Man who shot Loyd Remy given probation

BY PAUL PINKHAM
Staff Writer

The Pampa man who admits killing convicted rapist Loyd Remy in February, 1985, faces three years of probation and a $200 fine following a plea bargain arrangement agreed upon Monday.

Michael Eldon Marsh, 29, plead guilty to charges of aggravated assault, stemming from an October, 1984, incident in which he broke the nose of a fellow inmate by kicking him in the face during a scuffle at the city jail. In exchange for the guilty plea, adjudication on both the assault and murder charges was deferred for the term of Marsh's probation period.

The aggravated assault charge carries with it a two to 20-year sentence in the state penitentiary and a maximum $10,000 fine. By accepting the deferred adjudication, Marsh gave up his right to appeal and would face immediate sentencing by 223rd District Judge Don Cain should he fail to live up to the terms of probation.

"Mike, do you understand you're getting a big break in this case?" Marsh's attorney, John White of Borger asked his client.

"Yes sir," Marsh responded.

In February, 1985, only weeks after Remy had been released on bond pending his appeal of a rape conviction in 31st District Court, Remy died from a gunshot wound to the chest received from a .22-caliber rifle during a late-night argument in Marsh's home at 532 S. Gillespie.

Marsh never denied shooting Remy but claimed the shots were fired in self-defense. Police determined there was no connection between the rape and the shooting.

Assistant District Attorney David Hamilton said the murder case would have been difficult to try because of Remy's criminal history and the claims of self-defense.

"He's got some real serious self-defense claims," Hamilton said of Marsh.

But Remy's mother and a friend of the family disagreed with Monday's decision, expressing shock and outrage. Following the hearing, both said they felt Marsh was getting away with murder.

"How in the hell can you give a guy three years probation when a guy gets caught for DWI and gets five years in the state penitentiary," said Jack Addington, a friend of the Remy family who said he had known the victim since he was a youngster. "You go out here and shoot somebody and get three year's probation." "I guess rape is considered worse than murder," said a tearful Sandra Whitmarsh, the victim's mother.

Both asked Hamilton if they could appeal the decision but, under double jeopardy laws, the state is not permitted to appeal criminal cases.

During the hearing, Marsh admitted many of his problems have been caused by his troubles with alcohol in the past. But, he said he committed himself to the Panhandle Alcoholic Recovery Center on Jan. 3.

One of the terms of probation is that he refrain from the use of alcohol or from frequenting places of business where alcohol is sold for consumption on the premises.

"I've been living in a men's recovery house in Amarillo and I've been going to church every Sunday," he told Judge Cain.

Although the probation terms state Marsh must remain in Gray County, Cain told him he could ask his probation officer about an exception permitting him to remain at the recovery house in Amarillo.

Seal says Boulter big business pawn

By CATHY SPAULDING

McLEAN — With homemade gelatin salad and rice casserole served on paper plates, and card tables and couches set up in place of banquet tables, Monday's gathering of area Democrats looked more like a church social than an address by a congressional candidate.

But 13th District congressional candidate Doug Seal of Wellington used the homey atmosphere of the McLean Senior Citizens' center to charge that the current congressman, Republican Beau Boulter, is a pawn of big business political action committees.

"He's being bought and paid for like a bar of soap," Seal said, backing his claims with a Jan. 21 computer print-out from the Federal Election Commission listing Boulter's major campaign contributors. Seal's thick print-out listed contributions from wealthy supporters from Amarillo, Wichita Falls, Pampa, Canadian and other area cities, except McLean. Also listed were such major corporations and political action committees as General Dynamics, Diamond Shamrock, Meso Petroleum, Lockheed and AT&T.

"Just two weeks ago, General Dynamics was suspended again for fraud, waste, and corruption," Seal said. "There's waste, fraud and corruption in the defense industry and in social programs."

"I assure you that our campaign will not receive any PAC money that does not have constituents in this district," he claimed. "If we are saying or doing the wrong thing in congress, I want you to let us know."

Seal said he believes Boulter is doing the wrong thing in Congress.

"He has not represented this district because of the heavy amount of money he gets from these out of state PACs," he declared. "And he's been hiding, distorting and covering up his voting record."

After addressing the group, which included current county office holders and county office seekers, Seal said Boulter claimed to support a March 1985 farm credit bill while the congressional record shows he voted no on the bill.

Claiming that Boulter has broken his campaign prom-

Burglars hit indicted firm

Burglars have struck a Pampa business indicted Dec. 30 in connection with a suspected auto theft ring that reportedly stretched from the Panhandle to the Dallas-Fort Worth metroplex.

Crossroads Auto Salvage, 120 S. Hobart, which is currently in possession of the state, has been burglarized at least three times since Jan. 1, its owner, Woody Mitchell, said Monday. The latest burglary was discovered by Mitchell and his attorney, Phil Jordan of Amarillo, on Monday after they had received permission from the district attorney's office to take pictures of previous ransacking.

Gray County Sheriff's Deputy Jerry Holland said Assistant District Attorney David Hamilton called him earlier Monday and asked him to accompany Mitchell and his lawyer to the site, which is still off-limits to Mitchell and the general public. When they arrived, they found paper and records strewn everywhere and a "substantial amount" of tools and parts missing.

"It looked like a tornado passed through those offices," Holland remarked.

Holland said the back window was broken and the gate was open at the location. He said he is still trying to determine the value of what was taken. Mitchell indicated it could be as much as $20,000 worth.

He said a Suzuki motorcycle was among the items missing.

"I think it was more than just vandals," Holland said, adding that it appeared the burglars knew what they were doing.

Holland said some tools and stereo equipment reported missing from an earlier burglary have been recovered through anonymous callers.

Reports indicate that at least one of the earlier burglaries, occurring in January, was committed by juveniles. Juvenile Probation Officer Ed Barker said the parents of one juvenile brought the youngster and a stereo to the sheriff's office and the property was recovered but no charges were filed by the sheriff against the youth.

Mitchell was arrested Christmas Eve after an investigation by local police and Department of Public Safety officials in Amarillo into the alleged auto theft ring. Police charge the stolen vehicles from the Dallas-Fort Worth area were being taken to Crossroads Auto Salvage.

Also arrested was an Amarillo police officer, Terry Simmons, who, according to county records, is a former correction officer with the Gray County Sheriff's office.

'Back in saddle'

West Texans told OPEC in control again

ABILENE, Texas (AP) — The Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) is "back in the saddle again," an oil company spokesman and former television newsmen says.

Robert Goralski, director of communications for Gulf Oil Co. and a former NBC-TV correspondent, made the comment during a speech Monday at the West Central Texas Oil and Gas Association's 53rd annual meeting.

Goralski said the current oil price situation has the world returning to the times of the late 1970s, with "OPEC back in the saddle again."

Americans face a "lowered standard of living" because of plunging oil prices and the nation's dependency on foreign oil. Last year, Goralski said, America's balance of payments, the money paid for foreign goods opposed to what is paid by foreign countries for American goods, reached a record deficit of $125 billion.

The purchase of foreign oil accounted for $55 billion, or 44 percent of the deficit, he said.

In another speech Monday, Goralski told an Abilene civic club that lower oil prices and dependency on foreign oil eventually could hurt consumers as much as oilmen.

Low pump prices mean higher consumption and waste and greater levels of imports in the future, he said. By 1995, he predicted, the nation will be importing about 60 percent of its oil.

Oil is already the single greatest balance-of-payments problem, Goralski said, accounting for more of the trade deficit than cars and far more than shoes or textiles.

America is in the same shape with its oil supply that Japan and Germany were on the eve of World War II, and that's not good, he said.

"Japan and Germany went to war for lack of oil," Goralski said.

Japan's attack on Pearl Harbor was merely to protect its left flank while its military machine went after the real targets: the oil fields of the East Indies, Goralski said.

Nazi Germany attacked its ally, Soviet Russia, with a goal of seizing the Caucasian oil fields in the southern U.S.S.R., he said.

American oil fueled Allied victory in both World Wars and was again the major source of supply to the American and United Nations forces fighting in Korea, he said.

But in the war in Vietnam, Iran supplied the great bulk of oil used in the war effort, he said, noting that Iran is a source no longer available.

Signs are that the Soviet Union's oil production has started a decline that inevitably will leave America's major adversary an energy-importing nation, Goralski said.

That's ominous, he said, because it raises the specter of the "two big giants ... at each other's throats to get it."

Goralski criticized Congress for its track record on energy but cautioned that even lawmakers from energy-consuming states have a tough time voting for energy producers, even when they understand their point of view. Others simply don't understand, he said.

At the WeCTOG conference, Goralski also noted the public's lack of interest in trying to understand the oil problem.

Neither the federal government nor the public realize that the energy industry already is taxed more than any other domestic industry, he said.

"Americans are the most uninformed people among the world's democracies," he said.

Testing ends, waiting begins

AUSTIN (AP) — Test day has come and gone for more than 200,000 Texas teachers who now must wait about seven weeks to find out whether they did well enough to keep their jobs.

"I'm confident that I passed it. I'm confident that 95 percent of our teachers passed it," State Education Commissioner William Kirby said Monday after he took the Texas Examination of Current Administrators and Teachers.

The TECAT — a test of basic reading and writing skills — was mandated by the 1984 Texas Legislature as part of a massive education reform bill that includes the no-pass, no-play rule that bars failing students from extracurricular activities.

Although about 10,000 teachers were expected to flunk the test, many came out smiling, saying the test was a breeze.

"Honestly, I don't see how a person who fails this test could have ever gotten a degree at any college," said Al Marten, a Texas Education Agency employee, said after taking the exam at Austin High School.

Teachers and administrators will lose the state certificates they need to work if they have not passed the test by June 30. A re-test will be given June 28. Those who failed Monday's exam will get diagnostic explanations of their performance.

The grades are due by early May. There will be no letter or number score, only pass or fail.

"Gov. Mark White, a test supporter, said he had not expected many teachers to have trouble with the test."

"The exam is only one measure of a teacher's ability to communicate. But if a teacher can't communicate, the student will never get the message," he said Monday.

Kirby agreed, saying it was a basic skills test, not a competency exam.

