Top O' Texas women featured

Included in today's Pampa News is a special section, "Top O' Texas Women," a collection of 23 features about Pampa and Panhandle area women.

Many area women are often publicized in the pages of The Pampa News, but for this special section we attempted to ferret out some of the lesser known ladies of our area — some who quietly contribute much, but of vhom we hear so little.

We believe that our readers will be as intrigued with this series of features on women from all walks of life as we were when we interviewed and wrote about

Water plan-

A vital need or 'pork barrel heaven'?

AUSTIN (AP) - Voters will decide Nov. 5 on a $1.43 billion water development and conservation plan that backers call vital to the future of the state but which one state senator brand a 'pork-barrel heaven for the water hustlers.

The plan — on the ballot as Amendments 1 and 2, was a major wrangle in the 1985 Legislature. Lawmakers negotiated and debated the proposal for much of their 140-day session before finally sending the issue to voters.

Legislative leaders and the governor are behind it. A Gulf Coast senator and some Related stories, Page five environmentalists oppose it. Others, including the Sierra Club, have remained neutral.

"There's some good in it," said Howard Saxion, chairman of the Sierra Club's Texas chapter.

Gov. Mark White has campaigned across the state for the plan.

"We can no longer be a vibrant state if we don't have adequate water resources. It is vital to the future of Texas," he insists.

Sen. Carlos Truan, D-Corpus Christi, a leading spokesman for opponents, argues that the plan lacks adequate controls for financial and environmental protection.

"In short, it would make pork-barrel heaven for the water hustlers and the bond hustlers every time the Legislature convenes," he says.

Backers say they are raising more than $500,000 to campaign for the plan's approval. Voter approval isn't a sure thing.

In 1969, voters rejected a $3.5 billion water financing program. part of which included a massive irrigation network designed to divert water from the Mississippi River to Texas. In 1981, voters rejected a proposal to dedicate half of all future state government surpluses to a water trust fund. This year, voters will analyze a two-part plan.

Amendment 1 would authorize issuance of $980 million in bonds for construction of reservoirs, pipelines, treatment plants and flood-control projects statewide. It would create a $250 million state insurance fund to guarantee water bonds issued by cities and other local government units, enabling the local governments to

FERC judge rules against two more producers

By LARRY HOLLIS Staff Writer

Matters in the on-going oil and gas controversies in the Panhandle Field are at another unsettled stage at both federal and state evels, with actions and decisions vet to be made

At the federal level, briefs are being prepared for the Phase 2 proceedings in which penalties and other assessments are being considered against 35 independent oil operators found guilty of producing gas belonging to Dorchester Gas Producing Company.

But that number may increase to 37 -- all of the original defendants following a recent decision by Federal Administrative Judge Brenda Murray

Ruling in the action brought before the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission by Dorchester, Judge Murray about two weeks ago issued a recommended decision against J. B. Watkins and Meyer Farms, Inc.,

both of Borger The judge ruled they also were guilty of illegally producing and selling natural gas belonging to Dorchester

The two independents had been tentatively exempted from Judge Murray's previous decision against the 35 other independents, though she had recommended FERC conduct further studies of their operations.

She had indicated initial evidence against the two firms was insufficient. But after FERC conducted other tests on the two wells, the judge has ruled they also have been tapping into natural gas reserves to which Dorchester has the rights.

Judge Murray now includes them under her findings that most of the gas being produced by the independents involved in the hearings is not "casinghead gas," gas produced as a natural by-product of oil production.

The judge ruled the evidence indicates most of the gas production from the oil wells on the Dorchester lease area instead is natural gas, not casinghead gas to which the independents can claim

FERC information specialist Tamara Allen - Young reported Friday that Judge Murray has also recommended that Watkins and Meyers be included in the Phase 2 proceedings now underway. Young said the FERC commissioners still will have to rule on Judge Murray's recommendation against the two Borger producers. She said she hasn't heard when the commissioners will act on the recommended decision

The final action will await any filings of motion for reconsideration of the judge's rulings or the filing of any appeals, she noted. The Phase 2 hearing is set for April 1. In the past two months, the parties have been preparing their In September considerations included requests for the production of documents. data requests and requests for October has been concerned with responses and interrogatories, Young reported. She said briefs from the two parties are due later this month

Depositions are due to be taken in December. The direct case is set to begin Feb. 11, with the rebuttal case on March 11 and the surrebuttal case on March 25.

Young said the judge has said the parties may reach a settlement among themselves, if they choose to do so. But if no settlement is reached at the judge's approval, the hearing will commence April 1.

In the state, issues revolve around the production of liquid hydrocarbons — white oil — from the use of low temperature extraction units (LTX units).

Friday afternoon Texas Railroad Commission information specialist E. Ray Grasshoff said both sides were considering appeals of the Oct. 9 decision by 250th State District Judge Harley Clark in

Grasshoff said he wasn't aware of any appeals being filed yet, but he expected the decision will be appealed by both parties on both

He said the RRC has taken no action about making an appeal of the decision

The judge ruled a May order leading to the shutdown of 271 white oil wells was not valid because of procedural technicalities. Judge Clark said the commission had treated the matter as a contested case instead of a rulemaking case. He indicated the commission could not use the order to shut down the wells

But the judge also ruled white oil was not crude oil and denied a request by independents for an injunction against the commission's other proceedings to shut down the wells. The judge indicated the RRC has other authority and regulations outside the order which it could use to move against the oil wells

Following the judge's intended decision in September that he would declare the order null and void, the commission went ahead with its actions against the white oil wells, citing other regulations.

Grasshoff said that while the commission has not indicated it would appeal Judge Clark's decision, he understood "some companies in support of the commission's position are thinking See OIL, Page three

Pampa couple sounds 'Midnight Cry'

By CATHY SPAULDING Staff Writer

Sam and Grace Godwin are sounding The Midnight Cry and they hope others are listening. The Midnight Cry is a quarterly "Good Newsletter." The Godwins, both ministers affiliated with the Foursquare Gospel Church, working alone and on their own initiative, publish and mail the newsletter from their home on east Browning Street.

They send out about 500 copies of the eight-page pamphlet to family, friends and other interested parties across the country

"We're not with a church right now, so we felt it would be a good outlet for our ministry," Sam Godwin said. "My wife does the addressing: the business end of

"He does the writing," she interjected.

In each issue, Sam writes a 'sermon' or devotional dealing with such topics as "God's Insurance Policy," the way to salvation, Mothers Day and current issues. He also throws in pages of poems, jokes, slogans, cartoons and Bible verses in an effort to share "the true, the good and the beautiful.

One topic he does not include in paper is a request for funds. We don't charge for it," he said. "Although we do get love offerings," she noted "But they're mostly from friends."

They also don't delve into the doctrines or teachings of Christian denominations, not even their own.

'We never preach doctrine."

he said. "We're trying to lift up the Lord. We're loyal to our church, but we don't use sectarian or denominational themes.

Grace adds: "We try to be open minded.' 'My basic message is that it is not God's will for men to be lost,' he explained. "He has power to lift them up and get them out of

"We believe the born-again experience happens and people have a change of heart, a change of lifestyle," he explained.

'We both have experienced it,'' she said. 'We started out about two years ago with 100 copies, so our mailing list is growing." Sam Godwin said, pointing out that the pamphlet has grown from four to eight pages.

But the paper's growth has had its drawbacks. Godwin started the publication as a monthly, but time spent on writing and his job as Pampa Middle School custodian forced him to put the paper out less often: quarterly. So far, he has put out about 15-18

"If I ever get to retire, I'd like to put it out once a month again,' he said. "I'd like to have more

Sam guesses that each issue takes about 48 hours of work. "I don't try to meet a deadline: just work an hour or two now and then," he explained. His evening job at the middle school takes up most of his time. He spends most of that job alone, cleaning the deserted halls after the pupils go home. But he admits he doesn't find much inspiration on the job: "I have to keep my mind on my work.

Godwins work on next issue of The Midnight Cry

"Once in a while, I'll get a thought or an inspiration, and I'd iot it down and put it in a box," he said, adding that he ends up tossing a lot of the "thoughts"

"My observation is that a lot of religious publications are trite and boring," he observed. "I try to print the message of the Lord in a palatable form

The Godwins would like more time to devote to the paper, but that doesn't dampen their

"We just enjoy sharing things we have experienced," she said. "If something has been a blessing to us, maybe it would be a blessing for someone else.'

Tropical storm creeps closer to Texas coast

HOUSTON (AP) - Tropical storm Juan is creeping closer to the Texas coastline but weather forecasters Saturday predicted the late-season storm would bring only heavy rains and gusty winds to

Jim Nelson, meterologist at the National Weather Service Center in Galveston, said Juan is moving west "slow and erratically" at about 5 mph in the Gulf of Mexico. 'It's hard to tell how much rain it will bring once it hits land," Nelson 'They're very said. unpredictable. But Gil Clark, a specialist with the National Hurricane Center in Coral Gables, Fla., still cautioned that Juan could be nasty "It could bring some gale-force winds to the Texas coast by (Saturday night) that would cause some problems with beach erosion and rain." Clark said In an advisory at noon Saturday the hurricane center issued a gale watch from Brownsville, Texas, to the mouth of the Mississippi River. It also advised all small craft from Apalachicola, Fla., to Brownsville to remain in port. Officials in Brownsville said they had taken a few precautions due to the tropical storm

'We closed two beaches because the tide is up to the sand," said Darla Peters, dispatcher for the Cameron County Sheriff's Department. "We're warning the swimmers not to swim.

The two beaches, Andy Boyie and Coca Chica, are on either side of the ship channel in Brownsville,

Juan, the 10th named storm of the 1985 Atlantic hurricane season, developed in the western Gulf of Mexico several hundred miles off

Texas on Saturday. About mid-day, it was located 325 miles southeast of Brownsville, the hurricane center reported.

The storm's maximum sustained winds were around 45 mph with squalls in excess of 50 mph north of its center, forecasters said Clark said it was unlikely that Juan would develop into a hurricane.

'It doesn't have the characterisics of a developing hurricane," he explained. "The big problem right now is marine interests

In 1979, a tropical storm caused

50 inches of rain to fall in Alvin near Houston Clark said tropical storms this time of year are more common in the north and northeast than off the Texas and Mexico coasts.

Dredge material laced with arsenic, nickel and mercury spilled into bay waters at the Aransas National Wildlife Refuge in July from a broken U.S. Army Corps of Engineers dike at the refuge.

The refuge is the winter home of the nation's main flock of whooping crane from the Texas-Canada flock has already appeared at the refuge, and the remaining birds are expected in the next several weeks.

U.S. Fish and Wildlife biologists are concerned that the toxic elements will enter the whoopers' food chain as they feed on blue crab, clams and other marine animals in the bay system.

USFW biologists want the Corps to build a new habitat to compensate for the loss of the bay bottom — buried under six to 10 inches of the silty dredge material.

A Corps spokesman in Galveston told the Corpus Christi Caller-Times that the Corps has offered to clean up the dredge material. Clean up is all the Corps is authorized to do under the Rivers and Harbors Act, he said.

But the USFW has rejected that offer because they say dredging up the material will only cause more

"It's the type of thing that if this happened to a private company it might involve a lawsuit. But as federal agencies, we can't do that," said Tom Stehn, biologist for the wildlife refuge.

The dike on Rattlesnake Island in Ayers Bay, a Corps dredge disposal island, broke the night of July 2 and the break was detected the next day.

Meanwhile, an undetermined amount of spoil material was pumped onto the island The dike wasn't repaired until September, allowing more dredge material from the island to wash into the bay, USFW officials said. "Our frustration is that it wasn't immediately repaired. We knew there were things on that island that we didn't want to get out, said Gerry Jackson, a USFW environmental specialist.

Corps spokesman Ed White said the repair delay came because the dredge material used to patch it had to dry

USFW officials say they also warned the Corps that the dike. made out of spoil material from previous dredging operations, was not strong enough. White said the Corps was also concerned.

'There's been a mutual concern that a break could occur, but it's not visible until it happens," he

Sediment samples taken from the damaged area show levels of arsenic, mercury and nickel that far exceed proposed Environmental Protection Agency standards for sediment, the USFW

Mercury levels of one sample showed 4.68 parts per million (ppm), while the proposed EPA standards set a limit of 1 ppm.

All the metals found in the dredge are bio-cumulative, meaning they are passed from one organism to the next up the ladder of the food chain.

The Corps said it is unknown what effect the spill will have on whoopers. "Fish and Wildlife is saying there are high levels of metals there, and we're saying we'll clean them up and put them back in the disposal area." White said

Computer dependence scary

Readers of this column more than likely have noticed that I've taken two swipes at the almighty computer in the past two weeks. First it was the student loan folks in Harrisburg, Pa., demanding to know my new address in Pampa when all they had to do was look at the outside of the envelope in which they mailed their request to me. Then it was the Texas Department of Public Safety computer in Austin, adding an extra letter to my last name, when they had the correct spelling on my old drivers license and my application form, and refusing to change it until I could provide proof that I know how to spell my own last name.

(An update for those interested in following the Mr. Pinkhamm saga: a clerk in the local DPS office apparently told an interested party that I signed my name with two letter m's on the application form. This I find hard to believe for several reasons.

One, I checked the temporary license the DPS folks gave me and the clerk has the name spelled correctly there. Two, the signature on my incorrect permanent license certainly looks to me like it's spelled correctly, although I'll admit my handwriting's not the best. Three, I've been spelling my name for about a quarter - century now and it probably would take a lot of effort on my part to deliberately spell it

Some readers also will be interested to know I have obtained a copy of my birth certificate from the State of New Jersey and hope to discover this week if the DPS finds it acceptable - even if it is "Made in New Jersey.")

One might easily get the idea that I'm some kind of reactionary nut, opposed to all new technology. Well, I'm not. Computers and the like have greatly improved the quality of life for the handicapped

As much as I complain about the computer terminal I'm typing this column on — fellow office - workers can testify to my banging on the side of the darn thing when the entire screen goes green, taking a whole story with it - it's still a darned sight better than the old manual typewriter I had to churn things out on when I was news editor at a country weekly in Kansas.

But, at the risk of coming down too hard on the poor computer — I know I've been kind of rough on it in recent weeks - I would like to address one more potential technological error that concerns me. The difference is this one hasn't happened yet, and I pray every day

The year was 1982, the height of the nuclear freeze movement in this country, and the college newspaper for which I was working sent me to Akron, Ohio, to cover a "guns or butter conference, addressing as many subjects as one can think of related to the prospect of nuclear war. Speakers ranged from high - up government officials to the ultra - pacifist American Friends Service Committee, a unit of the Quaker church.

One speaker was Herbert Scoville, a former deputy director of the CIA, who made a very interesting point, and one that, for me, cast an entirely new and different light on the arms race.

Scoville pointed out that the nuclear capabilities of both superpowers have grown increasingly efficient, to the point where missiles can reach their targets far more quickly than they could, say, 10 years earlier. Although, this increased efficiency has been the goal of many in the nuclear weapons industry, Scoville described the strain it puts on the computerized American and Russian early

The warning systems, in turn, are required to identify potential incoming missiles more quickly, increasing the risk of mistaking some other type of flying object for a warhead. Scoville recalled an episode during the Carter administration when American warning systems put our nuclear forces on full alert after mistaking a flock of geese for a more dangerous projectile.

Then the speaker made his point. 'Do we really want the future of our world in the hands of a Russian computer?" he asked. Indeed. There have probably been other near - misses by our own warning systems that have been covered up successfully by the boys in Washington. But Moscow makes our CIA look like an open society, so think of the near - misses that have probably occurred there and never been known to anyone but a select few Politburo members.

The prospect of our security depending on how well the Russians build computers is really a terrifying thought. We're talking about a country that can't keep its own people well - supplied with bread and toilet paper, despite being a country filled with lush forests and wheatfields.

I've always believed, proudly, that our free enterprise system allows and encourages us to be more technologically advanced than the rigidly government - controlled Russian society. But even if our nuclear warning computers, or theirs, make one mistake in a million, it only takes one time to set off a deadly nuclear exchange. There probably won't be a second chance, flock of geese or not.

spokesman for the independents, urged the royalty owners about two months ago to send in letters to the commission. He has claimed that many firms have been producing liquid hydrocarbon products at their plants and yet avoiding paying any royalty payments or taxes on that production.

Slover said last week he was aware of a number of letters that had been sent to the commission. Grasshoff, however, said he was not aware of the letters, though he admitted they could have been received without his knowing of it.

Grasshoff said the RRC takes the position that royalty agreements are private contracts between the owners and the companies, with the payment agreements made between them through their own arrangements.

Accordingly, anything the commission does is designed not to impinge on those private contracts,

Slover, however, has cited RRC regulations he claims requires that liquid hydrocarbon separation facilities be operated on the lease site to account for production for royalties and tax purposes. He has urged the commission to enforce those regulations.

APPLYING THE GOLDEN RULE

"All things therefore whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, even so do ye also unto them: for this is the law and the prophets" (Matthew 7:12.) Certainly, this has properly been called "the golden rule." As Jesus said, it summed up the teaching of the law and the prophets concern-ing dealing with one's fellowman. What was true under the law of Moses is also true under the law of Christ, the gospel in this regard.

It is interesting to note that Jesus did NOT say, "All things whatsoever that men DO unto you, even so do ye also unto them". Most of us I imagine, would be most happy to REPAY kind nesses done unto us, and, many times we have the attitude, "When he does something for me, THEN I will do something for him." But Jesus said, "All things therefore whatenever we "All things therefore whatsoever ye WOULD that men should do unto you, even so do ye also unto them:" In other words, we are not to wait until the other person does for us before we do something for them. We are to treat other people as we would want to be treated. Think of how many offences and hurts would be avoided if this rule were followed by us all. In fact. it would do away with all wars, murders, thefts, and there would be no need even for law enforcement of any kind. But the rule followed by most is:
"Do unto others anything which will benefit you, and do it quickly while you have the chance." Or, get what you can, anyway you can, from anyone you can.

I doubt that we could find a person who didn't like to be treated with kindness. Kindness is one of the fruits of the Spirit listed by Paul in Galatians 5:22. I am sure that kindness is one of the things Jesus had in mind when he gave the exhortation in Matthew 7:12. When Jesus was asked which was the great commandment of the law, He replied, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all they soul, and with all thy mind. This is the great and first commandment. And a second like unto it is this, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as theyself" (Matthew 22:37-39.)

EVER STRIVING FOR TOP O' TEXAS TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Benefits wouldn't equal liberty lost

Eliminating waste and fraud in public spending. It's a worthy goal, isn't it? Of course. But does that justify using any means at the government's disposal. Definitely not.

These questions are raised by a Reagan administration plan that would expand the government's use of confidenital tax data and give federal agencies direct access to information about the private insurance coverage of everyone in the United States.

The goal is worthy. The plan would help the agencies weed out people whose income disqualifies them from federal freebies. The governemt would be able to make quick distinctions. State governments, too, would be able to tap into the data bank to compile dossiers on welfare recipients.

The budget office, which is putting finishing touches on the plan, estimates that the new rules will save federal and state governments about $300 million a year in misspent monies.

Putting that cost in terms of individual liberty lost, however, means it will cost far more than it will save.

Government as an entity should have no more right to personal information about its citizens than any one of those citizens. Unfortunately, because of this country's tax system, the federal government is able to amass a wealth of personal information from tax returns.

Much of that information, innocuous on its face, can on occasions be used to incriminate the taxpayer or his associates.

A case can be made that somebody who applies for government "benefits" becomes a government employee, or someone who otherwise seeks some sort of monetary gain from government legitimately becomes subject to inquiries that may involve loss of certain kinds of privacy.

proposed however goes far beyond any The syste such discreet inquiry. It would put information on virtually everybody into government data banks—just in case they ever asked for something from the government. The potential for abuse should be obvious.

In recent years, Congress has gradually increased the amount of tax information that can be shared among government agencies. This latest proposal is just one more attempt to expand this information sharing.

Adding private insurance information to the government's data bank makes this expansion proposal all the worse. Private insurance agreements are just that- private. They are not the business of your neighbors, nor should they be the business of

The shared-information proposal should come before Congress later this month or early next year. It deserves to be sent packing immediately.

They don't speak for me

"And that's the way it is," as the major network news winds up its broadcast, America sits down to dinner knowing blacks are against the death penalty, blacks favor busing, blacks support racial quotas, and - under the Reagan administration - blacks are going backwards. And the reason Americans are so sure of all this? Why, because the media picked out a balck representative and asked, "What do black people

It really makes you wonder. Does the media put House Speaker Tip O'Neill on the airwaves to pontificate on how white people think? No! They don't even ask Reagan how white people think and he led an unprecedented 49-state electoral sweep in 1984. Were a reporter to ask Reagan, "How do white people think?" He would be reprimanded, if not fired, for asking foolish, childish questions. But somehow that same intellectual reasoning and respect is not extended to blacks

It took the general public a while to learn that all black people don't look alike. The task that faces our modern-day media is to get over the myth that all blacks think alike and can have their views represented by a "spokesman"- like Jesse Jackson, Benjamin Hooks, or some baseball player. Help's on the way. The Washington Post recently reported on a survey by Linda Lichter, co-director of the Center for Media and Public Affairs.

The survey polled a random sample of 600 blacks on several questions:

-Should minorities receive preferential treatment to make up for past discrimination? Seventy-seven percent of black leaders said yes; the same percentage of the black public said no.

-The death penalty for murderers was favored by 55 percent of blacks; only 33 percent of black leaders" favored capital punishment.

-Sixty-eight percent of black leaders approved of forced school busing for racial balance; 53 percent of the black citizenry disapproved.

Other questions were asked of the 105 leaders of the NAACP, National Urban League, Southern Christian Leadership Conference, Operation PUSH, National Conference of Black Mayors, and Congressional Black Caucus. Their responses routinely differed -significantly - from that of the black public. For the media to listen to the self-serving views of the few, and pass those opinions off as THE black view, is nothing less than an insult, deserving of some effort to set the record straight.

But that's not the end to racial insults. When Benjamin Hooks, executive director of the NAACP, was informed of the results of the poll he said he "distrusted" the survey. Hooks said that "in these kinds of public opinion polls, the average man on the street, white or black, wants to appear fair. He responds to what the question says. Black leaders are more likely to respond to what the question means." A charitable interpretation of Hooks' statement is that black people don't know what the questions mean and black leaders have to do the thinking. That's a pretty bold supposition with fairly clear racial connotations.

Lest we leave the impression that the media insults ALL black people, let's make it clear that they are somewhat selective. When Jesse Jackson feeds the reporters a line like "We're going from the outhouse to the White House," or "From disgrace to amazing grace," or some such inane rhyming preachment, there's never a reportorial query, such as "What does that mean?" But let Dr. Thomas Sowell or me say, "Our investigations show the minimum wage has a devastating employment effect on black youth,' and media people ask all kinds of searching statistical and theoretical questions about our evidence. In fact, they even dig into our personal, financial, and educationl backgrounds, the way they dig at the president and other leaders who dispute the views of the black "leadership."

In other words, the media treat us just like white people. It would be nice if they'd extend that same 'respect'' to black people in general.

Today in History

Today is Sunday, Oct. 27, the 300th day of 1985. There are 65 days left in the year. The entire country goes back to Standard Time.

Today's highlight in history: On Oct. 27, 1858, the 26th president of the United States, Theodore Roosevelt, was born in New York City.

On this date: Ten years ago: The Puerto Rican nationalist group FALN said it was behind nine bomb blasts at government buildings, corporate offices and banks in New York, Washington and Chicago.

Five years ago: Thirty American prisoners pardoned by Fidel Castro on charges that included hijacking and drug-smuggling left Cuba and were flown to the United States.

One year ago: An infant known publicly only as "Baby Fae" was reported in "remarkably stable condition" at the Loma Linda University Medical Center in California, one day after her own underdeveloped heart was replaced with the heart of a baboon.

Lewis Grizzard

He's not a raving beauty

Editor's Note: Lewis Grizzard, who recently underwent heart surgery, will resume writing his columns next week. This is the final excerpt from his new book, "Shoot Low, Boys - They're Ridin' Shetland Ponies.'

America and most of the civilized world has a fascination with health and beauty. When was the last time you saw a billboard or a television commercial featuring a fat, ugly person? For those of us not blessed with an attractive countenance, these can be very trying times.

I've had this problem for years. In fact, when I was born, they called in a vet. My mother was caught two days later in the nursery trying to switch my ID bracelet with that of another child. As I was growing up, she tried the old trick of tying a pork chop around my neck so the dogs would play with me. The dogs preferred to dig for turnips in the garden instead.

When my sight started failing in grammar school and I had to get glasses, that didn't help my looks much either. My classmates always called me "D.U." That stood for "double ugly.

'Beauty is only skin deep,'' I would argue. "Yeah," they would reply, "but ugly goes clear to the bone.

In the seventh grade we had a Halloween masquerade party at school. The scariest costumes were awarded prizes. The kid who placed first went as me.

Finally in high school my looks became an asset. I was asked to join the Future Farmers of America because they needed a scarecrow for the

"Give it to me straight," I said.

"You're wasting your time. It would take you six months just to get into shape to take your 'before' picture.'

Not long ago I was showing a friend some of my childhood pictures. "You looked like that?" the friend said.

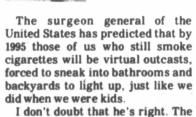

'That's the way I looked.'"

Smokers' days are numbered

I don't doubt that he's right. The trend is unmistakably in that direction. Many states have already passed anti-smoking laws. Some require so-called "public places" such as restaurants to have no-smoking areas. Others' force private employers to have smoking and non-smoking areas in the workplace. Florida has passed a new law that, as I understand it, prohibits smoking everywhere unless there is a sign saying it's okay to light up.

Being a confirmed smoker for more years than I care to count, I have mixed emotions about all this.

I agree that in some circumstance those of us who still puff away violate the rights of non-smokers when we force them to endure the cloudy haze we emit.

But I think in other instances they violate our rights by forcing us to snuff out our butts.

For example, in public elevators where there is no escape, non-smokers should have the right to be free from our smelly smoke. Likewise, a non-smoker has every right to ban smoking in his office or place of business. If the smokers don't like it, they don't have to go

By the same token, the smoker has ever right to light up in his home, office or place of business. If the non-smokers don't like it, they have the same freedom to go elsewhere.

What bothers me are definitions of "public place" embodied in the state laws being passed and their intrusion into the rights of private citizens to run their workplaces the way they see fit.

If a restaurant owner chooses to have non-smoking areas, or to ban all smoking, that is his right. But to call his establishment a "public place" and require him to conform to certain rules smacks of dictatorship. He should be free to operate his business any way he wants to and those who don't like it, smokers and non-smokers alike, are free to stay away.

Rules for smoking in the workplace are equally ridiculous. Non-smokers do not have to accept employment in places where smoking is allowed and smokers do not have to accept employment in places where it is prohibited. The decision on smoking properly belongs to the guy who owns the business. In our workplace, the newsroom, we have six smokers and three non-smokers. Dee Dee Laramore and Cathy Spaulding, whose desks are in close proximity of the smokers, suffer (I suppose) in silence. L.D. Strate's sports desk is across the room from the rest of us. so he doesn't get the full blast of our smoke. Or at least he's never said anything about it. But I live in dread that as people come and go we will someday wind up with a newsroom where the non-smokers are in the large majority and will demand that we stop snuff 'em out. I think I have discovered a way of preventing that. The next time I have to advertise a job opening, I think I'll say "Smokers only need

But come 1995, that will probably be against the law. For all I know, it may be already.

In regard to the take-home police cars, I feel I represent at least 35 working people who desperately depend on these officers.

As supervisor for a local convenience store chain, I deal very closely with the police department. I'm proud to say if we make a call there is a police car in front of the store within minutes, sometimes seconds. Many times these were off-duty officers. Just the car pulling up to the store was a relief to the clerk

The cars driving by the stores or an occasional officer and his family stopping to shop is reassuring to the clerk and a warning to anyone considering trying something that they made be caught. The idea that half as many cars will be making passes in front of the stores means there is more opportunity for trouble.

Trouble in a convenience store can range from harrassment to shoplifting to robbery or the injury of a clerk or customer. If any one of these acts can be prevented, it's worth my tax dollar.

As far as entertainment, the game machines are for public use and any of the public is invited to play them at anytime.

Some of the remarks in another letter pertaining to "Allsups" were uncalled for. I feel my employees are there to do they job they were hired for. Most of us are supporting families as well as ourselves and deserve the respect of any working person. We're not out there "to be picked up.

The management is at all times working for the community. We encourage community involvement as members of the Chamber of

Our thanks to the police department for a job well done and a plea to our city representatives for the equipment to do the job more efficiently.

HEIDI TALLY Allsup Convenience Stores

Police deserve more

To whom it may concern,

Since so many of the citizens of Pampa are voicing their opinion of Mr. Hart's patrol car decision, I decided to voice mine.

I for one felt much safer whenever I saw a police car, whether driving down the street, parked at a grocery store, or, yes, even parked in an Allsups parking lot. At least it was someone who could give you directions, help you get the key you locked in your car, or maybe even stop someone from stealing your car or from robbing that Allsups

Why should a patrolman whose gross monthly income is less than $1,400 spend what little extra (ha) they have on a radio to help protect the people who are too cheap to provide a car and gas and maintenance for him in the first place? Why should he be expected to donate an extra 10-15 hours a week without pay, without a car, to keep you or your family from being assaulted, robbed or

I don't see too many citizens of Pampa even stopping to help an older lady with groceries getting into her car. Heaven forbid! You might be late for a meeting.

Did it ever occur to you that a patrolman may have a family (you know the kind, wife, 2 kids, maybe 3) with whom he'd love to go on a picnic or an all-day excursion, or just come home to after a hard day at work, but can't because the maniac who lives 2 blocks over has decided to eliminate his neighborhood?

Granted, I'm getting a little out of hand here, but why should they? You don;t even care enough about them to pay them a decent wage. An Allsups manager doesn't make a whole lot less than a police officer and all we do is make sure you have the cigarettes you want at 2:30 in the morning. Or the beer and the sack at 2:30 in the afteroon (The sack so your boss or preacher can't see, as we've been told so many times) Just think, they are putting their life on the line for $175 more a month than us. And you have the nerve to make remarks about them going into an Allsups to pick us up.

Second, if we had near as many polic officers trying to pick us up as we did the other fine upstanding businessmen, there were would a patrol car in the parking lot 24 hours a day.

The time a police officer spends in our stores, whether he's drinking coffee, talking to us, or whatever, is one less time we have to worry about whether the next customer is going to steal someting or try to rob us. It's one less time we have to get hassled because we carded your seventeen-year-old, or have to worry about the drunk who just stumbled in. Did it ever occur to you a robbery could happen while a customer was in the store? Maybe you even.

