Reagan leads mourners at soldiers' memorial service

FORT CAMPBELL, Ky. (AP) — President Reagan, saying "we grieve as a nation, together," led his military community today in mourning the deaths of 248 members of the 101st Airborne Division killed in an aircraft crash as they returned home from peacekeeping duties in the Middle East.

Reagan and his wife, Nancy, flew here from Washington to attend a memorial service honoring the 245 men and three women of the "Screaming Eagles" who died along with eight aircraft crew members Thursday in the crash of a chartered DC-8 in Gander, Newfoundland.

"Some people think of members of the military as only warriors, fierce in their martial expertise," Reagan said. "But the men and women we mourn today were peacemakers.

"They were there to protect life and preserve peace, to act as a force for stability and hope and trust.

"Their commitment was as strong as their purpose was pure," the president said. "And they were proud. They had a rendezvous with destiny, and a potential they never failed to meet."

The troops were killed as they returned home for Christmas after six months' duty with peacekeeping forces in the Sinai desert.

"You do not grieve alone," Reagan told families and friends of the victims.

"We grieve as a nation, together, as together we say goodbye to those who died in the service of their country," he added.

"In life they were our heroes; in death our darlings," he said.

Offering a prayer, the president said, "Receive, O Lord, into your heavenly kingdom the men and women of the 101st Airborne, the men and women of the great and fabled Screaming Eagles:

"They must be singing now, in their joy, flying higher than mere man can fly, as flights of angels take them to their rest."

On Sunday, about 1,000 mourners, many weeping, gathered in the nearby town of Clarksville, Tenn., for an interdenominational service for the victims.

Sobbing women and men in uniform filled the church.

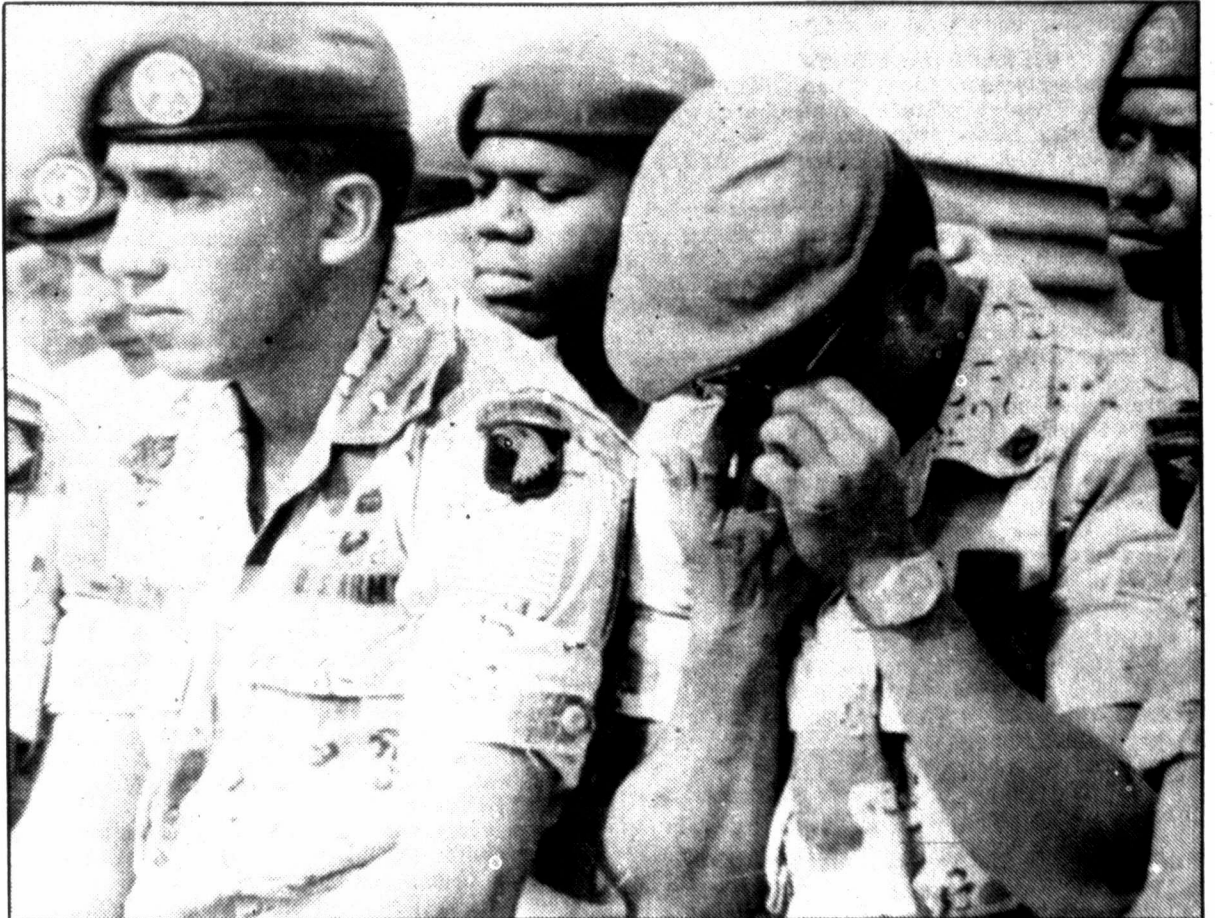

"The last song to be sung, the last sound to ring down through the corridor of this universe, is not going to be a funeral dirge and it's not going to be the nauseating sound of crashing of jets, it's going to be a hallelujah chorus," the Rev. George Gracey of the First Presbyterian Church of Clarksville said after reading the 23rd Psalm.

Spec. John Bishop said that he lost his best friend, Scott Gerdes, but that the community's drawing together has helped him with his personal grief.

"Seeing the president, the chief of staffs, all our chain of command, all the billboards outside — it's helping somewhat," Bishop said.

The president's visit highlights the outpouring of concern from the local community as well as the rest of the nation for the families of the victims.

Food and money were being collected to assist the families of the dead soldiers, a base spokesman said.

School trustees will meet with Band Parents president

By PAUL PINKHAM
Staff Writer

Pride of Pampa Band Parents Club members will get their wish at 5 p.m. Tuesday when their president, Danny Courtney, meets with the Pampa Independent School Board.

The club has sought a meeting with the school board since Nov. 15, when members voted unanimously to request a meeting with the board to discuss the band's ineligibility at state marching competition in Austin. That decision came too late to appear on the board's Nov. 19 agenda, in which the board approved a five-point statement, including in the statement that the board considered its investigation of the matter closed.

School officials have pointed out and school records indicate that, until now, the club never formally requested a meeting or spoke up at meetings they attended, doing so only through the media.

The band was disqualified from the state contest and stripped of its Division I ranking earned in Vernon after school officials discovered that an ineligible student under the state's no pass, no play law marched at Vernon and notified the UIL. Band parents obtained restraining orders in Pampa and Austin, enabling the band to march in Austin, but both suits were dropped upon the band's return and the club's original request to meet with the board.

Courney said he will pose several questions to the board, including whether ineligible students can participate in civic functions such as the Christmas parade and several questions related to UIL and district policy and district grading procedures.

Band students declared ineligible under the no pass, no play rule were not permitted to march in the city's Christmas parade.

In other action, the board plans to consider a payroll procedure change recommended by Business Manager Jerry Haralson. Haralson said currently the district issues paychecks on the last day of each month and posts them on the general ledger on the first day of the following month, causing reporting problems to the Internal Revenue Service, Texas Teacher Retirement System, federal government and Texas Employment Commission.

Haralson recommends posting paychecks in the month they are earned. In a memorandum to Supt. James Trusty, Haralson said he realized this will mean school employees will be reporting 13 months worth of earnings to the IRS for 1985 only but he added the consequences of not correcting the payroll post date may be more detrimental with regard to reporting.

The board also plans to:

- open bids on numerous instructional furniture and equipment items.
- review requests from Dusty A. Lay, collections supervisor for the Gray County Appraisal District, that penalty and interest be waived for Gerald A. Baumgartner and William Hallerberg of SZH Aviation because of office errors.

- approve the 1984-85 audit.
- approve a list of teacher appraisers for the 1985-86 school year, as well as teacher appraisal procedures presented to the board Dec. 3 by John English, assistant superintendent for instruction.
- consider a budget report by Haralson and other administrative and committee reports.
- meet in a possible executive session to discuss employment, a personnel matter.

Investigators report on takeoff of doomed charter flight

GANDER, Newfoundland (AP) — The chartered DC-8 carrying 248 U.S. soldiers and eight crew members to their deaths reached an adequate speed for takeoff, the suddenly veered right and lost speed steadily until it crashed, Canadian investigators said today.

Peter Boag, investigator-in-charge for the Canadian Aviation Safety Board, told a news conference that analysis of the Arrow Air plane's flight data recorder showed the four-engine aircraft reached a peak speed of 190 mph during the one minute and 40 seconds that elapsed from the time it began rolling down the runway until the crash.

Flight arrangements we5 003t-141 military transports to take the first 20 flag-draped aluminum transfer cases to Dover Air Force Base in Delaware this afternoon.

Boag said the flight data recorder provided more detail on what happened during takeoff, but did not explain why.

"It will help us in determining the cause, but certainly at this stage it doesn't tell us the cause," he said.

The investigator said he had not pinned down exactly at what point during the brief flight the jet began slowing down and changing direction about 20 degrees to the right of its normal path. He also said he was not yet sure what peak altitude was achieved before the plane fell to a rocky hillside half a mile from the runway's end.

Boag said his 40-man team began was still pulling important pieces of the shattered aircraft from ankle-deep snow to be sent to Ottawa.

Hundreds in Gander attended a Sunday memorial service where a lone bugler sounded "The Last Post" for the dead soldiers.