"The test is not intended to tell the good teachers from the poor teachers. It's intended to identify folks that simply don't have the reading and writing skills necessary to do the job," he said.

Georgia and Arkansas also have teacher testing provisions.

Texas school districts that wind up with a teacher shortage because of the test will be allowed to ask Kirby "emergency waivers" that would temporarily allow failing teachers back into the classroom.

The passing score for the test was 75 percent. The exam included 55 multiple choice questions, 30 on writing skills, and a 150-word essay.

The Texas State Teachers Association challenged the test as an illegal change in the status of state teaching certificates — which had been considered valid for life. State District Judge Harley Clark of Austin refused to block the exam. TSTA has appealed.

Some teachers wore protest buttons or stickers Monday. Kirby said a woman seated next to him wore a button that said, "Tests for teachers. Polygraphs for politicians."

One teacher was exempted from the test Friday when State District Judge R.L. Eschenburg of Jourdanton ruled she had earned her teaching certificate before the reform law was passed. A Dallas judge on Monday exempted an auto mechanics teacher. Both of those rulings will be challenged, according to Kirby.

The commissioner said he hoped the test would serve as a "turning point" for public education in Texas.

Demo meeting

ises, the Wellington rancher promised to promote "new and creative ideas that will work for the people."

"Over the last 15 years, I have traveled to Washington D.C. countless times and to Austin many, many times and have worked with state agencies," he said.

"The district has huge problems," he added. "We are going through the worst agricultural depression in 50 years. There are suicides, hopelessness and desparation in the agricultural community because people cannot pay their bills."

Seal also expressed dismay over the declining oil prices.

"Last year, oil was about $32 per barrel, this week it is down to $11," he said. "Our hospitals, our schools, our counties are affected by the price of oil."

"The reckless fiscal policies over the past five years have created the problem," Seal declared. "I'd like to remove these unfair trade practices that Japan, Europe and Korea have put up against us."

"If Japan sold $50 billion of goods here, they should accept $50 billion of our goods," he said.

"I think we need to have more profits in business, agriculture and oil and gas; that creates jobs," he added. "With a robust economy we can balance the budget, maintain a strong defense and save necessary social programs for the elderly, veterans, crippled people."

"We can never balance the budget simply by cutting programs," he said, proposing a program which would "reduce the strength of the dollar to a realistic level."

Seal mentioned, but did not declare support for, an oil import fee proposed by U.S. Senators Lloyd Bentsen of Texas and David Boren of Oklahoma.

Seal took a "hands up" poll of the audience to check support of the import fee proposal. He got little response.

Democratic Party Chairman Suzy Wilkerson asked "don't other countries have import fees?"

Seal agreed that "there is no free trade."

"I'm not for protectionism but enough is enough," he said.

Seal's question and answer session with the audience ended up being an exchange of opinions.

Newly elected group president Bill Graham complained about the costs of pensions for former U.S. presidents.

Sammy Haynes suggested taking some of the pension for Ronald Reagan and former President Nixon and giving it to former President Jimmy Carter.

Seal agreed that while former presidents do need protection, he said too much is being spent on their retirement.

Graham also commented on an economy in which people "give to the rich and it trickles to the poor."

"Well I haven't been trickled upon yet," he remarked.

Referring to Monday's "Off Beat" column in The Pampa News about how falling gas prices are hurting area oilmen, Graham said "in place of oilmen, put farmers and ranchers."

"Put it in capital letters," called audience member Lloyd Hunt.

Seal faces Don Stribling of Canyon in the May Democrat primary. But he is not campaigning against Stribling, focusing instead on Boulter, who is finishing his first term. Stribling is scheduled to speak at the Democrats' next meeting April 14 at the Senior Citizens Center.

In other issues, Seal opposes the dumping of nuclear waste or toxic materials in the Panhandle. He also opposes Boulter's proposal to consider dumping nuclear material in outer space.

On such foreign policy issues as aid to Contra rebels in Nicaragua or the Marcos-Aquino election battle in the Philippines, Seal admitted he needs to research the facts before making any comment.

The local Democrats had other business to tend to. They voted to call themselves the Dixie Democrats, because of their south Gray County location. Graham was elected president of the local organization, his wife Katy was elected secretary; Eddie Stewart, vice president and Mary Powell, treasurer.

Lefors names interim judge

LEFORS - The Lefors City Council has appointed City Secretary Yvonne Pittman as interim municipal judge to handle tickets issued by the city marshal.

The action was taken at its regular meeting Monday night after Pittman noted that former Justice of the Peace Margie Prestidge had resigned and moved to Pampa.

Pittman said a judge would be needed to handle pleas by those receiving tickets and to assess fines.

Prestidge had been serving as municipal judge while she was also a justice of the peace at Lefors. But state Atty. Gen. Jim Mattox has recommended that J.P.'s or other elected officials should not be used in a municipal judge position, Pittman said.

City Marshall Ed Barker supported the appointment of an interim judge to handle the tickets, noting it would let residents know that laws would still be enforced in the city until a permanent judge is named.

The council named Pittman to the position until it finds a replacement.

In other matters, Mayor Ben White appointed councilmen J. W. Franks and Wendell Akins to work with city engineering consultant Gene Barber to negotiate for the purchase of water rights with a property owner.

The city is considering acquiring additional water supplies on a royalty payment basis.

In addition, the city may be applying for a grant to cover costs of installing water pipelines, pumps and other equipment needed for the new water supply.

Barber also discussed plans for a new sludge drying bed to handle waste water. Barber said that while the current bed is adequate for present needs, the state is likely to place stricter requirements on drying bed operations in the future.

The council also discussed bids on repainting the water tower storage tanks, though no action was taken. The mayor said company representatives will be invited to inspect the tanks and to attend a future meeting.

Barker discussed the youth activities program with the council, saying it has been generally successful. The program is aimed at students in grades 7 through 12 now, meeting on Thursday evenings at the Lefors Civic Center.

He said the program may be expanded to include students in grades 3 through 6 at the request of a number of parents.

Soviets protest reduction order

MOSCOW (AP) — The Foreign Ministry today delivered to U.S. Embassy officials a "resolute protest" of the U.S. order that the Soviet Union reduce its staff at the United Nations, the official news agency Tass said.

The verbal protest, a text of which was carried by Tass, denied that any Soviet employees of the United Nations are engaged in espionage.

The United States ordered the Soviet Union on Friday to cut its U.N. staff from 275 to 170 by April 1, 1986.

TEXAS/REGIONAL

Teachers say test easy, but unnecessary

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — Like students forced to stay after school, many of the state's educators who showed up for a sink-or-swim mandatory test grumbled loudly and put up a protest.

As teachers across Texas completed the state-mandated competency test Monday, most of them said the same thing: "It was easy, but we shouldn't have had to take it."

In Gainesville, teachers launched blue balloons signifying, "Blue Monday." The balloons carried message cards reading, "My certificate says life and I'm not dead."

Cindy Benton, a chemistry and biology instructor at Andrews High School in El Paso, completed the three-hour test in 2½ hours at Thomas Jefferson High School in the border city. She wore a T-shirt emblazoned with a red apple and the words "I'm a Teacher and I'm Competent." A sticker on her arm read "Under Protest."

"I resent it very much," said Ms. Benton. "First, I don't understand how they can give you a lifetime certificate and then on the basis of one test tell you it's invalid."

Students in Texas had the day off so 200,000 Texas teachers could take the Teachers Examination of Current Administrators and Teachers, or TECAT. The 1984 public school reforms passed by the Legislature mandated the test.

"If the Legislature wants to pass a law, it's legal. Even if the majority thinks it's unfair, it's the law," said Jon Heidke, an Estherville, Iowa, native who retired from the military and moved to El Paso 2½ years ago. He was a student-teacher in the fall and started teaching science this semester at Andrews High School.

But to Maxie Parr, a special education teacher at Roosevelt High School in San Antonio, the initiator of that law "better start packing up the governor's palace."

In Houston, Linda Savell said the test was so simple that she resented having to take it. "After graduating from college and taking all those tests, why go back and take an eighth-grade test?" said Ms. Savell, who teaches at Worthing High School.

"It was so easy," said Joanne Stemple, a second-grade teacher in the Houston independent school district. "If they (other teachers) can't pass it, they shouldn't be teaching. I can read and write, and that's what it tested."

Lisa Graham, a fourth grade elementary school-teacher in San Antonio, found it a little more difficult.

"It's tough if that isn't your line of work, and I'm not an English teacher," she said.

Lorene Patneude, an English teacher in El Paso for 11 years, said it was not a hard test, "but it's not a baby test, either."

Officials say they expect about 10,000 teachers to fail the test.

"I don't mind anybody checking to see if I'm doing my job, but after 11 years, they should have found a cheaper way of doing it."

She said she didn't know any teachers who wouldn't be able to pass the test.

"It was a waste of time," said Barbara Doctoroff, a diagnostician at Travis Junior High in Colorado. "I think it was simple, but I don't think we should have had to take it in the first place."

Suzy Walker, a first grade teacher at Lamar Elementary School in The Woodlands near Houston, said: "I'm surprised the taxpayers themselves aren't asking for more accountability on the money (expense of the test). There's a system already in place for getting rid of incompetent teachers."

Arms negotiations reported too dull for Tower's tastes

WASHINGTON (AP) — John G. Tower, the former chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, has submitted his resignation as a U.S. arms control negotiator for "personal family reasons" and because the job lacked excitement, U.S. officials say.

Tower has handled negotiations with the Soviet Union in Geneva on reducing long-range nuclear weapons. The talks are stalemated. He was appointed to the post 14 months ago by President Reagan after deciding not to seek re-election to the Senate from Texas.

At the White House, there was no formal confirmation of the report late Monday. But one source who insisted on anonymity said an announcement was expected soon.

An assistant in Tower's office here said he was out of the country and could not be reached. She said reports that he had quit were not correct and that he would be at the negotiating table when the next round is held in May.

Other officials, also insisting on anonymity, said Tower, 60, had submitted his resignation to the president. They said he was in good health but had family and other reasons for leaving.

"It can be a boring, tedious job, sitting across the table from the Russians," a senior official told The Associated Press. "He's used to seeing new faces over day. I don't know why he wanted it in the first place."