The whole point of this letter is, I appreciate the police department coming into an Allsups Store. He's extra protection for us. He (or she) gets their coffee, a person to talk to, before they start driving down the alley behind your house to porotect you. By the way, the police officers don't have to pay for their coffee in our stores. It's our way of saying thanks for being there whne we needed them.

Have you ever even had the decency to wave, or smile, as they pass for protecting you?

RENAE HUGHES

Who will pay the bills

Do you want your taxes to get higher? As landowners, you are responsible for the financial burdens dealing with the white gas issue as well as the royalty owners. Someone has to pick up the bill. As royalty owners and land owners, we are losing our rights as American citizens to pursue the American dream on our own land. Are we fighting the battle of the Alamo in 1985? Are we re-enacting the struggle and transgressions of Santa Anna upon our forefathers in our early heritage through Phillips Petroleum Company Natural Gas Pipe Line, Dorchester and FERC verses the land and royalty owner? We are fighting as powerful an adversary as our forefathers fought Santa Anna for their rights. Are we going to allow our powerful adversaries to massacre the landowners heritage as Santa Anna did our forefathers? We cannot allow Phillips Petroleum Company and other major companies to make a mockery of our heritage that was so hard-earned.

As a result of the conspiracy, your taxes are getting higher. Do you want this rising tax rate to keep increasing? The independent oil producers and royalty owners are paying an estimated tax dollar value from 1984 on only and casinghead gas leases in Carson County Appriasal District of $2,411,469. The major producing companies paid an estimated value of $561,145.

The breakdown for the independent school districts on tax dollars comparing the independent oil producers and the major oil companies for 1984

Panhandle ISD: Independent value, $114,143,040; Majors' value, $18,601,040.

White Deer ISD: Independent value, $200,073,110. Majors' value, $51,583,360. Groom ISD: Independent value, $6,427,750;

Majors' value, $2,262,180. Carson County: Independent value, $294,049,020; Majors' value, $72,446,580.

As you can see from the above figures, the majors are paying much less on the tax dollars in Carson County. Now because of the conspiracy by Phillips Petroleum Company and other major companies, we are going to lose all our tax dollars from the independent.

Our children benefited as well as our community Who is going to pay this financial burden to support our schools now? Who is going to pay for Panhandle's new junior high building? What are we going to do? Tear the bricks down and leave our children without the education they deserve?

As a result of the transgressions of the Phillips Petroleum Company, Natural Gas Pipeline, Dorchester and FERC, we as land and royalty owners need to band together to fight the unjust takeover of our heritage and the inevitable rise of our taxes to keep the fine standards we desire for our community.

Therefore, express your interest by attending an important meeting Nov. 5, 1985, at 7:00 at the M.K. Brown Auditorium, Pampa, Texas.

Stand up for rights

To the editor

I read with interest your editorial in Sunday's paper and your thoughts about why some- maybe most-letter writers to the editor do not sign their

My first thoughts were how naive Mr. Simmons must be. Why doesn't he come out of his castle in the clouds and live in reality? Does he not live in this world of ours that can be cruel and harsh towards those of us that dare to criticize "the establishment" or point out its shortcomings? But, on deeper reflection, my thoughts changed and I answered my own questions.

No, he isn't naive or living in a dream world. Mr. Simmons apparently has been very fortunate. He has through his hard work and desire became self-sufficient and his health allows him to work to maintain a life whereby there is no need for him to ask for charity., But there are many who are not as fortunate. Here then may be the answer to your question.

There are some charitable organizations that are run by people who are self-appointed know-it-alls. These people substitute their own biased feelings oftentimes in deciding if a needy person gets help, If they are areleady feeling that that it would be 'easier not to like you' instead of liking you, I'm sure it would be to your advantage not to make problems worse by asking too many questions or, heaven forbid, criticize them.

Other agencies set up to help the disabled and disadvantaged are run by people who plainly tell you "I don't care what the law says, I decide who gets help or not and you'd better be nice to me or you won't get any." Another person in charge: 'You better not make me mad because if you do I'm going to be less inclined to try and help you."

What was the "big" wrong done by the person applying for help? After feeling that a run-around was in effect, he dared ask if under the law was he not qualified for help.

Pampa is a small town and at some time most of our lives will touch some way. For this reason I believe that it is the fear of retaliation from those around us that prompt so many "names withheld" letters to the editor.

All law-abiding people have nothing to fear from our police. We have a process in place to remedy any police harrassment or wrong doing. But we must be willing to stand up for that remedy and be counted

I, myself, feel more secure in the presence of a policeman and I'm glad when they're nearby.

Could it be the fear of being called "ungrateful" or a "free loader" that causes you to receive many requests to withhold names from letter writers? Especially if it angers someone that may have some control over your well being and you family's? This is a real fear that exists here.

Here in America, we have a freedom that very few enjoy. We have freedom of the press and the right to free speech and we must not be fearful of using that right. We must be willing to be counted individually or we will become a faceless, nameless

Texas voters to decide fate of 12 proposed amendments often amended

By KEN HERMAN Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN (AP) - Texans decide Nov. 5 whether they want to trade prison inmates with other states, make more money available for family farmers and abolish some county treasurers and surveyors.

It's the biannual collection of proposed constitutional amendments. Included are some topics that probably have crossed the minds of few Texans.

Voters also will decide the fate of two water development and conservation measures. Amendment 1 would authorize issuance of $980 million in bonds for construction of reservoirs, pipelines, treatment plants and flood-control projects statewide. Amendment 2 would authorize another $200 million in bonds, with the proceeds financing low-interest loans to farmers who buy water-saving irrigation equipment.

The inmate swap idea is being pushed as a way to rid Texas' prisons of trouble-makers. Under the plan, Texas inmates could wind up in another state's prison. Both states would have to agree to the trade under the Interstate Corrections Compact.

In addition to being a tool to break-up gangs, the plan — listed on the ballot as Amendment No. 6 could permit inmates to do their time closer to home.

"The compact can be used either for humanitarian or punitive purposes. It will not solve the violence problem, but its adoption will give the Texas Department of Corrections a valuable correctional tool," said Sen. Ray Farabee, D-Wichita Falls.

This year's Amendment No. 10 is aimed at pumping new blood into farming by pumping more money into a state loan program. Under the proposal, the Veterans Land Board would be authorized to sell up to $500 million in bonds to provide low-interest loans for farm and ranch purchases.

"This program will help keep the Texas tradition of family farms and family ranches alive in our state," said Land Commissioner Garry Mauro, who has campaigned in favor of the amendment.

There is no organized opposition to the plan, which has drawn the usual complaints about favoring farming and ranching over other industries.

Another of the more important amendments, No. 13, would create a Judicial Districts Board to propose new boundary lines for state district courts.

Several local questions face statewide review. Amendment No. 14 would automatically abolish the treasurer of Andrews County. El Paso County would lose its treasurer if the amendment is approved statewide and if it gets a majority of the votes in El Paso County.

County surveyors would be abolished in Collin, Dallas, Denton, El Paso, Henderson and Randall counties if the amendment is approved and voters back the plan in a subsequent election. Amendment No. 7 would allow Chambers County to keep its six justices of the peace, although it is only entitled to five. Part of the coastal county's problem is the influx of tourists and two local telephone systems that require some local residents to make a long-distance call if they want to talk to their justice of the peace.

Here are the other proposals on the Nov. 5 ballot: — Amendments No. 1 and 2 — A

$1.43 billion state water plan. Amendment No. 3 — Authorizing cities to pay for water lines on private property if the city is moving or replacing water mains that serve the property. Amendment No. 4 — Allowing School Land Board to use money from land sales to buy other land. The Texas Constitution now says that money can only be used for investments in bonds and securities.

Amendment No. 5 — Allowing the Legislature to set the types of health care that a hospital district must provide.

Amendment No. 8 -Authorizing the Veterans Housing Program to issue an additional $500 million in bonds. The current limit is $500 million, a limit that could be reached by the end of the year.

- Amendment No. 9 - Granting lawmakers additional control over state spending between legislative sessions. Under the proposal, the Legislature could require state agencies to obtain approval before making emergency transfers of money.

- Amendment No. 11 - Allowing the Legislature to write rules that could decrease the number of criminal cases overturned on appeal because of errors in indictments. "It is time we stopped the use of technicalities as a way of evading justice," said Senate sponsor J.E. "Buster" Brown, R-Lake Jackson. Opponents say the amendment could unfairly erode the rights of an accused.

— Amendment No. 12 — Authorizing the Texas Supreme Court and Court of Criminal Appeals to answer questions of state law posed by federal courts.

Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN (AP) - The Texas Constitution, ratified in 1876, is frequently amended but rarely inspected.

The hand-written document is filed in an oversized metal cabinet in the Lorenzo de Zavala State Archives and Library Building just east of the Capitol.

"It survives mainly as an icon," said Michael Green, a research archivist for the state. "It's pulled about two or three times a year." In the years since it was delivered to the Secretary of State's Office at 8:30 p.m. on Nov. 24, 1875, 436 amendments have been proposed and 269 have been approved. Fourteen proposed amendments face

Many agree the number of amendments is excessive, but the last attempt to rewrite the Constitution went nowhere.

The Legislature met as a Constitutional Convention in 1974 but failed to agree on a proposed document. The next year, lawmakers proposed a series of amendments that amounted to a complete rewrite, but voters rejected them by a wide margin

"It's kind of a lost cause," Green said of rewriting the constitution. So Texans file back to the polls every two years to add amendments to a constitution that was lengthy from the outset. At more than 60,000 words, the unamended Texas Constitution is almost six times as long as the United States Constitution.

"Part of the problem is we wrote it in the year we did. It's a reactionary document to all the strictures imposed in Reconstruction," said Green. "The document is a reaction against the excesses of congressional Reconstruction. It says too much and as a result we have to go back and amend or clarify it.

"In many instances it's too specific. It's had to be amended in order to allow for the changes in social mores," he said. The amendments are filed in the Secretary of State's Office and

bound between fake leather covers. Aside from keeping it in a locked cabinet in an acid-free folder, little has been done to preserve it. A list of 21 rules governs those who want to see the constitution or anything filed in the Archives. Children under 12 are not permitted. Visitors must sign in. Pens are barred; only pencils can be used for note-taking. Documents must lie flat on the table, neither held or propped up. The search room is monitored by closed-circuit television cameras.

The Archives building has been home to the constitution since the building was erected in 1961. Before that, it went wherever there was room, Green said.

"For a while it was in the basement of the Highway Building across the street," he said.

The constitution is less protected than many other archives documents, mostly because it gets far less use. "The binding is reasonably sound. I notice the sewing is coming loose in some places," Green said as he looked it over. "It probably should be disbound and encapsulated." Many archives documents, particularly the Confederate pension records that are a genealogist's dream, have been de-acidified and mounted between sheets of polyester. But the constitution is as it was when approved.

"There's not a whole lot of demand to see the original," Green said. "But part of our commitment to posterity is to preserve this item. We'll bring it out on occasion, but for general research purposes we point people in the direction of printed copies."

sell their bonds more easily. Amendment 2 would authorize another $200 million in bonds, with the proceeds financing low-interest loans to farmers who buy water-saving irrigation equipment. Agriculture is a major water user in the state.

A separate law would take effect only if the amendments pass. That statute would place conservation requirements on cities seeking state aid for water projects and would provide for special local districts to control groundwater pumping. It would restrict reservoir construction near Gulf Cost bays to protect fish and shellfish that depend on rivers

Not so, counters the Audubon Society, one of the plan's leading pponents. The plan falls short on both environmental and financial safeguards, the group said.

"Projects can be premature, entirely unnecessary, inefficient, ill-designed and environmentally and financially disastrous, and yet still be allowed at the discretion of the Texas Water Commission," said DeDe Armentrout, vice president of the group's southwest

While the legislation sets up a system of loans and bond uarantees to fund water development, there are no guidelines on repayment and the law does not even address the contingency of a default on a loan, except to pledge the state's credit to pay for the default.'

Also raising concerns is the Texas Association of Concerned Taxpayers Inc., which complains that the plan lacks a formula for distributing water development monies.

"There is no public advocate, no protection against price gouging, unconscionable water rates or the opportunity for citizens to appeal a bureaucratic ruling. The creation of debt is simply the postponement of a tax increase," said Bill Berka, the association's president.

Opponents also say the plan doesn't address problems with groundwater that is being pumped out for irrigation, falls short in emphasizing conservation and weakens public control over how much should be spent on water projects. The plan's supporters say the state must raise the money through bond sales, because the traditional sources of funds — federal grants and local bond issues — are drying Backers also say the plan is well-balanced, making available money for water projects, flood control and providing

Whale refuses to leave river

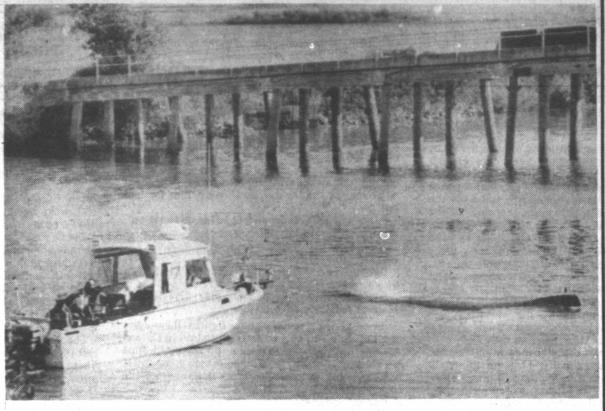

RIO VISTA, Calif. (AP) - A 45-ton humpback whale that has wandered up the Sacramento River for two weeks retreated back upriver during the night after being herded out of a dead-end slough by an armada of scientists.

The whale was spotted today near the mouth of Shag Slough, from which he had been chased Friday and about eight miles upriver from where he was last seen Friday night.

Officials planned to relaunch a flotilla of boats to herd the sea-going mammal, about the size of a bus, back downstream.

Officials had hoped to stay with the wandering whale, nicknamed Humphrey and E.T., but they lost him as darkness fell over the Sacramento River delta Friday.

Aerial flares and spotlights glared over the moonlit river delta Friday night as a dozen boats searched for the 40-foot-long whale which slipped from sight after moving seaward for more than three hours.

alker, son expected to plead guilty

BALTIMORE (AP) - John A Walker Jr., accused of masterminding a family espionage ring, and his Navy seaman son Michael are expected to plead guilty as part of a deal with federal prosecutors, according to government sources.

One government source in Washington, who spoke Friday on condition of anonymity, said Walker, 48, was scheduled to enter a guilty plea Monday during a federal court appearance.

Another source, who also spoke on condition of anonymity, today confirmed published reports that Michael Walker, 22, had also agreed to enter a guilty plea at Monday's proceeding.

John Walker agreed to plead guilty in exchange for a shorter sentence for his son, according to reports in today's editions of the New York Times, Los Angeles Times and Washington Post.

The Walkers are scheduled to appear in federal court Monday, when jury selection was to have begun in the elder Walker's trial, the sources said.

An official announcement Friday by the court merely said that Walker's trial had been delayed for some unspecified "proceedings" involving father and son.

Michael Walker, allegedly recruited by his father into a family spy ring, was scheduled for trial after completion of his father's case. John Walker's brother, Arthur J. Walker, has been convicted of espionage.

The newspapers, quoting unidentified government sources, said in today's editions that Michael Walker would also plead guilty Monday.

The elder Walker's cooperation could include testifying against his longtime friend from the Navy, Jerry A. Whitworth, who is charged on the West Coast with supplying Walker with sensitive communications and code secrets for sale to the Soviet Union, the government source said

The law clerk for U.S. District Judge Alexander Harvey II said Walker and his son will be in court Monday. He said the nature of those proceedings "has not been finalized.

Harvey would not comment further. Prospective jurors were told Friday that the case had been continued.

Whitworth's attorney, Tony Tamburello, denied reports that he had said he understood John Walker was going to testify against

Search for heart continues to widen

47-year-old factory worker being kept alive by a Jarvik-7 artificial heart continued improving Saturday, and hospital officials said they were encouraged by his progress as the search for a human heart widened.

Thomas J. Gaidosh, who had been given 24 hours to live before implant of the artificial heart on Thursday, awoke from surgery Friday to stop bleeding, and communicated with his family by nodding and squeezing their hands.

Surgeons said today that Gaidosh spent an "uneventful night" and that they were encouraged by his progress, according to a statement issued by the hospital's public relations office.

Gaidosh's condition was "a beautiful example of the marriage between the Jarvik-7 and the patient's own physiology," Presbyterian-University Hospital spokesman Tom Chakurda said.

Gaidosh was in critical but stable condition early today and improving, hospital officials said.

In Hershey, Anthony Mandia, 44, of Philadelphia also was in critical but stable condition after doctors reported significant progress with Mandia's implanted Penn State artificial heart.

Demos say Reagan may reject budget plan

WASHINGTON (AP) - House Democrats are raising questions about whether President Reagan would go along with mandated cuts in military spending that could be triggered by a plan to force a balanced federal budget by 1991.

The answers to their questions are critical to the future of the landmark proposal.

Congressional negotiators considering the Senate-passed plan to erase budget deficits by 1991 are set to begin serious bargaining this week in an attempt to draft a version that can pass both houses

They have spent the last two weeks trying to understand the implications of the proposal for the way the government does business.

Under the Senate plan that Reagan has embraced, there would be statutory ceilings on budget deficits, beginning with $180 billion in the current fiscal year and decreasing by $36 billion a year until zero is reached in 1991.

If Congress and the White House are unable to agree on steps to meet the annual goals, the plan would direct the president to impose automatic, across-the-board spending cuts to keep deficit spending within the ceiling. Such action would be suspended in times of war.

So far, critics also are questioning:

-The constitutional implications of the automatic cuts that could be triggered in the plan and whether this represents an undue transfer of power from Congress to the White House.

-Whether such automatic actions, regardless of the nation's economic condition, could set off a string of recessions.

-How to figure when the automatic cuts should be triggered and then what would be cut.

-What is the base line to be used as the vardstick for determining whether specified goals are being

At the end of last week, Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger fueled new concerns with comments that the president will reject a plan that could force cuts in the Pentagon's budget.

The president "can't have his constitutional authority constrained to the point where his only consideration is the attempt to reduce deficits,' Weinberger said in an interview with Human Events, a conservative weekly publication.

"We can't have our defense and our security policy be a total prisoner of a rigid formula designed to try to reduce the budget," he said.

The comments set off alarms on Capitol Hill, where legislators said they were concerned about the administration's commitment to the plan and how the president would react to the order for acorss-the-board cuts.

"If in the next three, four, five days we develop a good deal of doubt on that issue, honest doubt, then I think the thing's in deep water with both Democrats and Republicans," said Rep. Richard Gephardt, D-Mo., one of the House negotiators.

But Sen. Warren Rudman, R-N.H., one of the co-authors of the plan - with Sens. Phil Gramm, R-Texas and Ernest Hollings, D-S.C. - dismisses Weinberger's remarks.

"Weinberger is speaking for himself, he's not speaking for this administration," Rudman said. He also scoffed at suggestions the president would ignore mandated cuts.

"Any president who were to say, 'I choose not to obey this part of the law but I will obey that part of the law,' is going to find himself quickly enjoined by a court of competent jurisdiction," Rudman said. Nonetheless, Democrats have said they may ask

Weinberger and other senior Reagan administration officials to appear before the conferees to explain how Reagan would carry out cuts provided under the

Meanwhile, time is becoming a factor because the plan is attached to urgently-needed legislation raising the national debt limit - the government's borrowing authority — to more than $2 trillion. The government has reached its current borrowing limit of $1.824 trillion and has used a variety of bookkeeping tricks and unprecedented actions to keep money in the federal till.

The delay in raising the debt limit has caused fiscal disruptions for the government and Treasury Secretary James A. Baker III is warning of more serious problems.

Baker has said the administration will be able to pay 36 million Social Security recipients on Nov. 1, but only through the "extraordinary step" of the early withdrawal of trust fund investments before the payments are made.

Even doing this, Baker said, the country still would be facing the first default in its history by, Nov. 15 unless Congress raises the debt ceiling.

Bush concerned about Philippines

WASHINGTON (AP) - Vice President George Bush has joined those in the U.S. government expressing concern about the threat of a communist takeover in the Philippines.

But Bush said in an interview with The Associated Press on Friday he can't be sure President Ferdinand Marcos would adopt the political and economic reforms Washington is urging on him.

'We are concerned," Bush said. "I can't quantify that concern, but I think that all the leaders of the ... Pacific rim countries have common ground on this."

"Obviously, we do not want to see an unfriendly communist takeover there," Bush said.

Bush said the two U.S. bases in the Philippines, the Subic Bay naval base and Clark Air Base, are essential to American security. He said the United States should not be looking for alternative sites, as some members of Congress suggest.

"They are so important that I think it is essential that we maintain them there and we are not out looking for alternatives," he said.

Other administration officials, including senior officials in the Pentagon and the State Department, have warned publicly that the communists could be in a position to seize power in three to five years if present trends continue.

The Pentagon has been exploring possible alternatives for bases in the region in the event the United States has to abandon the Philippines. Two possible locations that have received preliminary consideration are Tinian and Guam. Neither is as ideally situated as the Philippines, however, and the cost of moving the bases has been tentatively put at $8 billion.

American officials estimate the size of the communist insurgency known as the New Peoples' Army at up to 15,000 fighters, although Marcos disputes this figure and has said the threat from the insurgents is not nearly as great as

Washington says it is. In an effort to drive home to Marcos American concerns and the need for economic and political reforms, President Reagan recently sent Sen. Paul Laxalt, R-Nev., as his personal emissary to meet with Marcos.

Bush said he has discussed the Laxalt visit with Reagan. He said it isn't known whether Marcos will make the changes Washington wants. But he said the administration is encouraged that Marcos gave Laxalt a good

"I think he (Laxalt) did feel very good about it," Bush said. "At least

that's what he reported to us. The hearing was serious, but I don't know what to expect there.'

Bush declined to say what changes Washington wants: "I'm not going into an agenda for another president (on) what he ought to do.

But U.S. officials have said publicly they want Marcos to institute political reforms to help assure "a free and fair election" for president in 1987, whether Marcos seeks re-election or not.

Privately, they also want economic reforms to curb what they say is rampant corruption by Marcos' friends that has hurt the economy and which works to alienate the business sector.

Reagan says arms control efforts on 'the right track'

President Reagan, asserting that his arms control efforts are "on the right track," challenged the Soviets on Saturday to do more than just talk about peace before next month's superpower summit.

"Talking about a safer world is not good enough. We must make it happen," Reagan said in his weekly radio address, delivered from the presidential retreat at Camp David, Md. In his first remarks to the nation since returning from three days of diplomacy at the 40th anniversary of the United Nations in New York, Reagan spoke of his talks with top U.S. allies, as well as Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze "Our conversations convinced me more than ever that we are on the right track," Reagan said. "We are negotiating hard with the Soviet Union on reducing offensive nuclear weapons.

The president said the United States has "proposals on the table for deep reductions, and (we) are examining their counter-proposals.

But he added that the United States is determined to move forward with research and testing for the Strategic Defense Initiative, the space-based missile defense known as "Star Wars." which the Soviets charge is a major stumbling block to an arms control agreement.

Picking up on a Soviet invitation. the president is dispatching Secretary of State George Shultz to meet with Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev in Moscow to resolve major differences between the two superpowers before the summit.

Shultz, after announcing his trip, virtually ruled out the possibility that Reagan and Gorbachev would conclude an arms control agreement at their Nov. 19-20 meeting in Geneva, Switzerland.

As he did in his address to the U.N. General Assembly, Reagan used the radio address to lash out at the Soviet Union for attempting to impose "repressive dictatorships subordinated to Soviet objectives" in such nations as Afghanistan, Cambodia, relationship should go.

Angola, Ethiopia and Nicaragua He called such actions saw fundamental source of tension" in the many regions of the world, and vowed that U.S. support for resistance forces "shall not" cease. Reagan said Shultz will discuss with Gorbachev the proposal made at the United Nations.

"Does the Soviet Union share our conviction that true peace must rest on the right of all peoples to choose their destiny to grow and develop free from coercion and fear?" the president asked. "We shall see in Geneva.

In New York, Shultz said a major objective of the summit will be to "set out an agenda for the future, to have a sense of direction or where we think and they think this

Senate showdown looming on new 1985 farm proposal

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Senate, working its way through a series of minor amendments, has begun warming up for clashes next week over the central issue in the new 1985 farm bill: how much taxpayers should spend to rescue farmers in financial difficulty.

The Reagan administration contends the bill the Senate took up on Friday is a budget-buster. Agriculture Secretary John Block has said it is a prime veto target, and along with Senate Republicans, he will attempt to push through cost-cutting amendments next week

But Democrats, who are likely to be backed by a substantial bloc of farm-state Republicans, say they should be able to repulse the proposed cuts and preserve what they term a safety net for producers suffering from the most depressed farm conditions in that it helps to preserve farm income through a four-year freeze on income subsidies for wheat, corn, cotton and rice farmers. while reducing price supports to make U.S. commodities more competitively priced in world

"It may not be a great farm bill, but it ... is by no means a disastrous farm bill," said Sen. Edward Zorinsky, D-Neb., ranking committee Democrat.

"The benefits of a healthy agriculture run far beyond the farm gate," added Sen. Thad Cochran, R-Miss., noting that farming and related businesses account for 20 percent of the nation's jobs and one-fourth of its exports.

The bill provides for rapid drops in price-support rates for major crops such as wheat, corn, cotton and rice, but makes up for every dollar lost to lower prices with a dollar in direct income subsidies. The result would be record farm program spending of $20 billion or more a year

The House already has passed its version of the farm bill, which is designed to set farm and food policy through the end of the decade. Senate floor consideration.

Major issues expected to surface next week include the dairy support program, the size of income guarantees, whether to allow farmers to vote on a system of higher price supports coupled with strict production curbs and whether to lower the current $50,000-per-farmer direct subsidy limit.

Home sales drop some

By The Associated Press

Analysts are downplaying a report that sales of existing single-family homes declined slightly in September.

The home sales report issued by the National Association of Realtors indicated sales of previously owned, single-family homes fell 1.7 percent in September, compared with a 11.5

Analysts said sales of existing homes, which hit an annual rate of 3.44 million in September, remained strong because of falling interest rates. The September rate followed an August annual rate of 3.5 million units, which marked the best selling pace since the 3.48 million-unit pace of November

Consumer buying concern to market

By CHET CURRIER AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The recent behavior of American consumers has many Wall Street analysts more than a little worried.

According to government figures, consumer spending lately has been growing faster than personal income, plunging the savings rate to a record low

While it continues, of course, free spending by consumers helps the economy. But if the consumer should suddenly come up with empty pockets, the potential consequences for the economy are worrisome, to say the least.

And in the meantime, money not saved is money not available for capital formation to finance such things as new homes and businesses.

"The consumer is not only running out of the purchasing power needed to reaccelerate the industrial sector, but also he may be on the verge of decelerating in order to revive his savings rate,' said Edward Yardeni, economist at Prudential-Bache Securities. Right now would be an especially inconvenient time for consumers to run low on buying power, with the approach of the holiday selling season, a make-or-break period for many businesses.

Texas Instruments to close operation at College Station COLLEGE STATION, Texas in the semiconductor industry."

(AP) - A shocked silence greeted news that Texas Instruments Inc.'s plan to weather a sharply depressed semiconductor industry did not include its College Station

"It was a shock when someone tells you your job is going away," site manager Ed Kuehn said after TI announced Friday it was closing two plants, laying off 2,200 more employees and rearranging its operations.

"It was traumatic ... some cried," he said.

TI's College Station plant, which employs about 250 people, will be shut down along with the firm's 900-person operation in El Salvador, company spokesman Jim Bradbury said from TI's Dallas headquarters Friday.

In addition, the wafer-production facility at TI's Northwest Houston plant will close and be consolidated in Temple as the company tries to shave more than $70 million from its operating costs, Bradbury said.

The job cuts bring to 7,000 the number of layoffs the company has been forced to make since the year began, he said. After the latest round, TI will employ about 80,000 people.

"I can't speculate on whether there will be further cuts in personnel," Bradbury said. "What

The layoff news followed another quarter of depressed earnings for ne Dallas-based electronics firm. The company announced a third-quarter loss of $82.8 million, or $3.30 per share, compared with net income of $85.8 million, or $3.54 per share, in 1984's third quarter.

Excluding charges for plant closings and employment reductions, the third-quarter loss would have been 76 cents per share, TI Chairman Mark Shepherd Jr. said.

Net sales billed for the three months ended Sept. 30 were $1.2 billion, down 16 percent from last year's third quarter, and Shepherd attributed that loss to sharply reduced volume and lower prices for semiconductors.

During 1985's first nine months. net sales billed were $3.7 billion. down 12 percent from the same quarter of 1984. Year-to-date net loss was $77.6 million, or $3.12 per share, compared with net income of $251.5 million, or $10.43 per share, in the first three quarters of

In addition to the layoffs, TI will defer for at least six months wage and salary increases that would have taken effect in the first half of 1986, Shepherd said.

"We understand the personal impact of this decision on TIers keep operating costs under tight control during this difficult period," he said.

Charges for TI's write-down of manufacturing capacity and other plant consolidations weighed heavily on the company's third quarter earnings and "current market conditions indicate that these actions will not return the company to profitability in the short term," Shepherd said.

Last week, United Technologies announced that it was closing its Mostek Inc. division, a semiconductor producer headquartered not far from TI. after months of piecemeal layoffs.

Shepherd said, "TI's balance sheet remains strong, and financial resources are adequate to support our needs "TI's cash balance at the end of the third quarter was $187 million, compared with $207 million at the end of this year's second quarter and $274 million at the end of 1984."

The closings and consolidations will begin during the fourth quarter, and some will take six to nine months to complete, he said.

the air, in the air: two cities, two jobs

By SCOTT McCARTNEY ssociated Press Writer

DALLAS and CHICAGO (AP) -It's 9 a.m. and Tom Joyner is on the air on KKDA in Dallas, rapping about the day's headlines, wrapping up the city's most listened-to morning radio show.

An hour later, he's in the air, on his way to Chicago, where he does WGCI's 2-6 p.m. drivetime show.

At 7 p.m., he's back in the air, bound for Dallas, dinner and four hours' sleep. At 5:30 a.m., Tom Joyner will be on the air - again.

Five days a week, the 35-year-old disc jockey holds down two jobs in two cities, spending his days spinning almost as fast as the records he plays. At KKDA, they call him "Superman." At WGCI, where he started Oct. 14, he's known as the "Fly Jock.

Have golden voice, will travel.

His schedule requires a highway rendezvous with his wife and a limousine dash down a breakdown lane. And under terms of two long-term, $1 million contracts, he has to keep this up for the next five

"No. 1, I'm doing it for security for my family. This is not the most secure business in the world, and I know one day this is going to come to an end," Joyner says. "Secondly, it's the ego and the challenge of it all. It's never been done before, and I have a chance to

The scheme has consumed his family and angered bosses in both cities, neither of whom knew of Joyner's plans until the contracts were signed.

