Gorbachev and Reagan are both in Geneva

GENEVA (AP) — Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev arrived in Geneva today to engage President Reagan in talks "to halt the unprecedented arms race" on earth and "its extension to a new sphere" in space.

Just minutes after his Aeroflot jet touched down, the Soviet leader took aim at Reagan's Star Wars missile defense plan, which has become a major point of contention between the superpowers.

Gorbachev, wearing a hat and a topcoat as a strong wind whipped across the airport runway and drove temperatures below freezing, was accompanied by his wife, Raisa. They were welcomed by Swiss President Kurt Furgler.

Reagan arrived in Geneva on Saturday night. Formal arrival ceremonies for both leaders were planned later in the day.

Standing on the airport tarmac, Gorbachev, speaking through an interpreter, said, "The further course of international affairs as a whole will depend" on the outcome of his meeting with Reagan.

"First and foremost," he said, is "the question as to what can be done to halt the unprecedented arms race which is now taking place in the world and its extension to a new sphere and to ward off the threat of nuclear war for mankind."

Gorbachev said that Soviets and Americans, as well as the rest of the world, "expect from the Geneva meeting positive results. I can assure you that for our part we shall endeavor to bring about such an outcome in this important meeting."

Reagan assembled his key advisers, including Secretary of State George P. Shultz and national security adviser Robert C. McFarlane, to make further preparations this morning for what his spokesman, Larry Speakes, said could be "a watershed meeting" with the Soviet leader.

Without even waiting for Gorbachev's arrival, the Soviets accused the U.S. administration of trying to "torpedo the whole arms limitation process" with a leaked letter from Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger counseling Reagan not to yield to the Soviet leader if he seeks to informally extend the controversial 1979 Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty.

The Americans apparently were caught off guard by the leak of Weinberger's letter — and promised to investigate to find out who did it. The Soviets were quick to capitalize on the episode in a city full of reporters hungry for news.

Georgy Arbatov, the chief Soviet expert on American affairs, told a crowded Soviet news briefing the letter underscores the Kremlin's view that some U.S. officials don't want arms control and that "American policies are very strongly influenced by very conservative circles and by the military-industrial complex."

There was no way to assess the impact on Reagan of Weinberger's appeal, and Reagan said little about what he thought of the leak. Asked by reporters if he would fire the defense secretary, Reagan said, "Hell, no."

The summit talks begin Tuesday morning, with a 15-minute private session between Reagan and Gorbachev. They will be alone, in a small room in a 19th century mansion alongside Lake Geneva, and then join full U.S. and Soviet delegations for the first of four two-hour rounds of formal talks at a table airlifted here from the U.S. mission to the United Nations in New York.

On a chilly and drab Sunday, Reagan and his wife, Nancy, inspected the mansion and Reagan sat in the chair he will occupy during the talks. Mrs. Reagan sat where Gorbachev will sit.

"Well, you're much prettier than I expected," Reagan said to his wife. Then they walked outside to the surrounding gardens.

When the talks get down to business, Gorbachev is expected to press Reagan to give ground on his Strategic Defense Initiative, his ambitious plan to determine whether the technology of the future can shield the United States from Soviet missiles and make a missile attack futile.

Apart from nuclear issues, the two leaders are expected to clash over regional conflicts and the status of human rights in the Soviet Union.

In a U.N. speech last month, Reagan urged the Soviets to join with the United States in sponsoring negotiations to end warfare in five Marxist-ruled states, Afghanistan, Angola, Cambodia, Ethiopia and Nicaragua.

The Soviets rejected the advice. On the human rights front, in a pre-summit gesture, 13 Soviets, including eight Soviets married to Americans and a ninth with family members in the United States, are being granted permission to emigrate.

More than 100 other Soviet citizens who are members of similarly "divided families" are on lists submitted to Moscow by the State Department. U.S. officials said Reagan would press for their release, as well.

The Soviets resent such pleas, especially when they are publicized, as invasions of their internal affairs.

A senior U.S. official told The Associated Press, meanwhile, he thought the chances that Reagan and Gorbachev would agree to hold periodic summit meetings were "more than 50 percent." And he said, it was "highly likely" that the summit would produce an agreement for the two superpowers to guard against proliferation of nuclear weapons to other countries.

Local pet contest sponsored by Pampa Animal Shelter

Does your dog or cat look an awful lot like you?

Can it howl like Pavarotti or dance like Baryshnikov? Has it performed a heroic deed that makes it deserving of a ticker tape parade? Or, better yet, is it an all-American mutt or the furry, cuddly feline you'd most like to take home to mother?

If your dog or cat fits any of these categories, it could walk away with the title of Pampa's Most Wonderful Pet, representing the Pampa Animal Shelter and be eligible for an expenses-paid trip to Chicago to compete in the national Most Wonderful Pet contest in April, where the national winner will receive a $1,000 cash prize.

Sponsoring the event is the Pampa Animal Shelter and the Pets Are Wonderful Council, a national, non-profit public service organization dedicated to communicating the joys and rewards of responsible pet ownership. Information about the contest can be obtained at the Animal Shelter in Hobart Street Park, City Hall, Fish'n'Critters and Pets'n'Stuff pet stores, all four local veterinarians or The Pampa News.

All dog and cat owners are welcome to enter. Entry forms must be completed and returned to the Pampa Animal Shelter by Jan. 1.

Eligible entries will then go on to compete in the local contest at 10 a.m., Jan. 11, at the Clyde Carruth Pavilion at the rodeo grounds. Pet owners are encouraged to participate along with their pets by reciting reasons why their pet is most deserving of a ticker tape parade or is Pampa's funniest pet, animal control officer Sandy Burns said.

Other categories include: most Hollywood bound pet, most star-spangled pet, best movie star impersonator, all-American mutt, most dynamic duo, dog or cat you'd most like to take home to mother, best pet-owner look-alike and most loving pet.

Owners are responsible for supplying their own props and must keep large animals on leashes. Smaller animals must be transported in portable carriers.

"All proceeds from the contest and all donations go to the animal control improvements fund for furnishings for the new animal shelter," Burns said. Anyone interested in making cash donations can send them to Box 2499, City Finance Department, Fund 12, Pampa.

Also Jan. 11 will be a basic obedience contest for pets and their owners. This is separate from the national contest, Burns said. Entry fee for the contests is $10.

"Our objective here is to show responsible pet ownership," Burns explained. Prizes and ribbons will be awarded up to 25th place in both contests.

For ticket or entry information, call the Pampa Animal Shelter at 669-6149.

A letter signed 'Cap' touches off a furor

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Pentagon says neither Caspar Weinberger nor anyone else in the Defense Department is the leaker of the letter signed "Cap" that caused a furor as President Reagan flew to Geneva for the summit conference.

And, says Robert Sims, the defense secretary's chief spokesman, the Pentagon is conducting an investigation into who did pass the letter on to the New York Times and the Washington Post.

The letter offered Reagan hard-line advice.

The letter's publication on Saturday laid open to the world the disarray within the administration even as Reagan was en route to Geneva.

Tremors detected at volcano

BOGOTA, Colombia (AP) — The government called off, then resumed the search for survivors of the volcanic eruption that killed more than 22,000 people, and geologists weep ased earth tremors around smoking Nevado del Ruiz may signal more eruptions.

Despite the renewed search, one government minister said Sunday there was "no one left to rescue."

"The last three survivors were rescued this morning in Armero and I believe they later died," the Cabinet member, Health Minister Rafael Zubiria, said Sunday.

But British rescue experts worked in the darkness early today with sensitive listening devices, trying to detect some sign of life. The British team worked at night because sound carries farther.

"Everything indicates that there are survivors to be found," said Patrick Stanton, head of the British team. "Everything points to that conclusion. There just have to be people still alive out there."

He said people were found alive Sunday in houses buried in mud, and that many houses with only rooftops protruding had not yet been checked.

Colombian officials say more than 22,000 people, including 8,000 children, were killed when the volcano erupted Wednesday.

Pampa's retail sales are above last year's

By LARRY HOLLIS
Staff Writer

Pampa retail sales still showed an increase at the end of the third quarter over 1984 sales based on sales tax payment reports issued by State Comptroller Bob Bullock.

But sales tax figures for other cities in the area showed a mixed bag of up- and -down collections based on checks sent this month to cities collecting the one-percent sales tax.

Bullock sent November checks totaling $115.2 million in local sales tax to the 1,010 cities levying the city tax. November checks represent taxes collected on sales made in September and the third quarter and reported to Bullock by Oct. 20.

Pampa had a check this month for $196,047.47, representing retail sales of approximately $19.6 million. That represents an increase of more than $5 million over sales in the previous September, when the state sent the city a check for $140,866.68.

For the year to date, Pampa has received total payments of $1,510,582.69, representing sales of more than $151 million. The payments this year are up 6.14 percent over the comparable 1984 period payments of $1,423,252.31, Bullock reported.

Last month Bullock listed Pampa with a 2.25 percent increase in 1985 payments over comparable 1984 payments.

The figures, however, still can't be compared with complete accuracy because of new items and services included under the sales tax in October, 1984. But next month the figures can be matched up more evenly, since the December checks will represent sales made in October and reported to Bullock by Nov. 20.

Elsewhere in Gray County, Lefors received a check from the state this month for $587,077, nearly $400 less than the November, 1984, check for $980,677.

Total payments to Lefors for the year to date are $4,701,777, down 15.20 percent from the $5,544,466 in payments recorded at this time last year. Last month the city was recording a decrease of 9.84, indicating a decline in retail sales from August.

McLean had a November check for $1,734,333, down more than $700 from the November, 1984, payment of $2,455,888. For the year to date, the city has received $17,897,577 in total payments for sales tax collections, a drop of 14.56 percent from comparable period payments in 1984 of $20,948,733. Last month the city recorded a 12.60 percent decline.

In Carson County, Groom had a check this month for $2,226,099, running above the payment of $2,057,988 earned last November. Total payments to date this year are $19,840,466, up 1.58 percent from the $19,531,544 recorded at this time last year. Last month Groom was showing a hike of 0.81 percent, indicating a slight improvement in sales.

Bullock sent Skellytown a November check for $1,442,144, just slightly more than $600 under the $2,043,288 check it received last November. The first 11 payments for the year total $17,170,300, down 27.38 percent from the $23,644,399 recorded in the same 1984 period. Skellytown was listed with a 27.19 percent decrease last month.

