State studying AIDS quarantine

By KEN HERMAN Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN - AIDS sufferers who pose a public health threat should be subject to the quarantine rules that cover victims of cholera, yellow fever and other communicable diseases, State Health Commissioner Robert Bernstein says

If AIDS is added to the list, its victims could be ordered confined. most likely in a hospital, Bernstein said Monday.

"It's not an arrest and incarceration thing," he said. "What we want to do is have. another public health control, if necessary.

Quarantine should be approved as "something else in the arsenal" for the fight against the spread of the often-fatal disease, said Bernstein

The Texas Department of Health will research the quarantine question and make a recommendation to the Board of Health at its Nov. 16 meeting.

Gara LaMarche, executive director of the Texas Civil Liberties Union, said quarantine is not needed for victims of acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

"It's almost a unique communicable disease. Everything we know about it suggests you have to go out of your way to get it," he said. "The AIDS sufferer can live a normal life in most respects.

A person can be quarantined by either state or local health officials. Bernstein said no quarantines have been ordered during his six years as commissioner.

Local officials in Texas have wrestled with how to handle AIDS sufferers who refuse to refrain from sexual activities that can spread the disease. San Antonio officials last week sent letters to 17 victims, warning they could face criminal prosecution if they don't

In Houston, officials recently had trouble with an AIDS victim who, for a time, defied orders to avoid sexual contact.

With quarantine authority, state or local health officials could order AIDS victims confined. Bernstein said a hospital would probably be the place of confinement.

AIDS is a disease that cripples the body's immune system, leaving the victim vulnerable to infections and other diseases. It is most likely to strike homosexuals, abusers of injectable drugs and hemophiliacs.

It can apparently be spread by sexual contact, contaminated needles and blood transfusions, but not by casual contact.

Vol. 78, No. 171 20 pages

Bernstein mentioned a recent case in which a young mental patient was determined to have

He was an aggressive homosexual. When I say aggressive, I mean in a criminal way," he said.

The young man was held, under security, in a hospital, according to Bernstein

The quarantine would be used as a last resort to protect public health interests, he said

"It's all new. We don't know. We can guess that it is going to get significantly worse before it gets better. Until they find a vaccine, I think all we can do is learn as much as we can and deal with each problem as it arises," Bernstein said.

A spokesman for an Austin homosexual organization denounced the quarantine idea as worthless. He said a more appropriate response would be 'social services,' instead of "police force."

"The inclusion of AIDS as a communicable disease under the state quarantine law may allay the fears of the general public but would, in fact, be nothing more than a smokescreen and a misdirection of public resources," said Bill Foster of the Austin

Lesbian-Gay Political Caucus. "Everybody wants these people off the street," he said. "We think by having a place in the community where these people are counseled and made to feel like they have a home would give us as good a chance of getting them off the street as waiting around for them to have sex and arresting them.

The quarantine law is "very antiquated," LaMarche said.

"All of the case law took place many, many years ago, before there was any civil rights movement," he said.

State Rep. Debra Danburg, D-Houston, said a quarantine 'would do no good.'

She said current state law makes it illegal to engage in the types of sexual contact that can spread AIDS. It's also illegal to abuse drugs, so the spread of AIDS by contaminated needles also is covered by present law, she said.

"Everyone I know who is gay knows how it is spread and how to avoid catching it," said Ms.

Customer Appreciation sale scheduled Thursday

To honor Pampa shoppers, a number of local merchants and businesses will hold a city-wide Customer Appreciation Night from 7 to 9 p.m. Thursday.

The project was conceived by the Retail Trade Cabinet and the Public Relations Committee of the Pampa Chamber of Commerce to encourage local merchants to show appreciation to Pampa customers for their support of local business Merchants participating in the appreciation night will offer special sales and bargains for shoppers. These will include Door Buster specials; hourly, half - hour or quarter hour specials, and refreshments for customers.

Many of the special values to be offered will be listed in a special advertising section in Wednesday's edition of The Pampa News "Our merchants really appreciate Pampa people supporting them. said Chamber Manager Floyd Sackett, noting that Thursday night will give the merchants a chance to show their appreciation for customers who "Shop Pampa First." Many merchants also will be handing out Chamber - prepared "sack stuffers" or "pass - outs" containing positive points about Sackett pointed out that studies have indicated every dollar spent in Pampa "turns seven and a half times" on an average. In other words, each dollar spent in the city has a $7.50 impact on the local economy, he explained.

While the appreciation project is scheduled for Thursday night, some merchants will continue their sales through the weekend

Israel says its ready to talk

Prime minister's offer to visit Jordan surprises U.N.

UNITED NATIONS (AP) - Israel's prime minister, invoking the memory of Egyptian President Anwar Sadat's visit to Israel eight years ago, said he is ready to travel to Jordan to negotiate peace in the Middle East.

Prime Minister Shimon Peres made his surprise gesture Monday, when 19 other foreign leaders also addressed the General Assembly as part of the United Nations' 40th anniversary celebration.

Peres, speaking despite a walkout by Arab delegates, proclaimed: "The state of war between Israel and Jordan should be terminated immediately.

He compared his offer to Sadat's 1977 visit to Israel, which led to the 1979 Camp David peace "When President Sadat came to Jerusalem, the course of history for all of us was changed." he said

Peres seemed to be answering a U.N. speech last month in which King Hussein of Jordan declared his readiness to negotiate "promptly and directly" with Israel within the framework of an international peace conference that would include all parties to the Middle East conflict and the five permanent members of the Security Council.

He eased Israel's opposition an international conference, saying negotiations "may be initiated with the support of an international forum as agreed upon by the negotiating states.

However, he said the actual peace talks "are to be conducted directly, between states.'

Peres indicated he would not accept the Palestine Liberation Organization or the Soviet Union at the conference, as demanded by Hussein and other Arabs. Israel regards the PLO as a terrorist organization.

Peres suggested that working teams be set up within 30 days to start preparations for negotiations on boundaries and the Palestinian

A Jordanian diplomat, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said the speech was 'beautifully drafted,' but Hussein's government would need to study it carefully.

The first speaker on Monday's agenda was President Daniel Ortega of Nicaragua. Ortega challenged President Reagan to tell the United Nations later this week that the aggression" and normalize relations with Nicaragua.

In return he said his country will "suspend the state of emergency we have been forced to impose due to the aggressions." Last week, Nicaragua imposed restrictions on freedom of speech, travel and assembly, the right to strike and protection of privacy in the home and through the mails.

A U.N. spokesman said that before his speech Ortega asked Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar to arrange a meeting with Reagan, who is due at the session Wednesday.

In other speeches Monday President Amin Gemayel of Lebanon said the "domestic aspect" of his country's 10-year-old civil war is nearly solved and asked the United Nations to enforce resolutions calling for full Israeli withdrawal from the country. - Prime Minister Olaf Palme of Sweden called for a more even distribution of contributions to the United Nations to make it less dependent on any single state. He apparently referred to the 25 percent share of the U.N. budget paid by the United States.

Special U.S. envoy to face angered Italian government

TUNIS, Tunisia (AP) - A special envoy sent by President Reagan to repair U.S. relations in the Mediterranean today faces a government angered by Washington's failure to condemn an Israeli air raid on the PLO headquarters in Tunisia.

In previous stops in Italy and Egypt, Deputy Secretary of State John C. Whitehead has attempted to smooth over differences caused by a difference incident - the hijacking of th Italian cruise ship Achille Lauro

Whitehead arrived in Tunis on Monday and went straight into talks with Foreign Minister Beji Caid Essebsi. He was to meet today with Premier Mohamed Mzali and President Habib Bourguiba.

Tunisia has been a staunch friend of the United States for 30 years, and Bourguiba has been regarded as one of the region's most moderate voices

However, Mahmound Mestiri Tunisia's secretary of state of foreign affairs, said Reagan's failure to condemn Israel's strike on the Palestine Liberation Organization headquarters south of the capital created a crisis in U.S.-Tunisian relations.

The Israelis claim the Oct. 1 raid was in retaliation for a Sept. 25 terrorist attack in Larnaca, Cyprus in which three Israelis died. The PLO has denied that it was involved in that attack.

The government news agency said 61 Palestinians and 12 Tunisians died, but Mestiri said about 30 Tunisians were killed

Whitehead came to Tunisia from Cairo, where he said he and Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak reached a "better understanding of each other's point

Egypt played a crucial role in negotiations for the release of the cruise ship, but Mubarak accused the United States of treachery after Reagan ordered U.S. Navy jet planes on Oct. 10 to intercept an Egyptian Boeing 737 carrying the four hijackers to freedom. The plane was forced down in Sicily, where the hijackers were arrested and charged with piracy and murdering an American passenger. In a statement read to reporters after Monday's meeting, Whitehead described relations between the United States and Egypt as close, vital and important.

Homecoming, Halloween activities set at Wheeler

WHEELER - Both homecoming and Halloween will be observed this weekend at the Wheeler schools.

Homecoming activities begin at 8 p.m. Thursday with a bonfire in the vacant lot behind the First National Bank. Festivities Friday include a parade through downtown Wheeler at 3:15 p.m., followed by a pep rally and the coronation of the homecoming queen. Candidates for 1985 homecoming queen are juniors Tammy Jo Childress, Marlo Hartman and Cristen Cornett and sophomore Kelle

Sabe. The queen will be crowned by senior football players. At 7:30 p.m., the unbeaten Wheeler Mustangs go up against the Lefors Pirates the football stadium.

To boost school spirit this week, the students will have special costume days. Wednesday is "Hat and Shoe Day." On Thursday, the students dress up in outlandish costumes. Friday is dress-up day.

Outlandish costumes will also be featured Saturday at the annual Wheeler Band Boosters Halloween Carnival, from 6 to 9 p.m. at the Wheeler County Show Barn north of town on Highway 83. Featured at the carnival will be games, cakes and dunking booths.

Guard accused of bribery had money, official testifies

ABILENE, Texas (AP) - A former officer of the Big Spring federal prison camp testified that a guard, after being accused of taking a $1,000 bribe from an inmate, peeled off 10 one-hundred-dollar bills and laid them on his desk.

Former guard Eddie Joe Roybal is on trial in federal court here on two counts of accepting bribes, including allegations that he took more than $11,000 from convicted Texas drug kingpin Rex Cauble of Denton County

Roybal is also accused of one count of delivering a controlled substance to a prison inmate and one count of delivering contraband to an inmate.

Testimony was scheduled to resume at 9 a.m. today in the court of U.S. Judge Halbert O. Woodward.

The other inmate named besides Cauble is Gary Marcus Gunter, who cooperated with the government in gathering evidence against Roybal, testimony showed.

Capt. Michael Borrego, who now works at a federal prison at Lewisburg, Pa., told the federal court jury Monday that he ordered Roybal to produce $1,000 June 20 after informing the corrections officer he was suspected of accepting a bribe from Gunter.

His recollection is that Roybal at first denied having the bribe money, the officer said. But after being warned that "if he didn't produce the money, I was going to search him," Roybal got out the money, Borrego testified.

Borrego said FBI agents had wired' Gunter for his conversation earlier that evening with Roybal by taping a cassette recorder to his chest in a Big Spring motel.

Camp officials also recorded two telephone conversations of June 13 between Roybal and Gunter, Borrego said. Borrego identified what he said he believed are copies of the tapes. The tapes were not played Monday afternoon.

Lt. Patrick Ingram made copies of the original tapes at his orders, Borrego said.

Gay rights group leader objects to military testing

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) -The National Gay Task Force is "very disappointed" the military has decided to test all its personnel for exposure to AIDS, a spokesman for the organization says.

"The military is overreacting to the problem," Jeffrey Levi, a lobbyist in Washington for the gay rights group, said at a news conference here Monday.

The Defense Department last week announced plans to test all 2.1 million U.S. military personnel for exposure to the AIDS virus. The military earlier had begun testing recruits. After tests of U.S. Air Force recruits in San Antonio recently, two were given discharges after their tests showed positive for AIDS antibodies. The controversy over military testing comes on the heels of the San Antonio city health director's decision to mail letters to known AIDS victims threatening them with criminal charges if they engage in sexual relations.

