Pampa approved for Main Street program

Pampa has been selected as one of five cities in the state to participate in the Texas Main Street program aimed at revitalizing the downtown business district.

State Rep. Foster Whaley informed Pampa Mayor Sherman Cowan and The Pampa News of the city's selection early Monday afternoon. The city had made application for inclusion in the program in August.

The Texas Historical Commission also has designated Greenville, Palestine, Pittsburg and San Marcos as 1986 Texas Main Street cities.

The designation sets in motion a three-year project to revitalize the central business districts in each city by restoring what the commission calls the "historic fabric" of their downtowns.

Since the beginning of the Texas Main Street Project in 1981, a total of 1,020 downtown buildings have been rehabilitated and 594 new businesses have been started with a private investment of over $96.4 million.

Pampa is the only Panhandle area city to be designated for the Main Street Program, aimed at cities with under 50,000 population. Only five cities are selected each year.

The goal of the Main Street Program is to develop a distinctive atmosphere and image for the town, with emphasis given to finding a historic flavor in rehabilitating older structures to preserve a historic sense and style.

City Manager Bob Hart is currently out of town. But in a city commission meeting Aug. 13 he had stated the program involves more than just restoring downtown buildings. Efforts also will be made to develop interest in having people come to the downtown area for such things as festivals, special events and various community activities.

The downtown area had traditionally been the center of commerce and cultural activities in most American cities in the past, serving as the focus of the community, Hart had observed. But changing patterns had seen much of the business and commercial activity move away from downtown areas with the advent of the automobile.

The Main Street Program also aims at providing more apartments and housing downtown or nearby to bring people back into living in the downtown area, Hart had noted.

The program is developed on a three-year basis, with a coordinator to be hired to work with downtown businesses and community associations. The coordinator will concentrate on four major areas:

- organization among merchants, financial institutions, government, civic groups, the Pampa Chamber of Commerce and others;

- promotion to create a positive image and to develop sales events, festivals and other activities;
- design to enhance the visual quality of the downtown environment, with emphasis on a unified historic flavor;
- and economic restructuring to strengthen the existing economic assets of the business district while diversifying its economic base.

All business, associations and groups participate on a voluntary basis.

Hart stated that while the program is aimed at the downtown area, the entire city can benefit by attracting more area residents to visit and shop in Pampa.

The program is not federally funded. Instead, it is funded primarily through contributions from private foundations and major corporations within the state.

Hurricane Juan spreading destruction in SE Louisiana

LAKE CHARLES, La. (AP) — Hurricane Juan, blamed for three deaths and the disappearance of four people, moved over southeast Louisiana today with 85 mph wind after ripping loose oil rigs, capsizing boats and dumping dozens of people into the stormy seas.

Forecasters said that the surprising late-season storm had maintained its strength since a large part of it was still over water and that it was causing rain from the Atlantic coast to the Upper Mississippi Valley.

After stalling off the western Louisiana coast Monday, the storm began backtracking eastward, and its eye crossed into southeast Louisiana's desolate marshlands near Morgan City at about 5 a.m.

As it moved ashore, it snapped towlines and set adrift the 100-foot crewboat Gary Ellen with five men aboard, said Coast Guard spokeswoman Debbie Westerberg. A helicopter sent to search for the five, plus three others missing since Monday, was recalled because of high winds, she said.

The Gary Ellen was being towed by a boat identified as the Liberator.

Thousands of people fled their homes as Juan began battering the Gulf Coast. Hundreds more remain cut off from their homes and the Coast Guard said nearly 150 people were plucked from the rough Gulf of Mexico by late Monday with helicopters and a fleet of private and military vessels.

The rescue efforts, curtailed by nightfall Monday, were to resume today as soon as the weather permits, said Westerberg. Three people were dead and at least nine were missing from the storm, officials said.

Gov. Edwin Edwards declared a state of emergency Monday in 13 coastal parishes, including New Orleans and its suburbs, where only power outages and minor street flooding had been reported.

Although state officials lacked precise figures, thousands along

Louisiana's southern coast were evacuated as rivers, lakes and bayous spilled over their banks and topped levees after three days of heavy rains. Some areas got 6 inches of rain Monday, with tides from 5 to 8 feet above normal.

State Office for Emergency Preparedness operations officer D.C. Jensen said he believed that more than 2,000 people had fled their homes.

"Our people our watching (Juan) closely," Jensen said. "Because of the structure of the storm, there's a big push of water on the eastern side and water is rising" in the parishes south and east of New Orleans.

Hurricane warnings were raised from Port Arthur, Texas, to Mobile, Ala. Gale warnings were in effect from Port Arthur to Brownsville, Texas, and from the Mobile east to Appalachicola, Fla.

The late-season storm caught many by surprise when it formed

Hightower still undecided on race

CANADIAN — With the 1986 elections a year away, it's too early to make a decision whether to run again for Congress, former U.S. Rep. Jack Hightower told about 90 Hemphill County Democrats gathered for an organizational meeting Monday.

"I really have always maintained that the campaigns are too long," the Vernon Democrat said. "What may be an issue in October of 1985 may be ancient history in November of 1986."

Hightower, a 10-year House veteran, lost to Amarillo Republican Beau Boulter in 1984. He said a lot of 13th District Democrats were discouraged after that election because they did not expect a GOP victory.

"My banker didn't expect it, I can tell you for sure," Hightower joked. "I didn't plan to stay in Congress all my life but I didn't plan an early retirement either."

At the mention of Boulter's name, several in attendance called out "Beau - zo." By contrast, Hightower received a standing ovation at the start and finish of his speech.

Hightower said he would work in some capacity in the upcoming campaign, regardless of whether he is a candidate. He predicted an expensive campaign and called for strong party organization.

"Democrats in this district can't match Republicans dollar for dollar and we're not going to try to do that," he said.

If he does run, Hightower said in an interview prior to his talk, the situation will be different than in 1984 when he was the incumbent but Boulter had on his side the

Hightower speaks at Canadian

Reagan coattail effect. This time, Hightower said, Boulter will not have the coattail advantage but will have the strength of incumbency.

Hightower also addressed farm, budget and defense issues during his talk. He called for a "new and different" farm program that "takes into consideration the realities of the farm economy."

"It's no good to say, 'Well, we're going to get by this year,'" he said. "The farm bill is, at best, a patched program, although it may be the best that this Congress could do. It's not the best as far as West Texas is concerned."

Hightower criticized the idea of letting the farm economy find its "own level," claiming: "That's not the way they do it in any other part of the world."

"For too long, the tragedy of agriculture and the agriculture economy has been treated like it was happening to somebody way off and not happening to us," he said.

But, Hightower added, the nation has to move away from the concept of trying to protect various groups. He criticized politicians that promise a "safety net to protect the old folks, farmers or whatever special interest group they're talking to."

"What we've got to be concerned about is how strong is the country, not how many safety nets you're going to have," he said.

Hightower called criticism of the Democrats as free-spenders "political rhetoric." He noted he was in office in 1981 when Reagan asked Congress to pass a bill he said would eliminate the national debt in four years by lowering taxes.

"We did it. We still don't have that balanced budget," Hightower said. He indicated he would have been willing to work with Reagan had the president submitted Congress a balanced budget.

Speaking of Sen. Phil Gramm's budget-balancing proposal, Hightower said he is concerned that so much attention is being focused on balancing the budget and hardly any is directed toward eliminating a trillion-dollar national debt.

"All the balanced budget says is we're going to break even," he said. "We've got to do better than break even."

Hightower also said he believes the country must continue to maintain a strong national defense but thinks there is room to save money in the defense budget.

He said he hopes the president can reach an arms control agreement with the Soviets but added, "I'm not going to hold my breath."

Youth could be tried as adult in stabbing

BY PAUL PINKHAM
Staff Writer

A 16-year-old boy, held in connection with Saturday's fatal stabbing, could ultimately be tried as an adult, a juvenile probation official said Monday.

If a juvenile between the ages of 14 and 18 commits a felony, the juvenile court can waive jurisdiction and put the teenager in the hands of the adult court, said Ed Barker, Gray County Juvenile Probation Officer.

"The procedure for that is tied to the most heinous crimes, usually taking into consideration the child's maturity, his past record and the protection of the public," Barker said.

But, Barker added, such a decision normally comes after numerous studies and a discretionary transfer hearing before the juvenile judge.

"It's not something that you just arbitrarily say, 'Oh, yeah, this is a bad egg; let's give him to the adults,'" Barker explained.

Prior to the hearing, Barker said, the juvenile court is required by law to obtain a professional diagnostic study, social evaluation and studies of the child's circumstances and the circumstances surrounding the alleged offense. The welfare of the community is also taken into consideration, he said.

The hearing is then held before the juvenile judge in whose hands the decision rests, although Barker stressed the judge consults and receives input from professionals and experts in juvenile affairs.

The 16-year-old is being held by the Pampa Police Department in connection with the stabbing that claimed the life of Pete Ontiveros, 20, 1005 Neel Road late Saturday. No charges have been filed yet.

The homicide occurred during a fight which broke out at an employee Halloween party for Long John Silver's Seafood Shoppe employees at the Starlight Room of the Coronado Inn. Two other men were injured in the scuffle.

Ordinarily, County Judge Carl Kennedy hears juvenile cases, although District Judges Don Cain and Grainger McIlhany can hear them as well. Barker said he does not know which judge will hear the case in question.

Barker said he anticipates a discretionary hearing in the case within a relatively short period of time, but could not predict when the hearing would be held.

"They try to do things as expeditiously as possible where a juvenile is concerned," he explained. He said the youth's family is trying to secure an Amarillo lawyer for his defense but added he does not know yet whether the youth will be represented by a private attorney or a court-appointed lawyer.

If transfer to the adult court is not ordered, a petition will be filed, a trial date set and a two-

Sociologist says sadism not Halloween's biggest danger

NEW YORK (AP) — In the 1940s and 50s, the story was that people were heating pennies red-hot before giving them to unsuspecting trick-or-treaters. In the late 1960s, people said hippies were handing out Halloween treats laced with drugs.

Since the early 1970s, the fear has focused on stories about "Halloween sadists" who kill and seriously injure countless children by dispensing treats that contain sharp objects and poisons, according to a sociologist who calls the issue an overblown urban legend.

"There's no evidence to suggest that Halloween sadism is any sort of a major problem," Joel Best, sociology professor at California State University in Fresno, said Sunday in a telephone interview. While some incidents have occurred occasionally, he said.

Best, who writes about Halloween sadism in November's Psychology Today, said public attention paid to it would be better spent on such dangers as unsafe toys, cribs and other consumer products, and school bus accidents.

He said the Halloween sadist is an example of an urban legend, a tale that warns about the dangers of modern life. Such legends are usually passed by word of mouth as something that happened "to a friend of a friend," he said.

Two themes of the Halloween legend, danger to children and contaminated food, are often found in urban legends, like those about deep-fried rats at fast-food outlets or a babysitter who cooks an infant in a microwave oven, he said.

With its roots in the penny-heating stories, the Halloween sadist legend became popular about 15 years ago as a symbol of fears about crime and threats to children, such as child abuse and drugs, Best said.

in the Gulf on Saturday, reaching hurricane strength, with 74 mph winds, by Sunday afternoon.

At 6 a.m. CST, the Juan's center was drifting northeastward between 5 and 10 miles an hour, about 60 miles southwest of New Orleans, the National Weather Service said. It was centered near latitude 29.5 north, 91.0 west.

Juan's maximum sustained winds remained at 85 mph with higher gusts in squalls, the weather service said.

Forecasters cautioned that the storm was likely to move slowly and erratically for several hours.

Hurricane warnings could be extended to the Florida Panhandle later today, they said.

More than half the people pulled from the water Monday had bailed off two Penrod Drilling Co. rigs when one snapped from its moorings and began drifting toward the other early Monday, Ms. Westerberg said.

About 80 people were rescued and one man drowned after being swept away as he clung to a capsized rescue capsule. Two men were missing from an overturned crewboat, the Miss Agnes, and the search was to resume today, she said.

"Helicopters are everywhere," said Mike Longman, a New Orleans radio reporter who flew Monday to Grand Isle, which was used as a staging area for the rescue effort.

At Grand Isle, 100 miles south of New Orleans, tides came in so fast that only 700 of the town's 1,900 residents got out before floodwaters washed out the only road to the island community.

More than a foot of rain had fallen over the area since the weekend.

In Plaquemines Parish, south of New Orleans, cars drove atop levees to get past floodwaters. In Lafourche Parish, the rain broke a canal levee on Bayou Lafourche and collapsed a pumping station near Galiano.

Water poured over levees in other parts of southeast Louisiana.

In the town of Lafitte, it turned streets into lakes and spilled over a graveyard. When the mausoleums filled with water, sealed caskets popped them open and bobbed out into the floodwaters.

"This is not the typical hurricane," said Louisiana State Police commander Col. Wiley McCormick.

phase trial will occur — one phase to determine guilt or innocence and the other to decide a penalty — Barker said. If found guilty in juvenile court, the 16 - year - old faces a maximum sentence of five years in custody of the Texas Youth Commission because state law prohibits him being held beyond his 21st birthday.

Juvenile hearings are closed to the public.

However, if the teenager is tried as an adult and found guilty, he could face 99 years in prison. Barker said the death penalty would be ruled out in this case because the homicide was not aggravated by another felony, as is required for the death penalty in Texas.

If transfer is ordered, the teenager must be indicted before a grand jury, just like an adult. However, Barker said, if the grand jury fails to indict the youth, he can be transferred back to juvenile authorities.

Water amendments meeting tonight

A discussion of proposed water amendments included in State Constitutional amendments to be decided by Texas voters next Tuesday will be conducted at 7:30 this evening in the Starlight Room of the Coronado Inn.

State Representative J.W. "Buck" Buchanan of Dumas, a recognized authority on North Plains and Texas water resources, will make the presentation as part of the annual meeting of the Gray County Program Building Committee in cooperation with the Gray County Extension office.

The committee wanted to give local citizens an opportunity to learn how the two proposed water amendments would affect the area, according to Joe VanZandt, county extension agent.

Voting machine test

There will be a public test of the electronic voting equipment 4 p.m. Thursday at the Gray County Clerk's office, county clerk Wanda Carter announced.

The testing will be done to see if the machines properly count the ballots for the Nov. 5 constitutional amendment election, Carter explained.

"We're going to test the machines with pre-marked ballots then we'll seal them before the election," Carter said, stressing that these test votes will not be counted in the Nov. 5 vote tallies.

Hightower seeking to help jobless farmers

AUSTIN (AP) — Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower is pushing a new job training program he says can provide assistance and hope to financially troubled farmers and ranchers being forced off their land.

"We have got to reach out to these farmers and help them make an adjustment. We just can't say, 'adios, chump,' as they go out of business," Hightower said Monday.

Hightower has asked 34 job training agencies around the state to include farmers in the list of Texans eligible for programs that now help displaced homemakers, steelworkers, refinery workers and others.

The state gets $7.5 million in federal funds annually for such programs.

Help would include job counseling, retraining, advice on starting a small business and other assistance for up to 1,000 farm families, officials said.

Officials of the Texas Department of Agriculture and local agencies met Monday to develop guidelines for the program. TDA spokesman Andy Welch said it should begin Jan. 1.

Hightower said he also wants to establish a toll-free telephone hot line where farmers can call to learn of legal, financial and mental health assistance available locally.

According to a TDA survey, 2.6 percent of Texas farms failed last year due to financial problems. About 100 farms and ranches are failing weekly, Hightower said, and about 47 percent of farm borrowers are behind in loan payments.

Hightower estimated as many as 20 percent of Texas family farms could fail next year.