White Deer had a check this month for $2,263,633, about $356 more than the $1,907,033 payment last November. The city's total payments this year are $18,569,888, listed at 18.93 percent under the comparable 1984 period payments of $22,906,799.

But in October Bullock reported White Deer as having a 22.35 percent decline, indicating some improvement in September sales over August sales.

In Hemphill County, Canadian received a November check for $21,027,422, nearly $5,700 above the $15,332,900 check for the previous November. That pushed the year's total payments to date to $143,515,099, down 11.19 percent from the $161,593,65 recorded at this time last year. Last month Bullock reported Canadian as showing a 16.25 percent decrease.

Miami had a check this month for $2,001,911, nearly $400 less than the $2,399,666 check for last November. Yearly payments to date total $18,547,066, dropping 25.15 percent under the comparable 1984 period payments of $24,778,855.

But last month the Roberts County city showed a decrease of 26.07 percent, indicating a slight improvement in sales from the October report.

In Wheeler County, Mobeetie had a November check for $679,866, more than $600 above the $75,777 payment it received last November. For the year to date, the city has received total payments of $3,890,266, falling 39.61 percent from comparable period payments of $6,441,877 last year. But last month Bullock listed Mobeetie with a decline of 49.96 percent.

Wheeler had a check this month for $4,879,677, down $430 from the $5,309,966 payment received last November. The city has garnered $45,687,333 in yearly payments to date, dipping 7.37 percent under last year's comparable period payments of $49,333,717. Wheeler recorded a 7.28 percent drop in October's report.

School trustees to meet at 5 Tuesday

Pampa Independent School Board members are expected to vote on the appointment of the 1985-86 textbook committee during a regular meeting at 5 p.m. Tuesday.

John English, assistant superintendent for educational services, is scheduled to serve as an advisor to the textbook committee, as are all eight principals and all teachers of the subject area.

In other action, the board plans to consider first reading of a policy update, receive the annual performance report for 1984-85 and receive a budget and committee reports. Possible executive sessions are scheduled to discuss personnel and litigation.

Tremors were detected in the volcano's vicinity Sunday, and a U.S. scientist said they indicated

Unemployed sell handiwork at city's special crafts fair

PITTSBURGH (AP) - It was a crafts fair with a difference: unemployed workers handy with a needle or a lathe setting out their wares and taking in enough money to help pay their bills and buy Christmas presents.

"Some people are leery of giveaways. Sometimes, people are too proud. You're less embarrassed to sell your handicrafts or wares," Marie Stankowski, 49, said from behind a long table filled with wooden butterflies, pencil holders and knickknack shelves made by her husband.

Mrs. Stankowski, whose husband, Edward, lost his steelworking job six years ago, figured the family sold about $150 worth of merchandise during the first five hours of the fair.

"It will make us a really nice Christmas," she said.

A few tables away, surrounded by stained glass ornaments, windows and lamps, Danny Hoover, 37, put her sales at about $200. She and her husband, Richard, 33, a disabled foundry worker, figured their earnings would help cover their glassmaking expenses and possibly a month's rent.

"I've been at wit's end ever since he was injured. So it's been a godsend, this show," she said. The displays were among 75 jammed into a banquet room at Soldiers & Sailors Memorial Hall on Saturday. The fair, which continued Sunday with another 75 exhibitors, featured the handiwork of the area's unemployed, who received the space at no cost and got to keep everything they earned.

"It made me more aware of how many people are unemployed and have talents that are being not utilized," said Pat Livsey, 38, a laid-off computer operator. By late Saturday afternoon, she'd sold four pillows with babies' faces for $25 apiece and received orders for five more.

"It's an excellent idea; it's the best thing I've heard. Do it again," she said.

The two-day fair was the first of its kind in this once-booming steel region, where unemployment stood at 8.6 percent in September, the latest month for which figures were available. The national unemployment rate has hovered at about 7.1 percent for several months.

City's training programs continue

By BOB HART
Pampa City Manager

We have completed the second Building Inspection school in the cross-training program for firefighters. This school dealt with building inspection procedures.

In addition to our firefighters, individuals participated in the training from Dalhart, Canyon, Childress, Canadian and Berger. Two additional schools remain under this portion of our cross-training program.

Two of our Animal Control officers, David Smith and Jackie Denham, have recently completed their training through the Texas Department of Health and are state certified Animal Control officers.

All three of the individuals in our Animal Control Department are now state certified. The training they have received will certainly help them in responding to a wide range of emergencies dealing with animals.

Our Police Department has recently completed the first phase of work designed to have our department accredited through the Commission on Accreditation for Law Enforcement Agencies.

This program is designed to help law enforcement agencies in areas of training, planning, staffing and policy procedures. We anticipate completing and submitting the necessary paper work within the fiscal year.

The Water Department is about 75 percent complete on insulating water meters in preparation for winter. Meters are insulated to prevent damage to the meters and termination of water service due to a frozen meter. We expect to be completed with this project by the first week of December.

The Pampa Chamber of Commerce is establishing a new program this year - Leadership Pampa - to train citizens for public involvement on boards of local agencies and public institutions.

Sessions will cover the workings of city government, county government, the school system, social services, public utilities, the local economy, area issues and political or legislative involvement.

The program will accept only 25 persons and will meet once a week for two hours from January to May. Application deadline is Dec. 6. Call the Chamber office at 669-3241 for details and an application.

No-pass, no-play rule faces another challenge in court

HOUSTON (AP) — A controversial rule that keeps high school students with failing grades from playing football and marching in band faces another court challenge this week that could affect the state's 1,100 school districts.

State District Judge Marsha Anthony scheduled today for the trial of a class-action lawsuit seeking to overturn the no-pass, no-play rule, approved by the Legislature as an incentive for students to improve their grades.

The lawsuit contends the rule should be thrown out because it discriminates against students by race and by handicap, said Anthony Sheppard, an attorney for the plaintiffs.

Earlier this year, Ms. Anthony found the statute unconstitutional, but that ruling was overturned by the Texas Supreme Court. The rule's opponents are seeking review of that case by the U.S. Supreme Court.

The no-pass, no-play rule prohibits students who fail any course during a six-week grading period from participating in extracurricular activities for the next six weeks.

Legal challenges first surfaced at the end of the high school baseball season last spring, when school playoffs were snarled as attorneys tried to get failing students back on teams.

The court activity was renewed this fall, when high school football players and marching band members got booted because of the no-pass, no-play rule.

Eventually, the rule benched about 15 percent of the varsity football players statewide, and junior varsity and freshman teams were hit twice as hard, according to a survey by the Texas High School Coaches Association.

Sheppard said the latest challenge "is not really a philosophical battle over whether athletics is more important than academics. This is really just a tactical attack on the way they (state officials) tried it."

About a dozen witnesses — none of them students — would testify, he said.

"These will be people with statistical data from different parts of Texas," Sheppard said.

Assistant Attorney General Kevin O'Hanlon predicted that regardless of what happens in Ms. Anthony's court, the matter would return to the Supreme Court.

"I'm sure we'll certainly appeal if we lose," he said. "And I'm certain he will if he loses."

Kennedy exhibit stalled

DALLAS (AP) — A drive to raise funds for a museum on John F. Kennedy's assassination has come to a standstill as fundraisers instead focus on educating a public reluctant to remember the tragedy through a museum.

Meanwhile, the Texas School Book Depository's sixth floor, where alleged assassin Lee Harvey Oswald perched, remains closed to curious onlookers.

To the Dallas County Historical Society, it seems most Dallas residents want the ghosts of that Nov. 22, 1963, day to remain where they are, behind the doors of the depository.

To date, the Dallas County Historical Foundation has been unsuccessful in garnering support for a film and photographic exhibit chronicling the assassination, Kennedy's life and the early 1960s.

The foundation has raised less than one-tenth of the $3 million it needs for the exhibit, which is designed to attract more than 20,000 visitors a year.

So far the moment, the 11-member foundation has curtailed its fundraising for the exhibit and is instead concentrating on a low-key promotional slide show that spells out its benefits.

"It was discouraging," said Lindalyn Adams, foundation president and leading advocate for the exhibit. "We really called a halt to it until we can move ahead in a concerted way. We're doing this on behalf of Dallas and the people who want to see this site ... because this is part of history and it always will be."

On Nov. 26, the group plans to unveil a $10,000 promotional slide show called "One November Day" that will showcase the project and its benefit to Dallas.

Curtis Meadows, chief executive of the state's largest philanthropic organization, said he respects the intentions of the exhibit planners but says he thinks the existing Kennedy Memorial, a concrete cenotaph near the assassination site, is sufficient.

"We went through such a period of worldwide castigation of the city and such a period of sadness that obviously the whole thing is tinged with sadness," said Meadows, whose uncle, Dallas oilman Algur Meadows, established the Meadows Foundation.

Ms. Adams said she stopped fund-raising efforts after contacting six philanthropic foundations and several other community organizations.

"Some of the foundation boards just felt this was a project they couldn't fund," Ms. Adams said.

Planners said their intention is not to assemble a museum of gruesome facts.

WOUNDED — A paramedic kneels next to one of the 11 persons hit by gunfire when a fight erupted Sunday morning during a dance in Amarillo. One person died and four of the other 19 hit by gunfire were reported in critical condition in an Amarillo hospital.

One killed, 10 injured in shooting at Amarillo dance

AMARILLO, Texas (AP) —

What began as a knife fight on a crowded dance floor erupted into a shooting spree that killed one man, injured 10 others and sent about 1,800 people into a panic, police say.

Guadalupe Rodriguez Lujan, 39, of Amarillo allegedly pulled a gun during a knife fight at a "battle of the bands" dance early Sunday and began firing into the crowd, Potter County Sheriff's spokeswoman Krista Keeler said.

A Potter County sheriff's deputy working security at the dance then shot and killed Lujan, Ms. Keeler said.

The deputy, whose name has not been released, was wounded in the leg but was treated and released from a local hospital, she said. The other nine people injured during the incident were taken to Amarillo hospitals early Sunday.

The fight began just after midnight at the Tri-State Fairgrounds, where about 1,800 people were attending a dance hosted by the Camarade Comercio Hispano de Amarillo, a Hispanic chamber of commerce, authorities said.

Amarillo Police Lt. Bill Kral said a scuffle involving a knife began in the north end of one of the fairground's buildings. One person in the fight pulled a gun and began shooting, he said.

