TPCA housing director Ron Baugh was excited upon receiving word by telephone.

"I am so excited I can jump up and down and shout," he said Friday. He added, however, that until he gets the official word from HUD, he cannot discuss the details of the funding.

Caplan did not know of the HUD confirmation until he was contacted by The Pampa News for comment.

"You know more than I do about it," he said from his home Saturday.

Caplan said he has had his eye on the Pampa Hotel for at least two See HOTEL, Page two the testing. The local memo states commission personnel may check the gravity of the oil to verify compliance with the RRC's order.

Other conditions of testing specified by the memo include:

- Wells must be produced at a stabilized rate for at least 24 hours prior to testing.

- Wells must be tested for 24 hours under normal producing conditions or production methods. The test period for a well will be limited only to 24 hours and will not be extended except as required by district personnel.

- All produced gas must be continuously metered for the 24-hour test period, with no gas being vented during the test period.

- Hydrocarbon liquids which are produced by the LTX units will be measured separately from liquids produced as liquids at the wellhead.

- No pipeline runs or saltwater hauling will be permitted during the testing without the prior permission of commission personnel.

Other conditions concern multiple wells on a lease, determining of specific gravities and reporting of the test results to the commission after lease testing is completed.

The memo notes that any well that cannot be tested or that is cancelled due to non-compliance with testing procedures will be assigned a zero allowable until it is retested.

The RRC's Final Order resulted from a complaint filed in September, 1981, by Phillips Petroleum Co. concerning the counting of liquefied hydrocarbons stripped from gas by the LTX units as crude oil for well classification purposes.

The RRC has ruled that the liquefied hydrocarbons — often called "white oil" or "albino oil" — cannot be considered as crude oil.

The order specifies that terms of Statewide Rule 79(7) apply to the Panhandle Field. The order states that "hydrocarbon liquids which are not in the liquid phase in the reservoir under current conditions, liquid in the well bore and liquid at the surface shall not be counted as crude oil in calculating the gas-oil ratio for purposes of classifying a well as an oil well or a gas well in the Panhandle fields."

The order also specifies liquids obtained from the LTX units cannot be counted as crude oil "unless the operator can prove by recombinant sample analysis, or other reliable method acceptable to the Director of the Oil and Gas Division, that the liquids are in the liquid phase in the reservoir under current conditions, liquid in the well bore and liquid at the surface."

All wells classified as oil wells in the field are subject at any time to retest for reclassification purposes. In the future, all gas-oil ratio tests will be conducted in accordance with the order.

Oil wells reclassified as gas wells from the retesting will not be placed on the gas schedule or assigned an allowable until proper permits have been issued and all completion papers have been received by the commission.

the community building development.

"We're really pleased with the response the community has given us and appreciate the support and interest," he said.

The tax-deductible contributions can be mailed to the Pampa Chamber of Commerce Foundation, P.O. Box 541, Pampa, Texas 79066-0541 or to Phil Gentry at the First National Bank.

Myatt noted the larger building will allow for five or six organizations to occupy offices in the community building.

Organizations wishing to apply for space in the building must meet the non-profit 501(c)(3) status established by the Internal Revenue Service Code.

The foundation achieved its IRS non-profit classification last December, allowing it to receive the tax-deductible contributions.

Myatt noted that though the foundation shares the Chamber's name, it is not specifically a Chamber project. The foundation has received the support of the Chamber members, but its activities and board of directors are separate from the Chamber.

The Chamber served as a vehicle for implementing the foundation, but no Chamber money is being spent for the foundation or the operation of its fundraising drive.

While the community building project is the main project currently, the foundation can serve later as a vehicle for the whole community for other projects, Myatt explained.

years while looking for new senior citizen housing projects.

"When I opened the Pam Apartments five years ago, it was filled up in a couple of months," he said. "And we've run at full occupancy and have had a waiting list since."

"When I saw this hotel, I knew it was perfect," he said, adding that he was even more impressed when his engineer noted how sound the old structure is.

"I felt the Pampa Hotel was an excellent choice," he said. "I think the overall physical structure is very sound. And the hotel hits a tender side in the hearts of Pampa people. Being for senior citizens, probably some of the residents enjoyed having Sunday dinner at the hotel's restaurant."

Caplan assures that he will try to preserve the structure's artistic physical features — the arched porches, the grates on the windows, the lattice work masonry and the tile roofs.

"That's part of its charm," he said.

There had been some concern that the elderly residents would be disturbed by noise from traffic on the railroad tracks, which run just south of the building, or the Central Fire Station, which is its neighbor to the north. But Caplan said he is not concerned and, after speaking to elderly residents, he said they don't seem concerned either.

"Everyone I talked to is excited. It's near the post office and city services," he explained.

As soon as he receives confirmation and a go-ahead from the TPCA, Caplan said his next step would be to get an architect to finish the plans and that it could take four to six months before work begins on the building.

"I've had all kinds of estimates," he said, figuring that it would take about $1 million to rehabilitate the building.

Although rehabilitation is not funded by the $189,312, the building must meet HUD specifications for health and accessibility for the handicapped.

Hostages

Charles Smith refused to confirm or deny that the Marines had joined the Nimitz group.

At a news conference at the Beirut airport Thursday night, five hostages appealed to President Reagan "at all costs" not to launch a military operation.

Meanwhile, Hassan Sablani, a senior Amal leader, told NBC News that the militia was tired of being depicted as a supporter of hijackings and terrorism. He said if the situation does not improve significantly within two days, Amal will drop out of the negotiations, order the hijackers to put the hostages back on the airplane and "tell them to fly away."

Another Amal leader told The Associated Press that the reference to two days was not a deadline. "We have not set a deadline yet, but on the other hand, negotiations cannot go on forever," said the official, who spoke with the condition that he not be identified.

The hijackers, who killed one passenger, a U.S. Navy diver, are demanding that Israel release about 750 prisoners, mostly Shiites, in exchange for the hostages.

The three crewmembers of the hijacked jetliner remained aboard the plane and are watched continuously by guards. The other 37 Americans have been scattered to various locations in Beirut in an apparent attempt to frustrate any rescue attempt.

Berri briefed U.N. envoy Jean-Claude Aime Saturday on the hijacking and the situation in Lebanon. Berri told reporters later that Israel was shelling Shiite villages in south Lebanon and rounding up "hundreds of new prisoners."

But in Tel Aviv, an Israeli military source said: "Israel is not shelling villages and has not arrested and is not arresting any more Shiites."

Israeli sources, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said they could not speak for the South Lebanon Army militia. But U.N. sources, who also demanded anonymity, said the Israel-backed militia had fired mortar shells at Shiite villages and arrested a few villagers — but not "hundreds."

Berri said the Israeli operations are being carried out "in front of the eyes of the world and the United Nations, who only look at the fate of 40 American hostages whom we intervened to save."

"After all this, we are the terrorists, and they are seen as human rights' defenders," he said.

There also were reports Saturday of U.S. military activity near Beirut.

The Voice of Lebanon radio said a "squadron" of U.S. F-14 Tomcats crisscrossed Beirut skies on reconnaissance flights before daybreak. It said a U.S. aircraft carrier moved within five miles of the Lebanese coast.

In Washington, White House spokesman Albert Brashear said reports that jets from the USS Nimitz had flown over Beirut are "not true."

"If there were jets flying in the area, they weren't ours," he said.

In Tel Aviv, Israel Radio said the planes were from the American carrier.

Israeli jets frequently fly over Lebanon on surveillance missions, but Israel said none did on Saturday.

A military source, who spoke on condition of anonymity, confirmed planes had flown over Beirut.

New rules hurting state's smaller hospitals

HOUSTON (AP) — A fundamental change in medical care in Texas is sending small hospitals reeling into financial crisis and doctors, some experts warn, may be next to face the economic crunch of a new medical age.

Federal regulations have put strict limits on Medicare payments, insurance companies are following suit, and tough new admission standards are reserving hospital beds for only the truly sick.

The result is a 20- to 22-percent drop in the number of patients in many of the state's smaller hospitals, causing an income depression that has staggered many rural treatment centers.

"I'm not sure it's fair to blame the federal government. The insurance companies have played a big role. The admission rate has been declining for the last 4 to 5 years," he said.

Payments to doctors, so far, are not affected by the federal government's efforts to lower its Medicare expense, but experts believe that is the next step.

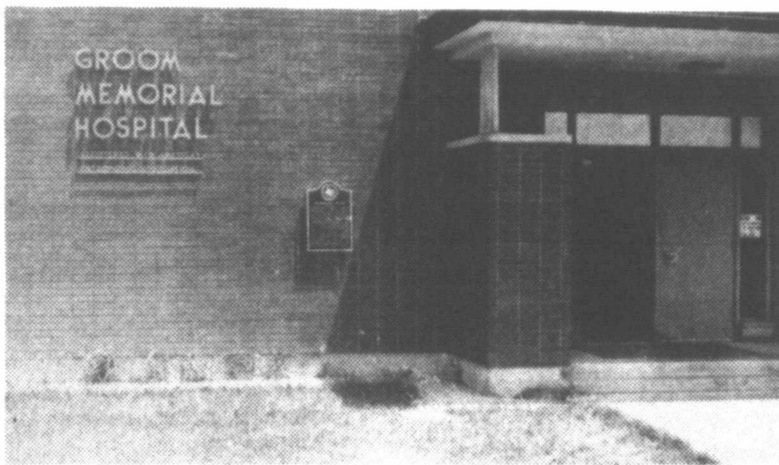

The new Medicare rules are but another blow to the already-troubled rural hospitals. The patient census in the small hospitals has been dropping over the last few years as more and more patients take their medical troubles to big city institutions which have specialists and the expensive diagnostic machines of modern medicine.

SOME OF THE hospitals are seeking buyers or help from taxpayers. All are affected in some way.

"There's no question that rural hospitals are facing a crisis," said Bill McCutchen, the deputy regional administrator for the Health Care Financing Administration, the federal agency that oversees Medicare payments for Texas.

MOST SMALL hospital administrators blame their immediate problems on changes in federal laws that have cut severely into the amount Medicare will pay for the treatment of elderly patients — the population segment that provides much of the small hospital income.

Medicare once paid for virtually any hospital admission on a "cost

Groom hospital one that didn't make it plus" basis. Under this system, Medicare would pay a percentage of treatment charges and exerted little control over the basic cost.

Now Medicare is based on the "prospective payment system", or PPS, in which all treatment is classified with 467 diagnostic groups, or DRGs. Medicare pays a set amount for each of the numbered DRGs.

The result is that hospital stays have been shortened or disallowed

Medicare financing all together. The new system is affecting patients, their families, doctors and the way medicine is practiced.

"We're seeing a fundamental change in medical treatment in this country," said Dr. Stephen D. Benold, a Georgetown physician.

Many relatively minor medical procedures that once involved hospital stays now are regarded by Medicare as out-patient cases. More serious medical treatments — such as gall bladder surgery or heart attack — are being treated with shorter times in the hospital.

Big city hospitals, which draw patients from a large population, are little affected. But the change for small hospitals has been dramatic.

"It definitely has decreased our patient days," said John Simms, administrator of the Bohne Memorial Hospital in Brenham. "The admissions are about the same, but the length of stay has dropped about 20 percent."

TO ADJUST, the small hospitals are finding new ways to make profits and cut costs.

Simms said his 60-bed hospital now employs a staff to care for 42 admitted patients. Eight beds are used for nursing home-type skilled care, and the other 10 beds are used for out-patient cases.

Small hospitals also are affiliating themselves with larger hospitals for the advantages in volume purchasing and personnel training.

"We're doing well," said Simms. "We try to monitor our costs very closely. But the hospital can't take much more. All the hospitals are having a difficult time of it."

"All my colleagues are concerned about the situation," said Charles Guidry, administrator of the 32-bed Bellville General Hospital. "We're all aware that it's going to be tough."

Dr. Bernard Alger, executive vice president of Harris Methodist Hospital in Fort Worth and an expert on hospital economics, said changes in Medicare payments will cause belt-tightening by all of the hospitals and that the inefficient ones eventually will go under.

But that may take several years. "Hospitals get into trouble in slow motion," he said. "Hospitals in Texas are stronger than in other states. Most are holding their own, but at a lower level."

SIMMS BELIEVES closing of hospitals is one goal of the new federal policies.

"In an effort to reduce Medicare costs, you are going to have to reduce demand," he said. "Supply creates demand. You have to reduce the availability of medical care."

One of the most dramatic changes caused by the federal

Galveston moved up in ratings

WASHINGTON (AP) — In a geography professor's reassessment of an earlier list of the nation's most enjoyable places to live, Galveston-Texas City came out No. 1 among Texas metropolitan areas.

Robert Pierce's list, published in the July issue of American Demographics magazine, lists 28 Texas metropolitan areas.

Pierce, who teaches at the State University of New York at Cortland, based his ratings on a reassessment of listings in the "Places Rated Almanac" published by Rand McNally.

Galveston-Texas City, which had been 74th on the Rand McNally list, jumped to No. 38 on Pierce's list.

However, Dallas fell to 45th in Pierce's rankings. The Rand McNally list had Dallas as the nation's 12th most desirable city in the nation.

Pierce ranked the cities according to availability of jobs, affordable housing, safe streets, climate, culture and recreation.

In general, Pierce said, communities in the New York City tended to do well in his rankings, while communities clustered in the Midwest did poorly.

Here is how Pierce ranked Texas cities (Rand McNally ranking in parentheses):

- 38 (75) Galveston-Texas City
- 45 (12) Dallas
- 51 (114) Amarillo
- 75 (168) Abilene

Lucas finally arrives on death row

HUNTSVILLE, Texas (AP) — Despite months of boasting that he had killed hundreds of people nationwide, convicted killer Henry Lee Lucas has finally arrived at the one place he hoped never to be — death row.

Lucas was transferred Friday from his jail cell in Williamson County to the small, dank cell where he is to await execution for the 1979 slaying of an unidentified woman hitchhiker.

The woman's nude body was found beside Interstate 35 near Georgetown.

For the one-eyed drifter, a widely traveled convict who visited a dozen states and scores of crime scenes in the past two years to confess to hundreds of murders, this trip might have been his last.

Lucas was taken from his jail cell in Georgetown shortly after 9:30 a.m. Friday and driven over about 150 miles of Texas back roads to Huntsville.

He arrived at the state prison's diagnostic unit at 12:30 p.m. and was moved later in the day to the Ellis unit, where Death Row is located.

"He's just another Death Row convict. He's No. 210 right now," Texas Department of Corrections spokesman Phil Guthrie said.

The authenticity of Lucas' confessions to hundreds of crimes across the nation has come under question lately. Lucas recently recanted all but one confession and said investigators "fed" him the details he knew about the killings.

Lucas allegedly once told a reporter that by confessing to numerous killings, he could delay his trip to the execution chamber.

Most of Lucas' confessions came while he was at the Williamson County Jail. Lucas was taken last April 12 to Waco to testify before a McLennan County grand jury that was looking into his confessions to two slayings there. While there, he recanted the earlier confessions.

Lucas was returned to Georgetown from Waco in mid-June, and members of a special Henry Lee Lucas task force expressed an interest in questioning him further.

Lucas' attorney, however, cut off further examinations, rendering the task force impotent.

The Dallas Times Herald said it obtained an official report in which the officer who conducted most of the preliminary interrogations for out-of-state police agencies acknowledged that he occasionally told Lucas the race and sex of his supposed victims "to refresh Lucas' memory."

In the report, the officer said he often showed him photographs of crime scenes before he was invited to confess to murders across the country, the newspaper said.

At least one police agency, the Jacksonville, Fla., metro police has tossed out eight Lucas murder confessions after becoming convinced that Lucas learned details that made his confessions believable from police interrogators who inadvertently or deliberately fed Lucas information, the newspaper said.

Before Lucas can be executed, his appeal of the death sentence will have to run its course. He faces 26 other murder charges, in addition to nine other convictions for which he received sentences ranging from 60 years to life in prison.

JFK assassination artifacts for sale

DALLAS (AP) — A man who used to own the Texas School Book Depository where Lee Harvey Oswald allegedly perched to shoot President John F. Kennedy, wants to sell Dallas a slice of history.

Aubrey Mayhew, who owned the building from 1970 to 1972, says he owns the original sixth-floor window and would like to sell it along with 3,000 other Kennedy-assassination artifacts.

The Dallas County Historical Foundation says Mayhew has contacted the group about selling the artifacts he claims to own, including ledgers signed by Oswald. The Dallas Morning News reported Saturday.

The offer was discussed at a recent board meeting of the foundation, a panel of 11 Dallas residents appointed in September 1983 to oversee fund raising and construction of a $3 million, sixth-floor Kennedy exhibit, a foundation official said.

The exhibit will be educational and historical in nature — with no artifacts collected and no souvenirs sold, The News said. But Mayhew's offer may be an exception, according to the newspaper.

Foundation president Lindalyn Adams said Mayhew also claims to own office furniture used in the building the day of the 1963 assassination and work ledgers signed by Oswald.

"Although we're not collecting artifacts for this exhibit, I thought the window certainly belongs in the building," Mrs. Adams said. "But he (Mayhew) said he would have to sell these things."

Mrs. Adams did not say how much the foundation would pay for the window or any other artifacts.

Money has been a sensitive issue for the foundation, which is only now organizing its first fund-raising effort. The group plans to solicit contributions from corporations and the general public.

"It's just up to us now to mount an organized campaign, and I have no doubt people will support this," Mrs. Adams said.

The foundation is currently producing a slide-audio show to go along with the campaign, which will cost about $10,000, Mrs. Adams said.

IRS chief moved

AUSTIN (AP) — The director of the Internal Revenue Service's Austin service center, where about 6,000 taxpayer files were destroyed late last year, has been reassigned to Washington.