"I negotiated each one separately with no intention of doing both jobs," says Joyner, who in two years has helped turn KKDA into Billboard magazine's urban contemporary station of the year.

WGCI is rated fifth in Chicago and second in urban contemporary behind WBMX, where Suzette Charles, Miss America 1984, recently joined the afternoon drive-time team.

"They both gave me what I wanted and I had to make a choice. I chose not to choose.

Joyner, a vegetarian, went to Dallas' Aerobics Center to find out if his body could survive what his mind wanted to do.

"They told me to watch what I eat, eat regularly (on a diet prescribed by a nutritionist) and drink plenty of water. When you fly, you get dehydrated," he says. At 5 a.m., Joyner is still half asleep, scanning headlines for humor. "This is the hardest part of morning radio right here, waking up," he says.

5:30 a.m. - "K104, this is Tom

By 6 a.m., the music is pounding and Joyner is bouncing around the small studio, imitating the drummer, then the guitarist, then the trumpeter. "Oooooooo baby,"

He counts on his sons, ages 10 and 11, to videotape the news broadcasts crucial to his act. One day last week, the boys gave Dad an hour of MTV music television. Joyner comments sardonically,

'They said they were sorry.' 7 a.m. - Joyner is punching phone lines, chatting with listeners while songs play. "I'd like for you to eat good foods while you're on your trips. Take care of yourself," one caller says.

"My granddad said you get what you can when you can, while you can," he reassures her.

9:07 a.m. — Joyner is off the air and out the door, racing to the airport in his white Cadillac at 75 mph for a 9:41 flight. He combs his hair and spritzes drops into his eyes as he drives.

9:22 a.m. — Joyner's wife, Dora, spots the Cadillac on the airport highway and joins the race. Her job is to bring him home-cooked, high-carbohydrate food, part of his prescribed high-energy diet, and ferry him from a parking place to the terminal.

But today there are no parking paces. At 9:35, Joyner settles for $14-a-day valet parking and sprints to the gate. "Well, hello," the gate agent says to her daily customer. We didn't think you were going to make it."

The flight is time to eat, read and watch videotapes on a battery-powered tape player-television made by a radio station engineer. He stuffs little slips of paper, scribbled with ideas, into pockets.

"I don't think you can say it's hard work," Joyner says, slumped in his airplane seat bought with a $30,000 annual unlimited travel pass. "There's different kinds of energy. It's not picking up boxes. I'm just really lucky to be paid to have fun every day, twice a day."

Joyner's been paid to have fun a lot in his 15 years in radio. A graduate of the Tuskegee Institute, Joyner has used to advantage his good looks, smooth voice and sense of humor. He's been host of a nationally syndicated TV show of celebrity interviews, worked for Muhammad Ali and traveled with Michael Jackson as emcee of The Victory Tour, all the while looking for something more secure. Not long ago, he says, he even thought of giving it all up for a McDonald's franchise, a business his brother is Now, after two hours and nearly 1,000 miles in the air, Joyner is on the ground in Chicago, buying a newspaper before jumping into a waiting limousine.

12:32 p.m. - Joyner steps out onto Michigan Avenue and into the WGCI offices. Today is meetings with station executives, but on most days, 12:30 to 1:30 is racquetball time at a nearby health

Mary Dyson, general manager of WGCI, remains skeptical the happy-go-lucky Joyner will fulfill his five-year contract, but he's willing to pay for limousines to keep what he calls one of the 12 best disc jockeys in the country.

'Our two options were to sue or to give it a shot," Dyson said. "My grandmother always told me that when you have lemons, you make lemonade. ... I don't think he can do it for five years. But he may fool the world. He's just crazy enough

2 p.m. - "WGCI and this is Tom

2:24 p.m. - "We've been waiting for you to get on the radio," a caller coos. With a smile, Joyner replies, 'You make me feel soooo necessary, baby.

4:40 p.m. - Joyner tells listeners that today is the 30th anniversary of Ann Landers' advice column. He says his best advice is "never confess when your lady catches you in bed with someone else. Just say 'Who you gonna believe, baby? Me, or your lying eyes?" The punchline is delivered with perfect timing, but then, it's the third time today he's used the Ann Landers peg — 5:40 a.m., 8:40 a.m. and now

4:40 p.m. 'Sure, there's going to be some days when I say WGCI and be in Dallas and say K104 and be in Chicago. ... I'm very conscious of diluting the product. I work very hard not to have that happen. If it does, I stop and I choose.'

5:43 p.m. - Joyner's drumming

Up to 3 Year Warranty

on New Hearing Aids

He queues up a series of commercials to follow the 5:50 news and traffic report. He's out the door and into the limousine at 5:57. "See, it works. I don't understand why nobody thinks it will work. I don't know why everyone thinks I'm going to burn out," Joyner says. 6:30 p.m. — The limousine is stuck in traffic on the Kennedy expressway, and chances of catching the 6:34 to Dallas appear dim. The driver opts for the breakdown lane at 45 mph, headlights flashing.

"My man!" Joyne: exclaims. A cellular phone call to the airline reveals the flight is late, and at 6:40, Joyner strolls to the gate and takes his seat on the plane. He immediately strikes up a conversation with the stranger next to him.

"I came up on business, just for the day," she says.

Novelty signs add dimension to West Texas advertising

By FRANK TROMBLEY

MIDLAND, Texas (AP) -Advertising is a multifaceted medium and different folks in different businesses usually choose one or more ways of drawing attention to products or services they have to offer

Through the years, before the advent of mass-media campaigns and advertising agencies to fit every need, business people often devised their own methods of advertising.

A blacksmith might hang an old anvil, a tailor might use an oversized needle and thread and of course — a barber cleverly devised the familiar red-and-white barber pole. In very early days, the red and white purportedly symbolized the fact that barbers also specialized in "bleeding," a then-favored treatment for a variety of ills.

Businesses are still developing their own special ways of proclaiming their wares, often in addition to - sometimes even instead of - newspapers, magazines, radio and television.

Some of the symbols selected are unique, others are "home-grown" renditions, while others are more or less what you might expect to see gracing the business where you symbol has with the business. Such may be the case with the metal dinosaur and over-sized metal duck that sit in front of the American Building Co.

According to American Building employee Orville Crump, company owner H.C. McCullough bought the duck and dinosaur at an auction about 10 years ago and they've been sitting in front of the company office and yard ever since. They have no connection with the fact that American Building sells portable metal buildings.

"They've become a landmark," Crump says, noting that people passing often stop and let their kids climb on them while the parents take photographs.

Few would have to question the winged roller skate that sits atop the Skateland Roller Rink

The T-Bar-B Steak House appropriately mounted its signs on the sides of a huge Fiberglas bull. It's now solidly anchored to the asphalt parking lot, since strong West Texas winds used to occassionally blow it over.

TRYING IT ON FOR SIZE — Child development expert James Campbell from North Texas State adjusts the costume of his 20 - month - old son Trevor at their home in Denton. Campbell thinks scary things are bad for little kids, trick - or - treating is a perilous affair and masks can be dangerous. Campbell then suggests that the message offered to kids should be that this is a time when people should be together to celebrate the changing of the seasons. (AP Laserphoto)

Mexico interest cut recommended

AUSTIN (AP) - Mexico's economic woes may cause U.S. bankers to reduce the $12 billion in annual interest payments Mexico is making on its $96 billion external debt, says Sidney Weintraub, an economic expert at the University

Weintraub, a professor since 1976 at the LBJ School of Public Affairs, said the earthquakes that killed 6.000 Mexicans last month have not greatly added to the economic woes of Mexico but pose a stern test for the administration of President Miguel de la Madrid.

'The earthquake can make or break President de la Madrid. His administration was already at a low ebb," Weintraub said.

Weintraub, who has served as chief of commercial policy at the State Department, spoke Wednesday on the Mexican economic situation Wednesday at the Austin History Center.

Earthquake reconstruction, estimated to cost $3 to $4 billion, will not seriously worsen the plight of a country with the second-highest external debt among developing nations. "The earthquake should be looked at as adding to the troubles the economy already has," he said. A political repercussion of the quakes could be organized opposition to the ruling Revolutionary Institutional Party (PRI) from Mexico City's middle class neighborhoods

Question: to trick-or-treat?

By CANDICE HUGHES ssociated Press Writer

DALLAS (AP) - Child development expert James Campbell feels a little like the Grinch that stole Halloween.

He thinks scary things are bad for little kids, trick-or-treating is a perilous affair and Halloween masks can be dangerous.
"I hate to be the bearer of bad tidings," the North Texas State University professor said affably as he dispensed some pointers for a safe Halloween.

Campbell is going against the grain of traditions that have their roots in ancient pagan festivals of harvest and death After 2,000 years, the symbols and mythology of the autumnal holiday have lost their power over But for little children, who Campbell said see reality and process information differently than adults, Halloween can be genuinely frightening. It can trigger deep, basic fears of the unknown or of abandonment,

'You see a lot of post-Halloween nightmares," he said

The witches, goblins, ghosts, skeletons and monsters that dominate Halloween paraphernalia can be taken literally by pre-school children, Campbell said.

Masks and costumes can transform a familiar person into an unfamiliar object of true terror. They can also make children feel and act differently.

"When they put costumes on, they become that persona," he Campbell suggests non-threatening costumes.

"People should chose friendly masks and costumes," he said. "Pumpkins and puppy dogs." He also worries about masks, which can obscure vision and make it hard for little children to breathe. Instead, he suggests face painting.

Campbell said the holiday is further complicated by the dangers of sending children out into the uncertain streets of modern

Every year, there are reports of poisoned or spiked treats, traffic accidents, or worse.

"We don't live in a society anymore where children can be free to roam through the neighborhoods," Campbell said.

Trick-or-treating also can confuse small children by suggesting that it is all right to knock on strangers' doors, Campbell said.

"This may be practice for something that's not appropriate," he said. "It's difficult for them to understand there's only one night out the year when you can knock on strangers' doors.

Instead, Campbell recommends parties at home or carefully arranged trick-or-treating with close friends.

Law enforcement officials also discourage trick-or-treating, said Dallas Police Department spokesman Ed Spencer

The practice is on the decline, he said, but "knowing full well that some people will do it anyway,' police have issued guidelines.

They say children should stick to their immediate neighborhood, accept only factory-sealed treats and examine them before eating, call only at homes with porch lights, wear bright costumes easily seen by motorists and makeup instead of masks. "Parents and kids alike should exercise extreme caution," Spencer said. Campbell would like parents to downplay the frightening aspect of Halloween and focus on the positive side.

"The message we should offer to kids, is that this is a time when people should be together to celebrate the changing of the seasons," he said. "It can help attune little children to the environment.

Campbell favors party activities like bobbing for apples, baking cookies and decorating them like jack-o-lanterns Holidays can be stressful for children, who tend to get overwrought and impatient, Campbell warned.

"Often times we just are not sensitive to little children. We see things from an adult point of view," he said.

And how will Campbell's little boys celebrate Halloween?

Basically it will just be a time for them to dress up and be silly," he said. "We're not going trick-or-treating.'

Sen. Traeger debates possible retirement

SEGUIN, Texas (AP) - After changing his mind several times and even endorsing a successor, State Sen. John Traeger says he still can't decide whether to retire after 24 years in the Legislature.

"I've changed my mind about six times. It's the hardest decision I've ever made in my life," he said

The Seguin Democrat said he thought he had made up not to seek re-election to his 20-county senatorial district that stretches from neighborhoods on San Antonio's north side through the South Texas brush country to the Mexican border.

But that was before he attended the appreciation night rally Thursday at which he was honored by the elite of the South Texas political community.

"The affair was so nice. I just couldn't say I was going to retire," Traeger told the Associated Press late Thursday night. "I'll make my decision in a day or so. Either I'll announce that I'm running like gang busters or that I'm retiring."

Only hours before the appreciation rally, Traeger had endorsed state Rep. Billy Hall of Laredo to succeed him

"I do not plan to abandon the field to an ultraliberal. I'm going to endorse Billy Hall," Traeger said.

But when Traeger rose to address a crowd of almost 1,000 well-wishers that night, he said he might not bow out of politics after Oil production rate continued at 100 percent

AUSTIN - The Railroad Commission has continued the Texas oil production rate for November at 100 percent of market

Commissioners James E. Nugent and Mack Wallace continued the top production allowable after reviewing oil companies' nominations to buy a total of 2,257,180 barrels of Texas oil per day. The November 30,540 barrels daily when compared to October purchaser nominations, indicates market demand. November 1984 nominations totaled 2,332,899 barrels daily.

Although next month's state total for the permissable rate of production is calculated to average 2.809.263 barrels per day, actual production is estimated to reach 2.25 million barrels of oil per day. nomination total, an increase of Actual production in November

1984 was 2,304,670 barrels of oil per

The Commission first went to the ceiling level for oil production in April 1972. It applies to all fields in the state except those that are assigned lower legal rates of production so that reservoir pressures will not be depleted before the maximum amount of oil has been recovered.

Nugent also reported that purchase of Texas gas totaled 19,656,698 Mcf-d (thousand cubic feet of gas per day). October nominations totaled 21,371,175

Mcf-d. November 1984 nominations amounted to 21,869,385 Mcf-d. The next statewide oil and gas production allowable hearing will begin at 1:30 p.m. Nov. 18 at the Railroad Commmission office in the

Despite controversy, WIPP nears completion

Waste Isolation Pilot Plant has been cursed and commended, both in court and in Congress, in the 10 years since its inception

Today, it continues to be controversial, although the crusades against the nation's first home for low- and intermediate-level defense-related nuclear waste have quieted somewhat as the repository nears completion

Construction of the $2.1 billion dump in the underground salt beds southeast of Carlsbad began in 1981, six years after the federal government first proposed placing in the area the radioactive waste generated by its defense activities.

Officials with the Department of Energy, the project's guardian, estimate the finishing touches will be put on the WIPP late next year. Waste, however, is not expected to be buried at the site until 1988.

On the surface, WIPP looks similar to any other construction

It is 2,150 feet below ground that the project's uniqueness becomes apparent.

A canary yellow elevator cage slowly glides visitors through the long, dark shaft, the length of which is more than twice the height of New York's Empire State Building.

The elevator jolts to a stop in the center of the repository's 5,200-feet main drift.

At the southern end of the cleanly eventually will be the burial ground for the waste are planned.

To the north, similiar cubicles already have been carved out of the massive salt beds - "rooms that are as close to simulating actual waste rooms as possible. said Wendell Weart, project director for Sandia National Laboratories, which is responsible for the scientific experiments supporting development of WIPP.

The rooms already are being used for a variety of tests related to the project that 10 years ago was only a proposal on a piece of paper. In 1975, the federal government began studying the salt beds in southern New Mexico for possible nuclear waste disposal The DOE's original proposal was to use the site solely for defense-related waste and for limited experiments on the burial of high-level radioactive material.

Later, proposals included suggestions that storage of high-level waste from commercial nuclear reactors also could be placed at WIPP, but eventually, only the original defense-related facility was authorized.

Still, some experiments on the disposal of defense-related high-level waste will be conducted at WIPP beginning in 1990.

After a series of environmental reports on the site, the Energy Department announced in the summer of 1983 that it would proceed with full construction of had begun two years earlier. WIPP has been the subject of congressional and legislative action, dozens of technical documents, numerous hearings by government and environmental groups and at least two lawsuits.

Several attempts were made to block its construction. At one time, it was the federal government that nearly killed the project.

In 1979, the Carter administration tried to dump WIPP as the project was authorized, saying it should be studied as a possible repository for high-level waste from commercial nuclear reactors.

Congress, however, balked at the suggestion and continued funding for research and development at WIPP as originally authorized.

Today, as construction continues on the project, much of WIPP's focus is on experimentation. Four of the testing rooms in the repository are being heated above the constant 85 degrees Fahrenheit temperature of the dump to allow scientists to study what could happen once nuclear waste is stored. Because many radioactive wastes produce heat and disseminated water trapped in the rock salt tends to move toward the heat source, the experiments should provide data on how well the salt walls close in on the stored waste, Weart said.

The salt beds are expected to seal themselves around the stored

"Temperature is the most important factor in how rapidly the walls will come in," Weart said. 'What we're trying to do here is to provide real answers in a real setting to all those technical questions that have arisen.'

With more than 1,000 different gauges collecting data from the experiment rooms, Weart said the tests are of the "largest scale ... ever conducted like this."

Weart said one storage room measuring 18 feet wide, 300 feet long and 18 feet high will close in by about one foot in three years.

Experiments also are being conducted on the permeability of the salt walls and on how well waste containers survive in the environment

Nearly all the experiment rooms have been excavated, Weart said. Drilling is to begin this month on the waste storage rooms. Two panels of seven rooms are expected to be completed in late 1986. The drilling of the waste rooms will continue throughout WIPP's life, Weart said. "As soon as we begin filling in one panel with waste, the drilling will begin on another panel," he said. About 6.3 million cubic feet of transuranic waste, such as sludge and contaminated workers' gloves, is expected to be dumped at WIPP during its lifespan. Already, 500,000 cubic feet of salt have been excavated. The salt rests above the surface on the WIPP site, where a waste-handing building and other project facilities, such as a security building, are being built.

Gas

Drilling cutbacks planned

HOUSTON (AP) - Independent oil and gas producers throughout the country plan major drilling cutbacks if certain federal tax proposals become law, according to a recent study. "Independents responding to our survey reported that they plan exploration and development spending of about $1.5 billion in 1986 under current tax law, but that they would cut back by an average of 36 percent if the deducation for intangible drilling and development costs is eliminated and an average of 16 percent if percentage depletion is eliminated," said Kenneth Burke, national director of Energy Industry Services for Ernst & Whinney

A statement from Ernst & Whinney was distributed by Texas Independent Producers & Royalty Owners Association, which was among the groups surveyed by the international accounting and consulting firm.

The company recently surveyed nearly 10,000 members of 11 state independent producers associations and received 502 responses

"The realities of the situation are pretty clear," said Burke. "Many independents will be forced to butcher their drilling commitments if they are faced with the kind of increased after-tax economic risks contained in some of the tax reform proposals.' The statement mentioned a proposal by the U.S. Treasury Department known as "Treasury I" and a recent draft by the House Ways & Means Committee.

Rains replenish state's stock water supplies

COLLEGE STATION (AP) -Heavy rains, the likes of which have not been seen for some time in Texas, fell over much of the state the past week. The rains replenished stock water supplies and boosted small grain crops but continued to delay crop harvesting operations in western areas and in the plains.

Cotton producers in the plains and western areas are concerned about the loss of cotton quality due to the extended wet weather, said Dr. Zerle L. Carpenter, director of the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, The Texas A&M University System. Also, lodging problems are developing in corn, sorghum, soybeans and sunflowers in the Panhandle and South Plains due to the lengthy spell of wet weather.

Peanut harvesting in central, west central and southwestern areas also continued at a standstill due to the rainy weather.

The rains also have slowed pecan harvesting, but prospects for a bumper crop remain bright.

While rains of 3 to 5 inches were common over much of the state, deluges of up to 10 inches hit parts of the Hill Country, causing amount of wheat also remains to be flooding and some drowning of sheep and goats. About a fourth of the fall vegetable acreage in the Winter Garden also was lost, noted Carpenter.

While the rains were detrimental to crops in some areas, they should enable small grains--wheat and oats--as well as winter pastures of clovers and ryegrass to make excellent progress. Early planted wheat and oats are about ready to graze in some locations, and interest in stocker cattle grazing operations is running high. That has led to some improvement in the cattle market, Carpenter said.

Combined with the warm weather, the rains have enabled pasture and range grasses to green up and to provide some grazing for livestock. Also, some additional cuttings of hay will be harvested in the coming weeks if open weather prevails, added Carpenter.

Reports from district Extension directors showed these conditions: PANHANDLE: Harvesting operations continue at a standstill due to wet fields. Corn harvesting is about complete while only 10 percent of the sugar beet crop has been harvested. A considerable planted due to rain delays, but early planted fields are making excellent growth and are about ready to graze.

SOUTH PLAINS: Wet conditions are continuing to slow down cotton development and to cause concern regarding the deterioration of cotton quality. Also, lodging problems are evident in corn, sorghum, soybeans and sunflowers due to the prolonged wet weather. Wheat continues to make excellent ROLLING PLAINS: Field operations remain at a standstill due to heavy rains of up to 5 inches. Farmers need open weather to harvest cotton and to complete small grain plantings. Small grain planting is about 65 percent complete, with early fields making excellent growth. A lot of stock tanks are now full.

NORTH CENTRAL: Recent rains should help fall grazing conditions and small grain crops. Most wheat is up to good stands but seeding of oats continues. Livestock conditions generally are good as are pecan crop prospects.

NORTHEAST: Parts of the region have received good rains which should boost small grains, winter pastures, late hay cuttings and fall gardens. A little cotton is still being harvested. Pecan prospects appear average.

FAR WEST: Rains of up to 7 in. have continued to hamper cotton harvesting over much of the region although full-scale harvesting is under way in El Paso County. Cotton quality has suffered some due to the extended wet weather. However, the moisture has boosted small grain crops and ranges. Harvesting of cabbage, bell peppers and green chili is under

WEST CENTRAL: Much of the region received rains of 2 in. or so, with a few amounts of 5 in. While the moisture will help small grains and ranges, it is hampering cotton and peanut harvesting. Most cattle are in good shape, with sales of stocker cattle active due to small grain grazing prospects. Fall calving is in full swing.

CENTRAL: Small grains are making excellent growth due to good soil moisture and warm weather. The rains will enable an additional cutting of hay in some locations. Livestock conditions are good although horn flies are cutting if open weather prevails. Livestock are in good condition, with marketing active. SOUTHWEST: Most of the region received 3 to 7 in. of rain

COASTAL BEND: Scattered rains should help get wheat and oats off to a good start, with plantings about 80 percent complete. Some producers will be harvesting another cutting of hay if weather conditions permit. Livestock and range conditions continue to improve; marketing of cattle remains active.

U.S. commodity imports take strange paths

WASHINGTON (AP) - U.S. farm exports sometimes take meandering routes and can be involved in political intrigue. Take corn, for example.

The Soviet nionis a big buyer of merican corn ane wheatn dut wmscow also lies Peruvian chickens. Tha 6means nore U.S. corn is going to the Soviet Union in the form of drumsticks and breasts, the Agriculture Department says.

Negotiations are under way for commercial sales of 2,000 tons of corn per month to Peru beginning with the expiration of current contracts in November, the department's Foreign Agricultural Service said Wednesday in a weekly trade report.

"To date, Peru has sold 9,000 tons of poultry to the U.S.S.R., and two further shipments of 2,000 tons each are scheduled through the end of November, 1985. The United States ships no poultry to the U.S.S.R., but it does sell corn to Peru's poultry industry," USDA

Peru is heavily in debt to the Soviet Union, in great part for military equipment, but is short of foreign exchange, the report said.

"Peru's new president recently complained that his country is using foreign exchange for imports of U.S. corn to produce chicken for repayment of debts to the Soviets. for which it receives no hard currency," the report said.

"Given these circumstances, whether the Peruvians will be successful in moving the (chicken) sales to a commericial basis remains to be seen.

WASHINGTON (AP) - The damaged lock on the St. Lawrence Seaway not only has snarled the flow of grain, it may hurt U.S. sunflower seed exports, the Agriculture Department says. The sunflower crop in North Dakota, South Dakota and Minnesota is about two weeks away from large-scale harvesting and delivery to traditional ports in the Great Lakes," the department's Foreign Agricultural Service said Wednesday.

"Elevatrs at Duluth (Minn.), the major port, are reportedly full and unwilling to accept further

In the 1983-84 season, 56 percent of total sunflower seed exports, or about 489,043 metric tons, was shipped from Great Lakes ports. In 1984-85, 801,952 tons, or 82 percent, of the exports were shipped out of lake ports, the report said.

New on-truck milk metering system approved

STEPHENVILLE, Texas (AP) - Texas has become the first state to approve an on-truck milk metering system that could save milk producers and cooperatives millions of dollars a year, according to State Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower.

Hightower, who was in is the biggest technological Stephenville for a demonstration. said Wednesday the system more accurately measures milk when it is picked up by a tanker truck at a local dairy.

"One milk industry official believes this new metering system in the on-farm storage tanks are off breakthrough for the dairy industry since 10-gallon cans were replaced by thousand-gallon storage tanks," Hightower said.

"If the current 'dipstick' or 'sight glass' methods of measuring milk by just 1 percent, that's an error of 4.5 million gallons of milk," Hightower added in a statement.

He said the new milk metering pump has proven 100 percent accurate in trial tests and in on-truck use.

WATER AMENDMENT'S PROGRAM

A program to explain the Water Amendments on November 5, State Constitutional Amendment election, will be held October 29 at 7:30 p.m. in Pampa at the Starlight Room, Coronado Inn.

The program will feature State Representative J.W. "Buck" Buchanan from Dumas and is part of the annual meeting of the Gray County Program Building Committee in cooperation with the Gray County Extension Office. The committee wanted to give local citizens an opportunity to learn how these two proposed Water Amendments would affect our area.

Representative Buchanan, who will be introduced by our local State Representative Foster Whaley, is recognized state-wide as one of the foremost authorities on North Plains and Texas Water Resources.

Representative Buchanan is currently serving his fifth term in the House of Representatives. He has been appointed Vice-Chairman for the Budget and Oversight

Committee of the County Affairs Committee. He has also been appointed to the Budget and Oversight Committee of the Natural Resources Committee. Representative Buchanan was selected Chairman of the Water Resources Committee of the Rural Legislative Caucus for the House of Representatives. This past summer he was appointed to the Water Districts and River

Authority Study Committee. The program presented by Representative Buchanan will give area people a chance to hear the pros and cons about the proposed state constitutional amendments relating to water. Everyone is invited to attend.

MAKING MONEY WITH STOCKER CATTLE

One of four area Stocker Cattle Management Clinics will be held in Pampa, November 6, at the Clyde Carruth Livestock Pavillion. The Pavillion or Show Barn is located on the east side of Pampa just north of the rodeo arena.

This clinic offers cattle operators classroom information as well as practical demonstrations on how to do it as well as what some sick animals look like internally. Cowboys doing the actual caring for sick cattle can benefit a lot from the program.

The day-long clinic begins at 9:00 a.m. and will conclude at 3:00 p.m. Registration is from 9:00 to 9:30 with coffee and donuts furnished. At 9:30 a.m. "Cost Effective Management of Stocker Cattle" will be discussed by Dr. John McNeil, Extension Beef Cattle Specialist, Amarillo.

At 10:30 a.m., "Effective Treatment of Shipping Fever' will be discussed by Dr. Larry Hollis, Technical Services, Syntex Animal Health and former Case Coordinator, Texas A&M Vet. Medical Diagnostic Lab, Amarillo. At 11:30 a.m. Dr. Roger Wyatt, Immuno Modulator Labs, Inc., Stafford, Texas, will discuss "Interferon's Role in a Cattle

Health Program' A free B-B-Q lunch will be provided at lunch by program sponsors for everyone in attendance. In order to help plan for the noon meal, please call in for advance reservations by Nov. 5. Call the Gray County Extension Office - 669-7429

The afternoon part of the program will involve live animal demonstrations. At 1:00 p.m., the topic is "Do It Right While They're In The Chute." Cattle will be utilized to demonstrate the proper method of utilizing several products and how to apply certain animal health skills for a more effective treatment program.

The final session will start around 2:00 p.m. and is titled "What You Can Learn From a Necropsy", by Dr. Larry Hollis and Dr. Dee Griffin, Staff Veterinarian, Pioneer Hi-Bred International. A few cattle afflicted with various ailments will be necropsied to show the relation between physical symptoms and pathology of various diseases.

All interested cattlemen are invited to attend this meeting coordinated by the Texas Agricultural Extension Service.

Second Banker's Classic set for Nov. 2

Bankers Bowling Classic is scheduled for Saturday, Nov. 2, beginning at 2 p.m. at Harvester Lanes.

The handicap singles tournament for both men and women is sponsored by the First National Bank, Citizens Bank and Trust, National Bank of Commerce, Security Federal Savings and Loan, First State Bank of Miami, First Bank and Trust of White Deer and the Pampa Men's and Women's Bowling Associations

Entry fee is $25 with $500 added to the prize fund by the participating banks. Entry deadline is Oct. 31 at midnight.

Only members of the Pampa Men's and Women's Bowling Associations are eligible to enter.

Entries bowl eight games across 16 lanes with the bowler with the highest score after each game receiving $25 for high handicap game. The $25 prize is limited to one game per bowler.

Handicap is based on the highest year book average for the 1984-85 season. If a bowler does not have an average from last season, the highest 21-game average from the 1983-84 or the 1985-86 seasons will be used. If a bowler does not fall into one of these three categories, then a 200 average must be used. The current average must be used if it is 10 or more pins higher than the past two seasons.

Maximum handicap for men is 35 pins per game and 45 pins for women. Handicap is 75 percent of the difference between the bowler's average and 200, unless

The second annual Pampa that handicap exceeds the maximum pinfall allowed.

The prize list is based on 60 entries with the top 15 places receiving money. Estimated first prize is $400, plus a trophy for the winner. In case of a first-place tie, a one-game rolloff will determine the winner.

Pete Evans won last year's Classic

Borger slips by Canyon

BORGER - Borger's Bill Compton threw for two touchdowns to lead the Bulldogs to a 12-10 District 1-4A win over Canyon Friday night.

Compton threw a 15-yard touchdown pass to Charles Walker to give Borger a 6-0 lead in the first quarter. Canyon came right back with King Hodson's 65-yard scoring strike to Tommy Wallace. Chad Griffin's PAT gave the Eagles a 7-6 advantage at the end of the first Canyon extended that lead to 10-6 at halftime on an 18-yard field goal by Griffin.

That lead stood up until the fourth period when Borger's Wayne Dickson recovered a Canadian fumble at the Bulldog 42-yard line. The fumble recovery started a Borger TD drive in which the Bulldogs covered 58 yards in 11

Harvesters hurt by turnovers as Dunbar posts 14-8 victory

By L.D. STRATE Sports Editor

Take away Lubbock Dunbar's first and last possessions of the game and Friday night's important District 1-4A encounter would have had different results.

But those two possessions were enough to cost Pampa. Rey Inguanza's 21-yard run and Nelson Pearson's 53-yard jaunt gave the Panthers a 14-8 win over the Harvesters Friday night in Harvester Stadium. Both scores were set up by fumbles.

The loss evened the Harvesters' district record at 2-2, giving them only a slim chance at making the playoffs with two games remaining Scoring opportunities galore were lost by both teams.

Pampa had more first downs (15-12), but got inside Dunbar's 21 three times the second half without scoring. Dunbar led in total yardage (307-245) and penetrated the Harvester 16 twice the first half, only to come up empty.

Pampa fumbled the ball away three times the second half, but finally launched a long scoring drive with time running out and Dunbar leading, 14-0.