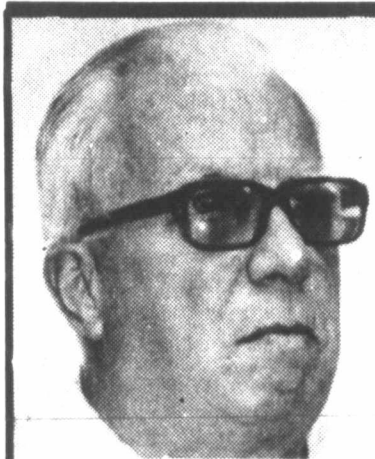

Mass confusion erupted after the gunshots, and authorities had to call in two police dogs to aid in crowd control, they said. At least four ambulances were called.

Several sheriff's deputies were in uniform working security at the dance, officials said.

Listed at Northwest Texas Hospital in Amarillo as seriously injured Sunday night were Alex Esparza, Felipe Navarette, Albert Navarette and John Sandoval, officials said.

Five others were taken to St. Anthony's Hospital and were in serious but stable condition Sunday night, hospital vice president Layne Stinnett said. They are Freddie Gavina, Raul Rodriguez, Paulette Flores, Raymond Martinez and Leonard Renteria.

For those winter evenings

Now that we have been given a taste of what Ol' Man Winter has in store for us during the months ahead, you are probably trying to find something to occupy your time during some of those chilly evenings when we will be staying inside.

If you're looking for a book to keep you occupied during several weeks of the cold winter ahead, then James Michener's "Texas" is a good possibility.

The book is colossal. The 1,096 pages are packed with information about the history of Texas. Whether the label of novel is the appropriate term for this Michener book, or several of his other books, is an interesting question. Maybe fictionalized history would be a better classification.

In this historical novel, Michener combines fact and fiction to present his story of Texas.

In telling the story, Michener uses fictional characters, historical characters, make-believe occurrences, historical facts and geographical descriptions to weave his tale.

The novel utilizes a fictitious five-member Governor's Task Force created to report on how schoolchildren and college students should learn about Texas history and what they should learn as the story moves from era or locality to another.

Beginning with the earliest ancestors of each of the Task Force members to reach the area now known as Texas, the saga spans four and a half centuries, beginning in the early 1500s when the first Spaniards — Cabeza de Vaca and Francisco Vasquez de Coronado — explored parts of it and ends with its present-day eminence as one of our most powerful states, second only to Alaska in size, second to none in natural wealth and human enterprise.

Michener uses his characters to create the framework for history. When events have developed historically, the characters become superfluous. When a major event in history occurs, you can anticipate moving on to a new cast of characters in the next segment of the book.

You never know whether an individual will reappear again. And when they do, it may be as a minor character, or children or grandchildren of the original character.

Concerning his latest novel, Michener writes: "To a storyteller, Texas is just about the ideal subject for a novel. In sheer size and geographical variety it's like five different countries. It has a colorful history."

"It has two vivid cultural backgrounds, one Mexican - Hispanic, one a varied American. It has a long border with a foreign nation which produces problems of the gravest importance. It was involved in two major wars filled with dramatic incident."

Concerning the novel the author notes: "Perhaps most interesting to a novelist is the fact that Texas was once a sovereign nation, and developed a sense of itself distinct from the rest of America. Texas is unique, and the whole education system, the newspapers, the electronic media and everything else are determined to keep it unique."

Morality in Texas is interwoven throughout the saga and in the book Michener comments: "You are more likely to be murdered in Odessa than in any other city in the nation. It and Grand Forks, North Dakota, are of comparable size, but Odessa produces twenty-nine point eight murders per thousand; Grand Forks, one. Our state officials go regularly to jail for latent offenses which do not occur with such frequency in states like Iowa and South Dakota."

Michener explains away the duplicity when one of the book's characters, the Rev. Joel Job Harrison, says: "The Texan who guns down his neighbor does not visualize himself as committing a crime. He is merely settling an argument within the accepted Texas tradition. The Texas billionaire who has three wives, three households and three families of children at the same time cannot conceive he is doing anything wrong. He is merely perpetuating the free life of the frontier, and he sees himself as being a better Texan for so doing. With no apologies, he supports his church, helping to finance its attack on immorality and loose living."

Then he summarizes: "...Texas really is a state which honors religion for more than most. Basic to everything we do is a reverence for religion, but we insist upon constructing our own theology."

In another section, the present day attitude of Texans is shown when the character Ransom Rusk deals with armadillos in what can only be described as oil-rich style.

If you read of anyone anywhere but in Texas spending $238,000 to keep armadillos off of his wife's bowling green lawn, the events would seem unbelievable. In Texas, they are just the kind of tale that has a ring of truth — especially when, after his divorce, Rusk opens the gates surrounding the bowling green to allow the critters to burrow and graze freely.

One of my favorite passages in the book is at the very end when Rusk advises his son - in - law, Wolfgang Macnab: "Never forget, son, when you represent Texas, always go first class."

China's oil frontier lures Texans

DALLAS (AP) — Communist China is one of the world's newest oil frontiers, and Texans who have helped develop oil fields across the world are now headed for the Orient in search of new fortunes, officials say.

The Chinese produced 834.5 million barrels of oil last year, 70 million fewer than Texas. But geologists believe reserves could be significant enough to double current Chinese production of about 2.4 million barrels per day by the year 2000.

In Canton, a Chinese city 80 miles northwest of Hong Kong, it is "sort of the Houston of China," said Michael D. Cannon, a Houston accountant who has worked in China for U.S. companies.

"You go to the bar at the White Swan Hotel or the China Hotel in Canton and sometimes you'd swear you're in Houston," he told The Dallas Morning News. "People wear cowboy boots and talk with Texas accents."

Canton is the big city nearest to foreign oil work in the South China Sea, and it's where Texas-based efforts are concentrated.

"The weather is just like here,"

Cannon said. "I'm sure the people from Houston feel right at home."

In Houston last February, officials of M.W. Kellogg Co. of Houston signed contracts to do business with China Petro-Chemical International Corp.

It was the latest of several China deals for Kellogg.

EVER STRIVING FOR TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Ford has better idea on airbags

The Ford Motor Co. is doing it the way it should be. It will offer a driver-side airbag as an option on one of its compact cars beginning next March. The company plans to build 1,000 cars with airbags next year and expects to sell them all.

By offering the airbag, source of so much controversy over the years, as an option, the company also clarifies another important fact that tends to be ignored. Extra safety costs more. The Ford airbag is expected to cost an extra $815, although auto-industry experts believe that if the option wins consumer acceptance and is offered more widely the price will drop over the years.

It is likely that offering airbags as an option has been delayed by the concerted campaign to make airbags mandatory on all automobiles. Converting a consumer-choice issue into a political issue tends to stork calculations, generating the widespread notion that offering optional airbags could be seen as a psychological retreat from opposition to a requirement. Ford chairman Donald Peterson, in announcing the company's plans, even felt it necessary to reiterate his opposition to a mandatory airbag law.

There's no contradiction on Peterson's part, however. It would be nice if every car could be perfectly safe for all occupants, even from a crash caused by the idiot or drunk in another car, and cost less than $5,000. In the real world that won't happen. Extra safety features cost extra money, and consumers should be free to decide how much extra they are willing to spend for increased margins of safety.

If the airbags are as good as the government and insurance-company experts say they are, they have a good chance of winning widespread acceptance—particularly if economies of scale permit prices to fall. The proper way for them to win that acceptance is with time and experience in the marketplace—not as the result of an act of coercion that forces auto prices up for everybody.

Network missed something

WASHINGTON—Television coverage of this summer's hostage crisis in Beirut obscured important issues, played into the hands of the hostage-takers, and violated essential rules of journalistic practice.

Such were the stark conclusions emerging from a recent Capitol seminar on terrorism and the press, sponsored by the Committee for Accuracy in Middle East Reporting in America. Among the participants were Sen. Malcolm Wallop (R-Wyo.), Prof. William Adams of George Washington University, Arnaud de Borchgrave of the Washington Times and Fred Barnes of The New Republic.

Of particular interest was an analysis presented by Prof. Adams examining the coverage of the crisis provided by ABC-TV. Adams' researches showed that ABC continually broadcast at face value interviews with the hostages and statements by their captors, paying little attention to necessary caution and provisos. The result was a propaganda field day for the Shiite terrorists.

In the two-week period of June 14-19, Adams notes, ABC devoted roughly seven out of every 10 minutes of its early evening newscasts to the hostage situation. Of that amount, almost two thirds—65 per cent—was given over to interviews with the hostages, their families, and their captors. For the most part, this material was presented with minimal scrutiny of the conditions under which the interviews were granted.

"Among issues that could have been raised," Adams points out, "were the following: the networks did not know the full circumstances surrounding the interviews; the hostages might have been pressured or fearful; the captors had selected those to be interviewed; the hostages selected to appear before the cameras might have been the ones most willing to support Shiite demands; the hostages might well have been subjected to subtle or overt lobbying from Mideast politics; the possibility of the Stockholm syndrome, whereby hostages come to identify with their captors; the interview might have been staged to exploit U.S. television...etc."

In ABC's broadcast, however, such questions and issues were seldom raised. In the usual case, the network simply went on the air with interviews set by the terrorists. The result was to pass along to U.S. and global viewing audiences exactly what the terrorists wanted—including numerous hostage statements about the kindness of the Amal militia, the virtue of the Shiite cause, and the iniquities of Israel.

The functional equivalent of this performance would be to air or print an unedited handout or press release from a corporation or lobby group, without prominently identifying it as such. The major media would quite properly resist doing anything of the sort. Yet in the far more serious case of the Beirut terrorists, this type of press manipulation went down with scarcely a murmur of audible protest.

This failure of the network to make the points brought up by Adams is an example of what might be called "de-contextualization"—if I may coin an ungainly but fairly accurate term. Such absence of context about the hostage takers and their conduct was equally notable in the unwillingness of the media to provide us with other background about the parties to this act of terrorism.

Amal's Nabih Berri, for instance, was presented as a moderate "good guy" vis a vis the original kidnapers—even though he himself has been charged with numerous acts of terrorism, and even though he was in physical custody of the hostages. Likewise, we were treated to lavish praise of Syria's Hafez Assad for gaining the release of the captives, without much attention to the fact that Assad is cheek-by-jowl with Berri, that he has been a major sponsor of terrorism, or that Syria controls the territory from which the hijackers operated.

A FASHION CRISIS AT THE SUMMIT

It could be much worse

Loyal Meek says it: "Isolationism is almost dead in the United States. We are now presuming to be experts in everybody else's problems—in the Mideast, in Latin America, Japan, Philippines, South Africa."