Tower had hoped negotiating with the Soviets would be a springboard to a Cabinet post, but there was no opening, and the former politician felt he was on the sidelines, another official said.

Tower, a conservative Republican, had served in the Senate nearly 24 years and was an ardent champion of U.S. weapons strength and a foe of the 1979 Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty with the Soviet Union.

He had argued the accord was not in the security interests of the United States. The SALT II pact, which was never ratified by the Senate, imposed ceilings on various U.S. and Soviet weapons.

Tower argued that it did not limit capabilities.

Reagan also opposed the treaty, but since becoming president he has pledged not to undercut its provisions provided the Soviets also adhere to the pact.

A dapper and combative politician, Tower earned a reputation as a staunch conservative and a relentless fighter for Reagan's defense budget, including a missile buildup.

In Geneva, he oversaw negotiations over strategic weapons, serving under chief U.S. negotiator Max Kampelman, who handled talks over space-based defense systems. In the troika arrangement, Maynard Glitman, a veteran foreign service officer, dealt with intermediate-range missiles.

The last round of negotiations ended last week in Geneva without any indication the two sides made any progress in curbing the arms race. Secretary of State George P. Shultz said last Thursday there had been no "major accomplishment" during the round.

Chagra gets 30-year term

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Elizabeth Chagra has received a 30-year prison sentence for the second time for plotting to kill a federal judge.

The 32-year-old Mrs. Chagra was convicted of the crime again on Feb. 27 after her original conviction was overturned by an appeals court.

U.S. District Judge William Sessions, who in 1982 ordered Mrs. Chagra to serve a 30-year term, re-issued the sentence Monday.

She will be eligible for parole in 1992, according to federal prosecutors.

"I thought it was a grisly, grisly bit of work on the part of the judge," her attorney Warren Burnett said after the sentencing.

"I was quite disappointed. She's been a splendid prisoner and has been rehabilitated. Both of these factors should have been taken into consideration," he said.

Burnett urged leniency so Mrs. Chagra could tend to her ailing parents.

"You have nothing but the most compelling evidence of her rehabilitation," Burnett told the judge. "We are deceiving ourselves to think that she would be further rehabilitated by further incarceration."

Mrs. Chagra made a tearful plea to the judge that she be imprisoned near her family in El Paso. But Sessions did not specify where she would be incarcerated.

She told Sessions she did not know how much longer her parents would live and that her three children had become almost strangers to her.

Economist says oil decline won't harm all industries

IRVING, Texas (AP) — Industries related to high tech and service should help partly offset the effects of falling oil prices on the state's economy, a state economist said Monday.

Texas officials have predicted a loss of 25,000 jobs for every $1 per barrel price drop for oil, but Thomas Plaut, senior economist with the state comptroller's revenue estimation division, said that formula takes into account only the slump's negative effect on the state's economy.

With gains in the other industries, only 13,500 jobs should be lost for every dollar decrease, he said.

"The positive effects of lower oil prices are indeed significant, but are not enough to offset the negative effects," he told publishers at the Texas Daily Newspaper Association's annual meeting at the Las Colinas development.

"The Texas economy is a net loser (from falling oil prices) because Texas remains a net energy exporter," said Plaut.

"Everyone knew Texas had to shift its economy," Plaut said. "What's surprising right now is (the slump) has happened so fast and so quickly."

Still, transportation, retail, medical services, public utilities, real estate and the hotel and restaurant businesses, which have "grown tremendously," are providing about 90 percent of the state's new jobs, he said.

With jobs available in both the service and high tech sectors, job losses from the current oil downturn will be much smaller than those experienced in 1982, he said.

But Plaut predicted the state's unemployment rate will hover for two to three years around 7 percent to 7.5 percent, which is above the national level.

The mining industry has been the most adversely affected with 7,900 jobs lost for every $1-per-barrel decline, Plaut said.

Teachers find odd reasons to delay test

AUSTIN (AP) — A case of the hiccups, a conflict with a golfing tee time and an old reliable — car trouble — were just a few of the reasons given by teachers and administrators trying to get their appointments changed to take the state's literacy test.

"We had one woman call in who said that she gets the hiccups every day at 3:30 p.m., so she couldn't take the afternoon test," said Nolan Wood, director of teacher assessment for the Texas Education Agency in Austin.

Fewer than 100 of the more than 200,000 teachers and administrators statewide have actually tried to get out of taking the test, Wood told the Lubbock Avalanche-Journal.

Wood said that one of his favorites but actually one of the most valid involves the number of teachers who are expected to give birth Monday.

"We've had about 75 teachers who are supposed to deliver sometime on March 10," Wood said. "I thought that was amazing, until I thought about the fact that there are 210,000 teachers out there. Once you look at it that way, the number is very small."

One teacher said she had to attend a junior service league meeting, while another said his appointment to take the test conflicted with a planned game of golf.

"We had one guy call in who said he had a 1 p.m. tee time for a golf game, but that he was scheduled to take the test at noon," Wood said. "I liked that one myself because I'm a golfer, but we didn't change his time."

Reports of car trouble also popped up, Wood said.

"We had a lot of people who called in and said that they had been in a wreck or that their car was in the shop so that they couldn't make the 7:30 a.m. test time," Wood said. "I had to ask myself, how they were still getting to school at 8 a.m."

No matter what the excuse, Wood said that the TEA considered every change request and uniformly moved the schedule if the educator had a valid doctor's excuse.

Off beat By Cathy Spaulding

Ideas not easily expressed

Views expressed in today's Off Beat Column are the individual's and not necessarily those of a sane person.

There comes a time in almost every Off Beat writer's life when he, she or it totally runs out of things to say.

Oh sure, the ideas are there. One idea has an eye-catching introduction. Another has a thought-provoking conclusion. And in between are numberless amusing anecdotes, horrid puns, touching stories from my past and profound observations on myriad subjects.

But, call it writer's block or call it fear, there's a tangle somewhere in the passage between the ideas and their printed outcome. It's as though my ideas feel so safe and secure rolling around inside my brain that they don't want to come out and be exposed to the public. They don't want to come out and be exposed to possible public ridicule or rejection.

Who could blame them? There is a definite risk involved in going public, whether one is a performer, a high school athlete, a candidate for a government office or, in my case, an idea.

Are people going to like this week's ideas as well as they liked last week's? Are they going to like my ideas as well as they like those of other Off Beat writers? Are they going to be the least bit interested in my ideas?

I think I know why my ideas are so reluctant to come out. After I type them on my computer terminal screen, press the "send take" key, then go home to trust the city editor to look at them and set them in type, I cannot call them back for revision or improvement. If I come up with new ideas, or better ways of expressing them, I cannot squeeze them between the lines. If I wrote something I shouldn't have, I cannot remove my words from the page.

Once my ideas hit that spot on that page, they stay there, in unchangeable black and white.

My ideas are not ready for such finality.

But I cannot keep my ideas locked up forever, can I? Without being exposed to the fresh air, my ideas cannot develop and grow. If they remain in the dark recesses of my brain, they stagnate. Some ideas disappear completely before they ever hit the printed page.

When Jesus warned against hiding light under a bushel, he was not concerned that the light would not be seen. He was concerned that the light would go out.

Off Beat has spoiled me. I write something that catches someone's eye. I get a compliment or two on what I've written. Then the compliments stop, and I feel unfulfilled.

When a trained seal performs tricks at the circus, its owner always rewards it. Toot the horns, get a fish. Roll over, get a fish. Balance a ball, get a fish. Make funny noises, get a fish.

But what type of fulfillment does the trained seal feel when it goes home to its manmade grotto?

Unlike seals, people have the ability to seek their own fulfillment. They need not depend on others for their rewards. They have the ability to look within, sort things out and find that something that enables them to push on.

My ideas may someday find their way out of my psyche and into print. Some may appear in this column. Some may end up in some other publication. Some may not go any further than my occasional letters to my mother.

But right now, it's getting late and my ideas need a rest. Tomorrow is a new day.

TREATMENT FOR STIFF NECK

If you're suffering from a stiff neck, don't wait for it to take care of itself when treatment is available to correct it.

Of all the bones in the spinal column, none are more easily injured or more vulnerable than the seven vertebrae in the neck. None are moved more often. We are constantly turning our heads to look at people and things.

Neck stiffness can have many causes, from sudden and violent accidents to such simple activities as painting a ceiling or just sitting reading a book for a long time. But there's nothing simple about the pain.

A careful examination will reveal the source of the pain and how best to treat it. Any misaligned vertebrae in the spinal column should be properly adjusted so there will be no abnormal pressure on your nervous system. Treatment may also include exercises for the cervical muscles such as gently rotating your head in all directions. This can help restore muscle strength and tone.

The public education failure

BY DON FEDER

It often happens that conservatives, who are scathing critics of government institutions when out of power, in positions of authority become pliant apologists for the same.

So it was that Education Secretary William Bennett recently issued his report card on the nation's schools, and a glowing critique it was. "The news is good," Bennett enthused. "Our schools are improving again, our children are learning more."

As evidence of said educational renaissance, the secretary cited the rise in scholastic aptitude test (SAT) scores, 13 points out of 1600 (less than 1 percent), between 1982 and 1985. This heroic performance proved the efficacy of the administration's "movement to raise academic achievement standards and restore discipline," Bennett proclaimed.

In its idealistic youth, prior to being mauled by the public school lobby, the Reagan administration spoke of permitting choice in education, by enacting tuition tax credits. Such is the mystical devotion to public education on the part of most Americans, however, that the administration soon was in full retreat.

In response to critics who charged that Reagan wasn't sufficiently pious toward the great diety Pub Ed, the White House abandoned its privatization effort and instead launched a back-to-basics drive to save government schools. If Bennett is to be believed, this approach has been a smashing success. Public schools, in the secretary's words, "are in an upward swing."

I don't believe it. By any objective standard, public schools remain a catastrophe. Your honor, ladies and gentlemen of the jury, we submit the following evidence that government schools are guilty of educocide - the cold-blooded murder of learning.

Between 1963 and 1980, college board (SAT) scores fell 90 points on the combined math and verbal sections.