"It hasn't been fully explained to me yet," said William L. Grabo, who confirmed the shift Friday. "I intend to take some leave, visit Washington and see what my options are."

Grabo said he did not know if the move, effective Sept. 22, is related to the document destruction, which officials said was ordered by a supervisor who wanted to cut into a heavy backlog of work at the regional service center.

IRS officials in Washington have been investigating the destruction for two months.

Flight marks set

TEXARKANA, Ark. (AP) — A flying chiropractor is back home after making an end run around a wall of thundershowers that could give him 45 national and international aviation records instead of the 44 he set out to break.

Dan Bookout landed back home in his single-engine "Texarkana Baby" Thursday, three weeks to the day from his departure on what he hopes will be a record-setting odyssey.

EVER STRIVING FOR TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLAC TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Civil rights struggle over

Racism and racial intolerance have been mankind's most frequent companion throughout history. No place on Earth has escaped one sort or another of racial strife. Despite the lofty words of our Declaration of Independence and Constitution, Americans failed to avoid this ugly fellow-traveller.

What makes us unique is NOT a history of racial intolerance, but a history of having done something about it. Our Constitution, which once provided little if any protection to blacks, proved to be the strongest weapon in the civil rights struggle. That struggle is now over; moreover civil rights have won, and we can be proud.

What we're witnessing today has little to do with civil rights; it is in fact the antithesis of civil rights. Groups like the NAACP and Urban League, former stalwarts of the legitimate civil rights struggle, now call for racial privileges and turf. It's seen in their familiar refrain: "Blacks are x percent of such and such, but only y percent of this and that."

The surest sign that the civil rights struggle is over lies in the new causes taken up by civil rights "leaders" who don't want to be unemployed. Jesse Jackson goes around praising tyrants like Fidel Castro and Yassar Arafat, and trying to organize farmers. By the way, while he was visiting with Castro, Jackson should have asked the Cuban dictator, "How come Cuban positions of power are not held by dark-skinned Cubans?"

Meanwhile, the NAACP worries about blacks on death row and never fails to cite as "evidence" of racism that, "Most death row inmates are black."

Anything else would be surprising; over 50 percent of U.S. homicide victims are blacks murdered by blacks.

But civil rights organizations leaving behind their original purpose does not make them unique. The March of Dimes was organized to fight polio. Polio's gone but the March of Dimes remains - and no longer asks merely for dimes. And the Christmas Seal Campaign was founded to fight tuberculosis. Tuberculosis is just about gone, but the campaign continues.

So the NAACP has managed to dig up a legitimate civil rights issue, not here but in South Africa. The NAACP's National Convention in Dallas, June 25, will sponsor a debate on the proper strategy for combating apartheid in South Africa. Randall Robinson of TransAfrica, whom you've seen getting arrested in front of the South African Embassy in Washington, will debate Stuart Butler of the prestigious Heritage Foundation.

Robinson will most assuredly call for strong U.S. economic sanctions against South Africa. He would have us believe that replacing American firms and management with Afrikaner firms and management will somehow be good for South Africa's blacks.

And Butler will probably argue that we should keep the moral pressure on, but forsake the disinvestment strategy. We should encourage economic growth in South Africa. Economic growth has given black South Africans the jobs, education, and wages they never had before. In fact, urban black South Africans have an annual per-capita income of $1,400 higher than other African nations, and surely higher than the $295 a year in the People's Republic of China.

We must admire Butler's courage. First of all, he's white, and is going to debate Robinson, who's black, in front of the NAACP. It's going to be like trying to have a reasoned discussion on agnosticism Christmas Eve at the Vatican. The South African issue is so emotion-laden that if one calls for dispassionate analysis and reason it almost guarantees labeling him as a racist supporter of apartheid.

Yes, racism around the globe continues in many shapes; but despite all the nonsense, Americans can be proud of how we've handled our racial problems.

America: the land of second chance

The news that John De Lorean is seeking financial supporters for a new carmaking venture may strike the cynic or the self-righteous as a case of a flimflam man escaping justice.

But if he were to be successful—and the odds certainly appear to be against him—it would be a peculiarly American, and somehow encouraging, story.

Another way of saying that America is the land of opportunity is that this nation is the land of the second chance.

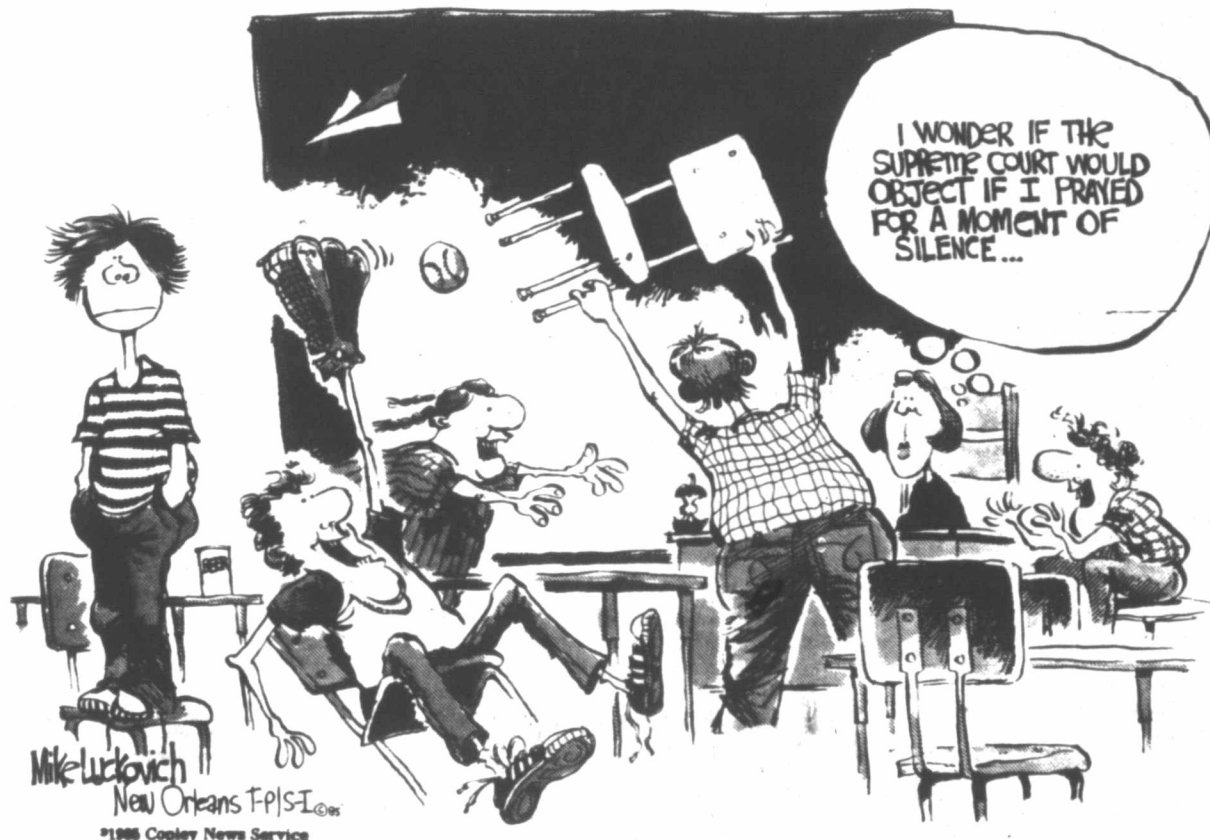

Millions of immigrants, locked in poverty or repression in their native lands, have started fresh here. And millions of Americans, locked in economic backwaters or failing businesses, bad marriages or dead-end jobs, move on, start over and triumph over past failures. People earn and spend fortunes several times in a life, build empires, watch them fall and then rebuild them.

Americans—especially in our economic lives—are remarkably tolerant and free of prejudice, and especially appreciative and rewarding of talent, hard work and persistence.

We seldom make judgments on the moral worth of a person who offers his talents and services, goods and labor. We do not ask his pedigree, nor rummage through the accumulated baggage of his life.

This does not mean that we absolve people from facing up to their responsibilities. De Lorean remains under investigation by a federal grand jury in Detroit, investigating the business activities of the bankrupt De Lorean Motor Co., including claims by the company's creditors that De Lorean misappropriated millions of dollars from investors. If he has been guilty of fraud, he should and will be made to pay.

But should De Lorean be reborn as an automaker—which is where his talents lie—we would applaud. We would wish for no less of a second chance for ourselves, and others, should the occasion arise.

When silence is golden

When the Supreme Court ruled against an Alabama law that calls for a moment of silence in classrooms so the students can pray if they wish, here came the zealots again with their cries of "The heathens win another one."

"The heathens win another one?" When will this silly debate over prayer in schools ever end? I notice there are few students involved in all this. They're too busy trying to make heads or tails out of their algebra lessons.

No, it's the adults who are waging this war. Why do adults always get in the middle of something the kids probably could solve a lot more peacefully if left on their own?

The debate over prayer in the schools is dumb. The Constitution states quite clearly there is to be separation of church and state in this country.

School is state. Prayer is church. End of argument, as far as I'm concerned.

Besides if you mix the two, you're messing with the Constitution, and you don't mess with Charles Bronson, Mother Nature or the Constitution. Sooner or later, they will all get revenge.

OK, so there are parents out there reading this and they are devout people and they want their children to be devout and they are asking, if my kid isn't allowed to pray at school will he or she grow up to be an atheist?

Of course not. Let's say we finally end this fracas, and we remove all semblance of religion from our public schools.

No problem. Tell your kids to pray before he or she goes to school.

"Dear God, please get me through one more day of algebra."

Or tell your child to pray when he or she gets home from school.

"Dear God, thank you for letting me get through one more day of algebra."

Nobody, not even the Supreme Court, can stop your child from praying in school, for that matter. All your child has to do is tune out for a couple of seconds and say a private, little silent prayer.

"Dear God, please don't let the algebra teacher call on me."

I've always thought God probably listens more closely to silent, individual prayers anyway.

Anybody can stand up with a group of others and recite a prayer. We used to do that when I was in school. Each morning, we would all stand and bow our heads and close our eyes and recite the Lord's Prayer.

One morning, I noticed Alvin Bates, the class jerk, didn't have his eyes closed during the prayer, and when it was over, I said, "Teacher, Alvin Bates didn't have his eyes closed during the prayer."

"If you had your eyes closed," said the teacher, "how do you know Alvin had his open?"

One thing I never liked about teachers is they browbeat you with logic.

But speaking of teachers, the only people who suffered any real injury from the Supreme Court ruling may have been them.

For the heck of it, I talked to an Alabama teacher and asked what she thought of losing the moment of silence in her classroom.

"I'll miss it," she said. "It was the only relief I got from those chatterboxes all day."

"Begging your pardon, sir, but wouldn't it be easier to make a list of all the people who DON'T have security clearance?"

Steady Eddie and life on the farm

BY T.F. LEONARD

A neighbor, call him Steady Eddie, slowed up in his brand-new two-tone, four-wheel-drive pickup. Eddie just wanted to laugh a little longer as he approached my husband, Bob, who was walking the grounds to pick up stone before coming onto our field with the planter. Eddie never bothers to pick up stones. He clangs and bangs full-tilt over rocks and small trees with his brand-new $6,500 planter.

Steady Eddie has what is known around here as "new-paint disease." New-paint disease is what keeps a farmer buying great big, brand-new, fancy farm machinery that he doesn't need, and can't pay for, because it makes him feel like a hero, high-rolling past the neighbors on the long haul to a 37-acre plot of poor, sandy ground that he can't afford to farm.

Many farmers suffer from new-paint disease here in Alcona County, Michigan. They know about all the new government programs before the bureaucrats do, and they line up in front of the farm-loan office the very morning the funds become available. The money, of course, already has been spent. The tax dollars only need to be EXPECTED to be allocated in order for some debt to creep up to justify the taxpayers' generosity. A farmer always has some piece of machinery he's itching to replace or buy outright. New-paint disease is the moral hazard of government loans to farmers. Easy money encourages the over-indebtedness it is meant to relieve.

U.S. agriculture has changed from a labor-intensive to a capital-intensive industry. In order to compete, modern farmers have to carry more debt than their grandfathers did. The successful ones can temper their willingness to invest with a little of Old Grandpa's prudence. Farmers who can't are in trouble. In 1980, Steady Eddie was still buying up land and four-wheel-drive, air-conditioned tractors with stereos because, he said, land here was surely going to $1,000 an acre, and corn and wheat would soon break the $5-to-$6-a-bushel mark. Another farmer said, "Well, I've been farming thirty-five years and that hasn't happened yet."

It won't happen because the laws of economics defy anyone to make a good living and an excellent return on a big investment by working six months of the year to grow and harvest a crop of corn. Nor can a farmer keep afloat by using technology just to shorten a workday. Fancy machinery makes it tempting to farm on weekends, but a part-time farmer cannot expect to make the machinery pay for itself. Anybody who wants to stick with farming only forty acres had better keep the mule.

Farming is risky business. There are good years and bad. Farmers must endure the uncertainties of weather, new technology, disease, pests, and politicians. Not all farmers can be winners all the time. When government intervenes to protect farmers from loss, it prevents the market from rewarding farmers for success.

Many farmers who are in trouble today didn't lose their shirts farming. They lost them speculating on land. It looked like everything was going to hell in a handcart, but a guy could make a buck getting there. Steady Eddie and his lender bet the farm that Ronald Reagan couldn't stay the course. Steady Eddie lacked faith. And if there's one thing a farmer must have, it's faith.

Neither faith nor wisdom can be legislated. But how many times can American taxpayers be asked to bail out those who refuse to learn the most basic economic facts? The unpalatable truth is that many farmers are being foreclosed on for loans they never should have taken out. Billions of dollars in emergency loans already have been made, to no avail. A good housecleaning is long overdue out here in the heartland, and the federal government can no longer afford to postpone the day of reckoning.

I speak for the two-thirds of farmers who think to themselves, "Bravo, David Stockman," then quietly return to work.

I speak for the two-thirds of American farmers who get on nicely without government handouts, who are busy with spring planting, who therefore will not be circling the White House on tractors.

I speak for the vast majority of American farmers who herald a return to market-oriented agriculture that allows price action based on the laws of supply and

AUBREY STEELE

The board of directors of Security Federal Savings and Loan Association has announced the election of Aubrey L. Steele as chairman of the board.

Steele served as chief executive officer of Security Federal for more than 35 years until 1982 when he was elected president emeritus of the association. During that time, assets have grown from $1.5 million to more than $330 million today. Additionally, Security Federal has seven offices, located in Pampa, Amarillo, Hereford and Wheeler.

Steele has served as a director of the Texas League of Savings Associations and various standing committees of the United States League of Savings Associations. In 1966 and 1968, he was elected to the board of the Federal Home Loan

Financial Focus

With the growing interest on tax-free investments, it's important to know a little bit about them. We've discussed IRA's but, perhaps, it would now be beneficial to discuss municipal bonds. When a local or state government needs capital to finance improvements such as schools, sewers, highways or hospitals, it issues bonds. These bonds play a vital part in public improvements, but they also offer a reliable alternative to investors who want competitive, regular interest without paying federal taxes on that interest.

According to the text "Fundamentals of Municipal Bonds," published by the Investment Bank Association of America, there are four primary advantages of municipal bonds. First, the security of these bonds generally is considered to be second only to bonds of the federal government. Second, they are extremely marketable. Third, the diversity of issues and maturity dates enables an investor to obtain bonds issued by his or her local government which mature exactly at the time he or she wants. And, fourth, the interest on municipal bonds is currently exempt from all federal income taxes.

Although municipal bonds generally are considered second only to the federal government in security, this security varies depending on the purpose of the bond and the source of debt repayment. These characteristics are specified in the official statement which defines the bond as a general obligation bond, a revenue bond or a housing authority bond.

General obligation bonds are secured by the full faith, credit and taxing power of the public authority issuing them. They often are referred to as "G.O. Bonds."

The source of repayment of these bonds is general taxes. If more money is needed to repay the bonds, taxes are increased. On the other hand, if the issuer's taxing power is limited to a maximum tax rate, the bonds still are general obligations, but they are termed "limited tax bonds." Investors should note the limitations on the taxing authority specified in the official statement.

When special tax bonds are issued, a separate tax is approved to repay both interest and principal. For example, a highway bond may be repaid by a gasoline tax. Often, these bonds are secured by the full faith and credit of the issuer, and thus, are general obligation bonds, as well. Special tax bonds include those for which a "special assessment" is levied on the taxpayers who will benefit from the issue.

demand, rather than government direction, to determine production, price, and promotion of our commodities.

During the Seventies, farmers went nuts buying land and equipment; dealers couldn't keep pace and sold by quota; some manufacturers overexpanded. But wise farmers and wise suppliers knew that business at a land-office pace wouldn't last. Those were not normal times.

These ARE normal times. Uncle Sam is no longer luring back to the land those who seek lifestyle, romance, and tax advantages. Lenders no longer encourage would-be farmers who are already floundering to try to fix things by going deeper in debt. The sorting process, continuous in any healthy, progressive, economic sector, now is discouraging those who for many years were willing to operate at a loss.

Controversy could rage for months over how much the government should help farmers already in trouble. Places like Iowa have been buffeted by droughts, and land values there, sky-rocketed higher and fell harder. This much, however, is clear: government must not help any more farmers to get into trouble than it already has.

A week of terror for U.S.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Terrorists have beset the United States on two fronts, capturing the nation's attention and sending Americans home in caskets.

Here's a look back at the United States' week of terror.

Friday, June 14
TWA Flight 847 departed Athens for Rome with 145 passengers and eight crew members, and shortly after 3 a.m. EDT hijackers seize control and divert it southward to Beirut. The Islamic Shiite hijackers beat and spray mace on the passengers, many of them Americans, and threaten to blow up the plane. At Beirut, the first group of women and children hostages are released, and the plane flew on to Algiers, Algeria.