Pampa rode the passing arm of quarterback Brent Cryer on the 12-play, 77-yard TD march. Cryer's 19-yard pass to Gary Jernigan put the Harvesters in the end zone. Cryer, who completed three consecutive passes on the scoring drive, ran the conversion with only 17 seconds remaining.

The second half was a frustrating one for the Harvesters to say the least. Pampa's defense kept Dunbar bottled up inside its own 41 on the Panthers' first four possessions. It was No. 5, however, that broke the hearts of the Harvesters. With Pampa on Dunbar's 47, a pitchout was fumbled and the Panthers recovered on the Dunbar 47. On the very next play Pearson went up the middle unmolested for the score with 4:06 to go in the game. Brian

Jones' PAT made it 14-0.

Dunbar's defense kept Pampa oinned down in its own territory the first half, but the second half was a different story as the Harvesters moved the ball almost, at will against the Panthers. On their first three possessions, the Harvesters moved to the Dunbar 9, 21 and 11. But a pair of penalties and two fumbles stopped the Pampa scoring threats.

Jernigan had 100 of Pampa's 187 yards on the ground, 103 of those coming in the second half. Cryer completed 7 of 11 passes for 58 yards and also rushed for 55 yards on six carries.

Michael Lewis, starting only his second game at quarterback, directed Dunbar's wishbone attack. He threw only three times with no completions, but rushed for 54 yards on 9 steps. Pierson gained 143 yards on 18 carries while Inguanza had 85 yards in 15 carries.

Pampa took Dunbar's opening kickoff and marched to Dunbar's

49, picking up two first downs along way. After running back Mark is was dropped behind the line of scrimmage twice for losses, Cryer threw to Courtney Nickleberry who appeared to have enough yardage for a first down. But a hard hit jarred the ball loose and Dunbar's Brian Jones recovered on the Pampa 48.

Five plays later and aided by Lewis' 15-yard quarterback keeper, Inguanza found a hole in the middle of the Harvester line and scampered 21 yards for the TD with seven minutes remaining in the first quarter.

"We didn't play well that first half, either offensively or defensively," said Pampa head coach John Kendall. "We moved the ball well that first series, but that turnover hurt us."

Pampa drops to 3-5 overall while Dunbar is 5-3 for the season and 2-2 in league action.

"I don't know if the kids were too keyed up or too nervous, or what it was. We knew Dunbar had a good ballclub with some talented players."

Kendall was much more pleased with Pampa's second-half effort, which saw the Harvesters rip off 11 first downs compared to only three for Dunbar.

"I felt like the kids came out ready to play that second half, Kendall said. "That second touchdown really hurt because the kids weren't prepared on that

Pats' coach not taking Bucs for granted

By BARRY WILNER AP Sports Writer

Could Patriots Coach Raymond Berry really be talking about the only winless team in the National Football League?

"It's strange about Tampa Bay at this point, from the perspective that you look at their films and they're playing tremendous football against great competition," Berry said of the 0-7 Bucs, who play host to 4-3 New England this Sunday

They've got all the weapons that any defensive coach hates to face. There's speed at the receivers, a big tight end who can catch and the great running back.'

The Bucs also haven't beaten anybody, and that makes Berry leery, even though his team comes off an impressive defensive effort in a 20-13 win over the Jets, which snapped New York's five-game winning streak.

"It just points up the reality of the fact that there's not a whole lot of difference between a team that's 0-7 and 6-1," said Berry. "It's good for the NFL and it's also a reason why every week there's really not any difference in getting ready for someone. Everybody you play can knock your block off. It doesn't make any difference what their record is.

Despite their poor start, the Buccaneers are playing decent football. Their last three losses have been to the unbeaten Chicago Bears and Los Angeles Rams —in Top-ranked Hawkeyes this is not the same team which lost all those games to them." The Bears come off a spotty victory over Green Bay on Monday night, while the Rams could virtually knock the defending Super Bowl champion 49ers out of the NFC West race with a victory.

Bears Coach Mike Ditka is worried about the Vikings, who lost to Chicago 33-24 earlier this season.

"They've changed their thinking since the first time we saw them, he said. "Their 4-3 record is legitimate. They're playing better defense. We fear Minnesota because they know how we play defense and they're very well coached in every area.' As for the Rams-49ers battle, LA

Coach John Robinson noted: 'Obviously it's a huge game for both teams. If the 49ers are going to make a comeback, they better get started Robinson wouldn't be surprised by a 49ers' surge "They're the guys wearing the (Super Bowl) rings," Robinson said. "If they put nine wins in a row on the board, which they're capable of, they're 12-4 and in the playoffs regardless of what we do.'

Pampa High golfers finish fall season

The Pampa High golf teams competed in their final matches of the fall Saturday. The Lady Harvesters played at Dumas where they had a team total of 396, making it the first time Pampa has broken 400 this fall. Jessica Baker led Pampa with a

91 while Kim Harris and Delynn Ashford each had a 98. Becky Starnes and Robin Rohde each had Pampa defeated Borger (435) and Caprock in the triangular. In another triangular at Dumas, Amarillo High shot a 359 to defeat Tascosa and Dumas. Amy McDougall led Dumas two-member team with an 80.

Dalhart shot a 425 to defeat Palo Duro and Hereford in a third triangular. "I was real encouraged with the way our girls played," said Pampa coach Frank McCullough. "By breaking 400 for the first time this fall, it gives us something to work at for the spring season. It was the first time Kim (Harris) broke 100, so she was pretty ecstatic.

In two boys' triangulars at Plainview, Pampa shot a 309 to defeat Caprock (400) and Palo Duro (409). Dyran Crosier led the Harvesters with a 74, followed by Monte Dalton, 78; Brian Loeffler, 78; Jody Chase, 79, and Brian Hogan, 84. Out of six teams playing the Plainview course, only Amarillo And High's 307 bettered Pampa's score. Amarillo High defeated Plainview (310) and Hereford

"We beat Plainview by one la stroke on their own course, so I was pretty proud of that accomplishment," McCullough said. "I'm also very encouraged by that fact that we've shot four rounds in the 70s this fall." Pampa High is scheduled to play in a tournament at Roswell, N.M. sometime in February, McCullough said.

That gives us a lot of time to work on our game," he added.

The victory moves Miami into a second place tie with Harrold and a step closer to making the state playoffs. The teams own 3-1 district marks and meet in the final game

The Warriors must first travel to Guthrie, a 41-28 loser to Higgins Friday night. Miami needs to win both games to assure itself of the MIAMI - Larry Hawkins calls school's first playoffs berth in more than 10 years.

"We hold our destiny in our own hands," Hawkins said. "We've got to win the next two."

Miami appeared primed Friday night, leading 37-0 before Benjamin could score. The Warriors frustrated the Mustangs' top rusher Jeff Pierce and with hard hitting limited Benjamin to 164

"Our defense was fired up and ready to play," Hawkins said. "(Pierce) ate us up last year, but we stopped him. It was a hard-hitting game."

Hawkins labeled his defense the Bruise Brothers earlier this season because "all good defenses have to have a nickname." He said that unit was "exceptional" Friday

"All six of my starters played well. They'll get after you," he said, giving extra praise for the play of John Locke and Brett Byrum. Miami's defensive effort was further aided by a fumble recovery by Clint Wheeler and an interception by Lloyd Cook. Offensively, Miami racked up 489 total yards as Jeff Bass gained 132 yards on 15 carries and Ronnie Wright added 103 yards on 12 tries. David Scott gained 82 yards on eight rushes and Byrum ran seven times for 41 yards. The Warriors were seven of 12 for 124 yards Cook's interception halted the Mustangs' first drive, then Miami got things rolling when Wright scored on a 10-yard jaunt. The kick failed but the Warriors led 6-0.

That lead became 13-0 in the second quarter as Wright scored from five yards away and Miami passed for a single point.

Then Byrum and Locke made their presences felt on offense, teaming up for a 40-yard touchdown completion. The PAT pass failed and the Warriors took a 19-0 lead to intermission

A 16-yard run by Bass and a 10-yard dash by Scott helped spur Miami in the third quarter as the Warriors went ahead 37-0.

Benjamin got its lone score on a 1-yard run by Pierce. The Warriors' final touchdown came on a 40-yard Scott to Shawn Deaver pass. Miami saw three touchdowns called back in the game, including a 70-yard run by Steve Anderson in the fourth quarter.

Miami moved to 3-1 and 4-2 overall. Benjamin fell to 2-3, 2-6. Hawkins said the win should tell the district that his Warriors are legitimate contenders.

"This will wake 'em up," he said. "They know we're for real now." He also thinks Miami has what it takes to make the playoffs.

"I think the kids are determined they're going to be in it," he said.

Tigers tie Gruver, save playoff shot

GROOM — Six minutes were left and Groom's season was on the

The Tigers, trailing Gruver 15-7 and knowing a loss would kill any hopes they had of reaching the state playoffs, were 75 yards from the end zone and facing first-and-20.

"I think they probably thought that was the last opportunity we were going to have to do it," Groom head coach Jimmy Duncan said.

So the Tigers did, overcoming the first down holding call that started the drive and marching to

Then, with 1:35 to play, Jack Britten went the distance to make it 15-13. Groom still needed a two-point conversion. It got it. Brent Thornton passed to Britten as the Tigers tied the Greyhounds 15-15 and stayed alive in the District 1-1A playoffs hunt.

'We did what you've got to do if you're ever going to be any good and that's come from behind," Duncan said. "We felt pretty good about it."

For the tie is better than a smooch with a sister for the Tigers. Groom came out with a 16-10 advantage in first downs, and though the teams are tied for third with 3-1-1 district records, Groom has the upper hand because of the first downs gained. Phillips holds second place with a 5-1 record but still must face the Tigers in the final game of the season

The Tigers have to win their remaining games against McLean, Booker and Phillips to reach the state playoffs, but their fate is entirely up to them.

"It's the same ol' cliche," Duncan said. "We've got to line up and play 'em one at a time.'

Yet the remaining games might be meaningless had the Tigers not rallied against Gruver, which was highly regarded in preseason forcasts but has failed to meet expectations.

Groom held Gruver to 172 total yards and Ken Ruthardt had an interception for the Tigers. Groom drove 80 yards for a touchdown to open the game. Thorton score from a yard out and Britten made the kick as the Tigers took a 7-0 lead.

Gruver rallied in the second quarter as Tim Stedje hit Mark Gilbreath on a 10-yard scoring route to make it 7-6. Gary Murray's conversion try failed and Groom took a one-point lead into the third

Campbell wary of struggling Cards

ST. LOUIS (AP) - Houston Oilers Coach Hugh Campbell was happy that his team exploded for 44 points last Sunday and broke a five-game losing streak. But now he's a bit worried, having seen what a team is capable of when its back is to the wall.

This Sunday, you see, the Oilers play the St. Louis Cardinals, whose backs are definitely against the wall.

The Cardinals, 3-4, dropped their third straight National Football League game last weekend, a 23-10 decision to Pittsburgh, while the Oilers, 2-5, were rolling over Cincinnati 44-27.

Houston's victory was its first since an opening-day upset of the Miami Dolphins and its best offensive performance of the season, which reaches the halfway mark this week.

In St. Louis, the Oilers face a highly rated team that has not been able to score consistently since a 43-28 pasting of Green Bay on Sept. 30. In subsequent losses, all on the road, to Washington, Philadelphia and the Steelers, St. Louis scored a

Campbell said in a telephone news conference that he expects the Cardinals to be charged up Sunday

"I'd be surprised if they weren't," he said. "It was a surprise they didn't win the last three games. It happens to all teams. Everybody goes through

To end a slump, he said, a club has to play an emotional, mistake-free game. Like the Oilers did against Cincinnati.

"It had to help," he said of the victory. "We're a young, spirited

Against the Bengals, running back Mike Rozier, the 1983 Heisman Trophy winner from Nebraska, played his finest NFL game. The former United States Football League back rushed 17 times for 75 yards and a touchdown, and caught two passes for 56 yards.

Rozier played in the USFL's spring season with the Jacksonville Bulls before jumping to Houston, but he said the non-stop football hasn't tired

"I still feel fresh," Rozier said. "I'm happy playing football."

When he started with the Oilers, Rozier spent a lot of time watching other people get the ball. Campbell said it took the 5-foot-10, 198-pounder a while to settle in the Houston offensive system.

"My spirits were never down," Rozier said. "I just needed the opportunity to play. It was just a matter of time until they put me Mental mistakes caused the Oilers' skid, Rozier said. "We're a good young team," he said. "When we haven't made mistakes, we've won.

The same can be said for St. Louis, which started the season with two victories before dropping four of its next five games. Against Pittsburgh, the Cardinals committed three turnovers that led to 13 Steeler

Coach Jim Hanifan said the defensive unit played well against Pittsburgh, but the offense has been tentative.

Mustangs stampede 'Horns

By DENNE H. FREEMAN

AP Sports Writer.
IRVING, Texas (AP) Tailback Reggie Dupard scored four touchdowns and linebacker Kit Case intercepted two passes Saturday to ingite the Southern Methodist Mustangs to a rmashing 44-14 Southwest Conference thrashing of the 19th-ranked Texas Longhorns.

It was Texas' worst loss to SMU in the 69-year history of the series and was the Mustangs' first victory against the 'Horns in Texas Stadium. Texas' previois worst loss to SMU was 20-0 in 1935 and no Longhorn team had ever yielded so many points to the Mustangs. SMU, which is on probation and not eligible to win the SWC title, is now 4-2 overall and 3-1 in conference games.

Texas dropped to 4-2 overall and 2-1 in SWC play because SMU's games count in the standings for the Mustangs'

Texas got an inkling it wasn't going to be a burnt orange day when SMU scored on a bizarre 95-yard play in the third quarter that had the crowd of 56,874 buzzing.

Coby Morrison broke from the SMU 5 to the Texas 43 where he was hit and fumbled forward to the 'Horn 31. Jeffrey Jacobs picked up the bounding ball without breaking stride and scored to give SMU a 27-6 lead.

Dupard scored on two short runs and a 41-yard dash in the ond half after taking a nine-yard scoring pass from quarterback Don King for a 13-6 SMU halftime lead. Dupard rushed 25 times for 117 yards.

Texas' again relied on placekicker Jeff Ward for its offense. Ward, who kicked five field goals last week against Arkansas, hit shots of 42 and 43 yards against the Mustangs.

The 'Horns scored their first touchdown in 12 quarters late in the game on Bret Stafford's 15-yard toss to Russell Hays.

King scored on a nine-yard run for the Mustangs and set up another score on a 44-yard pass play to Jacobs.

Texas Aggies outlast Owls

By MICHAEL A. LUTZ

AP Sports Writer HOUSTON (AP) — Texas A&M safety Domingo Bryant caught as many Rice passes as the Owl's leading receiver to help the Aggies overcome an error-filled afternoon for a 43-28 Southwest Conference victory Saturday.

Bryant intercepted three passes, and his 49-yard interception return for a touchdown in the third quarter helped the Aggies overcome four lost fumbles and one interception.
"I had the choice of hitting him or going for the ball, and I made a good choice," Bryant said of his touchdown return. "They played great up front. They had the quarterback scrambling when I got those interceptions. We always seemed to be in the right coverage.'

Anthony Toney and Roger Vick each contributed two touchdowns to the Aggie victory.

"I was running real good and our running plays were working real well," Toney said. "Rice did what we expected on defense. We all ran hard but the good blocking helped me out.'

Toney said the Aggies feared a comeback by the Owls similar to last week's 29-27 victory over Texas Tech.

'We couldn't let them come back like they did against Texas Tech," Toney said. "We had to keep scoring points to keep them down.

Rice Coach Watson Brown said, "Number one, I don't think we played very well. No. 2, I think we played a good football team. Add the two up and you have 43 points." Rice receiver Darrell Goolsby caught three passes for 78 yards to lead Owl receivers. The Aggies, 5-2 for the season and 3-1 in SWC games, ended Rice's winning streak at two games. The Owls dropped to 3-4 for the season and 2-2 in the SWC. Toney's touchdown runs of 5 and 2 yards, Vick's 1-yard dive and quarterback Kevin Murray's 11-yard touchdown pass to Shea halftime lead. The Owls took a 12-7 first-quarter lead on runs of 2 yards by Wayland Mason and 3 yards by Antonio Brinkley.

Walker rallied the Aggies to a 29-19

Rice freshman quarterback Quentis Roper hit a 67-yard touchdown bomb to Darrick Wells in the second quarter. Bryant returned a third-quarter pass by Roper 49 yards for a touchdown, and Vick's 40-yard touchdown run opened up a 43-22 lead.

Bryant also had a second-quarter interception that set up Walker's 11-yard touchdown catch and picked off his third pass in the fourth quarter at his own 10-yard run by Brinkley, kept the Owls within striking distance. The Owls were forced to settle field goal and a 16-yard touchdown for Hamrick's 48-yarder after an apparent 26-yard touchdown pass from Roper to Wells was nullified by a penalty.

A&M's Eric Franklin narrowly missed a 54-yard field goal attempt with 9:40 to play.

Roper, who replaced starter Mark Comalander, left the game with four minutes to play with a shoulder injury. He returned, however, in the closing seconds and finished with six completions on 19 attempts for 150 yards.

Toney was the game's leading rusher with 116 yards on 25 carries and Murray completed 16 of 25 passes for 195 yards.

Freshman Ed Freeney blocked A&M's first punt of the game to set up Rice's early 6-0 lead. Mason ran the final two yards and James Hamrick missed his first extra point of the season.

Freeney also stripped A&M quarterback Craig Stump of the ball and Tim Hum recovered prior to Brinkley's 16-yard touchdown

The Owls went ahead 12-7 after Brinkley returned a kickoff 73 yards to the A&M 27 prior to his 3-yard touchdown run.

Jimmie Hawkins' 25-yard punt return set up Toney's second-quarter touchdown.

CHILDRESS - Out there somewhere, in the wet October fog, are the lost dreams of a Canadian football team.

Left are the cold letters and numbers - Childress 18, Canadian - that hardly seem to tell what happened here Friday night.

For, in the minds of a team of young men who awakened Saturday morning to find their playoffs dreams all but vanished in damp air, the memories will not fade quickly.

They will be as vivid and bitter as the game itself, and so numbered and exact that Wildcats' head coach Paul Wilson relived them aloud as he stood looking over the damp, empty field, his voice soaked in frustration and his eyes far, far away

They read like a coroner's list for a body that doesn't think it should be dead, which the Wildcats all but are in the District 1-3A playoffs race.

Childress scores on its first possession. Canadian blocks the extra point kick, but the Wildcats are flagged for offsides and then the Bobcats carry in for two. A 6-0 game becomes 8-0.

Trailing 8-2, Canadian drives and appears to convert a fourth-and-12 into first down at the Childress 10. Officials rule that Dan Dockray's knee touched the ground three yards back and the Bobcats take over. Wilson is livid on the sidelines.

"It was a terrible spot and as key a play as any," he said.

Instead, Childress drives from its 13 to the Canadian 5. Clint Johnson tries to pass to Carl Depew in the right corner of the end zone. A Wildcats' defender hits the ball, but Depew catches it falling out of bounds, is ruled in, and the score swells to 15-2.

"Our poor old kids swore up and down that he was out," Wilson said. "I'm gonna search that film out good for that.

Canadian bounces immediately back and drives to the Childress 6. The Wildcats are flagged for illegal procedure, then intentional grounding. They fail to score. "A big play," Wilson said, staring at the end zone. Canadian scores midway through the third quarter to make it 15-9 and forces, then recovers, a Childress fumble on the kickoff. The Wildcats fumble the ball back on the next play. Childress drives for a field goal.

"Momentum really hurt us," Wilson said. "We scored and get the fumble and fumble right back to 'em when we had a chance to take the lead."

Canadian makes only three first downs the rest of the game.

There are other memories Wilson has too much class to relive in a newspaper. The official version goes like this:

Childress received the opening kickoff and drove the ball 80 yards for a touchdown against the Wildcats. Bryan Tucker broke a 14-yard run and caught a 21-yard pass from Johnson as the Bobcats moved to the Canadian 21 in nine plays.

Then Johnson ran a bootleg left and carried to the Wildcats' 1. He scored on the next play. Canadian blocked Joe Gorman's PAT, but was penalized and Tucker then bulled in for two to give the Bobcats an 8-0 lead.

The Wildcats didn't get a first down in the opening quarter, but they scored on its final play.

Depew was attempting to punt from his 2, but a bad snap slithered through the wet grass and his hands, and Depew was forced to fall on it in the end zone for a safety. That made the score 8-2.

Childress kicked off to the Wildcats. Bobby White hit Jeff Kirkland for a 20-yard gain as Canadian drove to the Childress 22. On fourth and six. White ran right a first down, but a clipping call put the 'Cats back on their 25 facing fourth and 13.

White hit Dockray, who appeared to make the first down with a lunging effort, but the referees marked the ball short of the needed yardage.

Then Johnson completed three passes for 37 yards and Childress drove to the Canadian 5. Johnson threw to Depew and his catch was ruled in bounds. The PAT kick was good and Childress took a 15-2 lead with 2:16 left in the half.

Then White hit Kyle Prater on a 21-yard post route; Childress was whistled for pass interference; White ran for nine and Shawn Wright popped around left end for 33 yards to give Canadian a first and goal on the Bobcats' 6 with 1:09 to go before intermission.

Then the Wildcats got two straight flags and their fourth-and-29 effort was a White pass that Childress' Mike Ward intercepted.

Canadian's second possession of the third quarter brought the 'Cats within striking range. The Wildcats moved 32 yards to Childress' 27 in seven plays before Wright made another long run.

Childress' Sonny Stall broke up the middle on the kickoff return but fumbled when he was hit near his 40. Larry Watts recovered for Canadian at the Childress 36.

Wright fumbled trying to go left on the next play and the Bobcats' David Morrow fell on the ball.

Childress drove into Wildcats' territory and Tucker kicked a 32-yard field goal with 1:15 left in the third. The Wildcats then drove to

Childress' 37, but Kevin Foley intercepted a White pass there. Denny McLanahan recovered a Johnson fumble after the Bobcats drove to the Canadian 7, but Canadian never got another first Childress is tied with River Road for second place at 2-1, and is 6-2 overall. Perryton is 3-0 and almost a lock for the championship trophy. Canadian is 1-2 (5-2) and somewhere in the fog.

McLean stumbles

McLEAN - McLean's offensive woes continued here Friday night as the Tigers fell to Follett, 42-0.

McLean has scored just 14 points this season and found itself thwarted again by the Panthers. McLean managed only 54 yards of total offense while falling to 0-5 in District 1-1A play and 0-7 overall. Follett moved to 2-4, 2-5.

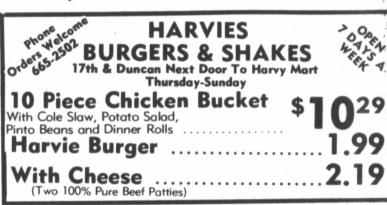

The Panthers first score came on a 30-yard first quarter run by Brent Boone. Eric Bourquin's kick gave Follett a 7-0 lead.

In the second quarter, Shawn Jurgenson passed 20 yards to James Hendricks and the Panthers went up, 13-0.

But what doomed the Tigers happened later in the quarter when Follett trapped McLean for a safety, then the Panthers' Jason Corcoran returned the kickoff 60 yards for a touchdown, making the score 22-0. Boone later scored on a 6-vard dash to make it 28-0 at the Jurgenson rambled in from 30 yards out in the third quarter and Steve Neptune scored from two yards away in the fourth as Follett made it 42-0.

Mistakes marred the game as McLean turned the ball over seven times. The Tigers recovered four Follett fumbles but were unable to convert any into a score.

Trucker turned actor says he's not Hollywood type

By JUNE FORD Longview Morning Journal

TERRELL, Texas (AP) - When a 36-year-old Terrell truck driver took a bit part in a locally made movie it propelled him into an acting career

Ten years later, Harlan Jordan still lives in Terrell, but he's a working character actor for Texas-produced movies, television shows and commercials.

There have been more productions in one month in Texas this year than in all of 1975, said Jordan, who was in Longview to tape a commercial.

Jordan said he knows of only two movies made in Texas in 1975, but in 1985 approximately 40 movies will be made in the state.

Jordan, who plays a sheriff in CBS' "Dallas" this fall, says, "That's a good indication. Another growing market is commercials.

"I don't think we will ever replace Hollywood. Hollywood is going to be the movie place, but it is picking up here.

Jordan said in the last 10 years more actors have moved to Texas. Although it increases his competition, it gives producers a better labor force and increases the chances of more movies being made in the state, he said.

Jordan has worked in television and radio commercials, industrial films and movies and appeared in magazine and newspaper ads.

At one time, Jordan was the voice behind both KXAS TV's Action News and the Channel 8 News in the Dallas-Fort Worth area. He is the narrator for the state's industrial film, "Texas -Live the Legend.

He says he gets to play law officers and truck drivers a lot because of his large frame. Jordan does stand tall at 6-foot-2 inches. and, at about 220 pounds, he's not a lightweight.

But Jordan said he didn't start out to be an actor, he just fell into the part.

'I fell into it by accident in Terrell. I got involved with the community theater there. When they came to interview actors for "Drive-In," a few of us went down. I'm the only one who got a role. I played a truck driver, which is what I had done for 15 years," he said.

The movie's director introduced Jordan to an agent and he began free-lancing as an actor.

Mostly I play small parts. That's what you get here. If you want to get bigger parts you have to go to Hollywood. But, I'm not the Hollywood type. I wasn't born an actor," he said.

To keep from becoming a starving actor, Jordan raises hogs and chickens and has a garden, he said. "This is one actor who ain't going to starve."

Jordan said he's fortunate he began his career at 36 since the competition is so stiff among younger actors.

"When you get to middle age, there is less competition and more parts. I'm lucky I didn't start at 20 or I probably would have quit."

Still a bachelor, Jordan said being an actor hasn't helped his bankroll much. "I'm sure not a rich man, but I'm

Paint store does everything but put it on

By JENNIFER JONES Associated Press Writer

SHAWNEE, Okla. (AP) - Bob Sanders has been waiting on customers since before he could reach the brass cash register — a fixture at one of Shawnee's oldest businesses where the creed of his wife is to treat customers like friends and friends like family.

Wirfs has been in Sanders' family since the early 1900s and the nickle-plated cash register has been ringing up sales of paint and brushes since the store's doors opened for the first time in 1902.

"It works perfectly," Lillian Sanders says of the register, mounted on a set of wood drawers.

"Only thing wrong with it," Bob says, "you can't get enough money Bob leans against the desk at the rear of Wirfs - the same desk he couldn't reach when he was 8 and started helping his dad around the store, mixing paint and dusting shelves that reach clear to the high ceilings. Paint then, he says, came in wooden crates he would stand on to see over the counter or would take apart, stencil with the name Wirfs and nail to fence posts along Pottawatomie County roads.

It was a great way, he says, to get poison ivy. He remembers, too, thinning paint by placing the can in a vat of hot water, adding turpentine, and stirring. If he had a cold, he says the vapors cleared out his lungs in

Bob would climb the ladders that roll the length of the store and reach the ornate ceilings to turn each can of paint upside down for one month, and then right side up the next to keep it from getting record time.

Mixing paint is easier now, he says, and the electric shaker and mixers are his few concessions to the electronic age.

Like the owner before his father, who refused to get rid of the gas lamps because he wasn't sure electricity was here to stay, Bob keeps the store much the way it

Heels click on the wooden floors, paint chips from the metal ceiling Lillian says architects covet. The smell is of wood and art supplies not musty, just old-timey.

Records are kept by hand, credit is a customer's for the asking, and paint is delivered. 'We do everything but put it on,"

Lillian says.

She calls her customers "Sugar" and when she asks them how they're doing, she wants to know.

"When we say how are the kids, we really mean, 'How are the kids?"' Lillian says.

While she is helping the grandchildren of her first customers, Bob is on his fifth generation. They've been selling the same brand of paint, Devoe, since 1912. The store has moved once, in the 1920s, from one downtown Shawnee building to

J.P. Wirfs opened his store in Galveston, Texas, in 1899 but decided to move to Shawnee and took the business with him in 1902 five years before Oklahoma became a state. Bob's father. Curtis Sanders, began working for Wirfs in 1909 and bought the business from him in 1923.

When the elder Sanders died in 1957, Lillian says she "came down (to the store) to help Bob make "I'm still making adjustments."

"We get along good to be together 24 hours a day," Bob says.

'I'm just easy going.'' Bob and Lillian were born across the street from one another - he some 70 years ago and she some 60 years ago, and were married in 1948. Her parents moved to Shawnee as newlyweds and his mother was born there, when it was still Indian Territory.

"You want to know how permanent we are? We have cemetery lots here," she says. 'That's as permanent you can

Their roots are deep in the town about 40 miles east of Oklahoma

"You grow up in a small town and you know people, they're not strangers," she says.

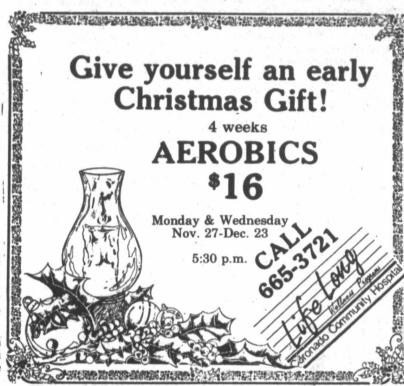

"We go to paint meetings and people say 'What have you been doing to be in business so long?' We just try to be honest. We just try to treat people like we want to be treated.'

Lillian says she was shocked when a customer she considered a friend told her they were actually acquaintances. She'd never looked at it that way before. Yes, she says, the woman was probably right.

"Really and truly, when you boil it down you are acquaintances, Lillian says. But that line of thinking isn't truly Lillian's.

> St. Vincent's Catholic School is to host its yearly Halloween carnival from 11 a.m. to 6 p.m., today, at the school. The Guadalupanas are to prepare and serve a Mexican dinner beginning at 11 a.m. today and continuing until the carnival closes. Hot dogs, chili, nachos, pies and cakes will also be available.

At the carnival, a costume contest starts at 1:30 p.m. for two age groups, 0-5 years and 6 to 11 years of age. Prizes will be awarded for first, second and third

Games for young and old alike will also be offered at the carnival as well as a Haunted House sponsored by Catholic Youth.

Tuesday, Austin Elementary School Booster Club is sponsoring its second annual chili supper and carnival from 5:30 p.m. to 7:30 p.m. at the Austin School cafeteria and gymnasium. Proceeds from this event will go towards the booster club's school projects. Last year, profits from the supper and carnival were used to buy three air conditioners for class rooms and tables for the first grade reading circles, as well as learning centers homemade fruit cobbler, tea and coffee. Each grade will sponsor a booth of all types of games for all ages. A bake sale and cake walk will also be available.