"We are at a crisis situation," Hightower said. "This is not a temporary recession. It is a full-fledged depression in the rural areas that's killing some of the most efficient, most productive, most intelligent and most innovative people we know."

Crosby County farmer Joe Rankin, president of the Texas Farmers Union, said many farmers seem to just quietly disappear from rural communities.

"These people are going through a really traumatic change. Anywhere they can find a job, that's where they quietly move off to. You don't hear from them. You don't know what happens to your friends," he said.

Rankin said there are personal tragedies taking place in the countryside.

"Within five miles of my place in the last two years ... we've had two suicides. These are hard times out in the country. It's a heartbreak situation," he said.

While the average price for cotton received by Plains farmers is 65 cents per pound, it costs about 80 cents to grow, Rankin said. "When you fall 15 or 16 cents below the cost of production, you're losing money fast. We're going broke en masse and in a big hurry."

Seven Midwestern states have started job training programs for farmers. Gary Dick, who has run a program in eastern Iowa, said helping farmers can present some special problems.

"Many people don't want to be identified as needing help. Especially farmers, who are a very independent group," he told the Texas officials.

Reagan to name young federal judge

WASHINGTON (AP) — A 32-year-old Texas judge says President Reagan has nominated him to the federal bench, which would make him the youngest U.S. district judge in the nation.

Sid Fitzwater, a state district judge in Dallas, said Reagan called him Monday to tell him he is being nominated to fill a vacancy in the Northern District of Texas.

"I am grateful to President Reagan for nominating me," Fitzwater said.

A White House spokesman said there would be no comment on the nomination until it is officially announced after it is sent to the Senate for confirmation.

Fitzwater was recommended last March by Texas Republican Sen. Phil Gramm, who had predicted criticism of the appointment because of Fitzwater's age and experience. Gramm said Fitzwater, if confirmed, would be the youngest federal judge in the nation.

"I am proud that the president has accepted my recommendation," Gramm said Monday. "Sid Fitzwater will be an outstanding federal judge."

The American Bar Association's

federal judiciary committee, which makes recommendations to the Justice Department on judicial candidates, generally expects a nominee to have 12 years experience as a lawyer, Gramm said, while Fitzwater has only practiced since 1976.

Gramm said the ABA has waived the experience standard for female or minority candidates in the past.

In 1983, Julia Gibbons was 32 when she was appointed in the Western District of Tennessee, and Ricardo Hinojosa was 33 when appointed in the Southern District of Texas, said a Justice Department official who asked not to be quoted by name.

Gramm said last week that the ABA had withdrawn its complaint.

Mark Goodin of the Senate Judiciary Committee said it would "take a good deal of research" to find out who the current youngest judge is. But he said Gramm's assertion that Fitzwater would be the youngest "sounds like a fair assessment."

Gramm said Fitzwater was screened by a 10-member, unofficial, statewide committee of lawyers before Gramm recommended him.

School board says

No teacher firing in strip-search incident

CEDAR HILL, Texas (AP) — With a crowd of bystanders in the hallway outside, the Cedar Hill school district board met behind closed doors and decided not to fire a physical education teacher and an administrator over the strip search of 15 junior high girls for a missing $1.85.

Some parents of the Cedar Hill Middle School students who were searched were enraged by the action and asked the board at its Monday night meeting to fire teacher Janice Ellis and Jeanne Cothran, an assistant principal who was involved with the search.

The meeting room was packed but before the crucial vote the board went into a closed executive session, leaving spectators to debate the matter among themselves while board members made their decision inside.

The board voted to transfer Mrs. Ellis to another school and place reprimands in the files of both educators.

Students were ordered to remove their clothing Thursday when a girl in a seventh-grade physical education class reported $1.85 missing. The missing money was not found.

Even the girl whose money was stolen, Michelle Younger, 13, said she felt "humiliated and embarrassed" over the search.

Other parents have said they still support Mrs. Ellis.

The teacher acted out of frustration after several thefts occurred during the year, the parents said.

One parent, Pat Stamper, noted Monday night that the physical education teacher has seen the students in various states of undress before in the locker room.

"I have no problems with that," Ms. Stamper said.

On Friday, Ms. Cothran said the decision to search the students was made in haste and frustration.

Real bulldogs aren't Buffy

In preparation for this week's BIG CAME between Pampa and Borger, today's guest columnist is a former Borger who made the switch to the Harvesters. Mr. Bo Bouldog. Bo?

Yeah. I wanna complain about these wimps that you Pampa Harvesters are gonna play this Friday. They call themselves Bulldogs, but they're not. Real bulldogs are mean critters. They're tough. They wear black derby hats and go around with a dour scowl, like this: Grrrrrr!

But most important, they don't call themselves Buffy. Buffy, you say. What real bulldog in his right mind would call himself Buffy?

A Borger Bulldog that's who. Yeah, that's their mascot's name: Buffy.

What a joke! What a — what's that fancy word for it — a travesty! Buffy's a girl's name, for goodness sake; it's a preppy girl's name. I mean, you oughta hear this guy cheer:

"Greetings and salutations, pep club. This is Buffy Bulldog, your top-dog mascot, here. Just got back from a marvy art show at the country club. Then I saw a film at the cinema and went to Saks and bought this this really top-hole maroon monogrammed blazer. Isn't it lovely. Say, I would stay and cheer, but I might soil my top-siders, and I promised Binky and B.J. that I'd meet them at the yacht club for cocktails. Ciao!"

Ain't that disgusting? And I have it on good authority that this critter has fleas and smokes cigars. Buffy's not only preppy, he's an undignified boor. We Real Bulldogs are too tough and too wise to waste our hearts and lungs on tobacco. And if this cat ever took baths and wore a flea collar like he's supposed to, he wouldn't have fleas.

I'm ashamed to be of the same species as that clown. Why can't Borger call its mascot something more powerful? How about Tuffy or Huffy or McGruffy? Those are names with real teeth in them.

I bet I know why Borger uses such a pansy name for a mascot. It doesn't want to be guilty of false advertising. That's unethical and in many cases illegal, you know.

But Pampa, I been watchin' youse guys. And I'm tellin' ya the truth, you got alot goin for you. Look at what you did to Canyon and Dumas and Perryton. I don't even think those places exist anymore.

Look at — well, never mind that last game, the Karma wasn't right, or somethin'. But I know you Harvesters. You're gonna pick yourself up and go this Friday and really give the hometown folks somethin' to watch. Right?

The dummies at district have Borger ranked above Pampa. But I'll bet that's gonna change when the mean green meets those red and white pansies Friday night.

Gary Jernigan, Dave Carter, Brent Cryer and the rest of the Harvester squad play football like men, not puppies.

And that's why all my bulldog friends and I are gonna root for the Harvesters Friday.

Ruiz to be tried again

AUSTIN (AP) — David Ruiz, a principal in the state prison reform suit, will be tried again on robbery charges in Austin, state District Judge C.C. "Kit" Cooke has ruled.

The trial will start Nov. 18. Cooke declared a mistrial Oct. 15 in the first effort to try Ruiz after the judge learned a juror had been nipping cocktails during lunch breaks.

Cooke, a visiting judge from Cleburne, made his ruling Monday after a day-long hearing in which seven of the local state district judges and Travis County District Attorney Ronnie Earle testified they thought it was possible to get a jury that would give Ruiz a fair and impartial trial here.

"I seem to be the only one who wants it moved," said Cooke, who had said earlier that he thought there would be "less problems" if the trial was held elsewhere. Defense attorney Bob Looney opposed moving the trial.

Ruiz was the state prison inmate named as plaintiff in the prison reform lawsuit that sparked major changes in the Texas Department of Corrections.

Cooke said he Monday he had considered moving the case to six counties surrounding Austin or to Hood or Johnson counties.

Gov. Mark White and Attorney General Jim Mattox were subpoenaed three different times for Monday's hearing but neither made an appearance.

Conservatives push Loeffler

AUSTIN (AP) — A conservative political action committee says Texas Republicans should pick U.S. Rep. Tom Loeffler over Kent Hance in next year's GOP gubernatorial primary because Hance isn't conservative enough.

"Few candidates have captured the hearts and the votes of Texans like Ronald Reagan ... The record clearly shows Rep. Tom Loeffler is far closer to Ronald Reagan than Kent Hance is," says a brochure distributed Monday by the Texas Conservative Action Fund.

Included in the mailing to nearly 9,000 Republican leaders was a letter from conservative GOP activist Bert Hurlbut criticizing Hance for his ties with liberal Democrats when the former Lubbock congressman was a Democrat.

Loeffler, the third-ranking Republican in the U.S. House, and former Gov. Bill Clements all are seeking the Republican nomination to challenge incumbent Democratic Gov. Mark White.

"Texas is a conservative state and conservative candidates win in Texas," the Austin-based PAC's

Looney said White and Mattox knew the pulse of Texas voters, "at least of the Democrats," and could testify whether Ruiz could get a fair trial in the Capital City.

"He (Mattox) of all people should sit on the witness stand and say if the defendant can get a fair trial in Travis County since the attorney general went through a long trial here and was acquitted," said Looney.

Earlier this year, Mattox was acquitted of a commercial bribery charge.

Sheriff's deputies said they served a subpoena on Mattox on the third try but he never appeared in the court room. Officials were unable to find the governor to serve him with a subpoena.

Looney had requested more than 100 subpoenas for the change of venue hearing, including all district and county judges in Austin and in surrounding counties, several state legislators, a number of news reporters and grand jurors and jurors involved in the case.

"I think a jury panel could be selected here that would be as fair as any in the state of Texas," said Earle.

Cooke declared a mistrial Oct. 15 after hearing two weeks of testimony and evidence on charges that Ruiz took part in a September 1984 armed robbery at an Austin apartment.

Ruiz, 43, faces a possible life sentence if convicted of aggravated robbery.

mailing said.

The brochure noted that Clements' 1978 victory made him the first Republican since Reconstruction. "Now, the entire nation is watching Texas to find out whether that 1978 victory was a fluke, or a sign that the South is changing," it said.

Inspector details complaints

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — A former state nursing home inspector says she saw a patient tied to a chair for an entire day at the Autumn Hills nursing home in Texas City.

Testifying in the murder - by - neglect trial of Autumn Hills Convalescent Centers Ins. and five of its current or former employees, Betty Korndorffer said she also noticed another patient who was moved only once in her bed during an entire day.

The trial involves the death of 87-year-old Elnora Breed on Nov. 20, 1978, who the defense said died of cancer 47 days after she entered the Gulf Coast home.

Ms. Korndorffer testified Monday that she saw a patient in a straitjacket-type restraint, tied to a chair during an inspection in February 1978.

"She stayed in that chair all day long and was never moved," she said.

During the same visit, she said, she found one patient who was being given drugs without a doctor's consent. The February 1978 inspection, Ms. Korndorffer said, showed "a deterioration from August of 1977" when the last inspection was made.

"We noticed weight loss among the patients, poor catheter care. The patients were not as clean or well-groomed. There was a strong urine odor throughout the skilled wing," she said.

After the February inspection, Ms. Korndorffer said the facility was placed on "vendor hold," a term which means Medicaid funds are withheld until problems are corrected.

When she returned March 13, "everything looked much better. It didn't smell as bad. We commended them..."

Ms. Korndorffer testified she investigated several complaints against the nursing home and met several times with Autumn Hills employees.

In December 1977, she said she told an Autumn Hills social worker to go back to company headquarters in Houston and "tell Mr. Gay and Mr. Pohlmeier that Autumn Hills Texas City was a mess."

EVER STRIVING FOR TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Spending is still our big problem

President Reagan is moving toward an unenviable distinction. He will soon be the first chief executive to have presided over a trillion-dollar increase in the federal debt.

When Reagan took office, the debt stood at $914 billions. He has now been forced to request a debt-ceiling increase to $2 trillion. Not surprisingly, this request has drawn the same posturing from congressional Democrats that President Carter used to provoke from Republicans. As usual, the opposition tries to place all the blame on the White House.

However, there's an ironic new wrinkle. Both parties always distort the truth in their self-interest, but this time their distortions are reinforcing each other.

It's in the Democrats' interest to portray Reagan as a heartless spending-cutter and tax slasher, who tore the heart out of social programs and choked the flow of revenue needed to pay for those programs.

It's the Republicans' interest to portray their leader as a prudent spending-trimmer who halted the growth of unaffordable government programs and rolled back confiscatory taxes.

So both parties agree on the facts and disagree on interpretations. But they're wrong with the facts.

Despite considerable effort, this administration has cut neither total federal taxes nor total outlays. Both have grown since 1981, and spending grew faster. The deficit, debt and resulting economic problems are caused not so much by a revenue shortfall as by a spending overrun.

In 1981, the federal government collected $599.3 billion and spent $678.2 billion. In 1985, it collected $736.9 billion and spent $959.1 billion. Thus, federal revenues grew by about 23 percent and spending about 41 percent. About two-thirds of the spending increase came in programs other than defense.

The figures show that not only were there no reckless cuts in either taxes or spending, there were no net cuts either.

The main culprit for the mushrooming deficit and debt is an uninterrupted spending binge, which raised federal outlays from 22 percent of the gross national product in 1977, to 23.5 percent this year.

The tax "cuts" both real and imaginary are innocent. Washington has a spending problem not a revenue problem.

A letter to the president

Dear Mr. President:

Pundits are saying you will have a public relations problem with Gorbachev at the summit. That's silly. The world knows that the Soviets are the bad guys.

You do have a real summit problem, however. It concerns a nuclear arms-control agreement. There is danger of gridlock on the American side of the negotiations. Only one man can break the logjam: you.

What's going on now in Washington falls under a standard political acronymic rubric: B-MOP. That stands for "Battle for the Mind of the President." Nothing new in that: It's what Washington politics is all about.

This particular B-MOP, however, is curious. For the moment, it's pitting some of your best friends against what one senses you'd like to get: a truly tough-minded treaty to cut nuclear weapons.

Your friends — the hawks — make an almost persuasive case. They say a democracy can't successfully negotiate an arms-control treaty with a totalitarian state. In the past, there's been some real merit to that view. The hawks say that American doves and State Department bureaucrats make well-publicized demands on a president. This softens the U.S. negotiating position. The Soviets stand by, watching the American position erode.

America ends up lusting for any old treaty, and we get one that doesn't cut nuclear arms and is tilted toward Soviet interests. The hawks astutely point out that, since the arms-control process began, all we've gotten is more weapons, more relative Soviet power and more instability. Their conclusion: The U.S. political system is at fault; there is no good treaty possible.

Mr. President, it's a powerful view, held with conviction by respected people both in and out of your administration. They see the old patterns forming again: pressure against Star Wars, apocalypse-mongering, and so on. They ask: Can a president elected as a tough guy, hang tough? They believe that while you mean well, you are not yet sufficiently knowledgeable about arms control and therefore you can be manipulated. The closet-liberal manipulators, say the hawks, are doing their stuff everywhere, right inside your allegedly hawkish administration.

It's a dangerous view to leave unanswered. If, by some chance, the Soviets should prove to be willing to cut the cards and start dealing, the hawks will be able to undercut your position by saying we're negotiating from weakness.

How can you cope with it? At its root, the hawk case is flawed. But only you can prove that in a way they will accept.

Their case is based on one core thought: that the future will resemble the past. That may be true in physics, but not in politics.

The 1980s are not the 1970s. Vietnam breast-beating is over. We have raised our military spending. A president has been elected and re-elected on the proposition that America ought to be more muscular. Politicians are desperate not to appear "soft" on defense issues.

There's a paradox at work here: It's important that you prove your tough friends wrong, by showing them you can be just as tough as you want to be. You know, the issue at hand goes beyond arms control; it's whether democracies can function in the crunch. After all, if the mind of man can conceive a hard-nosed yet fair treaty (and that is a conceivable thought), then the true test of the American political system is to show itself strong enough to promote such a deal and stick to it.