Acquired immune deficiency syndrome weakens the body's resistance to disease and is usually fatal. Researchers believe it is transmitted through sexual relations, shared hypodermic needles and blood transfusions.

"They... are dealing with a certain amount of hysteria about the disease," Levi said of the "We are very disappointed the military has decided to do this. When the Food and Drug Administration licensed a blood test for the presence of AIDS antibodies, Levi said, it was stipulated that the test would not be used for the screening of people with an increased risk of getting the disease

Between 5 percent and 10 percent of the people who have AIDS antibodies will eventually get the disease, he said

The Houston congressman made a surprise visit to the museum on a corner of the Capitol grounds last spring and came away fuming.

'It was in terrible shape," Andrews said.

Retta Preston of Austin, director of the United Daughters of the Confederacy museum committee, says Andrews is blowing the situation out of proportion.

As a result of Andrews' visit and an investigation by a consultant of the Texas Historical Association, state historians and lawyers are quietly looking into the possibility of the state taking over the museum.

The Confederate Museum is housed on the first floor of the old Land Office Building on the southeast corner of the Capitol

The second floor houses a museum run by the Daughters of the Republic of Texas, which Andrews says is better maintained.

"The museum is just in deplorable condition," said Andrews, whose great-grandfather served with the Texas Brigade during the Civil War.

"The artifacts are in display cases that are poorly maintained and deteriorating.

Andrews said he found flags from the Civil War folded and bunched together in cardboard boxes and in the bottom of dusty "Precious documents like Gen. Robert E. Lee's farewell address were literally rotting away," he said. "It was a big disappointment, especially when you realize some of the artifacts there are

"If he said anything was dusty, it wasn't," said Mrs. Preston. "That just was exaggerated. He was

"Naturally something 120 years old will deteriorate," she said.

The state owns the 129-year-old building, which has housed the museum since 1918 when the exhibits were moved out of the Capitol.

The Daughters of the Confederacy claim title to all its contents, which were donated by Civil War veterans and their descendants.

Andrews said the attorney general's office is trying to determine just who is the legal owner. He wants the hundreds of exhibits turned over to the state, with the Daughters to act as

After Andrews complained to Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby and Capitol architect Roy Graham, a consultant for the Texas Historical Commission, Roger Durham, was dispatched to the museum to take a

Durham said in his report that the museum staff had virtually no training or experience in museum work. He said space was being used inefficiently and walls were cracking and deteriorating

Durham's report concluded that 120-year-old flags were "in very sad state" and some items were mislabeled and descriptions of others were inaccurate

Chicken pox costly, researcher says

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — A new vaccine against chicken pox, a common childhood disease that each year costs the nation millions of dollars, has proven 98 percent effective in a test environment, a Philadelphia doctor says.

Dr. Stanley Plotkin, who has been testing the varicella vaccine at Children's Hospital in Philadelphia since 1979, said 400 children have been innoculated

"This vaccine is needed for a variety of reasons," Plotkin said Monday at the American Academy of Pediatrics conference here.

The disease can cause pneumonia, skin infections and ecephalitis. It also can trigger Reye's syndrome, an encephalitis-like viral disease that can be fatal, he said.

an epidemic disease causes problems in day care centers and in schools. And chicken pox can lead to shingles later in life.

In all, the disease costs about $400 million in medical bills and lost wages of parents who have to stay home with their sick children, said Dr. Stephen Preblud of the Centers for Disease Control

"We get two to three calls a week (at CDC) from parents wanting to know if we have a vaccine," Preblud said.

The disease, which strikes 3.5 million people annually, is highly contagious but has not been considered a health threat to the general population, Preblud said.

It is the last common infectious childhood disease for which no vaccine is available.

However, researchers for working parents who have to take Merck, Sharp & Dhome, a New Jersey-based firm, have for years been working on a chicken pox vaccine Russ Durbin, a company spokesman, said the vaccine should be ready to present to the Food and Drug Administration for licensing sometime next year. Research on a chicken pox vaccine was prompted because of the disease's effect on children with leukemia, Preblud said.

About 7 percent of leukemic children who get chicken pox will die, he said.

Preblud said he began research last year on the effect of chicken pox on normal children and their

Only 5 percent of the cost, Preblud said, is due to hospitalization, drugs and doctors'

Lawmaker calls for tax freeze for elderly

AUSTIN (AP) — Elderly Texans should not face rising county property taxes, says a state senator who wants a constitutional

Sen. Gonzalo Barrientos, D-Austin, called Monday for a

The freeze would cover all elderly Texans, whether they are on limited, fixed incomes or are millionaires

"Any person who happens to be wealthy and over 65 I would hope they would be a good American citizen and go ahead and contribute to the system," said Barrientos.

Travis County Judge Mike Renfro joined Barrientos at the news conference and announced his support for the plan.

Travis County now offers a $40,000 exemption per homestead for the elderly and the disabled.

But it could take to the air next spring if a group of aeronautical engineers, with advice from paleontologists led by a University of Texas professor, succeed.

The team has scheduled a ill-scale model of th fly next spring in a public demonstration outside the Smithsonian Air and Space Museum in Washington, D.C.

"It will fly down the mall, circle the Washington Monument, pick a small boy out of the audience and eat him, and finally return to the museum, where it will permanently reside," Langston said, joking about the beast's false reputation as a monster.

Joy in finding old friend

I rediscovered an old friend Sunday night.

I was turning the dial on my AM car radio to find another station because KHBJ, Amarillo's "oldies" station, was fading out. The signals on Tulsa's KRMG and Amarillo's KGNC-AM were also getting weaker, and I wasn't particularly in the mood for current rock hits or country music.

Then I stumbled upon something new, Bing Crosby singing with the Andrews Sisters. Swing music. The reception was as clear as those of the local stations

It was KOMA

I grew up listening to that station back when it was the Rock'n'Roll Voice of Oklahoma

While KOMA blasted through the static out of my yellow Panasonic radio that could twist itself into a bracelet, I used to tap pencils on my desk and pretend I was drummer Mickey Dolenz of the Monkees. (I could have made a pretty good drummer for the Antler band, had female percussionists not been considered unfeminine at the time).

While my classmates switched to the more progressive FM stations, I stayed with my AM buddy, all the way through the Grassroots, the Carpenters and the Captain and Tennille. My station also had a strong influence on the airwaves as I was able to pick it up late at night while visiting family in Phoenix and Elkhart, Ind. It was my nighttime friend. Then, shortly after my high school graduation, the music died.

Driving home from college in northeast Oklahoma one Thanksgiving, I switched to my home station and heard "1520 KOMA Country," followed by some warbling by Johnny Lee. In desperation, and for lack of an FM radio in my car, I had to switch to arch-rival WKY, which eventually also threw in the sponge and went country. This forced me to switch to (gag) my mother's favorite station, KTOK, a talky station which must have more guest commentaries and call-in cranks than anything else on the airwaves. Leaving the dearth of decent Oklahoma City AM stations, I found all I needed in Tulsa. KRMG had just the right blend of decent music and semi-intelligent air personalities. I rocked to early 60s oldies on KGTO (which once offered a red 1967 GTO convertible as a sweepstakes prize). The good rock stations were too numerous to remember the call letters for. KVOO satisfied a rare craving for University of Tulsa. And I learned to appreciate Big Band sounds on K - something - or - other. It hurt to leave all that behind when I moved to the Panhandle.

country. Classical music flowed from college station at the

I have been able to rebuild my radio repertoire since then. Two rock stations, an "adult contemporary" station, a country station and — when I can pick them up — the oldies station and my favorite Oklahoma standby, KRMG. But late at night, after a lengthy board meeting, it's impossible to pick any of them up, so I have to resort to something called "Talknet" out of Dallas or KOMA Country.

I'm happy that my station has dropped it's country format in favor of "the greatest hits of the past 40 years." The format, which features too much mellow Englebert Humperdinck and Perry Como, is not as jazzy as I'd want a "Big Band" station to be. Most of it is even too square for my mother's tastes. But it still seems to be my only source for Doris Day, Jo Stafford and Artie Shaw. I like listening Still, I do miss "the Rock Voice of Oklahoma." Spaulding is a staff writer for The Pampa News.

ROSHARON, Texas (AP) - The Texas prison system's Special Operations Response Team has been blasted as a "legalized goon squad." and praised for helping to reduce violence among inmates.

But the 80 members of the elite group say they're too busy to worry about the comments.

'By the time they call us, everything else has failed. We'll do the job, and we'll do it right," said Ronnie King, 24, who coordinates the activities for four SORT teams in state prisons in Brazoria County.

The SORT team was the brainchild of Texas Department of Corrections' Director O.L. McCotter, who used similar squads to control 2,300 high-security inmates at the Army Disciplinary Barracks in Fort Leavenworth,

Training classes began in September 1984 and included a four-week session at the Houston Police Academy's SWAT training

The team has been authorized to use as much force as necessary to keep the peace within the nation's second-largest prison system, and squad members admit they're not trained to ask inmates politely to do something.

"They know they've met their match. We've been threatened, spit on and our families threatened,' King said. "But we're trained not to lose our cool. We were organized to make prisons safer, and I think we're doing that.

Almost everything SORT does is videotaped. Tapes that show squad members using force against inmates are sent to the Texas Department of Corrections' headquarters in Huntsville for

EVER STRIVING FOR TOP O' TEXAS TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Take this proposal with grain of salt

Sen. Howard Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, thinks consumers are dying to know more about the food they eat. Specifically, the senator thinks buyers want to know how much sodium a product contains, how many calories it has per serving - even how many milligrams of potassium it contains.

He and Senate colleague Paula Hawkins, R-Fla., are so sure that consumers want this information that they're proposing to make such information mandatory on processed-food labels.

Certainly consumer are becoming increasingly aware of the potential health hazards associated with cholesterol, sodium and assorted fats. Diet-conscious consumers are increasingly concerned with calories per

And guess what? Many processed-food manufacturers are providing just that sort of information. Voluntarily.

The problem Metzenbaum and Hawkins see, however, it that not all processed-food manufacturers are putting this information on their labels. Of course, not all consumers care, either.

The two senators offer no room for diversity. On the off chance that a health-conscious consumer might mistakenly purchase a label that doesn't contain the specific information he wants, the two senators would require all labels to contain all information.

Current federal regulations require that processed-food labels list ingredients in descending order, according to weight, but not in specific amounts.

The only advantage the new labels would offer it that consumers would be able directly to compare different brands of processed-food products they buy. Of course, it would also force many manufacturers to remake their labels, not an extremely costly process, but costly nevertheless. And unnecessary.

If consumer want to make content comparisons, they can do so now. If their favorite brand doesn't let them make that comparison, they can buy the product that does. A large-scale shift of health-conscious consumers to other brands will send a pretty clear message to manufacturers who don't tout their low-calorie, low-sodium products.

The Metzenbaum-Hawkins bill has already had a hearing before the Labor and Human Resources Committee. It should go no futher.

Enemies of free enterprise

BY BUTLER D. SHAFFER

My conservative (and even some libertarian) friends are fond of babbling bromides about the virtues of the "free enterprise system." Even the politicians are heard to defend some governmental program on the ground that it will strengthen "free enterprise." But what does this phrase mean? Is it intended as a synonym for a free market economy," or does it only connote the present system of production and exchange of goods and services in our society?

Is it, in other words, just another term for describing the existing institutional order?

It is usually quite clear from a review of the proposals offered on behalf of the "free enterprise" principle that its defenders mean something other than an unregulated system of production and exchange, in which prices are free to rise or fall depending upon changes in market conditions, and there is no legal restraint on the entry of new competitors into the marketplace.

Rather than defending the principle of a free market economic system - in which the freedom of market participants is the underlying consideration - most conservatives (and many libertarians) are more desirous of fostering the interests of business firms.

It is this confusion of the principle of economic freedom with the interests of participants in market activity that leads to the popular delusion that business firms favor free market and try to avoid governmental regulation.