Thursday morning, on Halloween, preschoolers can begin their Halloween festivities by attending Lovett Memorial Library's Preschool Story Time and Halloween Party at 10 a.m. in the library. Children, ages 3 to 5, are urged to come in costume for a party, Halloween stories, fun and refreshments. Story tellers will also be costumed. Younger brothers and sisters are also invited to join in the fun. The library hosts Preschool Story Time each Thursday at 10 a.m. for all youngsters, ages 3 to 5. The Halloween party is part of their regular weekly program. Another highlight of the week's events will be the Halloween parade and party sponsored by

City of Pampa Parks and Recreation Department. Costumed trick-or-treaters of all ages are encouraged to meet at Lovett Memorial Library at 5:30 p.m., Halloween night, for a police escorted parade down Foster Avenue to Central Fire-Station. TSA advises Halloween safety precautions

AUSTIN - As the October onslaught of ghastly ghosts, terrible trolls and startling skeletons approaches, Texas Safety Association (TSA) suggests sensible precautions to keep Halloween happy and safe for your children and home.

"When in doubt, throw it out," advises George Gustafson, executive vice president of TSA, when discussing Halloween treats. "If a food or candy item has no wrapping, or the covering is loose or torn, discard it. Wash and slice fruit before allowing your child to eat it. Concerned and considerate treat-givers might help by providing non-food items, such as pennies or nickles, snack food coupons or bright decals for the children's school binders,"

Common sense and prior planning play a big part in assuring your youngster's safety and enjoyment, while still allowing them the thrills of this fall celebration. A few suggestions include:

-Pre-planning the route, staying in familiar neighborhoods and only visiting homes that show the trick-or-treat signal of a lighted porch or yard.

-An older teenager or adult should accompany young children on their journeys. Older children walking their route with friends need to thoroughly discuss safety rules with parents beforehand.

-Set time limits for their travels. Some communities designate Halloween treating hours. Also, take into account that Halloween falls on a week night this year, which means that the costumed imps and aliens turn back into students early the next

-Costumes and masks should not restrict movement or eyesight, or trail on the ground. Face paint or normal makeup products can provide frightening effects while allowing freedom of sight. Use lots of light colors in costumes, or reflective tape, and pass out plenty of flashlights. Dark of night adds to the thrill of the celebration, but hides the dangers of curbs, stones and cracked sidewalks.

-Make certain your yard, driveway, porch and sidewalks are free of obstructions if you are handing out treats to the tiny revelers. If you're driving, take extra care to watch for small, ghostly pedestrians.

rganization is key to effective clutter control

By DONNA BRAUCHI County Extension Agent

Few of us are exempt from the cliche, "If a little is good, then a lot must be better." This attitude often promotes overbuying and collection which, in turn, can produce clutter in our homes. Organization is the key to controlling the clutter in our lives. This is the first in a two-part series on organizing for clutter control. Homemakers and business managers alike seem to think there is some secret formula to getting organized. The secret doesn't lie in getting "organized" so much as it does in wanting to get the job done and committing yourself to do it. Think of organization as a dynamic process, not a product - a journey, not the destination.

You should start that journey by setting goals of what you want to accomplish. A goal is what you decide you are going to have, get, do. or be. In order to be useful, your goals need to be specific.

It also helps to put your goals in writing, you have gone from some vague wish for the future to making a stronger commitment to seeing your goals materialize. And, having your goals in writing gives you some reinforcement when the going gets tough and there doesn't seem to be an end in sight.

Both short-term and long-term goals should be met to help you achieve what is most important to you. Long-term goals are eventually achieved by first achieving a series of short-term

Prioritize your goals based on what is most important to you so that you will work on the most important goals first target dates for reaching your goals. Target dates help you track your progress and create a challenge within you so that you will think and act with a sense of

There are several gremlins to organization. The first is task-orientation versus goal-orientation. A person who is goal-oriented concentrates on the larger goal and works on tasks which will help meet that goal. A' task-oriented person may do a task simply to get it done, but does not see the significance in a bigger picture. If we look at household organization only as a group of ated tasks that need to be done. we can put them off indefinitely if the only reason we see for doing them is to get them off our list of things to do.

Proscrastination is another big enemy of good time and work management. One of the major reasons for procrastination is failure to have clear-cut goals. Sometimes we procrastinate because our standards are too high we're perfectionists - and if we don't have time to do a job perfectly, we just put it off until we Another reason for procrastination has to do with how we perceive the problem. If we see only the big job instead of the small portion that is really the problem. we are less likely to act to correct the problem because the whole idea of taking on the big job is exhausting.

If procrastination is one of your habits, there is hope! You can make some changes. Try practicing one idea or action for a period of 21 consecutive days. Within that time, the habit should become established in your subconscious so that you would feel uncomfortable not doing it.

Distractibility is one more of the gremlins to organization. It is easy to get sidetracked when doing a series of tasks. Having a plan to refer to periodically helps keep you from being easily distracted.

Clutter may well be the major gremlin working against good household management. Many of us have an aversion of getting rid of things. We somehow seldom think we are being wasteful, so we rationalize our collecting behavior It seldom occurs to us that by sticking back all those "things" over the years, we are taking resources out of circulation. When we give away or sell things, we no longer use or need, we are putting those resources back into circulation

Basically, most of us have too much of everything. We need to take stock of what we have and gain control over our things or they will wind up controlling us.

Pampan's granddaughter helps raise $62,000 for child's transplant

Lisa Nix, granddaughter of Leta Flynt of Pampa and the late J.W. Flynt, was one of five Fort Stockton girls who began a fund raising campaign to pay for a life-saving liver transplant. She's the daughter of Donna Flynt, a 1967 graduate of Pampa High School.

Through the girls' efforts, three-year-old Luis Levario has received his transplant, and $62,000 to help pay for it.

little boy's plight from a fourth grade teacher, who said something needed to be done. The girls decided to help by gathering items for a garage sale. Once the garage sale items were sold, the girls began to flag down motorists to ask for contributions. They raised $229.41 that day, but their drop in the bucket kicked off a flood of contributions and other fundraising events for Luis.

Working as a volunteer for the Pampa United Way can provide experience and training for later

Dean Copeland, currently chairman of the Commercial Division of the 1985 campaign, is gaining the training to prepare him for heading up the fund raising drive next year.

Serving in a campaign cabinet position this year, Copeland is also drive chairman - elect. In January, he will replace the 1985 United Way drive chairman, Charlie Loeffler.

In addition to working as a volunteer, Copeland also has been aiding Loeffler in the drive this year, the two meeting on Thursday afternoons at the Hospitality Room in Citizens Bank and Trust Co. to receive the check-in reports from the division volunteers

Copeland also has been taking time to become more familiar with some of the United Way funded agencies and programs, recently visiting the Meals on Wheels volunteers as they prepared to make their routes

Copeland noted that the local agencies assist other area residents, not just those living in Pampa. Volunteers in White Deer have joined the campaign efforts this year, seeking contributions from residents and businesses there.

Meals on Wheels delivers more than 100 nutrionally balanced meals each weekday on a pay - as you - can basis to the elderly and handicapped through the efforts of 200 volunteers each month. The service also includes visiting and

Ann Loter, director of the program, said approximately 125 residents are being served now, with an average of 75 to 80 volunteers assisting on the routes weekly. Volunteers come from the Lions and Kiwanis clubs, various church groups, Epsilon Sigma

The volunteers work on varying schedules, Loter noted. Some work once a month or once a week, while others deliver a week at a time or whatever, she said. Others serve as

Two new routes have been added recently to take care of the number being served in the program, she

The volunteers take the meals to the residents. In some cases, they visit with the people and make check - ups for feedback on health and other needs, Loter explained. Some residents use the service regularly, while others use it only for short periods following illnesses, hospital stays or accidents, she explained.

Payment is based on a number of factors, Loter said. Some pay none, while others pay a full price, depending on income and other standards. For example, in case of illness, someone may lose their income for awhile and not be able to pay the full price or any cost, she noted. The guidelines are varying and flexible to suit the needs of those using the service.

Besides assisting with the Pampa United Way fund drive, Copeland also serves as a member of the High Plains Epilepsy Association board and of the Mental Health and Mental Retardation board, associated with the services offered by Pampa Family Services. The High Plains Epilepsy Association and Pampa Family Services both receive United Way funds.

The United Way agencies "need the support of the community because of services available that require local funds to complement state and federal funding," Copeland said.

In other activities, Copeland is a member of the Pampa Chamber of Commerce's Health Science Committee, the Pampa Club and the First Baptist Church.

He and his wife Carolyn have two daughters, Nan Copeland and Neysa Brown, and a son, Mike Copeland

Copeland explained the scope of the various locally headquartered agencies assisting White Deer and other area residents.

The Gray County Chapter of the American Red Cross, for example, handles the bookwork and provides materials for Red Cross swimming lessons in White Deer, Copeland

Some of the Red Cross loan closet recipients have been White Deer residents, he added. In addition, CPR classes have been conducted in White Deer, and the local Red Cross office also has provided White Deer residents with service to those in the military

Using the services of the Adobe

White Deer serving 24 girls. Genesis House places youth from all over the state of Texas. It has had clients from White Deer and Skellytown in the past, Copeland

Though currently operating only in Pampa, the Meals on Wheels agency would be willing to work with smaller communities in the area if those communities provided volunteers to pick up the meals in Pampa and make the deliveries, he

The Pampa Community Day Care Center is licensed to serve clients within a 50-mile radius. Currently, the Day Care Center is providing care for three White Deer children that are under protective custody and for two other children. The center also employees one staff member from

The Pampa Family Services serves area residents and has clients from White Deer.

The Pampa Sheltered Workshop currently has clients from Skellytown and Miami, Copeland noted White Deer is currently home to some ex-clients.

Most members of the Pampa Senior Citizens Center are from Pampa, but other area senior citizens are guests quite often at the luncheons and activities.

The Salvation Army has no service unit of the Pampa office in White Deer, Copeland said. However, the Pampa office has offered food and utility assistance in White Deer and other nearby cities. In addition, Christmas baskets have been distributed in White Deer. And the Army's Thrift Store in Pampa has distributed clothing to White Deer residents in to the entire area, Copeland said. The Tralee Crisis Center for Women, the newest United Way agency, thus far has sheltered one White Deer woman and her children. It also has had calls from other White Deer residents.

Copeland stressed that the United Way offers services and assistance to other area residents. not just those living in Pampa. He lauded the efforts of volunteers in White Deer working with the campaign drive this year and said he hopes to see other area cities participating in future drives.

READY TO DELIVER - Dean Copeland, left, Pampa United Way campaign volunteer, assists Meals on Wheels volunteer Dudley Steele to pick up a thermal chest containing hot meals to deliver on one of the routes. It's not too late to tell you about the trip Leta Flynt and her son Michael and Gracie Cantrell took to the Northwest - with stops in Colorado, Utah, Idaho, western Montana, Spokane, Grand Coolee Dam, Seattle and down the coast to California where they toured the Winchester and Hearst castles. Gracie, an octogenarian scaled every flight of the many flights with the greatest of ease. Trips like that are nice to remember. Birthday congratulations to Eloise Kitto, who celebrated her 75th birthday last Saturday. Family, friends and customers stopped by her place of business, The Pampa News Stand, to share the occasion and wish her well. Charlotte (Mrs. Bob) Cooper, director of nurses at Coronado Community Hospital, was honored on two occasions recently. For her birthday, it was a pot plant for her newly redecorated office plust a party. On Bosses Day, they took her to lunch and gave her a pink corsage.

Tammi Pke, Charlotte's secretary, was named CCH employee of the month. Tammi, ospital activities chairman for 1985, headed the United Way campaign at CCH.

Betty Wells, a nurse, was named to ACT - action, cooperation and teamwork - an honor roll for administering the Heimlich maneuver to Virgie Wessner, a hospital volunteer.

One more word from CCH... About 50 people, hospital and townspeople alike, attended the first session of the Long Life Wellness program directed by John Charles.

How nice it was to see you at M.K. Brown Auditorium last Saturday. EVERYBODY was there having all the fun you would expect to have at a Country Fair. It was a success with a capital S!

RECYCLE, DON'T BURN

RECYCLE, DON'T BURN
Rather than burning leaves or hauling them to the dump this fall, why not use them for a compost pile? The resulting compost will provide a good source of organic matter for potted plants, for topdressing the lawn and for building up the soil in flower beds and shrub borders.

There are many ways of composting leaves and other vegetable matter, but the simplest method is to alternate four-to-six-inch layers of vegetable matter such as leaves, grass, etc. with two-to-four-inches of good garden soil. If available, manure can be added to the soil layer to good advantage. The compost pile should be four-to-six feet wide and any desired length depending on material and space available.

Sprinkle a commercial fertilizer on each layer of vegetable matter to hasten decomposition, using about one-half pound, or one cupful, or any good commercial fertilizer with a 1-1-1 ratio per 10 square feet.

The top layer of the compost pile should be soil and the surface of the pile shoud be dish-shaped forming a basin to hold water. Each layer of organic matter should be watered thoroughly before adding the soil layer. This is especially true when composting leaves as they can be extremely slow to decompose if too dry. The pile should be watered thoroughly when completed and additional water should be added as needed to keep the material moist but not soggy.

Turn or mix the compost with a garden fork or shovel every three to four months to speed up the process as it aerates the material. It should be ready to use in six months to a year. The use of commercially available compost activators will reduce the time required for decomposition only if used according to directions.

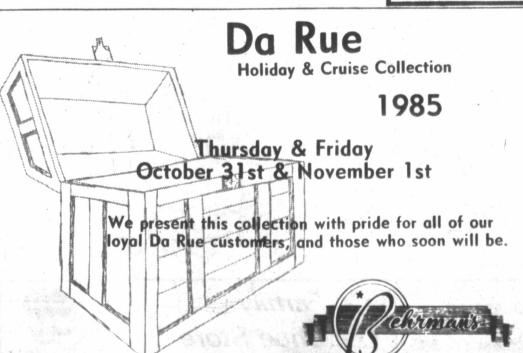

Well prepared compost can be utilized anywhere peat moss is

PERENNIALS FROM SEEDS

Perennials have been increasing greatly in popularity over the past few years and many growers are interested in growing their own plants. Seeds offer an inexpensive way of production, but unfortunately there is little written information available on how to handle the seeds for best germination. A recent publication, Germination Needs of Common Perennial Seed by M.M. Pinnell, A.M. Armitage and Diane Seaborn (Research Bulletin 331, January 1985) is now available from the University of Georgia, College of Agriculture Experiment Station, Athens, GA 30602. This publication gives information on germinating 50 common perennial plants. Though not successful with all species, these workers found what treatments would not work and made recommendations for possible improvements. Alos included is a section on the recommended germination treatments in the horticultural literature. The publication is free.

Couple turn vintage Cadillacs into couches

By SUE MAJOR HOLMES Associated Press Writer

SANTA FE, N.M. (AP) — When rock 'n' roll great Bo Diddley visited Sherry Stein's Santa Fe home recently, the first thing he did was plunk down on her couch and cruise back through the memories of the 1950s.

Stein's couch affects a lot of people that way — it's made from the rear end of a 1959 Cadillac, the chromed, finned epitome of a hygone era

"It so delights people in a way," Stein said. "It's quite wonderful as a piece in your house. It's a way of iust entertaining people."

Stein and Jody Norskog have made four Cadillac couches, two 1959s and two 1960s. They cut off the back ends of junked cars, then use the distinctive fuselage-like fins, lights, chrome and bumper as the arms and frontpiece of the couch, building a frame in the back and putting inside a leather seat reminiscent of one from a Caddy of the era.

The project began when the artists decided to do something "in appreciation of junkyards, the wonderful shapes found there," Norskog said.

"We began looking more and more at the Cadillac as an icon of an era," he said. "It's something people immediately recognize. If we did it out of a Buick, no one would believe us."

The first couch was simply a project for Norskog and Stein to do together on weekends and in between their regular jobs. They worked on it for years before Norskog's wife, Katherine, scheduled a "coming out" showing in May 1984 at the Santa Fe Cadillac dealership.

The couch was displayed in the show room amid the new cars and Norskog and Stein appeared in formal evening dress.

Norskog said that before the couch was put on exhibit, he and Stein had talked about it so much that some of their friends imagined they already had seen it.

A gallery owner saw the dealership display, and the couch, a black 1960, was next shown in her gallery. There it promptly was sold.

The artists decline to say how much the couches cost, except to place the price tag in "the thousands."

"If we lowered the craft to lower the cost, it would not be the same at all," Norskog said.

Each couch takes hundreds of hours to do, not including the time it takes to locate the Cadillac bodies in the first place.

However, Norskog and Stein now have all the Cadrllac pieces they need, having harvested a batch at a junkyard in Mineral Wells, Texas, where "we lopped off a dozen and brought 'em back," Norskog said.

"First you have to tow them to where you can cut them up," he said. "Then you have to get rid of the carcasses."

"Tearing them up is a big part of it," Stein said. "And then we want all the pieces. We have boxes of pieces. We save all the Cadillac emblems."

They also make their own frames for the couches, do all the sheet metal work and the upholstery and paint each couch with 20 coats of "The body work is a craft," Stein said. "Every detail is as perfect as possible. We do it to keep it as " beautiful as possible."

The artists said they've taken a lot of criticism for chopping up old Cadillacs, but they said the bodies they use come from junkyards and are destined for destruction.

"We've gotten a lot of flak about cutting these up," Stein said. "But we're saving them. Mashed every day in lots all over."

They bought their first Cadillac body from an Espanola junkyard dealer, but when they went back for two others they'd spotted, "he'd had them crushed," Stein said.

"And we were crushed," Norskog said.

Stein and Norskog said they really want to do a series of Cadillac couches, going through all the body styles of the '50s to 1960, then photograph the couches in remote settings for a series of postcards.

They've already done two postcards, one with a white Cadillac couch sitting in the parking lot of a neon-lit Mexican restaurant in Santa Fe, and the second with a black couch sitting on the edge of a remote road near Galisteo.

Stein said the series will take years.

"We'll have to have commissions to finance our passion," she said.

Man likes feel of roots on skin used to carry a fish-filled fiberglass briefcase and once engineered a pool in a car, walking around in grass suits really isn't all

Bill Harding says he simply likes the feel of roots against his skin. He also likes the gapes he gets when looking like a mossy Big Foot.

His friends call him "The Grass Man," but Harding calls himself an artist who creates a "personal, portable environment" in the form of grass-covered shoes, clothes and Harding was here this week to make a cameo appearance in a film and stopped by Dallas' Scottish Rite Hospital Wednesday to entertain children there.

"I'm not sure why I did it at first," Harding, a 27-year-old Chicago resident, said of his grassy creations. "I was just drawn to the idea visually.

And what a sight it makes. Earlier this year, he used a grant from the Illinois Arts Council to grow 37 of his suits. Soon after, he led a grassy tribe down Chicago's State Street that ended with a 20-minute "nature commune" on a park's lawn.

Harding's fertile mind seized on the idea when he was a student at the Kansas City Art Institute, where a friend was into hydroponic gardening, or growing plants in water with no soil.

His first grass-suited public appearance was in a June 1981 comedy skit at the Kansas City Market, where he carried a briefcase filled with fish and fled down sidewalks being chased by a friend armed with a lawnmower.

Shortly after, he cut a hole in a station wagon's roof, sealed its windows, filled it with fish and "Car Pool."

Since then, Harding he has grown grass on cars — "you should see how the wind slicks the grass back when you're driving" - and produced about 60 grass suits. He has modeled them for several magazines, including "People," and has dressed Johnny Carson in one for a "Tonight Show" segment. To produce his craft - he estimates each suit at about $30 all Harding needs is old clothes he buys at a thrift store and a dark room. He borrowed a Dallas resident's garage for his latest

He lays the suits flat on a plastic sheet, sprays them with a petroleum-based adhesive and then strews about 40 pounds of grass seed that he grinds into the fabric with a heavy roller.

After about 10 days of watering and tending, every square inch of the suits sprout long, lush blades of grass up to 3 inches long.

Harding says the clothes are comfortable albeit clammy - they must stay moist so the grass doesn't perish - and they "make you feel calm and peaceful. You can feel the energy of the living grass, and it makes my fingers tingle.

The clothes are fairly sturdy and can last up to three weeks with proper care. After that, the grass turns blond and "begins to smell like a barn.

Though they're not permanent, Harding holds out great hope for his artistic creations and the psychological impact they can

"Astronauts could use them as an Earth substitute," he said. "And I want to grow some in a prison and a senior citizens' home'

Woman develops dog seat belt

BREWSTER, Minn. (AP) — Puppy love prompted Nancy Smith to develop a modified auto seat belt for dogs.

Not only do her five dogs benefit from the invention, but she hopes to save the lives of others' pets as "If I can just prevent even one child from losing a pet dog ..." Ms. Smith said. "There's nothing worse than an animal or child in pain with needless suffering."

Ms. Smith, 33, lives on 12 acres of land near Brewster. They boast an old barn and a corn crib converted into a kennel and are known as Crossroads North Kennels and Stables. Those buildings shelter three horses, five dogs, six cats and four kittens, along with the dogs she boards for others.

Wholeheartedly in love with her pets, Ms. Smith refers to them frequently as her family. Tag-Along, the rat terrier-poodle cross she adopted six years ago as a graduate student, lent her name to Ms. Smith's invention. Tag-Along went everywhere with Ms. Smith, hence her name. She was smuggled into the campus library and went on jogging runs as a puppy, peeking over the edge of Ms. Smith's backpack.

As others joined the family, they came along for the ride too. And that created problems.

Pets, with their heads stuck out of car windows to enjoy the breeze, can tumble out of cars when sharp turns are made. Small dogs can wriggle under drivers' feet. Large dogs can leap into the front seat and onto the driver's lap. All spell potential tragedy, both for the driver and the pet, Ms. Smith points out.

"Tag is a good dog but she has a tendency to sit on my lap," Ms. Smith said. "That made it difficult when I slowed down or turned corners or shifted gears. And one time she saw a squirrel and she was all over the car!"

Ms. Smith first tried to solve the problem with a dog harness and a double lead, a leash with two collars. The lead was strung under a fastened car seat belt.

Success of the first improvisation was moderate. It was hard to remove the dog in a hurry because the lock was awkward and in the winter Ms. Smith couldn't operate it without first taking off her

Then one day inspiration struck. Ms. Smith went to a fabric store and got strips of cotton webbing and Velcro. She used rivets to. attached the strips to each other and after a little experimentation, Tag-Along had her own seat belt.

One end of Tag-Along's seat belt folds over the car's seat belt strap to keep the dog in place. The dog's chest, well below her neck, and down her back and sides.

Ms. Smith is now working with nylon webbing, and stitching has replaced the rivets to make the harness sturdier and keep the cost

Ms. Smith said she never thought about marketing the invention until a veterinarian suggested that the seat belt be patented.

Both the patent and trademark rights are pending, Ms. Smith said. There are other car restraints for dogs on the market, she said. But she sees flaws in them. One involves a sack that fits over the dog's body and ties under its neck.

Kennels are available for those who travel frequently with their dogs, Ms. Smith added. But they are expensive and take up a lot of room. A restraint such as the Tag-Along allows the pet owner to monitor the dog's comfort also, easily checking to see if the dog is too hot or too cold.

Right now, Ms. Smith customizes each Tag-Along she produces. The harness sells for $16.

"I'm investing in a concept I believe in," Ms. Smith says.

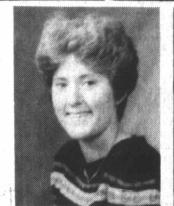

BEST FRIENDS - Nancy Smith's dogs, Tag-Along, Emmett Joe Kelly and Peanut, model seat belts for dogs - known as Tag-Alongs. Smith, of Brewster, Minn., a physical education instructor at Worthington Community College, invented the restraints, which are made of cotton or nylon webbing and

Dear Abby

Mr. Right doesn't measure up to woman's height standards By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I have never written to you before, but I have a problem I haven't discussed with anyone because I know I will get a lot of flak. I've been dating a wonderful man whose company I really enjoy. He's intelligent, sensitive, caring and kind, has a great sense of humor, and a bright professional future. We're both in our 30s and have a lot in common. My problem is that I am 5 foot 8 and he is 5 foot 6 1/2. I feel very comfortable with him-except when we walk together in a shopping mall, movie, restaurant or anywhere that requires us to stand next to each other.

In my heart I know what a good person he is, but in my mind I can't forget that I am taller. I suppose I am nuts to let this bother me, but it does. Please don't tell me to see someone about this because I am too embarrassed. I can't even tell my best friend or anyone in the family how I feel. Please help.

TIRED OF FLATS

DEAR TIRED: You are not nuts, and I won't tell you to see someone. The problem is your value system. The sum total of all his attributes is not as important to you as how you think other people perceive you as a couple. (As though they give a hoot or even notice that you are 1 1/2 inches taller than he.)

Retire your flats, put on your heels and start looking for a taller man. This "wonderful, intelligent, sensitive, caring and kind" man deserves a woman who will love him just the way he is.

DEAR ABBY: How does a mother get her able-bodied 28-year-old son to go out and get a job and start living his own life? I am getting too old and tired to support him. He has not worked steady since he graduated from high school 10 years ago. He hasn't worked a day in the last three years! He doesn't even try to find a ob. He eats and sleeps and watches TV. I've tried to talk to him, but he just goes into his room and slams Could you ask your readers who may have had some experience with this kind of problem how to handle it? I'm not financially able to support him forever.

DESPERATE WIDOW

DEAR DESPERATE: You don't have to physically throw him out. Give him a time limit to move his belongings, and if he isn't out by then, lock him out. And be sure to change the locks on your doors.

DEAR ABBY: We live in an oldfolks home in Oregon. Our ages range from 55 to 99 years old. We would like to know how women like us can find men to socialize with. Men are scarce here, and we can't get out to meet any. When we mention it to anyone on the staff, we're told we are too old to think about things like that. I don't think people ever get too old to desire companionship with the opposite sex, do you?

Don't suggest that we look over the men in this home. There are three women for every man here, and most of the men are in worse shape than we are.

OLD BUT NOT DEAD

DEAR OLD: You're absolutely right. You're never too old to desire companionship with the opposite sex.

You don't say where in Oregon you are, but I'll bet some publicspirited local service club would be willing to arrange transportation from the home to a senior citizens' mixer for a little recreational "fishing" expedi-

Research as geisha leads to book, movie

KYOTO, Japan (AP) — When Stanford University student Lisa Crihfield posed as a geisha in Japan to research her anthropology dissertation, she hardly expected that her book. "Geisha," would sell over 20,000 copies, or that CBS would woo her for the film rights.

Now, 10 years later, she's back in Kyoto, not to pour sake and smile for the Japanese elite, but to serve as a consultant on the television movie being made about her romance behind the paper screens.

The 26-year-old Crihfield, now Dalby, is convinced that geisha offer a glimpse into the true spirit of this country that rose from postwar poverty to economic supremacy.

"To understand geisha, you've got to understand Japanese attitudes on male-female relations, hierarchy, sense of humor, and respect for tradition," she said in an interview on the set at Toei Studios, as a kimono-clad actress whizzed by on a pink motorbike.

"Some people say geisha are an anachronistic relic of a feudal past, but if so, they wouldn't have sprung up again after vanishing in World

Nobody is certain how many geisha still exist in Japan. Police license figures show that from a peak of 80,000 in the 1920s, the number dropped to nil in 1944 and rebounded to 2,478 by 1947.

Dalby's research indicates 17,000 were working in the late 1970s. The kemban, local boards that now license geisha, have no overall figures but some say they "sense" a moderate revival in the affluent

"The geisha population tends to rise when Japan's economy gets better," explained Dalby. "It's kind of like the hemline theory."

Though a quintessential symbol of Japan, geisha suffer from a false image abroad and at home. Many Westerners assume they're simpering slaves - "which tells more about Western men's fantasies than about geisha," says Dalby — and even many Japanese think they're prostitutes.

In Dalby's eyes, geisha are Japan's unsung liberated women: They may fan egos at parties to earn their keep, but what truly supports them is music, dance, and their view of themselves as artists.

"The teahouse is the one place here where women run things and don't rely on husbands to support them," she said. "They're entrepreneurs who form a tight sisterhood based on a deep commitment to the traditional

Like many maiko, aspiring geisha who begin a grueling apprenticeship at age 17, Dalby was first drawn to the "willow world" profession by her love of the lute. Ironically, her Indiana upbringing suited her to the trade, though her broad shoulders and statuesque height didn't quite fit the vision of the silk-clad doll. "Japanese girls have to overcome years of conditioning in shyness and modesty to be able to socialize with men old enough to be their fathers," she explains. "As an American I had no such problems."

Catering to politicians, company presidents, and Kabuki actors who could afford the price of such status entertainment, Dalby saw sides of Japan's powerbrokers that few foreigners ever do.

"Japanese men get so silly when they're drunk it can be shocking to American sensibilities," she notes. "But there's something exuberant about their boyishness as an antidote to the formalities of everyday life."

Dalby feels she's grown up since then, and revisiting old haunts with a husband, two sons, and a third book on the way makes her keenly aware of what others may miss.

"The traditional split here between the good wives who stay home as loving mothers and the geisha or hostesses who party with the men is not one I philosophically agree with, but a good anthropologist never proselytizes.

There's a lot of things I don't understand about football. Take seats.

There is a scramble for them for months before the game begins. Fans will bring blankets and camp out all night in front of the ticket office. Corporations will pirate talent from other corporations by using tickets as a "perk." Scalpers will retire to a condo in Vail on their profits. People will stand around at funerals and whisper, "Who got his Super Bowl tickets?"

I went to a Super Bowl once and you know what? No one sits in those seats. There were more people sitting on the bench than were sitting in the stands.

Football games are a study in perpetual motion. No one sits.

One of the first things a football fan does is to look for his seat. This is really crucial and he is assisted by an usher who will move an entire row over to make sure his ticket and seat number match. He wants to know where it is... just in case he decides to sit in it. Having found it. he is off to fight the crowds to get a pillow for the seat so it won't be so hard... just in case he decides to sit in it.

Having dropped off his pillow, he goes in search of a program. A program is a necessity. Every seat ought to have a program on it just to show someone sits there... just in case... well, you know.

Once the game is underway, the ticket holders are off to join the lines of hungry and thirsty fans who queue up to line their arms with hot dogs, popcorn and beverages This takes him through the first quarter. He spends most of the second quarter trying to find his seat again. He remembered marking it with a cushion and a program. However, so did the other 104,999 in attendance, so it's a matter of climbing one row after the other trying to find his number. He dares not to sit down as it is nearing half-time and he must plan for his pilgrimage to the restrooms. If he waits too long, the journey will take him into another season, so he hotfoots it to the lower level to beat the crowd. The crowd has done the same thing.