At Fort Campbell today, President and Mrs. Reagan were attending a memorial service and meeting with the victims' families, many of whom first learned of the disaster as they assembled to give their loved ones a brass-band welcome home for Christmas.

Maj. Gen. John S. Crosby said the first plane loads today, each transport bearing 10 transfer cases, were being sent off with "an appropriate ceremony to honor all the soldiers who died."

Officials said the transfers are to end Wednesday.

Once in Dover, the remains will be examined by specialists at the Armed Forces Institute of Pathology, who will conduct autopsies under the supervision of Canadian investigators.

Boag said the post mortems will help identify the most charred and disfigured corpses and establish exactly how, and perhaps why, the plane crashed in the rocky hills by Gander International Airport.

"It's a very difficult investigation, because of the catastrophic destruction of the aircraft, because there are no survivors," Boag said.

From freshly fallen snow, investigators moved key parts of the shredded and burned-out plane.

Police chief in Canadian resigns

CANADIAN — The Canadian City Council will meet tonight to select a temporary replacement for former police chief Bill Guinn, who resigned Friday.

Guinn, who's been chief since 1983, begins his new job as Ochiltree County Deputy Sheriff. His wife, Judy, is a dispatcher there.

Canadian City manager Jody Butler said he plans to appoint police Sgt. Bob Stewart as acting police chief, subject to council approval.

"We're going to start advertizing for a new chief," he said. "We're looking at 60 to 60 days to fill the position."

Butler added that the city is already getting inquiries about the position.

Guinn handed in his resignation Dec. 6, citing "personal reasons" for his departure.

His wife's job 35 miles away in Perryton is one reason for his resignation.

"My wife has been commuting back and forth between here and Perryton everyday," he said.

Guinn stressed that he did not leave because of "adverse conditions."

"I hate to leave the people," he said. "This was one of the hardest decisions I ever had to make."

"I feel we did the best job we could for the size of department we had," he said. "The police department, Hemphill County sheriff's office and the highway patrol share the office. It's a fabulous relationship."

Iowan to head city's downtown revitalization

By LARRY HOLLIS
Staff Writer

While attending college in Iowa, Lyn Moulton had worked at a ladies' apparel shop in a "dying downtown area" and gained some hard retail experience.

"Every day was a heartbreak," she said.

Now she has an opportunity to help revive some economic strength for Pampa's downtown area and for the community as a whole.

Moulton was recently hired to be the Main Street Program manager for Pampa under a new program implemented in the city during the next three years.

This past weekend she was in the city finding a place to live and becoming acquainted with the city and some of its residents. She will be moving to the city at the end of the month to begin her new job.

Moulton will be moving to the Texas Panhandle from Waterloo, Iowa. She is a graduate of the University of Iowa with a bachelor of arts degree in history, with an emphasis in historical restoration.

This past summer she completed her teaching certification requirements in secondary social studies at the University of Northern Iowa.

But instead of going into teaching, she will be working on a program designed to revitalize Pampa's downtown area and to improve the economic climate for the city as a whole.

Moulton said she was visiting some friends in Georgetown when she heard about the Main Street Program in Texas. Since she has had some experience in historical restoration, including getting a building listed on the National Register, and has had an interest in retail development, she inquired about the program and applied for positions.

A series of interviews subsequently led to her employment here.

Moulton said she was looking forward to her work "because there's so many aspects of different disciplines you can use."

She said her job will involve history, retail experience, politics, building renovation and restoration and "working with people."

The Main Street Project "is more than just restoration," however, she stressed. "That's only an aspect of it."

The program also aims at getting merchants to look at their stores objectively for needed changes, whether it's renovating their buildings, changing their forms of displays, developing new merchandising programs, analyzing pricing techniques or observing other aspects that will improve marketing situations, she explained.

The project also stresses a team effort among merchants to voluntarily work together to find means of improving their economic base, Moulton stated.

In short, the Main Street Project is designed "to get the cash registers ringing more often," she said.

The program is initiated and carried out on a volunteer basis by merchants, city officials, the Chamber of Commerce, industrial leaders and others willing to get self-involved in a cooperative effort for the betterment of the city, Moulton explained.

"It's not government directed at all," she emphasized. "It's not a hand-out program, not a federal giveaway."

There are no state or federal funds involved in the operation of the program. Instead, the program has been supported by industries, businesses and individuals concerned with deteriorating economic bases in cities. Locally, the financial institutions have formed a low interest loan fund for merchants in the program, with the merchants paying back the loans.

Crime rate greater in cities

WASHINGTON (AP) - City-dwellers are about twice as likely as their suburban counterparts to become crime victims, according to a Justice Department analysis of 1983 crime reports.

Suburban residents also were more likely to be victims of violent crime in the nearest city than city dwellers were to be victims of such crimes in the nearby suburbs, the Bureau of Justice Statistics said in a survey released Sunday.

Twelve percent of violent crimes against suburbanites in 1983 happened in the nearest city, while only 5 percent of violent crimes committed in the suburbs involved people from nearby cities.

For inhabitants of cities with a million or more people, there were 48.2 violent crimes per 1,000 residents, the bureau said. In contrast, the rate for people living in rural areas was about 22.4 violent crimes per thousand people in 1983, the most recent year for which an in-depth breakdown of crime figures was available.

The findings were based on National Crime Survey interviews, which are conducted twice a year with about 128,000 randomly selected people 12 years old and above.

Per capita crime rates were not available for individual cities, suburbs or rural communities, the bureau said.

For residents of cities with more than 500,000 people, but fewer than 1 million, the report said, there were 104.5 thefts per thousand. For residents of non-metropolitan areas, there were 57.7 thefts per thousand.

The theft rate for residents of cities of a million or more people was 90.4 per thousand.

City uses new material on streets

By BOB HART
Pampa City Manager

As winter time sets in, our attention shifts to the work of the Street Department, particularly the sanding of the streets.

The Street Department has changed street sanding material this year. Rather than using sand, we are using crushed rock dust.

We used the crushed rock dust last week for the first time and found that it spreads more evenly, is easier to handle and, most importantly, does not freeze and retain moisture like sand. Therefore, we are able to use less material and do a more effective job in preventing sliding at intersections.

During the first snow we had fewer accidents than the Police Department anticipated.

We are still waiting to have a new "sander bar" installed on the truck which will help improve our response time in bad weather. I was very pleased with the response based upon the first storm.

Typically, the Police Department notifies Street Supt. Gene Winegeart when crews will be needed, based upon street and storm conditions. The sanding crew will begin work at about 5:30 a.m. so that the sand has been applied and the streets are ready to travel by 7:30 a.m.

We have seven persons in the Street Department who respond on such a schedule. All of them deserve a thank-you for their work. These individuals are Alfred Oxley, Roy McWhirt, Floyd Smith, Dean Bliss, Bobby Phillips, Phillip

Smith and Doug Brown.

We had a number of individuals involved in building a float to enter in the Christmas parade last week. It certainly helped to get me in a Christmas spirit.

Kathy Beck originated the idea to construct a float on behalf of the City of Pampa organization. Kathy, along with Jackie Harper, Wendell Forster, J. D. and Margarette Ray, Larry and Bonnie Simpson and Dennis Crotts, spent about 24 hours over four evenings constructing the float.

Naturally, we were thrilled when they received first place designation in the Commercial Division. The plaque is now proudly hung in the city offices.

And we appreciate their fine work and interest in promoting the Christmas spirit in Pampa.

Profit stressed over safety, half of polled pilots say

DALLAS (AP) — Of more than 1,200 U.S. passenger pilots recently surveyed, almost half said they feel aircraft maintenance and the quality of new pilots have declined since the airline industry was deregulated, the Dallas Times Herald reported Sunday.

Only 1 in 70 saw increased safety result from deregulation, instituted by the federal government in 1978 to promote competition within the industry, and five of eight, or 63.7 percent, said deregulation has made air travel more dangerous, the newspaper said in a copyright story.

Almost two-thirds said they believe deregulation has made flying more dangerous, and one-third said the quality of air traffic control has worsened, the newspaper said.

In written comments and in follow-up interviews to the mailed questionnaire, pilots stressed that flying is still the safest way to travel and that passengers need not fear for their lives when boarding an airplane. But most expressed concerns about developing trends, the Times Herald reported.

The pilots all fly for passenger airlines and hold airline transport certificates. The survey posed a range of questions about the airline industry and safety issues.

The newspaper said more than a third of the questionnaires were returned, with 1,212 pilots listing their primary occupation as flying for passenger airlines, including charter services.

Although only one in five rated the air traffic control system better today than before the 1981 firing of thousands of striking controllers, nearly half the pilots rated the system "about the same." Some 31 percent said they believe the system is less safe today.

A theme that was mentioned repeatedly in the replies, the newspaper said, was that the proliferation of low-cost "upstart" airlines had filled the skies with planes of questionable maintenance and pilots with questionable skills.

A number of pilots said they would not allow their families to fly on some newer airlines.

"They're trimming back everything imaginable, maintenance and personnel," said Jerry Thompson, a Fort Worth-based captain for Eastern Airlines, in a common criticism of newer carriers.

"The management coming up is not so aviation-oriented, just looking at the bottom line. They don't know the down-line effects of cutting back maintenance, and that has caused decay in the whole system."

Warren Bayless, a New Jersey-based DC-9 pilot for a major carrier, said he could see the effects of cost-cutting measures in his own company.

"Although I'm never forced to take a plane I don't like, I see more inclination to nurse planes along and get them somewhere else. Let's face it. It's costly to keep maintenance up to the top level. If a company can postpone a cost, it's economically attractive to do that."

A Mississippi-based pilot with more than 10 years experience said, "Although competition is a good thing, I think it has taken emphasis away from safety and efficiently moving passengers from one place to another, and has wrongly placed the emphasis on making a buck."