The only way to convince your friends is to personally learn the full intricacies of the arms-control game. You're the only one you should trust. I know it's not your style to get into the details of policy. But on this issue, you'd better. Otherwise you may get mugged by either side.

When you've done all this, Mr. President, you've only got one problem left: the Russians. They don't have a great track record of negotiating in good faith. But once they see that you have really changed American politics, it's possible they may be ready to deal seriously.

Today in History

Today is Tuesday, Oct. 29, the 302nd day of 1985. There are 63 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Oct. 29, 1929, "Black Tuesday" descended upon the New York Stock Exchange. Prices collapsed amid panic selling, thousands of investors were wiped out, and America's Great Depression began.

On this date:

Ten years ago: President Gerald R. Ford said he would veto any bill to rescue New York City by having the federal government guarantee the availability of funds to prevent default. The next day, New York's Daily News ran the headline, "FORD TO CITY: DROP DEAD."

Five years ago: The Treasury Department announced the federal deficit for fiscal 1980 totaled $59 billion, more than twice the deficit of the previous fiscal year.

One year ago: Doctors at the Loma Linda University Medical Center in California defended their decision to transplant the heart of a baboon into an infant girl known as "Baby Fae" without trying to find a human donor heart first.

Surviving second round

The ordeal of my life is finally over, I suppose. Nobody is sticking needles in me and nothing hurts. The ordeal of my life, by the way, went something like this:

In late August, I was on my way back from the Soviet Union. I had stopped in London where I became terribly, terribly (with an English accent, please) ill. The English called my symptoms the "rigors." I called them the "shivering fits."

Doctors examined me and said I had a condition called bacterial endocarditis and that I should remain in London for a month of taking antibiotics intravenously.

Not during football season am I staying in a foreign country, I said. I caught a plane home and went immediately to see my own doctor, an American. He put me in the hospital for a month of taking antibiotics intravenously.

But the plot thickened. Bacterial endocarditis is where you get an infection of a heart valve. My aortic valve, which once belonged to a hog and was implanted three years ago, was infected to the point doctors decided to implant another in order to save my life.

So there I was having my second round of heart surgery. Not only that, I was under heavy sedation during Georgia's opening game. And that's probably why Georgia lost.

I naturally blamed the Russians for all this at first. The villain turned out to be infected wisdom teeth, however. The infection started in my wisdom teeth, then went to my heart.

I had been advised two years earlier something like this could happen if I didn't have my wisdom teeth pulled, but I ignored the advice on the basis it probably would hurt to have such a thing done.

As soon as I was strong enough after this last heart surgery, they yanked out my infected wisdom teeth. It didn't hurt. I felt very stupid.

Anyway, I wound up in the hospital for a month and some change. It is strange what you will think about when you have just dodged the big bullet.

"Know what I've been thinking about?" I asked a visiting friend as I was recuperating in the hospital.

"I've been thinking about what I would have wanted done with myself if I hadn't made it."

"You wouldn't have wanted a regular burial?" my friend asked.

"Absolutely not," I said. "I'm very claustrophobic."

"How about cremation?"

"That scares me, too," I answered. "What's left?"

"You could always have left yourself to science," my friend said. That appealed to me somehow. I made up my mind that when I do die, I'm leaving myself to science, if science will have me.

I made some key decisions about living, too. Here's a sampling:

1. Life is more precious to me now than ever before, so I have decided to spend less of whatever is left of it on an airplane.

2. If I had my wisdom teeth left and somebody advised me to have them pulled, I'd pull them myself if I had to.

3. The next time I feel depressed and sorry for myself, I am going to be thankful I am at least feeling something.

4. Since I was under heavy sedation and was unable to participate spiritually or otherwise in Georgia's opening loss to Alabama, I have decided not to count it.

When you've been real sick, you can get away with most anything.

"Try thinking of them as planes with nothin' but a bunch of hijackers aboard."

What dad would think about U.S. now

By William A. Rusher

My father died 38 years ago next month, at the age of 52, and I found myself wondering recently what he would say about the United States if he could see it now. He was what today would be called a "moderate conservative": a patriot who volunteered in World War I (but afterward refused to join any veterans' organization, and opposed a bonus — he regarded military service as simply one of the legitimate obligations of a citizen); a businessman; and a Republican.

He would want to know first, then, if Old Glory still flies over the Capitol in Washington, and would be gratified to know that it does. He would also be pleased to hear that a man only 16 years younger than himself — and cherishing most of the same values — is in the White House today and at or near the peak of his popularity.

Television, jet planes, computers, modern medicine — the myriad wonders of modern science, which were prefigured well before my father's death — wouldn't surprise him at all.

But I do think he would be impressed to hear that men landed on the moon in 1969, and he would be proud indeed (though, again, not surprised) to learn that they were Americans.

But Dad would be quick to notice certain other changes, too — and to disapprove sharply of some of them. He was no bigot, and would have no intrinsic objections to the noticeable change in the country's ethnic composition: the shift away from the WASPs and the other older immigrant groups toward the Hispanics. But he was a realist, and would be concerned about such side effects of the ethnic shift as bilingualism. "Make them learn English," he would say, and then add: "...for their own good."

One thing he would simply have to get used to: the staggering devaluation of the dollar since 1947. Essentially, of course, the number of dollars assigned to a given value is irrelevant; only a change in that number harms (or helps) the dollar's owner. But it would take a while for Dad to get accustomed to paying $50 for a dinner that used to cost only $5, or a buck for a shine that used to be only a dime.

He would also be astonished, and grimly concerned, to discover that the general level of violence in this country has reached a point where uniformed security guards must be posted in the lobbies of major office buildings in every city, and every aircraft passenger must be subjected to body and baggage checks. I suspect he would favor cracking down hard on criminals — and applying the death penalty more liberally, in appropriate cases. "That's what we did in my day — and it worked," he would point out.

Perhaps most of all, he would deplore what has happened to America's general moral level in the past 38 years: the near-total disappearance of the institution of marriage in many social contexts, etc. My father was no prude — far from it! — but he believed in the immutable relation of cause and effect, and he would insist that a nation cannot trifle with its basic mores without paying a serious price. As a matter of fact, I believe he might claim to see a relationship between this general moral decline and the less than glorious outcome of our military efforts in Korea and Vietnam.

All in all, therefore, I am inclined to think Dad would see a lot to worry about in the main trends of American life since his death. But he was no perfectionist, and was also aware that he could be wrong. "Maybe the country will muddle through," he would conclude, cautiously. Then he would add, with a twinkle in his eye, "But I'm glad it's not my problem."

Bits of history

In 1618, Sir Walter Raleigh, the English courtier, military adventurer and poet, was executed in London.

In 1682, William Penn, the founder of Pennsylvania, landed at what is now Chester, Pa.

In 1901, President William McKinley's assassin, Leon Colgoz, was electrocuted.

Dole has farm support plan ready if other efforts fail

WASHINGTON (AP) — When the Senate begins looking this week for ways to trim the cost of its $117 billion, four-year farm bill, Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole will have a plan in his pocket.

The idea, borrowed from a Dole farm bill that passed the Senate in 1978 but failed to clear later legislative hurdles, is to tie farm income supports to the amount of crop land a farmer is willing to idle. The more land you take out of production, the higher the government payment rate on what's left.

The rewriting of the nation's long-term farm policy comes this year at a time of distress in U.S. agriculture unparalleled since the 1930s Depression. Because of the number of financially ailing farmers, the costs of almost every approach tried by Congress have been high.

Now before the Senate is a version that would spend at least $55 billion on crop price supports and income subsidies over the next three years — some $20 billion or more above the budget level adopted by Congress.

No one, not even President Reagan, believes spending will be chopped back to the $34.8 billion initially earmarked for crop programs in the congressional budget blueprint. But Agriculture Secretary John Block has signaled that failure to make at least some substantial cut would tempt a veto. Several approaches are likely to be tried as farm bill consideration continues this week and next. Among them are reducing the bill's proposed four-year freeze on income supports down to one or two years.

The supports, also known as "target price" or "deficiency" payments, supplement the per-bushel, pound or bale price a farmer gets for his commodities up to a fixed "target" rate set in law. Levels are now $4.38 a bushel for wheat, $3.03 for corn, 81 cents a pound for cotton and $11.90 per hundred pounds for rice.

Another cost-cutting approach would pay income supports just on the amount of a farmer's production needed to meet domestic and export needs and a reasonable cushion, but not on the 15 percent or so deemed to be surplus output.

Still another idea, championed by Agriculture Committee Chairman Jesse Helms, R-N.C., would slice in half the current $50,000-per-farmer ceiling on direct government income support payments.

If those and other approaches fail, however, Dole may trot out the retread version of his 1978 "Flexible Parity" bill, now under the new title of "TOP" — Target Option Program.

But instead of tying income subsidies to parity, a largely outmoded measure of farm purchasing power keyed to prices and income in the period 1910-14, the new plan seeks instead to guarantee farmers a constant return after production expenses.

Under the plan, target prices would be frozen at current levels for 1986. Then in 1987 and 1988, farmers who participate in the program would be able to choose their own target price from a range tied to the proportion of acreage they are willing to idle.

A wheat grower, for example, would be able to idle as little as 15 percent of his cropland in 1987, but would get an income guarantee of only $3.95 a bushel. Or he could choose to plant just half of his normal wheat acres and receive a $6-a-bushel guarantee on the remainder.

For corn, the 1987 range would run from 15 percent idled land at $2.90 a bushel to $3.65 if the farmer takes 40 percent out of production.

Dole estimates his idea would save about $5 billion over the first three years of the four-year farm bill. Much of the savings comes from the proposal's incentive for cuts in production, which reduces the amount of commodities on which the government is obligated to pay price-support and income subsidies.

Sentencing set for man convicted of slaying family

RICHMOND, Texas (AP) — A 21-year-old man convicted of murdering his parents and two brothers at their Fort Bend County home faces five to 99 years in prison on each count.

Reginald Lewis was convicted after an eight-month, four-man jury deliberated 4½ hours Monday of four counts of murder in the shooting death of his parents and two brothers.

The punishment phase of the trial was to begin today.

Lewis was indicted May 21 in the shooting deaths of his parents, Henry Lewis Sr., 45, and Mary Lewis, 44, and brothers, Henry Lewis Jr., 22, and Byron Lewis, 13.

The defendant contends he arrived at his parents' house on Feb. 1 and found his father afire in a hallway. Police say the elder Lewis also was stabbed, beaten and possibly strangled.

All four victims were shot to death with a .38-caliber revolver, but no murder weapon was found despite an extensive search. Defense attorneys Donald Bankston and state Sen. Craig Washington, D-Houston, argued their client also was a victim in the murder case.

"I've taken a lot of verdicts in my life but I'm not taking this one," Washington muttered after jurors left the courtroom. "This is a bad verdict. It's an inappropriate verdict."

Prosecutors Bryan Best and Frank Follis had no comment.

Just a short period before the jury returned with its decision, Lewis said, "The only reason I'm sitting here in judgment is because of Sgt. Larry Webber." Lewis was referring to the Houston homicide officer who was instrumental in the murder investigation.

"There has been no evidence!" he shouted.

James R. Bolding of the Houston Police Department's crime lab testified during the two-week trial that blood found on Reginald Lewis' jeans, T-shirt, jacket and shoes belonged to Henry Lewis Sr., who was the only member of the family with type O blood.

Since no murder weapon was found and there were no witnesses, prosecutors relied heavily on laboratory tests and expert testimony in presenting their case. Prosecutors said Lewis' blood-stained clothing was spattered with his father's blood before the father's body was set on fire.

During the trial, Lewis lost his composure once, crying when a neighbor described how he found the bodies of Lewis' family. Monday, he shoved a television camera and lashed at reporters who he said haven't treated him fairly.

Federal magistrate rejects pleas to allow guru to enter hospital

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Indian guru Bhagwan Shree Rajneesh, whose normal temperature-controlled, scent-free home and fleet of Rolls-Royces ensure his comfort, will spend three nights in a county jail awaiting a hearing on charges he tried to flee the country.

U.S. Magistrate Barbara DeLaney on Monday rejected a request by the guru's attorney that Rajneesh be allowed to wait for Thursday's hearing in a hospital at his own expense.

"I have been sleeping on a steel bench ... not even a pillow," Rajneesh, 53, said Monday at a hearing following his arrest on federal charges of trying to flee the country to avoid prosecution on 35 alleged immigration violations.

Rajneesh, the spiritual leader of a sect that claims up to 500,000 adherents, mostly in the United States, Western Europe and Australia, was indicted Thursday in Oregon with seven followers in an alleged conspiracy to cover up sham marriages to keep illegal aliens in the United States.

In addition, federal complaints separate from the indictment charge Rajneesh with unlawful flight to avoid prosecution, and charge six of the people who flew with him from Oregon with harboring the guru.

Federal agents arrested Rajneesh and some followers early Monday when his jet stopped in Charlotte to refuel on what officials said was a flight to Bermuda from his central Oregon commune-city, Rajneeshpuram.

Four of those named in the indictment turned themselves in Monday in Portland, said Assistant U.S. Attorney Charles Turner.

If convicted of all federal charges, Rajneesh faces a maximum sentence of 175 years in prison and a $350,000 fine. Each of the other defendants named in the indictment faces a maximum sentence of 165 years in prison and a $330,000 fine.

Among those named in the federal indictment was Ma Anand Sheela, the guru's former personal secretary who abruptly left the commune for Europe in September, setting off turmoil in Rajneeshpuram.

Sheela and two other former Rajneesh aides were arrested Monday in West Germany in a separate Oregon indictment charging attempted murder, conspiracy to commit murder and first-degree assault, said Attorney General Dave Frohnmayer.

Rajneesh had claimed that Sheela and her lieutenants plotted to poison the water supply of a community near the commune and had poisoned the Jefferson County, Ore., district attorney.

Rubbing his back as he stood in the courtroom Monday wearing a turban and a silver-striped gown decorated with stars, Rajneesh said, "I cannot eat anything they can give."

Defense attorney Swami Prem Niren asked Ms. DeLaney to order Rajneesh held in a hospital at his own expense because of severe asthma, numerous allergies and back pain.

"He has been under a unique program of care in the United States, which was the reason for his visa in the first place," Niren said. "It's almost a 'bubble boy' situation."

Rajneesh complained during the hearing about the hard courtroom benches.

"Will we have to sit on this bench for three days?" Rajneesh said as he stood and rubbed his back. Ms. DeLaney suggested defense attorneys give him the pads from their chairs.

Niren said that at the commune, Rajneesh was kept in a controlled environment without carpets and that no one was allowed in his presence unless they bathed with scent-free soap. He said Rajneesh used a Rolls-Royce for transportation because it was the only car seat he found comfortable.

Hostage relatives ease criticism of Reagan following meeting

WASHINGTON (AP) — Relatives of the U.S. hostages being held in Lebanon softened their criticism of President Reagan following a two-hour White House meeting, saying they were told of new initiatives being taken to win the hostages' release.

Reagan met privately Monday with family members of four of the six captive Americans and convinced them of his on-going efforts to bring the hostages home, even though no breakthroughs appear imminent, participants said.

It was the first time the president invited family members of the hostages to the White House since the kidnappings began in early 1984. The family members were here on a three-day lobbying blitz, and some members planned to meet today with members of the House Foreign Affairs Committee.

Sue Franceschini, whose brother the Rev. Lawrence Jenco is among the hostages, said Reagan and his national security adviser, Robert McFarlane, told the families new initiatives were being taken to obtain the captives' freedom.

Although she said she could not speak about the matter publicly and said she was not given all the details, she called the administration's approach "very creative. And it was an avenue that surprised us."