Saturday, June 15
The plane flies back and forth between Algeria and Beirut, where hijackers bind, gag, severely beat and then shoot to death a U.S. Navy diver, Robert D. Stethem, 23, of Waldorf, Md. They dump his body onto the tarmac.

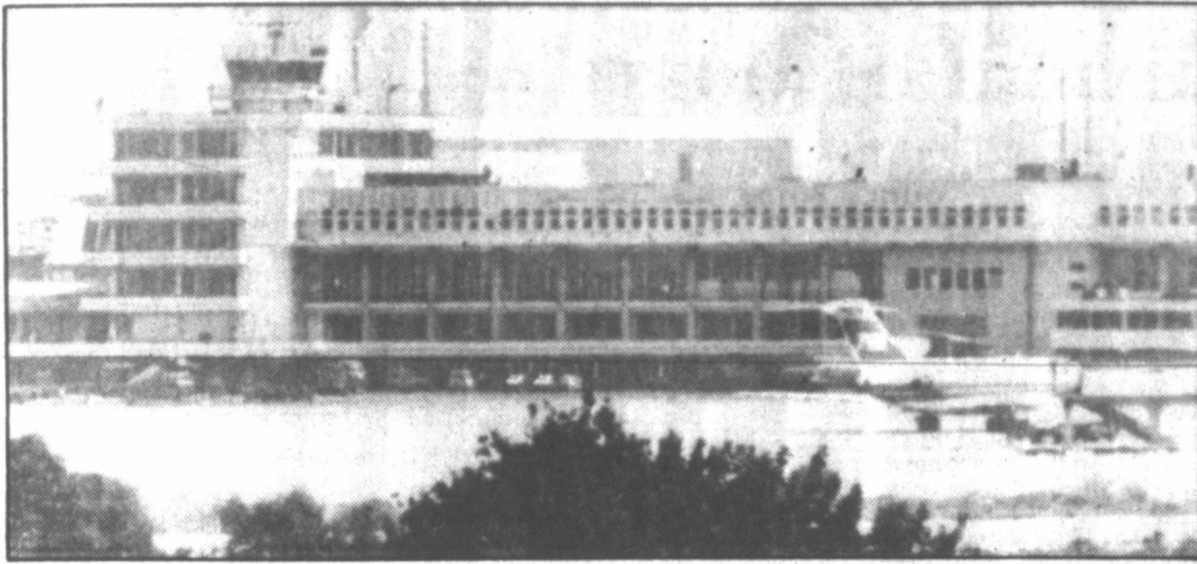

The hijackers demand release in Athens of an accomplice, and that demand is met. Later, it is learned that additional hijackers board the plane.

The hijackers release a list of demands, including one that Israel free about 700 Shiite Moslem prisoners it holds from the occupation of south Lebanon. Israel says it had planned to release those prisoners soon.

A group of passengers are taken off the plane and held elsewhere.

The U.S. Army's Delta Force anti-terrorist unit is sent to the region.

Shiite leader Nabih Berri puts his Amal militia on alert at the airport in Beirut, which it controls.

Hijacked airliner parked on tarmac

Sunday, June 16
The hijackers release a letter to President Reagan from the 32 American hostages saying "We implore you not to take any direct military action on our behalf."

Reagan warns the hijackers to release their hostages "for their own safety." The United States, he says, will make no concessions.

Monday, June 17
The White House says Berri holds the key to resolving the crisis and will not ask Israel to release its prisoners.

Berri says the hostages, except for the crew, are taken from the plane to an undisclosed location in mostly Moslem West Beirut.

Israel says it will consider releasing its prisoners in exchange for the hostages only if the United States makes an explicit public request.

Tuesday, June 18
Reagan, at a news conference, expresses frustration and says to retaliate militarily would "probably be sentencing a number of Americans to death."

The United States warns travelers they face a risk of terrorism by using the Athens airport and ask U.S. airlines to consider discontinuing flights there because of poor security.

Wednesday, June 18
Terrorists attack Americans in San Salvador, El Salvador. Gunman open fire on a crowd at an outdoor cafe, killing 13 people, including four off-duty U.S. Marine embassy guards and two American businessmen.

Still in the cockpit in Beirut, TWA pilot John L. Testrake is allowed to speak to reporters and says if there is a rescue attempt, "I think we'd all be dead men ..." He adds, "We're okay."

Thursday, June 20
"Our limits have been reached," Reagan declares. He offers El Salvador assistance from U.S. spy agencies and extra military aid to track down the attackers and to battle leftist guerrillas.

The administration rules out, however, use of U.S. military forces to retaliate for the attack.

Stethem is laid to rest in Arlington National Cemetery. In Beirut, five hostages are allowed to meet with reporters and appeal to the president to order no direct military action to rescue them.

Friday, June 21
In Israel, Prime Minister Shimon Peres says the hijacking is making more difficult the planned release of 500 Shiite prisoners. Israel, he says, does not want "to give the impression of a general surrender to hijackers."

Hundreds of Shiite Moslems demonstrate at the Beirut airport near the plane, chanting "Death to America" and calling the hijackers "Heroes of Islam."

Reagan, in Dallas to promote his tax plan, echoes the nation's sadness.

"We consider these murders, hijackings and abductions an attack on all Western civilization by uncivilized barbarians," he said.

"We will continue to act with appropriate restraint," he adds. "But let no one doubt our resolve."

Hospitals hurting

cost-reduction measures, said Pinnell, is the way hospitals are used by elderly patients and their relatives. Once, he said, hospitals were regarded by some as retreats or as convenient temporary boarding homes.

"If kids needed a grandmother sitter for the weekend, they once would find a reason to put her in the hospital," he said. "That's not happening any more because Medicare won't pay for it."

Benold said many hospitals were surprised at how much of their patient load was for "custodial care."

"Once, any patient who just wanted a little rest could get in," he said. "Or if an elderly man was admitted, his wife might decide that her arthritis was hurting and she would get admitted to be with him."

"That sort of stuff went on all the time. We didn't realize how much social, custodial care we were giving," Benold added. "That's gone now. Medicare doesn't pay for custodial care. You've got to be pretty sick to get in now."

Benold, who is a director for the Texas Medical Foundation's professional review organization, said doctors are changing the way they practice medicine as a result of a program called "utilization review." This program monitors how long patients are hospitalized for specific DRGs through a system of peer review.

Under the new system, cataract surgery, which once called for three days in the hospital, is now done as an out-patient procedure.

At one time, a patient who suffered a first heart attack was automatically confined to a hospital for three weeks. For uncomplicated cases, that has been reduced now to two weeks or 10 days. And Benold believes the time may soon be reduced to a week.

New mothers once could expect to spend 10 full days in a hospital after giving birth. That was the routine. Now, healthy mothers and babies often go home after 24 hours.

Gall bladder surgery, a fairly common procedure for the elderly, once required 10 to 14 days in the hospital. Under the new Medicare rules, the government will pay a total $2,000 for such surgery in a rural hospital. That much money will pay for about 5 days in most rural hospitals. If patients stay beyond 5 days, they have to pay the difference.

Doctors, also, are being more careful in the treatment they administer for patients. Many expect that the day will come when their decisions will be evaluated by Medicare and fees be disallowed if judged to be unnecessary.

Shortening the time in hospitals has not seriously affected medical care, says Benold, and most doctors agree. But many patients believe they are being short-changed because they no longer are getting the "social care" they once received.

An example, said Benold, would be a 94-year-old woman who presents herself at a hospital with a broken humus, or upper arm. The recommended medical care would be to put the arm in a sling and send her home.

But, if the woman lived alone and had no family to help, hospitals in the past often would admit her for a week or 10 days until arrangements could be made. This, said the doctor, was not required medical treatment, but "social care."

Now, though, the woman would be discharged. She would either have to hire help or go to a nursing home.

"Patients and their families will have to learn to take care of themselves," said Benold. "They no longer can expect the government to pick up the tab for non-medical care."

WHY SUNTAN LOTION?

Here is some advice to take along on your vacation this year: Studies at the Frederick Cancer Research Institute in Maryland show that ultraviolet rays can suppress the body's immune system. Normally, the body's T-lymphocytes, a type of white blood cell, destroy cancerous cells before they cause any problem. Ultraviolet light, however, causes special "suppressor cells" to be produced. These cells prevent the T-cells from doing their job. As a result, the next time you debate whether to use a sun-blocking lotion, think of it as helping the body's immune system, not as hurting the chances of getting a tan.

If you haven't tried B&B PHARMACY for over the counter remedies and sun block lotions as well as prescription products chances are your neighbor probably has. It's strawberry cheesecake

AUSTIN (AP) — A Longview woman who doesn't like to fly won airline tickets to San Francisco when her strawberry cheesecake ice cream was named Saturday as the National Ice Cream of Texas.

The contest organized by the Texas Department of Agriculture featured 15 finalists whose recipes were chosen. Among the flavors cranked up in the Capitol were cottonut, dewberry, peach lime, pecan praline, strawberry Riesling, yummy yummy and, inevitably, — and perhaps unfortunately — jalapeno.

"I liked it when I made it at home but I think I put too much sour cream in it today and messed it up," said Jim Phillips of Lubbock, whose jalapeno ice cream finished out of the running.

Contest rules required recipes to include pure Texas products, except for any chocolate or vanilla used.

Mrs. Gilbert said she's been making her strawberry cheesecake ice cream for about five months.

"I just take a little of this and a little of that and put it together," she said of the winning recipe.

First prize was a deluxe ice cream maker and a trip for four to San Francisco, courtesy of Southwest Airlines.

"I don't fly," Mrs. Gilbert said. "I'll see if they'll let me drive. I'll start early."

She said she had last flown "a long time ago, when I was a little girl. Probably about 40 years ago."

But the winner said she probably could be persuaded to again brave the wonders of flight.

"I'm sure I'll fly if that's what they want me to do," she said.

Second place went to Carolyn Croom of Austin, who cranked up Texas strawberry Riesling ice cream. Riesling is a Texas wine.

Third place went to Elizabeth Lott of Kauffman for her peanut butter fudge ice cream.

Phillips' jalapeno ice cream was the last served to the nine judges. It drew attention, particularly with its delayed-reaction kick in the taste buds.

Jalapeno ice cream — which sounds like a concoction more fitting for a laxative cook-off and fun run — was a mistake in the first place, according to its cranker.

"The radio station at Slaton that I was listening to said they were going to have a jalapeno ice cream contest. I thought I had to make jalapeno ice cream," he said, adding that it turned out to be a misunderstanding.

"I thought it sounded ridiculous but I went to the supermarket and went to the jalapeno dips and found a jalapeno sour cream dip that was smooth and creamy and had a nice flavor," he said.

"This is probably the last time," Phillips said of his Saturday effort to reproduce the tangy treat.

Discovery chases, catches, and snares Spartan satellite

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Discovery's astronauts racked up a perfect score for their mission Saturday, stalking and capturing a science satellite that's been peering 30,000 light years back in time during two days of free flight.

After chasing it around the world 14 times, the astronauts caught up to the Spartan satellite, which had been studying a suspected black hole at the core of the Milky Way, and latched on with their ship's robot arm.

"Howdy," said astronaut John Fabian. "Got Spartan on the hook." He then gingerly eased the box-like contraption back into the cargo bay and it was latched down.

The Spartan, a relatively inexpensive, reusable platform about the size of a telephone booth, had been put overboard Thursday so its instruments could work undisturbed by anything the shuttle might do. The two spacecraft were separated by a maximum of 121 miles in that time.

It was the first use of the Spartan. The next one will be when it's taken up on another shuttle flight to help study Halley's comet in 1986.

"I think we were 100 percent successful in what we tried to do," said flight Director Larry Bourgeois. The Spartan retrieval was the last major task of the seven-day flight, which ends Monday with a 6:14 a.m. PDT landing on the dry lake bed at Edwards Air Force Base in California.

On Sunday, the two foreign payload specialists on the flight will have telephone conversations with officials in their home countries.

Saudi Arabian Prince Sultan Salman Al-Saud will speak with his uncle, King Fahd, and French test pilot Patrick Baudry will talk about the flight with Hubert Curien, the minister of research and technology.

That will be followed by a space-to-ground news conference with Commander Dan Brandenstein and the rest of his crew, pilot John O. Creighton, and mission specialists Steven R. Nagel, Fabian and Shannon Lucid. Sultan and Baudry also will take part.

Hargett tops spending list

WASHINGTON (AP) — The two top Democratic spenders in the race for the 1st Congressional District had spent less combined than the one Republican in the race, according to campaign finance reports on file with the Clerk of the House of Representatives.

Republican Edd Hargett of Linden reported spending $387,675 as of June 9, the end of the latest reporting period.

Democratic State Rep. Sam Russell of Mount Pleasant reported spending $191,795, and former district attorney Jim Chapman of Sulphur Springs said he had spent $142,685.

The bulk of Russell's campaign chest — $145,000 — was loans, his report said. Chapman reported he gave his campaign $70,000.

Hargett said he had $78,740 in his coffers by the end of the reporting period. Russell's campaign was $8,768 in the hole, according to his report. Chapman said he had $10,975 on hand.

Of the eight candidates who have filed to run for the seat, vacated when Democrat Sam B. Hall Jr. was appointed federal judge, five had reports on file in Washington as of the end of the week.

Candidates do not have to file until they spend or raise more than $5,000.

The election is next Saturday. Those not on file included former State Treasurer Warren G. Harding, a latecomer in the race; Carl D. Brown of Nash; and Freddy John Weider of Woodville, who lists himself as an Independent.

Russell reported raising $7,500 from PACs.

Chapman reported PAC contributions of $1,350.

Unfavorable weather plagues cotton crop

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP) — The Texas South Plains, where more than half the state's cotton is grown, has been plagued by highly unfavorable cool, wet conditions this season, says Dr. Zerle L. Carpenter, director of the Texas Agricultural Extension Service.

In recent weeks some developing cotton in the South Plains has been washed out by heavy rains, some has been damaged by hail and some has suffered severely from seedling disease and related problems resulting from the cool, wet weather. Because of the lateness of the cotton planting season, most of the lost cotton acreage will be replanted to soybeans, Carpenter said.

Some young cotton in the Rolling Plains also has been damaged by heavy rains, hail and seedling disease in recent weeks, and replanting continues in some counties, Carpenter said in his weekly report on the state's agriculture.

Recent adverse weather conditions also took a heavy toll of mature wheat in parts of the Rolling Plains. Up to 40 percent of the wheat crop in Hardeman County was lost to lodging, with losses estimated at about $1 million, Carpenter said.

Some wheat harvesting continues in parts of the Rolling Plains, North Central, Northeast and West Central Texas and is increasing in the Panhandle and South Plains. Good dryland yields of 20 to 40 bushels per acre are being reported in the Panhandle.

While young cotton is suffering from adverse weather in the South Plains, crops elsewhere are making fairly good progress although some yield reductions will result in some southern, eastern and coastal counties unless rains come soon. Rains of one-half to several inches fell in scattered locations along the coast and in Southwest Texas early this week, but a general rain is still needed, said Carpenter.

Reports from district Extension directors showed these conditions.

PANHANDLE: Wheat harvesting is under way in most counties, with good dryland yields of 20 to 40 bushels per acre. Most spring crops are making good growth although some cotton has been damaged by scattered hail and blowing sand. Sorghum planting is about 80 percent complete. Most pastures and ranges look good.

SOUTH PLAINS: The area's young cotton crop has been plagued by heavy rains and scattered hail, and eedling disease has run rampant due to cool, wet conditions. A lot of cotton acreage will be replanted to soybeans due to the lateness of the cotton planting season. Most other crops are doing well and ranges are in excellent shape.

ROLLING PLAINS: About 20 percent of the cotton crop remains to be planted, including some replanting due to recent heavy rains. Wheat also remains to be harvested in some counties. Recent rains caused about 40 percent of the wheat crop to lodge in Hardeman County, causing losses of about $1 million. Pastures and ranges look good.

NORTH CENTRAL: Scattered rains caused some interruptions to wheat and oat harvesting and hay making. Peanuts are still being planted in some locations. Most spring crops are making good growth. Harvesting of early peaches continues, and watermelons are ripening. Livestock have plenty of forage to graze.

NORTHEAST: Wheat

harvesting is active and producers are baling hay. First cuttings of hay have been good, but rain is needed for additional cuttings.

Pastures also are in need of rain. Vegetable production remains in full swing, and early peach varieties are producing good yields.

FAR WEST: Recent rains have improved crop and range conditions but more moisture is needed in some locations. About 1,000 acres of cotton were lost to hail in Pecos County and are being replanted. Wheat and barley harvests are producing average yields. Onion harvesting remains active.

WEST CENTRAL: Scattered rains over the region will help young crops and ranges, but a general rain is still needed. Cotton and peanut planting is about complete. Most wheat has been harvested, with good yields, while oat yields have ranged from good to poor. Pastures and ranges are in fair shape, with weeds abundant. An excellent peach harvest continues.

CENTRAL: Crops continue to make good progress although insects are increasing. Western corn rootworms are damaging some corn, and fleahoppers and lygus bugs are increasing in cotton. Hay making continues, and early peaches are being harvested.

EAST: Good first cuttings of hay are being harvested, but rain is needed for additional cuttings. Pastures, vegetables and other crops are starting to show moisture stress. Peaches and pecans also need rain for continued development.

UPPER COAST: Scattered rains fell over parts of the area, but a general rain is needed to boost crops and pastures. Some corn ears are not filling out due to lack of moisture, and pecans are shedding due to moisture stress.

Leave grain for the birds

Don't forget wildlife when harvesting wheat and oats. Quail, pheasant, mourning dove, turkey and other birds find food and cover in fields of small grains, according to Lee McDonald, district conservation for the Gray County Soil and Water Conservation District.