The Air Line Pilots Association and the Federal Aviation Administration declined to comment on the survey, the Times Herald said.

But the Air Transport Association, a major industry lobbying group, said the survey's results were invalid because those pilots who have complaints about safety are more likely to respond than those who believe the system is operating properly.

Thomas Tripp, a transport association spokesman, said the results were irrelevant because the industry's safety record has actually improved since deregulation.

"You can't debate safety on the grounds of the pilots' feelings. You've got to have the facts, something to make a point, and I'm not aware that they do," Tripp said.

Stores in El Paso putting known shoplifters on notice

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — Several major department stores are presenting arrested shoplifters with written notices informing them they are no longer welcome — and could face arrest for simply walking in the front door.

Using provisions of the state's criminal trespass law, the Popular Department Store has compiled an unwelcome list of hundreds of people, including employees dismissed for theft, said Jorge Hernandez, security director for the three-store chain.

"We use it almost every day. It's a store policy and there have been several convictions," Hernandez said. "It's the law."

The misdemeanor criminal trespass charge carries a maximum penalty of six months in jail and a $1,000 fine.

Police Lt. Gary White, a supervisor in the district covering the city's largest mall, said use of the statute is widespread in this far West Texas city, especially during the Christmas shopping season.

"They do it quite a bit at Cielo Vista Mall and at the discount houses," White said. "They take the shoplifters' pictures and advise them they are not welcome back in the store again."

"When they come back in the store and they have been advised, then we press charges on criminal trespass, even if they are not shoplifting," he said. "It's helped us make cases against people who were giving out false information."

Some outlets, including Dillard department stores, use a modified version of the tactic. Security director Shirley Perdue said her store gives offenders verbal notices, does not take pictures and rarely calls police if the suspects return.

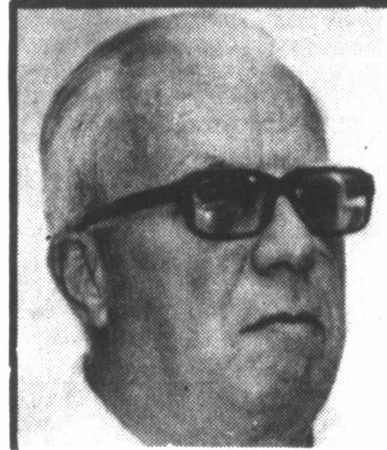

Instead, Dillard's security staff members remind the suspects of the previous warnings about criminal trespass and escort them out, she said.

A security worker at Sears, Roebuck & Co. said his store's written notice to shoplifting suspects is effective in keeping them out "99 percent of time."

The worker, who asked not to be identified, told the Dallas Morning News that Sears' Southwestern district stores use criminal trespass laws in New Mexico and Arizona in the same way as they use the Texas law in El Paso, the employees said.

Criminal trespass is not the only law being used in a new way to fend off unwelcome shoppers and known thieves.

"We had a person go into an employees' lounge, a restricted area, and take a purse," White said.

Winter pictures are great

What skier hasn't marveled at the ghostly trees dressed in hoarfrost you frequently find at the top of a ski lift?

And who, after an ice storm, can help but marvel at the heavily laden, diamond-studded trees?

There are vagabond's riches that come with the harshness of the season.

Rather than put your camera away for winter and just sit by the fire waiting for spring why not go prospecting for some of that vagabond wealth? You might be delighted with what you find!

I was reminded of the joy of winter pictures when I looked at the front page of Sunday's paper and saw the excellent nighttime picture of Christmas lights on trees at Citizens Bank and Trust shortly before sitting down at a blank computer screen to write this column.

There are some precautions to take when photographing during the cold weather.

Some of the following suggestions I first learned from other photographers, while others I learned from bitter experience while spending a number of years as a photographer in the bitter cold winters of northern Ohio. Believe me, when it is your job, you learn how to take pictures in cold weather.

First and foremost, you must take care to dress warmly. In our area where winter temperatures can and have dipped well below zero while those strong north winds howl, the wind chill factor can drop dangerously low!

If you are going out in the cold consider the layer system, two pairs of trousers, the outer pair water- and wind- proof if possible. Good boots. A warm sweater or two underneath a good parka. Good heavy mittens and a warm head covering.

Keep the mittens attached to your jacket with a string because you'll be taking them off frequently to get at the camera controls. Buy a second pair of gloves, preferably silk, but if you can't get those try racquetball gloves, that you can wear underneath the insulated mittens. They're thin enough to give you a feel of the camera controls and will still keep your hands warm while operating the camera.

Now that you're warm let's consider your camera equipment. During extreme cold it's a good idea to cover with black electrical tape any parts of the camera that might touch your face. Just be careful not to put the tape where it might interfere with the camera controls. The tape will help prevent the metal part of your camera from sticking to your face!

Actually, you shouldn't let the camera get that cold. Until you use it, keep it inside your parka where body heat will keep it relatively warm. Keep spare lenses and film in the pockets and wrap them in plastic sandwich bags. Carry a larger plastic bag for your camera too.

Before you go inside any warm building after being out in the cold make sure that your camera, lenses and film are wrapped tightly in the plastic bag. Squeeze out as much air as possible, otherwise humidity will immediately fog up lenses, film and camera and it will take an hour or more for it to go away. Do not remove anything from the bags until they have come up to room temperature. If you plan on going out to shoot again it's best to leave the camera, lenses and film outside in the cold.

Most of today's cameras have lubricants that work in cold weather so you normally won't have to worry about the camera operation. Focusing might get a little stiff but that's normal. You must, however, worry about both film and batteries in cold weather.

Film gets very brittle. Do not use a motor drive with a camera that is to be left out in the cold for a long period of time. You might get away with it if you keep your camera inside your jacket except for short shooting bursts, but you still risk static electricity caused by film moving rapidly past the felt light trap in the film cassette during extreme cold.

Batteries lose their charge quickly in the cold. Carry an extra set in a plastic bag in your pocket. If your camera batteries get sluggish you can exchange these for those in your pocket. When they get warm again the life in the exchanged batteries should come back.

A belated thanks to city hall.

Shortly after I wrote about the problems with some of the city's traffic control lights several weeks ago, someone at city hall decided to remove the abandoned lights and poles at the intersection of West Foster and Somerville. Apparently the parts from this system were used to solve the timing problem with the lights at the intersection of West Francis and North Frost.

These lights, near the courthouse, had been causing more problems than they were solving — sometimes taking as much as seven minutes to change from red to green for traffic on North Frost. For several weeks they have been working properly, without any delay of traffic.

While I am still not sure that traffic lights are necessary at Francis and Frost, I am thankful that I can now travel North Frost without having to take my lunch with me to eat during the long delays.

I realize it is only my personal opinion, but with more and more traffic congestion in newer parts of town, couldn't some of the traffic lights at intersections which have less traffic flow than in past years be moved to the more heavily traveled thoroughfares.

In addition to the lights at Frost and Francis, are some of the lights on Ballard really necessary?

Board gives tentative approval to isolating some AIDS victims

AUSTIN (AP) — Over the opposition of gay organizations, the Texas Board of Health has given tentative approval to a plan that would allow the "isolation or separation" of AIDS victims who refuse to curtail sexual activity or drug use that could spread the disease.

"We have a moral obligation to protect the people of Texas against a disease that is 100 percent fatal," said board member Dr. Barry Cunningham, a Round Rock dentist.

The board voted 12-5 Saturday to publish the proposed rule and take public comment. A hearing was set in Austin for Jan. 13.

The proposal was sparked by a Houston case in which an AIDS victim refused to stop working as a prostitute. The man later died.

"This does not deal with the average AIDS patient. This is not aimed at a disease, it is aimed at individuals who have the disease and might be incorrigible in a public health way," said state Health Commissioner Dr. Robert Bernstein.

The quarantine power would be used only as a "last resort," Bernstein said. Local health officials would have to get the state commissioner's approval to isolate an AIDS victim.

The rule would add AIDS to the list of diseases for which a Texan can be quarantined.

Bernstein said "isolation or separation" is a more appropriate term than "quarantine," but the applicable state law uses "quarantine."

Acquired immune deficiency syndrome cripples the body's immune system, leaving the victim vulnerable to infections and other diseases, including cancers.

Researchers say AIDS is most likely to strike homosexuals, abusers of injectable drugs and hemophiliacs. It is spread by sexual contact, sharing of contaminated needles and contaminated blood transfusions, but not by casual contact.

Several health professionals spoke against the proposal.

"The law is clearly outdated and inappropriate," said Dr. Philip Richardson.

EVER STRIVING FOR TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Coal may regain reign as king

King coal may be back yet on the throne as American's major fuel. Scientists in Indianapolis, Carbondale, Ill., and San Antonio are working at it and believe they are on the track to a practical way of making soft coal into a clean and efficient fuel.

James Swisher, director of the project at Southern Illinois University, says, "We're grinding the coal to a very fine size and cleaning out the ash-building ingredients."

Seven faculty members and several graduate students are working on the project at Carbondale. "It can be done," said Swisher. "The only question is cost..." However, it is reported the researchers are already burning the purified coal slurry in diesel-type engines. The question is, can it be done without excessive wear on the engine.

As to cost, they have evidence that diesel fuel would cost $6 to provide a million British thermal units of energy, while the coal could provide the same volume of energy for $4. These results, they claim, could be attained by the period of 1995 to 2010.

General Motors is said to be financing the research. GM, of course, is not in the coal-mining business, but is vitally interested in the locomotive business.

This project is of the very type often labeled "The American Way." A flaw in a natural resource is discovered. The best technical brains, usually found in our universities, are drafted to mend the flaw.