Jenco, a Roman Catholic priest, was kidnapped Jan. 8, 1985.

Several family members said McFarlane promised the administration would speak directly with representatives of the kidnappers, even though the administration previously had ruled out dealing with terrorists. The shadowy group known as the Islamic Jihad, an extremist Shiite Moslem group, is said to be responsible for the abductions.

Peggy Say, sister of hostage Terry A. Anderson, chief Middle East correspondent for The Associated Press, said the relatives were given information "that we cannot pass on."

"It was a very fruitful meeting, and we hope that the administration will continue to pursue their initiatives, and we intend to continue to pursue private initiatives," she said.

Paul Jacobsen, the son of hostage David Jacobson, said he hosted the meeting with Reagan "constructive."

"We do feel that the president is committed to getting these men out, that is something that he does keep track of," Jacobsen said. He said the group presented a yellow ribbon to Reagan to place on a White House door as a remembrance of the hostages.

Also attending the meeting was Rose Kilburn, a niece of captive Peter Kilburn; Glen Anderson, a relative of Terry Anderson; and Mae Mihelich, another sister of the Rev. Jenco. Reporters were not allowed to attend the meeting, and a list of participants was not provided by the White House.

White House spokesman Larry Speakes, asked why Reagan had agreed to the meeting after not granting earlier requests, said only that Reagan "decided it would be timely for him to see them."

Speakes said the session was unrelated to recent developments in the region. Those developments have included the kidnapping of four Soviet diplomats.

LOUISIANA FLOODS — Floodwaters left by Hurricane Juan inundated the south Louisiana town of Lafitte Monday. It was one of several communities ravaged by the third hurricane to menace Louisiana this year. (AP Laserphoto)

Levee, pump station crumble beneath Juan's onslaught

GALLIANO, La. (AP) — Hurricane Juan's high tides and a weekend of heavy rain caused a canal levee beneath a pumping station to collapse, and officials said high winds and tons of water battering the canal made immediate repair attempts impossible.

Lafourche Parish President Cyrus "Bobby" Tardo warned the 5,000 residents to be prepared to evacuate after water poured through several breaks in a 10-foot levee wall Monday, undermining the pilings beneath the Bully Camp Pump Station, near Galliano.

"There was just too much water and tide, too much pressure and it didn't hold. Water is just flowing from levee break," Tardo said Monday.

The first break in the 100-foot stretch of the Forty Arpent Canal levee 1 1/2 miles west of Bayou Lafourche appeared Sunday, and there were several by Monday night, Tardo said.

Many people didn't wait to see if Tardo would change his voluntary evacuation call to an order.

"We're in the process of stacking up and getting out of here," Carl "Roe" Pitre, a school board member from nearby Cut Off, said Monday afternoon.

Water was lapping at the bottom step of his house before Tardo announced the evacuation call, he said.

Parish officials hoped to get a big dredge to begin repairs by later today, said Tardo. They planned to dig a trench behind the levee and backfill it.

Arafat, Jordanians to meet again

AMMAN, Jordan (AP) — PLO chief Yasser Arafat and his aides expressed satisfaction with talks between Arafat and King Hussein aimed at easing the strains in their peace alliance, but the reaction of Jordan's state-run television was more restrained.

Officials of the Palestine Liberation Organization said Arafat and Jordanian officials would meet again today for further discussions on their plans for seeking peace with Israel.

Hussein met with Arafat on Monday for what the king called a reassessment of their peace effort following the killing of three Israeli yachtsmen in Cyprus on Sept. 25, the Israeli bombing of PLO headquarters in Tunis on Oct. 1, the hijacking of an Italian cruise ship on Oct. 7 and the cancellation of a meeting between PLO officials and Britain's foreign secretary.

Officials in Israel and the United States had speculated that Hussein was ready to seek a separate peace with Israel, or that he would press Arafat for concessions, chiefly recognition of Israel's right to exist.

But following the meeting between Arafat and Hussein on Monday, the PLO leader's chief political adviser, Hanni al-Hassan, told reporters, "We have no differences. What we had were generally external problems."

Asked if Jordan had asked the PLO to halt guerrilla actions while pursuing a political solution to the dispute with Israel, Hassan said: "The armed struggle will continue. No revolution can stop armed struggle."

Arafat said he had "very good talks, successful and constructive" with Hussein. He told reporters he was "very happy with the strong relations" he had with Hussein.

However, the assessment of the talks by state-run Jordan Television was more restrained. It quoted an unnamed spokesman in Hussein's palace as saying the two sides "made objective assessments" of the developments "and their effect on the Jordanian-Palestinian moves and ways of neutralizing them and avoiding their recurrence."

The statement also referred to the Palestinian question as "the core" of the Middle East crisis and reaffirmed Jordan's commitment to "a just and comprehensive peace" — a phrase that implies rejection of Israel's call for a separate peace with Jordan.

Japan tries to keep AIDS problem of foreign lands

TOKYO (AP) — A Tokyo "sentō" or public bath recently turned away a foreign resident of Japan who had grown to like the neighborhood spa's relaxing steam. The reason: fear of AIDS.

Although only eight Japanese have been stricken by the deadly disease, its spread in the United States and Europe has spurred steps, some of them misguided, to keep AIDS a foreign problem.

Some doctors warn that the virus thought to cause AIDS already has found its way into Japanese blood. They believe the island nation will soon face an outbreak of acquired immune deficiency syndrome lifting the number of victims from a handful to perhaps a thousand.

The disease, which destroys the body's ability to resist infection, is spread through the exchange of blood or other bodily fluids, but not through casual contact. It is most prevalent among homosexual men and intravenous drug users, but has also been contracted by hemophiliacs and patients who received tainted blood in transfusions.

Testing can identify those exposed to the virus or even carrying it themselves, but only a small percentage of carriers develop the disease, at least within the first few years.

A recent survey by the country's National Institute of Health indicated 30 percent of Japan's 5,400 hemophiliacs carry positive antibodies to the AIDS virus, a sign of exposure to the disease. Most of them will not become ill, but "we can expect that next year, many more hemophiliacs will begin to show the symptoms of AIDS," said Takahashi Kitamura, chief of the institute's virus research section.

"Within four years the number could reach a thousand," he added.

In contrast, as of Oct. 21, AIDS had struck 14,388 people in the United States and claimed 7,255 lives since 1979, according to the U.S. Centers for Disease Control figures.

Japan's Health and Welfare Ministry, believing the hemophiliacs caught the virus from tainted blood plasma imported from the United States, rushed to safeguard the purity of Japan's blood supply by more careful selection of donors and testing of samples.

The ministry also doubled to 400 milliliters (12 fluid ounces) the amount of blood a donor may offer, aiming to cut Japan's 85 percent dependence on foreign blood.

Its AIDS Research and Countermeasures Council ordered 600 health offices nationwide to report in depth on suspected victims and launched a research project into the virus. It also distributed to health centers pamphlets describing current research and how to avoid AIDS.

"We've taken nearly all the steps we can at this point," said ministry official Fujio Kumagaiya, "and must now confront the problem as it appears."

But Kitamura said he considers the ministry's program insufficient, with the $8,700 for research to identify the Japanese strain of the virus falling short of what's needed.

Also, he said he believes the ministry has failed to adequately warn the public. "The government hasn't admitted that this is a major public health risk — it seems reluctant to recognize it," he said.

Peres praises Hussein, wins vote of confidence

JERUSALEM (AP) — Prime Minister Shimon Peres, praising King Hussein for making concessions for peace, won the Israeli parliament's approval to consider an international conference as a means for direct peace negotiations with Jordan.

Peres' victory in the Knesset, or parliament, late Monday came after a day of bickering with hardliners in his coalition government who fear an international conference would undermine Israel's demand for direct negotiations with Jordan.

The argument threatened at one point to topple the 13-month-old government, but the final vote was 68-10 in Peres' favor with 10 abstentions.

Peres told Israel Radio that he saw the vote as a mandate to pursue his peace plan, and contacts with Jordan through the United States.

Ending the seven-hour debate, Peres hailed Hussein for moves that helped set the stage for progress. "I see a change in Hussein's position. You say he hasn't made any concessions. I say he has," Peres told his critics.

He cited Hussein's statement last week that he was reassessing his links with the Palestine Liberation Organization.

"I call on King Hussein that we continue working together so as not to miss the opportunity that has been created," Peres said.

Peres indicated he reconsidered

Israel's objections to an international conference as a way to encourage Hussein to break with the PLO and seek a separate peace with Israel.

Jordan has insisted on a conference under the auspices of the five permanent members.

"If we are invited to an international conference or an international forum and the conditions are acceptable to us, we will go," Peres said.

Report: Peres proposed joint rule of West Bank

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — An Israeli newspaper reported today that Prime Minister Shimon Peres proposed to Jordan an interim peace plan calling for joint rule of the Israeli-occupied West Bank and autonomy for Palestinians who live there.

The report in the independent daily Haaretz said Jordan's King Hussein accepted main points of the secret plan but insisted on international approval as a condition for his final agreement. The newspaper also said the United States had given its blessing to the blueprint.

The report appeared the morning after Peres won parliamentary approval to attend an international peace conference as an opening move toward peace talks with Jordan. Peres said he saw the 68-10 vote as approval to pursue peace contacts with Jordan through the United States.

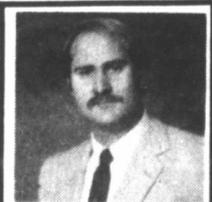

TREATMENT FOR STIFF NECK

If you're suffering from a stiff neck, don't wait for it to take care of itself when treatment is available to correct it.

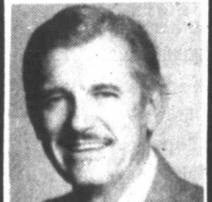

Of all the bones in the spinal column, none are more easily injured or more vulnerable than the seven vertebrae in the neck. None are moved more often. We are constantly turning our heads to look at people and things.

Neck stiffness can have many causes, from sudden and violent accidents to such simple activities as painting a ceiling or just sitting reading a book for a long time. But there's nothing simple about the pain.

A careful examination will reveal the source of the pain and how best to treat it. Any misaligned vertebrae in the spinal column should be properly adjusted so there will be no abnormal pressure on your nervous system. Treatment may also include exercises for the cervical muscles such as gently rotating your head in all directions. This can help restore muscle strength and tone.

Two men get donor hearts

HERSHEY, Pa. (AP) — Doctors watched today for signs that a man kept alive for 11 days by a Penn State artificial heart might reject a human heart, and said that a man who spent four days on a Jarvik-7 pump before receiving a transplant had survived "well within his grasp."

Anthony Mandia, the first recipient of the Penn State heart, was in critical but unstable condition today after receiving the heart of a 155-pound woman who died in West Virginia.

Across the state in Pittsburgh, Jarvik-7 heart recipient Thomas J. Gaidosh also was in critical condition. Gaidosh, 47, a factory worker, received a human heart earlier Monday that had been offered to Mandia but rejected as too big.

Meanwhile, in San Francisco, 33-year-old Richard Dallara of Sonoma, Calif., was in serious but stable condition at Pacific Presbyterian Medical Center Monday night as he was kept alive by two fist-size external pumps attached to his failed heart while doctors sought a donor heart.

The five-hour surgery Monday night for Mandia, 44, of Philadelphia, took longer than expected because of bleeding, said Hershey Medical Center spokesman Dr. John W. Burnside. "We were a bit surprised at this oozing," he said, comparing it to the kind of bleeding that follows a brush burn.

Burnside said the bleeding may have been caused by medication used to prevent blood clots and the transplant coming 10 days after the initial implant surgery.

Mandia has received the anti-rejection drug Cyclosporin, and doctors say the immediate dangers are rejection of the donor heart, bleeding and infection.

The woman whose heart Mandia received had type O blood while Mandia is type B. Burnside said that "adds a little bit more concern to us about rejection."

Acute rejection could occur within 24 hours and chronic rejection could come months to years after surgery, he said. If necessary, the Penn State heart could be reimplanted if the donor heart fails.

The donor was not identified at the family's request, said Nathan Howard, executive director of the Delaware Valley Transplant Program. The heart became available after doctors said a traffic victim's heart was too big.

That heart, belonging to James Randall Riege, 26, of Alexandria, Ohio, was given to Gaidosh during a 3 1/2-hour operation that doctors at Presbyterian University Hospital described as routine.

"The new heart took over from the Jarvik-7 very nicely," said Dr. Bartley Griffith, who led the surgical team. "The early indications are that survival is well within his grasp."

Riege, who died Sunday night of injuries received Saturday, was about 6 feet tall and 190 pounds. Gaidosh is 6-foot-3 and 220 pounds.

Soviet journalist says Sakharov's wife will be allowed to leave

MOSCOW (AP) — A Soviet journalist said today reports that the wife of dissident physicist Andrei D. Sakharov will be allowed to travel to the West for medical care are true, and that the United States is a likely destination.

The West German newspaper Bild, quoting reliable sources in Moscow, said Monday that Yelena Bonner had been told by Soviet authorities she could "fly immediately to wherever she wants."

Victor Louis, a Soviet journalist who in the past has provided accurate information to Western journalists, said of the Bild report: "That is what I understand. As far as I am concerned it is authentic, that she will be allowed to go, that it will not be a one-way ticket, that it is up to her when and where."

Mrs. Bonner, 60, has said she suffers from an eye ailment that threatens her vision, and that surgery to correct the problem is not available in the Soviet Union. She has sought the right to receive treatment in the West.

She and her husband both have heart conditions, as well.

Sakharov, the Soviet Union's most prominent human rights advocate, was sent into internal exile in the closed city of Gorky in January 1980, and his wife was sent to join him in 1984. Their plight has become a major issue for Western governments and human rights groups.

The Soviet Union has dismissed Western inquiries about Sakharov and Mrs. Bonner as interference in the Soviet Union's internal affairs.

Sakharov, the 1975 Nobel Peace Prize laureate, had gone on several hunger strikes in an effort to win an exit visa for his wife. Bild said he was in the middle of another fast when authorities granted Mrs. Bonner permission to leave.

Asked by The Associated Press if he knew what Mrs. Bonner's destination might be, Louis said, "she has been in Italy before, and now she has relatives in the States, so it is up to her. Maybe she will want medical care in the United States."

He said he was sure Mrs. Bonner's daughter, Tatiana Yankelevich, who now lives in Newton, Mass., probably would receive information about Mrs. Bonner soon. "I think it will then be common knowledge," Louis said.

After the Bild report Monday, Ms. Yankelevich said: "It's a likely possibility, but still this report is not enough to make us completely certain that this is true."

Pentagon, in reversal, may use AIDS to discharge homosexuals

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Pentagon, despite earlier assurances to the contrary, says servicemen who acknowledge drug use or homosexual activity during screening for exposure to the disease AIDS can face discharge proceedings.

The voluntary disclosure of such incriminating information cannot be used for courts-martial or to justify a less than honorable discharge, but it can be used as grounds to dismiss individuals "for the convenience of the government" with an honorable discharge, Pentagon attorneys said Monday.

That explanation marks a significant reversal of what reporters were told last Friday by a Pentagon spokesman when he announced Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger had signed a new directive on AIDS testing.

The spokesman, Lt. Col. Pete Wyro, acknowledged Monday the information he had distributed on the new policy was in error. Wyro had said that individuals who volunteered information about drug use or homosexuality could not be discharged on the basis of such an admission.

Drug abuse and homosexuality are normal grounds for discharge from the armed services. AIDS, or acquired immune deficiency syndrome, has been most prevalent among homosexuals and intravenous drug abusers. The disease, for which no cure has been found, destroys the body's immune system against infections. AIDS has victimized more than 14,000 people; more than half have died.