On the way back to his seat, he drops off to sift through the t-shirts and key rings to mark the day he was here. As he approaches his seat, the game is in the final three minutes. As he prepares to sit down for the first time, the crowd rises to its feet as one. A team is on the three-yard line and is ready to

I've done a lot of thinking about all those seats. They were never built for fans to sit in They measure only 18 inches wide and there aren't 105,000 18-inch buttocks in this country that would fit in them at the same time

It's an inside joke. The only thing you buy a football seat for is to hold your pillow, your program and your stub for $37.50.

DINOSAURS FROM CHINA — A woman employee looks up at the completed exhibit of a spectacular dinosaur from China recently at the American Museum of Natural History in New York. This Mamenchisaurus dinosaur is 72 feet long with an enormous neck of 33 feet, believed to be the longest neck of any animal that ever lived. (AP Laserphoto)

Former helicopter pilot's new career is storytelling

Although storytelling in Arizona still is in its infancy, he says that nationally, in the last 10 years, the ancient art of storytelling has experienced a renaissance.

Freeman was here recently with stories of peace and reconciliation, stories "about the various ways, ingenious ways, that people and groups are able to resolve seemingly irresoluble conflicts .. stories to make people feel good about themselves as human beings.

Freeman did not start work as a toryteller until two years ago. He flew helicopters during the Vietnam War, and then he worked for 10 years as a private pilot.

A helicopter crash ended his piloting career in 1981 and left him with a broken back and both arms shattered.

But, he says, he knew his life wasn't over

During his 21/2-month hospitalization, Freeman remembered an intriguing article about the National Association for the Preservation and Perpetuation of Storytelling, an organization based in Jonesboro, Tenn., with about 2,500 members nationwide,

He sold a typewriter and a chain saw to raise money for a flight to the organization's annual conference, where five professional storytellers performed. "It was love at first hearing," he says. "I became very immersed in it then and I've never come up for air since. In fact, I'm going

Some of Freeman's stories are about his real experiences and others are pure fantasy. Freeman also tells folk tales from different countries.

Some of his stories are for children. "When I do stories for adults, the stories have a more complex story line," he says.

His stories can last anywhere from one minute to 25. And they are about a variety of subjects, he says, "as many themes as there are human experiences."

Storytelling is important, Freeman says. "It's a means that the human race passes on its acquired wisdom. It's important for us to learn our grandfather's grandfather's grandfather's lessons about life.

"It's important because it can touch places in people's emotions that they have forgotten about." he says. "It can wake up memories of childhood. It can wake up memories of friends they once

When people listen to stories they use their imaginations something television doesn't require of them, Freeman says.

Good storytelling is not necessarily attributed to timing, articulation or voice. Freeman says. "I think a storyteller having an open heart to life is the key. The stories have to have substance. depth, that comes from the storyteller to be really effective.'

Cruise on Missouri River is pop

CHAMBERLAIN, S.D. (AP) -The Missouri River Trader's pair of 190-horsepower diesel engines growled and groaned to launch the 18-ton pontoon boat on another

But once on the Missouri River near Chamberlain, the new tourist attraction glided effortlessly on the glass-smooth surface, hémmed in by the rolling bluffs that rise from the water's edge.

"You get away from it all," said passenger Rolland Spreckels of Chamberlain.

One passenger compared the ride to thick cream being poured out of a bottle - smooth, slow, Chamberlain insurance salesman Joel Schneider, 38," opened the business this summer from the landing just north of the Interstate 90 bridge across the Missouri River. He runs seven cruises daily aboard the two-deck boat. On Saturday nights, he hires a band and hosts-a party as the boat floats up and down the river. On Sundays, brunch is served on "To me, it's a natural thing to have in this location. I enjoy the river," said Schneider. "It's designed to be just a kind of relaxing time, where you can go and enjoy yourself and look at the beautiful scenery.

He hopes eventually to remodel the 15-year-old vessel and install a paddle wheel to make the boat more authentic.

Schneider expects to offer cruises through October and perhaps into November. He hopes to also use the boat to host business meetings and maybe even hunting

A Chamberlain couple already has been married on board, and Daniel Johan, a musician from Sioux Falls who played for one of the Saturday night cruises, has written a song about the river boat.

The first steamboat in South Dakota arrived at Fort Pierre in 1831, completely revolutionizing the fur trade, according to the "Robinson Encylopedia of South Dakota," published in 1925.

The discovery of gold in Montana brought more and more steamboats to the river, but travel died down once the railroad reached Bismarck, N.D., in 1871.

The discovery of gold in the Black Hills in 1876 revived steamboat traffic, and it peaked in the next five years.

Schneider said he named the over 60-foot boat the Missouri River Trader because it symbolizes the PUBO kind of vessel that once operated on the river. "There's so many queens and belles," he said, smiling.

New exhibit has wide range of India'

NEW YORK (AP) — "India!," the exhibition at the Metropolitan Museum of Art here through Jan. 5, earns its exclamation point - it's an eye-catching, sumptuous and multifaceted centerpiece to the nationwide Festival of India currently celebrating Indian

Planning for the exhibition began several years ago and, together with a festival of India in Britain in 1982, it helped generate the idea of a festival in this country.

The range of the exhibition at the Metropolitan includes the extravagance and delicacy of a carpet of pearls set with other precious stones; the vitality of a "primitive" life-sized wooden sculpture of a robust woman; the opulence of a 2-inch carved emerald, and daggers sheathed in rubies; the disciplined geometry of a pierced stone screen; the purity of a white jade wine cup.

There are paintings showing lovers in romantic gardens, elephant gods swimming in a celestial lake, bears, monkeys and demons, a treeful of larky squirrels, prancing peacocks and troops of cosmic dancers.

The 350 or so exhibits in a variety of media have come from princely collections, from the palaces of emperors, sultans and maharajas, as well as from villages and holy places, from collections in India. the Middle East, Europe and this country, including the Metropolitan's own collection.

They date from the 1300s to the 1900s and reflect a civilization that has received and assimilated influences from different major cultures, traditions and religions. The works are grouped into five frequently overlap.

The first, "The Great Tradition" centers around the classical Hindu period of the 14th and 15th centuries. Among its examples are bronze statues and sacred objects, exquisite ivory carvings, and a lavish 33-foot-long embroidered temple hanging that hasn't been exhibited outside India before.

The "Tribe and Village" section illustrates the timeless vitality of India's folk culture. Most of India's huge population still lives in villages, where things don't change so much and there's a continuity that balances the changing waves from outside affecting the nation's major centers.

In this section are a fine feathered headdress; vivid masks of wood and brass, bronze figures main sections which are only and animals; trappings for a roughly chronological, for they sacrificial buffalo — it was flow into one another and bedecked with gold, silver and cowrie beads; and a 15-foot-long cotton tomb cover dancing with color and movement, appliqued with a host of real and mythical

> "The Muslim Courts" covers the Delhi sultanate, and the dazzling achievements of the mighty Mughal dynasty which ruled India from 1526-1857. The Mughal empire included almost all of northern and central India; it embraced Hindu and European cultural influences, and patronized Persian manuscript artists.

The refinement of its pursuit of beauty is evident in the intricate detail of manuscripts and paintings, and bejeweled and jade personal accessories. There's a 17th-century 19-inch-long terrapin sculpted from a single great lump of green jade. And dominating this section is the largest object in the museum, a 17th-century "portable palace," a colonnaded 12-foot-high, 24-by 24-foot royal tent of red silk velvet, lent by Maharaja Sri Gaj Singhji II of Jodhpur.

Works of art from the Hindu kingdoms in the northwest and Himalayan hill states, dating mostly from the 17th and 18th centuries, form the section entitled 'The Hindu Rajput." They show a Mughal influence, yet retain distinct local styles. Their paintings deal with their history, egends and gods, their battles, hunting and love affairs, and are full of rhythm, color and life. A selection of handsome weapons is included - guns, arrows, cannon and daggers.

The last section is "The British Period," showing the effect of yet another major outside tradition on the subcontinent. Paintings commissioned by the British show the Indian response to the new rulers' styles, as do the photographs that begin to appear and catch some movingly powerful images of the period. Among the artifacts on show is a gilded silver and gold palanquin, dating from the 1840s, combining Hindu, Mughal and Victorian details, that is still brought out for religious occasions.

"India!" was organized by Stuart Cary Welch, special consultant in charge of the museum's department of Islamic art, and author of the handsome accompanying catalog. The National Endowment for the Humanities helped provide financial support for the exhibition.

Veteran trucker honored for his record of safe driving

ALONG HIGHWAY U.S.1 (AP) - There's a feeling of security driving the Overseas Highway between Miami and Key West, one of the most dangerous routes in the country, as long as John Ogden Jr. is behind the wheel. At 57, with 2.5 million lifetime miles logged without an accident, Ogden has been honored as one of the safest professional truck drivers in the country. "I'd do anything in the world to stop traffic accidents," says Ogden, who has been a driver for APS Inc., an auto parts distributor, for 10 years. But he's been driving trucks since he got his first chauffeur's license in his native Key West at the age of 16.

At 6 p.m. on this workday, Ogden is ready to roll. He's checked his loaded 10-wheeler at the APC shipping dock in Medley, an industrial suburb of Miami. The truck is a Mack diesel with five speeds forward. He'll drive around 350 miles, including deliveries in South Miami and in Kendall, before returning the following morning.

The distance between the Dade-Monroe county line to Key West is 112 miles, over 44 bridges, all two-lane. This stretch of U.S. 1 is where the greatest danger lies.

"Forty-nine people were killed on that road last year," reminds Ogden. "I saw six of them," he adds as he leaves the Florida Turnpike at Florida City to pick up U.S. 1, the "Overseas Highway" that ends at Key West.

"Give everybody the right of way," is Ogden's basic rule for safe driving. "And never lose your temper," he adds with a smile as a speeding compact car cuts in front without giving a signal.

Ogden's courtesy to other motorists extends beyond his driving habits. His safe driving award from Ryder Truck Rental was enhanced by Florida Highway Patrol praise for his reporting accidents, securing accident scenes and rendering help to stranded motorists.

Over the years, Ogden has pulled people from wrecked vehicles, plunged into the Atlantic to free a trapped driver, prevented several people from taking their own lives and helped countless others repair their vehicles or get assistance. Ogden also alerts law enforcement agencies on adverse road conditions and will report what he considers a dangerous driver.

"I'm never in a hurry," he said during a coffee break in Key

Largo. He's also a strong advocate of obeying speed limits, although he would favor posting speed limits of 65 miles per hour.

As a professional, he would like to see road tests become mandatory for license renewals. And, he adds, "I'm 100 percent against drinking."

Ogden is extra cautious in Marathon, where an extensive road-widening project is under way. But caution is his norm. 'At night, always slow down and be extra careful where you know people are - like at a nightclub or

In Summerland Key, there's a near-midnight stop at the trailer of Eloise Draper — "Yankee Leu" on citizens band radio - where fresh coffee is always ready for regular truckers on the keys route. Draper, a senior citizen, is well known in the Lower Keys for her volunteer work. She also serves as a CB relay point for truckers.

A half-hour later, Ogden is back on the road to Key West, where he lets himself in at a Big A Auto Parts Store to unload most of his

We've Got Your Number. Think Security.

Security Federal, we've worked better than 55 years at becoming the largest and most trusted Panhandle-based savings and loan association. We've accomplished this by providing a stable, long-term financial base from which our customers can benefit. And by maintaining a hard working managerial staff in whom clients can put their trust.

Of course, being number one isn't everything. We would be proud of our long-standing tradition for quality service even if we were number two. But we're not. We're number one. And that means something.

AP Television Writer LOS ANGELES (AP) - Peter Strauss shrugs at the notion that it was a difficult transition for him to go straight from seven months of filming the miniseries "Tender Is the Night" to another four months on "Kane & Abel."

'' Maybe it's creative schizophrenia," he suggests. 'It's training. That's what I'm supposed to do. I'm an actor. It's my responsibility to shift like that. When I was younger I did repertory theater. You changed characters all the time."

Strauss spent seven months in France and Switzerland working on "Tender Is the NightA as the phlegmatic Dick Diver. He stars in this British adaptation of F. Scott Fitzgerald's novel about a psychiatrist who marries a mentally unstable woman after World War I.

'When I finished, I had just 10 days to get that Polish accent for Kane & Abel," he recalls. "I had a Polish musician badger me. He wasn't a teacher. It was just a matter of listening and putting it together. The Polish dialect is not like any other dialect. You don't lose it in time. You improve your use of articles and verb tense. And I had to do it out of time sequence."

"Kane & Abel," which spans six decades of the 20th century, was filmed in Toronto, New York and The contrast between the two miniseries and the two characters pldvid by Strauss is enormous. "Tender Is the Night" moves with a pace so slow it would take a glacialist to measure it. "Kane & Abel" gallops at a fast clip. It's grab hold and hang on. And Strauss' Abel is as lively and driving as Diver is stoic and Showtime pay television network will show the six-hour "Tender Is the Night" in four parts, beginning Sunday night and ending in late November. It also stars Mary Steenburgen, as Nicole, John Heard and Sean Young. CBS will telecast the seven-hour "Kane & Abel" in three parts on Nov. 17, 18 and 19. Sam Neill plays Kane and the all-star cast includes Veronica Hamel.

"It was very interesting to see how one country interprets another's literature," says Strauss, referring to the BBC version of "Tender Is the Night."

About "Kane & Abel." Strauss says, "I'm not one of those people who find making pictures fun. You would have thought Abel would be a fun part, but toward the end he goes through some very emotional times. I can't shut myself off from that. But I will say that working with director Buzz Kulik was wonderful and I'd work with him again. I can't say that about BBC."

NEW DUET - Dan Seals and Marie Osmond are a new duet. Their first song, "Meet Me in Montana," was No. 1 on country music charts. (AP Laserphoto)

Village folks say they talk to the dead

EDITOR'S NOTE — There are few spookier places at Halloween than the moss-draped hamlet of Cassadaga, Fla., where communion with the dead is a cottage industry and spirits are taken seriously the year around.

By GREG MYRE Associated Press Writer

CASSADAGA, Fla. (AP) — The evening mist hangs a soft halo over Spirit Pond as Halloween approaches, and some folks around this Central Florida village think that's the ideal time to talk with the dead

The spirits appear in visions, in voices, and In the candle's gentle flame, Cassadagans say, and no one raises an eyebrow if you mention you've just spoken with your husband — who died 20 years ago.

The outsider sees only an aging, silent town with empty streets draped in Spanish moss, but the vibrations from those who have "passed over" to the spirit world fill the air with magic, the townsfolk say.

"This place has a special aura," says the Rev. Darleen Misskelley, one of Cassadaga's 30 mediums. "You feel something here that goes beyond the five physical senses."

Ms. Misskelley is one of about 75 members of the Cassadaga Spiritualist Camp, the group that forms the heart and soul of this tiny hamlet. The Spiritualists believe in communication between "this and the spirit world by the means of mediumship." They claim the powers of prophecy, clairvoyance, healing, levitation, visions, the gift of tongues and revelations.

"People should be skeptical and they should ask questions," says Pheobe-Rose Bergin, 58, who considers herself a medium, a Spiritualist and a Catholic. "But those that don't want to delve into the psychic side of existence are in a sense spiritual illiterates."

"Seances, astrology, tarot cards are all valid ways to get in touch with the spirit world," adds

Mrs. Bergin, whose husband died last year. "Every so often my husband will turn a light on in the house to get my attention. It's just his way of saying, 'Hey, I'm still here."

Spiritualists have been drawn to this sleepy backwater since 1875 when George Colby led his followers from upstate New York under the guidance of three spirits named The Philosopher, The Unknown and Seneca, so the legend goes.

The town now numbers some 300 residents, including those who live on the grounds of the Spiritualist Camp, a 35-acre tract consisting of a sandstone church, a meeting hall, and several dozen high-peaked, white-clapboard, gingerbread homes reminiscent of rural New England.

Most of the camp residents are elderly women who venture out infrequently, lending a ghost-town quality to Cassadaga, even at high noon. Shingles advertising "medium" hang outside about two dozen of the homes.

The rumors of witches and warlocks and demons running amok is a strong lure to students from Stetson University in nearby De Land. Fraternities sometimes drop off pledges in Cassadaga's cemetery.

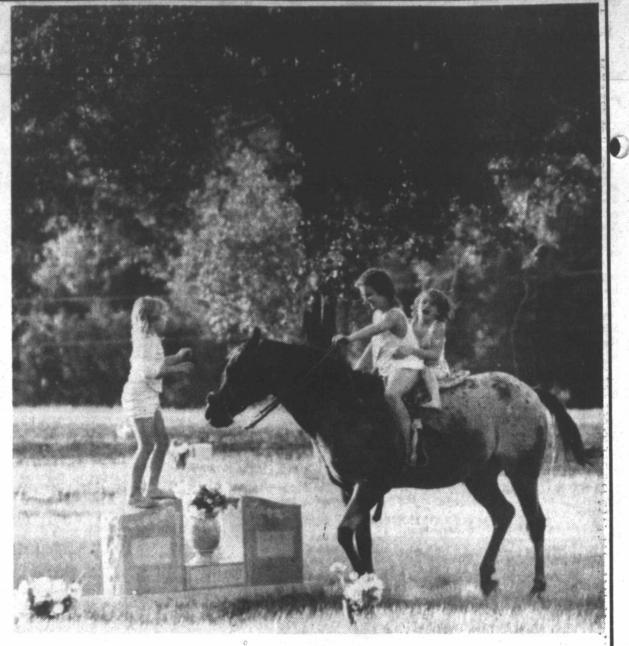

In past years, the Volusia County Sheriff's Department has found witchcraft paraphernalia in the cemetery and occasionally bikers hold court there.

When Rick Shaefer was a teen-ager growing up in nearby Sanford, he loaded up his car with friends and beer and went joy-riding through Cassadaga on Halloween

"We were just looking for fun — and witches," says Shaefer, a 34-year-old ex-police officer.

Three years ago, Shaefer came to Cassadaga for the first time since his youth. He was depressed, he says, having just broken up, with a girlfriend and nothing in his life seemed quite right. He agreed to a reading by a medium.

"She told me everything about my ex-girlfriend, her name, her efer says. "I opened my eyes and I saw him in the flame, talking and laughing."

High costs create insurance crisis in Texas

By KEN HERMAN
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN (AP) — They blessed the Freeport shrimp fleet as usual this year, but, for lack of insurance coverage, they did away with the traditional boat parade on the Brazos River.

"Insurance companies don't even want to take our calls," said Kenny Vandergrift, a Texas Shrimp Association director.

Texas Stadium, the Irving home of the Dallas Cowboys, paid $83,000 for $70 million worth of liability insurance in 1984. This year, the stadium could get only $40 million in coverage. It cost $400,000.

"We dropped a bunch of coverage. I'm not going to pay that. It's blackmail," said Jim Francis, executive vice president of the stadium.

"Eventually, the fans are going to end up paying for it," he added.

State Board of Insurance Chairman Lyndon Olson sees the problem every day as business groups come to his office for help.

"It is a serious, grave crisis," he said.

Insurance for many Texas businesses and government entities has become almost prohibitively expensive or flat unavailable.

It's a widespread problem:

—Texas restaurants are expecting the worst when many of their policies expire in February. The new policies will be far more expensive — if available at all — for things like liquor liability coverage, according to the Texas Restaurant Association.

"It has to translate into higher menu prices," said Richie Jackson, an association vice president.

The oil business has been down in recent years and the tank truck business has suffered with it. Rising insurance bills do not help. Steer Tank Trucks of Dallas, with 250 trucks operating nationwide, paid $650,000 for insurance last year. This year the same coverage costs $1.5 million.

"I feel like a prizefighter. I get knocked down, I crawl back on my feet and get knocked down again by this latest blow from the insurance companies. It's hard to take," said Terry Shope, company vice president.

—The city of Dallas has had no liability coverage since January. Too expensive, said Mark Ferraro, the city's risk manager.

"There's a lot of fingerpointing now about who's to blame," said Ferraro.

Simply put, insurance companies once again have to make money by selling insurance. For several years, big money was made by investing cash raised through premiums. Selling insurance was merely the method to raise investment cash.

When interest rates were high, commercial insurance was sold at bargain basement prices insurance was sold at bargain basement prices.

"They competed themselves into the ground," said Olson.

"They would cutthroat the prices. They knew they would make it up on investments," said Daniel Gutierrez, a Harlingen city administrative Harlingen budgeted about $250,000 for insurance this year. The city will spend about three times that amount.

"We made a lot of cuts in our budget in order to come up with this money," said Gutierrez.

Most commercial insurance lines have been caught in the crunch.

Tom Hardy, with the Alexander and Alexander insurance brokerage firm in Dallas, said he has had trouble finding directors' and officers' liability insurance for companies that need that protection for their executives. The problem is acute for financial institutions and energy firms, he said.

Some companies opt to do without, according to Richard Meek of Houston, president-elect of the Professional Insurance Agents Association

"You are taking a chance and rolling the dice," he said.

The bottom line, the insurance industry says, is that rates were too low for several years, and courthouses have become unfriendly places for insurance companies.

"The current trend toward liberal jury awards is a dangerous one and could force many businesses into insolvency," said Jerry Johns, president of the Southwest Insurance Information Service.

Rick Gentry, manager of the Austin office of the Insurance Information Institute, says the high premiums became inevitable when investment income declined.

"The chickens have come home to roost," said

Olson said everyone — particularly the insurance companies — were ill-prepared for the chickens' return. The insurance board chairman blames the companies for careless policy-writing in the high-interest days.

"The companies shot themselves in both feet and both kneecaps. There was no underwriting discipline. Their greed overcame their fear. They underpriced their product in order to get the premium income to invest." he said.

premium income to invest," he said.

"Yes, the chickens came home to roost. And the henhouse was not as strong as they thought. A tornado came blowing through. There are feathers and broken eggs all over the place. It's a mess," said ison. It's a mess that has left scores of cities in an insurance limbo. Some coverages have become too expensive. Some coverages — such as the pollution policy Harlingen wanted — have become almost nonexistant.

"The problem is a lot of companies are just cancelling policies, giving 30-day notice and saying, "We are not in this business anymore," said Gutierrez. "We can't go without it. We don't have enough money to take a chance and self-insure."

"A lot of insurance companies feel municipalities have high liability. Everyone wants to sue the city," he said.

Harlingen's problem is not unique, according to the Texas Municipal League, which has a self-insurance pool for cities. Bill Martin, TML's risk and insurance management services, said he is overrun with requests for coverage.

"We have probably 100 cities that are going completely bare right now. No coverage. If they were hit with a large claim, they would be forced to go to the taxpayers for relief," he said.

Insurance companies are 'bleeding economically," Martin added. "My heart doesn't go out to them, but they are suffering."

A major part of the problem is in the reinsurance market, the companies that insure insurance companies, Olson said. About 60 percent of Texas commercial coverage is backed by London-based reinsurance companies. Those firms have become wary of the changing rules and high-dollar civil court judgments in Texas and the United States, according to Olson.

Doll-sized playhouse treasure after 70 years

MIDLAND, Texas (AP) — It's not made of sugar and spice and everything nice.
But it's everything most little girls dream of, said

But it's everything most little girls dream of, said interior designer Mack Thomas.

Thomas' "pride and joy" — a doll-sized playhouse built some 70 years ago — "has lived a full life, yet it's only in its youth as far as enjoyment is concerned."

The heirloom stands in Midland at the home of Thomas and his wife, Shirley, awaiting further enjoyment by some "imaginative youngster."

The house actually has quite an unusual history, said Thomas.

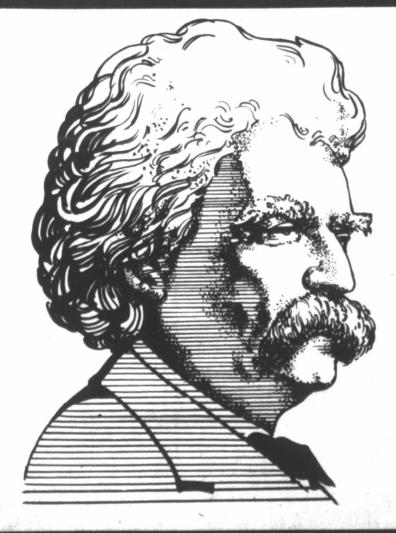

Built in Mangum, Okla, by Mrs. Thomas' grandfather, P.L. "Pete" Richardson, the house served as a retreat for twin daughters of a prominent family there. It later was sold to another family in a nearby town and re-appeared several years later in a Mangum barnyard as a temporary residence for two chickens and a peacock.

Mrs. Thomas' mother, Mrs. William J. Thompson, who watched her carpenter-father complete the playhouse 50 years earlier, discovered it resting in the barnyard while visiting friends in Mangum in

"It was almost as if we had uncovered a buried treasure," Mrs. Thompson said. "The youngsters for whom the house originally had been built used it for a long time, and then it was sold to another family in a nearby community,"

Mrs. Thomas said she had heard about the playhouse ever since she was old enough to remember.

Mark Twain Said,

"The spider looks for a merchant who doesn't advertise so he can spin a web across his door and lead a life of undisturbed peace."

Spiders don't lead an easy life. Newspaper advertising creates the kind of customer traffic spiders hate and merchants love. If you're a business owner who seems to be seeing far too many spiders lately, give us a call. Our retail display and classified advertising departments can create the kind of advertising you need to send lazy spiders on their way.

Parks does the job - in her own special way

Anita Parks at work

By DEE DEE LARAMORE Lifestyles Editor

Years ago when her dad worked for Northern Natural Gas Company in Skellytown, Anita Parks never dreamed that she would one day be working in the same place.

"I never thought I'd be doing any kind of work like this when I was a little girl. Back then girls were either a nurse or a secretary. It's not that way any more," she says.

Today, at 36, Parks has been employed with the company for about 12 years. Nine of those years were spent in maintainance and utility repair at the Skellytown gas production plant. For the past year she has been in measurement testing and repairing meters that monitor the natural gas pipelines going into the plant and taking gas

Parks confesses that she first applied at Northern "as a kind of a joke." She says she and her husband, Claude, had joked that it was useless for her to go to work if she couldn't make enough money to pay for the babysitter, etc. They lived in Panhandle at the time, she says, but while visiting in Skellytown someone told her of a job opening at Northern Natural. She talked it over with her husband and then decided to apply.

"I never in a million years thought I'd get (the job)," Parks remembers. But about a week after her interview with the company, she was notified that she had been hired. "The first thought that went through my mind was 'Well, now you've got it. What are you going to do with it?"' she says. She began in maintenance - a catch-all type of job that requires the worker to do a lot of practically everything. Parks cleaned and painted and mowed, maintained and overhauled the giant Cooper-Bessemer engines in the

"It's not like going to a secretarial job," Parks explains. "It's a dirty job and hard work. I had to adjust to that. When you the heavy work her job demanded. "At first there were things I couldn't lift. They were not that heavy, I just couldn't maneuver them like the men did. But in a couple of months, I could get them around like everybody else." She does this work by using her body weight and leverage, plus the company supplies plenty of devices to help lift heavy objects, Parks says. "I guess you can tell I'm a Northern - oriented person," Parks says with a shy smile. "A woman like me with just a high school education would not have many opportunities to do the technical work that I do here. I've gotten a lot of training through Northern that I wouldn't have gotten otherwise.

Married at age 15, Parks says that in itself was "two shots" against her.

'We've been exceptionally blessed," Parks says. After 20 years of marriage, she and Claude have two children, Lee, 18, a 14, a freshman at White Deer High School. Claude is a training specialist at Phillips Refinery in

"He's terrific," Parks says about her husband's support of her work. 'He's a supervisor with women who work under him and he knows what they can do. When I first started the job, his main concern was that I wouldn't like it. He didn't think I'd last more than a month. But he always let me know that I could come home if I wanted to. That took some of the strain off of it for me.

"Having a second income helped," Parks adds. "Claude says it took all the strain of having the only income off him, too. He says when the man is the only breadwinner in the house it puts him under a lot of strain. So I was able to help him with some back-up

"He and I have always worked together. When I was home I helped him work on the cars," she says. "Anything I can do to make the job easier on him makes me happy. And he does the same for

"As much as I love my job at Northern - and I always give 100 percent when I'm at work - my family comes first," she says. "But Northern is a family - oriented company, in my opinion. Everyone gets along well where I work. I know that that's not always the case, so I consider myself fortunate to work there. Of course,

Patman sees life thru kaleidoscope of humor

By PAUL PINKHAM Staff Writer

McLEAN - A funny thing happened to Lisa Patman on the way through life. It was life itself.

"I've always just thought life was incredibly funny and humor was the way to get through both the good and bad times," the former author of the "Loose Marbles" newspaper column said. "Some of my most serious columns were the funniest, I suppose, because I have a different outlook on life.'

Patman began writing column in 1978 after a friend, Mike Haynes, purchased the local newspaper. She went to work for him, writing straight news and a humor column.

"It was just sort of a spur of the moment thing," she recalled. "I had never written anything except in creative writing courses.

She wrote the column for four or five years before deciding to try to syndicate it locally. The column ran in several local papers, as far south as Refugio and as far east as the Fort Worth suburbs.

Most of Patman's columns took on domestic overtones, featuring the Marbles family, although she said that was not her original intent.

"I tried to stay away from that but, let's face it, that's what I am is a wife and a mother. I have an unusual family," she said, while adding that the Marbles were not really based on her own family. "I loved to do political humor but politics is such a scream anyway that it's too obvious.

Patman regards her attempt to go "on her own" as a "wrong move." Syndication just doesn't pay, she said, unless one signs on with one of the major syndicates those that distribute the work of writers like Erma Bombeck, Ann banders or Jack Anderson. It also involves being one's own boss.

"I'm a terrible boss and a terrible salesman," she said.

Patman also said, toward the end of her column writing days when she faced strict deadlines, she would try to save her humor for the columns, rather than tell a joke at a party or social gathering.

"I hoarded the humor, which was not very good for me," she remembered. "I became a very boring person.

Patman attributes her humorous outlook on life to her childhood growing up in Borger. "I was always kind of a weird little kid," she remembered.

"My father had a real dry sense of humor, my mother had a real open sense of humor and my brother was always kind of crazy,' she said. "I kind of walk a fine line between total insanity and absolute unacy.

Since ceasing "Loose Marbles," Patman has had more time for the other activities she is involved in. She works with young people at the local Methodist Church and keeps statistics for the McLean Tigers star tackle. Another son attends the University of Texas, where he is studying architecture.

The Patmans, Lisa included, have also been involved with an extensive remodeling job at their home — a project that has been in the works for about 10 years.

"We're nearing the end; we expect it to take not longer than 10 more years," she said.

And, she has also recently obtained her paramedic license and serves as a volunteer with the Association

"I really enjoy being a paramedic. I've always been really' interested in the human body," she said. "When my children were small, I'd be up there almost getting my nose stitched because I wanted to see what was going on."