In doing so, other flaws are revealed. For example, would grinding and purifying the coal overcome the acid rain problem? It might. The researchers will know in due time.

A whole new industry, pulverizing and purifying soft coal may be a-borning. This is good news for the coal industry and perhaps to the railroads and other industries which make liberal use of fuel.

Televise the U.S. Senate

When the flyer for cable service arrived in the mail, I knew I shouldn't look. Life is too short for watching TV. And most of the programming would be wasted. Just $9.95 a month would bring into my home countless things I would never watch, except during a blizzard - rock videos, round-the-clock sports, continuous weather, country music. The cable firm could have thrown in free installation and an all-Bogart channel and it still wouldn't sell me.

But in this offer, the cable operator had played his ace: the Cable Satellite Public Affairs Network, known as C-Span. For the modest monthly fee, I could ignore everything else and watch my Congress in action nearly every day. Committee hearings and floor debates on everything from offshore fishing rights to ambient air quality standards could be mine at the touch of a button.

There's just one hitch. Though the House of Representatives has allowed TV cameras into its chamber since 1979, the world's greatest deliberative body still conducts the public's business shielded from view. Anyone who wants to watch the Senate perform has to go to Washington. To the average citizen, its proceedings are no more accessible than the Politburo's.

But that may change. The chief obstacle to a televised Senate, Sen. Russell Long of Louisiana, will be removed at the end of next year by voluntary retirement. And a recent C-Span poll found 67 members in favor of letting the cameras roll.

Still, there are doubts. Democrat Sen. James Exon of Nebraska told the Wall Street Journal that if the cameras show what really takes place during most floor debates - which is two or three members alternating at delivering monologues to an otherwise empty chamber - "we'd be exposing ourselves to unnecessary ridicule."

David Boren, an Oklahoma Democrat, scoffs that "most of what the Senate is doing is not on the Senate floor. It's in the committees or in Bob Dole's office." Others fear that senators, never inclined to shun the limelight, will behave even more insufferably on television than they do now. Majority Leader Dole is willing to admit cameras but demands rule changes to head off that threat.

Of course, many senators will probably conduct themselves abominably in front of the cameras, seeking to impress credulous constituents who mistake grandiloquent oratory for concrete achievements. But the sum total of obnoxious behavior isn't likely to rise.

The cameras will merely reallocate it. The Senate's existing privacy provides a cover for all sorts of dilatory and obstructive tactics. Putting it on TV will discourage these somewhat, since nobody wants to look like a jerk in front of the folks at home. That could speed the Senate's often glacial pace.

At the same time, the coverage will encourage those members who love publicity. It was said of one member that there is no more dangerous place on Capitol Hill than the one between him and a TV camera. He and any number of his colleagues will not be rendered more modest by additional opportunities to preen.

Still, publicity-hungry politicians are one of the bearable costs of our system. It may underestimate the judgment of the nation's C-Span addicts to presume that they can't separate the show horses from the work horses. Senators who get carried away by being beamed coast-to-coast may not do themselves any good at home.

Bismarck said no one should see how sausages or laws are made. But the operating assumption of a democracy is that exposing either to public view is bound to improve the ingredients. If the public is permitted to view the Senate through the foggy lens of the Congressional Record, it ought to be allowed the better look provided by modern technology.

Letting cameras on the Senate floor is a modest concession to the legitimate interest of the public in matters of government. Once that's done, we can figure out how to televise what goes on in Bob Dole's office.

"How about that — it finally hit something."

Today in history

By The Associated Press

Today is Monday, Dec. 16, the 350th day of 1985. There are 15 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Dec. 16, 1773, the Boston Tea Party took place as American colonists, disguised as Indians, boarded a British ship in Boston Harbor and dumped more than 300 chests of tea overboard in a protest against tea taxes.

On this date:

Ten years ago: Sara Jane Moore's guilty plea in the attempted assassination of President Gerald R. Ford was accepted in federal court in San Francisco.

Five years ago: President-elect Ronald Reagan chose General Alexander M. Haig to be his secretary of state, and Raymond Donovan his labor secretary; hundreds of thousands of people in Gdansk, Poland, dedicated a workers' memorial; and the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries decided to let crude oil prices rise as much as $4 a barrel.

Disease that's spreading

The "Fortune 500 Corporations" are our nation's largest.

Among the biggest of big businesses are such familiar ones as EXXON and IBM, but you know what would head the list if there were any way accurately to audit it?

Gambling.

Twenty-two states allow lotteries. Casino gambling is legal in Nevada and New Jersey. But legal gambling is the least of it.

Illegal gambling has become a $147 billion business.

Cottage-industry professionals will take all kinds of bets. On a football game, for example, you may wager money on which team will win and by whatever point spread.

But they will also let you bet on such incidentals as whether the first pass will be completed.

I once asked FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover the rationale for condoning stock market wagering and prohibiting wagering on a spin of a wheel or a roll of some dice.

He said, "That question answers itself if you examine the situation where gambling is legal; the people who run it are crooks."

However gambling may be rationalized as "a victimless crime," it still contributes more than any other factor to such other crimes as embezzlement and police corruption.

The profits from illegal betting just in Chicago - at least a billion dollars a year - are enough so that when a millionaire bookie and two longtime organized crime bosses challenged mob control of gambling this year, all three were "eliminated."

In Vegas - where sports betting of all kinds is legal - illegal action takes in more money.

The explanation for that, of course, is that illicit winnings never get taxed.

And while colleges have been preoccupied recently with the misuse of drugs by athletes, gambling is a greater threat to the integrity of amateur athletics.

The regulars are our nation's 12 million compulsive gamblers.

The American Psychiatric Association, since 1980, has recognized compulsive gambling as a mental disorder - but none denies that it has been made respectable by the proliferation of legal lotteries and has been stimulated by being able to see the numbers roll, the horses run and the players play - on TV.

Can surgery pave way to success?

Vanity, pure and simple. That used to be the reason a woman had a face lift. When she couldn't bear to see what the mirror showed - baggy eyes, sagging jaw line - she turned to a plastic surgeon to undo what gravity had done and turn back the face on her body clock.

Now both men and women - in record numbers - are having themselves restructured. Not just for reasons of vanity, but to stay competitive in a job market that favors the young.

We are a nation obsessed with the right image, youth and beauty. Because of this, aesthetic surgery (as it is now called) has become the ultimate adjunct to the dress-for-success philosophy.

More than a half-million persons a year (20 percent male, by the way) choose to surgically erase the ravages of time. Cosmetic surgery is a $2 billion industry.

Is it any wonder? We are bombarded from every direction with the message: stay fit, thin and young - and surely, love, happiness and success will follow. Witness Joan Collins as the sex-goddess role model for 50-year-old women.

We all know about Phyllis Diller's face lift, Carol Burnett's chin alignment and Mariel Hemingway's breast augmentation (the better to play the movie role of a Playboy playmate).

But such tales aren't limited to high-profile actresses or rich socialites. Glowing testimonials bubble forth from all manner of the uncelebrated about how surgery for success changed their lives.

A Houston businessman told the Wall Street Journal that he was so invigorated by his younger-looking face that he "started a new company, replaced his wardrobe and splurged on a turbo-charged, jet-black sports car." And a 59-year-old Houston insurance saleswoman who shed her midriff bulge, double chin and droopy eyelids said she recovered twice the $4,350 cost of the surgery in increased sales commissions. Her new attitude about herself is more important than the change in her looks, she said.

There's no doubt that self-esteem gets a post-operative boost. Just ask Dr. Paula Moynahan, a New York physician certified in both general and plastic surgery. Her Fifth Avenue office is called the Image Enhancement Center.

She told me about one of her patients, a 50-year-old career woman, working for an executive search firm:

"She was energetic and youthful. She had a good position and a good marriage, but felt her sags and wrinkles were holding her back. She wanted to match her face with her spirit. After a face lift and an eyelid tuck, she felt improved and had more confidence. She felt she was doing the best she could for herself."

Dr. Moynahan doesn't consider today's interest in cosmetic surgery narcissistic. "The best possible self is someone who is satisfied with herself or himself. If surgery can bring that, why not?"

The quest for satisfaction with one's looks is a characteristic of the '80s and for just reason: Studies indicate that good looking people have a better chance for social, marital and job success. We all know handsome politicians with comely wives who do well at the polls.

University of Minnesota psychologist Ellen Berscheid has spent 16 years studying the implications of attractiveness and is a foremost authority on the subject. She has said: "We Americans delude ourselves by thinking that physical appearance isn't important in our lives. Attractive individuals are generally believed to be more sensitive, more kind, interesting, strong, poised, modest, sociable, outgoing and exciting."

Rightly or wrongly, we have become a society that routinely judges others on the basis of appearance. There still may be some who will argue that cosmetic surgery is a sign of vacuousness. But experience is showing that to get ahead these days, we may need a straightened nose as well as an active mind.

Math teacher well-liked by students and his colleagues

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — The principal of Fort Worth's Eastern Hills High School said he hopes the state throws the book at a 29-year-old math teacher and coach accused of selling grades to five of his geometry students.

"It's an embarrassment to the profession," principal Johnny Largent said. "This is about as bad a thing as a teacher can do. Giving away grades is bad enough, but to receive money for grades is much worse."

Dennis Shannon resigned Dec. 4 after being confronted with the allegations, school officials said.

Four students claim to have bought a grade of 75 for $50 each and one a grade of 91 for $75, Largent said.

When Shannon was confronted with the allegations, the principal said, "He said he was sorry and agreed to give the students their money back."

Four students skipped Shannon's math class the entire second six-week grading period and one missed the last three weeks, he said. The five now have been given failing grades in the class because of five unexcused absences, Largent said.

More than a week after his departure, many students and fellow teachers continued to sing Shannon's praise, calling him one of the school's best-liked and most effective teachers.