But not our own problems of crime, debt and deficit.

The United States is now isolated only from itself.

Let's talk about South Africa.

By American standards, South Africa's refusal to allow black people to vote is an abomination. But our selective indignation masks the larger issue—that in most nations of black-ruled Africa nobody votes.

Indeed, blacks in South Africa are so much better off than blacks in most neighborhood nations that 1.5 million blacks have fled Lesotho, Mozambique, Botswana and Swaziland—to find employment in South Africa.

As in our own country, outsiders inviting themselves in include countless illegals totaling another million-plus.

Things are that much better—working in the mines and agriculture and industry in South Africa—than elsewhere in the black-ruled neighbor nations.

South Africa blacks have a higher per-capita income than those in any other country in Africa. Yet, the United States and Britain's 42 Commonwealth countries—unable to solve their own problems—are presuming to order sanctions against South Africa.

Such sanctions could shut down air travel to that country, prohibit investment, end food exports, close the market for Krugerrands.

And Commonwealth countries say South Africa has six months to clean up its act—or else.

Or else what?

Or else South Africa might become another

Uganda—which won independence in 1962. But black rule in Uganda, rather than providing freedom and prosperity for blacks, has resulted in black governments which have killed 150,000 blacks, leaving their survivors desperately impoverished.

Guinea's "free government" promptly destroyed freedom of speech and press until a fifth of its population fled into exile.

And in Zimbabwe and Zaire and in the Central African Republic and Mozambique—most Africans under black rule are today worse off economically and politically than they were under colonial rule.

Black professor Walter Williams urges our nation to "look before it leaps," to look around the rest of Africa and see that "things could be worse."

Much worse.

Today in History

By The Associated Press

Today is Monday, Nov. 18, the 322nd day of 1985. There are 43 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history: On Nov. 18, 1883, the United States and Canada adopted a system of standard time zones in order to eliminate a plethora of local time zones across the continent.

On this date:

Ten years ago: A bomb exploded in a packed restaurant in London's Chelsea district, killing two people and wounding 17.

Five years ago: President-elect Ronald Reagan visited Capitol Hill, where he received pledges of cooperation from House and Senate leaders of both parties.

One year ago: Police and shopkeepers across Britain searched store shelves after animal-rights militants claimed to have injected Mars candy bars with poison to protest tooth-decay experiments on monkeys. As it turned out, the threat was a hoax.

"I have a confession to make — I'm just a PART-TIME yuppie!"

Her uncle wasn't among the quitters

The mail brought bad news the other day.

Doctor found a tumor in the lung of my wife's uncle. It is malignant. Since he already has severe emphysema, an operation is out. He has begun radiation treatment.

"Those damn cigarettes!" his daughter wrote my wife.

I mention this family business because it relates to a national event. On Nov. 21, the American Cancer Society is sponsoring another Great American Smokeout to call public attention to the serious national health problem that smoking is, and to encourage smokers who want to quit — as most do — to take a first step by abstaining for the day. Last year, according to the society, more than 5 million did so.

We've heard a lot about tobacco's toll in the 21 years since the first surgeon general's report on the subject. Despite the continuing efforts of those who profit from its consumption to deny the truth, the evidence is overwhelming and damning.

Smoking has been linked to the occurrence of numerous cancers — lung above all, but also larynx, esophagus, bladder, kidney and pancreas. Men who smoke are twice as likely to die of cancer as those who don't. Among women, who began smoking in larger numbers later than the male population, the risk is 30 percent greater and still rising.

Smoking also causes respiratory ailments such as emphysema and chronic bronchitis, heart disease and ulcers. It also contributes to afflictions most people may never have heard of, such as Buerger's disease, a degenerative condition affecting the extremities that can necessitate amputation of fingers and toes. Smoking can lead to pregnancy complications, including miscarriage, stillbirth and increased risk of "sudden infant death syndrome."

It is a contributing factor in the deaths of 320,000 Americans every year, more than perished in combat in all of World War II and seven times as many as die on the highways in a year.

Were any other product so readily available to the public known to be similarly hazardous, a responsible government would be compelled to put the purveyors out of business.

But tobacco is much too big a business for that, more than $30 billion worth a year. It is a cash crop in 16 states. That gives it immense political clout, a ready-made bipartisan bloc on Capitol Hill of 32 senators and several times as many congressmen. They can be depended upon to rebuff any challenge to the deadly business as usual, such as the recent effort to raise the federal cigarette tax from 16 to 24 cents a pack.

A point often made in tobacco's defense is the taxes it generates, more than $6 billion in annual revenues for federal and local governments.

That may be true as far as it goes, which is not nearly far enough. What society realizes from the tobacco traffic is much more than offset by the social costs of consumption. The smoking-related health bill alone comes to some $27 billion annually. There is also the economic loss from absenteeism and lowered productivity in the workplace, premature deaths and smoking-related fires. Statistics indict cigarettes as the single leading cause of fire fatalities.

It has been estimated that if the tobacco industry were made directly responsible for the full cost to society of smoking-related illness and injury, the retail price of cigarettes would jump to $3 or more a pack.

There is much more to be said on the subject, and it will be in a later report. But here is some good news, relatively speaking.

Two decades of public education have had some effect. Smoking is on the decline in the United States. According to the National Center Health for Statistics, about 35 percent of all men now smoke, down from 52 percent when the 1964 surgeon general's report was issued. For women, it is currently 29 percent, down from a peak of 34 percent.

Unfortunately, my wife's uncle, a heavy smoker throughout his adult life and deaf to all entreaties to stop, was not among the quitters.

Bits of history

In 1820, U.S. Navy Capt. Nathaniel B. Palmer discovered the frozen continent of Antarctica.

In 1865, author Samuel L. Clemens — using the pen name Mark Twain — published his story, "The Celebrated Jumping Frog of Calaveras County" in the Saturday Press of New York.

Currency exchange rates affecting everyone from tourists to businesses

WASHINGTON (AP) — An American couple who planned a dream trip to Japan a few months back with carefully budgeted savings may get an unpleasant surprise when the credit card bill arrives.

Instead of the $3,000 they expected to spend, they might find a bill for something like $3,600. And it wouldn't be due to a sushi splurge — just a change in the yen-dollar exchange rate.

An American who hoped to make a $50,000 profit by manufacturing a million dollars worth of widgets may face a loss instead — because he can't make widgets without gadgets from West Germany. And what was projected as $400,000 worth of gadgets will now cost the businessman about $440,000 — because the mark has risen against the dollar.

If the American manufacturer can save profits by getting a higher price for his widgets, the American widget-user will pay the price of shifting exchange rates.

These are made-up cases, but they illustrate the kinds of effects those currency rate changes can have over less than two months.

The rates work in two directions at the same time. Japanese tourists and West German manufacturers are finding bargains in this country, because the price of the dollar has fallen in terms of their respective currencies.

But big companies in international trade get little fun out of bargain hunting. A couple of wrong guesses on the currency markets can cost millions — and maybe the job of the currency manager.

Pressure is building for a more stable system.

Sir Robert Muldoon, former prime minister of New Zealand, says exchange rates remind him of a tennis ball at a Wimbledon final and people have begun to talk about the "yo-yo dollar."

The price of currencies is set by sellers and buyers on world markets, like the price of copper or coffee. Governments often take a hand, buying or selling to influence prices.

The Reagan administration dislikes the idea of such government interference, but on Sept. 22 it agreed with the governments of Japan, West Germany, Britain and France that they had to do more concerted trading to drive the dollar down.

The accord seems to have worked, although some think the dollar was on its way down anyway.

At a conference of experts last week, Deputy Treasury Secretary Richard A. Darman indicated that the administration is ready to go further. He spoke of moving toward the European idea of "target zones" — that is, official estimates of what price ranges ought to be.

For example, it could be agreed that a dollar should be worth between seven and eight French francs, and between 180 and 210 yen. When a currency's price drifted outside the zone, the governments would start buying and selling to bring it back.

But that could get costly. If that happened, the governments might agree on new zones — new estimates of what price is right.

So far, the main mechanism for controlling currency rates has been the economic summit.

SPACE LAW EXPERT — Howard Taubenfeld, a Southern Methodist University law professor and expert on space law, displays a book on space law that he coauthored titled "The Law Relating to Activities of Man in Space." Farm legislation tops agenda in Congress

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's future farm policy dominates Congress' agenda this week, divided mostly along partisan lines, tries to freeze or cut the record costs of agriculture subsidies.

Facing the chamber is a $117 billion, four-year policy package containing everything from price supports to food stamps and overseas food aid. But the most worrisome item for senators has been the levels of income subsidies the bill offers to wheat, corn, cotton and rice farmers.

The Agriculture Committee's Democratic minority teamed up with a few renegade Republicans to send to the full chamber a bill that would essentially freeze those income guarantees at current levels through the end of the decade.

But Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole, R-Kan., is hoping to win backing for a $7.5 billion package of cuts that would freeze the subsidies for just one year, with cuts of up to 5 percent in each of the following three years.

Dole's idea also includes a complex wheat price support program that would let farmers choose their own per-bushel subsidy level, depending on how much acreage they are willing to take out of production. The more acres idled, the higher the subsidy rate would be on the remaining wheat.

Two weeks ago, when the Senate last debated the farm bill, Dole staged a test vote on his package and won by a mostly party-line margin that was far from conclusive. Since then, he has been scrambling to sweeten the deal and attract votes from Democrats, particularly southerners.

White House officials have said a veto is likely if the bill's subsidy costs — now estimated at as much as double the $3.8 billion called for in Congress' budget outline — are not trimmed.

But Democrats insist that the record subsidies are only a reflection of bad times in rural America. They say that at a time of the worst farm depression in decades, farm programs are the last place Congress should look to save money.

Such arguments are receiving sympathy from farm-state Republicans as well, particularly the dozen or so up for re-election next year in states heavily dependent on agriculture.

Professor: 'Star Wars' technology not stopped by international treaty

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — No international agreements forbid America from developing the "Star Wars" defense system that will be debated at the Summit talks in Geneva this week, a Southern Methodist University law professor says.

Howard Taubenfeld, a space law expert, said a 1967 international treaty forbids orbiting any weapons that would kill large numbers of people, but the agreement says nothing about satellites that would destroy only military craft, such as Intercontinental Ballistics Missiles.

arms control talks that begin Wednesday between President Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev.