Available blood tests, such as that being used by the Pentagon, cannot confirm whether a person will get AIDS, but only the presence of an antibody that indicates the person has been exposed to the virus.

The change in the Pentagon's interpretation of the new policy is sure to arouse the ire of groups representing homosexuals, who have charged for months that the Defense Department wants to use the new AIDS blood test as a means of searching for gay servicemen.

Doctor Study Proves

New Hi-Tech Pills Give You '3 Times' Faster Weight Loss

Diet Pills Sweeping U.S. No Dieting—Eat Normally

BEVERLY HILLS, CA (Special)— Good news for overweight people! If you want to lose weight fast, you no longer have to guess which diet product to use.

A recent clinical weight loss study was conducted by a panel of medical doctors in California on groups of overweight people to determine which of the five most popular weight loss products was the most effective. One product, the amazing new "hi-tech super pills" proved to be vastly superior to all the others tested in the study and even gave almost "3 times faster" weight loss than the famous grapefruit diet pills.

All Lost up to 1 lb. Per Day

Best of all, the pills allow you to "continue to eat all of your favorite foods without changing your normal eating or exercising habits and still lose weight easier and faster than ever before, starting immediately!" The manufacturer "guarantees" it. Remarkably, ALL people in the new "hi-tech" super pills clinical test group lost weight (an average of 1/2 lb. per day up to 1 lb. per day or the equivalent of 15 to 30 lbs. per month.) It also helps eliminate bloat and puffiness.

"Pills Do All the Work"

According to the clinical study, the pills alone do all the work while you quickly lose weight with NO starvation "diet menus" to follow, NO calorie counting, NO special exercise, and NO hunger pangs. You simply take the pills with a glass of water before meals.

Powerful Appetite Suppressants

The new pills contain a powerful clinically proven appetite suppressant that an advisory panel of doctors have determined to be "safe and effective for weight loss."

In addition, the pills also contain a remarkable calorie-free dietary fiber that expands in your stomach and tends to give you a partially satisfied feeling before you eat. Thus, the new combination of ingredients in the pills act 2 ways to aid in curbing your appetite, causing you to eat less, take in less calories, and lose weight without feeling deprived or hungry.

Pills Contain ALL Daily Vitamins

No need to take any vitamins to maintain your good health and energy because the pills are fortified with ALL (100%) of the U.S. Government USRDA recommended daily vitamin requirements.

The amazing "hi-tech" super pills are already sweeping the country with glowing reports of easy and fast weight loss from formerly overweight people in all walks of life who are now slim, trim, and attractive again.

Now Available to Public

You can order your supply of these new highly successful "hi-tech" super pills (now available directly from the manufacturer by mail or phone order only) by sending $14 for a 15-day supply (or $20 for a 30-day supply, or $35 for a 60-day supply) cash, check or money order to: Hi-Tech Products, 717 Central Ave., Dept. 992, Kansas City, KS 66101. Dead rat in mail fails to sway councilman's position on flouride

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — City Councilman Ed Harrington said he is disappointed the heated debate on fluoridating San Antonio's water supply has boiled down to prank tactics, including sending dead rats through the mail.

Harrington, who has led a heated debate in the city's fight for fluoridation, said he received a rodent in a box Monday.

A handwritten note inside the package said, "We fed this rat fluoride water and look what happened, you dirty commie."

"It is disappointing such a thing could happen," Harrington said, refusing to speculate on who may have sent the dead rat.

Councilwoman Helen Dutmer, an opponent of fluoridation, called the incident "reprehensible" and said, "I would not do this nor would my side."

Controversy has flared in San Antonio over the fluoridation issue, which is on the ballot in a Nov. 5 referendum.

The vote will be on whether to boost the natural fluoride level of .3 parts per million to .8 parts per million.

Opponents claim fluoride is a health hazard and the program will cost too much to implement.

Earlier Monday, Harrington appeared at a news conference with state health commissioner Dr. Robert Bernstein and Mayor Henry Cisneros. Bernstein announced the state will give the city $500,000 in federal funds if fluoridation passes.

The money will be help defray startup costs estimated at $703,000, Cisneros said.

The money, Cisneros said, means the public "need not worry about casting a vote that will cost them in capital costs."

Bernstein cautioned the state had not entered the matter for political reasons.

"We just want to see the people of San Antonio get fluoridation," Bernstein said.

Businessman Clayton Williams may be ultimate Aggie

By KIRK LADENDORF
Austin American-Statesman

AUSTIN (AP) — Clayton Williams may be the ultimate Aggie, and the best Aggie jokes are the ones Texas A&M alumni tell on themselves.

Williams, whose personal wealth has been estimated at $150 million by Forbes magazine, is such an Aggie that he has given substantial royalties to Texas A&M University.

He flies Aggie flags from his oil rigs, and his home at Midland has a swimming pool in the shape of a senior boot.

Williams had invested millions to boost his string of telecommunications towers between Midland and Dallas before he heard the bad news: By regulation, the towers must be orange and white, the school colors of Archival University of Texas.

But Claytie, as the 53-year-old Williams calls himself, is never one to let school pride stand in the way of good business.

Recently, he threw a party for 1,000 people at the Hyatt Regency in Austin, many of them Teasippers, to tout the virtues of his upstart long-distance company, ClayDesta Communications.

Williams will have spent $30 million on his digital long-distance network by the time it reaches Austin late this year. Plans call for completing the network to major points in Texas and parts of Oklahoma, Louisiana and New Mexico in two years at a cost of about $100 million.

Williams candidly admits he is a neophyte in the fast-paced game of telecommunications.

"I'm basically an oil and gas man and an Aggie," he said. "I'm a fair businessman, but the technology runs off and leaves me pretty quick."

Even with something like 150 long-distance companies doing business in Texas, Williams is convinced the break-up of AT&T offers entrepreneurs such as himself a rare opportunity to grab a profitable slice of a growing business.

"We're shooting for all we can get," he says. "I'm like the rancher who says I don't want much, I just want my land, and, of course, I want what adjoins it."

Williams is selling his new company with a generous slug of cowboy image and personality. The television commercial blitz for ClayDesta, named for Williams and his wife, Modesta, were mostly shot at Williams' huge cattle ranch near Alpine.

In one commercial, Williams jumps off a horse and gives his spiel. In another, he walks through a ghost town.

"I'm John Wayne walking down the street, except that I'm short, bald-headed and ugly," he says, laughing.

By the time his marketing blitz is over, Williams may be as much a television personality as Lee Iacocca or Bob Uecker.

The commercials have a country sense of humor to them that is all Williams.

"I've got a sparkle in my eye and it's kind of fun," he says of his TV image. "We came up with what we wanted to say, and then we put them in Claytie's words — we Claytie-ize them. A little bit of the flavor comes through."

In selling Austin on his service, Williams uses a sales force to court business customers and a telemarketing effort aimed at residential customers.

And he will also use his business connections and friendships. One party for friends in Austin included Tractor Chairman Frank McBee, Railroad Commissioner Jim Nugent — and plenty of Aggies.

"I have a lot of friends in Austin," Williams says. "I've been on my knees in front of the Railroad Commission quite a few times over the last few years. I'm kind of asking my friends to help me and contact their friends."

Williams is a natural salesman and he says selling high-quality phone service is easy compared with selling life insurance, which he used to do.

"Now that's selling," he says. "If you can talk some guy into taking away his beer money and putting it in an insurance policy so when he dies his wife can run off with another man, that's salesmanship. You really have to sell."

Behind the humor, Williams has a very serious business plan.

By linking major cities in Texas and Oklahoma with a state-of-the-art communications system, he aims to capture a good share of the state's telephone business and gain a profitable chunk of the data communications business as well.

The company, which has been in operation only about a year, estimates it has captured nearly 12 percent of the long-distance customers in Midland and Odessa, and is building toward 10 percent of the customers in Amarillo. It has 2 percent of Austin's long-distance business despite being in operation here only a few months as a reseller of WATS service.

His long-distance company has 338 employees in Texas, about 20 of them in Austin, and its monthly revenues have reached $1 million, with a growth rate of $200,000 to $300,000 a month.

"We've found that if we've got a better-quality product at a better price, we're going to get a lot of business," he said.

ClayDesta promises its rates will be at least 15 percent lower than AT&T's. That puts it just below the rates of MCI and Sprint, and above some of the rates quoted by smaller long-distance resellers.

Williams, however, doesn't worry about the resellers. He believes, as do many others in the phone business, that the gradual relaxation of regulatory pressure on AT&T will soon force many resellers out of business as AT&T begins dropping its rates to residential and small-business users while raising them for its WATS customers, who include many small business resellers.

By the time the shakeout happens, Williams wants to have his Texas network in place.

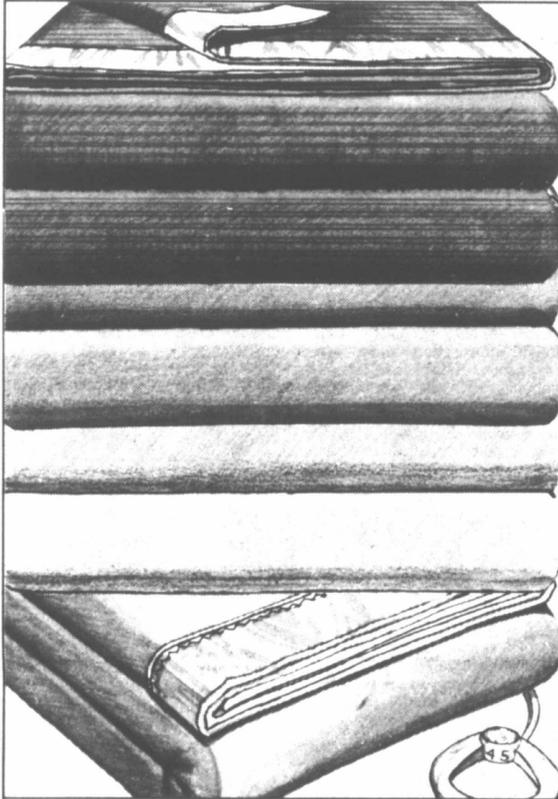

"The government has tied (AT&T's) hands," he says. "Otherwise they could stamp me out. When AT&T starts competing, as they will, they will raise the price of (WATS) lines to the resellers and when they do, profit margins will shrink."

"But by that time, we will have our own system and we will be able to compete with AT&T hammer to hammer and head to head."

Most phone calls beyond Texas will have to go off the ClayDesta system, but his company's research shows perhaps 65 percent of the state's long distance calls are within the state.

"When a call goes off our system (and on to other telephone companies' lines), we don't make a profit then, but we'll make our profits on calls that stay on our system," Williams says.

Split life hits children, school district hard

By JACQUEE G. PETCHEL
The Arizona Republic

DOUGLAS, Ariz. (AP) — Anna Alvarado's life is torn between two countries, two languages and two parents.

And lately, two schools. Until last month and since 1981, the 14-year-old had attended Douglas Junior High School, claiming to live "the majority of the time" with her father, a Mexican citizen, in a rented room in a modest Douglas neighborhood. Her father, Antonio Alvarado, is a local construction laborer authorized to work in the United States.

He pays state and federal income taxes, drives a truck registered in Arizona and is seeking U.S. citizenship.

The girl's mother, meanwhile, continues to live across the border in Agua Prieta, where the family keeps its home — a house built 16 years ago by Anna's father. Alvarado said he has been trying since 1976 to arrange immigration for Anna's mother, who has only a 72-hour border-crossing card.

Anna, who claims to live weekdays in Douglas and most weekends in Agua Prieta, says she considers both cities her home. But she chooses to attend school in the United States because "it's important for me and my parents that I learn English and get a good education."

But because school officials saw Anna crossing the border into Arizona early on Thursday morning, she was believed to be living in Agua Prieta while pretending to keep residence in Douglas. Leaning on a state law that prohibits out-of-state residents from attending school in Arizona without paying tuition, officials in September kicked Anna out of school.

Born in Tucson and a U.S. citizen, Anna has been living since September with relatives in Phoenix and attending Dysart Junior High School. Her parents claim that she is entitled to an education in the United States and that she will live wherever she has in order to get it.

But for the Douglas Unified School District, Anna Alvarado represents a growing problem for the border-town school system: how to identify youths who are attending the schools illegally and keep them out.

The problem is chronic for border towns, but Douglas is leading the way in efforts to deal with it.

Douglas Superintendent Ray Borane, in some of the most difficult moves of his 25-year career, has put 21 pupils out of school this year on the grounds that they live in Mexico.

Anna Alvarado was one of them. Borane said pupils who attend school illegally are a drain on district resources because they pay no tuition, yet their limited English ability requires specialized and expensive programs.

Several classes in the Douglas district are filled with pupils at all grade levels who recently have come from Mexico, illegally or legally. Most of those pupils are placed in day-long "transitional" bilingual programs where they and their peers grapple with English.

Marilyn Andrews, who teaches one of the bilingual elementary classes, said new pupils emigrate from Mexico all year and are "taught as much English as they can understand" by year's end. "I can only keep them for one year because they are constantly coming in, and I can't hold too many back or I won't have room for the new ones," she said.

The special attention is expensive, Borane said, and the district can't afford to give it to pupils who don't belong there.

"Sometimes, I think we're just beating our heads against the wall. But morally and professionally, I still have a responsibility to this district," he said. "Any time you put a kid out of school, it's difficult, especially because of the emotion involved."

"We have many cars with Mexican license plates that stop every morning in front of the schools and let their kids out. And our patrons in the district question that."

"What irks the taxpayer is that there seem to be so many illegals over here to go to school. The district collects state aid for these students and that just adds to the embarrassment."

State aid to school districts is based on the district's average daily enrollment but is meant only for residents of the district.

District pupils need not be in the United States legally, but they do have to be able to prove that they live in the district. All pupils are required to fill out domicile affidavits attesting to their residency.

And although state law requires that pupils be residents of the district, the law can be waived to allow Mexican children to attend if:

— They pay out-of-district tuition, which is $3,100 per year for high school students and about $2,800 annually for elementary-age children.

— They are living in the district under a court-ordered guardianship, which means their parents have relinquished custody to a resident of the district.

— They claim to live in a "dual household," spending most of their time in Arizona but still maintaining a family home across the border.

More than 100 of the 4,000 pupils in Douglas schools are on record as attending this year under one of these conditions. But it is unknown how many others simply provide fictitious addresses and continue to live in Mexico.

Borane lobbied the Legislature last year to give school districts the authority to challenge legal guardianships, if it could be proved that the guardianships were obtained only to circumvent the payment of tuition. Borane's campaign was successful, and he has used the law to scrutinize and challenge the residency of pupils.

"We have always known there have been guardianships out there that were shams," he said.

Borane said the guardianships and dual households are used to establish residency, but often, the children never really leave their Mexico homes. An unexpected check by U.S. border agents on the morning of Sept. 9 revealed that nearly 40 pupils were crossing the border to come to school.

About 15 of those were determined to be doing so illegally and were expelled from school, Borane said.

Under a policy adopted by the Douglas Unified School District on Sept. 21, any pupil who is determined by the superintendent to be a non-resident can appeal the decision. A hearing then is held in which the burden of proof is on the district.

Each pupil's parents are notified in writing of their right to appeal, but Borane said that when the district tried to reach most of the 15 pupils who had been kicked out of school, most were nowhere to be found in Douglas.

"Those are the letters we've been having such a hard time delivering," Borane said. "That just epitomizes the problem."

District representatives have attempted to deliver most of the letters by hand, finding in many cases that the addresses that were given didn't exist, that the pupils had moved or that they simply never had lived at the given addresses.

Only three families, meanwhile, have requested and been granted hearings.