Strips of unharvested grain around field edges near brush or tall grasses provide excellent food for quail and turkey, he said, noting pheasant will use unharvested strips along terraces or around areas in the field that are too wet to cultivate. Mourning dove will feed on shattered seed where soils are shallow and the stand of grain is thin.

McDonald said that even if the entire field is combined, these same areas can be left untilled until next planting season to benefit wildlife. Without tillage, waste grain is available to the birds and an 8-inch stubble provides suitable cover until it deteriorates.

If an area in the field has a thin stand of wheat and a good stand of native sunflowers, this area could be saved for dove hunting next September, he said.

McDonald said small grain stubble should not be burned. Wildlife benefits are lost as well as organic matter. It also exposes the soil to erosion, he said.

In Agriculture

BY JOE VANZANDT
County Extension Agent

Wheat harvest has been real active this past week and is in the clean-up state for the most part this week. Most early yield reports show a little above average for dryland. However, the test weight has been reduced this year, which I believe is due in most part to the leaf rust infection we had this spring.

WHAT TO DO WITH WHEAT RESIDUE

Farmers need to consider what to do with crop residue as they wrap up their wheat harvest.

Among crop residue management options are burning, clean tillage, conservation tillage and chemical fallow.

Burning of wheat stubble is the least desirable option because it leaves the land unprotected and subject to erosion. It also prevents the opportunity to add organic matter to the soil and destroys important plant nutrients, including nitrogen and sulfur, which could help succeeding crops.

Clean tillage involves burying most of the wheat straw, leaving the surface virtually barren of any crop residues. Use of a moldboard or disk plow can reduce surface residue levels as much as 90 percent. Each disking operation with a disk harrow may cover about 50 percent of the surface residue. So two or three diskings will leave little crop residue on the soil surface.

Conservation tillage will maintain desirable levels of wheat straw on the surface after tillage. Research at Bushland has shown that wide-blade sweeps or rod weeder reduce surface residues by about 10 percent in each tillage operation. Other implements such as chisel plows, subsoilers or sweep cultivators bury about 25 percent of the wheat stubble in each tillage operation. Some producers are using herbicides to complement weed control efforts in these operations.

Chemical fallow, or use of herbicides to control weeds and grasses between crops, is another alternative for managing wheat residue. This practice can eliminate, or at least reduce, tillage operations. If tillage is necessary to supplement weed control offered by herbicides, farmers should consider using wide-blade sweeps or rod weeder. Each of these crop residue management options has advantages and disadvantages. The option farmers select will be affected by a number of production conditions, including the amount of wheat stubble. Perennial weeds, compaction pans in the soil, type of tillage and planting equipment available, and cost of herbicides.

Clean tillage, using the moldboard plow or disk harrow, may lend itself to conditions where irrigated wheat has produced a large volume of residue, where perennial weeds are a problem, where compaction pans are present in soils, or where disease such as root rot fungus has infected fields in continuous wheat.

Conservation tillage and chemical fallow systems offer a number of advantages. Such operations keep wheat stubble on the surface to increase moisture storage, reduce soil erosion and aid weed control. Additionally, conservation tillage systems can conserve energy, reduce labor and lessen the wear on equipment through reduced usage. Also, less tillage helps avoid soil compaction problems and deterioration of soil tilth.

However, conservation tillage also has some drawbacks. These include the inability to deep till to break deep compaction pans, the inability to cover heavy residue and the possible build-up of disease organisms. Also, herbicides may be needed to help control some weeds.

If large amounts of wheat residue are present at planting, no-till drills or other special planting equipment may be required. Weed control with a no-till, total chemical system may be relatively costly.

Regardless of the residue management system selected, use only those tillage operations that are essential to produce a good crop. Reducing the number of tillage operations can reduce fuel, labor and equipment costs.

Idaho farmers wage war on grasshoppers

MOUNTAIN HOME, Idaho (AP) — For southern Idaho's farmers, old enemies like prices and weather have paled before the relentless onslaught of grasshoppers.

"It's going to put a lot of guys on the ropes," said Jack Harman, who farms about 1,500 acres of sugar beets, wheat and barley in the Magic Valley.

"There were guys, when they gave me the money for spraying with tears in their eyes, said, 'I don't know where I'm going to pay for this, but here it is.'"

Farmers on the irrigated high plain north of the Snake River are banking on the government's aerial spraying campaign, which reached the 1 million-acre mark this weekend. But that leaves 4 million acres to go, and losing the battle may mean losing the farm for growers burdened by heavy debt and depressed crop prices.

The federal Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service, which is coordinating the spraying, hoped to have two Air National Guard C-123 spray planes at work Sunday, and a third has been promised later in the week.

APHIS officials say about 4.4 million acres already are under contract for spraying, with more contracts being signed almost daily. Much of the infested land is owned by the federal government, a sore point with the embattled farmers who believe there would be no problem this year if the government had taken care of its land earlier.

"If they had been on top of it last year, we wouldn't have had nearly the problem we're seeing," said farmer Jim Grieve. "Now I think they need to control the hoppers no matter what the cost."

Despite their debts, most farmers have dug deep for tens of thousands of dollars to participate in the government spraying. Others are financing spraying on their own.

For some, spraying has paid off, producing good kills. But with millions of acres infested, crop dusters — even with the C-123s — cannot cover more than 200,000 acres a day, while devastation mounts elsewhere.

Despite costs that run to $6 or $7 an acre for private spraying, sugar beet farmer Woody Wing has treated the borders of his fields four times only to see "the back ones come over the top when there are casualties."

As a rule of thumb, it's time to spray when you find eight grasshoppers in a square yard. In the Magic Valley, the grasshopper density is often 20 to 30 per square yard; sometimes 200 or more insects are found dining in that space.

"The ground's alive," Vernal Hawkes said as he walked through knee-deep wheat, with nothing but grasshoppers left on the ravaged stalks.

Time is of the essence. If the grasshoppers are not sprayed before they are old enough to lay eggs, the hordes will be back again next year.

The plague already is being called the worst in Idaho history, with officials predicting still worse to come.

Texas' only blind judge dies

HOUSTON (AP) — Criss Cole, a 16-year veteran of the Texas Legislature and the state's only blind judge, has died after a two-week struggle with respiratory, heart and kidney problems. He was 67.

Cole died Friday in a Houston hospital, where he was admitted June 10.

"The state of Texas and its juvenile justice system have sustained a great loss in the death of Judge Cole. His dedicated service emphasized hope and help for troubled young people. His work and concern made a significant difference in the lives of thousands of Texans," said state Sen. Chet Brooks, D-Pasadena.

In 1971, Cole was appointed by then-Gov. Preston Smith to preside over the newly-created 315th District Court, one of three handling juvenile cases in Harris County.

Prior to his appointment, Cole served in the state Legislature as a representative and then senator from Harris County.

Stock market ends week with a bang

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market closed with a bang this past week after a mostly mixed showing that was attributed to the changing face of the economy.

Government reports indicated the economy is again picking up steam, and investors were forced to consider whether they welcomed a stronger economy in exchange for further declines in interest rates.

Whether such an exchange will in fact occur remains to be seen, of course. But there was widespread agreement on Wall Street that it is unlikely rates will slide much more as long as business growth is accelerating.

Interest rates fell sharply earlier this year, reflecting sluggish first-quarter economic growth and — according to some credit analysts — attempts by the Federal Reserve to ease credit conditions in order to stimulate the economy.

As the rates came down, the appeal of the stock market in general improved relative to the trend of declining yields available on bonds and other fixed-rate investments.

But the appeal of stocks was somewhat tarnished by another result of the weak economy — declining earnings in a variety of business sectors.

This past week, however, the Commerce Department estimated that the economy, as measured by the gross national product, is expanding at an annual rate of 3.1 percent in the current quarter — well above the meager 0.3 percent of the first quarter.

In addition, the Labor Department said inflation remained under control, with consumer prices rising only 0.2 percent in May.

Many people on Wall Street immediately interpreted the developments as giving the Federal Reserve little reason to again aggressively push interest rates lower in order to perk up the economy.

And if the central bank needed an additional reason for taking a wait-and-see stance, credit analysts said, it was delivered when the Fed itself reported a $4.8 billion surge in the nation's basic money supply in mid-June. The rise pushed the money supply even higher above the growth targets sought by the Fed.

On the plus side, the stronger economy likely will bolster the earnings potential of many companies. In addition, some analysts see the dollar gradually declining through the rest of 1985, which could help companies with their export sales.

Several stock-index futures and options contracts expired Friday, and once again there were sharp price changes in the closing minutes of the session as sophisticated traders closed out their positions in both the contracts and in the stocks underlying those index contracts.

In addition, one component in the Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, General Foods Corp., shot up 10% to 82 1/4 Friday amid unconfirmed rumors it was about to be acquired.

Both factors lifted the average 24.75 points on Friday alone, giving a 23.52-point gain for the week to 1,324.48 — only 2.80 points below its record high of 1,327.28 reached June 6.

Compare John Deere's 9-month finance charge waiver on new tractors (17 to 37 hp) with other low-rate finance offers.* You'll see John Deere's waiver is more attractive than most. In fact, our plan can give you an effective rate as low as 8.7 percent on a full four year loan. Even lower if you pay the contract off early.

Plus, the John Deere Finance Plan includes physical damage insurance at no extra charge. And credit life insurance for qualified buyers, too. But best of all you'll be buying a John Deere tractor. A tractor with proven high resale value. A tractor with a warranty as strong as the company name. And a tractor that comes complete with parts, service and a dealer like me. Consumer groups oppose STNP settlement

By KEN HERMAN
Associated Press Writer
AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Ratepayers might have to fill in a costly gap if the Public Utility Commission approves the proposed $750 million settlement of the South Texas Nuclear Project lawsuit, consumer groups say.

"We are all here today because we want the public to be aware of the incredible rip-off which is being proposed by the executives of two investor-owned utilities," Michael Twombly, state director Public Citizen, said at a Thursday news conference.

Houston Lighting & Power Inc. and Central Power & Light Inc.

have asked the PUC approve the settlement in which Brown & Root Inc. would pay $750 million to HL&P, CP&L, City Public Service of San Antonio and the city of Austin.

Austin has not decided whether it wants to take its share of the proposed out-of-court settlement.

Brown & Root was engineer for the project before the company was fired. The project owners sued Brown & Root and its parent company, Halliburton Inc., alleging mismanagement.

"It's high time that these sweetheart deals were broken up for good," Brad Weibel, president of the Texas Consumer Association, said of the settlement proposal.

The PUC has set a Jan. 6 hearing on the settlement. If it agrees that alleged Brown & Root mismanagement caused only $750 million in losses then the utility companies might be able to charge ratepayers for other costs at the plant under construction. CP&L and HL&P are expected to file rate hike cases this year.

At a capitol news conference, the consumer groups complained that the $750 million figure is too low. A study prepared for HL&P, the managing partner, found $2.4 billion misspent, according to Twombly.

The $750 million settlement "means that HL&P and CP&L will be able to charge their ratepayers for all of the costs of the plant which are not included in the settlement," said Twombly.

"It means that the smaller the settlement, the more HL&P can charge its customers, and the larger the profit it will be entitled to make for years to come," he said.

Ratepayers will be inadequately represented at the PUC hearing because Public Utility Counsel Jim Boyle's office is underfunded, he said.

Success overcomes a dowser's skepticism

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. (AP) — Using nothing but a marble on a thread or two bent coat hangers, Robert Humphris says he can find water. Or the winner of a football game. Or whether his wife is home from work yet.

In fact, Humphris, an amateur dowser, says he can find the answer to just about any question he wants to ask.

"The imagination is the limit as to what you can do with dowsing," said Humphris, an engineering professor at the University of Virginia here.

The traditional notion of dowsing, or divining, is a man using a forked tree branch to locate underground streams. That notion, Humphris said, is incomplete.

"Dowsing is the gift or the art of obtaining information with the help of a device," is his definition.

With his array of divining devices, Humphris has searched for — among other things — graves. Zachary Taylor's birthplace and a buried culvert. Using a dowsing rod the way some people use an Ouija board, Humphris has answered questions ranging from "Will it rain here today?" to "Will the Steelers beat the Colts?"

And, of course, he has searched for water. By his count, he's searched for locations for some 350 wells. Only 10 have come up dry, he said.

It is that success rate that has erased Humphris' scientific misgivings about dowsing. Fifteen years after he first lifted a divining rod, he is still not sure why it works. But he knows it works.

"I sure was a skeptic at first," the gray-haired 56-year-old Humphris said while sipping iced coffee at a local seafood restaurant. "I keep having feelings of — 'Here I am a scientist, what am I doing in this area? It just can't work.'"

"But just what I have seen has convinced me that there's something there," he said. "I'm convinced now."

Humphris' interest in divining began when his son was taught the art by a plumber for whom he was working. The son introduced dowsing to his father, who was skeptical but intrigued.

Ten years later, Humphris was taking a course in parapsychology when he chose dowsing as the subject of his term paper. His research fascinated him.

"That really got me hooked, because here it was well documented," Humphris said.

Now, he is an amateur dowser, clearly fascinated by the art and anxious to share his enthusiasm. He teaches classes in dowsing. He teaches dowsing to people who hire him, so that they can do the job themselves next time. He has taught dowsing to his family, and they can all dowse — except for his brother and brother-in-law, geologists who remain cynical about dowsing.

Humphris said the key to dowsing is in the mind. Anyone who believes he can dowse can learn to dowse.

THE WORK OF THE CHURCH

When the word "church" appears in the Bible, it always has reference to the family of God or a congregation of God's people (see Matthew 16:18; 1 Corinthians 12; Romans 16:16.) The word is never used in regard to a material building of brick and stone. The people who composed the church in those early days had believed in Jesus Christ as the Son of God, repented of their sins, confessed Christ as the Son of God, and had been baptized in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of their sins (Mark 16:16; Matthew 28:18-20; Acts 2:38; 8:26-39.)

The concern of the individual disciple was to be for spiritual and eternal things (Ephesians 6:19-24; 33.) It therefore follows that the physical methods and means employed by local churches was to be in order to their spiritual development and the enlightenment of mankind (1 Corinthians 14:26; 1 Timothy 2:3-4; 3:15.) Jesus emphasized the preeminence of the spiritual over the physical (Matthew 6:33.) The church at Philippi had sent physical assistance to the apostle

Paul to sustain him while he was preaching the gospel (Philippians 1:5; 4:15-16.) In this way they had fellowship with him in the furtherance of the gospel. But the physical sustenance was only in order to relieve his needs and never for the purpose of making him wealthy.

When churches of Christ, that is local congregations, build facilities such as kitchens, fellowship halls, recreational rooms, etc., they do so for their own physical benefit and it can in no wise be construed to lend anything to the spiritual welfare of the church. Paul insists that there is a place to take care of the physical needs of a person and the place is at home (1 Corinthians 11:34.) Further, if all the banquets, parties, etc., are used to entice people to attend, then they, like the people following Jesus will only come for that and nothing else (John 6:22-27.)

Churches of Christ need to focus their attention on the preaching of the truth and the saving of souls thereby.

LINES

Out on the job, power lines bring needed electricity to the site. But they can be dangerous . . . if you don't watch up! You need to be especially careful when you are handling re-bar, pipes, scaffolding, or tools that are long enough to contact overhead lines. Contact with power lines is also a potential danger to operators of front-end loaders, dump trucks and any other equipment of unusual height.

Keep an eye up for power lines. Watch up, for safety's sake.

Old Glory bids farewell to its school

By CINDY RUGELEY
Fort Worth Star-Telegram
OLD GLORY, Texas (AP) — In 1935, a spunky high school valedictorian spoke to an audience attending Old Glory High School's commencement about the dreams of her class for the future.

Bernice White's dreams included hopes that the school would continue to be healthy and sound. This year, she returned to her alma mater on the 50th anniversary of her graduation and watched somewhat sorrowfully as the future of the school came to an end.

After 57 years, Old Glory School High recently conducted its last graduation ceremony in its school cafeteria. A mixture of declining student population and shrinking state dollars dealt a death blow to the tiny one-building school system in Stonewall County, about 60 miles north of Abilene.

Next year, its students will travel 10 miles to Aspermont. "It's just all really sad," White said.

Three graduates — a class larger than many recently in Old Glory — received diplomas in the ceremony that combined youthful excitement for the future with a sadness over the loss of a part of the community's past.

"I wish it wouldn't end," valedictorian Maribel Castro said as she donned the royal blue graduation gown that she would wear during commencement. "It makes me very happy to be valedictorian. But it makes me sad to be the last one. I'm really going to miss this school."

Nearby, the other two graduates, Darin Epley and Bobby Lowack, shook hands with friends and others who had come early to wish the last graduates well. Almost 150 people, twice the number of people who live in the small town, came.

"Everybody knows everybody in a town like this," Epley commented.

Epley and Lowack viewed the closing of the school with mixed emotions and even a little apathy. Aspermont, they said, would offer graduates more opportunities. But it would also deprive them of many pleasures.

"It's sad losing the school and everything. It hasn't sunk in completely yet," said Epley, who next year will attend Western Texas College in Snyder.

The consolidation is "kind of good for them. They will get to participate in more activities. There's not much of a social life in Old Glory. There are only two girls in the whole high school."

"At times, I would have liked to have gone to a bigger school. At the same time, though, there are a lot of good things about smaller schools. You get to go on a great senior trip," he said, referring to a planned trip to Orlando, Fla.

Lowack said the closing of the school didn't make much difference to him. "It doesn't seem like much now, but I suppose it probably will later. If I was going to Aspermont next year it would be different. But right now it doesn't seem to mean much."

The death blow for Old Glory school came quickly and to many, unexpectedly, in a Stonewall County Commissioners Court meeting on March 7. Taking advantage of state law that allows commissioners courts to annex school districts that have fewer than 150 students, commissioners voted to combine the only two school districts in the county.