Soviet leaders have claimed SDI would violate the international space treaty, but Taubenfeld disagrees.

He said the 1967 treaty also limits the use of outer space to "peaceful purposes," but he said that phrase is open to interpretation.

Some believe the treaty forbids any military use of space, but Taubenfeld said, "If you say 'peaceful' is not warlike, then you can get a different definition."

Soviet officials, he said, complain about the American space program, claiming it has military objectives. But that complaint comes even though the Soviets have long conducted military research in outer space and routinely orbit spy satellites, he said.

Taubenfeld said one element of that treaty would forbid development of satellite killer weapons, devices capable of tracking down and destroying orbiting craft.

Yet, he said, the Soviets developed such a weapon some years ago and the United States is now testing a similar device.

From a legal point of view, Taubenfeld said, the United States has the right to develop a satellite-killer because the Soviets have already done so. The professor said legal tradition shows that if one party violates part of an agreement, the other party has the right to do the same.

Despite a growing body of law dealing with outer space, Taubenfeld said "space" has never been legally defined.

The U.S. Air Force defines outer space as any point 50 miles above the Earth's surface, but that description is not recognized in international law, he said.

Attacking ICBMs, perhaps the ultimate in weapons of mass destruction, travel through what most consider to be space for about half of the ballistic trajectory between launch and target.

Yet Taubenfeld said ICBMs are not part of the international treaty that forbids weapons of mass destruction in outer space.

"ICBMs were already in existence when the treaty was drawn up, so they were not included," he said.

"The most widespread treaty we have bars deploying weapons of mass destruction in space," Taubenfeld said. But he added that the American Strategic Defense Initiative, sometimes called "Star Wars," would not be considered a weapon system of "mass destruction."

The proposed SDI system would put into orbit devices that could aim and fire laser or particle beams at enemy ICBMs. The beam weapons would destroy or disable the ICBMs after they have been launched, but before the nuclear weapons could reach their targets.

"I would not think that a laser or X-ray system would be considered a weapon of mass destruction," Taubenfeld said. "It's hard for me to consider these to be absolutely illegal."

He said international law uses the World War II atomic attack on Hiroshima to define what is called "mass destruction," and the announced plans for SDI limit its use to attacks on military weapons.

The Soviet Union has made it plain that development of America's Star Wars system will be a major sticking point in the United States also maintains a fleet of spy satellites, but Taubenfeld said the American government claims that such use of space actually helps to keep peace.

"The American position is that since the Soviet Union is a closed society, observations from space are in the interests of peace," the professor said.

Both countries accuse the other of violating portions of a bilateral Anti-Ballistic Missile treaty that limits deployment of weapons that would attack invading aircraft or rockets.

EPA lists hazardous chemicals

NEW YORK (AP) — The Environmental Protection Agency has concluded that 403 highly toxic chemicals produced throughout the United States would pose potentially serious health dangers to the public in a chemical plant accident. The New York Times reported today.

At least 577 companies at thousands of locations handle these chemicals, according to an agency report obtained by the Times.

Some of these chemicals are produced and stored in the billions of pounds near populated areas, while some are so toxic that the leak of only a few pounds could injure people near a plant, the report said.

The EPA list and its associated documents, obtained by the Times from government officials, are the first major step in a federal effort to measure the potential for toxic chemical accidents.

The documents, which took months to prepare, explain how municipalities can determine whether these chemicals are handled in their midst. They also offer suggestions for reducing the chance of a major chemical accident like the one in Bhopal, India, last December that killed more than 2,000 people, or one in Institute, W. Va., Aug. 11 in which leaking chemicals injured six plant employees and over 100 area residents.

"For the first time, people will be able to identify where chemical risk exists in their communities," Lee M. Thomas, EPA administrator, told the Times.

Jury to deliberate shooting punishment

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — Jurors who have already convicted Ronald Keith Allridge of slaying a woman in a Whataburger restaurant must now decide whether to sentence him to life in prison or death.

The jury recessed Saturday after hearing prosecution testimony in the trial's punishment phase, and the proceeding is scheduled to resume today with defense witnesses.

Allridge was convicted Thursday of capital murder in the shooting death of Carla McMillen Otto, 19, as she ate a hamburger at a Whataburger restaurant March 25.

Three other men are charged in the slaying. The charges allege that the slaying occurred when the men entered the restaurant with guns drawn to rob it.

On Friday and Saturday, jurors heard prosecution testimony that the 24-year-old Allridge has confessed to a string of other robberies. Judge Charles Dickens allowed the testimony despite defense contentions that Allridge's statements were illegally obtained.

Allridge has been charged in three of the robberies.

In the trial's punishment phase, prosecutors introduced records of his conviction for the 1976 murder of an O.D. Wyatt High School student.

Roberts receives top award

Joyce Roberts, executive secretary of the Gray County Red Cross, has received the Tiffany Award for Employee Excellence from the American Red Cross. This prestigious award recognizes superior job performance among paid employees of the American Red Cross. It is the highest recognition that can be given to Red Cross paid staff. To qualify for nomination, an employee must meet certain criteria related to job performance and personal character.

Roberts was nominated by the Awards Selection Committee appointed by Paula Martin, Field Service Manager for Region 3, Territory III, and composed of volunteers headed by William W. Jean, Field Service Chairman. The committee reviewed all nominations submitted and chose Roberts as qualified for level one recognition, the Manager's Award. Martin and Jean, both of Amarillo, and two members of the selection committee were in Pampa Friday to make the presentation to Mrs. Roberts.

The eleven criteria for service excellence were given by committee members Betty C. Moody and Doris K. Teague, both of Childress: consistently performed beyond the stated job requirements; displayed a high degree of initiative, motivation and flexibility; encouraged and promoted excellence in others; provided and implemented creative solutions to complex or difficult problems; effected positive change; encouraged the involvement of volunteers with special emphasis on volunteer leaders; demonstrated continuing growth and development; performed competently under high stress or under high risk conditions; demonstrated personal commitment to the mission of the American Red Cross; exhibited exemplary personal characteristics; and performed job in a manner that reflects favor on the American Red Cross.

Martin presented Roberts with a personalized plaque. Jean reported that Roberts was chosen unanimously by the committee.

Among accomplishments mentioned in Roberts' nomination were service by Red Cross volunteers at the nursing center, tireless and persistent efforts to obtain a new swimming pool and fundraising plans and work involved to obtain financial support for the purchase of a Red Cross chapter house.

Harp duo make unbeatable combination

By PAUL PINKHAM
Staff Reviewer

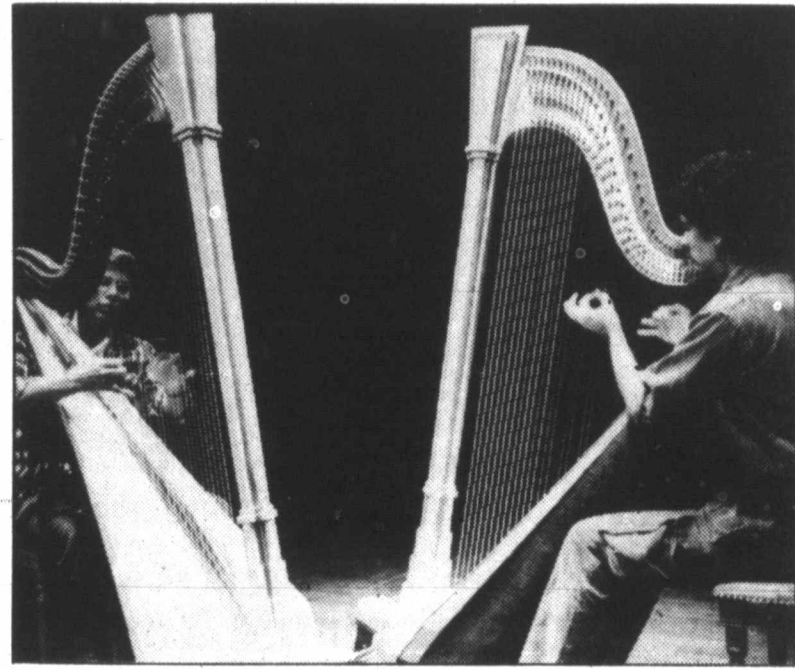

What an unbeatable combination.

With the music of a composer whose every work was inscribed "to the glory of God" and a duo of instruments associated with the angels playing it, those in attendance at Saturday night's John Escosa and Michael Rado duo harp concert must have had fleeting thoughts of having died and gone to heaven.

This was music to tilt one's head back, close one's eyes and dream to. From the hauntingly beautiful strains of J.S. Bach's harmonization "Come Sweet Death" to its segue into the uplifting "Jesus, Joy of Man's Desiring," Escosa and Rado possessed the expressiveness and technical dexterity necessary to explore both the depths and heights of Bach's soul.

Both harpists displayed proficiency in executing the difficult trills, which scare so many musicians away from baroque music, and yet are its heart and soul. And both showed smart use of dynamics, trading back and forth loud and soft phrasings and keeping the simple baroque harmonies from becoming tedious.

Escosa and Rado are forced to perform transcriptions of organ, piano or other instruments, because of the limited amount of music available for two harps. As Escosa put it during a more educational segment of the program: "If we played for you all of the music that was written for two harps, you'd already be home in bed."

Escosa and Rado rehearse before performance

Indeed, the only work performed by the duo that was written specifically for two harps was Escosa's own "trompe l'oeil," a sometimes lively, sometimes somber piece, which he composed for the Oklahoma Chapter of the American Harp Society.

But the harpists proved expert at bringing the music of other instruments to the harp and imitating the sounds of those instruments, whether it be on Handel's joyous "Concerto in B-flat Major for Organ," which sounded almost as if it were being played on the harpsichord, or Debussy's dreamy lullaby "Claire de lune," which Escosa pointed out has been recorded on virtually all instruments except tuba and bagpipe.

Escosa and Rado sounded equally at home whether performing the works of the baroque masters, the impressionists and romanticists Debussy and Ravel or the more popular works explored in the second half of the performance.

An arrangement of selections from "Oklahoma!" was not quite as inspiring as some of the other moments of the concert — there are things that not even these artists could do with the harp, among them capture the flavor of the down-home, lively melodies of that Rodgers and Hammerstein musical — but Escosa proved during a solo session after intermission that the harp does not have to be restricted to classical music.

In a medley of old jazz standards, one could quite easily have gotten the feeling that the lights were down low and one was dining with that special someone at some romantic spot — perhaps the San Francisco Hyatt, where the duo regularly performs.