If one examines the workings of the political and economic systems, one quickly discovers that business interests have been the principal champions of increased political regulation of our lives. If you doubt this, just observe what is happening in your own community: as you drive through your city, take note of the kinds of firms that are enjoying the greatest success

It has been my experience, at least where I live, that banks and insurance companies - two of the most highly-regulated, tightly controlled industries we have - are erecting most of the new high-rise office buildings. Other firms enjoying comparative success are those involved in government contracting (particularly military contracting) and what is referred to as the "health-care" industry (have you noticed how many new multi-million dollar hospitals and insurance buildings have been built since Medicare went into effect?)

When one begins to explore the deeper nature of the symbiotic relationships among political agencies and business firms, one comes to an understanding of how American commercial and industrial interests and the political system are virtually indistinguishable from one another.

A couple of current political proposals will help to illuminate the point I am making. In many - if not most - states, legislatures have enacted (or are considering) legislation to require motorists to not only wear seat belts, but to insist upon their passengers wearing seat belts.

Who is proposing such legislation? Is it coming from such gangs of habitual people-pushers as social workers and their ilk? As with any proposal to increase political authority over the lives of others, there are, to be sure, men and women with knee-jerk reactions that will always come down on the side of the imposition of controls.

But such wimpish souls are not the source of these new seat-belt laws. If you look closely, you will find the insurance companies as the principal architects of the seat-belt scheme. If drivers and passengers can be forced - by a most compliant criminal law system - to wear seat belts, the amount of damages the insurance companies will have to pay out as the result of auto accidents will (or so such firms hope) diminish.

And so, yet a new class of criminals has been created - the seat belt law violators - with our lives subject to even yet more policing, more harrassment by the state bureaucracies and judicial systems, in order that the insurance companies can make even greater profits with which to build even more multi-storied monuments to their cleverness at working the halls of the political system.

One might also inquire into the machinations of American foreign policy. Why does Washington defend with such vigor the vulgar police-States of Central and South America, southeast Asia and the Middle East? Why do American tax dollars go to help American-oriented tyrannies around the world maintain their vicious power over people who want nothing so much right now as freedom from butchery, hearings, looting, and the unrestrained exercise of arbitrary authority? Might any of this support be at all related to the fact that the American banking industry has loaned tens of billions of dollars to these repressive regimes, loans that might not be repaid if the established order in these third world nations was disturbed?

Is this the reason for the well-kept secretive nature of the workings of the C.I.A. in these countries? Is this part of the explanation for the fact that the Rockefeller family interests - among the most visible of the American bankers - have been so closely tied to the conduct of American foreign policy, with so many Secretaries of State and presidential foreign policy advisors being men very close to the Rockefeller interests?

If you wish to understand how our political and economic systems work, make certain you are not misled by appearances and slogans. Do not confuse a free market with the interests of business firms.

A condition of freedom - (i.e., the absence of State power and authority over economic behavior) - has never been in the interests of those who find politics profitable. But keep in mind who it is that is paying the higher prices to keep such business interests earning their undeserved political rewards.

All bad camping partners

Editor's Note: Lewis Grizzard, who recently underwent heart surgery, will resume writing his columns next week. This is an excerpt from his new book, "Shoot Low, Boys - They're Ridin' Shetland Ponies.

You can tell a lot about people by noticing what they drink. For instance, I was in a restaurant recently when a man walked in and asked the hostess, "How long before I can have a table?"

"About 15 minutes," the hostess said. "Good," the man answered. "That'll give me time for a whiskey sour at the bar.

I can't explain why, but a whiskey sour is a drink for a man whose mother made him practice piano a lot when he was a kid. A man who drinks whiskey sours also probably throws a baseball like a girl - limp wristed. A man who drinks whiskey sours and then eats that silly little cherry they put in the bottom probably has a cat or a poodle for a pet. In other words, I wouldn't go on a camping trip with a man who drinks whiskey sours.

Scotch drinkers are aggressive. They order like they're Charles Bronson trying to have a quick shot before returning to the subway to kill a few punks and thugs.

'What'll you have, sir?" asks the bartender. "Cutty. Water. Rocks. Twist," growls the Scotch drinker. I think maybe Scotch drinkers wear their underwear too tight.

You have to watch people who drink vodka or gin. "Anybody who drinks see-through whiskey, an old philosopher once said, "will get crazy." Indeed. Vodka and gin drinkers are the type who leave the house to get a loaf of bread, drop by the bar for just one, and return home six weeks later. With the bread.

I wouldn't go on a camping trip with anyone who drinks vodka or gin, either. They're the types who would invite snakes, raccoons and bears over for cocktails and then wind up getting into an argument about tree frogs.

Bourbon drinkers never grow up. Eight out of ten started drinking bourbon with Coke in school and still have a pair of saddle oxfords in the closet. Bourbon drinkers don't think they've had a good time unless they get sick and pass out under a coffee table

Then there are the white wine drinkers. Never get involved in any way with them. They either want to get married, sell you a piece of real estate or redecorate your house

As for myself, I'm a beer drinker. We're usually honest, straightforward people. We also are usually kind and quite sentimental and will get crying - about - our - daddies drunk with one another. That's just before we destroy the establishment in which we're drinking because somebody made an offhand remark about Richard Petty or the memory of Patsy Cline

Never go camping with a beer drinker, either. We're really no fun unless there's a jukebox around, and we belch a lot, which might frighten the snakes, raccoons, bears and tree frogs. Distributed by Cowles Syndicate, Inc.

Bush man to beat for GOP nomination

By William A. Rusher

It's a little early yet for serious speculation on the 1988 Republican presidential nomination; but Bill Safire recently kicked off the non-serious speculation, so I see no reason to remain rigorously tight-lipped on the subject. Safire's most non-serious contribution was to float the name of Oregon Sen. Robert Packwood as a "dark horse" possibility. Since Packwood is a confirmed liberal, far out on the left fringe of Republicanism, whose chances for the nomination are substantially poorer than Safire's own, one is driven to wonder what favor Safire was repaying with that little nosegay. In what follows, I propose to freeassociate loosely, without, however, being quite that promiscuous.

The man to beat for the nomination, as I have said before - the man who 'has it to lose," as the expression goes

- is Vice President George Bush. Bush may not inspire much enthusiasm among doctrinaire conservatives, but he has won the respect and approval of President Reagan and the president's inner circle by his rocksolid loyalty to Mr. Reagan's programs.

Just as certainly, a great many (but by no means all) influential conservatives are determined to make at least a strong effort to nominate somebody closer to the core of the conservative movement, and their tiger is Rep. Jack Kemp. Kemp hasn't actually said he'll run, but he has been pawing the ground and visiting New Hampshire with an intensity that doesn't make sense, and isn't intended to make sense, on any other supposition.

Over toward the edge of the action, but far too shrewd and able a man to be counted out of it, is Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole, who makes no secret of his White House ambitions. The problem is that Dole is in some respects too strong and too senior a figure to play any role except the top one something that is much less true of just about any of the other contenders, save Bush.

For example, the suspicion just won't down that Kemp, however strenuously he may try to wrest the top prize from Bush, would in the last analysis accept the vice presidential nomination if it came down to that or nothing. That, to be sure, would end the dream of some conservatives that their heroine Jeane Kirkpatrick might become the long-awaited "woman on the ticket." But by 1988 Mrs. Kirkpatrick may well be U.S. senator from Maryland (vice Charles Mathias, retired), and quite content to remain there - or to become secretary of State, or national security adviser, in the next administration.

There are, in any case, a number of other intriguing alternatives open to Bush in the matter of a vice presidential running mate. If he feels, as he well might, the need of a highly regarded Western conservative to "balance the ticket," Paul Laxalt will still be around and available in one capacity or another. Or Bush could fulfill the same conditions, and also blow a lot of minds, by persuading Sandra Day O'Connor to step down from the Supreme Court and seek the vice presidency.

But Bush dares not disregard Kemp too cavalierly, either as a contender for the presidential nomination in the primaries or as the pre-emptive favorite for the No. 2 spot, lest he drive Kemp and Dole into a superficially implausible, but far from impossible, Stop-Bush alliance. Even if such a coalition failed to stop him, it could weaken the party's unity

Sanctuary trial proceedings start today

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) - The spotlight shifted today to center court — literally — with jury selection starting in the trial of 11 sanctuary movement members accused of smuggling illegal aliens into the United States

The 11, including two priests, a nun and a minister, are charged in what the government says was a conspiracy to violate U.S. immigration laws, through an 'underground railroad.''

The defendants contend they violated no law, national or international, and were compelled by their religious beliefs to provide aid and sanctuary to Salvadorans and Guatemalans fleeing for their lives from oppression in their homelands

U.S. District Judge Earl H. Carroll will preside over selection of a 12-member jury and two alternates, and the trial itself, which will not be as all-inclusive as the defendants and their attorneys had wished

In pretrial rulings, Carroll granted the government's request to prohibit the defense from basing its arguments on religious Prosecutor Donald M. Reno Jr., a special assistant U.S. attorney, contends that the Central American immigrants have come to the United States as economic refugees, trying to escape impoverished conditions, and not entitled to asylum.

Reno has called the case one merely involving smuggling of aliens and has maintained that the defendants' religious motivations were irrelevant and misguided.

Yet, the case could set a precedent in terms of a religion-state confrontation, given the government's means of gathering evidence that resulted in its indictment last January, which originally named 16 people.

For what legal scholars believe is the first time, the government used informants and undercover agents to tape-record secretly conversations in churches and in church-related meetings.

Reno said last week he would not use any of 91 taped conversations in establishing his case, relying instead on 50 witnesses, including numerous sanctuary workers named as unindicted helped by the defendants and one of the two informants paid by the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service to infiltrate the movement.

But defense lawyers said they intend to use portions of at least 21

Among the defendants are two men connsidered to have founded the sanctuary movement, Quaker activist James A. Corbett, 52, a rancher retired by arthritis, and the Rev. John M. Fife III, 45, a Presbyterian minister. Both are from Tucson.

The other members of the clergy are the Rev. Anthony Clark, 37, of Nogales, Ariz.; the Rev. Ramon Dagoberto Quinones, 49, of Nogales, Mexico, and Sister Darlene Nicgorski, 41, of Phoenix.

The remaining defendants are Philip Willis-Conger, 27, Tucson; Mary K. Doan Espinoza, 30, Nogales, Ariz.; Peggy Hutchison, 30, Tucson; Wendy LeWin, 26, Phoenix; Nena McDonald, 38, Lubbock, Texas, and Maria del Socorro Pardo de Aguilar, 58, Nogales, Mexico.

All are charged with conspiracy Other charges against various of transporting and concealing illegal aliens and encouraging illegal aliens to cross the border.

Charges have been resolved against the five others also indicted in January; those against two other nuns were dismissed, while three more women pleaded guilty to misdemeanors, with felony charges being dropped.

Carroll denied Reno's effort to bar the defendants from claiming their actions were not specifically intended to violate the law. Defendants hoped that that pretrial ruling would permit testimony about their motivations.

The trial could last four to six weeks, Carroll estimated last

Meanwhile, late Monday Carroll ruled to allow the publishing of names of prospective jurors, and said members of the jury panel may be sketched during selection proceedings but "shall not be individually identified."

The items on display will include one of the Orsay's most prized new acquisitions: Claude Monet's "La Pie," as well as the reproduction of the Statue of Liberty currently installed in the Luxemburg gardens.

Also in the exhibition are works by Impressionist masters Paul Cezanne, Edgar Degas, Claude Monet, Auguste Renoir and Pierre Bonnard.

The purpose of the show is to familiarize Americans with the new museum and its coveted collection, Jacques Rigaud, head of the $225-million Orsay project, said Monday in Paris.

Speaking at a news conference, Rigaud said Orsay would lend the works for a show next March at New York's Brooklyn Museum and for the Dallas show next summer.

heimer's disease mystery Researchers close in on

By PAUL RAEBURN AP Science Editor

DALLAS (AP) — Researchers have identified a new kind of abnormality in the brains of people with Alzheimer's disease that could be the best clue yet to the cause of the debilitating affliction.