The Patmans came to McLean from Amarillo when Lisa's husband, Ed, became a partner in football team, where her son is a the McLean Cattle Co. They have also lived in Fort Worth and > Since moving to Gray County, Lisa has been involved in a variety of jobs and activities. She recalled working at the tax office for a season and "was such a flaming success that they never asked me back there again.

But humor is not the only thing that sustains her through life's trials and tribulations. She spoke of a "great belief" that a better life awaits mankind.

Her medical training has taugh her to be detached and not dwell on sad situations she becomes involved with, such as the recent plane crash near Alanreed that killed a man, she said.

"All I can do is do my job and know that he's better off now," she said of the pilot who was killed. "I have a great belief that death is a new beginning and a much better

"To be mercenary, if I did not like it, I would not be teaching," she adds. "I think the poorest teachers in the field are the ones

And her teaching does not stop

"We're a small church, and we all have to pitch in," she said. "The class is people 50-80 years old and these are people who have studied their Bibles and that is a challenge to me."

Even when she retires from public education, which is not in her forseeable plans, she would like to continue teaching in parochial or private school.

Curl spent her first 12 years at Miami as a fifth grade teacher, but switched to second grade this school year.

She explains the difference: "In the second grade, school is still the priority. By the fifth grade they are branching out, music lessons. They're more into group parties."

"And it's harder now than it was back then," she concedes. "The children are maturing so much faster."

Fifth graders of today are interested in the same things that interested junior high students several years ago.

The challenge is still there. So is the joy.

She tells of a spelling lesson she shared with one of her students this week. The lad had spelled "stopping" with one p: stopping.

"I told him that you need another consonant with a short vowel," she remembers. "I had him spell wetting with two t's. And he looked at me and said 'I'm so glad you told me that. I never knew that before."

"And that is the joy of teaching," according to Curl.

"And it's so exciting to see the children go on," she adds.

Teaching should come easy for a woman with such experience and enthusiasm. It doesn't always.

"I thing the teaching itself comes easy. But there's a lot of preparation and planning, even in the summer," she explains. "We have a lot of teachers here who spend a lot of their evenings here, Saturdays, after church on Sundays."

"Of course, it's convenient for me. I just walk out my front door and into the school," she says proudly.

Curl lives in a small townish yellow two-story across the street from Miami School. It has a spacious yard where she's hosted parties for her students. Two rocking chairs sit quietly on the front porch. A dormer with a large picture window juts from the second floor and faces the school.

She says that's a bedroom that she's converted into an office.

She takes her work home with her; she takes it on vacation with her. When she visited the site of the Civil War Battle of Vicksburg this summer, she said she couldn't help but think of ways to share what she

Training children in the way they should go

By PAUL PINKHAM Staff Writer

"Suffer the little children to come unto me and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of God."

Mark 10:14 From inside the parked trailer comes the sound of children's voices singing.

"Good news, good news, Christ died for me." the song begins, the volume slowly increasing until, at song's end, the children shout, "that wonderful GOOD NEWS!"

Nine times a week, the scene repeats itself in Pampa. Children in neighborhoods from Prairie Village to the south to Comanche Trail to the north are studying the Bible through song, game and story, courtesy of the women who make up the Child Evangelism Fellowship.

The fellowship and its Good News Clubs came to Pampa in 1960. Virginia Kelley, 221 E. 18th, said she was contacted by the Child Evangelism Fellowship group in Amarillo about starting a Pampa program and soon after the local program was born in the Kelley "(Child Evangelism Felltwship) is in the larger cities more than the local communities," Kelley said.

But, she added, the volunteer ministry, which teaches groups of youngsters in all 50 states and Canada and reaches worldwide through TV and radio programs. has been around for more than 40 years, when Irvin Overholtzer began talking to pastors about reaching youngsters through Bible

"Before that, they kind of left the kids out of it." Kelley said. "This is a ministry geared toward the kids up and then lead them to a church," added another teacher. Wynola Sanders, 1305 W. Crawford.

'The idea is to build the children

The women help the children learn through the use of games. songs, prizes and tried and true memorization techniques. They also rely heavily on visual aids large songsheets and a flannel board on which Bible characters, stories and verses come to life.

A typical session begins with four or five songs, all upbeat and all encouraging participation from the youngsters. Then comes a Bible verse which the youngsters repeat from words posted on the flannel

As words are gradually removed one - by - one, the children learn to recite the verse by memory. Word games related to the verse test how well they remember what they learned and those who remember best are rewarded.

More songs follow and then comes the meat of each lesson: a Bible lesson or story illustrated with figures on the flannel board, including more games, again to encourage the learning process.

Everything we do is visualized," Sanders noted.

Nine lessons are taught in various sections of Pampa each week, including classes at the Satellite Workshop and Children's World Nursery. Other meetings are held in teachers' homes or in the "Chapel on Wheels" trailer. which Kelley said is virtually unique to Pampa.

Although the youngsters are encouraged to eventually attend a "Bible - centered church," Kelley said many view the Chapel on Wheels as their church.

"A lot of children say 'there's my church' when we pull up," she said. Kelley said local Good News Clubs usually average about 15 youngsters. Another teacher, Clara Imel, 1825 N. Zimmers, noted the women try to reach children of all races, particularly those not associated with a church.

"No matter what color their skin is, our goal is to lead them to Christ," Imel explained.

Imel said ages in the classes range from those just old enough to sit up for an hour to junior high students. She said the clubs used to meet at the schools but began meeting in neighborhoods after federal laws were interpreted to prohibit religious teaching in public schools.

She added the youngsters seem more attentive when meeting in the Chapel on Wheels.

Imel got involved in the Good News program in fairly typical fashion. She said she took her own children to a class and liked the program so much she decided to become a teacher

"That's usually how we get people," Kelley explained 'Mothers are interested in what their children are doing.

But Good News teachers find themselves not only on the giving end of Christian education. Every Friday morning they gather at the Sanders home for a teacher training class.

Imel said anyone interested in the program - from prospective teachers to parents interested in learning more about Child Evangelism Fellowship - is encouraged to attend the training

Child Evangelism Fellowship is not sponsored by any single church and accepts no public funds. The program exists solely on private donations. Sanders said

To her, fitness is a way of life

By CATHY SPAULDING Staff Writer

From the days she went swimming in the cold Canadian waters of Lake Erie to the nights she walks through the neighborhood with her husband, fitness has been a way of life for Betty Casebeir. Assistant director of the Pampa

Youth and Community Center, Casebier is one of the lucky ladies who can earn a living while keeping fit. She can also wear her baggy warm-up clothes or 'sweats'' to work.

"It's easier to pay for a membership at a health club than it is to pay doctor bills," she says, declaring that active physical workouts help "stimulate circulation and alleviate stress.

"And I definitely recommend physical activity for people who are depressed," she adds. "I recommend it over medication.

areas of their lives but the physical and emotional areas need strengthening," she notes.

Casebier walks two miles a day with her husband, as well as taking advantage of the track, pool and weight room at the community center. And she and another PYCC employee are setting up a course for water safety instructors.

Casebier's involvement in physical fitness began as a child in the small town of Lemington. Ontario on the coast of Lake Erie. There, she spent her summers swimming in the cool waters of the

But she never learned to swim formally or competitively until she came to Pampa

"See, I was very fond of water, but I didn't know how to co-ordinate my strokes," she explains.

So, in 1972, with her youngest child still in school, she signed up for beginning swimming lessons at the center

Within a year, she completed several 30-hour courses in advanced swimming, livesaving and water safety instruction. She was certified as a water safety. instructor in the spring of 1973.

After receiving a lifesaving certification, she took the highly advanced "swimmers" course. In 1972, she worked with the Red Cross 50-mile swim and completed the Presidential 25-Mile Swim in Her Water Safety Instructor certification came in handy. After teaching youth swimming classes as a volunteer for the Red Cross, Casebier joined the PYCC staff in 1976 as a swimming instructor "It was a civic project," she says. "I was looking for employment at the time. I started here as a swimming instructor and I gradually worked my way from one area of the center to another and I became assistant in 1982.'

While she admits swimming is still a first love, she maintains a total health regimen and encourages others to do the same.

"I eat healthy foods, but I'm not on a diet," she claims. "Three balanced meals a day. Eat sensibly. If you're going to work out, eat long-range carbohydrates like whole-wheat bread.

She admits she occasionally breaks her regimen with some junk foods.

Casebier says she believes a good routine for working women consists of regular aerobics, not necessarily the dancing kind. Running, swimming, bicycling, and sports are aerobics, she explains.

"Walking: Brisk walking is as good as a slow jog," she says, suggesting that people should swing their arms as they walk.

"Water: Even if they get in and walk around the shallow end," she adds. "This can help arthritis victims."

And she recommends a good 30-minute workout at least three days a week

Weightlifting - yes, weightlifting! - is another way women can keep fit, Casebier says.

She's not to ashamed to admit it... yes, Katie Williams of Pampa confesses she's a people lover. And she translates that love to helping Williams starts her class members off with deep breathing exercises, she says, expanding their lungs and filling their blood streams with lots of fresh oxygen. Then she begins stretching exercises working "from head to toe," - stretching, exercising every joint.

It all began six years ago when Williams applied for a nursing job at the nursing home, she remembers. "I had applied for a job at the nursing home, something part time that I could do, but they didn't have one available," she said. "Then someone told me they needed a volunteer to lead their exercises, so I just'started doing it. I've developed a lot of friendships through it."

Leading the exercise classes is not the only volunteer work Williams does, however. She's also an active volunteer for the Pampa Meals on Wheels program, Good Samaritan Christian Services and she helps distribute government commodities to the needy, elderly and handicapped.

She and her husband Eugene are also members of the New Hope Baptist Church where she works in the church auxiliaries

Why does Williams do all this? "I love people, and I love helping people," she explains. "I guess it is because my mother loved people.

"I have always worked with the public. And you have to love people to be successful working in the public," Williams says.

Williams moved to Pampa seven years ago from Denton with her husband. Eugene Williams, an inspector for the State Soil Conservation Service, was transferred here.

One of a family of 15 children, Williams met her husband in her hometown of Mart, a small town near Waco. They married and became parents to two sons, Gene of Oceanside and Wendell of Oklahoma City.

"We moved quite a bit," she remembers, to Spur: Brownwood, Denton... Williams worked 18 years as a beauty operator before she became an LVN through the Brownwood School of Nursing. After receiving her nursing training, Williams worked in the Brownwood Hospital and in Westgate Hospital in Denton.

"I like taking care of patients," she says. "To me the patient is why you're working." William's says she prefers working on the medical floor, but she has worked in most aspects of nursing. "(Nursing is) like any job. It has different areas, some you like better than others."

Although her husband is retired now, Williams says she definitely is not! Although she has not worked as an LVN since moving to Pampa, "I still look forward to nursing, she says

In the meantime, she continues with her volunteer jobs and her hobbies of refinishing furniture and yard work. Occasionally she and her husband go fishing together.

And she says she always enjoys visiting with her two sons and her six grandchildren.

Holt credits success to mother's influence

By LARRY HOLLIS Staff Writer

Selling a dress involves more than just taking it off a rack and offering it to a woman.

At least it does if you care about your business and your customers. "You just can't hand them a dress" and hope they buy it, says Joyce Holt, salesperson at Behrman's Fashion Center. "First you have to know your merchandise, then you have to know your customer

Sometimes being a salesperson may seem like a simple job. "If they didn't want something, they wouldn't walk in the door," Holt observes.

But to make a good sale and to keep people coming back, the sale should be adjusted to the customer and not to the salesman.

One rule to follow is to find out the customer's need, she says, and then go from there.

For example, a woman may

want a black skirt. "But if none are available, then you see if white or navy blue would fit their need." Holt says, depending on what the skirt would be worn with or on what occasions it would be worn.

"If you know your customer's needs, you can help them find something suitable," she says.

A knowledge of the available merchandise is valuable in aiding the customers. "You learn by working your stock," she says.

Holt explained that regular morning meetings are held at Behrman's to become familiar with the stock. Owner Doug Coon shows the newest stock and discusses what sizes and color are on hand, what other clothing articles or accessories it would go with and what the prices are.

"You don't forget something you learned just that morning," she says. Plus she makes regular checks of the racks and shelves to see what remains on hand

NNOUNCING!

Holt also reads fashion books and magazines to keep up with the latest styles and trends.

But one of the better parts of the job is getting to know people, she says, adding that she really enjoys meeting people.

"You really don't pry," Holt says, "but by chatting with them you learn their likes and dislikes. their interests, their lifestyles," all which can be helpful in helping a woman to choose a dress, skirt or blouse which she will be pleased to own and wear.

"Some (customers) are flashy, and others are traditional," she notes. "Their lifestyle fairly well recalls. Much of this was because she was one of the first black women in Amarillo to become well known because of her work and activities.

Holt says her mother had to sell her own advertising at first to keep her radio show on the air. But that gave her a chance to meet a number of people. And after her show became popular, she was even more known in the city. "And she didn't have to keep selling her own advertising anymore," Holt notes.

"She had to sell her program, but after it caught on, she didn't have to do it so much. It just caught on really well," Holt says, obviously with a lot of pride in her mother.

"After the public sees your worth, your good," they learn they call upon you, depend on you and use you to meet their needs, Holt

Her mother was called upon to emcee programs and dances. Whenever a black artist came to town for a concert, she was always asked to be the emcee," Holt remembers. She was also active in several organizations.

'And she always modeled,' Holt says. And she encouraged her two daughters in that direction. Her grandmother also was supportive and helped the two young women to develop an interest in fashion. "She always dressed us well," Holt says.

Holt and her sister Lois modeled in fashion shows in Amarillo, but the two have taken different directions in the business. Holt enjoyed the modeling and being in public. ("I just grew up with it," she explains.) She has modeled in Pampa shows and has coordinated fashion shows for Behrman's. Her sister, however, "didn't take

says, except perhaps for a short period.

She took some business management courses at Amarillo College and became "a good secretary" for awhile. "But it was too quiet," she says, with too much of the work behind the scenes. "And I always like being in front," she adds, smiling. Again she credits her mother for that.

A co-worker at the store. Maureen Curtis, had encouraged Holt to tell about her mother. "If you knew her mother, you'd see where she (Holt) gets so much of her energy.

Curtis also says Holt really does care a lot about her customers, even taking clothes out to some customers' homes and bringing them back for fittings.

New anti-perspirants

In colder months, perspiration can easily become odorous as underarms are confined by warmer clothing.

New anti-perspirant formulas create instant dryness. They are applied as a cream but turn into a powder.

Usually in stick form, the new antiperspirants are rubbed lightly onto the clean-shaven underarm area. For maximum efficiency, look on the label for "aluminum chloride."

Nobody's going to call Denise Phillips of Panhandle a dumb blonde. Not when she, chemistry degree in hand, can ably take on the duties of chemist at Celanese Chemical Plant here.

Eight weeks ago, Phillips became an instrument chemist at Celanese. She graduated in May from Texas Tech University of Lubbock with a bachelor's degree in chemistry. A hometown girl, Phillips grew up in the country near White Deer and graduated from White Deer High School. She is the daughter of Marvin and Janet Urbanczyk of White Deer.

"I started college, majoring in pre-med," Phillips says. "I wanted to be a doctor." While in high school, she had discovered she had an aptitude for the sciences and decided during that time that she would be come a doctor. "I took all the sciences and all the maths."

However, her years in college changed her mind about her choice of careers. "Research made the difference," Phillips says. Research work in her chemistry classes at Tech convinced her that this was the field she wanted to work in, she says. "I had gotten bored with biology," she recalls. "Most of it was memorization parts of the body are always the same. But in chemistry something is always changing. I liked the research, so that really convinced me to stay in chemistry

"Chemistry is not a big field for women," she says. "A lot of women still want to do the more homey type things." Although women were far outnumbered by men in her college classes. Phillips says she was never discriminated against in anyway. "I think those days are gone," she says. Phillips says she had no women professors, but she thought that several women assistants were working their way up to becoming

After graduation from Tech, Phillips applied for the job at Celanese and was accepted soon afterwards. "It was exactly what I wanted," she says, adding that she had always intended to take her skills into the world of industry and that she especially enjoys research in instrumentation.

Each day. Phillips and her fellow chemists run tests on samples of Celanese's chemical products from the beginning stages to the finished product, she explains. When she arrives at 7:30 a.m., samples taken at 5 a.m. are waiting for analysis. Explained simply, she says, the samples are run through machines that separate the mixtures, analyze the chemicals and then report on the analysis in graph form. Phillips uses gas and liquid chromotography to analyze the samples, she says. The plant's engineers uses the graphs to help them make decisions on making the products and to see if any impurities have gotten into the batches of chemicals, she says.

'Samples are taken on each step of the process," Phillips explains. "It has to be quality stuff. (The graphs) help you see if there is some impurity in there you don't

The chemists record their findings in two places, plus enter them into the company's computer, she adds.

Phillips hopes to move up within the company in the future, she says. "That's one thing I like about Celanese. You can go a lot of routes industrial relations, industrial hygiene, special problems, or a supervisory position. It's a real good company. Everyone is so nice. I couldn't ask for better conditions.

Phillips says she and her husband, David, are both health - although their busy schedules do not usually give them the opportunity to jog together.

She also teaches aerobics classes three nights a week at the Panhandle School of Dance. "I took aerobics at Tech for four years," Phillips explains. "When I came to Panhandle they didn't have anything. So I decided it was either teach it or do without. And I had been doing it too long to just quit."

Denise and David also teach Youth Clubs, an interdenominational youth program, on Wednesday nights.

Commuting from Panhandle to her job at Celanese means getting up earlier, but Phillips says she doesn't mind waking up at 5:30 a.m. every day. She carpools with other Celanese employees for the 30 minute drive to the plant.

Chemistry of the future will become a more exact science, Phillips says she believes. "Knowledge (of chemistry) is growing so fast. There's already a lot to know, to learn in just four years," she says. "And there's a lot of research to be done. I see it getting more specific, too. There won't be just chemists, but analytic chemists, organic chemists, more specific areas like those all department records and statistics.

It all started in June, 1981, when Gould decided she needed a change of pace from Ohio, where she received her degree from Columbus Business University in the state capital. Her sister and brother - in - law lived in Pampa and encouraged her to move to

"When I moved to town, there was an opening in the police department, so I took it, recalled. She said her degree comes into use quite often in the

Gould said the job has grown from her original task of typing reports from a dictaphone and filing incident reports. One of her major duties today is the input of records into the department's computer and compiling statistics from incident, accident and arrest records

The statistics are important, she said, because they show what areas need to be concentrated on by the department. For example. the city traffic commission is interested in traffic statistics because they can be used to show which intersections may be the most dangerous and in need of traffic control devices

"Our statistics are used all year long and we have monthly reports we have to put out for the state and the city," she said. "I'm in charge of making sure these statistics get sent to wherever they're supposed

With an average of 512 first - time arrests each year, that's no short

But the job is more than records and statistics. Gould's position is in the department's service division, which means she is qualified to dispatch or take part in traffic control. It also makes her secretary to the police chief.

And Gould acts as liaison between the department and the public. A typical day at the office starts out with Gould preparing the preceding day's police report for the news media. This includes making sure accident and incident reports, the radio log and the jail register are ready for inspection and answering questions.

In the event of a disaster or major police operation, Gould ld be responsible for handling inquiries from the press and keeping the public informed of the situation. She said she is on 24 hour call for disaster situations and probably would take over the police radio in such a case.

Gould also handles correspondence for the department, writing and mailing letters and taking care of all grant work. She is also responsible for ordering items related to police work and those standard in any business office.

Although she is a civilian employee in the department, Gould has taken several job - related courses in the past several year, including records - keeping, human relations, dispatching and a defensive driving course somewhat different than those taken by regular police officers. She also noted all civilian employees are required to keep current with CPR (cardio - pulmonary resucitation) and first aid courses.

Gould said she passed an officer's test while "just fooling around one day" but is not a certified officer because she has not attended the academy. Officer certification is not required for civilian employees.

In her spare time. Gould enjoys working with horses. She originally set out to be a veterinarian, taking courses at Ohio State University in Columbus

She said she is three quarters away from a degree in math with a minor in English from Ohio State

But Gould said she finds her work with the police department interesting

Tired of baking, Abraham runs for mayor

By CATHY SPAULDING Staff Writer

CANADIAN - Therese Abraham got tired of baking cookies for civic events, so she ran for mayor

Now in her third term, Abraham feels she can accomplish more for Canadian in the city office than in the kitchen. It was a conversation with some of her woman's club friends that directed her to city government in 1981.

"Some people in the Womens" Service League and I were talking about what the town needed and the group got me to run for she says, remembering she drew no opponent that first ar e she ran.

Abraham says she is one of many women involved in city and school government. A woman serves on the Canadian school board and another serves on the city council.

"It's that kind of pioneer spirit," that Abraham thinks gets Canadian women involved in local

"Our service league here is involved with the community," she says. "These are people who are helping with the Little House community day care center, the senior citizens' center.

"Women have a different idea of what needs to be done," Abraham believes. "And women have more time.

Abraham has the time for city duties because she does not work, even though she once was a registered nurse. "I haven't worked for 15 years," she says. "My husband is a doctor, and I didn't want him bossing me around on the job.

Still, the North Carolina native applies her nursing experience when she volunteers for local blood drives. She also plays the organ for her church.

But it's Canadian city business that's taking up her time and interest these days. She says there's plenty of meetings to go to, calls to tend to, criticism to weather. When she speaks of her involvement in the city government, she uses the plural form to include the city council.

'We have done so much," she says. "We've sealcoated every street at least once. We've cleaned up some of the litter. Set up a planning and zoning board. Added a brand new police department. Added an office for the city manager. Added computers to the city offices. Set goals for the next six years. And the city is running on a balanced budget."

Abraham would like to see completion of a $1.5 million water and sewer system that voters approved last year. She also anticipates a city ordinance prohibiting drinking in public. She admits that her public involvement in city government has been accompanied by criticism.

"We get a lot of criticism on the water rate increase, but that was something that had to be done,"

"If there's nothing I can do about it, I blow it off," she says. "But if there's something I can do, I try." "I don't get a vote on the council, but I can talk all I want to.'

In her four years heading the council, she's never wanted to give

"Only when I was running for re-election did I want to just say 'the heck with it.' But once everything settles down it's "The criticism keeps you on your toes, when you know people are watching what you're doing," she says. "I'm getting calls from people saying 'thank you for what you've done for the city.

"People who care, those are the ones who need to be with the city.'

Abraham's position takes her to meetings throughout the Panhandle. She serves on the Panhandle Regional Planning Commission Board and has worked with the Catholic Family service board and the regional Teaching Pathways board.

"I just kind of manage my time," she shrugs, adding that it helps to have a supportive husband.

'My husband, Malouf, has been a good support," she says.

"I manage my work around my family," she claims. "Of course, sometimes I miss supper.

Abraham is not planning to run for a fourth term. She wants to travel and to learn to play the

Sy CATHY SPAULDING

It wasn't the roughnecks and ranchers who made White Deer history. It was the Poles, and Proxie Warminski wants residents there to be proud of that.

That's why the town's Texas Sesquicentennial program, which she is putting toghether, will feature Polish folk dances, music and costumes as well as the more traditional cowboy lore.

A White Deer native of 100 percent Polish ancestry, Warminski is studying Polish costume, music, art and history as she prepares for the performance, to be presented in July.

"I want to tell why and how the Polish people came to the Texas Panhandle," she says, explaining that the Poles settled the Carson County community in 1910.

Polish heritage in Texas began well before that the turn of the century, she notes.

"Panna Maria, near San Antonio, is the oldest Polish community in Texas, settled in the 1850s," she says. "They left their homeland because of political oppression. Poland was, at the time, under domination of Prussia. When they arrived in Texas, the land was still stoney, so many left Panna Maria."

When the Poles settled White Deer at the turn of the century, they brought their rich folklore and traditions with them. However, Warminski laments, as the settlers mingled with other groups, the traditions faded.

"Some of our families still hold to the traditions," she says. "The Polish Sausage Festival in early November is the last public tradition we have. But we hold to family traditions."

With her Sesquicentennial play, she hopes community residents will again be aware of Polish traditions.

Our Sesquicentennial celebration chairman Cinda Lafferty said to tell why the Poles are here and to tell their story," she says.

But putting together such a culturally rich show is harder than it seems.

"I know how I want the dances to o, but it takes a lot of research to get the costumes right."

Her open house shows the extent of her research. Bright Polish folk music flows from the stereo and seems to provide appropriate background as she tells of her experiences. Dolls wearing the colorful costumes of various regions in the country are stacked on corner shelves in her bedroom. Delicately embroidered white aprons, short red vests and rosy woven babushkas (scarves) fill white clothing boxes while samples of the intricate Polish art are stacked elsewhere.

Her research even took her to the land of her ancestry as she, her husband Charles and local resident Carolyn Rapstine toured Poland this summer. It was the second visit for Warminski.

"Several years ago, in 1981, my son and I went to to the University of Copernicus at Torun, and I took a course in ethnology: the study of the heritage," she explains.

"I can see the difference between being a student and a tourist," she observes. "Tourists are shown the very best of Poland, fed in the best restaurants, stay in the best hotels."

"The Polish people handle Americans with respect," she adds. "There were no restrictions on us as students or tourists."

To return to a country that is under strict communist rule was a bittersweet experience for Warminski, who saw both the spirit of the Polish people and their oppression under the government.

"The Poles are so proud of their heritage," she says. "In 1,000 years of heritage, the country has only really existed for 100 years."

She explained that in its history, Poland has been under the domination of the Turks, Prussians, Nazis, Communists and others.

"Poland was a democracy at the beginning of World War II and it was raped and burned by the end of World War II," she says, as the Polish music on her stereo plays a more somber tune. "The armies from all around came in and stripped Poland of cultural treasures."

At Yalta, where Stalin, Roosevelt and Churchill discussed how to mend a divided Europe after the war, "Poland was handed over to the Communists," she says hitterly

"The people are now mainly more socialistic," she says with resignation, "All the people in Poland are essentially of the same class. The highest paid class is the miners; the second, the laborers; the third, the clergy and the fourth is the intelligentsia. We visited with a doctor who got as little as $30 a month; most have to work for the government to sustain themselves.

"I'd say it angers me that in its history, beginning with the Teutonic knights and the Turks, the people were at the mercy of some government.

"But they learn to accept," Warminski says. "They have not bowed down to Communist rule, but have become resigned to their fate."

"They don't have the freedom to do as they please, but they are happy because they have learned to live with their troubles." "There's no unemployment in Poland; no one gets a free hand-out," notes Warminski. "Even the old people are given some job to do, even if it is sweeping the streets."

Warminski attributes the Poles' ability to cope with adversity to their strong religious faith. More than 90 percent attend church, she says.

"The churches are always crowded, at noon on weekdays, not just on Sundays," she observes. "Their faith will be strong. Poland is dedicated to the Blessed Virgin Mary.

"The Communists still have not dared meddle too much with church affairs because of the strength of the church and the Pope," she adds proudly.

It is not the Poland of today, but the Poland of the past that Warminski wants to show in the

"I want to portray life in Poland prior to 1854 through the dances, costumes and songs," she says, adding that she'll be helped in that part by Linda Germany's dance classes. "The I want to portray the terrible voyage to the new country, when dysentery broke out on the ships. Then trying to land in Galveston, alone, not knowing how to speak English, trying to find where the two rivers formed, where they were to settle.

"Then they discover the rivers under a big oak tree on Christmas Eve," she says. "Then we'll tell how they came to the Texas Panhandle, and we'll bring in square dancers. That's the way I see the play now; how we have two cultures — Texan and Polish."

Warminski's home life reflects these two cultures. Examples of Polish art — renditions of the Virgin Mary, rose motifs and precise paper cut-outs are seen throughout her house.

But in the east and west windows in her kitchen, where the rising and setting sun shines through, Warminski has an extensive collection of glass telephone line insulators. She's collected them from all around the country and from as far away as Australia. Although almost all of them have the same bell shape, the variety of translucent and opaque colors casts a rainbow on the kitchen floor.

Transplanted Yankee flourishes in Panhandle

Lifestyles Editor

Helen Dimmler may be a born and raised New Yorker but she says after spending the past few years in Pampa she wouldn't return to the "concrete jungle" for a million dollars!

"You see those movies and hear the things on the news and all about New York... well, it's worse," she confides. She and her husband

Charles were both born in Brooklyn and had lived in "the city" all of their lives until moving to Pampa several years ago.

While Charles retains his Brooklyn accent, Helen quickly dropped hers after moving to Texas.

"I guess it was because Mother and Daddy were both deaf. They would not talk usually. They used sign language. And when they did talk, they spoke in gutteral tones, as deaf people do. We (Helen and her brother Fred Brook) had no tone value to relate to as we were growing up, so we took whatever was around us. So it's easy for me to pick up the phonetical sounding from the area I'm in." Helen

Since they've moved to Texas. the Dimmlers have accepted Westerners with open arms and say they have been equally accepted by these people who think "damnYankees" is one word.

'We couldn't believe the open windows on the first floor," Helen says of their first impressions of the Texas Panhandle. The Dimmmlers say that in New York the ground floor windows are nailed shut to discourage burglars.

"We loved the peacefulness of the area and the loveliness of the people. There's no we could get away from it," Helen says. "And we've made a lot of friends here."

Helen's contributions to the community have been many, especially through her knowledge of the sign language used by the

For her work, Helen has been chosen 1982 Beta Sigma Phi Woman of the Year ("It was the highlight of my life here," she says warmly), and was nominated for the prestigious Distinguished Service Award from West Texas State University. Both are quite an accomplishment for any woman, especially one who has been in the area for a relatively short time.

Although slowed somewhat by problems with arthritis and an operation on her foot, Helen keeps a busy schedule of activities. At the time of the interview she is preparing for a sign language course she is to give to the nurses at Coronado Community Hospital. And she was making plans for the items she will make for her prospective grandchild - the Dimmler's first - which is expected in May.

She gives free sign language classes at Clarendon College regularly, also, Helen says. And she is on call to the police, hospital and ambulance service in the event they encounter a deaf person who can only communicate through sign language. She also helps the Department of Human Resources and other agencies who need her to interpret for them through sign language.

She has taught sign language to babies as young as six months, working with Margaret and Gary Haynes and their Down Syndrome son Josh. Sign language has been found to be useful in helping some mentally retarded children communicate, relieving frustrations for both the children and their family, she says.

And Helen never charges for her services. "These lessons are a gift," she explains.

Surprisingly, as long as she and Charles have been married (more than 40 years), Charles has never learned sign language. He gets his and her friends begin speaking in

Burton believes little things count in nursing

By DEE DEE LARAMORE Lifestyles Editor

It's the little things that are important in nursing, says Carolina Burton, a licensed vocational nurse in Pampa hospitals for the past 35 years.