He proved it again with his partner during an encore, a splendid version of Fats Waller's "Ain't Misbehavin'."

Throughout the concert, Escosa and Rado demonstrated some fine ensemble playing, on an instrument that is normally played alone. The only apparent bits of unevenness came during the middle of the Handel concerto and toward the end of the Spanish-tinged "Malaguena."

Dear Abby

Myths cast dark shadow on the gentle, useful bat

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1985 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: We live in a relatively rural area and have always delighted at the wildlife that abounds. We welcomed the bats that came to live in our old barn, and even provided bat houses to entice others. Yes, we love bats!

Abby, because of our neighbors' ignorance and fear, last Halloween we lost nearly all of the two dozen or so bats that lived on our property. Although we have tried to educate our neighbors, evil myths of Dracula and vampires persist. Some neighborhood children declared war, using shotguns, BB guns, clubs, rocks—whatever they could find—to kill the helpless, gentle creatures that hung from the rafters of our barn. Then they torched the two bat houses that we had built to encourage bats onto our property. Why? All because of misconceptions.

Abby, bats are mammals, not some kind of flying mouse. They are not dirty; they do not carry strange diseases, or get tangled up in people's hair. Bats do not go for the jugular and drink blood, and they are not blind!

They do, however, consume more insects in a single night than an electric zapper will kill in a week. They pollinate rain forests, disperse seeds and provide a rich natural fertilizer, in addition to being friendly, tame and trainable.

Although this won't help the bats we lost on Halloween, perhaps enlightening the public will help preserve bats and other wildlife in the future.

DAPHNE ZUCKER,
WESTPORT, CONN.

DEAR DAPHNE: I confess, I've never been very batty about bats, but I'm glad you wrote because your letter contains an important message: Nature put every living creature on this earth to serve a purpose, and for man to destroy these creatures indiscriminately is both cruel and senseless.

DEAR ABBY: In reference to letters about the unfairness of giving one gift to a pair of twins to share, I want to mention another version of "half-gifts" that is equally unfair.

Most children whose birthdays fall around Christmastime receive combination birthday-Christmas presents. A teen-ager can usually handle such disappointments, but it's hard on a younger child. I've known people born in November, January and February who have received "combo" gifts because their birthdays were so close to Christmas.

I realize that Christmas is a very expensive time of year, but is saving a few dollars worth a lifetime of disappointing memories for a child? I'm 32 and I still have some resentful memories.

DECEMBER BABY

DEAR D.B.: This letter should shake up an army of gift-givers who have made a practice of giving "combo-gifts." You know who you are. (I'm included.) And to those lovebirds who get married on their birthdays: Expect some friends to cheap out.

DEAR ABBY: Next year my husband and I will celebrate our 10th wedding anniversary. We never had much of a wedding the first time. We were married by the mayor in a five-minute ceremony at the courthouse.

For our 10th anniversary, we want to renew our vows at a big church wedding with our children—ages 7 and 9—in the bridal party. I never had a wedding gown, so I want to wear a white, antique lace dress, but my mom and mom-in-law say I can't wear white because white stands for purity, and I am no longer a virgin.

Is that true? And do you think I'm being foolish to try to make up for something I missed years ago?

PAT M. IN BRICK, N.J.

DEAR PAT: With all due respect to your mom and your mom-in-law, a white wedding gown does not—and never did—stand for "purity." In renewing your vows, you are entitled to have any kind of celebration you desire. Go for it!

Members sang "The Star Spangled Banner," followed by the Pledge of Allegiance to the U.S. flag led by Mrs. Mary Jones and the American's Creed by Mrs. Jeff Anderson. The President General's Message to all daughters announcing the designation of Constitution Hall in Washington, D.C., as a National Historic Landmark was read by Mrs. Art Gross.

Bears bruise Cowboys' pride; 44-0 defeat Dallas' worst-ever

IRVING, Texas (AP) — The Chicago Bears have sent a message to the rest of the National Football League: beat us if you can, but try it at the peril of losing your health and your pride.

With Richard Dent, Dan Hampton, Otis Wilson and Mike Richardson leading a brutal defense and Walter Payton running for his accustomed 132 yards, the Bears beat the Cowboys 44-0 Sunday. They had six sacks, four interceptions and limited Dallas to 171 total yards.

But the game, which the Bears won with second stringer Steve Fuller at quarterback in place of the injured Jim McMahon, did more than that.

It made the Bears 11-0, the first time since the divisions were realigned in the 1970 merger that an NFC team has been unbeaten this late in the season.

It clinched for the Bears the NFC Central title, the first time since 1970 any team has clinched this early.

And it represented the worst defeat in the illustrious 26-year history of the Cowboys, worse even than a 41-point loss to Cleveland back in 1960, when Dallas was no more than a pitiful, first-year expansion team.

"This was an old-fashioned country licking by a very good football team," said Dallas Coach Tom Landry, whose team began the day 7-3 and tied for first in the NFC East with the New York Giants.

"I'm glad we did it," said Wilson, Chicago's left outside linebacker, who twice knocked Dallas quarterback Danny White out of the game with vicious unblocked blitzes. "They were mouthing off a lot, saying we haven't played anybody yet. I guess we still haven't played anybody."

Despite the score, it was pure defense that did it, particularly in the first half, when the defense accounted 21 of the 24 points.

"Our defense took the game away and the offense picked up the pieces," Coach Mike Ditka said.

It started with 3:29 left in the first period when Chicago got the ball in Dallas territory when cornerback Richardson knocked it loose from Mike Renfro, picked it up, then had the ball knocked loose himself and Gary Fencik recovered for the Bears on the 45.

The Bears couldn't move, but Maury Buford's punt went out at the two.

On the next play, White went back to pass, Hampton lunged at the ball and tipped it high into the air. The 6-foot-5 Dent, charging from the other side, used moves honed by hours on the basketball court, leaped high, pulled it in, and stepped over the goal line to give the Bears of 7-0 lead.

"I knew I hit it good," Hampton said. "Then I turned around and saw Dent. You know he's got a 38-inch vertical jump. He just went up and got it and turned around and

"This was an old-fashioned country licking by a very good football team."

—Tom Landry

he was in the end zone."

"Hampton got up pretty high and tapped the ball," said Dent. "It was like playing basketball. I just went up and got it."

The rout was on.

Early in the second quarter, the offense took the ball 39 yards in 10 plays and Kevin Butler kicked the first of three field goals, a 44-yarder, to make it 10-0.

Then it was the defense again.

A blitzing Wilson knocked White out of the game with a concussion and on the following series he charged at White's replacement, Gary Hogeboom. Hogeboom tossed it over the middle right into the hands of Richardson, who waltzed 36 yards for the score that made it 17-0.

Then the other cornerback, Leslie Frazier intercepted Hogeboom and returned 33 yards to the Chicago 48. Fuller, who finished with nine completions in 24 attempts for 164 yards, took it in five plays later from inches away after William "The Refrigerator" Perry, the 302-pound rookie defensive tackle who's becoming a fixture in the goal line offense, lined up at tailback for the first time and carried from the two to the goal line.

In the second half, the Bears continued to run up the score despite trying not to. Wilson knocked White out of the game a second time. Butler kicked field goals of 22 and 46 yards and reserve running backs Calvin Thomas and Dennis Gentry had 16-yard touchdown runs when Ditka said all he was trying to do was run out the clock.

One thing Ditka did, however, was give Payton enough game time to get his ninth 1,000-yard season, an NFL record — he now has 1,085. He also had his sixth straight 100-yard game, one game away from a record.

The game was also the first win for Chicago over Dallas in seven games since 1971 and was a celebration of Ditka's return to Dallas, where he spent eight years as an assistant coach. It was only the second win by Landry's former pupils against him.

But it may also be known for Perry's first offensive penalty — he was called for illegal use of the hands after throwing a block, then trying to carry Payton into end zone.