"We realized something had to be done because of money," Old Glory Superintendent Tommy Blackshear said. "But we were surprised at the quickness."

Old Glory schools had watched their student population drop from almost 300 in the late 1930s to only 33 in kindergarten through grade 12 this year. They also had seen the amount of money they received from the state fall off.

Last year the district received about $50,000 of its $405,000 budget from the state. Next year it expected to receive less than $15,000.

"There was no way we could make up the amount cut in state funding," Blackshear said. "Obviously we had to go somewhere."

The district was considering consolidating with either Aspermont or Rule in Haskell county, when it was annexed. "I can understand commissioners wanting to keep the district in the county," said school board President C.T. Pierce.

For almost all of its existence, the Old Glory school had lived with the threat of extinction. Pierce, who was elected to the school board 29 years ago, said he always heard that the district would last but two more years.

"We've been looking for it to close down for years. But it would have been sad for me if it closed 10 years from now," 1935 graduate Morris Garner said.

"We wouldn't have lasted as long as we had without oil," high school Principal Eula Peters said.

Ms. White, the 1935 valedictorian and the school district bookkeeper, recalls that in her graduating year, the district couldn't afford to buy diplomas so the superintendent paid for them.

"Back then we had school until we ran out of money and then we stopped," she said.

The town that is now Old Glory dates from 1909, but at that time it existed under another name. It originally was named Old Brandenburg, a title selected by its German founders.

But during the anti-German pitch of World War I, the town voted to change its name to Old Glory.

The original school burned in 1936. The replacement building, which was used until the school closed this year was dedicated in 1937.

In its years in the newer building, the school has accumulated a rich history. A trophy case in the hall holds district basketball trophies dating back 40 years.

In the 1960s, Old Glory student Stephanie Letz captured the state tennis championship four years in a row.

"We have a lot to look back on," said Anita Baldree, the school secretary, who is a 1945 graduate.

Students who will be most affected by the change, those who will attend Aspermont next year, generally seem to have reconciled themselves to the change and even look forward to it.

"I think it will be all right to go to Aspermont. I wish I could finish here. I can do a lot more there, though," said Jeff Flowers, a 17-year-old junior.

But alumni and community leaders are more remorseful.

"In a town them size of Old Glory, losing the school really hurts," said Pierce, the school board president, who also attended the school in the early 1940s.

"...It's hard to realize that this is the caboose. It's kind of like being sent to a war. They are uprooting things and things are changing. It's leaving us with a kind of empty feeling knowing it's not going to be here any more."

Paula Baity, a 1945 graduate, fought back tears of happiness when she saw her grandson, Darin Epley, graduate. It was more difficult to fight back the tears at losing the school.

"I've been on the verge of tears all day," she said. All three of her daughters graduated from Old Glory, and her husband attended the school when it was Old Brandenburg.

In her valedictory speech, Ms. Castro said an emotional farewell to the school and praised the individual attention that students in the small district received from teachers.

"It's hard for me personally not being able to see the rest of my family graduate from Old Glory as everyone else has," she said. She is the 10th child in her family to graduate from Old Glory. Almost all of them have graduated as valedictorian or salutatorian. Two more remain to graduate.

Community leaders have been successful in keeping the school building even if they did lose the school. Next year the cafeteria will be used as a community building. The trophies in the hall will be moved onto a new shelf there.

In his final speech at the graduation, Pierce pointed out that the school building will still serve an important function in the community.

"We want you to continue supporting the community," he told those at the commencement. "Don't let the community down. That's the thing I ask from each and every one of you."

SPORTS SCENE

Sports Forum and Agin 'Um WARREN HASSE

IF YOU BELIEVE that John Conley voluntarily resigned as athletic director at Texas Tech this past week you'll also believe that the Easter Bunny grows colored eggs in Lubbock, Santa Claus spends the off-season in the Hub City, and the Tooth Fairy is going to Texas Tech Medical School.

Good soldier that he is, Conley faced the news media last Tuesday, forced a slight smile, swallowed hard, whispered "king's-X", and said he was "resigning" his post effective August 31, ending 24 years of "devoted service" according to school President Lauro Cavazos, who had appointed the workaholic Conley to the post five years previous. After a dozen years of high school football coaching in Kansas and at Snyder, Texas, he became a Techsan in 1961, as an assistant to J.T. King, filling one of the voids left when Joe Kerbel shifted to West Texas State.

The same insiders who told us two weeks ago yesterday it was going to happen also tell us it took bulldozers driven by thick-walleted Tech supporters in the Dallas and Houston areas to force the action. It is another example of the problem faced by university CEOs in the area of athletics, as we discussed here last Wednesday. And we hate to see it.

I doubt that Conley would know me if I walked into his office. Other than one round of golf as cartmates, our association has been limited to a very few passing "Hi, Johns". My knowledge of the man comes from a study of his accomplishments and an understanding of the dedication, loyalty, and pride that all outstanding coaches must have. Conley's record verifies he has all of those inward qualities, and athletes who have performed for him confirm that fact. His success as a coach, and the wide field of successful results as athletic director testify to his administrative talent.

Included in the latter were a variety of renovations of old athletic facilities, new athletic construction, financing the projects, building successful programs on the field, and keeping the school out of NCAA problems. Unfortunately, the best guess is that it is some of the unfinished business that is suspect as the crux of bringing about his departure, which at age 62, was not due for three more years.

Insiders speculate that those downstate Exes have been extremely unhappy with the lack of success in football, and demanded a coaching change. They were tired of taking the ribbing from associates from UT, A&M, SMU, and those reborn Horned Frogs. Football Coach Jerry Moore, a Conley selection, has had enough time to structure a winner they say. Conley, more loyal to his nominee that others have been to reward his own lengthy service, stood behind his otherwise popular coach. Some Exes had not recovered from the fact Moore was jerked from the North Texas State job rather than popular Tech alum Tom Wilson being appointed.

Since Conley didn't make the change at the end of last season, it was apparent that to make a switch in football, a change had to be engineered in the athletic director's office. And the leverage came in part for another much-needed project being handled by Conley with unanimous endorsement of the Tech Board of Regents - a $4.5 million multi-purpose athletic facility. Anytime anyone donates money, they expect a voice, and this project was no exception, and may have been Conley's Achilles heel.

It is impossible to believe that a fighter like Conley, who has that inbred spirit demanded of his athletes to "never quit", would walk away from the post with two major challenges uncompleted...developing a winning football program and seeing the athletic facility through to completion. Don't believe for one minute that the Big Guy quit over the reason given, "the POSSIBLE merger of men's and women's athletics".

A three-year study has been underway to determine the possibility of such an act, and general consensus is it will occur. But not this next fiscal year, at least. Currently, the money-losing women's programs are financed with student auxiliary funds, student service fees and donations. The men's programs, with only football and basketball dollar earners, are backed by ticket sales, TV revenue, and donations.

On the golf course, Conley would reach into his bag, and no matter how much the lie, would give it his best shot. It is impossible to believe he wouldn't do the same as AD. Does the Easter Bunny really lay those eggs?

On another note, early word is that when the next re-alignment of the University Interscholastic League occurs in time for the 1986-87 school year, District 1-4A will be enlarged by two members...Hereford and Frenship High School at Wolforth. Where's Wolforth? Ten miles southwest of Lubbock on the Brownfield highway. The Tigers made the jump from AA to AAA five years ago, and as a bedroom community for the Hub City, are ready to spring up another step. Hereford, like Pampa and Borger before it, is losing school population.

If this becomes fact, 1-4A would become a nine-school district, most pleasing to most coaches. Scheduling is already a major problem, and this would mandate two more football games each fall and four basketball games to accomplish the robin procedures. That is if HB 72 will still permit sports competition.

Miller, Ritzman tied for lead

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Alice Miller, bored through her front nine, rallied with an eagle on the 16th to tie Alice Ritzman for the lead Saturday after three rounds of the $250,000 Mayflower Classic.

"The front nine was pretty boring, lots of pars," said Miller, who had a 6-under 210 after scoring her second 67 of the tournament. "The only two greens I missed on the front were both on the fringe, where I just two putted."

Ritzman had five consecutive birdies and seven in eight holes to move to the top of the leader board. She hit nine birdies in posting a 67.

Miller, who played without a bogey for the second time since the tournament began Thursday started her charge with a birdie on the 329-yard, par 4, No. 11.

"The best putt of the day wasn't the longest," said Miller in describing that birdie. "It was about a 15-footer. It was pin high right and that green is very severe. It had about four feet of break in it."

"I walked up and said, 'Well this is going to take a little imagination' and I just picked a spot that was above the hole and well short of the hole and tried to putt to that spot and the ball went in."

Sena holds pole position

DETROIT (AP) — Ayrton Senna of Brazil held the pole position for Sunday's Detroit Grand Prix without turning a wheel Saturday as a steady rain kept anyone from challenging the top first-day times.

Senna, a 24-year-old in only his second Formula One season, picked up his fourth pole position in six tries this season, by virtue of his fast lap in Friday's 60 minutes of qualifying on a dry track.

SMU considering lawsuit

NCAA passes stiff penalties

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Southern Methodist University's president said he would have opposed stiffer NCAA enforcement regulations that were pushed through this weekend even if SMU weren't the target of a current investigation into alleged recruiting irregularities.

SMU and only five other schools — including Texas, Texas A&M and Southwest Texas State — voted Friday in New Orleans against a so-called "gas chamber" measure that would ban competition for one or two years in a sport for repeat offenders.

The final vote was 427-6, as an NCAA special convention on integrity overwhelmingly passed legislation that could cost a coach his job and an athlete his eligibility if they violate the rules.

Shields issued a written statement at the convention — the only president to do so — calling for a "broad-based review and revision of the current enforcement system before there is consideration of the single subject of increased penalties."

SMU was notified only weeks ago of an impending probation — believed to be one of the strongest in NCAA history.

The new enforcement policy could have serious ramifications on SMU, which was on probation from June 1981 to June 1983 and now is appealing to the NCAA Council the latest findings and recommendations of the NCAA Committee on Infractions.

"Certainly I'd be concerned about that. But I will say without qualification that I would have felt this way (about the legislation) if I'd still been president of the university in California (Cal State-Fullerton)," SMU president L. Donald Shields, said Friday.

Shields told the Dallas Times Herald he's for stronger enforcement, but not without adding certain standards of due process to the investigative process.

The present process "has been built up in pieces, like building a camel, over the years," Shields said, and "just is not adequate to treat contemporary issues in athletics."

He confirmed reports that SMU is considering a lawsuit against the NCAA on grounds that the NCAA enforcement system is unfair and SMU has been discriminated against.

An "evangelistic attitude" seemed to surround the convention, making his concern about due process a minor one, Shields said.

"I don't mean to deride that particular attitude, because I think some of the abuses... Well, at SMU, I will tell you, we are not talking about academic violations or the modification of transcripts. We are not talking about point-shaving or gambling. We are not talking about drugs," Shields said.

"I think some of those things are very, very substantial, and I think presidents are frustrated that there hasn't been a more severe penalty structure," he added.

In his first remarks about the investigation since early in the NCAA's 26-month probe of the SMU football program, Shields said the school has taken "substantive" action to work out the problems in its football program, which faces NCAA sanctions for the fourth time in 11 years.

He would not elaborate on the action, the Times Herald said.

"We cannot talk about the details of our current situation because we are in the appeals process," Shields said. "Substantive actions have been taken by the university, which will be announced at the conclusion of the appeals process in August in Boston."

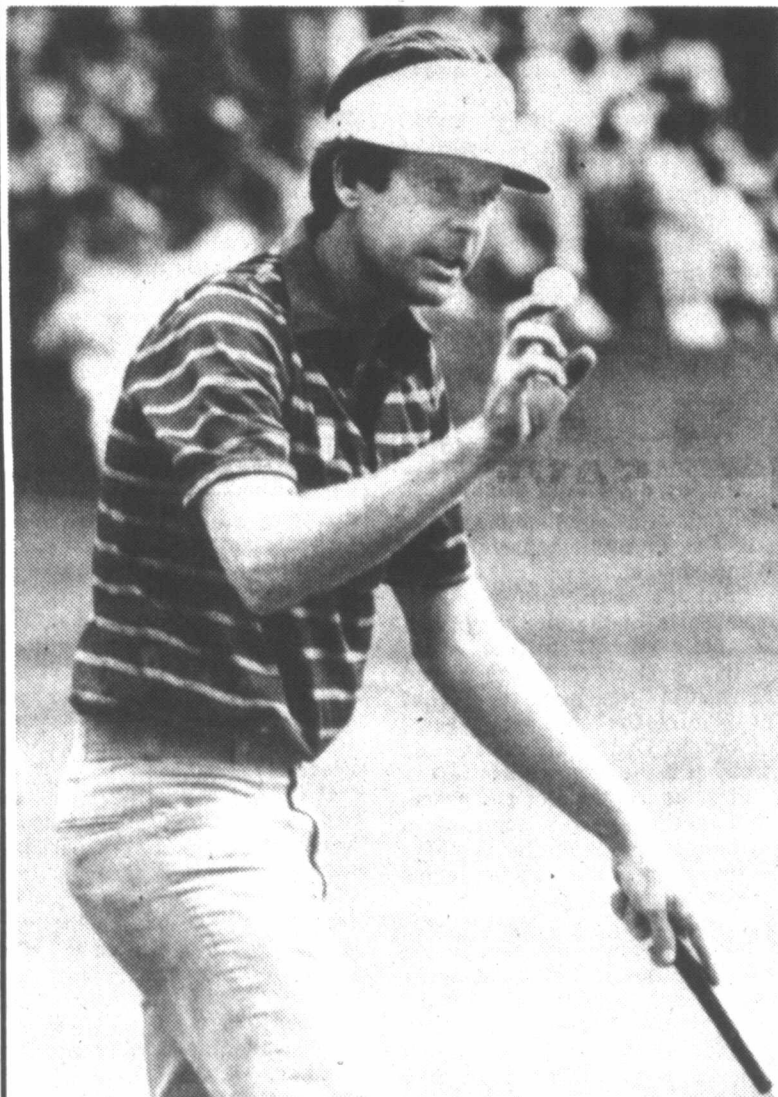

Edwards, Frost share Atlanta lead

ED SHEARER AP Sports Writer
ATLANTA (AP) — David Frost of South Africa is listed as a rookie on the U.S. golf tour, but that is deceiving.

"I played two full seasons in Europe and one back home," Frost said Saturday after firing an 8-under-par 64 that gave him a share of the lead with Danny Edwards after three rounds of the $500,000 Georgia-Pacific Atlanta Golf Classic.

"That's about as much experience as a guy has here in three years," Frost said.

Ties for lead in Atlanta Golf Classic...Danny Edwards of Edmond, Okla.

Frost, who began play five shots off the lead, completed his round about one hour before Edwards sank a four-foot birdie putt on the 18th green to share the lead at 14-under-par 202 on the 7,006-yard Atlanta Country Club course.

"Anybody four or five back can win it, but it will depend on what the leaders do," said Edwards, who had a 68.

"I'll just give it my best shot," he said of Sunday's chase for the $90,000 first prize.

Edwards had one bogey when he three-putted from 30 feet on No. 5 and scored three of his birdies from inside 10 feet and the other two in the 12-15-foot range.

Frost, who served two years of national service as a police constable clerk in Cape Town, knocked in five of his eight birdie putts from 10 feet or more.

Edwards, a part-time race car driver with four tour victories in his career, got his closing birdie after the national telecast had ended for the day.

Raymond Floyd, a two-time PGA champion and the winner of one Masters, held a one-shot lead after 13 holes, but fell off the pace with a pair of bogeys before getting a birdie on the final hole for a 68-204 that left him tied for third with rookie Steve Pate, the second round leader.

"I don't believe another 68 will be enough, but you never know," Floyd said after shooting identical scores in the first three rounds.

Pate was never able to get it going, but did birdie the final hole for a 71.

"It was kind of boring," Pate said. "I surprised myself by hanging in there close to the lead."

Frost, who tied for second in the Houston Open, got his day going with a 12-foot birdie putt on the first hole.

He added three more birdies on the front side — from 20 feet on No. 5, two feet on No. 6 and 10 feet on No. 8 — to make the turn at 32.

He added four more birdies on the back, two of them in the 16-18-foot range and two others after coming out of bunkers — from 30 yards away to three feet at No. 11 and to one foot on the final green.

"I just wanted to hit the ball in the fairway," said Frost, a 25-year-old with three years of experience on the European tour. "I wasn't really greedy when I started out today."

Frost won one event on the European tour last year and also has a victory over the tour in his native country.

Wayne Levi fired a 67 that left him in a tie at 206 with Scott Simpson, who had a 69 despite a triple bogey 7 on the 15th, and Loren Roberts, who shot 70.

Andrew Magee, the rookie who started the day in third place two shots behind, had it even through 16 holes before taking a quadruple bogey 8 on the 17th.

Magee had a two-shot penalty on the 17th when his club hit the water on a practice swing. He came back to eagle the 18th for a 74-209.

Roger Maltbie used four birdies in a row in a round of 66 that left him tied at 207 with Don Pooley, a three-time Atlanta runnerup who shot 68, and Mac O'Grady, who had a 70.

Lanny Wadkins, a two-time winner this year, had a 70-210 and Hal Sutton 70-211.

Defending champion Tom Kite was 10 shots back after shooting a 72, lodged in a big group at 212 that also included Andy Bean, 71.

Fuzzy Zoeller, a former U.S. Open and Masters champion, had his problems, shooting a 75 that left him well back in the pack at 214.

Hale Irwin had a 74-215.

Mike Hulbert aced the 185-yard sixth hole with a 6-iron.

Jimmy and Chrissy may bow out

By WILL GRIMSLEY AP
Special Correspondent

When the big iron gates of the All-England Croquet and Tennis Club creak open this week, Wimbledon's faithful will woefully watch the curtain coming down on the "Jimmy and Chrissy Show."