The scientists found that the disease produces unusual changes in the fibers that serve as "skeletons" inside brain cells to help the cells hold

"No one believes these fibers are the cause of the disease," said Dr. Daniel Selkoe of Harvard Medical School, one of the scientists studying them. But they are an important step closer to the cause.

"These fibers we're studying are the best available clue to what happens in Alzheimer's disease," he said in an interview Sunday during the annual meeting in Dallas of the Society for

Scientists have known for a long time that the brains of Alzheimer's disease patients contain microscopic fibrous tangles and hardened deposits called plaques, but where these tangles and plaques came from was not known.

Selkoe and other researchers have now shown that the tangles and plaques contain some of the same proteins, or portions of the proteins, that are contained in the cytoskeletal fibers in normal brain

The finding adds to indications that the cause of Alzheimer's may lie in the process controlling formation of the cytoskeletal structures.

Further, it allows scientists for the first time to begin using the powerful techniques of gene-splicing to fight Alzheimer's.

Selkoe collaborators Ken Kosik, Rachel Neve and David Kurnit have already isolated the gene for one of the proteins found in both normal and abnormal

They can now use that gene to track Alzheimer's disease in the unusual cases where it is inherited in families, Selkoe said.

With luck, genetic research could lead to the fundamental, underlying cause of all the changes seen in Alzheimer's disease.

While in many cases family members of Alzheimer's victims appear to have an unexplained predisposition to develop it, only rarely is the disease passed on like classic hereditary diseases, such as cystic fibrosis.

The reason for the variability could be that several genes may control the disease. These genes could interact in different ways in different individuals.

At present, there is no cure for Alzheimer's, and nothing can be done even to alleviate its symptoms or to detect it early, before symptoms appear.

About 20 percent of the U.S. population will eventually get Alzheimer's, and the number of cases is increasing as the population ages, said Dr.

Clifford Saper of the University of Chicago during the neuroscience meeting. In about 35 years, one in four Americans will be over age 65, he said.

Care for Alzheimer's victims now costs $20 billion a year, Saper said. The disease, which causes at least 100,000 deaths a year, was first described in 1907 by Alois Alzheimer, a German psychiatrist. Alzheimer noted the symptoms: a progressive loss of memory and mental function and eventual inability to speak or perform even routine tasks.

Alzheimer was the first to note the tangles and plagues that occur in the brains of those with the illness. These hard, insoluble structures remain as tombstones marking the death of brain cells.

In the last 15 years, researchers have uncovered more

Dr. Peter Davies of the Albert Einstein College of Medicine in New York was one of several scientists to find that only certain brain cells were affected.

Different brain cells use different chemicals, called neurotransmitters, to communicate. The researchers found that the disease primarily affected brain cells that used the neurotransmitter acetylcholine

Dr. Donald Price of Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore and others reported that the damage seemed to occur in certain regions of the brain near the base of the brain, for example, and in certain parts of the cortex, or outer layer of the Researchers have used various drugs to try to boost production of acetylcholine and thus restore the function of the neurons that require it, but the drugs have been unsuccessful, said Davies.

Some months ago, researchers at Dartmouthod University in New Hampshire administered a drugdirectly into the skulls of patients, so it would go directly to the brain.

"It is impossible at this time to say whether anything happens," said Davies. Nevertheless, other groups are preparing to try the same strategy with different drugs, he said.

Selkoe and his colleagues believe that the tangles and plaques are important in Alzheimer's disease because these abnormalities occur near neurons using acetylcholine, because they are more frequent in more severe cases of disease, and because they are found in the parts of the brain affected by the Selkoe's group has shown that plaques and certain tangles called paired helical filaments share certain chemical properties. They have also shown that the plaques and tangles contain proteins that are not present in normal brains, or present only in extremely small quantities.

Other researchers have shown that the plaques and tangles also share some chemical properties with the cytoskeletons of normal neurons.

Politics strains Bill Clements, 'Bum' Bright friendship

Texas Gov. Bill Clements once were close friends who ran in the same business circles, socialized together and shared political strategies

But lately a breach in that close alliance has developed, apparently helped along by Bright's decision to support former Congressman Kent Hance instead of Clements for the Republican nomination for governor of Texas.

"I'm sure Bill feels badly I'm not supporting him," Bright said. "I have no personal gripe against Bill, and I hope he wouldn't to me. But Bill is a very competitive person, and he thinks if you're not for him, you're against him.

Bright was state finance chairman for Clements in his unsuccessful bid for re-election in

To add to the strain, Jim Francis, Clements' former campaign manager who is employed by Bright, is running the campaign of Hance, a former Clements declined to comment on his relationship with Bright.

"That's a very personal thing," he said, "and I don't think it has anything to do with this political campaign.

When Clements was governor in 1981, he appointed Bright to the Texas A&M University Board of Regents, a post Bright resigned this year in a political spat with Democratic Gov. Mark White.

That same year, Bright raised $2.9 million for Clements at a dinner, setting a Texas fund-raising record and erasing Clements' 1978 campaign debt.

Bright and Francis partly explain their new political allegiance to Hance by contending that Clements had told them several times he would not be a candidate for governor in 1986.

But Clements said, "They hear what they want to hear. I told all of these (prospective) candidates ... I reserve my judgment until they prove to me that they were indeed viable and credible statewide Loeffler as a "couple of Gary Harts.'

But Clements' campaign organizer, Martha Weisend, commented, "If I remember correctly, Gary Hart lost."

According to Bright, he and Clements have not talked much in several months

Some Republicans involved in 1986 campaigns predict the falling out between the two men could mean a nasty inner-party fight.

One top Dallas County identified, told the Dallas Morning News, "That schism is so deep and wide that it could easily transmit into a vicious campaign by the candidates and their supporters.' Clements said he doesn't know how the GOP dog fight will affect the party.

"You know we have never been quite in this position before," he said, adding he hoped the competition wouldn't do irreparable damage. One unidentified Loeffler strategist, an elected official who asked not to be identified, told the News, "I think you're going to see Hance and Clements club it. I think it will be the bloodiest fight in years

The strain between the two old friends, who are only three years apart in age, became public in a big way with a newspaper story last month which quoted Bright as saying Clements had told him other Southwest Conference schools would be dragged into the football recruiting scandal that had sullied Southern Methodist University.

Republican challenges Hightower

AUSTIN (AP) — A Republican who wants to challenge Democratic Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower says the incumbent is too liberal for the

"Hightower is more interested in grabbing newspaper headlines and in unionizing Texas workers than he is in helping Texas agriculture move forward and become profitable," Bill Powers said in announcing his candidacy Monday.

Hightower is totally out of line. He does not speak for mainstream agriculture," Powers said, adding that by mainstream he means the various farm commodity and producer groups

Powers, 43, of Austin, executive vice president of the Texas Poultry Federation, said Hightower is better as a comedian than a farming official.

"Jim Hightower would rather you not know what he's done to that department. He'd rather you listen to his one-liner jokes. He'd rather you listen to his down-home humor than he would for you to look at the facts," Powers said.

Hightower, whose sense of humor is a trademark of his was elected in 1982. He is raising money for a re-election bid.

A former Democrat, Powers said the 1986 primary will be the first GOP primary in which he has voted. He said the Democratic Party became too liberal for his views.

Powers also said he agrees with one of Hightower's most controversial actions, imposing safety regulations on the use of farm pesticides. Those rules have brought him the wrath of a number of farm groups. "Let me tell you that generally, with regard to pesticide regulations, that I agree with Mr. Hightower. Anytime you can separate people and chemicals, I think that should be done," Powers

The Texas A&M graduate contrasted his background with Hightower's. Both once edited newspapers, he noted. "But his journalism is somewhat different than mine. Mine was a weekly newspaper in East Texas. Jim Hightower edited the Texas Observer ... the liberal newspaper for the liberals of Texas. It is not the publication that I think one would find on the coffee tables of mainstream Texas," he said. Powers said Hightower dismantled the Texas Department of Agriculture's marketing division, replacing experienced officials with appointees who don't know what they are doing.

"He moved into a very good Texas Department of Agriculture. The very first thing he did was to fire many, many employees. He fired many key employees who had experience, knowledge and good judgment. This is particularly true in the marketing division," Powers

Asked to name marketing officials who aren't performing well, Powers declined

"I would rebuild the marketing division ... with the employment of people who understand marketing, who understand Texas products, he said, adding that the widely publicized "Taste of Texas" program actually was begun by a previous administration.

Powers, who grew up on a farm and earned an agriculture journalism degree from A&M. edited the Farm Bureau's monthly 'Texas Agriculture' publication before becoming director of the poultry association in 1969.

Typically, Hightower responded to Powers' announcement with a

Judge apologizes for trial delay

ABILENE, Texas (AP) federal judge apologized to prospective jurors for a delay in the embezzlement trial of two former top Abilene National Bank

A seven-man, five-woman jury was picked Monday, but U.S. District Judge Halbert O. Woodward told the panel it would be at least Wednesday before testimony could begin.

Woodward said he must dispense with another trial first, that of a former Big Spring federal prison camp guard accused of accepting money from former Denton County rancher Rex Cauble and another inmates.

Woodward apologized for the stacked trials. He told prospective jurors he had planned to have another judge handle one of the trials, but that judge- David O. Belew- had to undergo major surgery.

Prosecutors said they expect the bank trial to last at least two weeks.

Former ANB president and board chairman Don Earney and former ANB vice president James Kington were named last February in a 53-count federal indictment.

The indictment alleges that Earney and Kington embezzled $1,518,872 in kickbacks on loans totaling $3,168,641.

Earney was ANB president until a forced merger of the Abilene bank with Mercantile Texas Corp. of Dallas in August 1982. His resignation was a condition of the merger. The merger came after federal bank examiners reportedly found loan losses that made the bank insolvent. ANB changed its name to MBank

Kington has been charged with 17 ounts of embezzlement, 14 counts of making false entries, seven counts of aiding and abetting in the commission of offenses, five counts of causing ANB to fail to file required currency reports, and one count of omitting income from banking transactions in the 1981

Earney is charged with four counts of embezzlement, four counts of false entry, seven counts of aiding and abetting, and nine countsof failure to file currency

Senate chaplain: prays for peace, salvation and a balanced budget

Abilene about a year ago.

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Senate's chaplain, the Rev. Richard C. Halverson, often gets specific and timely in offering the prayer that marks the opening of each Senate session

He has pointedly reminded senators that in the tumult and demands of their jobs they may be neglecting their families, who also need attention.

He commiserates with lawmakers in conflicts among themselves and with the White

Last week he even prayed that the Senate page school retain its accreditation. "Guide the accreditation team as they evaluate the school, and bless abundantly the committed faculty as they pursue their incalcuable contribution to the Senate." He freely admits that he sometimes can't follow the complicated procedures. "Father in heaven, I confess not knowing enough about what is happening here to pray relevantly," he said one morning. But he quickly added that the Almighty was sufficiently aware of the senators' "motives, consciences and plans" and implored him to: "Guide them in these critical hours that they will do nothing which they will later

As the Senate struggled through long and divisive debate earlier this month on how or whether to direct that the federal budget be balanced by 1991, Halverson noted that the week had become "a stressful exercise in futility for our leaders," Majority leader Robert Dole, R-Kan., and Minority Leader Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va.

"They have been like maestros conducting a symphony while each musician plays his own music," he

When the Senate returned from a three-day Columbus Day break he opened with the words: "Father in heaven, the Senate is back and the problems are still here - waiting. They will not go away.'

On Thursday, Halverson noted that the 100 men and wonen who serve as senators represent one of the smallest American minorities, a minority of power and privilege.

"But save them Lord from the spirit of elitism and arregance which seems so easily to infect some who become part of such an exclusive group," Halverson said. "Protect them from the insidious corrupting influence of power."

That prompted Sen. Alan Simpson, R-Wyo., the assistant

The advice: "Always remember this in the Senate - and I have watched for years - some grow and some swell.'