Twenty-three million Americans are functionally illiterates, the vast majority products of public education.

In the 1930s, only 1.5 percent of white, native-born Americans were functionally illiterate, as were 9.2 percent of urban blacks. Today, white illiteracy is at least 7 percent. Among black city dwellers it is an astounding 40 percent.

The National Council for Geographic Education discloses that one in five high school students can't locate the U.S. on a world map.

The National Commission on Excellence in Education, in its 1982 report, estimated 40 percent of seventeen-year-olds could not draw inferences from written data; 66 percent couldn't solve a math problem involving several steps.

The historical ignorance of the young is appalling. In a syndicated column last year, Bennett himself revealed: "Too often our high school graduates know nothing of the Magna Carta, the Greek Polis, The Federalist Papers, or the Lincoln-Douglas Debates." Obviously, this estimate was made before the upward swing began.

Bennett's evaluation is confirmed by a preliminary field survey of the National Assessment of Education Project, which found that two-thirds of seventeen-year-olds could not place the Civil War in the 1850-1900 period.

Examples abound of the benighted condition of our publicly miseducated youth. Jaime O'Neill, who teaches at a college in Washington state, conducted a survey of his English-composition class, reported in the pages of Newsweek.

The responses would be amusing, were it not for the fact that the respondents someday may occupy positions of prominence in business and government. According to O'Neill's scholars, Christ was born in the 16th century A.D. J. Edgar Hoover was a 19th-century president and Sid Caesar a Roman emperor. ("We who are about to guffaw salute you!")

The Great Gatsby was a 1930s magician, and Ethel Rosenberg a singer of the same era. Benito Mussolini ruled Russia in the 18th century, while Heinrich Himmler invented the Heimlich maneuver. Jefferson Davis? He played a guitar with the Jefferson Airplane.

The foregoing has moved Boston University President John Silber, formerly Bennett's boss, to comment "...today's high school diploma is a fraudulent credential."

Can the fraud - public education - be transformed into a success? Impossible. As a state enterprise, the public schools are a socialistic institution. Lacking incentives to succeed (the profit motive), sheltered from the pressures of the marketplace (the need to satisfy consumers) socialism always fails.

There's nothing more absurd than conservatives in government trying to save a socialistic enterprise, a system run by the bureaucrats and educational theorists, for the teachers, to the detriment of students, parents, and the nation generally.

Public education on an upward swing? Of course. Also, Mexico's economy is improving; Russia is headed for a record grain harvest; and Congress will balance the budget by 1987.

The top priority for big spenders

Washington loves taxes. It's full of self-assured people skilled at transferring wealth rather than producing it, and at formulating plausible reasons why they should transfer even more. President Reagan's 1981 tax cut was the greatest blow to their class interests in living memory, and reversing it has become their top priority for 1986.

With Congress back in session, their campaign has begun in earnest. It will rely heavily on an issue that the tax-eaters rarely used to worry about, the federal deficit. With the new Gramm-Rudman law mandating at least $55 billion in 1987 deficit reductions, the higher-tax crowd is insisting that the goal cannot possibly be met without, naturally, higher taxes.

Though $55 billion is a lot of money, it's only about 5 percent of the federal government's projected 1987 budget. What would one think of a family or a business that could not cut its expenditures by 5 percent - especially if both expenses and revenues had been rising faster than inflation for years?

But prominent lawmakers, such as Speaker Tip O'Neill, D-Mass, and Sen. Pete Domenici, R-N.M., are simply taking it for granted that a tax increase is inevitable. The tax-eaters' house organ, The Washington Post, is militant; it's calling for a massive jump in revenue of about $150 billion a year, to be phased in over several years. It dismisses those who disagree as "not serious."

The pro-taxers are so eager that they cook the figures. The Post claims that Reagan has already cut domestic discretionary spending by more than $60 billion, so there's little room left to cut. But in fact this part of the budget went up slightly under Reagan, from $273.3 billion in 1981 to $276.1 billion in 1986. The Post actually should be delighted that a president with an overwhelming mandate to cut spending has been so unsuccessful.

The fact cannot be repeated too often: Federal revenues under Reagan have soared from $599.3 billion to $793.7 billion. But spending has climbed even faster; hence, the deficit.

If the president gets pressured into accelerating revenue growth through new taxes, the taxing set will simply accelerate spending growth through more and fatter programs - just as it always has. That is why spending restraint is the only serious way toward cutting the deficit.

Stopping the exploitation

The University of Georgia has announced it is dropping out of the Southeastern Conference, giving up its bigtime athletic program and applying immediately for membership in the Ivy League.

"It's time we started stressing academics instead of athletics around here," said newly appointed University president Jan Kemp.

Dr. Kemp was awarded the presidency, more than 2.5 mil, her choice of three South Georgia counties and a Brake-O franchise by a jury which found for her in her recent lawsuit against the University of Georgia.

Dr. Kemp, now the Mother Teresa of Georgia academics, had sued the university on the grounds that she was fired because she would not give preferential treatment to athletes in the school's remedial studies program.

The university's lawyer based his defense on the fact that the remedial program allows the school to make postmen out of athletes after their careers are over, thus saving them from jobs as janitors.

The two defendants in the case, Dr. Leroy Ervin, head of the remedial studies program, and the vice president for academic affairs, Virginia ("Hints from Heloise") Trotter, as well as former university president Fred Davison, are said to be in exile somewhere in Haiti.

The long and bitterly fought trial brought out the fact Georgia was allowing athletes into school who were basically illiterate.

"They couldn't read nor write neither," Dr. Kemp pointed out in her testimony.

Dr. Kemp also announced new guidelines for students entering the university.

Enrollees, she said, now must have a minimum score of 1,250 on their Scholastic Aptitude Test, must be a direct descendant of the founder of one of the original 13 colonies, and must know that Chicago is not the capital of Illinois.

Students not meeting those criteria, Dr. Kemp said, may take Civil Service exams to see if they can get on at the Post Office.

Asked if the university planned to continue exploiting athletes by offering them free college educations, Dr. Kemp replied "No, but we currently have several janitorial positions for which they may apply."

Dr. Kemp said Sanford Stadium, Georgia's $2,000-seat football arena, will be razed, and that that's where her new Brake-O franchise will be located as soon as she can find a qualified mechanic.

"I'm waiting to hear from the Georgia Tech Placement Office now," said Dr. Kemp.

As far as the Georgia Coliseum - where Georgia basketball coaches once corrupted young men's minds by giving them T-shirts - is concerned, Dr. Kemp said she and her family are contemplating moving into the spacious gymnasium.

"We'll have to knock out a few walls and recarpet," said Dr. Kemp, who also said McWhorter Hall, which formerly housed exploited athletes, will become her presidential museum where she plans to exhibit various snapshots taken of her during the trial and run video tapes of her many talk show appearances.

Asked what she planned to do with the $2.5 million and change the jury awarded her, Dr. Kemp said she was going to buy a new Volvo, a motorboat, a food processor, a Jacuzzi and a set of poodles.

"And maybe a tummy tuck," she said, winking at reporters.

Former athletic director and head football coach Vince Dooley said he is currently looking for employment. Dooley considered running for U.S. Senate before backing out last summer. Insiders say he now has his eye on Postmaster General.

Family catastrophe in black America

By Robert Walters

WASHINGTON (NEA) - Pause for a moment to consider the implications of this appalling statistic: seven out of eight births (87 percent) to black teenage mothers in this country occur outside of marriage.

The comparable figure for white teenage mothers is three out of eight or 37 percent. That's not much to brag about, but it is strikingly lower than the phenomenally high black rate.

Pregnancy among unwed black teenagers "must be regarded as a natural catastrophe in our midst, a threat to the future of black people without equal," says Eleanor Holmes Norton, a professor at Georgetown University Law School and a longtime black activist.

Here's another perspective on a truly depressing situation: More than half (53.1 percent) of the nation's 9.4 million black children live with only one parent - and in virtually all of those cases, the adult in the family is the mother. (The comparable figure for white children in one-parent families is 17.2 percent.)

"In ever-growing numbers, the black teenagers who have babies never do marry. They head their own households, depend primarily upon public assistance and find themselves at age 30 grandmothers to their unwed children's babies," says Dorothy L. Height, president of the National Council of Negro Women.

Those young mothers invariably drop out of school when their first child is born and remain very poor throughout their lives. In recent years, sociologists have referred to this phenomenon as "the feminization of poverty."

Whatever it's called, it has produced a semi-permanent underclass of mothers and children trapped in a never-ending cycle of deprivation and despair.

"Several studies have found that the children of teenage parents are more likely to become adolescent parents themselves," notes Dr. Kristin A. Moore, a social psychologist.

The poverty rate for children in families where the mother is the only parent present is 56.0 percent, compared with 13.4 percent for children in other forms of households.

Approximately half of the entire budget of the federal government's Aid to Families with Dependent Children program goes to families in which the mother was a teenager when she bore her first child.

The problem among black families is one that must be primarily resolved by blacks themselves. A number of remedial programs have been initiated by black organizations, but the black community generally has not displayed much enthusiasm for confronting the issue since it was raised two decades ago in a landmark Labor Department report on "The Negro Family."

Citing illegitimacy, welfare dependency and similar symptoms, that 1965 report concluded that "the family structure of lower-class Negroes is highly unstable and in many urban centers is approaching complete breakdown."

The report added: "At the heart of the deterioration of the fabric of Negro society is the deterioration of the Negro family. It is the fundamental source of the weakness of the Negro community at the present time."

"For too long, we have been defensive about problems in our own communities which we should be tackling ourselves," admits John E. Jacob, president of the National Urban League.

That organization has identified teenage pregnancy and female heads-of-households as two of "five crucial areas" in which it is now taking action - but much remains to be done to restore a measure of self-respect and self-sufficiency to the nation's poor black families.

Condemned Texan changes his mind

HUNTSVILLE, Texas (AP) — A Texas Death Row inmate, known as "Animal," who demanded an execution date and auctioned off seats to view his death changed his mind and asked for a stay of execution because of his family, his lawyer said.

Roger DeGarmo, a 31-year-old drifter from California, had asked that no efforts be made on his behalf to stop his execution by injection, set for early Wednesday.