Anita Sanchez, an attorney for Southern Arizona Legal Aid in Douglas, is representing two of the three families, including the Alvarados. "We understand there are cases where the student clearly is not living in the district and the district has no obligation to provide an education at the taxpayers' expense," she said.

"But some of these children just plain live in two places, and they do go back to the other side to see one or the other parent. But that doesn't mean they're daily crossers," Sanchez added. "We think the district is dead wrong to say that weekly crossers aren't legitimately in the district."

When Sanchez's clients first were expelled from school, Southern Arizona Legal Aid threatened to take the district to court, alleging that the expulsions were based on policies that were arbitrary and founded solely on Borane's opinion.

The Sept. 21 policy, adopted by the school board after the legal-aid group filed a letter of intent to sue with the district, allowed the pupils to be reinstated pending the outcome of residency hearings.

"Until they (district officials) had made a determination of residency through due process, they just plain were denying these children an education," Sanchez said.

Anna Alvarado sat nervously in the school district's conference room recently, fielding questions from Paula Wilk, an attorney with the Cochise County attorney's office.

Ms. Wilk, representing the district in Anna's residency hearing, was attempting to prove that the teen-ager was not entitled to an education in the Douglas school district.

"Where's home to you?" Ms. Wilk asked.

"Douglas and Agua Prieta both," Anna responded.

"If you had to choose between the two, which would you choose?" the attorney asked.

"Well, I guess the one my mom is in," Anna said.

In her argument before hearing officer Art Atonna, a Douglas attorney, Ms. Wilk said the district "concedes that this is a tough issue."

"But the bottom line is where she lives. Home is where home is," Ms. Wilk said. "And as difficult as it is, the residence for Anna is Agua Prieta."

Ms. Sanchez said the Alvarados admit to keeping a home in Agua Prieta but that Anna still lives most of the time in the United States. Her father has worked in the United States for 20 years.

"He is paying his way," she said. "They are not trying to get something for nothing. They want her to have an education in the United States. School is one of the reasons she lives here. She has a right to be here."

"This has been very difficult for them to live with, especially the idea that they've intentionally lied or been deceptive," Ms. Sanchez said.

Anna and her parents testified that the girl had spent the night in Agua Prieta one Wednesday before she was spotted coming over the border the next morning only because she had attended an annual festival across the border that night.

Their testimony was enough for the Atonna, who ruled that sufficient residency had been proved.

"It appeared to me that her physical presence in the school district rose to the level of being a resident ... because of all the evidence presented, the stability of the family, the length of time that the father and daughter had resided here and testimony from neighbors," Atonna said.

Catalyst-aided hydrogen is seen as replacement for fossil fuels

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Electrical generators of the future may be powered by hydrogen freed from water with the aid of sunlight, says a researcher at the University of North Carolina at Charlotte who is working on the process.

"I would hope that in 30 years we'd have something along these lines because by that time we're going to be in trouble," said Dr. Paul Rillema. "There's only enough fossil fuel to last that long."

Rillema heads a seven-person UNCC research team seeking alternative energy sources under several grants, including one from the U.S. Department of Energy. He said that as far as he knew UNCC was the only master's degree-level university involved in the research.

Rillema is working with catalysts that absorb sunlight, become electronically "excited" to a higher state of energy and give off electrons that reduce water to hydrogen and oxygen gas.

The explosive hydrogen gas has been used to power vehicles, but its primary use would be to power large reactors to generate electricity, he said.

"The major obstacle now involves the efficiency of the whole process and the cost of the materials we're using," said Rillema. The material that absorbs light, called the photochromophore, requires rare and expensive elements such as ruthenium. The metal platinum is also required for some reactions, he said.

A major key is finding a catalytic material that stays in the excited state a long period of time.

"The longer these materials live in the excited state, the more chemistry can exploit from them," he said. Two properties indicate whether a material could serve as a catalyst to create energy from chemicals — whether it gives off light when exposed to sunlight and its tendency to shed electrons in the excited state when exposed to sunlight.

Rillema is involved in a related project to develop a catalyst to be used as an anti-cancer agent. Scientists have noted that when levels of superoxide ion, a byproduct of the body's use of oxygen, becomes too high, cancer and arthritis may develop. Normally, the body has enough of a catalyst called superoxide dismutase to prevent the buildup of superoxide ions, but problems may develop when concentrations of the catalyst are too low.

"We have replacements for it with some of our compounds synthesized in the lab," he said.

In addition, Rillema's team is working on a process to reduce the carbon dioxide on submarines to methane, which can be burned. The research sponsored by the Office of Naval Research is aimed at improving the air quality aboard subs.

Small, dark bungalow blooms with addition of greenhouse

Take a tiny bungalow, somewhat dark and gloomy. Knock out the back wall to add a greenhouse enclosure and the wall between the kitchen and dining room. Redecorate with light colors and — with less effort than you might imagine — you've got yourself what seems like a new home!

That's what the interior designers at Armstrong did. And if your home could stand a little brightening up, you might wish to take note.

The bungalow suffered mainly from being partitioned into too many small rooms, and from a lack of windows. The first step was to remove a wall separating the kitchen and dining room and to install windows in the latter. Roman window shades reminiscent of striped awnings and a wide expanse of glass make eating in the dining alcove almost like picnicking. Outdoors and indoors merge in a pleasant al fresco setting.

But the major undertaking involved extending the bungalow seven feet for the "greenhouse enclosure" (a family room with the ambience of a greenhouse). Connecting with the kitchen, the new addition has sliding glass doors, a big skylight, and decorative wooden ribs that suggest the structure of a greenhouse. Now, sunlight floods the whole multipurpose space: kitchen, dining alcove and family room.

Light colors are a sure bet to make any space seem larger and more cheerful, so they were chosen here. The color scheme was borrowed from the no-wax floor which winds its way throughout the entire space, the unifying element of the decor.

Walls and countertops are pale melon, and the trim and kitchen cabinets (glass-fronted to display the china) are off-white. The accent colors are rose (the cushions on the bar stools, throw pillows on the family room sofa, border of the area rug, fringed tablecloth in the dining alcove) and spring green (the ribs of the "greenhouse" and the many plants). All of these colors are found in the floor pattern.

The furnishings are pleasingly eclectic, mixing design influences from various centuries and continents. The hanging lamps are high-tech modern. Wicker chairs and the bamboo shape of the bar stools' legs hint of the Orient. The Edwardian era inspired the fringed tablecloth and the glass-topped swan table (on the rug) finds its origins in the Art Deco period.

Worthy of notice is what looks to be an ordinary closet at the far end of the family room. Behind the slotted folding doors is a wet bar with every amenity. The deep sink is equally useful for repotting plants and other gardening chores.

Full of surprises and thoughtful touches, this big, sunny multipurpose space has transformed a once small, dark bungalow into a delightful, livable home.

BRIGHT BUNGALOW - Kitchen, dining alcove (left rear) and family room, this big and sunny space has the bright, sunny feel of a greenhouse. Hard to believe it was once dark and gloomy.

New decorating ideas, styles surface at Designer's Saturday

Each October, New York's designer showrooms welcome the nation's decorators and architects in a three-day open house with the misnomer, "Designer's Saturday."

At first glance, it might seem Designer's Saturday holds little to interest home furnishings consumers. Many of the furnishings on display are geared to the commercial or contract market of office, store, hospital and hotel design.

The products oriented toward the home tend to be in price ranges most people would regard as stratospheric. Furthermore, they can usually be purchased only through an architect or designer.

Despite appearances, however, new ideas of interest to the public do turn up at the event. New product styles and manufacturing techniques as well as decorating ideas that will eventually make their way to the home have a way of surfacing at Designer's Saturday.

At the most recent event, for example, new and recently introduced seating and lighting fixtures were shown and ideas about what makes for a good home and working environment were discussed. A desk or dining chair made by Knoll International and designed by Vignelli Designs shows what can be done with fiberglass and steel to create comfortable and versatile seating.

The chair, christened the Handkerchief Chair because it looks a bit like an opened handkerchief with its corners slightly turned up, is stackable and can be used outdoors in white. It also comes in upholstered and colored versions and in a black-and-white speckled finish that recalls the 1950s.

At about $250 a chair, it is one of the least expensive items in Knoll's line and quantity purchases would most likely bring the price lower.

Another interesting seating design shown by Atelier International Ltd., and designed by Mario Bellini for the Italian manufacturer, Cassina, features a steel-framed, polyurethane-cushioned modular seating group. Velcro and zipper closures are used on the upholstery fabric and the modular units are joined to one another by zipping them together.

The seating, about $1,500 per module in a moderate fabric, is out of the range of many consumers. But the idea could be developed less expensively, said Ronald Robins, director of marketing.

Lighting is an area in which consumers have a great deal to learn from designers of commercial spaces. A number of startlingly beautiful contemporary lamps and fixtures were on display. Most would add distinction to the home. Furthermore, since many employ small halogen bulbs which produce more light at a lower cost of operation, they could result in lower electric bills.

Robins noted that the high cost of energy has caused designers to rethink lighting. Instead of specifying an overall high degree of illumination, as used to be done, they are distinguishing between task light which needs to be bright for close-up work and general levels of illumination which can be lowered without negative consequences.

Some fixtures produce special effects such as a halo of light or a sunburst pattern of light on the wall. These effects make it possible to decorate with light — another idea that translates well to the home environment.

Several showrooms provided interesting object lessons in the often noted fact that creativity, not expense, is what makes for exciting interiors. For example, in the Sunar Hauserman showroom designed by architect Michael Graves, four different grayed pastel colors of paint on the walls and decorations which consisted of fabric draped on horizontal bars showed what could be accomplished by using low-cost techniques. Graves also fashioned three-dimensional wall hangings out of painted cardboard and wood scraps.

As if to echo the architect's imaginative use of low-cost materials, designer Ward Bennett noted that the creative use of objects is what distinguishes the home environment.

According to Bennett, whose furniture, dinnerware and flatware were chosen by the Whitney Museum of American Art for its current exhibition of 20th-century design, the best rooms are those which reflect their owners' interests and which do not have a purchased look.

"Artists and intellectuals have the most interesting homes because they live with what they love," he said. He added that good design is not restricted to costly furnishings.

Dear Abby

Organ donor's gift comes with no strings attached

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1985 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: When my driver's license was due for renewal this month, I decided that at age 70, it was time to do my bit for humanity and have "Organ Donor" stamped on my new license. When I told some friends what I had done, I was informed that at my demise it would be very costly to my heirs, as my estate would be charged for removing my organs and also for the cost of the transplants!

This is something I had not considered. Since you have access to information from the top sources, it would be a service to those who are considering donating our organs after death to have the facts. Thanks from ...

MARGATE, FLA.

DEAR MARGATE: I called the Living Bank, a national organ donor registry and placement service located in Houston, Texas.

Herma Breeden, referral coordinator, said: "Here we go again. Some people will believe whatever they hear, no matter how unreliable the source. As plainly as I can state it, there is no charge to the donor or the donor's family for organ donations. The donor hospital (where the donor died) bills the transplant facility that comes to recover the donated organs. The transplant facility that receives the donated organs pays the costs of organ donation, not the family of the donor."

"However, the next of kin will receive a bill from the hospital for the care the patient received when the hospital was trying to save his life. This bill is the same they would have received if the patient had lived or had not been a donor. You still have to pay for the care you receive when you are still alive in the hospital but not for the donation of the organs after you are declared dead."

"Some hospitals have not participated in the transplant program and do not know the proper procedures. The transplant facility instructs the donor facility to send the charges to it. If the donor hospital has sent any charges for donation to a family, they are in error, and the family should refuse to pay any bill for donation of the organs. The hospital should send the bill directly to the transplant facility, and the hospital will be reimbursed. "The donor's family should never be charged for the compassionate gesture of donating a better life to others. It is the policy of all transplant programs to pay for any additional costs entailed by the donation of organs."

DEAR ABBY: I hope I'm not too late to tell "Going Bananas" that there is definitely a correct way to eat a banana. I learned it in the late '50s when I was a graduate student at Smith College.

One evening when the dessert consisted of a fruit bowl including unpeeled bananas, our art instructor selected a banana, and showed us how to eat it. (She said she learned it in Switzerland.)

The banana is placed on one's fruit plate, concave side up. With the aid of a fruit knife, the stem edge is notched, then the uppermost strip of peel is removed, making the banana look like a "boat." The banana is then eaten from the "boat" with a teaspoon.

MARIAN W. WERNER,
ROCHESTER, N.Y.

DEAR MARIAN: Eat a banana with a teaspoon? Well, I'll be a monkey's uncle!

CONFIDENTIAL TO "SECOND THOUGHTS IN MILWAUKEE": Don't marry for money. It's cheaper to borrow it.

HOW MUCH DOES
FURNITURE COST?

One way to figure out how much various pieces of furniture really cost is to use the following formula:

Take the particular piece of furniture you're thinking about, then estimate how many years it will reasonably last and how many years you expect to use it — and divide the number of years into the price.

That will give you a cost-per-year — and the result will probably surprise you.

A piece of furniture that you may pay, say, $500 for, and expect to use for 15 years, thus has a cost-per-year of only about $33, and makes furniture one of the real bargains around today.

Our point in bringing this formula to you is to indicate an often overlooked point about furniture. Furniture is one of those things that lasts and gives you repeated value — yet while that is an advantage, it also makes it very important that you buy the right furniture in the first place.

We're here to give you selection and value, and help you buy furniture that you will be happy with for a long time, so stop in.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Valued relationships must be dealt with in a tolerant and understanding manner today. Be sensitive to the needs of others so that you don't evoke their ill will. Major changes are ahead for Scorpios in the coming year. Send for your Astro-Graph predictions today. Mail $1 to Astro-Graph, c/o this newspaper, Box 1846, Cincinnati, OH 45201. Be sure to state your zodiac sign.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Do not leave important tasks until the last minute today because you are not apt to perform at your highest level of competency if you feel pressured.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) You'll feel more at ease today in social situations where you can let your hair down and relax rather than at stuffed-shirt gatherings where you must adhere to protocol.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Sanctuary and peace of mind can be found in your domestic environment today. Leave the pressures of the outside world at your doorstep, where they belong.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) It's imperative today to keep an open mind. Having preconceived ideas or making impulsive judgments could work to your detriment.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Rather than letting old obligations prey upon your thoughts today, start taking positive measures to eliminate them. Be a victor, not a victim.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Your associates might not be as enterprising or adventurous as you today, so try not to let their bleak outlooks halt your momentum. Press on.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Guard against tendencies today to create complications where none should exist. Think ahead and plan all of your moves wisely.

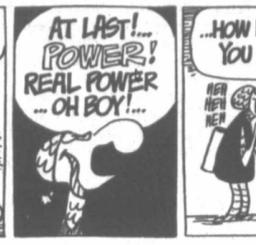

CANCER (June 21-July 22) If possible today, beg off from social involvements where you might run into people you dislike. Don't let others spoil what should be a fun day for you.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Unless you are properly motivated today, you're apt to be slow getting out of the starting blocks. Much that could be accomplished might not be attempted.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Your self-confidence may be at a low ebb today unless you're challenged. Only if this occurs will you become assertive and commanding.

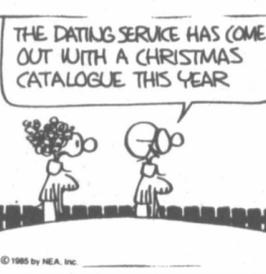

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) Someone who you know from experience is a poor financial risk might feel you out for a loan today. Be helpful, but offer assistance other than money.

Royals defy logic to win World Series

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Depending on the point of view, baseball's newest world champions, the Kansas City Royals, are big fish in a little pond or little fish in a big pond.

And in any case, it seems likely — if not certain — that they will have to make a few changes here and there if they hope to savor more champagne a year from now.