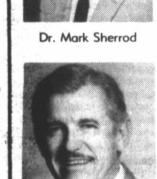

"I have never forgotten that, and I have met both categories here.'

Simpson said. "Sen. Stennis is right. It is more fun to work with those who grow.'

You try to think of some incident in which you may have strained your back, and come up with nothing. But there must be some reason why you have back pains. The truth is that even the simplest of in-cidents may be the cause, such as reaching high on a shelf to get something. Or stooping suddenly to pick up something that has failen. Or maybe you need some tips on good posture. Whatever the cause, the problem may be that your spinal column is out of alignment...No pain-killing drug can cure the CAUSE. It can dull the pain for awhile and give you temporary re-lief. High quality means lower costs

AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) - Good quality pays its way in lower costs and free advertising.

To Armand Feigenbaum, whose programs already have profoundly affected quality and productivity throughout the world, this statement can be defended not just with the passion of belief but with the mathematics of proof.

Satisfied customers tell eight people, says Feigenbaum. And when they are unhappy with a product or service? They tell 22 people, he said.

Feigenbaum, who wrote the first edition of his classic "Total Quality Control" while a doctoral student at Massachusetts Institute of Technology, believes quality can be America's only real answer to world competition. He should know, because he has trained many of America's competitors has seen the results, and has measured them scientifically. To his mind, and the minds of most exposed to his works, the evidence is incontrovertible.

Quality, he told an audience here at a National Quality Month Forum, "is today's most powerful corporate leverage point for achieving both customer satisfaction and lower costs.'

Quality, according to Feigenbaum, was the leverage by which the United States achieved industrial ascendancy, and it is the means by which Japan and other East Asian nations have emerged as relentless competitors.

As with so many things, the United States lost sight of quality principles and soon after began losing market share as well. Frantic, many companies experimented with promotions and reorganizations - but ignored quality.

Among the other sins America has committed, he says, is that we have planned quality programs as if they were intended only for factory workers. Quality, he says,

The first quality-control principle is to understand quality, he says. But many people do not. Quality, he asserts, is what the customer perceives it to be, not what a marketer, manufacturer or merchant says it is.

It is a falsehood, he asserts, that good quality must cost more than bad and make production more difficult as well. Redoing the bad can add 40 percent to production costs, he says.

Feigenbaum, who managed worldwide manufacturing operations and quality control for General Electric Co., now spreads his gospel as president of General Systems Co. of Pittsfield, Mass.

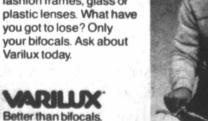

He is a no-nonsense personality whose serious, scientific manner

Reagan willing to forget to keep Senate for the GOP

By DONALD M. ROTHBERG AP Political Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - When it comes down to the battle to retain Republican control of the Senate, President Reagan is willing to forgive if not forget, which might explain his willingness to recruit Richard Snelling to challenge Democratic Sen. Patrick Leahy of Vermont.

ur ur its ne cy ew est is,

rith

After meeting with the president at the White House last week, Snelling, a former GOP governor, went home to Vermont and announced he was ready to run.

According to Snelling, Reagan told him, "I would rather have you run for the Senate and serve in the Senate disagreeing with me than not have you run at all.'

If Snelling makes it into the Senate, Reagan might end up wishing he had been less

For the first four years Reagan was in the White House, Snelling was one of the principal Republican thorns in his side. And their disagreements centered on how to deal with budget deficits, the issue that is likely to dominate the 1986 campaign and the remainder of Reagan's term in office.

During his first term, Reagan proposed "new federalism," a plan to transfer $38 billion in federal programs to the states, and Snelling was in the forefront of governors who protested that it would dump an unfair burden on "The governors cannot support a plan that fails to provide for the medically needy, discourages adequate state welfare assistance burdens," Snelling said when he was chairman of the National Governors Association.

As for the president's call for a constitutional amendment to mandate a balanced federal budget, Snelling called the idea

'My own view is that you ought to have a balanced budget almost all the time, but I personally do not think it is a worthy idea to try to enshrine the call for a balanced budget in the Constitution," he Snelling also supports higher taxes to help reduce budget deficits. Boosting taxes is at the top of Reagan's list of things he says he won't do. And he cites his 1984 landslide re-election as public endorsement of his anti-tax stand.

But for Republicans scrambling for the strongest possible lineup to enhance their chances of retaining their Senate majority, this clearly was no time to worry about past disagreements.

Snelling is, after all, a Republican and probably the only one in Vermont who might beat Leahy next year. It generally is agreed Leahy and Snelling are the two most popular politicians in the

The former Vermont governor lost no time taking up what is likely to be the principal theme of Republican campaigns next year: the charge that the Democrats are unwilling or unable to balance the federal budget

"I would say that Patrick Leahy has been a good senator," Snelling or ignores differences in state said. "... But I don't think he has problem in our nation.

shown any willingness to make the kind of tough decisions to get the deficit under control."

Democrats were quick to point out that when Snelling left office after eight years, the state budget deficit was the highest in history.

Leahy was one of the Democrats who voted in favor of the Republican sponsored amendment to require a balanced federal budget by 1991. That proposal, sponsored by Sens. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, and Warren Rudman, R-N.H., succeeded in putting the Democrats on the defensive on the budget issue.

Traditionally, Republican candidates have battered the Democrats with accusations they were big spenders with no regard for cutting deficits.

Then came the Reagan deficits and Democrats gleefully saw a chance to turn the tables. Gramm-Rudman changed all that. Once again, the Democrats were on the defensive and the party split, with 27 voting for Gramm-Rudman and 20 voting against it.

Many Democrats thought the proposal was an unworkable idea, but they were trapped by the reality that it was highly workable as a political issue.

For example, Sens. Howard Metzenbaum and John Glenn, Democrats from Ohio, both opposed Gramm-Rudman. The next day, Rep. Thomas N. Kindness, R-Ohio, who is challenging Glenn for re-election next year, issued a news release saying, "I am appalled that Senators Glenn and Metzenbaum still fail to recognize the seriousness of the budget deficit

SANIBEL, Fla. (AP) - At 81, Gladys Steele Curtright has no intention of retiring or even slowing up. She says she'll continue selling real estate "because I like helping people."

Almost a legend on this resort and retirement island off the Gulf Coast near Fort Myers, Mrs. Curtright is easily recognized by her ever-present bouffant-style white wig. "I can see the funny side of things," is her prescription for maintaining a cheerful disposition and enjoying life. She refrains only from discussing the loss of her husband, who died in January after 61 years of marriage.

What keeps me interested in real estate is that I can do so much for people," says Mrs. Curtright who, in 1965, was the first woman president of the Beloit, Wis., Board of Realtors. She has been with Bluebill Properties Inc. for several years here and has been in real estate for 30 years.

Most of her clients are affluent. 'If they don't like the rates or loan institutions, they offer to pay cash. I've had them write out a check for $425,000." she adds with a chuckle.

Born in Evansville, Wis., in 1904, she married Walter L. Curtright in 1933. The couple moved to Cincinnati, where she became a cosmetologist and operated her own beauty shop.

Five years later, they transferred to Janesville, Wis., and then Beloit around 1940. A few years later, she became a real estate agent and broker.

"Salesmanship hasn't changed for me over the years," she explains. "I never use pressure. I let the customer buy. If they don't like what they see, I find something for them.

"I eat three full meals a day more than most any two people," she admits. Her idle time is spent at the beach or reading. "I'm no party girl. I'm too old for that."

Former Texas congressmen who didn't return home

WASHINGTON (AP) - J.T. "Slick" Rutherford had served in Congress for four terms when, he said, a "pretty boy with pretty words" ran against him on the Republican ticket in 1962.

"I can't remember his name." insists Rutherford, a self-proclaimed "yellow-dog

Rutherford said that after he lost, even H.R. Gross of Ohio, an ''ultra-ultra conservative'' Republican who used to call him names on the floor of the House. 'put his arms around me and cried like a baby.

"He said, 'I don't mind beating Democrats. But not you, not you.'

"I had a family of friends up here," Rutherford said. "I was rejected in Texas.

So Rutherford stayed. Now he does what most former congressman do in Washington: He talks to the ones who now hold the reins of power, lobbying for or against legislation favored or opposed by various businesses, associations, unions.

Old friendships come in handy and foster some irony.

For example, J.J. "Jake" Pickle, D-Austin, is on the Ways and Means health subcommittee. "I'll tell you how far Pickle and I

Out of 38 living former members of Congress from Texas, seven remain in Washington — eight if you count former Houston Rep. George Bush who returned as vice president.

Though Rutherford attaches some emotion to his decision to abandon his home state, like the others, he says the bottom line was

Ms. Gardner's charges against Young came on the heels of the Elizabeth Ray-Wayne Hays

In Young's case, Justice Department prosecutors said they found no illegality, because Ms. Gardner, unlike Ms. Ray, did perform office duties.

But in 1978, Young was defeated by ultra-conservative Joe Wyatt who served one term, then retired after being arrested on homosexual charges.

Formerly of Victoria, Young now lives and works in McLean, Va. "I have been practicing law, and I'm happy to say with a great deal

Chemical in brain is very potent appetite stimulant

DALLAS (AP) — A chemical previously identified in the human brain has been found to be the most potent appetite stimulant known, and researchers say it could play a critical role in binge eating, anorexia and other eating disorders.

When the chemical was injected into the brains of rats, they began overeating within minutes and by the third day were eating more than twice what they would normally consume, said Sarah Leibowitz, a neurobiologist at The Rockefeller University in New York.

The rats' daily weight gain was more than four times their normal gain during 10 days of testing, according to Leibowitz and Glenn Stanley, a researcher in her laboratory.

Leibowitz reported the findings Monday at a meeting of the Society for Neuroscience.

Leibowitz said the substance. called neuropeptide Y, could be responsible for the binge eating attacks experienced by people with the eating disorder bulimia, and for occasional overeating in normal individuals.

In patients with anorexia, who fail to eat, neuropeptide Y could cause the periodic, erratic binges that have been observed, she said. Scientists say 5 percent of Americans, mainly young women, suffer from bulimia or anorexia, both of which can be fatal

Ag statistics could be a Christmas stocking stuffer

WASHINGTON (AP) - The 1984 edition of Agricultural Statistics may not be on everyone's Christmas shopping list, but it could be just the thing for livening up dull parties this winter.

Imagine the looks you'll get after chiming in, "Did you know Oregon produced more than $1.1 billion worth of filberts in 1980?" Or, "Can you believe we cranked out 1.4 billion pounds of hotdogs in 1983?"

And what could be snappier as the snacks are passed than noting with authority, "We're eating less lard than we used to.'

The official Agriculture Department figures are all there in the 558-page book, an annual volume that for decades has been a standard reference for anyone with even a slight interest in agriculture.

It has an international flavor too.

with foreign trade and U.S. export figures for major commodities, along with food stamp participation, conservation payments to farmers, farm income and land in farms. Even the number of farm telephones and average bills are listed, by state.

One of the standard features in the book is a table of weights, measures and conversion factors. Everything from alfalfa seed to wheat is listed — in metric units as well as in U.S. terms.

For example, a bushel of alfalfa seed weighs the same as a bushel of wheat, 60 pounds or 27.2 kilograms. Soybeans also weigh 60 pounds per bushel. A short ton, the "regular" kind known by most Americans, is 2,000 pounds. A long ton is 2,240 pounds. A metric ton is 2,204.6 pounds. In international agricultural trade, the metric ton is a common unit. And a metric ton of wheat is about 36.7 bushels, the same for

But shelled corn weighs 56 pounds per bushel, so there are about 39.4 bushels of corn in a metric ton. Oats weigh 32 pounds per bushel, so there are 68.9 oushels of oats in a ton.

The USDA book also shows that castor beans weigh 41 pounds per bushel and that cranberries are measured by the barrel, which is equal to 100 pounds.

Honey is measured by the gallon. 11.84 pounds. But milk is measured by the pound or in units of 100 pounds, or hundredweight. A gallon of milk weighs about 8.6 pounds, making it much lighter than honey.