But after visiting with relatives, DeGarmo decided Saturday night to seek a reprieve, the inmate's attorney, Greg Gladden, said Monday.

The inmate, known as "Animal," gained notoriety for his unique plan to auction off three of the five witness spots a convict is allowed in the death chamber.

He said seven people bid for the seats — two of them offering $1,500 each — but he refused to identify the bidders. The money would be divided between DeGarmo's family and the family of the victim.

"The death penalty has become such a zoo — why not make money off it? Everybody else does," he said in a recent interview.

He also promised to provide play-by-play commentary for those watching him being put to death.

A request for a stay was filed Monday with State District Judge Charles Dickerson in Richmond and with the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals in Austin.

"It's a gift to his family," Gladden said. "He still believes it will cause him more pain and sacrifice and punishment worse than death. But he was willing to go along with the program for them. He apologized for the inconvenience in the timing."

DeGarmo, one of 225 men on Texas' death row, was sentenced to death for the 1979 abduction and slaying of Kimberly Ann Strickler, a

The 20-year-old woman had been shot to death Jan. 8, 1979, as she lay in the truck of her car, after being kidnapped from a Houston shopping center parking lot.

Another Texas death row inmate scheduled for execution early Wednesday was denied a stay.

In Houston, U.S. District Judge John Singleton refused to block the execution of Charles Bass, who also is scheduled to be put to death early Wednesday.

Bass, 29, was convicted in the 1979 slaying of a Houston City Marshal Charles Henry Baker.

His attorneys allege that Bass received inadequate counsel because his trial lawyer was being paid by a French movie producer. They have appealed to the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans.

Marcos backers' arrests ordered

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Defense Minister Juan Ponce Enrile today ordered the first arrests of prominent supporters of deposed President Ferdinand E. Marcos' government, two assemblymen accused in election-related killings.

A Defense Ministry announcement said assemblymen Orlando Dulay and Arturo Pacificador, an assistant majority floor leader in the assembly, were wanted for alleged involvement in killings of supporters of new President Corazon Aquino in the Feb. 7 presidential election.

Both assemblymen have been in hiding since Marcos fled the country two weeks ago.

The Defense Ministry said Enrile issued the order for the arrests of Pacificador and Dulay in a telephone call to Brig. Gen. Renato de Villa, commander of the Philippine Constabulary.

Pacificador has been accused of involvement in the Feb. 11 killing of former Antique provincial governor Evelio Javier, a local campaign leader for Mrs. Aquino, but so far faces no formal charges in that case. He faces multiple murder charges in the ambush-killing of seven of Javier's followers in the 1984 National Assembly elections. Javier ran against Pacificador in those elections.

Pacificador was last seen at the presidential palace hours before Marcos and his family fled Feb. 25, but was not among the 89-member entourage that accompanied Marcos to Hawaii.

The ministry said Dulay is wanted in connection with a series of killings of Mrs. Aquino's supporters in Quirino province north of Manila.

Meanwhile, a source on a government commission said a team of officials would be going to Hawaii to inspect documents Marcos took there that might provide evidence of vast financial holdings in New York, New Jersey and elsewhere.

The official, a member of President Corazon Aquino's new Good Government Commission, also told The Associated Press on Monday that the government had frozen bank accounts of more than a dozen Marcos associates in an effort to keep any more money from leaving the country.

A delegation of U.S. officials arrived in Manila today for a weeklong visit to assess the new Philippine government's need for U.S. assistance, the U.S. Embassy said.

The team, led by M. Peter McPherson, administrator of the U.S. Agency for International Development, and including officials from the Treasury, State and Defense departments, is to hold talks with President Corazon Aquino and other government officials during the week, the embassy said.

The bank accounts frozen by the new government total about $50 million, said the official, who spoke on condition he not be identified. He declined to identify the owners.

Jovito Salonga, chairman of the Good Government Commission, and other officials will make the trip to Hawaii, said the official. He did not indicate when the team would leave.

Marcos, his family and entourage fled the Philippines Feb. 26 after a church- and military-backed revolution toppled him from power and installed Mrs. Aquino as president.

Salonga has estimated Marcos and his associates carted between $5 billion and $10 billion out of the country during Marcos' 20 years in power.

The official said the documents held by U.S. Customs officials in Hawaii are believed to include evidence of property held by Marcos and his wife, Imelda, in New York and New Jersey, and possibly documentation of what is believed to be vast holdings elsewhere.

In a related development, a New Jersey judge issued a temporary restraining order Monday barring the sale of two properties Marcos allegedly owns there.

Black American reports beating

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — An American woman who described herself as "a black person in the wrong place," says a black police officer beat her with a truncheon for about 10 minutes during a raid on what police termed an illegal gathering outside a church center.

Beth Burris, 31, of Indianapolis told The Associated Press on Monday that she had received 17 cuts during the beating, two of them serious.

"If I had been white they wouldn't have touched me," said Ms. Burris. "I was a black person in the wrong place. They (the police) don't ask questions."

"What I've discovered is that this happens in South Africa every day," she said. "The police in this country can get away with whatever they want to get away with. They are above the law."

She said she had been in touch with the U.S. Embassy in Pretoria and would sue police for damages.

The beating took place outside a church center where she works as parents gathered to discuss student boycotts of schools, Ms. Burris said.

Two other workers and the Rev. Ndingani Phaswana, director of the Thodisa-Ditshaba Church Center in the Seshego black township, near Pietersburg in northern Transvaal Province, confirmed Ms. Burris' account.

Seshego is in Lebowa, one of South Africa's 10 black "homelands."

A major at the Seshego police station said he was not aware of Ms. Burris' case.

"There was an unlawful gathering at the church on Saturday," said the officer, also a black who refused to give his name.

Ms. Burris said in a telephone interview that she was outside the center when police arrived.

"A police van went by and five minutes later there were eight vans there. People began to run. I didn't know what to do. I thought, 'I haven't done anything, why should I run?' There's a kindergarten attached to the church. I went in there and sat on the grass in a courtyard. The police were chasing people."

"Three minutes later, a black policeman came and pulled out his sjambok (truncheon) and started to beat me. There was blood all over my clothes. I was screaming, 'I'm an American! I am working for the church!' He said, 'You are lying!' and kept beating me for about 10 minutes."

Negotiator moves to stop killing of more hostages

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — A physician seeking the release of French hostages held by Shiite Moslem extremists rushed to Beirut to prevent "further carnage" after kidnappers published photographs they say prove that they killed one captive.

Razah Raad, a French heart specialist who was born in Lebanon, drove from Damascus to Beirut late Monday upon hearing of a statement and photographs issued by Islamic Jihad purportedly showing the body of French hostage Michel Seurat.

He waited in a luxury hotel today to be contacted by the kidnappers in order to begin negotiations for the release of the French hostages.

Islamic Jihad, or Islamic Holy War, claimed last week to have killed Seurat, an employee of the French Center for Studies and Research of the Contemporary Middle East. Seurat was kidnapped last May 22 in Moslem west Beirut.

It also claims to hold two French diplomats, a journalist, and has claimed that it kidnapped six Americans missing in Lebanon. It said in a statement Monday that "the lives of the three remaining (French) hostages depend on how quickly the French government meets our demands, which are very clear and detailed."

The pro-Iranian fundamentalist group described Seurat as an "experienced spy." But it denied that it had abducted a four-man crew of France's Channel 2 television Saturday. The photos and statement were delivered to a Western news agency in Beirut on Monday.

Raad, the only man the kidnappers say will negotiate with, said upon arrival in Beirut he hoped to meet with the captors to prevent "further carnage."

After viewing the pictures of 37-year-old Seurat, Raad told The Associated Press: "I'm here to verify Seurat's death, and if it's true, prevent other deaths."

"I want to bring people to their senses. Nothing justifies these acts. These killings will gain nothing," he said.

Cultural door with Soviet Union now open

EDITOR'S NOTE—A six-year freeze in the cultural exchange program between the Soviet Union and the United States came to an end with the Summit Conference in Geneva. Three Soviet musicians, who were the first to arrive in this country following the thaw, had more on their minds than music.

By MARY CAMPBELL
AP Newsfeatures Writer

NEW YORK (AP)—One legacy of the Summit Conference in Geneva was summed up in the words of a Russian music conductor who came to New York in the vanguard of Soviet artists now scheduled to visit this country.

"The door that should never have been closed is now open," said the conductor, Yuri Temirkanov.

He was talking about the thaw in the freeze in the cultural exchange program between his country and the United States.

"No matter how humble and modest we may wish to be, in all honesty it is very nice to be the first," the 47-year-old conductor said, with Soviet pianist Nikolai Petrov, 42, serving as his interpreter.

The two performed in three concerts with the New York Philharmonic in January. In New York at the same time was a Russian composer, Rodion Shchedrin, 53, the husband of Bolshoi Ballet prima ballerina Maya Plisetskaya.

All three men have been in the United States before and all pursued international careers, in Europe and the Orient, during the six-year freeze on Soviet-American cultural exchanges.

That began in late 1979 shortly after a U.S. tour by the Bolshoi Ballet in which Alexander Godunov defected in New York and Leonid and Valentina Kozlov defected in Los Angeles.

The day after their New York concert, Petrov said, "If you had seen how the people stood up and acclaimed us! It was not that they acclaimed our performances. They acclaimed the Geneva accord."

In the interview, Temirkanov had more on his mind than music. "Today it is not possible to live without meetings between people," he said. "Only by this way can we become closer to each other and understand each other better. I hope we can move away or destroy the most awful thing that can exist in our time—war."

As for music, he says, "It is very important to come here, not only because it is a great pleasure to meet with American musicians and audiences. Musicians should play everything that exists in the international repertoire, independently of where they come from."

"We have hundreds of chamber orchestras in our country and they play a lot of contemporary music. Not only Russian music but American, German, French and so on."

Petrov explained that since a pact was signed about five years ago, it's easy to get foreign music scores through a copyright agency in Russia. "You can just order it, even synagogue music, and in three or four weeks it comes. Before, it was difficult."

Because there's such an interest in new music, Russian composers, even beginners, get their music played, says Shchedrin, who is president of the Composers' Union of the Russian Federation. New music doesn't have to be "okayed" by the government.