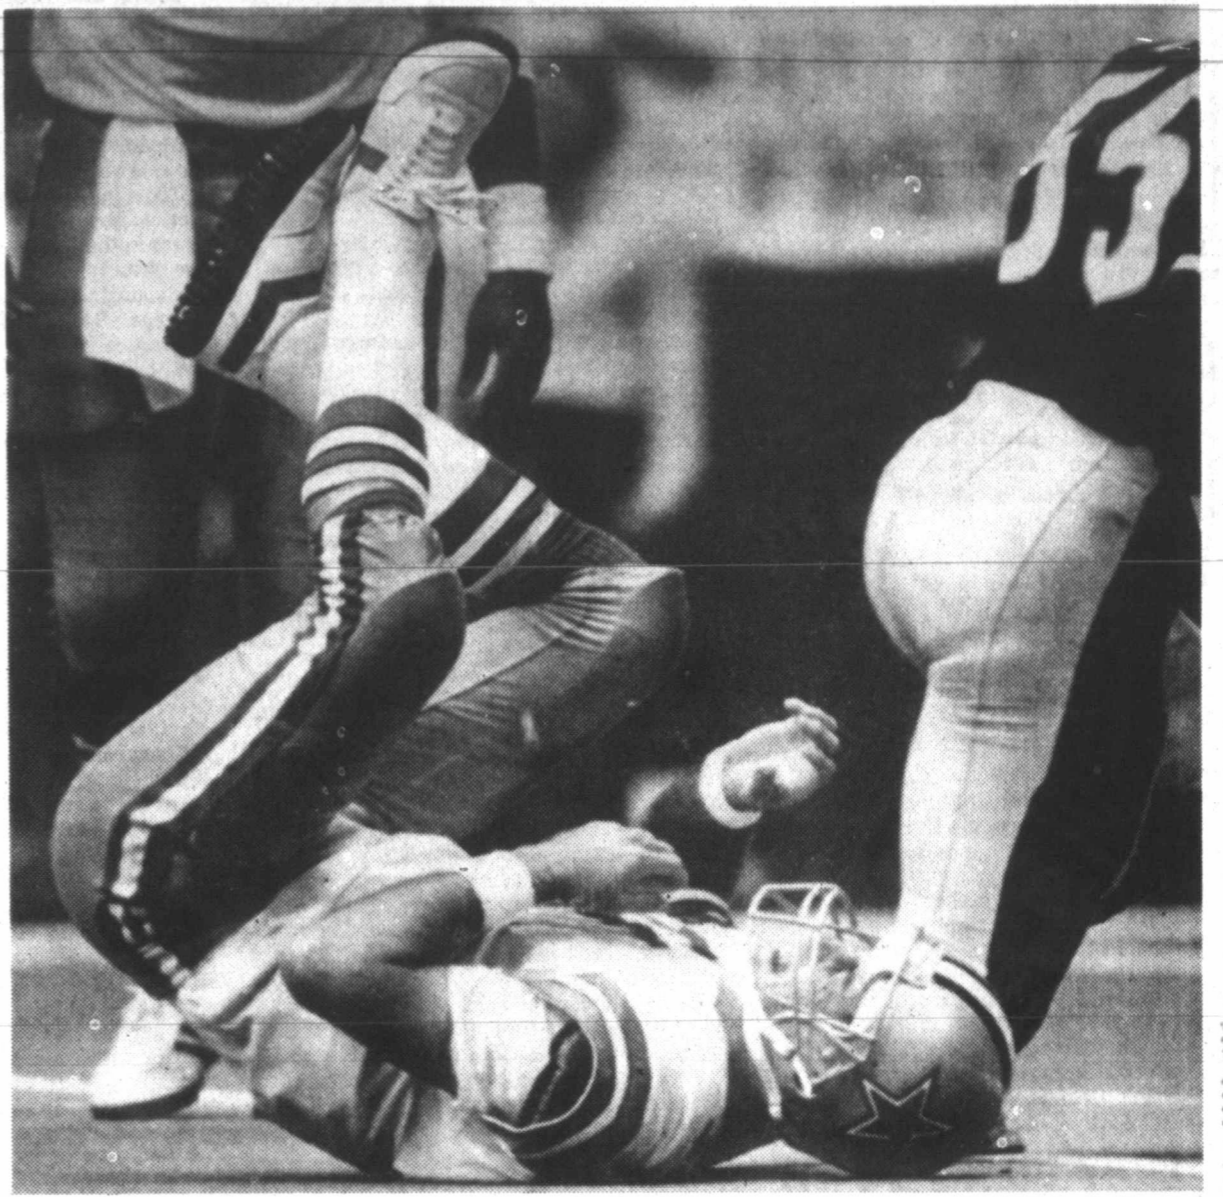

"I'm sure I've been carried into the end zone before, but never by anyone of Perry's stature," said Payton. "He said he was trying to keep the defensive players off me. I appreciate that."

"Everybody was jumping on him, I was just trying to get him in there," said Perry.

The Bears, meanwhile, continue their quest to solidify their hold on the ultimate home field advantage for the NFC title game. They now lead by three games.

With five more wins, they can also become the first NFL team to finish the regular season unbeaten since 1972, when Miami did it.

"We can't be thinking of anything like that," said defensive captain Hampton. "All we're thinking about is Atlanta next week. Once we start thinking undefeated, we're sure to get ourselves in trouble."

Chicago's team America's?

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

IRVING, Texas (AP) — On a grim, gray Texas day, America's Team — the old, vintage model — got a rude, often painful introduction to a new, streamlined model.

OK, so 308-pound Refrigerator Perry isn't streamlined. But he is surrounded by a Chicago Bears cast that plays this game with a zest and joy that is refreshing. Going 11-0 will do that for a team.

The Bears clinched the NFC Central title Sunday, beating up Dallas 44-0 — the worst defeat in Cowboy history. Even as an expansion team, going through a sad sack, winless first season, the Cowboys had avoided such humiliation.

Their matchup with Chicago had whetted the appetite. Here were the ambitious, young Bears unbeaten, striving for the excellence that Dallas has represented for so long, playing in the Cowboys' hole-in-the-roof home.

The anticipation faded fast, drubbed by a Chicago defense that simply destroyed Dallas. "An old-fashioned, country licking," was Cowboy Coach Tom Landry's simple description of the devastation. It fit.

"We kept hearing that we hadn't played anybody like them," defensive end Dan Hampton said. "They were right. We hadn't beaten anybody 44-0 all year."

When they reached for a more ambitious prey they snared it most impressively with a stifling, sack-happy defense, a proud unit that scored two touchdowns and set up a third in the first half, when the game was decided.

Call it Fridge Fever, this propensity that the Bear defense has developed for landing in the end zone. Defensive end Richard Dent scored a touchdown on an interception. So did cornerback Mike Richardson. Cornerback Leslie Frazier set up a touchdown with an interception.

And Perry?

Well, the Fridge showed up in two offensive series, once as a tailback, his debut at that position. His production was modest. Three plays, two blocks, one carry, one yard.

"I love it," he said of his offensive duties. "It's fun time for me. I know all the plays by Wednesday. There's just three or four of them. I get to block people, hit people, do different things."

He has helped make the Bears more than just a frighteningly efficient football team. They are fun to watch, a breath of fresh air in a sport that has been criticized as becoming too predictable, too stodgy.

Predictable? Not these guys. Stodgy? Never. Would Perry have found his way into the offensive backfield if George Halas were still stalking the sidelines? It's unlikely.

Will the Fridge show up there again? Almost certainly.

"Down the road," he said ominously, "I might throw a pass."

Steelers rap Houston

HOUSTON (AP) — The Pittsburgh Steelers did it to them last time, but remembering wasn't enough to help the hapless Houston Oilers.

The Steelers, who blanked the Oilers 20-0 on Sept. 22 in Pittsburgh, struck again Sunday in a 30-7 AstroDome victory with some of the same weapons they used the first time.

Gary Anderson kicked field goals of 52, 31 and 34 yards, Louis Lipps caught four passes, including a 50-yarder, and John Stallworth caught five passes for 41 yards in dissecting the Oilers for the second time.

In other games, it was: New York Jets 62, Tampa Bay 28; New England 20, Seattle 13; Denver 30, San Diego 24; Atlanta 30, Los Angeles Rams 14; San Francisco 31, Kansas City 3; Los Angeles Rams 13, Cincinnati 6; Miami 34, Indianapolis 20; Detroit 41, Minnesota 21; Cleveland 17, Buffalo 7; Green Bay 38, New Orleans 14; and Philadelphia 24, St. Louis 14.

The Oilers were so preoccupied with containing the Steelers receivers, they were flagged 13 times for 75 yards in penalties, several of them holding calls against Oiler defensive backs.

"Louis and John had big games against them the last time we played, and they were determined not to let that happen again," said Pittsburgh running back Walter Abercrombie. "When you play guys that close, you're going to get a lot of penalties."

In addition to the penalties, the Oilers also were hampered when quarterback Warren Moon was sidelined with a hip-pointer in the first quarter.

"It just got worse as I stood around," Moon said. "I had hoped to go in for a couple of series. We must forget about this. I hope I can respond to treatment."

Anderson kicked a 52-yard field goal, the third-longest of his career, and Frank Pollard ran 2 yards for a touchdown to give the Steelers a 10-0 halftime lead.

Houston's Frank Bush recovered a Pollard fumble at the Pittsburgh 21 early in the third quarter and Mike Rozier ran 15 yards for a touchdown. But the Oilers failed to seize the momentum.

Pittsburgh responded with 20 unanswered points on Anderson kicks of 31 and 34 yards and touchdown runs of 5 yards by Abercrombie and 1 yard by quarterback David Woodley.

"Of all days, this would have been the best day to play our best football," Oilers Coach Hugh Campbell said. "It may be that our players have trouble with pressure."

The pressure for the Oilers now centers around a 4-7 record and a dwindling chance of making the playoffs, while the Steelers retained the American Football Conference's Central Division lead with a 6-5 record.

Woodley thinks it's a continuation of a turnaround for the Steelers.

"I can remember after four or five ball games that we had a lot of guys who didn't seem too enthusiastic about being here,"

Woodley said. "They didn't seem to want to do the extra things, like watching extra film, that it takes to win."

"Now they're seeing that the hard work has a purpose to it."

Lipps caught six passes for 98 yards and scored two touchdowns in Pittsburgh's September victory.

Abercrombie and Pollard added a pair of 100-yard performances in Sunday's game. Both scored a touchdown as Abercrombie gained 107 yards on 23 carries and Pollard added 123 yards on 23 carries.

The Steelers haven't had double 100-yard performances since Franco Harris and Rocky Bleier did it in December of the 1976 season.

"Frank is a great blocker and I try to do the same for him," Abercrombie said.

SHOOTING PAINS

If you're a victim of sciatica, you know what "shooting pains" are all about. The sometimes excruciating pain of sciatica frequently affects the hip, thigh and back of the leg. The ankle and foot are sometimes affected, too. But that's not where the problem is.

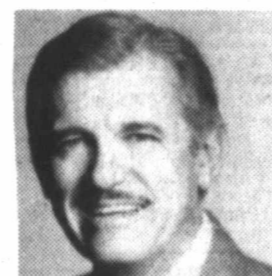

The sciatic nerve, the largest nerve in the body, extends from the lower spine to the back of the thigh and knee. Then it divides. One nerve goes down the front of the lower leg, and other goes down the back of the leg.

It's the inflammation of the sciatic nerve that causes the pain. This can be triggered by an irritated nerve root. What causes the irritation? The cause may be traced to a misalignment of the spinal column that's putting abnormal pressure on the roots of the sciatic nerves as they pass between the vertebrae.

Through x-rays and other procedures the doctor of chiropractic can locate the misaligned vertebrae. Using a gentle adjustment, he can align it properly again to help eliminate the cause and the pain.

Bears have to beat Texas

By DENNEH FREEMAN
AP Sports Writer

The Baylor Bears can step into high cotton Saturday afternoon if they can do something they haven't done in 34 years: Beat the Texas Longhorns in Austin.

The Bears, who have never won a Cotton Bowl game, will get the third chance in the school's history to do so if they can take out Texas.

The scenario was set up thanks to Texas A&M's 10-6 victory over the Arkansas Razorbacks Saturday night.

Baylor had beaten Rice 34-10 earlier in the day and left the field with the Bear band playing "The Aggie War Hymn" and the players shouting "Gig 'Em."

"I never pulled so hard for A&M to win a game in my life," said Baylor Coach Grant Teaff. "Now we can control our own destiny."

Baylor is 6-1 and Texas, a 20-0 winner over Texas Christian, is 5-1. Texas A&M is 5-1 with its only conference loss to Baylor. Arkansas is out of Cotton Bowl contention with a 5-2 SWC ledger.

If Texas beats Baylor and Texas A&M downs Texas Christian in Fort Worth, then it will set up a Thanksgiving night showdown in College Station between the Aggies and Texas for the host spot in the Cotton Bowl on New Year's Day.