Baby Doe cases now child abuse

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) -The "Baby Doe" cases in which parents of handicapped newborns refused to authorize treatment are now being treated as child abuse cases, a former president of the American Academy of Pediatrics

Dr. James Strain, a Denver pediatrician, said Monday that when the first celebrated "Baby Doe" case occurred in Bloomington, Ind., in 1982, it was treated as a civil rights matter.

But the courts repeatedly have refused to let the Department of Health and Human Services enforce the civil rights of such infants, Strain said.

In October 1984, President Reagan signed a new law making medical neglect of newborns in hospital nurseries child abuse.

Under the new law, state child protective service agencies are charged with investigating reports of neglect of retarded or otherwise handicapped infants.

The academy, which had opposed the federal government's involvement in investigating such cases, "is amenable to this," said Strain, who was president of the organization when the first case surfaced in 1982.

"We think we can work with child abuse agencies," he said. The academy is meeting this week in San Antonio.

In the initial case, a Bloomington, Ind., couple decided against an operation for an intestinal blockage on their newborn, down's syndrome son. The baby died a few days after birth. After that case, Health and Human Services decided to act on 1973 civil rights legislation prohibiting discrimination against the handicapped, Strain said. What resulted, he said, was a regulation giving federal health officials the authority to investigate cases of handicapped infant neglect at hospitals. The regulation called for posting to report such cases to Health and Human Services Almost immediately, the academy filed suit against the agency and succeeded in having of signs that gave a hotline number the rule thrown out In October 1983, "Baby Jane Doe" was born in a Long Island, N.Y., hospital. She suffered from spina bifida, a spinal disorder, and hydrancephaly, commonly known as water on the brain.

The parents decided against an operation that would alleviate the hydrancephaly condition.

By then, Health and Human Services had issued a new set of rules allowing them investigative powers. But a court refused to allow the federal agency permission to look at hospital records. Legal issues stemming from the Baby Jane Doe case have been appealed to the U.S. Supreme Court, and Strain said a ruling is expected soon.

Strain said the academy has advocated the establishment of infant bioethics review committees at hospitals.

Such comittees, he said, "would be responsible for giving society's input into the care of these babies.

They also would see that the "care of the baby is in the best interest of the baby." The committee concept has been incorporated in 66 percent of the nation's 275 hospitals that deliver babies, Strain said.

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) - In 1981, their lives were simple and quiet. Pennsylvania native John Fife was the preacher at a small barrio church on Tucson's dusty south side. Jim Corbett, a graying anti-war activist, was teaching desert goat ranchers how to improve milk production.

Today, the chain-smoking Presbyterian minister is called the father of a growing nationl movement. And the goateed

Harvard philosophy graduate is a veteran of national news programs and "Donahue."

Some say they're heroes. The government says they're felons. Fife, 45, and Corbett, 52, are founders of what has become widely known as the sanctuary movement, a grass-roots coalition of churches and synagogues offering refuge to thousands of Central Americans in open opposition to the Reagan administration.

On Tuesday, Fife and Corbett are scheduled to stand trial with 10 colleagues for what they consider an act of mercy, conspiring to transport Central American refugees to safety.

In July 1981, a friend of Corbett's picked up a Salvadoran hitchhiker outside Nogales, Ariz. He told a moving story of how his relatives had been killed by death squads and he had escaped. At a U.S. Border Patrol checkpoint, the hitchhiker was arrested.

Intrigued by the hitchhiker's plight. Corbett learned that when arrested most aliens are taken to outlying detention camps and asked to sign voluntary deportation papers. He learned that aliens from El Salvador had little chance for political asylum. When he learned of other Salvadorans hiding in Mexican churches, he began following his Quaker heritage by taking them across the border to his Tucson home.

"The only route was to work out ways to keep them from being captured for as long as we can," he Corbett wrote to other Quakers asking for help and suggesting a network, an underground railroad. And he asked Fife if he could help by housing some at his Southside Presbyterian Church.

"Jim came to me in the fall of 1981 and said he had 20 Salvadorans living in one room of his house and his wife was about to divorce him. He asked if he could bring them to the church, at which point I had to decide if I thought he was right," Fife said.

"Then I had probably the only original thought I've ever had in my life," Fife said. "I thought the concept of sanctuary applied here, and I thought maybe you could publicly declare a church a sanctuary for these people."

Fife's 125 congregation members voted 119-2, with four abstentions, to accept a Salvadoran family in sanctuary on March 24, 1982, the second anniversary of the assassination of Archbishop Oscar Romero in El Salvador.

"After a long meeting, we basically decided that we're the church, and if people need the hospitality of the church, we have

Knowing their acts would be considered illegal, Fife sent telegrams to the Immigration and Naturalization Service and the Justice Department and asked other churches to join, hoping a groundswell of support would keep him out of jail.

"We waited to be indicted," he said. "When we weren't, we said, Well, let's go back to work."

Work meant establishing relationships with churches in El Salvador and rendezvousing with aliens in Mexico. It meant organizing volunteers to transport refugees around Border Patrol checkpoints and shuttling them to the growing number of sanctuaries. It included raising bail money and arranging legal advice. It meant taking reporters along on caravans to attract doctors told him he had rheumatoid arthritis, became the philosopher-poet of the movement, providing the writings and inspiration to other churches. "If you think of what we're doing as civil disobedience you're going to go pretty far astray," he said.

"This is not civil disobedience but civil initiative. We want to make the laws we have work." Today, Corbett writes on an IBM personal computer. The watch fastened to his belt beeps hourly. His office wall is lined with videotapes of his television appearances and stories about the movement.

"The reality is that the sanctuary movement would not be considered as an option by any of the churches in this country without the spiritual leadership of Jim Corbett and John Fife and the other people in Tucson," said Bruce Bowman, a Los Angeles immigration attorney who works with Central Americans. "They were able to set an example, to carry a message to the whole country to become

SANTA FE, N.M. (AP) - Like a rag-tag army without a general, the foot soldiers of the sanctuary movement conduct a haphazard war against U.S. policy in Central

The men and women who help illegal Guatemalan and Salvadoran refugees elude capture and deportation by the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service say they're defying American law because they believe it is wrong.

They accuse the Reagan administration of disobeying the 1980 Refugee Act passed by Congress by refusing asylum to foreigners fleeing for their lives.

In Santa Fe, the lawbreakers are housewives and ministers, tour guides and secretaries, chefs and retired grandmothers, financial consultants and artists.

Once a month the Santa Fe Ecumenical Refugee Task Force meets in a church. No one takes notes. Attendance varies from a few to 50, depending on events in Central America and in Washington.

Alice, the group's unofficial leader, emphasizes that the meetings are perfectly legal.

But some of the 14 men and women who gathered in the church one recent rainy night have repeatedly committed felony offenses by driving or sheltering illegal aliens on the run from Central America.

Alice is a pseudonym. She agreed to be interviewed on condition that her name not be used.

Up to 120 illegal Salvadorans and Guatemalans now live in Santa Fe. but only one young man is officially living "in sanctuary," under the auspices of the Santa Fe Quaker Meeting.

Alice is a Quaker. An athletic. pretty blonde woman with big ice-blue eyes, she is the mother of a son and confesses to being somewhat of a Yuppie - fond of good croissants, an avid jogger, wagon decorated with a protest bumper sticker.

According to the law, she is also a criminal

It took Alice 20 of her 40 years to decide to disobey the law, to become a kind of pacifist urban guerrilla who cooks breakfast for her family, spends the day helping illegal aliens and gets home in time to fix supper. "I was going into business or government when I graduated from the University of Wisconsin in 1968," she said. "That was the time of all the trouble and protests on campus. I wasn't part of it. I never got involved." As an exchange student in Brazil one summer, she learned to inoculate slum children against typhoid. It changed her outlook and her future.

Alice became a social worker in New York City. Later she taught in Mexico and worked as a doctor's helper in Guatemala.

"I went down there because I wanted to be in the middle of it. Already, in 1970, there were six or eight people being murdered every week and tossed by the roadside. Professors were being blown away in Guatemala City," she recalled.

"When I came back to the States to go to graduate school I wanted to tell people about what I'd seen, how people were being killed in Central America. But nobody cared. They didn't even know where Guatemala was. I shut up about it, I closed down my mind," she said.

A decade passed. Alice became a Quaker and married. She followed the violence in Central America through newspapers.

Then, in 1981, she received a mass mailing letter from Jim Corbett, the Tucson, Ariz., founder of the sanctuary effort.

OR

MIDLAND, Texas (AP) - FBI Agent Ron Butler grasped a ballpoint pen between his forefinger and thumb and directed his attention toward white-collar

"It's one thing to go out and take $100,000 with a pen," the senior resident agent of Midland's FBI office said.

"But if I draw a gun and take $20, it's a different situation," Butler said

The low-key Butler, a 17-year veteran with the bureau, explained that the person who steals money through computers and bank ledgers instead of using force often is viewed differently by the public. That misperception, he said, is only natural.

In the aftermath of a bank robbery, tellers may have felt their lives were imperiled and the bank loses some hard cash, Butler said. But the silent, unseen theft can be just as damaging, Butler said. "There is seven times as much going out the back door of the bank rather than by force," he said. In an October 1984 speech, FBI Director William Webster claimed white-collar crime costs the nation $200 billion annually, Butler said.

Nationally, the bureau is dedicating 17 percent to 20 percent of its resources toward investigating the phenomenon,

At the Midland office, Butler said white-collar crime "is a top priority."

Butler is one of nine agents assigned to the Midland bureau. A year ago, the office only had three agents, Assistant U.S. Attorney Jim Blankinship said last

But Butler said that growth in agents "doesn't need to be highlighted."

Blankinship said he was stationed in Midland primarily to prosecute cases involving white-collar crimes, including the 'banking area."

But Blankinship also declined to specify what cases he expects to be brought before the Midland federal grand jury. Butler said that not all white-collar criminals fit the image of bank boardrooms and three-piece suits. Some, he said, are "ill-educated" and have graduated from the "school of hard knocks." Much like the men they pursue, FBI agents also often don't fit the public's notion of how they should look, the 42-year-old Butler said.

"Agents have kids, they go to PTA meetings, they go hunting and they watch soccer matches," Butler said.

FBI agents enjoy sideline interests just as other people do after their working day, Butler said. But he admitted being an FBI agent is "not a 9-to-5 job."

We hold ourselves to a very high standard. There's a certain amount of pride.

Agents also are emerging from different backgrounds, Butler said. The "stock" applicants are those with law or accounting backgrounds, but the FBI attracts degrees, the agent noted. Engineers are in high demand, as are those well-versed in foreign languages, Butler reported.

people with diversified college

Agents in the one-year probationary period are paid about $24,000, then receive about $30,000 once assigned to one of the FBI's 59 field offices, Butler said.

Some citizens have cut short other careers to apply at the bureau, he said.

But some applicants are attracted by a souped-up image shown on the television screen, he

Texas cotton crop booming, Texas cotton farmers aren't

By The Associated Press

This year has been kind to the Texas cotton crop, but it has been eating the stuffing out of Texas cotton farmers.

"I've never seen people so down in the mouth," said Cotton Fanning, spokesman for the Plains Cotton Growers Inc. in Lubbock. "I'm hearing nothing but gloom and doom up and down the street."

The problem is relatively simple: Booming production from what may be a near-record year is swamping a market already glutted with cheaper foreign cotton. And that means prices have dropped below survival level for many farmers.

The solution is far more complex. Farmers, marketing experts and politicians are sharply divided over how to change federal price supports as well as what to do with a farm bill package now before Congress.

Economists say Texas' 30,000 cotton farmers are looking for a bumper production year that should surpass last year's performance. And that's despite recent cold snaps that have hampered West Texas harvests.

"We're expecting a better yield than last year because we had good weather conditions in most areas of the state," said Dr. Robert Metzer, a Texas A&M University cotton specialist.

Out of approximately 4.7 million acres planted with cotton, Texas farmers should reap about 4.2 million bales (one bale equals 480 pounds) by the time harvests are completed next month, he said.