Last February, Shchedrin attended the Swedish premiere of "The Sea Gull" ballet and was interviewed by two journalists.

One suggested the Chekhov short story, "A Lady with a Little Dog," as a ballet subject. The ballet was premiered by the Bolshoi Nov. 20, starring Miss Plisetskaya.

The couple have no children. Children take time from a ballerina's career, Shchedrin says.

Pianist Petrov has a daughter, nearly 10, who's studying piano. And conductor Temirkanov, whose conservatory degree is in violin, has a 15-year-old son studying violin.

Temirkanov was invited to the New York Philharmonic to replace East German conductor Klaus Tennstedt who was scheduled to be guest conductor for two weeks in January but got sick in the late fall and canceled.

Couple's life revolves around furry 'family'

By TOM BICKERT
Beaver County Times

BEAVER, Pa. (AP)—Tom and Lois Black desperately needed a bigger place for their growing family when they were looking for a farm 18 years ago.

After all, they had 150 mouths to feed.

They moved from their home near Unionville to an 18-acre spread in Middle Lancaster Township, Butler County, in 1968. Four years later, Tom, 49, quit his job at St. Joe Resources Co. in Potter Township so he could devote his energies full time to the "family." He's never looked back.

Today, Tom and Lois continue to operate Oakwood Acres Chinchilla Farm on Route 19, about five miles north of Zelenople. The 150 chinchillas the Blacks brought with them in 1968 have grown to a herd of nearly 2,000 today and established the ranch as one of the largest in the country.

It's a far cry from the early days when Tom started with two chinchillas living in pens in his basement.

"I've always been an animal man, but how I got started in this business was almost by accident," Tom, a native of Center Township, says. "My cousin gave me a pair of them about 24 years ago and that got me interested in the business."

"They weren't really a very good pair, compared to what we're breeding now, but he had them and wanted to get rid of them. That started it all."

Tom's first investment in the chinchilla trade was a $2 book detailing their characteristics and traits. He bought about 20 more animals from another rancher in the area and soon the Blacks' basement at the Unionville home was no longer large enough to house the herd.

The family vehicles took a back seat to the furry animals and the two-car garage became the new shelter. Meanwhile, Tom and Lois were looking for a place where they could raise chinchillas in a full-scale operation.

"We looked for a farm for about two years before we found this place," Lois says, noting they wanted an old farmhouse to renovate, a little land and another building that could be used as the chinchilla ranch.

The place they found met all the requirements and more: There was land, a farmhouse, a barn, and a building that had been used by the previous owners as an American Indian museum.

Prior to that, coincidentally, the place had been used as a chinchilla ranch by one of the earliest breeders in the eastern United States.

That's when the Blacks admit they really began learning about the chinchilla, a furry member of the rodent family that hails from the Andes Mountains of South America. They grow to about half the size of a rabbit and have bushy tails similar to squirrels. Their prized fur is usually more than an inch deep and one of the softest types available.

From the moment they first started tending their original pair of chinchillas, the Blacks knew it was something they'd like to devote more time and energy to. Unfortunately, the cost of going into the breeding and marketing of the animals full time was prohibitive. So Tom continued to work regularly at St. Joe while Lois tended their fledgling business during the day.

The couple continued to learn while developing better breeds of chinchillas. In May 1972, Tom left the job he had held for 13 years, one that was nearly a family tradition since his father, brother and uncle also worked there.

His Oakwood Farm now has two climate-controlled buildings, each 24-30 feet wide and more than 100 feet long. Inside are long rows of pens in which the chinchillas are housed. Automation allows Tom to water and feed the entire herd in only a few hours. He feeds the herd food pellets that contain alfalfa.

During their lifetime, which lasts up to eight years, females will produce one to two litters per year, usually with two or three in a litter. Black currently has about 500 females and 80 males, which will produce a total herd of nearly 2,000 during the prime birth periods of spring and summer.

Buying home biggest American purchase

By The Associated Press

Buying a home is the biggest purchase most Americans will ever make, and it involves a grasp of financial strategies along with learning a new vocabulary, says a real estate consultant.

The process can be overwhelming for the first-time homebuyer, according to Dick Schlott, president of the New Jersey-based Schlott Realtors Co., who advises the first step should be the gathering of information.

"When you begin to seriously consider buying a home or a piece of land, you'll find that everyone has an opinion," he says, pointing out that real estate language includes such esoteric terms as "title insurance" and "points."

But buying real estate is not like purchasing an obscure item such as computer graphics equipment, Schlott adds.

"Friends and family members will have plenty of advice," he explains. "Use it to conduct your own consumer information survey. The same pro-con process that you've used to purchase a new car or a piece of audio equipment will be utilized in the home-buying process."

Schlott says potential purchasers should analyze their financial situation by making a list of their annual income, assets and liabilities.

"These calculations will help you foresee the outcome of the mortgage qualification check," he explains, adding "a good rule of thumb calculation to help you analyze your financial situation is what I call the 28-percent factor: 'Twenty-eight percent of your gross monthly income should go to your mortgage payment.'"

Schlott says mortgage payments include principal plus interest on the loan, one-12th of the annual real estate taxes and one-12th of the annual hazard insurance.

"Calculate the total cost of these three items," he says. "And if it fits within the 28 percent guideline, you're on your way."

Schlott suggests homebuyers should be prepared financially to buy when shopping because "with today's low interest rates and good market value, dream homes are going quickly — the home you like might not be available when you return in two weeks to make the purchase."

"Know your financing options and mortgage strategies before you make the rounds."

When it comes to paying for a home, buyers have an almost unlimited number of financing options from which to choose, according to Schlott, who describes the selection as a real "mortgage smorgasbord" — a table filled with exotic names like "wrap-arounds," "balloons" and "buy-downs."

Many, he explains, involve financing assistance from the home seller, while others are from regular financial institutions like banks and savings and loans organizations.

Schlott says reputable real estate sales associates can help walk the customer through the mortgage maze because they are familiar with the financing options and will make sure the correct mortgage is selected.

Dear Abby

Loose use of labor term may require you to tighten belt

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1986 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: In a recent letter, you incorrectly used the phrase "tight labor market" to refer to a situation where jobs are scarce. Actually, a tight labor market is one in which job openings are plentiful and workers who don't like their work can easily quit and find other employment. Economists use the phrase "loose labor market" to describe job scarcity.

Your mistake in terminology is commonly made. So keep the following rhyme in mind:

When the labor market is tight
Tell your boss to fly a kite.
But when the labor market is loose,
Saying that will cook your goose.

DANIEL J.B. MITCHELL,
UCLA PROFESSOR

logical parent, and believe it or not, the "donor" was so well-matched that both our children resemble their "father."

LUCKY US
IN PASADENA

DEAR LUCKY: Lucky, indeed. And boo to that insensitive doctor.

DEAR ABBY: You mentioned "the rhythm system" as one of the many methods of birth control.

First, I appreciate your respect for the Catholics' objection to artificial birth control, but, Abby, "the rhythm system" is a thing of the past. Today there are many family planning organizations that teach natural methods of birth control. The most popular one is the "symptothermal" method. As the name implies, it is a matter of learning to read the signs of fertility. This method is not only approved by the Catholic Church, it is extremely effective whether a woman's cycle is regular or irregular, whether she is nursing or approaching menopause.

Please pass this information on.

PREFERS THE NATURAL WAY

DEAR PROFESSOR: You could have fooled me. I erroneously assumed that because the terminology "money is tight" means "money is scarce," the same held true for the labor market. Thanks for wising me up.

Although flying a kite was an electrifying experience for Benjamin Franklin, I wouldn't recommend telling one's boss to fly one under any circumstances.

DEAR ABBY: I was appalled at the ignorance of that doctor who opposed artificial insemination for the unmarried 35-year-old professional woman who wanted to have a child before it was too late. He gave the impression that artificial insemination was done as a lark with a turkey baster. Actually, it's done under hygienic conditions in a doctor's office only after a great deal of investigation and many consultations. Some facts:

One out of every six American couples of reproductive age is infertile, and 40 percent of the cases are attributed to the infertility of the male.

Twenty-six states have already passed laws legitimizing artificial insemination, and approximately 20,000 babies are born every year because of it.

How do I know so much about it? Had it not been for artificial insemination, my husband and I would not be the proud parents of two beautiful, healthy children. Unfortunately, at age 31, my husband had surgery for testicular cancer, which rendered him sterile. Adoption would have meant years of waiting, but with artificial insemination we were able

DEAR PREFERS: Thanks for bringing me up-to-date. The symptothermal method is effective in reverse, too. It teaches women who want to conceive how to determine their most fertile period.

'Strength of schedule' hurt SWC teams

DALLAS (AP) — That SOS you hear from the Southwest Conference stands for a "Strength of Schedule" lesson they've just been taught by the NCAA Basketball Selection Committee.

No at-large teams from the SWC were selected Sunday for the NCAA Tournament, meaning that only tournament champion and automatic qualifier Texas Tech will fly the SWC flag.

The Red Raiders play Thursday against Georgetown.

The SWC had the fewest invites of any major conference. Even the Sun Belt Conference got four teams into the 64-team tournament. It was small consolation that a record four SWC teams received bids to the National Invitation Tournament.

Because Texas Christian, Southern Methodist, Texas, and Texas A&M couldn't guarantee the NIT a minimum gross of $50,000, they will have to hit the road to some hostile arenas.

TCU visits Montana on Tuesday, while SMU is at Brigham

Young, A&M is at Wyoming and Texas travels to New Mexico on Thursday.

"The strength of schedule killed us in the conference," said TCU Athletic Director Frank Windeger, a member of the selection committee. "We had few victories against teams in the top 50 in the country."

The SWC has a 1-19 record against teams in the NCAA Tournament field. They were 1-14 against Top Twenty teams.

"The conference has a message from the NCAA now that it is going to have to beef up its non-conference schedule," Windeger said. "I think the league will be much improved next year."

"We were a very young league this season," said Fred Jacoby, commissioner of the SWC. "And we just didn't have a strong enough showing."

The SWC was snubbed only two years after Houston had a team in the NCAA Final Four three consecutive times.