In the other SWC game Saturday, Southern Methodist beat Texas Tech on Brandy Brownlee's school record, 57-yard, fourth-quarter field goal.

Texas Coach Fred Akers admitted his team might have been looking ahead to the Baylor game during Saturday's contest.

"We were a little flat and might have been looking toward the Baylor game," said Akers. "This was a big win for us even though it wasn't all that pretty. It was not one of our best efforts but it was good enough to win and I'll take that any time." Baylor and Texas collide at 12:04 p.m. in a regionally televised (Raycom) game of the week.

In other games, A&M is at TCU, Texas Tech is at Houston, and Arkansas hosts SMU.

Meanwhile, the guest team for the Cotton Bowl is also up in the air.

Top-ranked Penn State was eyeing the Cotton Bowl, but the SWC may not have a team in the Top Ten and this could turn off the Nittany Lions. Penn State, which plays Pittsburgh next Saturday, could go to the Orange Bowl and play the Big Eight champion.

The SWC is still interested in the Big Ten, and Michigan, Iowa and Ohio State are still in the picture.

"The only thing we've been thinking about all season long is winning the next game," said Teaff. "This next one happens to be for a lot."

Nittany Lions eye Orange Bowl

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
AP Football Writer

Having won over a lot of critics in the cold and rain of State College, Pa., top-ranked Penn State has opted for the warmth and sunshine of Miami — and, hopefully, a national championship — on New Year's Night.

The Nittany Lions brushed aside Notre Dame 36-6 Saturday in what was supposed to be one of their toughest tests — make that one of their few tough tests, the detractors said — of the season. Instead, it became their most lopsided triumph.

And on Sunday evening, as expected, the players expressed their preference for a trip to the Orange Bowl should they be deemed worthy. The Orange Bowl, of course, had deemed them exceptionally worthy ever since they became No. 1 in the Associated Press poll two weeks ago.

If Penn State defeats Pitt in its regular-season windup and second-ranked Nebraska beats Oklahoma, the Orange Bowl will have a rarity — a national shootout between No. 1 and No. 2 for only the seventh time in a bowl game.

Penn State replaced fourth-ranked Air Force as one of the nation's two 10-0 teams. Bowling Green, a 21-0 winner over Toledo, is the other.

While Nebraska kept pace with Penn State by crushing Kansas 56-6, third-ranked Ohio State saw its national championship hopes when it lost to Wisconsin for the fourth time in five years, 12-7. And No. 4 Air Force, which turned three interceptions off Robbie Bosco into a 21-7 lead, saw its perfect season come crashing down when No. 16 BYU rallied for a 28-21 triumph.

Elsewhere in the Top Ten, fifth-ranked Iowa held off Purdue 27-24, No. 7 Oklahoma whipped Colorado 31-0, eighth-ranked Michigan swamped Minnesota 48-7, Texas A&M nosed out No. 9 Arkansas 10-6 and No. 10 Oklahoma State shaded Missouri 21-19. Sixth-ranked Miami was idle.

In the Second Ten, No. 11 Florida nipped Kentucky 15-13, No. 14 Auburn trimmed No. 12 Georgia 24-10, No. 13 UCLA flattened Oregon State 41-0, No. 15 Florida State mauled Western Carolina 50-10, No. 17 Baylor downed Rice 34-10, No. 18 Tennessee defeated Mississippi 34-14, No. 19 LSU edged Mississippi State 17-15 and No. 20 Alabama beat Southern Mississippi 24-13.

WEMBLEY, England (AP) — After adding another title to his already highly lucrative season on the Grand Prix tennis circuit, Czechoslovakia's Ivan Lendl, the world's top-ranked player, looked ahead to more hopeful conquests.

The liability insurance crisis and its causes

EDITOR'S NOTE — Across the country, liability insurance — our paid protection from the economic ruin of lawsuits — is drying up. When it is available, its cost is leaping; some customers feel lucky to be paying premium increases of 500 to 1,000 percent. In the first story of a four-part series, "The Insurance Drought," AP national reporter Fred Bayles outlines the crisis and its causes.

By FRED BAYLES
Associated Press Writer

A tavern in Albany, N.Y., closes its doors. A Miami trucking firm goes out of business after 60 years. The mayor of a small Pennsylvania town orders police off the streets.

The common denominator in each case is a sudden and sweeping "drought" in liability insurance.

Once routinely purchased by business and government as protection against the economic ruin of lawsuits, liability insurance has become scarce and expensive. The growing list of those left out in the cold includes municipalities, professionals like engineers and architects, day-care centers and businesses ranging from large chemical companies to small manufacturers.

This crisis is more pervasive and has occurred more suddenly than the well-publicized rise in medical malpractice insurance rates that have hobbled hospitals and doctors. The drought also has different causes.

Roger Singer, Massachusetts' deputy insurance commissioner, says his office is flooded with calls from people who can't get insurance or who face rate increases of 300 percent and more.

"It's everybody from some of the biggest companies in the state to an individual chimney sweep who can't get coverage," he said.

THE CRISIS touches all society. The New Mexico Retail Liquor Dealers Association estimates 75 percent of its membership can't get or afford insurance. South Carolina officials are trying to persuade an insurer to continue coverage for hundreds of churches.

"I would expect the churches to be the better risks, and if the company starts canceling the better risks, then other companies would follow, and we would have chaos," said state Insurance Commissioner John Richards IV.

Businesses large and small are affected. Steve Scammell, risk manager for GAF Corp., a chemical company in New Jersey, expects a 400 percent increase in insurance costs.

Herbert Smoot, owner of Southern Missouri Towing, is selling his six wreckers and going out of business because of a 300 percent rate increase.

"I just flat had to shut them down," he said. "It's not feasible when it's a losing proposition."

The drought's impact is widespread. When Mission Insurance Co., a carrier in California, dropped its specialty day-care insurance, the ripples reached across the country. Hundreds of day-care centers went hunting for new policies.

In Michigan, premiums for day-care policies increased an average 400 percent. "Parents are being priced out of the market," said Bill Hankins, a spokesman for the state Department of Social Services.

IT AFFECTS everyday life. Northeast ski operators will raise the price of lift tickets a few dollars to cover the cost of higher insurance. Denver Girl Scouts may have to cancel summer camp for want of coverage.

The Chicago suburb of Mount Prospect leveled its popular toboggan run after its insurer threatened to cancel the town's policy.

The insurance drought follows the worst year in the liability insurance industry — a loss of $3.8 billion.

Insurance executives blame the red ink on the steady increase in the size and scope of lawsuits. Laws expanding the definition of liability and court interpretations of policies have left insurers with hefty judgments on claims they say they never intended to cover.

The industry points to a $15.5 million judgment in Jackson Township, N.J.

Hartford Accident and Indemnity Co. was ordered to pay damages for the slow contamination of town wells by chemicals from a landfill even though its policy excluded pollution coverage, except for "sudden and accidental" incidents.

"The courts have interpreted our contracts to such an extent that we no longer know what is covered," said Warren Levy, a spokesman for the Insurance Information Institute.

Insurers and their customers also are paying for nearly seven years of "interest rate underwriting" — a time when companies sold policies at bargain basement prices while bolstering profits through investments paying 14 percent or better.

Some say insurance rates fell below realistic levels as competition raged for the premium dollars. When interest rates dropped abruptly, insurance companies were caught between shrinking investment income and soaring legal judgments.

"The companies are not making the investment return that had helped prop up the bad underwriting," said James Chastain, a professor of insurance at Howard University's School of Business and Public Administration.

THE LOSSES have cut into insurance reserves — the money set aside to cover future claims. They have also scared away money invested by reinsurance companies, foreign carriers like Lloyd's of London that basically insure the insurance companies.

The loss of the funds means less insurance is available. With less insurance to sell, companies are more selective about whom they cover. Many now avoid high-risk customers like liquor establishments and municipalities.

New Jersey Insurance Commissioner Hazel Gluck said the insurance industry was "trying to step back from writing risks."

But consumer activists say insurance companies manufactured the crisis to boost rates and force demands for controls on liability suits.

"This is an industry rather uniquely positioned to use organizational extortion," said Ralph Nader, the consumer advocate. "They're holding the consumer and government hostage."

Businesses are also among the drought's victims. Some have curtailed growth to pay the higher premiums. Others have simply closed. Leonard Brothers Trucking Co., started 60 years ago in Miami, blamed the lack of insurance when it closed this year.

"Everybody has to cut expansions," said Tim Lyons, executive director of the Hawaii

Pest Control Association. "Some marginal companies are going out of business because they won't be able to afford the insurance and some can't even get it."

The liquor business has been hard hit. Many courts now hold bars responsible for customers' actions. An Alabama dinner theater that served alcohol to a minor before a fatal car crash was ordered to pay $10 million damages.

Alabama Insurance Commissioner Tharpe Forrester said bars across the state could no longer find insurance.

"I'm not talking about honky-tonks and saloons, I'm talking about very fine restaurants," he said.

John DiNuzzo, owner of Skinflint's, an Albany, N.Y., bar, closed his 5-year-old business after his insurance bill went from $10,000 to more than $100,000. Sixteen people lost their jobs.

State and local governments also find it hard to get coverage.

"We find, quite frankly, that we are being orphaned by the insurance industry," said Bill Dressel of the New Jersey League of Municipalities. Dressel said 30 percent of the state's 567 municipalities were searching for coverage.

WHEN INSURANCE is available, it's expensive. Newport Beach, Calif., saw rates go from $43,595 last year to $390,665 this year. In Scottsdale, Ariz., insurance for the school district climbed from $117,500 for $11 million in coverage to $658,000 for $6 million of coverage over the past two years. The change will mean higher taxes.

A U.S. Conference of Mayors study recently reported that half of 40 communities polled said their insurance premiums doubled over the past two years.

"Cities say they are being squeezed financially in their attempts to insure against liability in countless areas — property damage, police, fire and errors of omissions, among others," the study said.

The crisis has forced elected officials to make hard choices. Madison, Ind., closed the swimming pool after the city lost its insurance. When Sykesville, Md., population 2,000, lost liability insurance for its officials this summer, the president of the town council resigned. He returned to office when insurance was found.

SOME RESPOND to the crisis by doing without insurance. Bill Martin of the Texas Municipal League said 100 cities in his state had "gone bare."

"If they are hit with a large claim they would be forced to go to the taxpayers for relief," he said.

Others have banded together. Municipal leagues in 11 states now have liability insurance pools.