That's lower than the 4.3 to 4.4 million bales estimated earlier this year, but it is still significantly higher than the 3.7 million bales harvested last year, he said.

That news is only so good. "The market price for cotton is horrible," Metzer said. "Our price is very, very depressing, and it's hurting a lot of our farmers."

Fanning agreed. This means doomsday for some farmers, especially those already in bad financial shape," he said. "They don't know what kind of credit will be available. They don't know what kind of farm program will exist next year or how their farm crop can be financed. We've seen quite a few farm sales." Dean Ethridge, a National Cotton Council economist, said U.S. prices are inflated abroad because of a strong dollar and a government loan program that establishes a floor on American cotton prices well above the world market.

"U.S. cotton is best, the most trouble-free, but we are not in business because we are in love with U.S. cotton," Nadikianda Subbian Chinnapa of Indonesia said at a recent National Cotton Council meeting in Memphis, Tenn

"If the U.S. price does not drop appreciably, we will not be able to buy U.S. cotton," said Abu Sayeed of Bangladesh, who said his mill once bought more than 75 percent of its cotton from the United States. Now, that figure is more like 10 to 15 percent.

Last year, Texas cotton drew on average 65.8 cents per pound, while in June 1985, the open-market price was closer to 49 cents, Metzer said.

"There is so much foreign competition," Metzer said. "So many textiles are being imported because of our strong dollar. There is severe competition with our domestic mills. It's all wreaking havoc with our U.S. cotton industry.'

As a balm to the troubled industry, the Texas Cotton Association advocates a loan program tied to cotton's value on the world market, TCA executive vice president Bob Poteet said.

"This would announce to the world that we are in the cotton business to compete," he says. "This would discourage expansion in other cotton-producing countries.

Fanning's association backs a market-oriented loan, too, but it wants a 55-cent-per-pound minimum attached to it.

"We oppose any farm bill that provides less income to our producers than does current bills," Fanning said. "A bunch of our people are going broke out there, and they can't afford anything

And those are just two opinions on a price-support program and farm bill under congressional debate now. An outcome could be months away, economists say. Meanwhile, the forecast Texas farmers is bleak

"We hope it will get better," Metzer says, "but economists don't see any immediate hope for increased prices.'

So much depends on foreign competition - if China, Sudan and the Soviet Union have hig crops, prices will continue to be depressed. But if the dollar loses some strength, that would make U.S. goods more competitive overseas.

"Basically, we've got a sluggish, oversupplied market," Metzer

Volunteers are important to United Way drive

By LARRY HOLLIS Staff Writer

Brian Vining and Darrell Nordeen are among a number of volunteers assisting with the coordination of the 1985 Pampa United Way drive, serving as co chairmen of the Major Firms

The two men recently visited the local Salvation Army to become better acquainted with one of the agencies assisted through the United Way fund raising efforts.

Vining, a vice president of First National Bank, also serves as counsel for the United Way fund raising campaign.

His other community activities have included being a current member, past president and director of the Top o' Texas Rodeo Association board; a past Key Club advisor for the Downtown Kiwanis Club, of which he is a current member; a past member of the Salvation Army board; a past president and board member of the Pampa Retail Merchants Association, and a past chapter chairman of the American Red Cress chapter.

Vining also is a current director and treasurer for the Gray County Mental Health and Retardation board and a member of the Pampa Chamber of Commerce Membership Committee. He also serves with the Meals on Wheel program and is a member of the Frank M. Carter Scholarship Committee.

Thanks to you it works . . . FOR ALL OF US

"The United Way effort in Pampa is a standard of excellence," Vining said.

"Through our mission, goals and objectives, the citizens, users, agencies and government develop full resources and community support to deliver efficient human service programs related to our current needs," he stated.

He and his wife Joan have a daughter, Vanessa Brooke, 5, and a son, Van, four months. His wife also serves as chairman of the United Way Publicity Committee.

Nordeen, employed with the Celanese Chemical Co. Pampa Plant in industrial relations, has a bachelor of science degree in chemistry

A member of the First Baptist Church, he serves on the Pampa United Way and the American Red Cross boards and the Clarendon College Industrial Advisory Board. He also is a member of the Panhandle Private Industry Council, the Pampa Lions Club, the Texas Association of Business and the Pampa Chamber of Commerce, serving on the Legislative Affairs Committee.

He and his wife, Becky, have two daughters, Vanessa, 10, and Becca, three months, and a son, Ryan, 7.

As a member of the United Way board of directors, "I feel a responsibility to be critical of how 'our' money is being spent by local agencies," Nordeen said. "I want to see for myself that mine and others' donations help those who rightfully need and cannot help themselves.'

The United Way agencies "are amazing!" he claimed. "They are not perfect, but they do an excellent job for the community. In Pampa there are more than 1,800 volunteers active in dozens of projects or agencies!"

Nordeen added, "I'm proud of our volunteers and our agencies! Without them Pampa would not be as good a place to live. Thank God there are givers and not just

Cell block correspondent warns of driving drunk

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I clipped this from the Twin Falls, Idaho, Times-News to send to you because I think it deserves a national audience. Idaho recently passed a driving-under-theinfluence law, and I am amazed at the number of people who have been jailed. Before this law was passed, a drunk driver killed my sister and cousin and he went free. I hope you

BITTER IN IDAHO

From a Cell Block:"

"Dear Drunk Driver: This message is coming to you from the Twin Falls County Jail. I am doing six months in here for DUI, because I didn't listen to the warning that others were trying to get across to us through TV and radio ads. I have seen people come up here because they've killed and injured people while driving drunk. It's no joke. Now the laws are cracking down on drunk drivers. It is costly, I know. I can't pay my bills while I'm here. I am losing my credit. I just got my insurance down to a low yearly rate, and now it is going right back up higher than ever. It's hard to keep a job without a driver's license.

"If you don't know what it's like to miss a special holiday, or a loved one's birthday, or, as far as that goes, a loved one, then just get in your car and drive drunk, and you'll find out fast because they will get you sooner or later. Think about the family vacation, or a new TV, or maybe a VCR, or your child's birthday present, because when you get done paying fines, lawyer fees and court costs, that's all you'll be able to think about. So if you have a problem with drunk driving, stop now, and get help." MARTY A.

Consumers can legitimately save money by installing less expensive carpet in rooms that don't get much traffic, such as a guest or even master bedroom. For the busier areas, such as the living room, halls, and stairways, however, carpet that is more durable will give more satisfactory service over the long haul.

The booklet advises against buying high bulk nylon saxonies for heavily-traveled areas. High bulk refers to carpet in which the individual strands of nylon have been heavily twisted so that air is captured between the tiny zigzags of the twist or crimp. Some retailers do not carry high bulk nylon saxonies. Ted Einstein, a carpet retailer in New York, said he regarded high bulk nylon saxonies as "deceptive because they seem to promise more than they deliver." With nylon carpet, the way the yarn is spun is more important than the thickness or height of the pile, he added. He suggested consumers look at the individual carpet strands and see how well their twist is set. If you can untwist a strand of carpet and it doesn't spring back immediately, that's a bad sign, he

When it was taken out of the water, the parts I had glued came apart. This puzzles me, because the glue container says it is water resistant. How do you explain this?

A. - Regular white glue is usually polyvinyl acetate. Regardless of what it says on the container, polyvinyl acetate is soluble in water and therefore should not be used if it is to be exposed to water. I have just checked two containers of white glue and found neither of them says anything about being water resistant. "We're not going to take that into tomorrow's game," Saberhagen said. "We left that back in Kansas City and we have to approach this game as if we were tied.

Andujar, 21-12 in 1985, called the Royals "a club you have to be careful with because they have some guys who can hit a home run," specifically Frank White and Pat Sheridan.

What about George Brett? "I don't even mention George

Brett because he's too much, like

Dwight Gooden, too much for baseball.

"I'd like to pitch George Brett just like it was softball," he said, making an underhanded motion. 'Here it is, George. Hit.' He's going to hit it anyway. He's a great hitter. He can hit a home run whenever he wants to.

"I'm just going to throw my fastball. It's my pitch. 'You got a good bat; I got a good fastball. Hit. my fastball. That's it.' Everybody. knows I'm going to throw my fastball. Everybody knows I'm not afraid of nobody.

Andujar, a switch hitter, loves the prospect of being able to bat in the World Series. Saberhagen, who yields to the designated hitter during the season and the American League playoffs, is just hoping to do something productive.

"I think it's a good idea," Andujar said. "Babe Ruth used to be a pitcher. He hit in every game he pitched and they saw Babe Ruth could hit. That's why he hit so many home runs.

"I don't think I'm going to see too many fastballs in this Series," he added. "I think they're going to hook me."

"I look forward to hitting but I'm a little nervous at the same time," Saberhagen said. "It's been a long time - high school, three or four years ago. I know I'm not going to be able to do as well as I did back then. We don't have aluminum bats and I don't think they're going to let me take one up to the plate tomorrow."

Andujar, who prides himself on his hitting, was asked which would please him more, getting a few hits or giving up just a few? "I don't get satisfaction out of good pitching, I don't get satisfaction out of good hitting," he replied. "I get satisfaction out of a 'W,' a win, That's the name of the game -

That injury was to limit Mantle's skills and cut short his career. "After I had my knee operated on in 1951." Mantle says, "I never even did do the exercises they told me to do. That's the reason I had all my other injuries. I think all my other injuries came from not taking care of that first one. It was stupid, you know. Now I look back on it, I can see how stupid it was. I didn't train like Pete Rose, Willie Mays, Hank Aaron, Stan Musial. Those guys took good care of them-selves. They played for 20 or 25 years. They got a chance to really do some-thing. If I'd have played for 25 years, I know I'd have been right up there at the top of those statistics. And it's not anybody's fault but my own.'

One of Mantle's happier World Series memories was teammate Don Larsen's perfect game in 1956 against the Brooklyn Dodgers. What people don't usually remember, Mantle says, is that he homered to drive in the first run in the 2-0 victory. And, Mantle says, "I snared a 430-foot drive to left center by Gil Hodges over my shoul-der, one of the best catches I ever made in my life."

Today Mantle is often called the greatest switch hitter ever to play the game. His career totals: 536 home separating his personal life from the pressure of trying to carry the Yan-kees into the World Series year after

"Baseball was my whole life," he says. "Anything that happened to me outside of baseball didn't matter." I don't think I ever had any pressure outside of baseball. But when I wasn't hitting, that was killing me. That would affect my outside life. I wouldn't go out to eat or anything. I couldn't stand to be in front of people. If I'd strike out four times, I'd want to get home and get in my room. Once the ball was pitched the next day, I'd have forgotten. But it was 24 hours of hell when I had a bad day."

Now Mantle counts his record 18 World Series home runs - No. 2 is Babe Ruth who hit 15 - as perhaps his top accomplishment. "And that's because I got to play with all those good teams," he says. "I can't even say that was mine, you know, because I got to play in more games than anybody."

Yet what Mantle brought to the World Series besides his ability to hit, run and catch was also crucial. And perhaps that's what helped the most. He admits: "I still can't stand to Such foreclosures, he said, could be delayed only if an appeal is sought and an appeal bond is posted.

A suit seeking payment of the overdue paychecks from May and June was filed by the USFL Players Association after an arbitrator ruled July 11 that Manges would have to make good on the payrolls.

"I'm very pleased we got what we came for," said Doug Allen, executive director of the players association.

Hardberger said the court's ruling is much more powerful than an arbitrator's decision.

Roper doesn't feel pressure

HOUSTON (AP) - Freshman quarterback Quentis Roper says he doesn't feel pressure this week as he prepares to make his first collegiate start Saturday in Rice Stadium against the Texas Aggies.

"It's just a motivation to try to keep the team going the way (Mark) Comalander had us going," Roper said.

Roper, who had been the Owls' kick return specialist and cornerback, was thrown into the battle Saturday in the first quarter and rallied the Owls to a 29-27 victory over Texas Tech.

Comalander was lost for the season in the first quarter with a separated shoulder and backup Kerry Overton also is hobbled by injuries.