"He was always joking. I don't believe he really sold those students grades," said sophomore Kerry Smith, who took Shannon's consumer math class last spring.

"He's the only teacher I've ever had who made math fun and explained it so that I understand it," said 15-year-old Wendi Gribble, an A student in Shannon's algebra class.

Students said his teaching methods ranged from crossword puzzles that involved solving algebra problems to jokes.

Miss Gribble first had Shannon in pre-algebra last year. It was a standing joke in the class that Shannon sold grades, she said.

"He would say, 'Progress reports are coming out and a lot of failing notices will be going home. That will be $20 for anyone not wanting one sent home.' He would say, 'If you want an A, that will be $100,' but everyone just thought it was a joke," she said.

A photograph in last year's school yearbook showed a smiling Shannon in class and pointing to a chalkboard that read, "$20 service charge for all passing grades."

The Fort Worth school board has asked the Tarrant County district attorney's office to investigate the allegations against Shannon and has asked the Texas Education Agency to conduct a hearing into the case.

Assistant District Attorney Steve Chaney said an investigation will be made to see if a state law governing education records has been broken. Conviction on the misdemeanor charge carries a possible sentence of one year in jail and a $1,000 fine.

If the TEA determines that Shannon committed the offenses, it could revoke or suspend his teaching certificate or place a letter of reprimand in his file.

The TEA has never before had a grade-peddling case before it, agency counsel Joan Allen said.

The merchants' showing more interest in such matters as improving the appearances of their buildings will spark more interest among shoppers as the merchants take pride in their businesses, she said.

Moulton cautioned merchants and residents not to expect "a six-month miracle period."

The first year will be spent organizing the program, devising plans and deciding on what direction to head.

Also, Moulton said she will have to receive some training. That training will begin soon. She'll be taking on her new job at the beginning of the new year by going to Austin for a week - long initial training session, spending 11 or more hours a day learning more about the program and its implementation.

She will be receiving additional training on an ongoing basis, keeping in touch with the state Main Street Program office, attending follow-up seminars, visiting other cities in the program and exchanging ideas.

And during that time, she will be meeting with local officials and merchants to begin planning how to proceed with the Main Street Project here.

"There will be no immediately visible changes," she explained.

comment were unsuccessful, but his attorney, Tom Hill, said, "We're trying to resolve the issue in the best interest of everybody concerned. I don't know that he's violated any law. In my view, it isn't a criminal case yet."

Mike Hays, the school's head baseball coach, remembered what Shannon did for a young baseball player who was barely passing any course.

Instead, the benefits will become more obvious in subsequent years, with the program being an ongoing, continuing process for years to come.

She emphasized that the program is not aimed at the downtown at the exclusion of other shopping areas in the city. "It will be a benefit to the whole community" through greater economic growth, more jobs and more community pride, she stated. The project also will concern more business and industrial development and recruitment.

"We want to encompass the whole town, not just the downtown," Moulton said. The program is designed "to enhance the whole economy of the town," she stressed.

"I've been very, very encouraged by the attitude" of merchants and officials with whom she has already visited, she said. "All have been very supportive."

Moulton has already had some success with her historical restoration interests.

Her senior project in college involved a "practicum" in the field. She selected an old fire station in her hometown of Toledo, Iowa.

She then researched histories of the county "to check for the most accurate sources." She learned such information as when the town was incorporated, the arguments for and against having a fire house in the town at the time and the significance of the structure for Toledo.

The fire house was one of three buildings built in the city in 1887, she learned. The structure was of soft, red brick, which had created some problems. The weight of the building was causing lower bricks to crumble, requiring some restoration work on the foundation.

Nearly 100 years old, the building is still serving as the city's fire station. It was placed on Iowa's State Register in 1983 and has been approved for listing on the National Register.

Moulton studied under Dr. Margaret Keys, who is very prominent in Iowa for her accomplishments in historical restoration in that state, including the Governor's Mansion (Terrace Hill), the Old Capitol building located on the University of Iowa campus and the restoring of gold leaf work on the current Capitol building.

Moulton's major interest in her studies was vernacular history, including diaries from the frontier and Victorian eras, information based on the words and stories "of the people," she said.

One of her favorite courses was vernacular architecture, which included such material as how the interests, beliefs and cultures of the people have been pursued in their buildings and how climate has affected architecture.

She also visited the seven Amana colonies in Iowa, experimental communities formed along social and economic principles. In addition, she also studied Stone City in eastern Iowa, known for its use of native stones in buildings. In fact, there was a city ordinance requiring buildings to use only native stone, she noted.

Moulton also did intensive study on the historical restoration of the Old Capitol in Waterloo, built when Iowa was a territory in 1842 to 1846. When the state expanded its borders, a more central location was sought for the state capital. The abandoned Old Capitol became the first building of the University of Iowa, serving initially as a Law and Order School, she explained.

Part of her studies at college included serving as a tour guide for the building, enabling her to become even more familiar with the structure and its history.

Though she has received her teaching certificate in history, she said she's looking forward to being able to do more with her knowledge and to put her training into practical work through the Main Street Project.

Perplexity over role of Jesus marked the early days

EDITOR'S NOTE — This is the first installment of a five-part Christmas series about the enigma of Jesus and the work of his early followers in defining his role. This part is about the puzzlement and the Apostles' Creed.

By GEORGE W. CORNELL
AP Religion Writer

In the polytheistic cities of the ancient Roman Empire and out in the lonely, barren isolation of desert mystics, a web of tangled notions and suppositions grew about that unforgettable prodigy of Galilee, Jesus.

Just who was that person born on the first Christmas? What was he? God? Man? Half and half, or both? How comprehend his nature and import?

A strange one, that Jesus, so peculiar, so different, yet common. Born in abject hardship, harassed, threatened, yet forcefully captivating. A roving Jewish rabbi, crucified, then resurrected, witnesses insisted on pain of death, and ever alive.

What did it signify? His meaning? His makeup? Do others share in it somehow?

"He was a mere man, yet with hidden power," claimed Eikasai, a Dead Sea recluse who taught rigid disciplines aimed at achieving that special power. "He is Light," contended Mani, a Persian expounder who spun out an elaborate pantheism of a dark earthly creator versus a benign, grander deity revealed by a Christ who only appeared human, an immaterial phantom. That Manichaeism spread through the empire.

"His kingdom comes," predicted the fanatic Montanus of Asia Minor, foretelling imminent doom for a matter-corrupted world, claiming in somnambulist ecstasies to possess Christ's comforting "paraclete." "I am Christ," claimed an Egyptian gnostic, identifying Jesus with untapped, generative forces of nature.

It was a lancing, imagination-firing puzzle in Christianity's first three centuries, a time of state-enshrined gods, goddesses and cryptic oracles. A new, intriguing consideration — the mystery of Christ — had infiltrated quietly into that murky, profligate society and into the reclusive hideaways in the wilderness.

"The city is full of mechanics and slaves who are all of them profound theologians, and preach in the shops and streets," wrote a noted thinker from the solitary outlands, Gregory of Nyssa, concerning a visit to Rome in the fourth century.

"If you desire a man to change a piece of silver he informs you wherein the Son differs from the Father; if you ask the price of a loaf ... you are told that the Son is inferior to the Father; and if you inquire whether the bath is ready, the answer is, the Son was made out of nothing."

From the start, even when Jesus was physically present, neither his family nor closest friends could figure him out. "Seeing they do not see, and hearing they do not hear, nor do they understand," he said. When he was gone, ascended from sight or earshot, they grew more baffled and wondering.

"For now we see in a mirror dimly," the missionary-apostle Paul put it, pleading for mature unity in faith and understanding of Christ "so that we may no longer be as children, tossed to and fro and carried about with every wind of doctrine by the cunning of men in their craftiness and deceitful wiles."

Amid the vying moil of propositions and deductions about Jesus in that age, similar to competing values of modern times, the preservation and stability of Christianity demanded some standards, some guideposts and firm principles about him that would stand against the aberrations.

Uncompiled copies of the Gospels attributed to the apostles and letters of Paul were circulating by the end of the first century, along with other early Christian writings subsequently rejected as part of the New Testament. However, only varying parts of the dispersed churches of the empire, and scarcely at all to ordinary believers.

While the Christians revered Jewish Scriptures, later called the Old Testament, and read them in worship services, it was not until the year 367 that Athanasius, then bishop of Alexandria, compiled a list of the 27 books which eventually made up the New Testament.

Its contents weren't formally fixed until the end of the fourth century.

In the preceding years, without clear formulations of belief to go by and with various conjectures and opinions abroad, the church gradually began devising "regula fidei," "rules of faith" or abridged articles of it for use in instruction and for public confession of candidates for baptism.

They varied from church to church. A baptismal formula in Rome near the end of the second century went this way: "Do you believe in God the Father Almighty?"

"I believe."

"Do you believe in Jesus Christ the Son of God who was born of the Holy Spirit and the Virgin Mary, who was crucified under Pontius Pilate and died, and rose the third day, living from the dead, and ascended into heaven and ... will come to judge the living and the dead?"

"I believe."

"Do you believe in the Holy Spirit and the holy church, and the resurrection of the flesh?"

"I believe."

None of that, however, attempts to categorize rust who Jesus is, whether simply God's humn "son," like all people created "in his image," or whether he's divine en toto, his humanity a disguise.

One of a series

Nor does it say whether he's just a momentary reproduction of God inside time, not the authentic God of eternity, or whether he's a co-equal twin, a second god, as in Greek and Roman polytheism with its multiple gods, or whether he somehow fully integrates the one true God and true man.

He himself presented some puzzling anomalies about it. "The Son of man," he usually termed himself. He grieved, wept, got angry and tired. He worried, felt fear and screamed in lonely agony on the cross. Yet afterward, he passed through doors, appeared, vanished and appeared.