"Houston and Arkansas were down this year and their strong national rankings in the past have helped the league overall," said Jacoby. "None of our teams were in the Top Twenty this year and that hurt our power ratings and strength of schedule."

Texas A&M Coach Shelby Metcalf said the SWC office "should be ashamed" that the league doesn't have more national recognition than it does.

"It's an injustice," said Metcalf, whose team won 20 games for the sixth time in his career. "I thought we'd get a bid. I really did. We played all Division I teams but I guess I don't understand the system."

Windeger couldn't even get his own Horned Frogs into the tournament.

It's the first time since 1977 that the SWC hasn't had at least two teams in the NCAA field.

The SWC can at least be proud of its women's teams. Arkansas, Texas, and Texas Tech won bids to the NCAA women's tournament.

Hagler retains title

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Marvelous Marvin Hagler likes to say nothing pleases him more than a good fight. Against John "The Beast" Mugabi, he got that — and more.

Hagler, pushed hard by a determined Mugabi, battered the challenger through the late rounds Monday night before knocking him out at 1:29 of the 11th round to retain his undisputed middleweight title.

It was a crowd-pleasing performance by Hagler, who appeared to dominate much of the bout, but had trouble putting Mugabi away. And, at least in the eyes of the ringside judges, Mugabi was in the fight until the end, trailing by three points on two cards and only one on the third.

"It wasn't that close," insisted Hagler. "I thought I had full control of the whole fight."

The victory, coupled with Thomas Hearns' devastating first-round knockout of James Shuler an hour earlier, set up a planned Hagler-Hearns rematch. A prospect Hagler wasn't was looking forward to after going 11 bruising rounds with Mugabi.

"I've given it a lot of thought ... this may be my last fight," he said immediately after the bout.

But after getting some attention to a bruised right eye, a shower and a change of clothes, Hagler backed off a bit.

"I'm not committing myself to anything now," he said. "I just got through with a tough fight. Let me get home a put it together."

Promoter Bob Arum said he had few doubts Hagler would keep fighting, especially with more than $10 million awaiting Hagler for a rematch of his third-round knockout of Hearns last April.

"Sometime in September we're looking for a Hagler-Hearns rematch," said Arum.

And Hearns, who has already signed for the rematch, said he couldn't wait.

"There's never a day, a time, a minute throughout the day that I don't think about it," said Hearns, who needed, and got, an impressive win to keep his rematch hopes alive.

Hagler, fighting for the first time since his triumph over Hearns, started cautiously against the Ugandan, throwing jabs and staying away from the vaunted power of Mugabi.

Mugabi managed to land several shots to Hagler's head early, backing the champion up on several occasions. But Mugabi's punches were often wild and Hagler was able to get inside of them to land effectively.

"He gave me a good fight and I love a good fight," said Hagler. "I said through all of this hype that this would be an exciting fight."

With Hagler beginning to take control, the stage was set for a wild sixth round — a round that rivaled the almost non-stop first-round action in the Hagler-Hearns fight.

Hagler opened up midway through the sixth round, stinging Mugabi with flurries of punches to the head.

Incaviglia displays hitting talent

POMPANO BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Hitting home runs is what Pete Incaviglia does best but he's also becoming adept at overcoming questions about his ability to make the rare transition from college to the major leagues with the Texas Rangers.

Incaviglia set NCAA records with 48 home runs in one season and 100 home runs in three seasons at Oklahoma State, using a lively aluminum bat.

But in his first batting practice with the Rangers, he put on a hitting display with a wooden bat that had Manager Bobby Valentine diving for cover.

In an explosive spring training batting practice debut, the 1985 Oklahoma State All-American knocked Valentine, who was pitching batting practice, to the ground with a line drive.

"I thought he was still using the aluminum bat," Rangers hitting coach Art Howe said.

Incaviglia then drilled a baseball off the right-centerfield fence, 380-feet away, leaving a hole in the one-inch plywood barrier.

"I was glad to show that I could do it with a wooden bat," Incaviglia said. "That's been said about me for a long time."

Valentine also is satisfied that Incaviglia can play rightfield.

"The scouting reports were wrong," Valentine said. "His arm is strong enough that he can play rightfield."

Still, Incaviglia will have an uphill battle to earn a spot on the major league roster.

Among current major leaguers, only New York Yankee Dave Winfield and Atlanta's Bob Horner have made the leap from college to the major leagues.

Incaviglia isn't lacking in confidence.

"I'm not in awe of anybody, I think I can hit everybody in the league," Incaviglia said. "I'm confident of my stroke and I'm confident of my outfield play."

"You want the fly ball to be coming to you. You want to be the one facing 3-2 in the bottom of the ninth. That's where you want to be."

"I love to be in those spots because I believe I'm mentally strong enough to win those battles."

Valentine hopes it works just as Incaviglia plans.

"I'm happy that he's wearing a Texas Rangers uniform because I think this is a guy who will not be denied his day in the sun in the major league," Valentine said.

"He might be delayed and that delaying process will just depend on his mental maturity. I think his physical capabilities are ready right now to play in the major leagues."

Incaviglia, who's been hitting homers since Little League, says he doesn't go for the fence with every pitch.

"All I think about is making good hard contact," he said. "If I make good contact, I don't care if the ball is in, out or down the middle, it's going out of the park."

"I get more of a thrill if it's a home run, but if I hit a double to win a ball game, then I'm happy."

Teammates will help him overcome inexperience, Incaviglia said.

"They say 'this guy's got a slider that guy's got a changeup,'" he said. "As I get around the league I'll be a better player because I'll know myself what they do."

Incaviglia was a first round pick by Montreal in last June's amateur draft.

But he decided the Expos weren't for him, leading to a trade that sent Rangers pitcher Bob Sebra and infielder Jim Anderson to Montreal.

"I had a few mishaps in Montreal," he said. "I just decided after one mishap that I didn't want to play in Montreal."

Berry top player

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — Walter Berry, 6-foot-8 junior center for St. John's, was named Tuesday the Big East Conference's Player of the Year by the league's basketball coaches.

Berry led the Big East in scoring, 22.4, and was second in rebounding, 10.5, in leading the Redmen to a share of the Big East regular-season title with Syracuse.

Dwayne "Pearl" Washington, Syracuse's junior guard, was the only repeater on this season's Big East first team. Other first team members were forwards Harold Pressley, a senior from Villanova and Reggie Williams, a junior from Georgetown.

The second team consisted of guard Rafael Addison, center Rony Seikaly and forward Wendell Alexis, all of Syracuse, guard Earl Kelley of Connecticut and forward David Wingate of Georgetown.

Guards Billy Donovan of Providence and Michael Jackson of Georgetown, and forwards Charles Smith and Demetreus Gore of Pittsburgh and Roger McCready comprised the third team.

Dana Barros, Boston College point guard who averaged 14 points in Big East play, was named the conference's Freshman of the Year. Pressley was chosen the Defensive Player of the Year.

Last week, St. John's Lou Carnesecca was named the Big East's Coach of the Year.

Cowboys-Bears may play in England

LONDON (AP) — Negotiations are under way to play a National Football League exhibition game at Britain's Wembley Stadium this summer and the Super Bowl-champion Chicago Bears and the Dallas Cowboys are among the teams being sought, officials said Tuesday.

The Bears, whose 46-10 victory over New England for the NFL championship in January was televised live in Britain, could play the Dallas Cowboys at the 75,000-seat stadium Aug. 3, the national tabloid Today reported Monday.

In New York, the NFL said a game in Britain was in the works but that nothing had been signed and two teams other than the Bears and Cowboys could be involved. An announcement on the game is expected next month, the NFL said.

In Chicago, the Bears said a game against the Cowboys at Wembley has been discussed but that final approval must come from the NFL Players Association.

Martin Corrie, a spokesman for Wembley, said today that no NFL exhibitions were on the stadium's schedule but added, "We're obviously talking to various people about various events."

Asked if the Bears and Cowboys would be involved in any game that might be played here, Corrie replied: "Should a game be held at Wembley, then we would like to see the best in American football."

Harvesters fare well in regional tennis

LUBBOCK — The Pampa High tennis team won two of three matches at the Regional Team Tournament last week.

The Harvesters opened the tournament with an 11-0 loss to the No. 1 state-ranked Austin-Westlake, but bounced back to defeat Brownwood, 15-3, and Fort Worth-Crowley, 11-7.

Of the ten teams qualifying for regionals, Pampa Coach Jay Barrett said the consolation victories placed his team fifth or sixth. One of the schools left before playing the consolation finals.

"This town should be very proud of not only the way the team played, but also of the way they represented their school," said Barrett. "Even after losing in the first round, they held together and decided to prove someone in the consolation bracket, which they did."

Barrett said the players gained added experience playing in the regional tournament, even if nothing else was gained.

"I know that the tournament will prove its worth the rest of this year and even into next year," said Barrett. This is just the beginning of what will become a proud winning tradition for Pampa tennis."

Pampa plays Tascosa today in Amarillo and then hosts Canyon at 2 p.m. Saturday.

Widespread flooding forecast

Record-high lake levels are predicted for this spring

WASHINGTON (AP)—Spring flooding could threaten shoreline communities along the upper Great Lakes and spill waters onto the streets of Salt Lake City, the National Weather Service is warning.

"This is the year of the lakes, where we have some alarming problems," Michael D. Hudlow, director of the service's Office of Hydrology, said Monday.

"Especially alarming this year are the Great Lakes, where new record high levels are expected to be set," Hudlow said. He said lake levels could be 10 inches higher than last year's record levels by June.

"The potential for flooding and severe property damage and erosion is extremely high for the shoreline of Lakes Erie, Michigan, Huron and Superior," Hudlow told a news conference. The same danger exists for Lake St. Clair, he added, but not Lake Ontario, which benefits from the drainage of the St. Lawrence River.

Some lakeside areas already have been declared disaster areas by the state of Michigan, Hudlow observed, and a December storm caused millions of dollars in damage throughout the region.

And, he added, the Great Salt Lake in Utah is at its highest level since 1875.

"In recent years, we have seen flood waters flowing down the streets of Salt Lake City," he said. "I think we could see that again."