Everything happened so quick, didn't have time to be nervous, Roper said. "Just trying to read the defenses was my goal.

Roper will have all week to think about facing the Aggies and he expects to improve on his performance against the Raiders, which he rated as a C-minus.

"I made a million mistakes but I'm sure the coaches will point them all out to me," said Roper.

Rice Coach Watson Brown recruited Roper as a quarterback but had temporarily shifted him to cornerback. Prior to the Texas game, Brown put Roper back in the quarterbacking depth chart.

"I felt we'd better get a third guy ready," Brown said. "I suppose in some of my wildest dreams I saw myself starting as a freshman," Roper said. "But I don't think I even looked at the defense on my first play. I just concentrated on getting the snap." Roper rushed 86 yards on 16 carries and completed six of 18 passes, including two touchdowns to Darrell Goolsby. Roper is only 5-foot-10 and 165 pounds, but he's not concerned about the size of the Aggie defensive line. 'They can hit me pretty hard if they can catch me," he said 'That's up to me and I have to take advantage of my speed to stay out of their way.

Told that he could be facing a 300-pounder in A&M defensive lineman Marshall Land, Roper asked, "How fast does he run the 40-yard dash?

Comalander's injury is the second in as many seasons. As a freshman last season. Comalander set a Southwest Conference freshman passing record of 357 vards against Houston.

Coach Brown thinks Roper has similar capabilities.

'His arm is actually stronger than Mark's," Brown said. "The first time I saw him throw the ball. I loved him. Quarterbacks in our offense have to be good athletes and he is.

"I don't feel bad playing him Saturday.'

The Owls, 3-3, will try to achieve their first three-game winning streak since the 1981 season.

CHICAGO (AP) - Chicago Coach Mike Ditka says his undefeated Bears looked like they were hibernating at times on their way to a 23-7 National Football League triumph over a scrappy Green Bay team.

"It looked like two ballgames out there tonight," Ditka said after Monday night's battle between the Central Division rivals. "It's hard to explain. Our execution wasn't very sharp."

The Bears, who turned the ball over to the Packers four times on five first-half fumbles, came alive after the break, although they scored a total of only two points with a fourth-period safety.

"Sometimes it's the way the other team plays," said Ditka. "We did some things and made some drives when we had to.'

Green Bay Coach Forrest Gregg said the Bears weren't the only ones who had exhibited somnolent tendencies at Soldier Field.

"In the second half everyone went to sleep, at least that's how it looked to me," Gregg said after the game. "We had plenty of opportunities but we kept giving record, their best start since 1942 when the team won all 11 of its regular-season games. The Bears also maintained a three-game lead over Detroit and Minnesota in the Central Division of the National Conference. Green Bay dropped to

One person who wasn't asleep was Walter Payton, who carried 25 times for 112 yards, the 66th 100-yard game for the NFL's all-time leading rusher.

Payton scored two touchdowns on runs of two and one yards behind lumbering 325-pound William "The Refrigerator" Perry, who also scored in the second period to break a 7-7 tie.

"It's great to hide behind him," Payton said. "Nobody can see you. He's so wide that nobody expects him to hit with such speed and effectiveness.'

"I want to help the team any way I can," said Perry, a rookie defensive tackle. "I'll block for Walter Payton but it was great scoring that touchdown. That was my first one since high school. I was having fun.

"I don't have a running style. I just take the ball and go straight ahead.'

Each time the Bears were in goal-line situations, the near-capacity crowd of 65,095 chanted "Perry, Perry, Perry." "I was surprised to hear that," the Clemson product said.

Perry was first used in a blocking situation last week against San Francisco, and Ditka said then that he might be used again in such situations.

"Coach said I might get to do it three or four times," Perry said. "We'll use him until they find someone bigger to put against him," Mike Ditka said.

Quarterback Lynn Dickey got the Packers on the scoreboard first with a 27-yard scoring pass to James Lofton. But the Bears dominated thereafter, particularly with a defense that intercepted four passes and recorded the fourth-quarter safety.

Packer third-string quarterback Jim Zorn was sacked in the end zone after entering the game in the fourth quarter. Zorn replaced Randy Wright, who had entered the game when Dickey left with a pulled thigh muscle.

Today is an off-day and on Wednesday they begin preparations for Sunday's game at St. Louis.

"Finally, we played some good football for the whole game," said guard John Schuhmacher, who last veek criticized the Oilers' simplified game plan.

"I believe in the philosophy and we're all on the same page. The game plan and the scheme is all right. I'm not rocking the boat.' Oiler Coach Hugh Campbell kept his Monday news conference low

"MAKE MY VILLAGE FAMOUS" — A U.S. made DC-3 military transport plane is perched on the roof of a house in the northern Greek village of Katahas in a photo taken earlier this month. It was assembled by Greek auto mechanic Anastasi Icannides, who bought the scrapped aircraft to serve as a roadside cafe and to "make my village famous."

Senate GOP leaders trying to prevent Jordan arms sale defeat

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate Republican leaders, trying to head off an embarrassing defeat for both President Reagan and Jordan's King Hussein, are scrambling to draft compromise legislation that would tie the proposed $1.9 billion sale of arms to Jordan to progress in Middle East peace talks.

Sen. Richard Lugar, R-Ind., chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, talked privately with other lawmakers on Monday, as the Pentagon made the formal notification to Congress of the sale.

"The question before us ... is to discover whether it is possible ... to tink progress toward peace with the provision of arms," Lugar said in a prepared statement.

Congressional aides said that without the concessions on progress towards Middle East negotiations, the administration's requested arms sale appeared doomed. More than 70 senators and 225 House members already oppose Reagan's plan to sell Jordan either F-20 or F-16 aircraft in addition to other sophisticated weapons. The sale would go into effect in 30 days unless Congress vetoes it.

In releasing its formal notification, the Pentagon said Reagan wants to sell 40 advanced jet fighters and 300 air-to-air missiles at a cost of $1.1 billion. In addition, the package includes improved Hawk air defense missile batteries and shoulder fired Stinger missiles for another $710 million, and 32 Bradley M-3 cavalry fighting vehicles for $75 million.

"The sale of this equipment and support will not affect the basic military balance in the region," the Pentagon said. "The proposed sale is in the best interests of both the United States and Jordan because it meets Jordan's legitimate security requirements and furthers our mutual objectives of fostering a just and lasting peace in the region."

Secretary of State George Shultz, testifying before congressional committees in recent days, also has said Hussein deserves the aid as a reward for taking the "risks of peace." Hussein has said he is prepared to negotiate with Israel, but also wants Palestinian negotiators to be present. He wants the talks held in an international forum.

But congressional critics of the deal, reflecting the views of Israeli leaders, say Hussein has yet to sit down and talk peace with Jerusalem, and until he does so, should not receive any U.S. military assistance.

military assistance.

Even so, many lawmakers who have expressed opposition to the sale have coupled their rejection with praise for Hussein, and made it clear they wish to nurture the king's participation in the peace process.

A Lugar aide said the committee chairman would attempt to tap that sentiment as he set out to shape legislation

Willie Nelson said planning second Farm Aid concert

DALLAS (AP) — Officials with the firm that handled publicity for a recent "Farm Aid" concert confirmed Monday that a second concert to provide financial aid for the nation's farmers is planned for next June 1 in New York City.

The word wasn't scheduled to go out yet, they said, but the Des Moines Register reported in a copyright story Sunday that Willie Nelson and Merle Haggard would be among top-name performers participating in a Farm Aid concert at Yankee Stadium next summer.

Nelson, who organized the first event, broke the news prematurely, said Jim Nicholls, executive vice president at PLC, the advertising agency that handles Farm Aid events.

"It wasn't due to be released because they haven't tied down the

Main player in landmark court case is in jail again

CHICAGO (AP) — Some people who know Danny Escobedo say he's shrewd, a manipulator of a legal system that "isn't working right." A prosecutor, citing a landmark Supreme Court ruling 21 years ago overturning Escobedo's murder conviction, calls him lucky. Now his luck has turned, and he's in jail again.

"Every time he gets into trouble he gets out of it," said Nicole Zabloudil, whose father was the victim of the 1960 shooting for which Escobedo, her uncle, was convicted.

The 47-year-old Escobedo has at least 16 other arrests on his record, according to prosecutor Wayne Meyer, who said most of the cases ended in acquittal or dismissal.

"He is one of the luckiest criminals I have run across in 10 years of prosecution," said Meyer, a Cook County assistant state's attorney handling the case for which Escobedo is being held in the Cook County Jail.

Escobedo was due for arraignment today on two counts of attempted murder and other offenses in a shooting last month at a South Side tavern.

"His cell has a revolving door on it," Mrs. Zabloudil complained. "The system isn't working right."

Escobedo had served four years of a 20-year prison sentence for murder when, in 1964, the Supreme Court overturned his conviction in a decision that established the right of a suspect to have an attorney present while being questioned by police.

The September shooting occurred while Escobedo was free on $50,000 bond while appealing his 1984 conviction and 12-year prison sentence for taking indecent liberties with a 12-year-old girl. He has also served eight years on a narcotics conviction.

John Wesley, Escobedo's public defender in the attempted murder case, said Escobedo did not want to be interviewed.

"We're just trying to keep a low profile," Wesley said.

In the past, Escobedo has complained that since the 1964 ruling, police have watched his every move.

"There's no doubt they'd like to get him," said Marshall Schwarzbach, a lawyer who has represented Escobedo in the past. Police still bristle at Escobedo's

Police still bristle at Escobedo's name, Schwarzbach said, adding that some judges have admitted privately that they were embarrassed by the weakness of some cases against him.

"The police see the court case as a challenge to their authority," said Schwarzbach. "Everybody knows he was being picked on." "That's a lot of bull," countered

"That's a lot of bull," countered Meyer, the prosecutor. "Nobody's out to get Danny Escobedo. We've got better things to do."

In fact, said Meyer, Escobedo's notoriety sometimes works in his favor.

"I think that some people in the system, even judges and prosecutors, are intimidated by him and his name because of his case in the '60s," he said.

On the wall of the prosecutor's office is a mug shot of Escobedo on which Meyer has written, "Welcome Home, Danny," meaning welcome back to prison.

"I thought he'd be in for at least six years" on the indecent liberties conviction, said Meyer.

According to police records, Escobedo was first incarcerated in 1953, when, at age 16, he was sent to a juvenile facility for nine months in a theft case.

He was fined $10 and assessed court costs after being convicted of theft in March 1957 and received two years' probation in 1958 for assault with a deadly weapon.

The case that propelled him into the legal limelight went to trial in 1960, when he was convicted of murder in the shooting death of Manuel Valtierra, Mrs. Zabloudil's father.

while in police custody. Escobedo, then 22, incriminated himself in a confrontation with a co-defendant. His statements came after he was refused permission to see his attorney. When the case went to court, Escobedo sought to suppress those statements, but was refused.

In a 5-4 ruling, the Supreme Court said the statements couldn't be used as evidence because they were obtained without an attorney present after Escobedo had requested one, violating his 6th Amendment right to legal assistance. The ruling came two years before the court's Miranda decision, which established that police must inform defendants of their rights.

Escobedo's conviction was overturned and he went free, prosecutors saying they didn't have a case without his statements.

Three more arrests followed in quick succession: in April 1965, on a charge of selling drugs; in March 1966, on a weapons charge; and in November 1966, on a burglary charge. In each case, prosecutors were unable to make the charge stick, and Escobedo went free.

But in 1967, Escobedo was convicted of selling heroin. He served eight years of a 22-year sentence in federal prisons and was paroled in 1975. After three more years, Escobedo was released from parole because of good behavior.

Escobedo has become a celebrity of sorts in his largely Hispanic, South Side neighborhood, according to another niece, Bonita Fawbush, who said he has attracted a following among neighborhood youths.

"He can talk them into doing anything," she said. Mrs. Zabloudil said she fears

Mrs. Zabloudil said she fears he's had the same kind of success in the legal system, partly by keeping quiet and acting "very meek."

"Because of his shrewdness and his ability to manipulate people, he's able to make up alibis and make them stick," she said.