"I and the Father are one," he said in the most interpretative of the Gospels, that of John. Yet he also said, "My teaching is not mine, but his who sent me ... The Son can do nothing on his own accord."

However, he also said, "The Father is in me and I am in the Father ... Truly, truly, I say to you, before Abraham was, I am."

That seemed to situate him in all eternity, not just a temporary, secondary copy of Godliness, a fleeting, spurious duplicate. Yet with the countervailing clues, early believers drew discordant inferences about him.

Even in his earthly ministry, listeners got clashing impressions. "He is a good man," some said. "No, he is leading ine people astray." "This is really the prophet." "This is the Christ." "Is Christ to come from Galilee?"

The first, oldest and shortest creed or profession about Christ came from the impulsive apostle Peter after Jesus asked his apostles who people said he was. He got mixed answers — that he was considered John the Baptist or Elijah, Jeremiah or some other prophet.

"But who do you say that I am?" Jesus asked.

Peter burst out, "You are the Christ, the Son of the living God."

Jesus said, "Blessed are you, Simon Bar-Johan! For flesh and blood has not revealed this to you, but my Father who is in heaven. And I tell you, you are Peter, and on this rock I will build my church, and the powers of hell shall not prevail against it."

Nevertheless, that exchange didn't explain the paradox of being a man and also God's offspring, nor did it say which constitutes him, nor who "Christ" might be — a political messiah, as many considered him, or something else. It was not surprising that ensuing generations often had contradictory views about him, a cacophony of ideas not conducive to the integrity or lasting strength of Christianity.

One theory, Monarchism, classified Christ as a second, subordinate god under the sole, everlasting God. A bishop of Antioch taught that Christ was only a man adopted into the divine sphere by his "dynamis" or power acquired through his struggle.

Marcion, a wealthy Black Sea shipowner, subsequently influential in Rome, claimed Christ was "not born of men, but came down from heaven, only seeming to have a body," representing the real spirit god of a realm above the Jews' evil "Demurge" god, who created a debased material world.

Behind most of these and other hypotheses lay a widely spread "gnosticism," which flourished through the second century, holding that a spiritual elite possessed an esoteric, secret knowledge about Christ, a "gnosis," perceiving him not as human but as a misapprehended ghost.

Linked to that notion, "docetism" claimed that Christ's body was not flesh and blood, but only an illusion.

Most of these twists and countless others assumed an irreconcilable dualism between God and matter, an antagonism between divinity and the physical world, obsessed with abandonment of it as defiled and malignant, not transforming it.

Followers often practiced severe austerities, abhorring the body or its enjoyments, demanding celibacy even in marriage, forbidding female ornamentation in dress, limiting food to certain vegetables. "We must fight against the flesh and abuse it," taught an Antiochian gnostic, fomenting injurious rites. The assorted ideas swung between opposite poles, either totally carnalizing Christ into a sort of molecular magician, or utterly spiritualizing him into a deceptive specter.

The chaotic, multiplying perceptions impelled the churches to develop some dependable touchstones of the faith to buttress and hold it on course — some brief confessions or creeds summing up the gist of authentic Christianity.

Among the oldest and still almost universally used, honored and ecumenical of these summations is the Apostles' Creed, its precise origins veiled and unrecorded, although popularly attributed to the apostles and named for them.

Two old involvements that you have been thinking about giving up on will start to yield a bounty in the year ahead. Your time and efforts weren't wasted. SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Things must not be taken at face value today. Probe a bit beneath the surface and you'll come up with information that isn't obvious to others. Know where to look for romance and you'll find it. The Astro-Graph Matchmaker set instantly reveals which signs are romantically perfect for you. Mail $2 to Matchmaker, c/o this newspaper, Box 1846, Cincinnati, OH 45201.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) You have a marvelous faculty today for drawing out others. People you talk to might tell you things they dare not reveal to anyone else.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Career and financial conditions are apt to be more favorable for you today than they will be tomorrow. Act while you have the advantage.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Experience is an asset that you can use to your benefit. Look into your past for the key to unlock today's door to success.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Important business affairs should be conducted in a confidential atmosphere today, screened from interfering outsiders. Shoo away busybodies.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Make it a point to share fun happenings today with old friends. They'll be pleased you thought of them, and their presence will add to your enjoyment.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Take measures today to get closer to people who can help advance your career goals. You'll move ahead more rapidly once you have their cooperation.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Your managerial and organizational skills will be pronounced today. If those with whom you're involved start fumbling, step in and lend a helping hand.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) There is something important you can do today that will benefit your family. Don't waste any more time; just do what needs to be done.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Success is likely today in situations where you and your mate are aiming for the same objectives. What neither can do alone can be accomplished together.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) Increase is now likely from something already providing you with a source of income. The flow of this greater yield might start today.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) You'll sparkle and shine today if you're involved in social activities. Everyone at the gathering will be aware of your presence.

Christmas 1935

Recovery monopolizes holidays

By Gail Robinson

America was still gripped by the Great Depression in 1935 but on Christmas Day many families bought railroads, utilities and beach-front property — and paid for them in cold, hard cash.

They were playing Monopoly, which debuted that year in four editions, ranging from a $2 budget set (no box for the board) to the $10 club edition with ivoryid playing pieces.

Monopoly was inspired by a turn-of-the-century game designed to show that capitalism would work only if no one profited from owning land. But times had changed and the 1935 ads trumpeted: "Build a chain of great hotels and charge them plenty to stop there. It's hard business... brings out the SIMON LEGREE in you... but it's the way to win at MONOPOLY."

In reality, of course, few Americans could buy the Boardwalk, although things were looking up economically. President Franklin D. Roosevelt's commerce secretary, Daniel Roper, declared 1935 the second year of "sustained recovery" from the Depression, as national income increased by 11 percent.

At Christmas, this meant more spending, more traveling — and the return of the Christmas bonus. The New York Times reported, "In volume of travel to and from the city, in volume of last-minute shopping, in the gaiety and spontaneity of the charitable activities... New York appears to be approaching one of the gayest Christmas celebrations since the Depression."

Cigarettes, pipes and various other smoking accoutrements were popular presents. Ronson presented lighters in various guises and Santa Claus smoked Luckies. Perhaps not coincidentally, throat medications did a booming business.

For children, there were sleds and dolls — selling for a couple of dollars each. And there was the New York visit of the real St. Nick — one "Santa Claus" of Missouri. A press agent brought the fourth-grade dropout to the Big Apple, but, with his green hat and loud tie, Claus was hardly a miracle on 34th Street.

Christmas pies were 35 cents, but two Saskatchewan experts warned against overindulging. "For a laboring man, digging ditches, there would be no harm in a meal of turkey, plum pudding, nuts and candy. The man who can afford these things is the man who should not eat them and those who cannot afford them are those that should," they cautioned.

Movie studios introduced new films as Christmas gifts to their audiences. Ronald Coleman starred in "A Tale of Two Cities," Wallace Beery appeared in the screen adaptation of Eugene O'Neill's "Ah, Wilderness," and Barbara Stanwyck was Annie Oakley. Yet the biggest star of the year at the box office was little Shirley Temple.

Works by America's literary luminaries, including Ernest Hemingway,

William Faulkner and Thomas Wolfe, were recommended gifts. Earlier in the year, Lawrence of Arabia had died in a motorcycle crash in England, and at Christmas his "Seven Pillars of Wisdom" was a non-fiction best-seller.

Sinclair Lewis was also on the best-seller list — with "It Can't Happen Here," a novel describing a fascist takeover of America. It was a timely topic. Adolf Hitler and the Nazis had come to power in Germany two years earlier. In 1935, the Germans continued to rearm and enacted the Nuremberg laws, which deprived Jews of German citizenship and made sexual intercourse between "Aryans" and Jews a capital offense.

On Oct. 3, Mussolini's Italy had invaded Ethiopia. The League of Nations protested and imposed sanctions and, to celebrate the Ethiopian resistance, Time magazine named Ethiopian emperor Haile Selassie man of the year.

The fighting eventually cost hundreds of thousands of people their lives, but on Christmas the Italian soldiers took a break. And while it may not have been part of the festivities, their government provided French and Italian prostitutes — to prevent Il Duce's troops from consorting with Ethiopian women.

During the holidays, Charles Lindbergh overshadowed the international scene on America's front pages. Eight years after the flight that had made him a hero — and months after Bruno Hauptmann was found guilty of murdering his son — the Lone Eagle and his family were fleeing to England to escape death threats and publicity.

In other news, FDR was seeing parts of his New Deal thrown out by the courts and was a year away from his drubbing of Alfred Landon at the polls. Social Security had just been enacted and one of the New Deal's staunchest opponents, Louisiana's Huey Long, had been gunned down by an assassin.

It reportedly looked a lot like Christmas in Moscow. But newspapers reported that, with Stalin in charge, there was little holiday merriment.

Dear Abby

Have a little drink?
Use a little sense

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1985 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: Our 16-year-old son brought his high school newspaper home, and an article titled "Have a Little Drink?" appeared on the front page. It was from your booklet, "What Every Teen-Ager Ought to Know," and printed with your permission.

My husband agrees that it should be run in your column so that children all over the country can read it. Please do, Abby.

JIMMY'S PARENTS,
MILWAUKEE

DEAR PARENTS: Here's the piece:

HAVE A LITTLE DRINK?
Now about drinking:
Are you afraid to say no when someone in the crowd says, "Aw, come on, have one...?" Don't be. If someone offered you a Coke, and you didn't like Coke, you wouldn't hesitate a second to say, "No, thanks."

It's just as easy to turn down beer, wine or liquor, and far, far wiser. Those in the crowd who really count will respect your refusal. Why should you care what the others think?

