WE, THE WOMEN

By RUTH MILLETT NEA Staff Writer

blem of married women working as though it were some new-fan-gled notion, rather than the established way of life of almost 18 percent of all normal families in_the_United_States.

The man who says woman's place is in the home has his audience-just like the die-hards who maintained that the automobile would never replace the horse. The experts who like to worry over modern woman's not having enough to do in the home to keep her busy and happy tend to ignore or give mere nod to the millions of married women who are keeping two jobs going We will make a big fuss and to-do over the ability of successful women to combine a career with home-making—as though there were something tevribly unusual about it. OLD RULES STILL APPLY

We haven't even any rules for the working wife. She is sim-ply told that rules for the oldtime marriage partnership, in which the husband was the sole bread-winner, still apply to her. Home-making is just as much her sole responsibility as though that were her only function in

We just never have decided to take the working wife seriously.