To sports fans, it is a distressing prospect. James Scott Connors and Chris Open."

It's one thing to win an ordinary tour event in Key Biscayne or even on the red clay of Paris' Roland Garros Stadium — Lloyd's favorite surface — and another to beat Navratilova on Wimbledon's fast grass or Flushing Meadow's equally fast cement.

"I like grass and am comfortable on it," Lloyd said, and the record

They have been content to remain largely backcourt strategists with a mental toughness that helped them dominate the past decade. McEnroe not only has power but also instincts and natural skills that baffle the smartest students of the game. Navratilova is much the same.

Yet McEnroe is so gifted he finds grandmother and mother who took him from his Illinois home to put him under the tutelage of Pancho Segura on the West Coast. He joined Bill Riordan's rebel tennis troupe, refused to play Davis Cup tennis, feuded with the establishment and became the villain of the courts — loud, cocky, contentious and profane.

He was always just an epithet

Final weekend kicks off for USFL teams

By The Associated Press
The final weekend of the United States Football League's regular season will determine the Eastern Conference champion and the last home site for the first round of the playoffs.

The Birmingham Stallions, who have the league's best defense against the rush and the pass, on Sunday visit the New Jersey Generals, who boast the top rushing game, led by Herschel Walker.

The nationally televised game will determine the Eastern crown.

Birmingham has a 12-5 record and New Jersey 11-6. A victory by the Generals will give them the East on the basis of a better record in the conference.

The Stallions have held Walker, pro football's all-time top rusher, for a single season with 2,338 yards, to 77 yards rushing on 33 carries the last three times they met. The Stallions downed the Generals 38-28 in their opening-day game this year.

Meanwhile, the Memphis Showboats and the Tampa Bay Bandits — each 10-7 — and the Baltimore Stars, 9-7-1, remained in the running for the last home site for the first round of the playoffs.

Oakland, the Western Conference winner, Birmingham and New Jersey already have gained the home turf advantage for the June 29-30, July 1 first round.

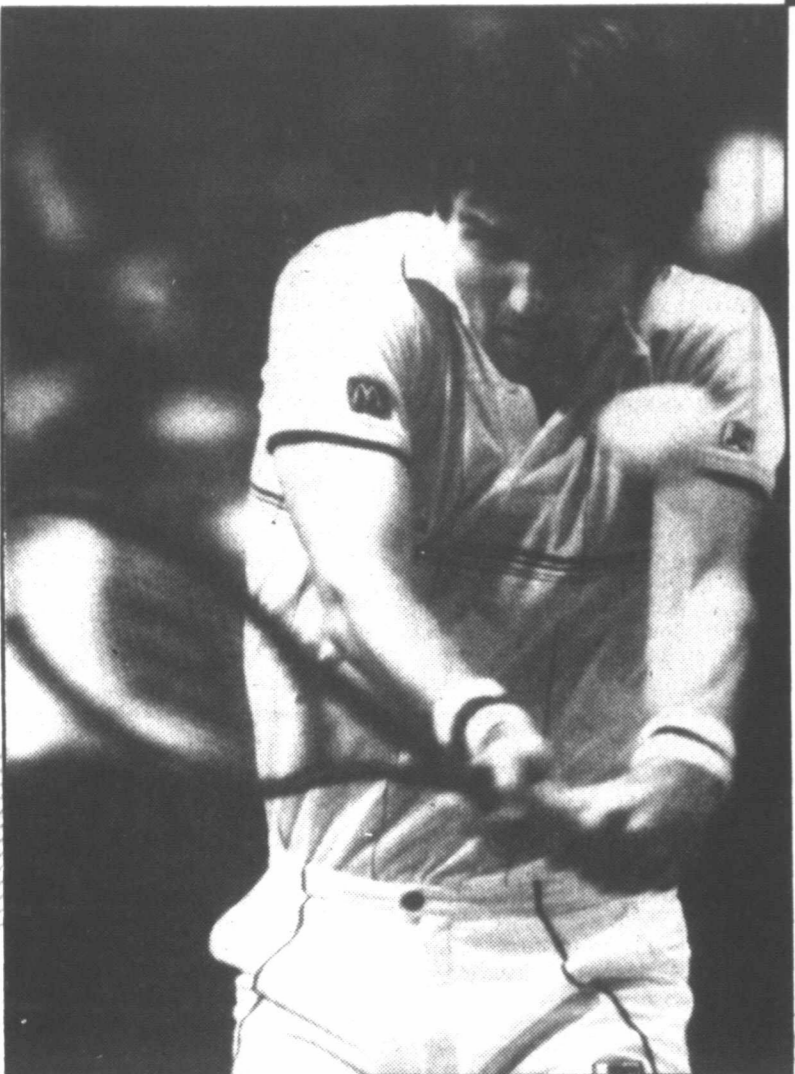

In a game played Friday night, two touchdown passes by Reggie Collier and three interceptions by the Orlando defense sparked the Renegades to a 17-10 season-ending victory over the Los Angeles Express in a battle of last-place USFL teams.

Orlando finished with a 5-13 record in the USFL's Eastern Division: Los Angeles, which lost its final eight games, was last in the Pacific Division at 3-15.

Memphis is at home tonight against Arizona, which failed to make the playoffs.

In other Sunday games, Denver visits Jacksonville, Portland is at San Antonio, and Tampa Bay journeys to Baltimore. Houston is at home to Oakland Monday night.

Both Tampa Bay and Baltimore also are assured of playoff berths, as are Denver and Houston.

Wimbledon Tournament may be last harrah for tennis greats Jimmy Connors and Chris Evert-Lloyd.

Evert Lloyd, with their two-fisted backhands and grim fighting qualities, were the game's whiz kids of the '70s — Connors, the brawler out of Belleville, Ill., and Lloyd, then just plain Chris Evert, the classy shotmaker from Fort Lauderdale, Fla.

In their own separate ways, they were the catalysts of an explosive era. They were the center court of the world. The new, burgeoning pro tennis game bounced off them.

Now Jimbo is 32 and Chrissy is 30. Both are facing the crossroads in their respectively brilliant careers. Their sport is being ruled by Martina Navratilova and John McEnroe — a pair of powerful, agile left-handers capable of taking a tournament by the throat and shaking it to death.

Check the legal London bookies. If Navratilova and McEnroe can coordinate their minds with their innate talents, they are odds-on favorites to maintain their dominance of Wimbledon's hallowed Center Court.

Connors and Lloyd are ready to give it at least one more shot — perhaps a couple or three more. The string, however, is growing shorter.

Connors has confided privately that he is wearying of Wimbledon and may just kiss the old lady good-bye. He never liked the place anyhow — the 19th century stuffiness, the emphasis on tradition and propriety — just as the old lady never cared much for him. He is more at home among the rowdy, barracking buffs at the U.S. Open in Flushing Meadow, N.Y.

Five years ago, Lloyd said she planned to play five more years. Two years ago, she said she would play a couple more before fulfilling her desire to start a family with her tennis-playing British husband, John Lloyd.

But now that the deadline is here, she may be having a change of mind.

This indecision apparently was prompted by a 6-2, 6-4 victory over Navratilova in the Virginia Slims of Florida final in Key Biscayne in January — her first triumph after 13 straight losses to her longtime adversary — and then buttressed by her dramatic triumph in the French Open at Paris earlier this month.

"I proved to myself that I am still capable of beating her," Lloyd said. "I don't think I have been in better shape than now. I look forward to Wimbledon and the U.S.

supports her. It was on turf that she won the 1984 Australian Open, which now gives her two of the four Grand Slam titles going into the last two big ones.

The inside word is that winning either Wimbledon or the U.S. Open, or both, would facilitate rather than delay Lloyd's homemaking plans. Fiercely proud of her record, she would cherish the thought of ending her career as a winner.

"I don't intend to stay around just to be playing tennis, as much as I like the game and the life," she said. "Nobody likes to see a champion slide downhill. I would love to finish on top."

"The clock is ticking away." If success proves to be the formula for Lloyd's retirement, just the opposite may speed Connors' departure.

Winner of three Wimbledon and five American crowns, he has failed to win a Grand Prix event all year and has struggled to remain in the Top Ten. Ivan Lendl has replaced him as chief challenger to McEnroe's throne and he now is getting further heat from a whole pack of Bjorn Borg clones out of Sweden, headed by the new French champion, Mats Wilander.

Connors acknowledged that his court intensity has exacted a heavy mental and physical toll.

"I don't point to Grand Slam events," he said recently. "I consider regular tour events just as important. My attitude is that no match is as important as the one I'm playing. I play every match like it's my last."

"I have subjected my body to a lot of punishment, but it's been worth it."

It's this fierce, unshakeable spirit that has distinguished Connors and Lloyd. Neither is equipped with extraordinary physical assets. Neither possesses the power serve and net-storming game that has become the style of the 1980s.

It hard to constantly apply himself. He can lose matches by lapses of concentration and temper tantrums. Navratilova's prowess has been pierced by a tendency to panic under pressure. Special coaches, dietary experts and instructors have failed to erase the problem.

So Lloyd, with her iron will, can still shake Navratilova's confidence enough to pull off upsets, as at Key Biscayne and Paris. Connors, on the other hand, hasn't beaten McEnroe since the Queens Cup final two years ago, losing nine straight, including a 6-1, 6-1, 6-2 wipeout in last year's Wimbledon final.

Connors and Lloyd, once engaged to be married, have had parallel careers, both turning pro in 1972 — Connors at age 20 and Lloyd at 18 — and made their debut at Wimbledon the same year, although Connors lost as an amateur in the first round in 1971.

Fire and ice, thunder and grace, petulance and poise — contrasts in so many ways yet similar in others — they stroked their way to tennis greatness and left marks that will long endure.

Staid, century-old Wimbledon hated the one at times but never quit adoring the other. The world's most knowledgeable fans appreciated Connors' court tenacity and skill although they deplored his rakish behavior and particularly resented his 6-1, 6-1, 6-4 rout of their beloved Ken Rosewall in the 1974 final.

1974. This was the year that Jimmy and Chris won their first Wimbledon singles titles, embraced in the traditional first dance at the Wimbledon ball and — holding hands and giggling like childhood sweethearts — announced they were in love.

The romance stunned Wimbledon.

Connors along with nasty Ilie Nastase was the bad boy of tennis — a maverick raised by a doting WHOOOPS! A pop fly gets away from the White Sox' Tim Hulett (right) and Ozzie Guillen.

Angels widen lead with win over Sox

CHICAGO (AP) — Mike Brown and Juan Beniquez hit two-run homers in the second inning and Bob Boone added a solo shot to lead the California Angels to a 6-3 victory Saturday over Chicago, widening their lead atop the American League West to 1½ games over the White Sox.

Rookie Urbano Lugo, 2-1, was the winner. Both of his major-league victories have come against the White Sox.

Bobby Grich drew a walk from Tim Lollar, 2-4, to open the second and was forced by Bob Boone before Brown hit his second homer of the season. Gary Pettis then singled and Beniquez hit his fifth homer.

Beniquez tripled and scored on Brian Downing's sacrifice fly in the seventh inning and Boone hit his third homer of the year in the eighth.

Lord of the flies Brett earns Royalties on hits

By Murray Olderman

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (NEA) — Once a man is set for life, with millions of dollars assured, what is there left for him to accomplish?

The question seems like a logical, if simplistic one to ask George Brett, the third baseman of the Kansas City Royals.

According to the latest report, Brett, age 32, will receive a total of $12.5 million for his play this summer and over the next six years. By the end of the century, having been named a vice-president of the team when his active days end, he can collect as much as $17 million and take advantage of the opportunity to borrow $5 million for five years at 10 percent interest.

Brett is not the only recipient of such Royal treatment. Relief pitcher Dan Quisenberry and outfielder Willie Wilson have also been offered deals structured to reward them with multi-millions — $49 million and $27 million, respectively — in their lifetimes.

But Brett is the focus here because he has been the most visible and most accomplished Kansas City player for the last 11 years. He was the American League's most valuable player in 1980 when he hit an astounding .390. He has been an important contributor in five post-season playoffs and he has batted .375 in a World Series. He has led the league in batting twice.

Brett is also the handsome star of TV commercials.

What else can there be for him?

"First of all," he mulls, "to play on a World Series championship ball club. That's one reason why everybody's out here playing. I've been on a losing one. Playing on a winning World Series team would be the highlight of anybody's career, regardless of what they accomplish in individual feats."

Yes, George talks like that — also of "amassing 3,000 career hits." It is the only individual goal that concerns him. He started this season 1,217 hits short, knowing that the last four years have been something of a physical ordeal for him.

The Royals' largess comes after he has missed considerable playing time since his big '80 campaign because of an assortment of injuries.

"Some of them," claims Brett, "had to do with playing on AstroTurf for 12 years. The turf we had in Kansas City was real hard. They replaced it once and did not replace the padding underneath. I missed a lot of games due to a bad back. I had my first hamstring pull last year (and missed 23 games)."

Early in my career, when I missed games, it was because of the way I play baseball. I play very hard and physical. I separated my shoulder breaking up a double play. I had a couple of ligaments in my ankle trying to steal second on a hard slide. I crashed into the catcher one time and sprained my ankle, missing two weeks that way."

And then there was the time Brett was doing the laundry while watching a Cubs game on television: "I heard (announcer) Harry Caray say, 'Buckner's coming up.' I ran into the den where my TV was on. I kicked a door jamb and broke my little toe."

But except for a recent bout with a sore leg, Brett has been a model of good health this season, looking like the career .314 hitter that he is.

"Hopefully," he says, "I'll be able to play the next five or six, seven or eight years injury-free. And if I do that, I think I can reach 3,000 hits. That's really about it as far as goals."

I'm not going to break any home run records. But realistically, I should be able to hit .320 every year. And if I stay healthy and stay with my good fundamentals, another batting championship is within reach."

Royal manager Dick Howser, a Brett watcher since he coached and managed the New York Yankees through 1980, thinks Brett is in his best batting groove since he made that spectacular assault on the 400 mark five years ago.

"He's hitting the ball with more authority," says Howser. "But he's always been good as a hitter. Now he's doing more stretching and running, and it's helped him in his quickness at third base."

"I'm playing the best defense I've played in my 12 years in the major leagues," nods Brett. "But I'm no Brooks Robinson. I might not have been the best third baseman, but I wasn't the worst."

"Mainly, I'm there for my hitting."

True. That's what's featured in the shaving commercial currently playing during TV sports programs.

And that's why George Brett will never have a money worry again as long as he lives.

Twins fire Billy Gardner

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — The Minnesota Twins hope new manager Ray Miller can turn a roller coaster season thus far into a safer path.

"I thought he was the best man available," Twins' President Howard Fox said at a news conference Friday where he announced the firing of Miller and the firing of Billy Gardner, who had managed the Twins since 1981.

Miller's debut with the Twins was an auspicious one as Minnesota edged Texas 3-2 on Mark Salas' two-run single in the bottom of the ninth.

Gardner, 57, was dismissed a day after Minnesota ended a disastrous series against Kansas City, where the Twins lost by wide margins in three of four games. Since May 24, the Twins have lost 19 of 26 games.

Miller, who has worked with five 20-game winners since becoming the Baltimore Orioles' pitching coach in 1978, will work on the Twins' pitchers, who as a unit earned Friday night's game with a 5.00 earned average. But Miller said he saw no reason to make immediate changes in the lineup.

"It is a young club, an aggressive club," he said.

Miller, 40, the Twins' 10th manager, will be under contract through 1986, Fox said.

"I know what it takes (to win) and hopefully I'll be able to apply that here," said Miller. "This is a team that has a chance to win now ... and win in the future."

After winning the first two games of the season the Twins lost their next nine, then went on a 10-game winning streak. Then from May 21 until June 1 the Twins dropped 10 straight games. Friday's victory snapped a four-game skid.

Miller spent 10 years pitching in the minor leagues after signing with San Francisco in 1964. He became Baltimore's minor-league pitching instructor in 1974. He was appointed major-league pitching coach at Texas following the 1977 season, but rejoined the Orioles at that capacity in January 1978.

Fox said club officials made the decision to dismiss Gardner on Friday morning after "a very difficult and trying time."

Fox said Gardner was offered another job within the Twins' organization, but wouldn't say what it was.

"I think Billy feels he needs a rest," Fox said. "I think he wants to go home and enjoy himself."

Gardner was en route Friday night to his Waterford, Conn., home and could not be reached for comment.

Reds edge Braves, 4-3

CINCINNATI (AP) — Dave Parker lined a bases-loaded single in the ninth inning for his 50th run batted in as the Cincinnati Reds edged the Atlanta Braves 4-3 Saturday.

Parker's ninth game-winning RBI on his third hit of the game came off reliever Terry Forster, 0-2, and gave Reds reliever Ron Robinson, 1-0, his first victory of the season.

With one out in the ninth, Eddie Milner beat out a bunt single, stole second, went to third on Pete Rose's pinch-hit infield single and after Dave Concepcion walked, Parker hit an 0-1 pitch to right field past the drawn-in field to score the winning run.

Robinson pitched two perfect innings of relief.

Woman without arms leads productive life

SPOKANE, Wash. (AP) — Jo Beth Ravellette's feet are muscular and pretty. She paints her toenails red, and she wears a bracelet around her left ankle. Because she has no arms, her feet function as hands.

Recently she learned to insert and remove her contact lenses with her toes. Jo Beth, 41, a secretary, types 35 to 40 words a minute using three toes on either foot.

At age 19, she married a man who also had no arms. One day they walked into a restaurant, took their shoes off and hoisted their feet on the table to eat. The waitress refused to serve them because they wore no shoes.

She says she doesn't notice the stares from adults and children in the supermarket.

She drives a red Dodge with the seat way back and her body folded into a position that enables her to operate all the controls. Her back aches after long drives.