Alcohol dissolves almost anything—including your judgment. Under its influence, you may do things you shouldn't and wouldn't do normally.

Most people think of an alcoholic as a smelly old bum sleeping it off in a doorway.

But would you believe there are alcoholics as young as 10 years old?

Or that automobile accidents caused by drunken driving are the No. 1 cause of death among teen-agers?

Or that teen-age alcoholism is so bad a problem that many states are upping their drinking-age limits?

It's true. Alcoholism is now considered a disease, not a character flaw to be ashamed of. Just why one drinker becomes an alcoholic and another doesn't is still a puzzle. But one thing is certain: Alcoholism is self-induced and self-destructive.

This is not to say that a can of beer or an occasional cocktail will start you on your way to skid row. For the vast majority, it won't. But for a few, alcohol can be a bomb, a time bomb.

How can you tell? There are clues: If...

You're having three while others are having one...

You need a drink to make you feel more relaxed, comfortable and at ease with people...

You drink because it gives you self-confidence and courage...

You turn to alcohol in times of stress or trouble—to "forget"...

You drink alone...

You take a drink to help you get over the effects of the night before...

Then you could be an alcoholic, and shouldn't drink at all. Even if you drink only beer, you can become an alcoholic. It's not what you drink, but how much.

If you think you've got a drinking problem, help is as near as your telephone. In every city, even in small towns, there's an organization called Alcoholics Anonymous (better known as AA) whose members—all ex-alcoholics—are ready to help you night and day.

And it's free. It's also "anonymous." No one will say he saw you there.

You don't have to sign up or "join" anything. In fact, you don't even have to give your name.

All right, let's assume you are not an alcoholic. You're a normal, healthy teen-ager who has just discovered that a beer or two (or maybe a shot of vodka from the old man's liquor cabinet) gives you a "lift." It makes you feel "good, happy, exhilarated." It adds to your self-confidence, removes your inhibitions and makes you much more sociable.

Maybe so—for a while. But the effects of the "high" are bound to wear off, and when they do, you'll feel let down, depressed and blue. Alcohol is not a stimulant. It's actually a depressant.

Add to that the knowledge that the removed inhibitions may cause you to say and do things you would never have done otherwise. If you're really unlucky, you can pass out, and when you come to, you'll have to ask, "What did I do?" Now, who would want to be in a mess like that?

I realize that a few lines in a booklet will not keep you from having a drink or two if that's what you want to do, but if it is, I can only implore you to know your limit and don't ever exceed it. And don't drive while you are under the influence.

Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Furskins teddy bears, with their freckled snouts, shiny noses, cute bellybuttons, thick-soled boots and $60 pricetags, are among the Christmas season's hottest toys, the creation of Xavier Roberts, whose Cabbage Patch Kids became a "cultural phenomenon."

Coleco Industries Inc. sold a staggering 3.2 million Cabbage Patch Kids for about $65 million when it introduced the dolls in 1983. Since then, the company has sold close to 40 million dolls.

Roberts doesn't have such grandiose expectations for the Furskins. He expects to sell a million of the bears by year-end at a wholesale price of $27.50.

Unlike the Cabbage Patch Kids, Roberts' newest progeny aren't "adopted" by their owners. These bears, according to their legend, run a general store in Moody Hollow, Ga., and are a limited edition, with registration number and Roberts' signature embroidered on their paws.

Also unlike the original Cabbage Patch dolls, which were handmade in Georgia, these are sewn in China.

This year, the Furskins have limited distribution, primarily to gift and department stores. Next year, when Coleco introduces its licensed version selling for under $30, they will hit the mass merchandisers and toy chains.

Paul Valentine, a Standard and Poor's analyst, expects the Furskins will be a big success, but can't be compared to the Cabbage Patch Kids craze.

"It was a cultural phenomenon. The concept of adopting these ugly lovable dolls was totally revolutionary for the doll industry," Valentine said.

"Furskins are a well-executed, good concept, but they're not breaking new ground," he said. "It's going to be a while before another toy makes the cover of Newsweek magazine."

Among the Furskins' competition this year are the Pound Puppies, adoptable stuffed mutts that sell for about $20, and Teddy Ruxpin, an $80 high-tech bear whose face moves as it sings songs and tells stories.

Nancy Atkins, co-owner of Bear Necessities, a Boston store specializing in teddy bears, said she was disappointed by the quality of the plush and fabrics used in the Furskins.

"You're paying for a name, not for quality," she said. "For what it is, it's very expensive. I sell high quality European bears for that price."

Still, she said, the bears have been selling at the rate of one a day.

Other stores like Toy and Sports

Warehouse in Yorktown Heights, N.Y., where sales are brisk, are happier with the product.

"I've had three shipments of 20 Furskins in three weeks and I'm down to three on the shelves," said Dave Henning, store manager. "I've asked my buyer for more — whatever he can get me."

TREATMENT FOR STIFF NECK

If you're suffering from a stiff neck, don't wait for it to take care of itself when treatment is available to correct it.

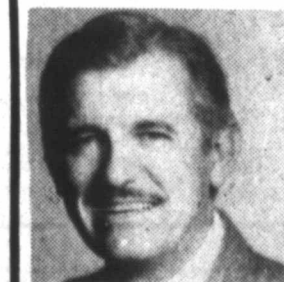

Of all the bones in the spinal column, none are more easily injured or more vulnerable than the seven vertebrae in the neck. None are moved more often. We are constantly turning our heads to look at people and things.

Neck stiffness can have many causes, from sudden and violent accidents to such simple activities as painting a ceiling or just sitting reading a book for a long time. But there's nothing simple about the pain.

A careful examination will reveal the source of the pain and how best to treat it. Any misaligned vertebrae in the spinal column should be properly adjusted so there will be no abnormal pressure on your nervous system. Treatment may also include exercises for the cervical muscles such as gently rotating your head in all directions. This can help restore muscle strength and tone.

BUSINESS REVIEW & FORECAST

K-Mart offers something for everyone... Promotes community activities.

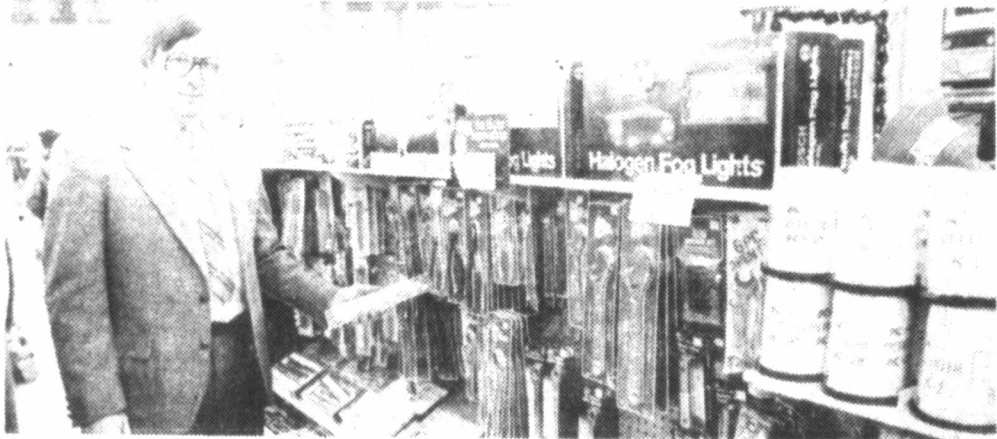

Just A Bit of K-Mart

Fred Dilly, K-Mart manager, and Jody Whitten, apparel manager, show these children's books and robe displays.

Fred Dilly points out popular TV, video and other favorite appliances in this large department

In the auto accessory department Fred Dilly shows some of the hand tools, oil filters and lights in the complete department.

K-Mart, the second largest retailer in the United States, adapts its Pampa Mall store to the likes and dislikes of Pampa and cooperates with city agencies in community life.

Close checking of Pampa buying habits enables K-Mart to carry items Pampa and Top O' Texas customers want. For example K-Mart in Pampa will sell many more pairs of gloves and much more gardening equipment and supplies than another store near here.

This year, as in others, K-Mart has provided Thanksgiving and Christmas dinners for needy families selected by the Salvation Army. This store recognizes the need to help those in our community who are less fortunate than ourselves.

Dinner menus included turkey, potatoes, vegetables, stuffing mix and pumpkin pie.

Early in December about 30 senior citizens accepted K-Mart's "shopping spree" invitation. Store employees advised and helped with gift selection, gift wrapped the selection (free, of course), prepared gifts for mailing and even mailed some.

"It was fun all around. Everyone had a good time," said Fred Dilly, store manager.

Saturday K-Mart, in cooperation with the Department of Human Resources and Top O' Texas Kiwans Club, held a special shopping tour for more than 50 under-privileged children. Each child received a $25 allowance and an individual gift from K-Mart.

This is an effort by K-Mart to brighten the season for some children and to help them participate in Christmas activities.

In this season K-Mart stocks each of the 64 departments with Christmas attractions.

In the expanded toy section are the popular Cabbage Patch and Hugabunch dolls, the Pound Puppies, anniversary Monopoly; plus those always favorite bicycles, footballs, basketballs, soccer balls, doll clothes, educational games and much, much more.

For Santa's packaging K-Mart has wide selections of gift wrap, tags, bows. Of course, there also are many seasonal decorations and choice Christmas cards.

Favorites for Christmas giving include, in the cosmetic department: prestige gift sets of fragrances by Stetson, Jean Nate, Aramis and others. In the Camera Department are popular Kodak and Polaroid Cameras, and a tremendous group of 35 millimeter cameras including Chinon, Minolta and Pentax.

In the jewelry department are name brand watches, wide selections of gold jewelry, jewelry boxes, wallets and of course, costume jewelry.