In the six seasons since baseball entered the 1980s, only three teams — Philadelphia, St. Louis and Kansas City — have managed to make it to the World Series more than once. In each case, the two rosters have been markedly different. Not one of the teams has appeared two years in a row, and not one has won the Series more than once in that span.

The Royals lost in 1980. The Phillies won it that year and lost in '83. And the Cardinals who won it in '82 lost it this time.

And although the Royals may wear the crown, they're flawed.

Buddy Biancalana may be Kansas City's newest folk hero and David Letterman's favorite target, but he probably isn't the Royals' shortstop of the future.

Hal McRae, a premier designated hitter, had 14 home runs and 70 runs batted in, but he'll turn 40 next midseason.

And in right field, Darryl Motley — his two-run homer Sunday night notwithstanding — has never really produced the numbers expected of him, and Pat Sheridan, the better of the two fielders at the position, has provided no punch at all.

The Royals, Manager Whitey Herzog of the beaten St. Louis Cardinals insisted, weren't the best team on the field Sunday night, the 11-0 blowout and Bret Saberhagen's five-hit pitching to the contrary.

"They couldn't win in the National League East," Herzog said of the division which the Cardinals, with a 101-61 record, won after a September dogfight with the New York Mets.

"They couldn't win the American League East," he said, reflecting on the Toronto Blue Jays, whose 99-62 record was the second-best in baseball this year.

Nevertheless, the Royals did win something — the AL West, annually the littles pond in the majors, the closest thing baseball has to parity.

They've won it steadily over the past decade, but next year they could just as easily finish behind the California Angels, the Chicago White Sox, the Oakland A's or the Minnesota Twins — and perhaps behind a few of them.

Kansas City won the west this year with a 91-71 record, the fourth-best among the four division winners, the sixth-best in baseball. Big fish in a little pond.

And then, in the biggest pond of all, these little-fish Royals defied logic and history by winning the World Series after losing the first two games at home.

SPORTS SCENE

All-Star team named

By JIM DONAGHY
AP Sports Writer

Dwight Gooden of the New York Mets, who dominated National League batters en route to a 24-4 record, scored another landslide victory when he was named today to The Associated Press' major-league baseball All-Star team.

Gooden received 114 of a possible 117 votes from a nationwide panel of sports writers and broadcasters to nail down the right-handed pitcher's spot on the squad. St. Louis' John Tudor beat out the New York Yankees' Ron Guidry, 80-26, as the left-handed hurler.

Gooden paced the NL in victories; earned-run average, 1.53; complete games, 16; innings pitched, 276 2-3; and strikeouts, 268. He also reached double figures in strikeouts 11 times, running his two-year career total to 26.

"Even when he's not getting double figures, he's amazing," said the Mets' Gary Carter of Gooden. "When he gets into trouble, how can you not be excited by what he can do to bail himself out."

At 20 years, 9 months, 9 days Gooden became the youngest pitcher to win 20 games, besting Bob Feller's major-league mark and Christy Mathewson's National League standard set at age 21 in 1901.

Carter topped the catcher's list with 75 votes, 35 more than Carlton Fisk of the Chicago White Sox. Carter, who was obtained from Montreal last winter, led the Mets with 32 homers and 100 RBIs.

Tudor, who started the season at 1-7 and went on to win 20 of 21 decisions, wasn't far behind Gooden in most categories. His 10 shutouts led the majors and were the most since Bob Gibson posted 13 for the Cardinals in 1968.

The closest race was for AP Manager of the Year, where St. Louis' Whitey Herzog edged Cincinnati's Pete Rose 44-42. Herzog guided the Cardinals to 101 victories, the NL pennant, and within one game of a world championship.

After Gooden, the next highest vote-getter was first baseman Don Mattingly of the New York Yankees, who received 107 votes.

Mattingly supplemented his major-league leading 145 RBIs with a .324 batting average, 35 homers, 48 doubles and 21 game-winning RBIs.

Mattingly's 48 doubles were the most by a Yankee since Lou Gehrig hit 52 in 1927, and he is the first AL player to lead the majors in doubles in consecutive years since Tris Speaker completed a four-year run in 1923.

The Cardinals' Tommy Herr, who with eight homers and 110 RBIs became the first player since Detroit's George Kell in 1950 to drive in more than 100 runs with less than 10 homers, beat out the Cubs' Ryne Sandberg 84-30 at second base.

The voters chose offense over defense at shortstop by going with Baltimore's Cal Ripken over St. Louis' Ozzie Smith, 67-48.

Just as they battled most of the season for the American League's batting crown, Boston's Wade Boggs and Kansas City's George Brett staged a tight race at third base. Despite Boggs' .368 average and 240 hits, Brett won out by an 11-vote margin, 63-52.

Brett hit .335 and belted a career-high 30 homers while driving in 112 runs. He also led the AL with a .585 slugging percentage while leading the Royals to a world title with some spectacular post-season play.

"What makes me popular?" asked Brett. "Is it hitting a home run against (Goose) Gossage? Is it the pine-tar incident?"

"I've gotten some big hits in big games, but it's hard to pinpoint what makes me more popular than other players."

The three outfield positions went to the Cardinals' Willie McGee, with 86 votes; Rickey Henderson of the Yankees, 79 votes; and the Dodgers' Pedro Guerrero, 64 votes. Atlanta's Dale Murphy, the top vote-getter two of the last three seasons, was fourth with 50 votes, while Cincinnati's Dave Parker collected 45.

McGee broke the highest previous average for a National League switch-hitter with a .353 mark to lead the league. The former record by a switch-hitter in the NL was .348 by Rose in 1969, and Frankie Frisch in 1923.

"I want to succeed personally because I feel the better I do the better it helps the team," said McGee, who also posted a .503 slugging average.

The relief pitcher spot was a tie at 39 votes for Montreal's Jeff Reardon and Kansas City's Dan Quisenberry.

Detroit's Darrell Evans was voted top designated hitter, edging Oakland's Dave Kingman, 21-17. Evans led the AL with 40 homers, and at the age of 38 became the oldest player to lead the league. He was also the first major-leaguer to hit 40 homers in both leagues.

ALL-STAR OUTFIELDER — Willie McGee of the St. Louis Cardinals was the leading vote-getter among outfielders on the Associated Press Major League All-Star Team. McGee led the National League in hitting with a .353 average. (AP Laserphoto)

College Football Poll

UTEP shocks Brigham

By The Associated Press

Thanks to Texas-El Paso, college football's 98-pound weakling, there's a new heavyweight in the Western Athletic Conference.

UTEP, loser of 107 of 121 games in the last 11 years, pulled off one of the biggest upsets ever — a 23-16 shocker over defending national champion Brigham Young, The loss not only dropped BYU 10 places, to 17th, in the Associated Press poll, but left No. 7 Air Force alone atop the WAC roost.

Air Force, a 32-15 winner over Utah, is 7-0 overall and 4-0 in the WAC, a game better than BYU. Not since 1975 has Brigham Young failed to garner at least a share of the WAC title, but the Cougars face an uphill task in trying to throttle the high-flying Falcons.

"I was as surprised as you were," Air Force Coach Fisher DeBerry said of BYU's demise. "But that same thing could happen to us in any of the four games remaining on our schedule. It could happen to anybody. Aren't the Chicago Bears the only unbeaten team in the NFL?"

"We don't want anyone else to do our work for us," DeBerry added. "We're going to play this thing out one game at a time."

The fall of Brigham Young accounted for the only significant change in this week's poll. The top six positions remained the same.

with Iowa again a unanimous choice as No. 1.

The Hawkeyes, 7-0 after a 49-10 pounding of Northwestern, received all 58 first-place votes and a perfect 1,160 points from a nationwide panel of sports writers and sportscasters in the Associated Press poll.

Over the last 13 years, the only other team to be voted a unanimous No. 1 for two consecutive weeks was Nebraska early in the 1983 season.

Florida is again second, collecting 1,060 points after a 35-18 defeat of Virginia Tech, and Penn State got 1,025 points after a 27-0 blanking of West Virginia.

Fourth-ranked Michigan, which trounced Indiana 42-15, collected 994 points and Nebraska rounded out the top five with 912 after defeating Colorado 17-7.

Auburn remained sixth with 866 points after turning back Mississippi State 21-9.

Air Force collected 764 points to finish ahead of Ohio State, which improved one spot to eighth after a 23-19 decision over last week's No. 20 team, Minnesota. Ohio State received 682 points.

Oklahoma moved up from 10th to ninth with 655 points by crushing

Iowa State 59-14, and Florida State went from 11th to 10th with 592 points by rallying to beat North Carolina 20-10.

The Second Ten consists of Miami (Fla.), Oklahoma State, Baylor, Arkansas, UCLA, LSU, BYU, Georgia, Tennessee and Southern Methodist.

Last week, it was Florida State, Oklahoma State, Baylor, Arkansas, Miami, Tennessee, UCLA, LSU, Texas and Minnesota.

Cowboys atop East Division

IRVING, Texas (AP) — Picked to finish fourth in the National Conference Eastern Division, the Dallas Cowboys own a one-game lead with a 6-2 record after Sunday's 24-10 victory over the Atlanta Falcons and defensive back Dennis Thurman says "It's nice to be top," said defensive back Dennis Thurman.

"I don't think anybody expected us to be where we are right now," said Thurman. "It's gratifying, but it's only halfway over. We're getting ready to go into St. Louis and Washington, two very tough places to play."

Defensive tackle Randy White said, "We'll be OK as long as we keep playing as a team. That's the best thing we have going this year. We have a good, aggressive attitude."

Give Dallas Coach Tom Landry a 6-2 record in the second half of the season and he'd take a hike.

"I'd go fishing or play golf if you'd give me 6-2 again," said Landry. "I'm very happy to be at 6-2 at this point. I never thought it would be."

A sore-ribbed Danny White was far from perfect in his return to the Dallas lineup, but he offset three interceptions by running for a touchdown, passing for another and hitting 27 of 47 passes for 362 yards against the Falcons.

Tony Hill caught a 35-yard touchdown pass and had 10 receptions for 161 yards. Tony Dorsett gained 90 yards, 60 of them on a touchdown burst up the middle.

"Danny did have three turnovers but that's not surprising when you consider the harassment he was under," said Landry. "Still he made the big plays for us. His experience enabled him to make those big plays."

Landry said he feels good about his team.

"Well go to the playoffs for sure if we keep playing like this," he said.

Dallas strong safety Dexter Clinkscale, who had two interceptions, said, "I thought we'd be 8-0, but I'll settle for 6-2. We have a very good football team, but we need to stay intense. We need to play enthused."

Clinkscale said the Cardinals, who have been slumping lately, will be tough at home.

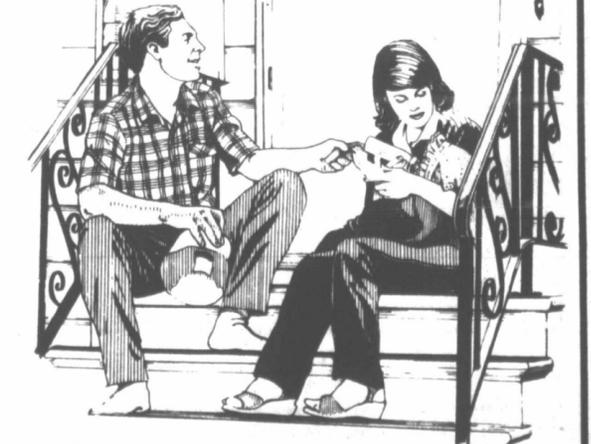

"It'll be a great game for the country to see," he said.

Raiders hold off Chargers

By DAVE GOLDBERG
AP Football Writer
LOS ANGELES (AP) — The signs around the Los Angeles Coliseum proclaim the motto of the Los Angeles Raiders: "Commitment to Excellence." Halfway through the National Football League season, the Raiders are beginning to fulfill that commitment.

"We're halfway through and tied for first. That's not a bad place to be," said Coach Tom Flores after the Raiders won their fifth straight game Monday night, dismantling the San Diego Chargers 34-21 to join Denver in a tie for first place in the AFC West with a 6-2 record.

It marked their longest winning streak since 1983, the year the Raiders won their last Super Bowl, and was the latest in a long line of Monday night triumphs — the Raiders are now 23-3-1 in the prime-time showcase.

The victory also ran their streak against the Chargers to 7-0 since they moved from Oakland in 1982.

Moreover, the Raiders accomplished it with something they haven't had much of lately — offense — although they did it against a team that entered the game ranked 27th defensively in the 28-team NFL. With Marcus Allen rushing for 111 yards and three short touchdowns and Marc Wilson throwing for 258 yards, they jumped to a quick 10-0 lead, expanded it to 24-7 at halftime, then spent the second half running out the clock.

The defense, meanwhile, didn't do so badly either.

Led by Howie Long and Rod

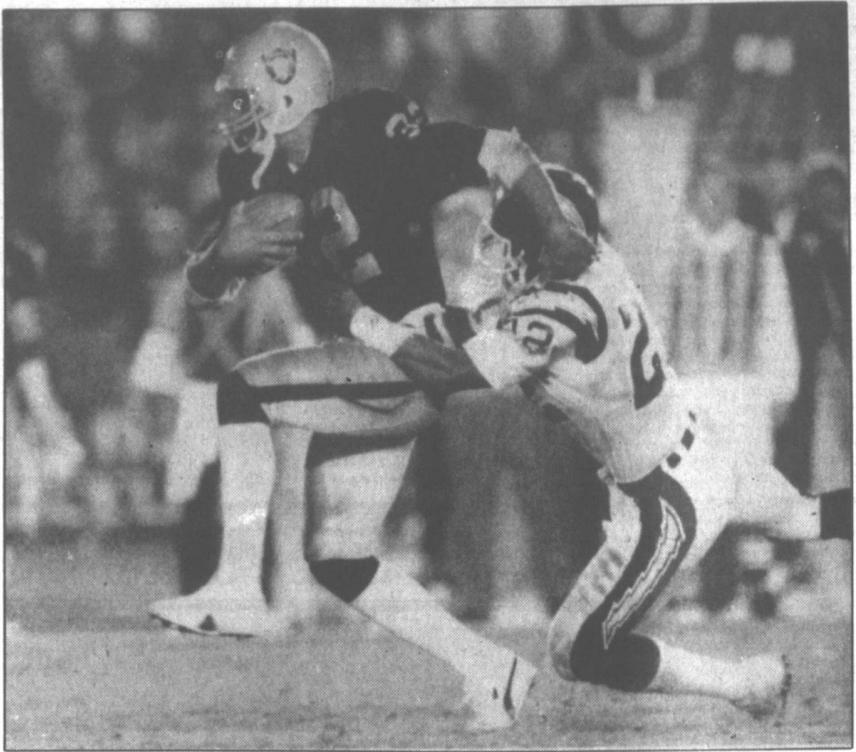

Martin, it registered six sacks and harried Dan Fouts all night in the San Diego quarterback's first start since injuring a knee a month ago.

The Raiders controlled the game from the outset. Tight end Todd Christensen caught seven passes for 134 yards, including a 48-yarder that set up the Raiders' third touchdown.

"That's the best team we've played all season, no question about it," said San Diego Coach Har-rumph!

Let's go Auburn! Ohio State, too!

By Maj. Amos B Hoople
Upset Prophet

Egad, friends! Would you believe Auburn over Florida? And how about Ohio State over Iowa?

Can't be, you say? Just remember it was the Hoople Forecast that some of the biggest upsets this season. That includes UCLA to end BYU's 25-game win streak, and then Washington to upset UCLA. Plus Auburn to knock off Florida State, and Nebraska to shock the Oklahoma State Cowboys. Har-rumph!