She can't jog and has never ridden a bike.

Jo Beth can answer the phone, vacuum her rug and dance. Her mother placed a pencil between her toes when she was a toddler, and her handwriting is better than most adults.

She was fitted with artificial limbs at age 13, but, she says, they felt funny and she never used them again.

She has experienced other sorrows in life. Her marriage ended in divorce after a 5-year-old son was killed in an auto accident.

Her goal now is to lead a full, happy life as middle age approaches.

"If I can do it, I'd rather do it myself," she says.

Every morning at 8, she's behind a desk at the Merry Glen School, a home for handicapped people, where she types, files, keeps the books and answers the phone. The only concession to her handicap is that she sits on a stool.

Jo Beth is appreciated by her boss, who admits she wasn't sure she wanted a handicapped secretary.

"I thought I would have this pity type of thing and have to do a lot of things for her. But it's no problem," said Arlene Lee. "I've had quite a few secretaries and so far, Jo Beth is the best."

Her daughter, Nancy, now 20 and living in Massachusetts with her father, says she never thought of her parents as special.

"Once in a while I tried to write with my feet, but it didn't work," Nancy says.

Sometimes people try to help too much, according to Jo Beth's best friend, Rose Gray. "People try to be helpful but they treat her like 5-year-old," Ms. Gray said.

"Jo Beth has done as well as most people do with their fingers," said optometrist Gary Shute who fitted her with contact lenses. "Her dexterity is amazing."

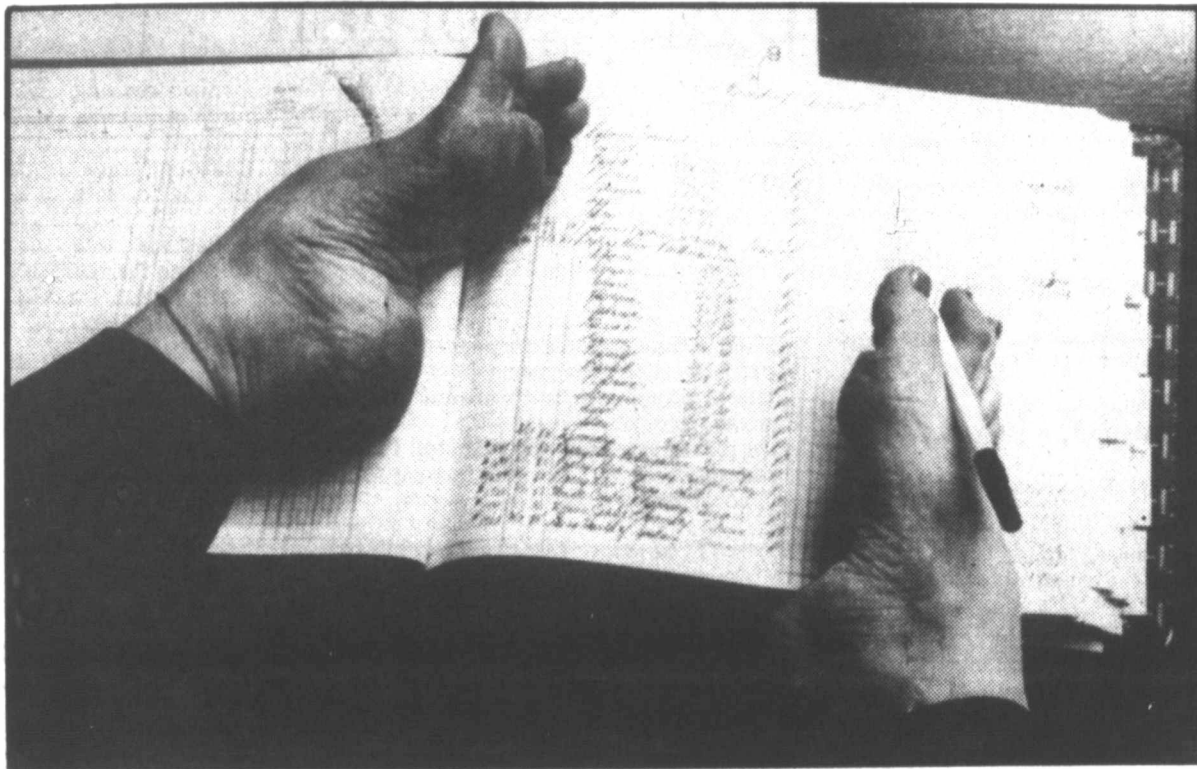

She has never asked doctors why she has no arms.

"I feel there is a reason for everything," she says. "There was a reason for me to be born this way, but I may never know why."

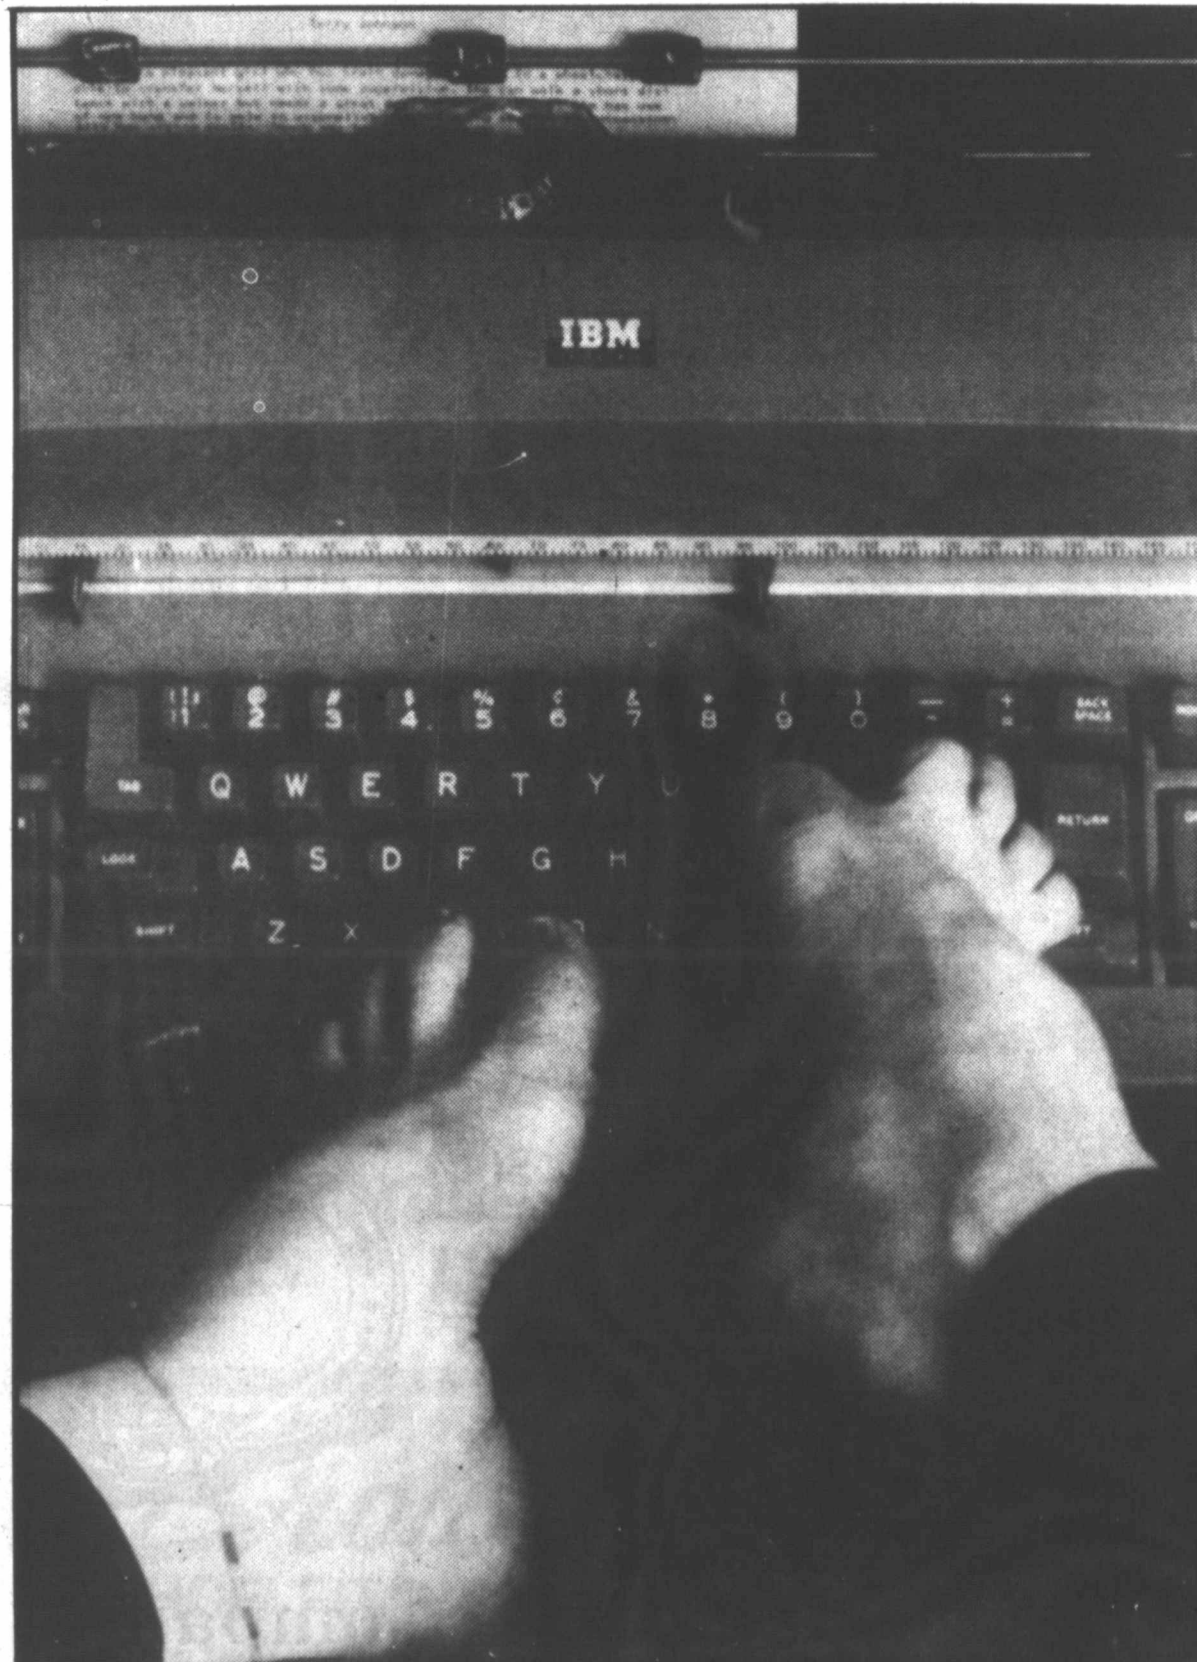

MARVELOUS RAVELLETTTE — Resting her chin upon her left foot, Jo Beth Ravellette, 41, of Spokane, Wash., visits with friends at her home. Born without arms, Ravellette has not allowed her handicap to stop her in the pursuit of a full and productive life as a mother and worker. Using her feet, she eats, drives, performs job duties and housework. (AP Laserphoto)

ADMIRABLE PENMANSHIP — When just a toddler, Ravellette had a pencil placed between her toes by her mother and she began to teach herself to write. Now her penmanship is better than most adults with hands. Here she fills in another account line in her ledger.

TOE TYPIST — On her job as secretary and office assistant at the Merry Glen School, Ravellette types and maintains books and files.

Her co-workers admire her skills and take every chance to show them off to outsiders. (AP Laserphoto)

FOOT WILL DO — From childhood Ravellette became adept at living her life without arms. She can even use a toe to insert or remove her contact lenses. (AP Laserphoto)

"I feel there is a reason for everything. There was a reason for me to be born this way, but I may never know why."

— Jo Beth Ravellette

NO HELP NEEDED — Ravellette readies two steaks for dinner in the kitchen of her Spokane, Wash., home. Prior to preparing a meal, she washes her feet in the kitchen sink. Friends say she is an excellent cook, but occasionally one will refuse to eat a meal prepared by feet.

Creme rinse use

Most creme rinses call for a capful or two in a certain amount of warm water. However, this formula can be varied to suit different hair types.

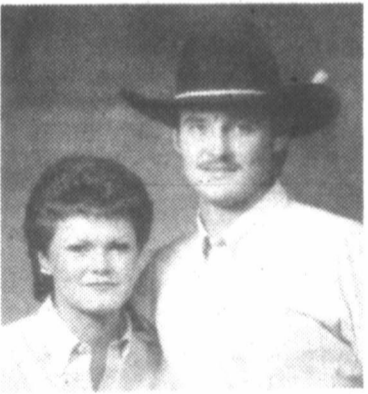

Many creme rinses contain oils. Thin these out with a larger quantity of water when using on oily hair. Very curly hair, especially if dry, may need more rinse to the amount of water stated.

When hair is thick and long, a creme rinse poured right from the bottle can be worked with fingers through wet hair, allowed to be absorbed for a few minutes, then removed with a warm water rinse.

Dear Abby

Song in composer's head is hard to get on paper

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1985 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: I am a composer of music—but I don't know the first thing about writing down what I have in my head. I compose the most beautiful sonatas in my head, but they are lost to the world because I can't get them down on paper. I am not a kook. I am a talented musician who never learned how to write music.

Do you know a composer I could call on the telephone and sing these songs to? I am not a great singer, but I whistle very well. Thank you for any help you can offer.

MUSIC IN MY HEAD

DEAR MUSIC: Sorry. I don't know any composer, but if there's a school of music in your area, perhaps you could enroll in a course and learn how to translate what's in your head onto paper. Or perhaps someone there could write it down while you whistle. Good luck.

DEAR ABBY: My career is in jeopardy, and I need advice fast. I am a sales representative for a giftware distributor, and I attend many trade shows. Lots of hanky-panky goes on among my colleagues, but I don't express my outrage because it's so accepted.

Recently, Mr. X, my company's biggest account, made a pass at me, and when I refused, he threatened to stop buying from my company. He has not carried out his threat as yet, but I'm sure he will. I feel terrible for my boss, but I can't quit and go to another company because I'll be up against Mr. X again.

If I report Mr. X to his boss, whom I know, he will laugh me right out of his office. What can I do?

LIKES MY JOB

DEAR LIKES: Tell Mr. X to go to H, then file a complaint against him for sexual harassment with your local Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. Don't worry about losing your job. Firing a person who files a complaint is against the law, and a company that does so can be charged for retaliation.

DEAR ABBY: In reading your column in the Pawtucket Evening Times, I see where a man in Portland, Ore., wants to know where he can purchase spruce gum. He said when he played softball about 20 years ago he used to chew spruce gum to keep his mouth from getting dry. He said it came in little round balls and was sold in boxes and was a lot cleaner than chewing tobacco.

Well, there's a store in Freeport, Maine, that sells it. It's open 365 days a year, 24 hours a day. It's L.L. Bean Inc., Freeport, Maine 04033; phone (207) 865-3111.

I hope this helps.

RICHARD COIA, PAWTUCKET, R.I.

DEAR RICHARD: Finally! For months I've been on a wild (spruce) goose chase trying to locate the elusive spruce gum. I just phoned L.L. Bean in Maine, and I was assured that it was available; so interested parties may phone and put it on their credit cards.

DEAR ABBY: This is for "Ashamed in Amherst," who left her husband and children for a married man. She soon realized she had made a terrible mistake and wanted to die.

Please, please don't despair. I, too, discarded a fine husband and two beautiful children for a man I thought I loved. When life with him became unbearable, I divorced him. I knew I couldn't gain the trust and respect of others until I could respect myself, so I started on that long and lonely road back to self-respect.

I had to change, and change I did, from a selfish, egotistical brat to a mature, responsible woman.

When I did this, I realized that love was not all moonlight, excitement and romance. True love was the forgiveness, understanding and caring my husband showed me when he took me back.

BEEN THERE AND BACK

ELIZABETH LOOS

Loos named Episcopal day care center head

Elizabeth "Beth" Loos of Pampa will become the new administrator of St. Matthew's Episcopal Day School, school board members announced this week.

Loos begins her duties tomorrow, continuing to her work until her and her husband's, Steve, first baby is born in July, and resuming her job the last of August, she said.

Loos holds a bachelor of science degree in home economics and Major Early Childhood Education from Kansas State University in 1983. Since that time she has held numerous positions related to child care in Manhattan, Wichita and Derby, Kan., before moving to Pampa earlier this year.

Until her acceptance as administrator of St. Matthew's Loos was employed as five year old teacher at The First Baptist Church day care program.

Marge Penn, a member of St. Matthew's Episcopal Day School board of directors, also said there will be some changes in the school's format this fall. The first grade program will be dropped and the day care program will be extended to include a five day - five year old program.

"I'm dedicated to children," Loos said. "I feel it is my calling."

One of a family of seven children, she says she was influenced by both her mother's and her father's attitudes toward children.

Her father, Dr. Richard Gilmartin, is a pediatric neurologist in Wichita, Kan. "His attitude towards children influenced me a lot," Loos says. "He was a fighter for children's rights."

"Mom always had enough attention and enough love for all of us," she says of her mother, Margaret Gilmartin, a nurse.

As the new St. Matthew's director, Loos says she wants to maintain the quality of education St. Matthew's has boasted of for the past 30 years.

Find bargains in dairy products

By DONNA BRAUCHI
County Extension Agent
June is dairy month. With that in mind, let's take a look at some reasons why dairy products are a bargain. For starters - consider cost, calories, and nutrition.

The price of dairy products has risen in recent years, sometimes at a pace that makes us wonder whether they are worth it at the checkout counter. Yet, dairy product prices have risen less than those of any other food group.