THE PARTY WAS A BUST — Police escort some of the more than 100 fugitives to a holding cell at Metropolitan Police Headquarters in Washington, D.C., Sunday after sending out some 3,000 invitations telling the invitees they would receive free tickets to the Redskins vs. Bengals football game, to be preceded by brunch. Two of the arrested were wanted for murder. (AP Laserphoto)

Abducted girl found unharmed

DALLAS (AP) — A kidnapped infant, missing exactly one month, will be home for Christmas. Mallory Elizabeth Sutton of Coppell, 3 1/2 months, was found Friday night in Tampa, Fla., FBI Special Agent Woody Specht said. "The baby is in good health and appears to be well cared-for," Specht said, adding that Mallory's mother was to return the child to Texas today. Jennifer Lynn Sutton, 20, returned home Nov. 13 to find both the baby and a new babysitter missing, along with the child's clothes, formula and bottles, officials said. Also missing was a picture of Mallory, prompting police speculation that someone had taken her for the purpose of selling her to somebody wanting a child. Authorities circulated a composite picture of a woman wearing a scarf over her head. The woman answered a classified ad Mrs. Sutton had placed, and provided references. However, the mother admitted tearfully after the kidnapping that she had not checked the references. A telephone number provided by the babysitter turned out to be that of an answering service in Houston. The infant was finally found with the help of a tipster who called the National Center for Missing and Abused Children, Specht said. "Based on information furnished by a concerned citizen, investigators embarked on a trail that led them from Dallas to Houston and ultimately to Tampa, Fla.," Specht said the tipster became suspicious when a woman left Houston for a trip to Dallas and returned "with a baby whose sudden presence she was unable to reasonably explain to friends and relatives." No arrest had been made by Sunday night, Specht said, because of the "intricate" nature of the case. However, he said a criminal investigation would continue.

Tough job keeping corporate secrets

By JOHN CUNIFF AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — The corporate world is having an even worse time than Uncle Sam in keeping its secrets, and the three-day, $16 runup in the price of RCA shares is the latest illustration of the point. The Securities and Exchange Commission, the New York Stock Exchange and the Chicago Board Options Exchange are investigating that jump and the wild trading that occurred just hours before General Electric announced it was buying RCA. In this instance, it is obvious that many people knew something big was brewing. The numbers are the evidence. Close to 9 million shares of RCA were traded on the NYSE in just three days, which averages about 3 million a day, a sum equal to the total average daily volume of every NYSE stock — 1,143 of them — just 25 years ago. In those three days the price of RCA shares rose more than $16 to $63.50, or more than 30 percent, which is the kind of return that any non-avaricious investor might hope to make in three years or so rather than three days. Numbers of that sort answer conclusively the question of was there insider trading, leaving the investigators plenty of time to focus on answers to the bigger questions: Who did the trading, and how did they get the information. Whether they get the answers is another matter, because in some instances it is all but impossible to prove a case.

Arson trial begins

EMHOUSE, Texas (AP) — Emhouse is a small Navarro County town with only 197 people, but it has suffered through a virtual epidemic of arson fires that created a virtual reign of terror and destroyed the town's only store. The fires and accompanying threatening telephone calls to residents caused residents to live in terror for almost two years. One of three men arrested in connection with some of the 15-16 arson fires here during the past two years was scheduled to go on trial at Corsicana today. Two other men are awaiting trial following their indictment on arson charges. Fred Reed, 45, of Corsicana, was to go on trial today, according to Navarro County Assistant District Attorney John Jackson. Trials for Thomas Frye, 17, of Emhouse, and Thad Watts, 29, of Corsicana, are expected to be held sometime after the first of the year, he said. The three were arrested and indicted after Reed's 14-year-old son was caught setting fire to a house in Corsicana, according to Douglas Fogg, assistant fire chief at Corsicana. Fogg said officers made the other arrests based on information learned during their investigation.

Virtually all the anti-Soviet sanctions have been lifted

WASHINGTON (AP) — In the aftermath of last month's superpower summit at Geneva, nearly all the sanctions imposed by the United States against the Soviet Union because of its invasion of Afghanistan and other international misdeeds have been lifted.

Their elimination reflects both the passage of time and an improving political climate, U.S. officials say, even though the Soviet aggression in Afghanistan has increased rather than diminished since the sanctions first were imposed.

In addition, American banks, for the first time in five years, have resumed lending to the Soviet government to buy American grain. The amount of the recent loan, $400 million, was at an especially favorable rate of interest, just less than 8.5 percent.

The cutoff in bank lending following the 1979 Afghan invasion was a purely commercial decision by American banks, according to a State Department Soviet expert. But he said banks are sensitive to the political climate in deciding on loans and undoubtedly took the warming of ties into account.

"I don't think anything is just happenstance," he said. "In relations with the Soviet Union, politics and economics are inevitably related." He asked not to be identified.

In another reflection of the improved climate, a major trade delegation headed by Secretary of Commerce Malcolm Baldrige was in Moscow last week to promote increased trade.

One of President Reagan's first foreign policy decisions after taking office was to lift the embargo against grain sales to the Soviet Union imposed by President Carter after the Soviet move into Afghanistan. Reagan overruled then-Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr., who thought the timing was bad because of a Soviet threat to Poland.

The only major sanction still fully in place is continuing restrictions against exports of high technology equipment, such as advanced computers. Those restrictions were imposed jointly by the United States and its allies.

The Soviets also have not had restored their full pre-Afghanistan quota for fishing in American waters, and probably never will because of other considerations not related to the Afghan invasion, the State Department official said. The current quota is 50,000 tons, compared with the pre-invasion quota of 400,000 tons.

Not only have the sanctions stemming from Afghanistan been lifted, but so have the sanctions imposed against Moscow following the martial law crackdown in Poland in 1982, and the shooting down of a South Korean airliner that strayed into Soviet territory in 1983.

Sanctions that have been lifted include the grain embargo, the fishing ban, the ban on direct air service by Aeroflot airlines, restrictions on social contacts and the halt in negotiations for a new cultural exchange agreement and new consulates.

But although virtually all sanctions have been lifted, in none of the three instances in which they were imposed have the Soviets met American demands.

Four killed in early morning fire

GREENVILLE, Texas (AP) — Officials say a space heater apparently caused an early morning fire that killed three children and a family friend in a small, wood-frame residence in northern Greenville.

The badly burned bodies of Ryan Phelps, 7; Renee Phelps, 6;

Reginald Phelps, 7 months, all of Greenville, and Sam Police, 21, of Mount Pleasant were discovered in the front part of the house after firefighters brought the blaze under control about 3 a.m. Sunday, officials said.

An investigation into the fire continued.

Economists believe

Recession looms in 1987

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States should enjoy slightly better economic growth next year but a recession looms as a growing possibility in 1987 with a great likelihood the downturn will either be triggered or made worse by the new balanced-budget law, the nation's business economists said today.

The National Association of Business Economists said its latest poll of 300 of its members found an overwhelming 85 percent believe the country will be in a recession by the end of 1987.

Only 15 percent of those polled believed the current recovery, which is now entering its fourth year, would survive into 1988 or beyond.

The economists also expressed little confidence in the legislation Congress passed last week requiring a balanced budget by 1991.

A substantial majority, 59 percent, said they did not believe the balanced budget bill was an effective way to reduce soaring federal budget deficits, objecting in part to the automatic nature of the cuts.

The problem, as the economists see it, is that federal budget cuts will reduce the stimulus needed to drive the economy forward and that the alternative, raising taxes, also would retard economic growth.

"There is no question that our members think that 1987 is the most likely year for a recession," said Kathleen Cooper, president of the association. "If we start to cut spending or raise taxes during 1986, it is going to make 1987 an even rougher year."

Despite the potential impact in 1987, Ms. Cooper said there had been positive short-term effects already from the balanced budget legislation. Like other economists, she credited the strong rallies in both the stock market and bond markets to confidence the proposal would lead to lower interest rates.

Pentagon gets gas weapons OK

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Pentagon finally has won approval to build new chemical weapons for the first time since 1969, a green light granted as part of a congressional deal which halted tests of the U.S. satellite-killer missile.

The agreement cleared the way for Congress to approve the Pentagon's budget as part of a huge catch-all appropriations bill providing money for a variety of government agencies.

House and Senate negotiators approved the defense package late Friday following hours of closed-door meetings, conferees told reporters after they emerged from the session.

In deciding to halt the anti-satellite (ASAT) program, the conferees turned down an appeal from President Reagan, who said more tests were needed in order to convince the Soviets to bargain for a ban on the weapons.

The Democratic-run House had voted against chemical weapons and proposed a limit on ASAT tests, while the Republican-controlled Senate wanted to go ahead with both programs.

Nerve gas had been the only weapon denied President Reagan as part of his defense build-up. The Senate had supported the program, but the House had opposed it for three years and the House position always had prevailed in the conference sessions until this year.

This time, it was different as House negotiators concentrated on the ASAT ban.

"That ban was what we really wanted," said Rep. Norman Dicks, D-Wash.

"They were insistent," said Sen. Ted Stevens, R-Alaska, chief of the Senate team, implying that House negotiators wouldn't budge on the ASAT ban. "But we got chemical weapons."

Under the agreement, the Army would get about $140 million to build production facilities for chemical weapons and chemical shells for 155mm artillery guns.

But another chemical program, the "Bigeye" bomb, was dropped by the negotiators. That decision came after release of a General Accounting Office report last week which said the aircraft-carried bomb — named after its guidance system — still was beset by technical problems.

The agreement bans the spending of any money for chemical weapons until the start of fiscal 1987 next Oct. 1 and says U.S. allies in NATO have to agree that such weapons are needed. But an earlier House demand that NATO agree to store the weapons in western Europe was not made part of the package.