In the Auburn-Florida game, look for the devastating Tiger running attack led by Heisman-bound to Bo Jackson, their career rushing leader, and fullback Tommy Agee. The versatile Gator offense is powered by the brilliant passing of QB Kerwin Bell and RB Neal Anderson. Florida's all-time rushing leader

This one will be well worth the price of admission — in a wing-ding battle. Hoople calls it for Auburn, 35-28.

Watch for Ohio State to edge Iowa, 28-24, in the Big Ten. This pits the great runner Keith Byars of the Bucks against passer deluxe Chuck Long of Iowa. And this time the leg is mightier than the arm.

In the SEC, LSU will prevail over Mississippi, 24-8; and Alabama will whip Mississippi State, 31-14.

The Big Eight race stays close: Oklahoma drops Kansas, 24-20; Nebraska rolls over Kansas State, 41-13, and Oklahoma State keeps pressing with a 35-28 win over rugged Colorado.

Georgia Tech, making a determined bid for the ACC crown, will squeeze past Duke, 27-21, and Maryland will top North Carolina, 24-17.

In the SWC, powerful Arkansas will defeat resurgent Rice, 40-20.

BYU takes another in the WAC with a 38-13 triumph over Wyoming, and Air Force will keep pace by taking San Diego State, 28-22.

Keeping their Pac-10 Rose Bowl hopes alive, Washington will drop Stanford, 24-10; and Southern California will do likewise with a 38-14 victory over Washington State.

Among independents, the big showdown in Tallahassee between the Florida State Seminoles and the scintillating Miami Hurricanes leads the list. In a give-and-take joust, the Seminoles rate the Hoople nod, 35-28.

Georgia, playing at home, figures to tame Tulane, 38-15. Likewise, Notre Dame, playing in South Bend, Ind., will sink Navy, 28-14, in their 59th meeting.

Finally, Penn State and Boston College meet for the 14th time — a Penn State victory, 28-24, will give the Nittany Lions a solid 12-2 mark against the tough Eagles. Kaff-kaff.

Breeders' Cup is Saturday

NEW YORK (AP) — Breeders' Cup Day at Aqueduct on Saturday shapes up as a banner afternoon for American thoroughbred racing, but one race on the card underscores the international influence of the sport.

That is the $2 million Turf, with a field of starters that has run often — and in some cases, exclusively — in Europe, where the racing surface is grass.

One of the 14 expected to be entered Wednesday for the 1 1/4-mile Turf is the English-bred 4-year-old Lashkari, who in his only previous start in the United States won the inaugural Breeders' Cup Turf last Nov. 10 at Hollywood Park. His neck win over the mare All Along was worth a winning mutual payoff of $108.80.

This year Lashkari, owned by the Aga Khan, has raced four times in France with one victory, in the 1 9/16-mile Prix Tertulien in July.

Lord Derby's Teleprompter, a 5-year-old gelding, is another English-bred, who has won his only start in this country. Teleprompter, owned by Lord Derby, crossed the Atlantic for a three-quarter-length win over Greinton in the 1 1/4-mile Budweiser Arlington Million on the grass Aug. 25. In his only start since, he finished second in the one-mile Queen Elizabeth at Royal Ascot in England Sept. 28.

Two other pre-entries owned by the Aga Khan are Shernazar, a 4-year-old Irish-bred colt, and Kozana, a 3-year-old English-bred filly.

The makeup of the Turf field could change if the owners of one or all of three horses entered in the $3 million Breeders' Cup Classic change their minds and enter in the Turf, as they have indicated they might do. They are Bounding Basque, Imperial Choice and Strawberry Road.

Rodeo results

Shawn Johnson of Pampa placed second in both ribbon roping and calf roping in a Tri-State High School Rodeo last weekend in Dumas.

In the girls' division, Amy Cockrell was second in breakaway and sixth in barrels. Tammy Greene was fifth in poles.

It was last rodeo of the fall season for the Pampa teams, which start the second half of the season in March.

Public health, AIDS main issue of campaign, mayor challenger contends

HOUSTON (AP) — The major issue facing Houston voters Nov. 5 is public health and the threat of AIDS, mayoral candidate Louie Welch said during a televised debate with Mayor Kathy Whitmire.

"I don't believe 95 percent of our people who are heterosexual have to suffer the exposure of the less than 5 percent that are homosexual," Welch said during a KHOU-TV debate Monday. "The problem has to be addressed on the basis of today and the emergencies that exist."

Welch, Houston's mayor from 1964-1974, wants people arrested for prostitution to be tested for AIDS and wants so-called "bathhouses" closed.

"My opponent believes it's easy to snap his fingers and have a place closed," responded Mrs. Whitmire, who is seeking her third two-year term.

"It's difficult," Welch acknowledged. "But you've got to begin somewhere."

Welch has called AIDS in Houston an epidemic, a term disputed by health officials.

In the six-county Houston area, statistics this month showed 370 confirmed AIDS cases since 1980.

Welch, 66, gained national attention last week when he was preparing for a live television interview about his plan to halt the spread of acquired immune deficiency syndrome and said one way to curb the disease is to "shoot the queers." The microphone was live and his comment was carried on the air.

"I think that has got as much circulation as it probably is going to get," he said in response to a question during Monday's debate.

"I think it already has gone into the category of the kind of slip that has made the program 'Bloopers' famous."

"What I do fear is that the media attention may take away the real issue, the interest in public health, which was the topic I was addressing," Welch, 66, said. "The problem of public health is not going to go away."

Mrs. Whitmire, 39, given the opportunity to respond to Welch's answer, repeated somewhat the same reply she made last week.

"I would certainly hope that neither one of us would make any statement in the campaign that would reflect badly on our city," she said.

However, she added that part of the aggressive campaign being waged between herself and the former five-term mayor is "to improve the national news coverage that we receive in Houston."

"One of the concerns I've had about the campaign this year is that perhaps too much attention would be paid to the problems we're still working on," she said.

Polls have given Mrs. Whitmire a comfortable edge over Welch.

Prosecutor wants to reopen unsolved case

DAYTON, Texas (AP) — Suspects in the beating of a 67-year-old widow at her home 18 months ago were released after passing a lie detector test but a prosecutor now wants the case reopened.

Eathel Laney told police that she was asleep in her small, wood-frame house May 7, 1984, when she was awakened by a noise. When she went to her kitchen to investigate, her attackers jumped her.

"What happened to me is something I'll never get over," said Ms. Laney, who is so frightened she sleeps with a Doberman pinscher nearby.

"It's the first thing I think about in the morning and the last thing on my mind before I go to sleep."

The incident left her with a shattered cheekbone, poor vision in her left eye and unable to wear dentures because the inside of her mouth was so badly injured.

Ms. Laney identified two of the assailants for police and gave them the name of another, who was a juvenile.

"I saw two of them as plain as I can see you," she said.

Two of the suspects — who are brothers — were charged with burglary of a habitation with intent to commit injury to an elderly person.

But Liberty County District Attorney Mike Little, who asked for the investigation to be reopened, said they were released after they passed lie detector tests "with flying colors."

The juvenile was never charged. Prosecutors say they haven't been able to solve the case because they lack sufficient evidence.

One of the suspects had blood-like stains on his hands when he was arrested. But a lab test was unable to determine if the stain was blood or a substance found in plants, said Richard Helton, who was the chief investigator in the case.

Texas girl honored for Statue of Liberty fund-raising PALESTINE, Texas (AP) — Fifth-grader Becky Wilson should have plenty to tell her classmates next fall about her summer vacation. She's going to attend next summer's July Fourth rededication ceremony for the newly restored Statue of Liberty.

Becky, 11, collected more donations to restore the statue than any other student in 692 schools in 32 states participating in the Statue of Liberty Fund, Inc., drive, Elkhart fund coordinator Anne Griffin said.

She won the free five-day grand prize trip to New York City after she raised $925 for the Kansas-based fund-raising effort. The non-profit fund has turned over its money to the national Statue of Liberty-Ellis Island Foundation, Inc. based in New York, according to Ms. Griffin.

"The more money she collected, the more she wanted to raise," said Ms. Griffin, who is an Elkhart teacher.

Citizens of Elkhart, a small East

Texas town with a population of around 1,300, donated their money liberally.

Originally, the campaign started with a month-long bumper sticker sale. Becky raised $87 in $1 donations for the "I Helped Rebuild the Statue of Liberty" decals — more than any other Elkhart student.

Becky knocked on all the doors in her neighborhood. Pretty soon, people started to drop by her home to donate money. Her father, Dwight Wilson, even collected some at work, said Becky's mother, Marien Wilson.

After the decal sale, Elkhart students built an award-winning display booth at the Anderson County Fair for collecting more funds. Becky and her mother also sold baked goods at the fair.

"This was a family effort," said Ms. Griffin.

In all, along with the $925 Becky raised, Elkhart students collected a grand total of $2,788 for the fund.

During the campaign, one generous donor left three $50 bills in an envelope on a teacher's desk. Attached was a note requesting anonymity.

"We still don't know who left that donation," said Ms. Griffin.

Although fund raising has slacked off since May, Becky didn't find out she won the grand prize until last month. She did admit she knew she was in the running.

The day before she was notified she won, Becky had missed a day of school. The next day she attended classes but couldn't find her note from her parents excusing her absence.

When she was called into the principal's office, she thought she was in deep trouble. When she arrived, standing there was her homeroom teacher, Ms. Griffin and elementary school principal, Jonnie Keeling.

"I'd never heard so much stuttering," said Ms. Griffin.

Then they told Becky she'd won the trip to New York.

"It was exciting. I was really happy," she said.

After Becky called her mother, her mother "was on the phone all day. I didn't even tell anyone else. She did all that," Becky said.

When she arrives in New York for the ceremonies she won't be alone. Becky's parents, two sisters and a cousin will be along, too.

Ms. Griffin is also going to attend the ceremonies and she said one or more other teachers might go as well.

But, Becky wants to fill one more goal before next July Fourth. "I want to raise another $25 so I can present the fund with an even $1,000 check."

Ms. Griffin said that many people who donated to the fund commented about how much the statue meant to them personally.

Pass This Test
Could Mean Failure.

Kids who pass this conventional school eye test may see the blackboard fine from the back of the room. But how about up close? Studies prove your child may be one of 15 million school-aged children with reading disabilities due to a visual deficiency this test can't detect.

Is your child giving you any of these early detection warnings?

- Book held only 7 or 8 inches from the eyes
- Makes errors when copying

• Uses finger to trace lines in his books

- Writes or prints poorly
- Short attention span while reading
- Closes or covers one eye

Proper vision therapy, using a series of vision exercises and sometimes combined with proper corrective lenses can successfully help many of these problems. Don't take chances with your child's sight. Contact Dr. Simmons who specializes in early detection. It's just too important to risk a failing grade.

Texas briefs

KILLEEN, Texas (AP) — A U.S. Army tank commander and four other military personnel were injured Monday when a helicopter crashed at Fort Hood, officials said.

Maj. Gen. Richard A. Scholtes, commander of the 2nd Armored Division, was in fair condition at Darnall Army Hospital on the post after the 2 p.m. accident near Pad 10 Helipad, said Sgt. Roger Allen, an Army spokesman.

The helicopter pilot, Warrant Officer Robert George, was in very serious condition, Allen said. He said Capt. Mike Flynn, the general's aide, and the co-pilot, 2nd Lt. Ronald Jones, were also in fair condition, while helicopter crew chief Spec. 4 Douglas J. Smith was uninjured.

Allen said that the crash was being investigated. The UH-1 Huey helicopter was neither taking off nor landing at the time of the accident, he said.

Scholtes, 51, has been assigned to Fort Hood since August 1984.

FLORESVILLE, Texas (AP) — A state district judge declared a mistrial Monday in the case of a man accused in a shootout with a San Antonio judge in the jurist's home last May.

Judge Fred M. Hoey made the ruling after the jury became deadlocked in the burglary and aggravated assault trial of Melvin Larry Neighbors.

The jury had deliberated slightly less than three hours on Friday but was sent home for the weekend after it announced that it had reached an impasse. Raymond E. Fuchs, Bexar County assistant district attorney, said his office would prepare for a new trial at the earliest possible date.

Neighbors is accused of entering the home of Bexar County Court-at-Law Judge Anthony Ferro in an apparent robbery attempt.

Nick Rothe, Neighbors' attorney, filed a motion for mistrial shortly after 11 a.m. Monday after the jury sent a note to Hoey saying it could not reach a decision. When a second note was issued, so was a second motion for mistrial by Rothe. This time, it was granted.

Neighbors will be returned to the Bexar County Jail.

During closing arguments Friday, Rothe pointed out that there was a lack of evidence, including fingerprints from the crime scene, to convict his client.

Fuchs contended that with Ferro's positive identification of Neighbors, fingerprints were unnecessary. Neighbors, a California fugitive, was arrested along with suspended San Antonio attorney Julie Marquez in Mississippi a day after the shooting. He had shown up at a hospital seeking medical treatment for bullet wounds in his chest, when he was taken into custody.

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — With the blessings of the federal government, a 25-year-old man was freed from jail and successfully donated a kidney to his seriously ill sister.

Rudy Benavides gave the kidney to his sister, Esmerelda Lopez, 35, in a transplant operation Saturday at Humana Hospital San Antonio.

"We're optimistic about the outcome. He was a good donor."

ORDINANCE NO. 1038 AN ORDINANCE ADOPTING THE SOUTHERN STANDARD FIRE PREVENTION CODE, 1985 EDITION, PROVIDING FOR PENALTIES, PROVIDING FOR A SAVING CLAUSE, AND REPEALING ALL ORDINANCES IN CONFLICT HERewith.

WHEREAS, it is the desire of the City Commission of the City of Pampa, Texas, to adopt, in all respects, the Southern Standard Fire Prevention Code, 1985 Edition, relating to building and housing standards and inspections; and WHEREAS, the adoption of said Code is to facilitate proper inspection activities by said City relating to construction and to maintain the corporate limits of said City and relating to public safety, health and general welfare;

NOW, THEREFORE, BE IT ORDAINED BY THE CITY OF PAMPA, TEXAS:

SECTION 1. The Southern Standard Building Code, 1985 Edition, including the appendices thereto, is adopted in its entirety, a copy of said Code being attached hereto and made a part of this ordinance by reference, as if set forth in full herein.

SECTION 2. Any person violating any of the provisions of said Code which are contrary to existing ordinances of the said City of Pampa No. 894 is hereby repealed and, to that extent, any existing ordinance to the contrary are hereby repealed in that respect only.

SECTION 3. In said Code when reference is made to the duties of certain officials named therein that designated official of the said City of Pampa who has duties corresponding to those of the named official in said Code shall be deemed to be the responsible official insofar as enforcing the provisions of said Code are concerned.

SECTION 4. Any person violating any of the provisions of said Code herein adopted shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and, upon conviction, shall be fined any sum not exceeding Two Hundred Dollars ($200.00), and each day and every day that the provision of said Code is violated shall constitute a separate and distinct offense. As an additional remedy, the said City may seek any injunctive relief to which it may be entitled in law or in equity to enforce any of the provisions of said Code.

SECTION 5. If any section, subsection, sentence, paragraph, clause or phrase of this Ordinance is, for any reason, held to be unconstitutional or invalid, such holding shall not affect the validity of the remaining portions of this Ordinance. The City Commission of the City hereby declares that it would have passed this Ordinance and each section, subsection, paragraph, clause or phrase hereof irrespective of the fact that any one or more sections, subsections, sentences, paragraphs, clauses or phrases be declared unconstitutional or invalid.

SECTION 6. This ordinance shall become effective ten (10) days after its publication as provided by law. PASSED AND APPROVED on its first reading this 22nd day of October, 1985.