We spend less than one-eighth of our food money for dairy products. For this money we get about one-tenth of the calories in our diets.

The money we spend on dairy products also buys a significant portion of our nutrition: three-fourths of our calcium; one-third of our phosphorus and riboflavin; one-fifth of our protein, magnesium, and vitamin B-12; and smaller amounts of other needed nutrients.

Some people think they're getting high fat content when they buy dairy products. Dairy products do provide about 12 percent of the fat we consume. However, compared to the 40 to 45 percent fat included in the average person's daily diet, the fat from dairy products is relatively low. If you want to cut down on your total fat intake, there are lower-calorie, low-fat versions of virtually every type of dairy product from milk to cheese and even ice cream.

It is important to encourage consumption of foods high in calcium at an early age. Dairy products fit right in to the picture. Here are some tips for getting children started right with milk.

Children take anywhere from a few weeks to a few months to learn to feed themselves. At 1-1/2 years, most children will be feeding themselves, although they'll be quite messy until they master feeding skills.

During this time some children lose their enthusiasm for the cup and what is in it. Milk is a necessity if children are to get enough calcium for growth and good nutrition. So getting your child off to a good start drinking milk can be the start of a lifetime health habit.

Here are some suggestions for making milk drinking a pleasurable experience for toddlers: (1) Children typically do not like their milk ice cold. Try pouring it a short time before serving to remove the chill. (2) Help your child develop an "I can do it" feeling about drinking milk from a cup or glass. Serve milk in a plastic cup with a fitted cover or weighted bottom. Fill the cup half-way to make the milk more difficult to spill; it will also make the task seem easier. You can also place a small, sturdy pitcher on the table which the child will enjoy using to re-fill the cup. Expect to have some spills and don't get upset at the child for having an accident. (3) Using a straw can make it easier for a child to drink milk but you may want to encourage your child to drink directly from a cup or glass.

Drinking from a glass helps develop eye-hand coordination. (4) Help your child develop a taste for plain milk by offering flavored milk only on special occasions. Plain milk has fewer calories than the flavored milk. However, keep in mind, that flavored milk is certainly better than no milk!

If your child refuses to drink milk, treat it as a temporary preference and continue to offer milk at meal and snack time. Also, make sure you are including plenty of cereals with milk, milk-based soups, cottage cheese, yogurt, cheese or custard in the child's diet.

Actor may finally be a good guy

By JERRY BUCK
AP Television Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Dack Rambo, the latest Ewing to turn up on CBS' "Dallas," is the heir apparent to the good guy role vacated by Patrick Duffy.

Duffy quit the show after seven seasons and his character, Bobby Ewing, was killed in the last show of the season. Rambo was in the last five shows, playing Jack Ewing, a cousin to Bobby and J.R. Ewing, the slippery oilman played to perfection by Larry Hagman.

"Hopefully, Jack was brought in to fill the good guy role, although in the beginning we're not sure where he stands," Rambo says. "I think that's essentially what it'll be because there's only one villain, and that's Larry Hagman."

"It'll be a nice change for me. On 'All My Children' I was a ruthless character. On 'Paper Dolls' I was evil Wesley Harper. Lloyd Bridges played my father, the head of the empire. He had everything and I wanted it all. I'd stop at nothing to get Papa out of the way. Unfortunately, the show wasn't given enough of a chance to find an audience."

At first it was suggested that Rambo take over the Bobby Ewing role, but that was considered a risky thing. "It would have been difficult for people to accept someone else in that role," he says.

"Patrick has a large following." The woods seem to be full of Ewings. Jenny Lee Harrison has also joined the show as his sister, Jamie. She is married to Cliff Barnes, the Ewings' archenemy.

"They just got married, but I don't know how happy they'll be," Rambo says.

Jack and Jamie are the children of Jason, a brother to Jock Ewing. Jason never appeared on "Dallas" but was occasionally mentioned. His death was announced early last season. He was the partner of Digger Barnes, the father of Cliff. Although Jack is essentially a hero, he has a mysterious past and five years of his life are unaccounted for.

"Dallas" will begin its eighth season in September. Actress Barbara Bel Geddes will resume her role as Miss Ellie, which was played by Donna Reed during Miss Geddes' illness.

The ninth episode in the fall will mark the 200th episode and there is talk of doing a "Dallas" special at that time.

Uncertain not certain on name

By MIKE COCHRAN
Associated Press Writer
UNCERTAIN, Texas (AP) — With a wicked laugh, waitress Lillie Ponder tells of the man who stomped into the Pirate's Cove restaurant one sultry summer day wearing a look that could kill.

"He was hot, miserable and obviously lost," she recalled.

"Lady," the man growled, "can you tell me where I am?"

"Uncertain," she smiled sweetly.

"Lady," he thundered, "everybody in this place is uncertain!"

The man was right. There is much uncertainty in Uncertain, beginning with the name of this lazy and laconic little fishing village on the southwestern shore of Caddo Lake.

"People in Uncertain are uncertain how Uncertain got its name," chuckled former mayor Fred Dahmer.

"That's the only story of Uncertain that I'm certain is true." Some say the name dates to the days of steamboat travel, when the water level varied so wildly that no one was certain they could get in and, if so, back out again.

Dahmer said one theory holds that steamboat maps labeled the area "uncertain" and that people would pass and wave and say, "There's Uncertain."

Others vow the uncertainty stemmed not from water hazards but from the automobile trip over the muddy roads that once existed between here and Marshall.

Others suggest the name comes from the uncertainty surrounding a move by a popular resident, the late Beer Smith, to incorporate the town and legalize beer and liquor sales.

Beer's son-in-law, Bob Harper, says paddleboat pilots called it Uncertain because they often became confused by the many arms leading off the channel up to Jefferson.

Still others argue the name derives from the uncertainty years ago over who owned title to the land that is now Uncertain.

"Uncertain's got a great history but very little documentation," said Dahmer. "With oral history, you can't be too sure."

"And we had some people who would deliberately mislead for a good story."

As you might guess, the good folks of Uncertain are a laid back and fun loving lot, whether cruising Caddo Lake, catching or eating the wily catfish, quaffing ice cold beer or joking about the origin of the name Uncertain.

Motorists weaving through the gentle hills and pine forests and backroads north of Marshall might happen on a sign that says:

Population 176
This is Uncertain Texas
Home of Caddo Lake
Motels, Liquor Stores, Guides,
Fishing Camps, Boats, Cabins,
Restaurants, Motors, Tackle and a Lot of Nice Folks.

Welcome

Across the road is the Caddo Lake Church, proclaiming itself to be a "Non-denominational church of love and forgiveness, Daniel H. Miner, Pastor."

A longtime resident of Uncertain, Flo Dankel, said the church was being built on guts and grit and volunteer labor.

"My husband's an electrician, and he did the electrical work," she said. "A plumber here did the plumbing and a carpenter did the carpentry."

"The rest of us do the dirty work," she added with a smile.

Uncertain's town hall is down the road and around the corner and housed in a trailer it shares with the Caddo Lake Water Supply Corp.

Next door is Marion's Mini-Mall, which could be the miniest of all malls. At Marion's, three really is a crowd.

There's also Fish Hook Beer and Liquor, the "May-Bee" art shop and a motor supply warehouse that stands as the town's leading employer.

You can buy bait, launch a boat, rent a room, sip a beer, eat a catfish or just sit and gossip a bit at either the Shady Glade Camp or Curley's Lodge and Marina.

But Caddo Lake is the undisputed heartbeat of Uncertain.

Praised equally for its beauty and mystique, Caddo got its name from the Caddo Indians and its beauty and mystery from the thick, moss coated cypress trees that cloak the shadowy bays, bayous and backwaters.

The lake has a Florida Everglades look about it that artists, photographers and filmmakers find irresistible.

Also moonshiners.

Lillie Ponder recalls that moonshiners and bootleggers once flourished in such numbers that "they needed badges to keep from selling booze to each other."

Though she now lives in nearby Jefferson, Lillie came to Uncertain in 1951 and not long afterward discovered an old still in a graveyard.

"They still stumble across 'em out in the backwoods," she said.

Dawson Hines guides his 24-foot pontoon boat through Alligator Bayou, Mossy Brake and Red Belly, past Hog Wallow and into Turtle Shell, one of the most serene of the Caddo waterways.

"This is not a deep lake but it's big, more than 32,000 acres," said Hines, who runs the Shady Glade enterprise.

"It's probably an average of 6 or 7 feet deep, although a lot of places are 20 and 30 feet deep. ... They'll never fish it out because there are acres and acres that fishermen can't get to."

Ms. Dankel said she lives in Uncertain year-round but that the majority come in for the weekend to fish, boat or just "sip a few."

Says she:

"They may not make their booze here anymore but they sure do drink it. I guarantee you, there's never a dull moment. And you don't need an invitation."

"If you see somebody having a party, you just go in. We're pretty much just one big happy family, and we look out after each other."

Halley's comet hype increases

NEW YORK (AP) — Astronomers are not the only ones readying for the return of Halley's comet.

A Brazilian movie company began preparations four years ago and is now filming the first episode of "The Halleys," a proposed television series about super-heroes cast adrift when a nuclear holocaust destroys their planet, except for a remnant we know as Halley's comet.

Tri-Star Pictures last week released "Lifeorce," a movie about a group of blood-sucking aliens who travel to Earth on Halley's comet.

Burt Rubin, an entrepreneur whose chief claim to fame is the invention of E-Z Wider cigarette papers in 1971, checked into the telescope market in 1980 and has since sold thousands of "Halleyscopes." He predicts he will sell thousands more, even with such competitors as Comet Seeker, Comet Catcher and Cometron.

Robert Subranni of Halcom International started making Halley's comet medallions in bronze, silver and gold-anodized aluminum two years ago.

Owen Ryan created General Comet Industries and the "official" Halley's comet logo.

The list goes on, with a Halley's Comet Fan Club, T-shirts, pins, caps, key chains, sports bags, jackets, a book of comet poetry, newsletters, comet pills, comet cruises to the South Pacific, comet maps, stickers and books — at last count, 35 had been published or were scheduled to be published by year's end.

"It's probably going to hit at least 40, to the best of my knowledge, and heaven only knows how many others are being prepared by people who don't go through commercial trade channels," said Ruth Freitag, a senior science specialist with the Library of Congress in Washington, D.C.

She is a little disturbed by what some of the comet entrepreneurs are saying. "There's so much erroneous information being circulated by people who have the best intentions but just didn't do their homework as well as they might have done," she said.

Many astronomers would agree with her.

"I don't want astronomers to come across as curmudgeons," said Andrew Fraknoi, executive officer of the Astronomical Society of the Pacific. "It's a free country, and anyone is free to make money from comets — there are certainly enough astronomers writing books about the comet, and they're not the ones to throw stones."

Alan MacRobert, an editor at Sky & Telescope magazine in Cambridge, Mass., said, "The worst problem in this regard is advertisements for small telescopes with high power advertised as your gateway to the universe. You're going to see people very disappointed." Many astronomers say that a pair of binoculars is better than a telescope for comet watching.

"Where I get off is people misleading the public," said Fraknoi, who takes particular umbrage at General Comet Industries and its "official" comet logo.

"There's no official Halley's comet anything," said Fraknoi. "Halley's comet is the property of the human race." Fraknoi's group sells comet T-shirts and bumper stickers, and he is eager to drum up publicity for astronomy. "What I'm against is 'official,'" he said.

50 million people take comfort in it.

MORE ACRES PER GALLON.

The Kubota M5950, with 57 PTO hp, is a tractor designed to help you get the most out of today's tough farm economy. It has features like a strong and fuel-efficient Kubota diesel engine. And a generous 18.5 gallon fuel tank allows you to work a full day without stopping at the fuel pump.

There are more advanced features too. A fully synchronized speed transmission for excellent shift-on-the-go. Twelve forward and four reverse speeds. Front differential lock. 2- or 4-wheel drive.

Take a look at the M5950. Then take one home for your unemployed acres.

Guidelines for a great GARAGE SALE

With a little planning and preparation, you can turn your garage sale into a big event! To assure that both you and your customers have the best possible garage sale experience, follow these tips:

- 1. Advertise what people want! Children's clothing, dishes, collectibles, tools, books and antiques are the most popular items.
- 2. Make it convenient to shop at your garage sale! Be sure there is adequate parking space. Post signs with directions to parking areas. Make arrangements with neighbors.
- 3. Hope for the best. Expect the worst. Be prepared for accidents. Have small bandages, aspirin and a rest area for minor problems. Also, be sure to have emergency numbers for police, ambulance, fire and doctor in a handy location.
- 4. Make it easy to pay! Have plenty of change and a system for handling it: muffin tins, nail aprons, small compartments of some kind to keep coins separated. Make sure one person is on duty at all times at a centralized location, preferably with a calculator or adding machine.
- 5. Checks? No checks? Decide ahead of time if you will accept checks; then stick to your decision.
- 6. Be kind to your customers. Assist them with purchases. Provide a place to try on clothing. Answer all questions courteously. Help them carry large or unwieldy purchases to their cars. Offer a free cup of coffee.
- 7. Provide prices. Do not make every person ask, "How much is this?" Prices make for quick, effective sales or a good place for customers to start bargaining.
- 8. Get an early start! Set up displays the evening before, if possible.
- 9. Departmentalize. Separate the inexpensive items from the more costly ones. Group furniture, clothing, toys, lawn equipment and other items with similar merchandise.
- 10. Specialize. Establish one area for "Under $5," another for "Under $1." Consider having a batch of items that are "Free with purchase of $3." Remember the youngsters, too. Children enjoy visiting garage sales and buying treats for themselves and gifts for family members. Encourage this with small, low-priced items that are appropriate for this purpose.
- 11. Time your sale carefully! Do not hold it on or near a holiday. Have it at a time when most people are at home and unconcerned with special events.
- 12. Combine your efforts! Incorporate your sale with a neighbor for more variety and greater impact. If you follow this suggestion, be sure to label all items with color-coded tape or initials so proper credit can be given. Use an inventory sheet to keep track of sale items as they are sold.
- 13. Be specific! When advertising your sale in the newspaper, list individual items. Don't simply say, "several things available." Each time you list an item, you are broadening the list of potential customers.
- 14. Be generous! If you have items left over, give them to a charitable organization. If you see that some items are not moving well during the sale, mark them down during the last hours. Remember, the prime reason for holding the sale is to turn your unwanted items into cash!

The comet is coming! The comet is coming!

By PAUL RAEBURN
AP Science Editor

NEW YORK (AP) — Come January, some lovelorn adolescent gazing wistfully up at the night sky may become the first person since 1910 to see Halley's comet with the naked eye.

More likely, the trained eye of an astronomer will have spotted it first.

This time around, rather than the spectacular fireball reported in 1910, Halley's comet will be dimmer than the stars in the Big Dipper, dimmer even than Comet West, that little-noticed, now-forgotten comet visible in the pre-dawn sky of 1976.

"If you didn't see Comet West in 1976, you probably won't see Comet Halley," said Alan MacRobert, an editor at Sky & Telescope magazine in Cambridge, Mass.

Halley's comet will be much farther away on this visit than it was in 1910, when it passed 14 million miles from Earth. This time it will come no closer than 39 million miles, on April 11, 1986. That's why its appearance will be much less dramatic.

The fabled Halley's comet has returned every 76 years or so since at least 239 B.C., when the earliest known recorded observations were made by the Chinese.

"It comes by just infrequently enough to be a special event and frequently enough to be remembered," said Andrew Fraknoi, executive officer of the Astronomical Society of the Pacific.

The comet has been speeding earthward since 1948 at 48,000 miles an hour, and is now less than 430 million miles from Earth and 340 million miles from the sun.

It will become visible to the naked eye in January and then disappear behind the sun at the end of January. It will return to view in March and come closest to the Earth on April 11 — before departing again.

Though the comings and goings of comets have been recorded since ancient times, no one is yet quite sure what a comet is.

The prevailing theory is that comets are made of frozen gases with trapped bits of dust and debris — "dirty snowballs."

All comets are divided into three parts: a nucleus; a coma, the glowing halo around the nucleus, and a tail. That's where certainty ends.

Meteors and asteroids, the comets' kin, are naked chunks of rock and relatively easy to examine. But comets are elusive because of their bright comas.

As a comet approaches the sun, the frozen material in its nucleus begins to boil off. The boiling gases feed the coma, which gets brighter. The gases are also pushed away from the comet by radiation and particles emitted by the Sun — "and thereby hangs the tail," said Fraknoi.

The tail of Halley's comet will reach a maximum length of some 50 million miles shortly after it rounds the sun Feb. 9, when the comet's nucleus has been heated to its highest temperatures.

The comet's coma will be perhaps 100,000 miles across, said Stephen Edberg of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration's Jet Propulsion Laboratory in Pasadena, Calif.

It was not until the 18th century that Edmund Halley realized that the comet now named after him had been returning regularly to Earth. Halley, an astronomer and mathematician, saw the comet in 1682. By 1705, he had calculated it would return in 1758.

Halley died in 1742, but on the evening of Christmas Day 1758, he was vindicated. The comet was sighted and has been called Halley's comet ever since.

Only the pronunciation remains in dispute. Many Americans rhyme the name with daily, but most astronomers rhyme Halley with valley.

Comets are of interest to science because they are believed to date from the period 5 billion years ago when the solar system was formed from a cloud of hot, swirling gases.

The gases cooled, condensing into objects of assorted sizes. The largest mass, at the center of the cloud, became the sun. Other large aggregations of matter became the planets, and smaller chunks became comets and asteroids.

Comets, which have not undergone the stresses and changes that have altered the planets, are thus considered time capsules containing critical information about the solar system's early development.

Comets are thought to survive in a vast, yet unseen cloud that surrounds the solar system and contains perhaps a billion comets — called the Oort cloud, after Dutch astronomer Jan Oort, who first proposed it.