"It's not always the big things, but the little things that are so important," she explains. Although she has been involved in most aspects of nursing, from emergency room to doctors offices, Mrs. Burton now cares for newborn

Mrs. Burton's duties include bathing and monitoring newborns for the first six hours of their lives. But she believes that its the extras she provides that make the difference in good care of the babies and excellent care. "I love them. I hug them. I rock them. I enjoy them," she says. "You love them, stroke them and pet them when you bathe them. When they cry, you pick them up and comfort

"Loving and caring is so important to a newborn. They babies have feelings immediately. They want to be loved."

She says she prefers to have five or six infants in the nursery at a time. "You can care for that amount very well. But there's time when we have 10 and there's times when we have two. But I feel like five or six babies you can take care of well and enjoy.

Mrs. Burton, the next to the last child of a family of seven girls and two boys, was raised in Cordell, Okla. Four of her sisters also entered the field of nursing. She began her nurses training there

The military sent the Schmidts many places before they settled in Pampa, Mrs. Burton remembers. Once here, she decided to complete her nursing training. Mr. Schmidt died in 1959 and for two years, she and her son John were alone.

In 1961 she married Joe Burton, her husband for the past 24 years: In time, they adopted their second son, Eddie. "I'm really a lucky person," Mrs. Burton says. "God's husbands."

And she says she's quite proud, too, of her sons Joe and Eddie, and daughters-in-law, seven grandchildren and one great granddaughter. Although she has spent many years nursing, Mrs. Burton says she continues to keep up with new developments in her profession through post graduate seminars and training, as her employer employees and it's best for the patients," she says. "If I didn't have refresher courses, I wouldn't feel I was doing my job properly."

When asked what she thinks are important characteristics of a nurse, Mrs. Burton answered. "Patience, kindness, love and understanding... I think those are top qualities. You have to be professional in all ways, but those are very important.

- A little girl and her mother walk into the cramped grey cinderblock animal shelter office at Hobart Street Park. The mother carries a big box with two tiny kittens inside, one grey tiger kitty, one black-and-white. The daughter helpfully carries a box of cat chow. The kittens had been found in a dumpster.

Pampa animal control officer Sandy Burns gently picks up the tiger kitten, which easily fits inside her hands, and examined it for any signs of disease: mucus in the eyes, bruises. Setting the tiger on the desk to investigate the telephone and stacks of paper, Burns checks the black-and-white as Fred, the office's lumbering black cat, tries to make friends

- Lucinda Mann drives her battered white pick-up through Skellytown. In two separate cages in the back bed are six dogs: a furry black husky; two black dogs; a feisty furry dog; an old fat, grey-faced dachshund bitch and a younger black member of the breed. In addition to any strays she happens upon, Mann is looking for a collie which had broken away from quarantine. The soft-coated collie had been shot in a front leg, then had a leg run over.

Near the end of her run, she spots the dog and walks toward it, trying to regain the dog's faith. She brushes the dog's mane with her hand, checks the bullet hole which is still blood-red. She continues to pet the dog and shake its paw before she admits: "He's won me

-- Jackie Denham inspects the cat room at the animal shelter. The cats in the cages howl to get her attention. She touches her finger to the cages as they come to the front to nuzzle. She makes sure the cats have enough food and water and sees to it that the newspapers lining the cage are clean - hoping the shelter could soon get litter boxes for the cages.

On the floor is a small wire cage where a spunky black, brown and white puppy whines for attention. She takes the puppy up in one hand and runs her other hand along its coat. The puppy has a collar and vaccination tag which proves that he belongs to somebody. Denham hopes that the pup will be reclaimed. She can only pray that the cats will be claimed. But she's dismayed by the prospect that in a few days, most of the dogs and cats will have to be put to death.

Thinking back at the two kittens found in the dumpster. Denham justifies the situation: "At least here, the last three days of their lives will be their best when they get food, water and a dry place to sleep.

Burns, Mann and Denham approach their jobs from different backgrounds and have their own way of dealing with their duties. But they share one thing: a love for animals

Burns, Mann and Denham believe there's more involved to animal control that going after strays and making sure people's pets have their vaccinations and tags. It also involves keeping the shelter clean and disease-free. guarding against outbreaks of rabies or other illnesses and euthanizing all unclaimed shelter

More often than not, any joy from the job is overshadowed by discouragement, disgust and pain. "We do not deal with happy people," Burns says. But the three women are not about to trade their jobs for anything else: there's too much at

It was Burns' own concern and determination that earned her the position of Animal Control Officer for the city of Pampa about five vears ago.

"It was about 51/2 years ago. I got laid off from the animal control office in Amarillo, and I was trying to get a job up at Celanese," she remembers. "I saw a dog truck. And I thought 'they're in trouble.

The dog runs had not been disinfected or cleaned for over a year. There were six runs, disgustingly filthy. It took a week to get it clean to the concrete. There were dead animals all over them. "I decided then that my goal was to improve animal control and make it work here," she said.

Lucinda Mann is a part time "circuit-riding" animal control officer for the towns of Groom, Skellytown and Panhandle. "You can always tell when it's---Kill Day," because everyone at the office is cranky, depressed, short tempered.

The animals are put to death by injection, often with Burns administering the drug and Denham comforting the beast as it lapses into sleep.

"We cry often," Denham says. "We have a dog three days before we kill it. And there's always one which catches your eyes and picks at your heart.

Burns concludes: "One of the things they teach you in ACO training is that when you kill an animal, and it doesn't bother you, you're in the wrong profession."

GROOM - Students do not have to score touchdowns or cross the finish line to be winners; Janetta Lamb makes sure of that.

Lamb teaches French, English and journalism at Groom High School and sponsors the school's and University Interscholastic League literary team.

Under her leadership, trips to post-district UIL newspaper and literary competitions have just about become annual spring pilgrimages for Groom's top students. In district UIL competition last spring, Groom

the second place winning school got

In the past 10 years, three of her student editors took first place in state newspaper competition. One was her son, John Mark Belue, now a sportswriter for an Amarillo newspaper, who won in 1976. Last year's state newswriting champion, Karen Britten, is this year's Tiger's Tale editor.

Lamb expects the same standards from this year's newspaper staff.

The first issue of this year's Tiger's Tale hit the stands Oct. 3 and covered such issues as the new state seatbelt law, Spanish-speaking pupils trying to tackle English as a second language and coverage of the high school and junior high school football teams.

"If I have a story that the administration might object to. they look over it," Lamb said. "But we have no problem because they're pretty open minded.'

To Lamb and her students, a victory in UIL literary events is just as sweet as a victory in sports. "At least our kids on the newspaper staff think so," she says. "The school has always been real strong in academics. Lamb has not always had such an interest in journalism. "I took journalism in high school, but I didn't have any in college,' she remembers. "I love it now, I really do. I really don't know what journalism."

She corrects herself and explains that, because of new state education regulations, she does not teach journalism. She teaches "newspaper problems" because the essential elements that the state requires for journalism are different.

"We stress just the basics," she says. "We kind of learn as we go along

Lamb admits she cannot pinpoint why she enjoys teaching.

"I guess it's just something you just feel," she says. "Its a feeling you get when a student says, 'Oh yes, I see."

"A couple of weeks ago, I had a student who wasn't doing well in class, and I saw a glimmer of excitement when he got something.

And that excited me," she says. Lamb has taught at Groom for 20 years, starting as an English teacher

She says her successes come when kids from college come back and tell me how much they appreciate me. She also succeeds when her students know and enjoy what they're learning. Failure happens when students look at her "with a look of puzzlement. "Kids nowadays will tell you if they don't like something," she says. "And if they don't like it, it's because they don't understand it. "Still, I don't just leave something and not cover it just because someone may not like it, she adds. "Take poetry. Boys don't like it at first. But then they get into the tougher stuff - something they can really sink their teeth into then they discover poetry is really a fun thing.

Lamb doesn't agree with claims by some religious leaders that public education is void of moral values and teaches ideas that are unpatriotic and contrary to Christian values.

"I can't think of anything we cover in language arts that covers that at all," she says. "I really don't think such things are taught at Groom, not from what I've seen in this area.

"A student can learn morals through the study of the classics,' she points out

"But you have to be careful," she adds. "When you study Milton's 'Paradise Lost,' for example. Some of what he said goes against the Catholic Church. You have to present it explaining that this is the way the author sees it.

If the thin line between morality and religion keeps teachers cautious, the new state education laws keep teachers busy. But Lamb says that in the long run, the laws will help students.

"I think it's going to help," she observes. "It's made students much more serious.

Still, the new mandates have created mounds of paperwork for teachers and Lamb finds she must take her work home with her, not only physically but mentally. But she doesn't mind

"I'd be lost if I didn't have this," she concludes

Jean Sims knows

Farmwork doesn't discriminate; it's never done

By PAUL PINKHAM Staff Writer

Farming isn't solely a man's occupation. Just ask Jean Sims. Sims has been running her own family farm east of Pampa since inheriting it from her parents. Except for a few years away at college, she said she has never left the farm she grew up on.

The farm has been in her family for close to a century

'My grandfather settled here in the 1890s," she said. A cowpuncher, he came through the area on a cattle drive and came back later to settle near Mobeetie, she said.

Eventually, he purchased the land on which the farm now sits.

Sims said she left the farm for a total of four years, two at a girls college in Denver and two pursuing an elementary education degree at Oklahoma University in Norman. She never used the degree, explaining that, despite the problems facing today's farmers, she'd rather be farming than teaching.

The Sims farm is all dryland, mostly wheat with some cattle and 15 to 20 horses. Sims said she "gambled with milo" for several years when early winter freezes made the crop "sort of a bust," but did not plant any milo this year.

Sims is aided on the farm by hired hands. The 800 to 900 acres of wheat is custom - farmed, she said.

The horses, she said, are mostly race horses, which she uses primarily for breeding purposes. In general race horses are sent by their owners to a trainer at the track, who conditions and takes care of the horse and picks which races the horse will run in.

Sims blames recent farm problems on a number of causes, including Washington's tendency

Polly's

Pointers

9:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. to play politics with farm policy. She said the "new" farm bill is not really new - just a retread of old mandatory controls - and added the key to solving the problem is improved markets.

"If something doesn't happen to improve the market, the government's going to end up owning all that wheat," she said.

Sims said she feels President Reagan is basically right when he says the government needs to get out of the farming business and let the free market control farm prices "but I don't know how many people are going to go under while that's happening.

High costs coupled with stagnant prices have led to the American farmer's drastic condition, she said. While the cost of production rises, the price of wheat has

"Eveything you buy, you buy retail and you sell it wholesale, she said

Irrigated farms are in even worse shape than dryland farms she said because of the rising costs associated with irrigation. She said it has almost become cost prohibitive to irrigate.

Low prices for grains are generally attributed to surpluses. Sims said the first time the land was farmed in the '20s, wheat brought an unusually high price of $3 per bushel. Wheat prices today average about $2.95 per bushel.

"I don't like to pay $1 for a loaf of bread either," Sims said, noting farmers are not getting rich from higher food prices. "Some way the farmer needs a bigger piece of the pie. I read somewhere that out of that $1 loaf of bread, the farmer only gets less than a nickel. I've decided you've got to be pretty tough to survive anymore.

Just a housewife? Hardly...

By CATHY SPAULDING Staff Writer

Call Eileen Kludt a housewife; she won't mind

"I would definitely say I'm a housewife," she declares. "I'm a homemaker, a chauffeur, a nurse, a mother and a Texan and Texas Aggie's wife."

But calling Kludt "just a housewife" isn't enough. The youthful mother of three is also a substitute teacher in the Pampa school system, and a member of the Pampa Junior Service League and the 20th Century Study Club.

She recently found herself in the bell choir at First Presbyterian Church, going to regular practices in an effort to keep her eighth-grade daughter Heather involved in the group.

"Heather was in it last year and I said 'if you do it, I'll do it,'" she remembers. "It's just another opportunity to be together, sharing what the children are interested "Parental involvement is very important," she believes. "It keeps them busy. I'm not talking about piano lessons or dancing lessons. Be aware and interested in what they're doing, whether it's good or

Kludt also followed her daughter into the Gray County 4-H program, where she has been an active adult

"We're going on five years," she says, adding that when they first joined, the youngster just wanted to learn to sew and cook. But, the mother soon found, when the child gets involved, the parents get

"In 4-H, I learned it's not just a kid's program," she says. "It's a family type organization that strengthens the family. When Heather is involved, we all do it

The girl recently completed a 4-H project on dog obedience and now cares for the family's hyperactive dachshund, Troubles

"She and I sew alot," Kludt adds, explaining why a massive homemade sewing cabinet overflowing with patterns and fabric dominates the family room.

"Let's say I work at it," she says. "I've been working on a quilt for about two years, but it's always put on the back burner when something else comes along.

While Eileen stays involved with her junior high daughter's 4-H activities, husband Francis - an engineer at Celanese - takes the two younger Kludt kids, third grader David and second grader Amanda, to soccer practice.

The active mother is ready to touch more children than just her own: she wants to teach full-time. "Bringing up my own children:

"But if I can raise them, and maybe touch one other child along the way, if I can' encourage and help one child, I feel I've accomplished what I'm supposed

"I'm laying off this semester," she notes. "Eventually I'd like to teach at the secondary level: junior high. I enjoy their youth, vivaciousness, intelligence. It seems like they're much more

Kludt believes it's harder to be a pre-teen now than it was when she

"Of course, I can only relate that back to my own childhood," she

Despite the difficulty in raising a family nowadays, the Philadelphia native believes Pampa is "an excellent place to raise a family: the people of Pampa, the churches the teachers, the closeness you have in a small community.

"Pampa is a big family. It really is," she says. "I see people get sick and need help, and people just come by the dozen.

All of Lefors knows 'Norma

By CATHY SPAULDING Staff Writer

LEFORS — When Norma McBee completed her 20th year as postmaster here in June, the town had no celebration

"I don't think anyone knew it," she remembers. "I didn't say anything about it.

Instead, a year earlier, McBee asked the city to issue a proclamation honoring her customers, part of her "family" since 1965. She's able to greet most of the people who pass through the Lefors Post Office doors by name. They certainly know her name. "I'd say there are not more than two or three people in Lefors who don't call me 'Norma,''' she claims. "Even the little ones." "I feel a closeness with the people," McBee adds. "To me it's one of the most interesting jobs in the world. "Maybe that's not a fair statement, because I never did anything else," she adds. "But I do lové my work.'

For one thing, there's the challenge," she notes. "There are changes constantly that we have to keep up with.

"And another thing, this sounds simple, but I love raising the flag every morning. It makes me proud to be an American," she claims.

Although she has to stick to a strict daily schedule, McBee cannot define a "typical day" at the Post Office.

he daily schedule: The mail is in at 8:30 a.m.. I have an assistant who comes on an as-needed basis. If she's here, she starts work sorting the first class flats - those are the larger envelopes. By that time, I have the mail sorted and she starts boxing the mail into the post office boxes. Then come the newspapers, which are second class, parcel post, then we do the bulk and business mail." Afternoons are devoted to desk work: filling out forms, keeping up with the postal changes.

"All this time, we're waiting on customers at the front window, she says, adding that the customers are "very courteous" when they see that McBee and her assistant are busy.

McBee believes that more than 90 percent of her customers including folks who pick things up from their post boxes and go - are regular daily visitors. Many others come weekly. Several come just to

"This is the place where the retired men often meet," she notes. But even when there's no customers or people coming to the front desk to buy stamps, McBee enjoys the work. She finds "peace" when she works at her desk during those quiet times between customers.

She even enjoys slipping the mail into customers' boxes

"It's a great feeling to put a letter the box that says PHOTOS, DO NOT BEND, because that means that they're pictures from grandmother or something," she says. "Any holiday: Mothers' Day, Fathers' Day, Valentines Day gives me a good feeling."

Christmas, with its extra mountain of mail, is both a joy and a responsibility, McBee admits.

"There's a lot more to the post office than the public realizes," she

This is not the first time she's worked at the Post Office. McBee also worked there as a clerk in the closing years of World War II, when her husband was away in the service. She wanted to go with him, she says, but he was on duty in Korea, so she didn't see how she could go.

After her husband returned, McBee left the job to raise her family. As soon as her son was old enough, she returned to the Post

Although, McBee could be eligible for promotions to larger offices, she wants to stay in Lefors where she has lived since she was six months old. Still, she says, the Post Office is years, later getting into the mortgage end of the business. It was "a rude awakening" when she entered the realtor business.

Music majors had tended "to smell the roses," she said. The real estate job "was the real world,"

Harbour said she can't explain exactly why she got into real estate. Perhaps it had been glamorized some, and she fell for it. she said. "It's not glamorous at all," she said, but she got her license, anyway, dealing mainly with residential homes in Odessa.

Later she and her husband moved to Pampa, where he had been transferred with Getty, now merged with Texaco.

Getting out of the real estate business, she entered the banking field, handling mortgages mainly for residential homes.

At first she worked with First Federal Savings in Amarillo, driving back and forth from here handling mortgage loans for residential property in the Pampa area. But she also is cross - trained to handle installment loans when others are on vacation.

"Actually, for a town the size of Pampa, this is the best job anyone could have," she claimed.

The casual, homey atmosphere can be observed on a visit to First Financial, as Harbour smiles, laughs and chats with the other employees and the customers that walk in and out.

She offers a cup of coffee. And she points to the standing fireplace in the center of the lobby, noting it will be lit on cold winter days.

Harbour has other interests that for nine months - "nine long, grueling months," she groaned. Then she started with First Financial here in May, 1984.

"I like it very much here," she said, especially because of the small branch here, away from the headquarters in El Paso.

"We're pretty homey right here, real casual," Harbour said, leaning back in her chair.

The tellers know nearly all the customers by name, she noted, "and that's nice." A customer might come in only once or twice, and "we'd know them by name," she claimed.

"I love to work," she said. "I wouldn't have it any other way."

She and her husband "chip in on all the housework," she noted, and they share a real interest in each other's work

Her position in the banking business has been good for them, she stated. "A realtor is on call seven days a week," she said.

In her current job, she can enjoy having weekends off and "being able to have supper at night without being interrupted."

But her job can keep her busy at times. In addition to the office work of dealing with customers and handling all the paperwork. Harbour also offers seminars to realtors. Besides Pampa, she has conducted seminars in Childress, Borger, Fritch and other places.

"I stay up with the business," she said, also attending seminars to gain more information and knowledge about the business and reading books and related periodicals in the field.

"I like it so well that, yeah, I could stay in the business the rest of my life," she said, though not necessarily as a mortgage loan extend beyond her job. She is an affiliated member of the Pampa Board of Realtors and a member of the Pampa Chamber of Commerce.

Her husband is a member of AMBUCS, but she and other wives assist with the organization. 'Supposedly the women are called Am - Does," she chuckled. Currently the women "are trying to help get that going," then the women's group will form later, she noted.

Harbour also serves as a volunteer for the Hughey Home, a group home for mentally handicapped citizens, and teaches an exercise class there on Wednesday nights. The AMBUCS members help the home, too, handling much of the yardwork. Harbour said she hopes to get the women's association involved when it forms.

When Kayla Richerson started out in theater as a freshman at an Oklahoma junior college, she had no plans of making it stick; to her it was just a stagecraft class.

Then she heard the applause. It was for her performance as the West Indian servant Tituba in The Crucible, the first play she ever performed in.

Now, after numerous productions in Ada and Clinton, Okla., as well as Pampa's ACT I community theater, she wants to nare the applause. Theater can be done as well in Pampa as it can in New York City," Richerson believes. "A community doesn't need to be New York or Los Angeles or Dallas to do a professional show. It takes the attitude of the people involved with the show to make it professional."

ACT I board and does technical theater work at the M.K. Brown Auditorium.

"M.K. Brown is technically better than some of the theaters on Broadway," she observes. "Some of those theaters are small.

'When I started college, that was the year Northeast Oklahoma A&M built its auditorium," she says, noting that the NEO stage is one of the best in the state. "Then I went to New York on a student tour and saw a Broadway production in an old theater.

She was both disappointed and

The theater at Tulsa University, where I went next, was an old facility," she adds."I went from a beautiful new theater to an old one. They were tearing the theater down and we used the beams from the ceiling for lumber.'

Consequently, Richerson feels that a quality production can be presented on any Pampa stage, whether it is a junior high auditorium, a dining hall, a park, a church meeting room or a courtroom. All it takes is a little ingenuity, she says.

'It takes people who want a community theater and who are willing to work for it," she adds.

Richerson was one of the founding members of Pampa's community theater two years ago.

"I was talking with Jim Marcum (a former auto dealer) and he said 'I hear you're in theater,' and I said I was. And he said 'let's get one started,' and I said 'let's do it," she recalls.

Since then, Richerson has done backstage work for all seven productions ACT I has presented. She's acted in three of them, the second season finale "Blithe Spirit," a one act production of "Out of Our Father's House," and a special one-act performed for the area Panhellenic luncheon. And she's directed three, an evening of one-act plays, Neil Simon's "Last of the Red Hot Lovers" and the mystery "Witness for the Prosecution."

She is currently directing the premiere production for the third season, Jean Kerr's "Mary, Mary," to be presented Nov. 7 at the Coronado Inn. Her desk at Edward D. Jones, where she is the office manager, is cluttered with stage diagrams, property lists and script pages with the directions underlined in differing colors. She had to make copies of her master script for her players because as of Oct. 18, only three weeks before production, the cast's scripts had not been delivered.

Later this season, she's going to take on production of the Agatha Christie mystery "Appointment With Death." She says that production, set for spring at the Pampa Middle School Auditorium, will be one of the most technically complex productions ACT I has produced. It will be the first to feature a backdrop, a part of the scene that can be raised or lowered for scene changes.

ACT I is not Richerson's first involvement in Pampa theater. About 12 years ago, she produced a dinner theater performance of Neil Simon's "Barefoot in the Park."

Before coming to Pampa, Richerson was active in community theaters in Ada and Clinton, Okla. and participated in summer stock theater in Fairplay Colo., which is about 30 miles from the Breckenridge ski resort.

Life onstage and behind the stage has as many embarrassments, disappointments and triumphs as real life, Richerson says.

"On our evening of one acts, I wore wire framed glasses without the lenses, and I got choked up during one of the other character's speeches. I got a tear in my eye, so I reached through the frames to wipe it," she remembers. "Then in the last play we did I noticed I was wearing black drawers under pink pajamas.

"In 'Blythe Spirit,' I was outside smoking a cigarette and I thought we were in the next scene, so I missed an entrance," she adds "But the other characters did a good in the covering." good job of covering."

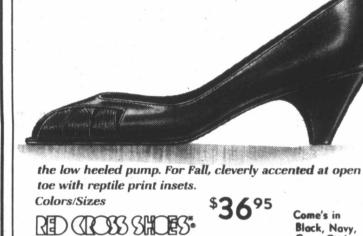

"One of the most frustrating things was a Sunday afternoon performance of 'Witness for the Prosecution' and the big blizzard Prosecution" and the Dig blanchit, and that would have been our

Although she enjoys acting, Richerson admits her first love in the theater is directing.

"Because I get to be the boss," she remarks. "I find that my directing helps me in acting. It gives me a better understanding of what they go through and the characters.

"Once you hear the applause, you're hooked," she adds.

Richerson is a member of the Committee approves woman's application

DALLAS (AP) — The application for ordination of the first woman priest for the Episcopal Diocese of Dallas has been approved by diocese committee, officials say.

The application by Gwen Buehrens was approved by the Standing Committee of clergy and lay representatives of the diocese following a two-hour meeting Thursday, Steve Weston, diocese communications officer, said.

"I believe many have been waiting for this for a long time,' said Weston. "The decision was taken not without a great deal of discussion and care A time and place has not yet been set for Mrs. Buehrens' ordination, Weston said. He said ordination of women has been a controversial subject in the Episcopal Church. Women's ordination "is still a controversial issue within the conservative areas of the church generally," Weson said. Mrs. Buehrens, presently a staff member of the Church of the Transfiguration in Dallas, has been a deacon for 13 years, said Weston.

She was a graduate of Yale Divinity School and was ordained to the Diaconate at Grace Cathedral in San Francisco in 1972.

Pampa's E.J. Sayles roots for the L.A. Rams

but she's left her heart in Texas O

By PAUL PINKHAM Staff Writer

The Los Angeles Rams football team may well count E.J. Sayles as a good luck charm.

The surprising Rams are undefeated going into the eighth week of the NFL season in this, the Pampa - raised cheerleader's first season with the Rams cheerleading

Sayles, a 1976 Pampa High School graduate known as Jean by local family and friends, was back home for a visit recently and met with students and faculty at Woodrow Wilson school. She was one of 34 cheerleaders, picked from a field of more than 600, named to the Rams squad this year.

"I guess the girl from Texas got a little lucky," she said with a

Auditions for the squad weren't easy. Sayles said all 600 squad hopefuls were taught dance and cheer routines and 67 finalists were

The finalists then were interviewed to learn more about their personalities, Sayles said. Then it was back to learning a different routine, "like another tryout.

Finally, Sayles said, 34 girls were chosen, 32 of whom will perform at all home games - eight in each corner of the stadium. The other two are dance captains who fill in at times of illness and emergencies.

Sayles was not always interested in cheerleading. At Pampa High, she was a baton twirler.

Even after three years of cheerleading at Texas Tech University in Lubbock, a job as a professional cheerleader still was not foremost in her mind. A decision to pursue an acting and singing career, a career Sayles said she is still actively seeking, led to her trip to California, her tryout and ultimately to her association with the Rams.

As Sayles tells it, the turn of events began one April night in 1984 when she was singing at a dinner show in Lubbock. Actor Cornell Wild encouraged her to think about acting and recommended a school in Pasadena, Calif. — the American Academy of Dramatic

"I'm still pursuing my acting and singing career," Sayles said, noting that cheerleading is not a full - time occupation. In fact, she said many of the girls on the squad are schoolteachers, prompting several of the Wilson Elementary teachers listening in to imagine tryouts with the Dallas Cowboy Cheerleaders.

Cheerleaders with most NFL teams face strict rules on their behavior and the Rams are no exception. Sayles said the cheerleaders are not permitted to visit the players at home and can only mingle with them at official team functions, she said.

The girls are also encouraged not to give their home phone numbers or addresses to strangers because several girls have been followed in recent years. Sayles said the team encourages squad members to list the Rams offices as phone numbers and addresses.

Sayles said being a cheerleader involves more than just showing up every Sunday at the football games. Currently, the squad practices once a week, usually Thursday nights, and does promotional spots for various companies and agencies. Each cheerleader must do eight public service promotionals, she added.

Promotionals she has participated in so far this season include spots for Bunny sportswear, which provides warm up suits and carrying bags for the squad, the United Way, a juvenile detention center and the Los Angeles County Fair. Two girls at a time also do halftime routines at the request of Los Angeles - area restaurants featuring Monday Night Football on big - screen

"Not all the cheerleaders go to the same promotional," she said.

"They look at our schedules and decide which promotional to send Sayles said she expects the number of practices to begin picking up shortly with the fast approaching NBA basketball season. For the first time, the squad will be leading cheers at Los Angeles Clippers basketball games. The Clippers moved to Los Angeles from San Diego last Twelve cheerleaders will cheer at each basketball game, she said. Sayles said she intends to try out for the squad again next year.

Each cheerleader must try out every year except line captains, she said.

Although Sayles called professional cheerleading "a lot of work but worth it," there is one problem. True to her Texas roots, she remains a loyal Dallas Cowboy

"I still love the Cowboys," she

Luckily, the Rams don't meet the Cowboys in the 1985 regular season. But if they should chance to meet in the playoffs, Sayles could find herself cheering outwardly for the Rams but deep in her heart will

Gill embarks on career in new medical field

E.J. Sayles at work

By CATHY SPAULDING Staff Writer

Embarking on a new field in a foreign environment can be a challenging venture, especially when facing such ominous topics as death, illness and aging.

But Miami native Beth Gill feels ready to take up the challenge as she seeks a masters' degree in medical sociology at Yale University.

Because the field is relatively new, the boundaries of medical sociology have not been defined. So far this year, Gill has looked into such areas as society's treatment of AIDS victims, the treatment of elderly people in nursing homes and how the medical field could better deal with death

Although she's fascinated by the scope of the field. Gill thinks she's most concerned with the treatment - or mistreatment - of the elderly

Her interest in elder care was piqued while she was an undergraduate at Trinity University, where she studied nursing homes in the area. She also worked with elderly patients at a local hospital. What she saw both touched and disturbed her

"It was really an eye-opener for me, to see how we were treating these people," she says, referring to some of the "horror stories" she heard about some of the area nursing homes

But what seemed to disturb her the most was the class consciousness and the apparent abuse and neglect at some of the nursing homes

"Definitely the people with the money are winning out, getting the best care," she observes. "The nursing homes for the wealthy are alot better. There's more contact with caregivers because of the larger staffs.

She's adds that in the poorer nursing homes she has studied, the patients had not been fed, had not been bathed

"In the extreme cases, the nursing homes would starve their patients," she says

One of the nursing homes she studied was the Autumn Hills Nursing Home of Texas City where staff members went on trial earlier this month for murder by neglect. Some staff members were charged with putting patients on a starvation diet.

It's not only in poor nursing homes that Gill feels elderly people

"I think they're sadly neglected in rural areas." she says, remembering hearing about elderly people who were found dead in their homes.

Gill hopes to apply what she is learning to work with elderly people in the community. Even could use improved services for its elderly residents, she believes.

"And that town is aging rapidly," she observes.

"In Follett, a friend runs cancer patients to the hospital each day,' she says. "Even if they don't have a formal support network, they do have someone willing to help: a telephone network, people willing to to out and take the time with

"It scares me to think 'what am I going to do with my parents when hev get that old dread becoming one of them and I don't like that about myself, because society has made such a bad thing about being old. And companies are exploiting older

'We don't want to face it but we can learn from them," she says, expressing hopes that her studies will take her to Europe, where the hospice movement began. A hospice is a home for terminally ill patients.

Gill says that some people with a medical sociology background can be "entrepreneurs" by making out living wills — requests that doctors not use extrordinary medical means to sustain a person's life. But She won't do that.

Instead, she wants to work at a medical school teaching a subject that is often ignored by the life-sustaining profession: dealing with death. "Doctors have never learned to deal with death," Gill believes. 'But right now, hospitals are opening up. "In college, however, dealing with death is the most popular course, nowadays," she adds. "It seems like today, death is a political issue and a legal issue: deciding when or where a person can die," she observes. "It certainly is an economic issue." Although she claims her Panhandle roots are still firm, Gill has had to adjust her beliefs through college

"My opinions have changed so much,' she says. "When I graduated from high school I was unaware of anything but myself.

But I was lucky, I was in touch with all kinds of people. "If I was faced with the AIDS issue in high school, I don't wouldn't have touched it with a 10-foot pole," she says.

Gill comments on Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome. and how society reacts to AIDS victims: "We need to deal better with these people and not treat them as lepers.

"I think I've learned a little more patience," Gill says. "I've learned - it's such a corny line, but it's true - that every day is precious. When you're facing death, every day is precious.