The Great Salt Lake experienced its greatest two-week volume increase on record between mid-February and March 1, Hudlow said, and the lake normally crests about June 1. Utah Lake is also above normal and rising, he said.

Flood potential is moderate in many other areas, but could increase in danger, depending on weather conditions.

Hudlow said the forecast for moderate danger in some regions depends on normal spring weather. If an early warming, or unexpected rain, speeds the snowmelt, more serious floodproblems could occur.

Areas noted for such possible problems include the Wind River and Sweet River in Wyoming; North Platte River in Wyoming, Colorado and Nebraska; Boulder, Big Thompson and Cache La Poudre creeks in Colorado; Moreau River in South Dakota; and the Big Sioux River in the Dakotas and Minnesota.

Heavy snow in the Rocky, Sierra and Appalachian mountains could cause some flooding, depending on melt conditions.

No serious flood threat was seen in the Ohio River basin, though, and the danger was seen as only remote along the lower Mississippi.

Some astronauts' remains reported secretly returned

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP)—The grim work of identifying the remains of some of Challenger's crew could also help authorities understand the causes of the explosion that destroyed the space shuttle.

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration has maintained tight secrecy about the search since it announced Sunday that astronaut remains had been found in the broken crew cabin at the bottom of the Atlantic.

The agency has not acknowledged that remains have been recovered, but sources who spoke on condition of anonymity said some bodies or parts of bodies were brought secretly to Port Canaveral on Saturday night aboard the Navy salvage ship USS Preserver, which came in without running lights.

The sources said the remains were transferred to a hospital at Patrick Air Force Base, 25 miles south of here, and that forensic experts began examining them Monday.

NASA said it would respect family wishes and remain silent until the recovery and identification processes are completed. It was not clear what NASA would do with the remains once they were identified.

Winds that whipped up 8 foot waves prevented Preserver's divers from dropping to the ocean bottom Monday and the ship returned to port in late afternoon without recovering additional material.

The outlook for today is improved, with 2- to 4-foot seas predicted.

Private boats were barred from an area two miles around the search area, and private planes were kept five miles away. Sections of the cabin were found 18 miles northeast of Cape Canaveral at a depth of 100 feet.

Searchers hope to recover from the cabin compartment three magnetic tapes that recorded performance of some of Challenger's systems and could provide evidence on the cause of the explosion 73 seconds after liftoff Jan. 28.

The accident killed New Hampshire schoolteacher Christa McAuliffe; commander Richard Scobee; pilot Michael Smith; and crewmembers Judith Resnick; Ronald McNair; Ellison S. Onizuka; and Gregory Jarvis.

The sources did not know if the remains of all seven had been located.

The pathology examinations were not only for examination, but also could help determine whether the astronauts were burned to death, poisoned by fumes, died from sudden loss of cabin pressure, were killed by flying debris or by impact with the water, or drowned.

Determining the exact cause of death might be difficult because the bodies have been in the water nearly six weeks and may have been the victims of sea scavengers.

But Ms. Resnick's father, Marvin, said NASA believed the bodies could be identified even though they did not appear to be in one piece. The New York Times reported today.

The sources reported several of the crewmembers' private effects had been recovered, including tape recorders on which they had planned to record their impressions of the flight.

South Africa bans two black leaders

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP)—The government today imposed five-year "banning" orders on the two most influential black activists in the troubled eastern Cape Province.

The orders were served on Henry Fazzie, regional vice president of the United Democratic Front anti-apartheid coalition, and Mkhuseleli Jack, president of the Port Elizabeth Youth Congress.

The banning orders, signed by Minister of Law and Order Louis le Grange, said the men "pose a threat to the maintenance of law and order."

The orders, which were confirmed by regional police spokesman Col. Gerrie van Rooyen, restrict Fazzie and Jack to the Port Elizabeth district, confine them to their homes on weekends and holidays and require them to stay at home from 7 p.m. to 6 p.m. During the week.

They also are barred from attending any political gatherings and from disseminating political information.

Oscar-winning actor Milland dead at 78

TORRANCE, Calif. (AP)—Ray Milland, who played opposite some of Hollywood's top female stars in the 1940s and won an Oscar for his portrayal of a tormented alcoholic in "The Lost Weekend," has died of cancer at age 78.

Milland, who learned only within the last few months that he had cancer, died in his sleep Monday at Torrance Medical Center, said agent Ronnie Leif. He was admitted Friday, said hospital spokeswoman Carmela Welte.

Born Jan. 3, 1908, as Reginald Truscott-Jones in Neath, Wales, the son of a steel mill superintendent, Milland appeared in nearly 150 films, including the classic "Dial M For Murder," and horror films in the 1970s.

One of his best known roles was the alcoholic writer in "The Lost Weekend," which won him an Oscar for best actor in 1945. The film, co-starring Jane Wyman, also won for best picture and best director for Billy Wilder.

In his 1974 autobiography, "Wide-Eyed in Babylon," Milland wrote that his portrayal created a domestic crisis. A friend saw him stagger down a New York street during the filming, but failed to see a camouflaged camera. The friend called Milland's wife, Muriel, to report that her husband had become a bum, prompting a frantic call from her for reassurance.

"He was a very fine gentleman," said Barbara Stanwyck,

RAY MILLAND
...in 'Lost weekend' role who appeared with Milland in "California" in 1947. "I enjoyed knowing him and working with him. He will be missed by all of us in the industry."

"He was a very good actor, a very talented man," said Ginger Rogers, who co-starred with Milland in several films, including "The Major and the Minor" in 1942 and "Lady in the Dark" in 1944. "He was somewhat of a distant gentleman in that he kept his own counsel."

More recently, Milland had a recurring role as Stephanie Powers' father in the television series "Hart to Hart."

Other TV roles included the mini-series "Rich Man, Poor Man" in 1976.

Prison improvements won't stop, board says

PALESTINE, Texas (AP) — Budget cuts by the Texas Department of Corrections will not affect the department's court order to build new facilities and improve living conditions for inmates, prison board chairman Alfred Hughes said.

"We're not cutting any associated items," Hughes said Monday. "But we've stopped all capital projects, except those that are court-related."

Hughes said the TDC will be able to comply with only half of Gov. Mark White's request for all state agencies to cut their budgets by 13 percent in light of the state's oil-related economic problems.

Items that were eliminated, he said, include a new department administration building and projects like parking lots.

Hughes also said the department would not attempt to renegotiate the federal court agreement in hopes of trimming costs.

"That would be a waste of all our time," he said.

Hughes, speaking during a meeting of the Texas Board of Corrections, said the budget cuts for his department are still undergoing scrutiny and no decisions will be made for a couple of weeks. He said a special board meeting likely will be held to approve the final cuts.

"This is a little different from other agencies," Hughes said. "Much of our funds are not discretionary. We've predicted flip-flop Sunday in the ring at Castellon in Southern Spain. (AP Laserphoto)

still got to feed inmates."

James Lynaugh, deputy corrections director for finance, said the department already has put a temporary halt to promotions, transfers, rehiring and all hiring except for "critical positions," such as medical staff and corrections officers.

In addition, he said, all capital purchases have been stopped, out-of-state travel must have prior approval and department-paid mileage for personal car use has been halted to encourage use of TDC-owned vehicles.

"We need to finish an entire review before we make decisions (on the overall budget)," Lynaugh said.

"In the meantime, we're attempting to enforce the governor's order," he said. "We'll do the best we can. But we will not impair TDC in regards to court commitment and health and safety."

On other items, board member James Parsons said discussions are still under way with local officials in Huntsville for administration of the annual prison rodeo. The corrections department wants to get out of the business of staging the rodeo, but will do so once more in October.

TDC Deputy Director James Riley said the system's violence problem continues to decline, with incidents this year down 63 percent from the same period a year ago. The last prison homicide occurred in September.

"We're certainly encouraged by these long-term trends," Riley said.

Repeat heart bypasses risky, but beneficial

ATLANTA (AP) — People with bad hearts can benefit from three, four or even five coronary bypass operations over their lifetimes, but the repeat surgery is riskier than the first time on the operating table, a new study says.

Coronary bypass is one of the most common forms of surgery in the United States, where it's performed on about 200,000 people each year.

Because of new disease and other problems, however, the operation sometimes must be performed again after a few years. And these re-operations now account for an estimated 5 percent of all bypass operations on Americans.

Dr. Jerold Brenowitz of St. Mary's Hospital in Milwaukee studied the cases of 87 people who required as many as five bypass operations. They ranged in age from a 28-year-old diabetic man who underwent three bypasses to a 71-year-old woman who also had a third operation.

Brenowitz reported his findings Monday at the annual scientific meeting of the American College of Cardiology.

"We've shown that you can do it," he said. "The initial mortality is higher than you would like, but it's not inordinately high, and the long-term results appear to be very good."

Eight of the patients, or 9 percent, died soon after surgery. Five more died during an average followup period of three years.

Of the survivors, though, half said they were free of pain, and nearly all the others said they felt better than before their latest surgery.

Most people who require repeat bypass operations are suffering severe angina, a form of chest pain that results when the heart is deprived of blood.

In coronary heart disease, the arteries that feed the heart muscle become clogged. To correct the condition, surgeons remove a piece of vein or artery from elsewhere in the body and use it to shuttle blood around the narrowed artery.

Brenowitz said that of the patients he studied, 15 percent needed new surgery because one of the grafted blood vessels had failed. The grafts may fail for many reasons, including a mistake by the surgeon, such as accidentally sewing the blood vessel shut.

Police investigate campus prostitution

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — The arrest of two Brown University seniors on prostitution charges has sparked an investigation into whether the women are members of a sex-for-money ring involving college students, police say.

One of the 21-year-old seniors at the Ivy League school charged with prostitution said Monday that she and her friend were innocent, and accused police of violating their rights.

Dana E. Smith, of Avon, Conn., and Rebecca R. Kidd, of Orange, Conn., were arrested Thursday, police said. Both were arraigned and released, said Deputy Police Chief Walter Clark. He refused to discuss specifics of the probe.

"All I can say is that there is an investigation of prostitution being conducted," he said. "We haven't linked anybody to this investigation yet."

Detectives said no information on the arrests would be available until today.

WJAR-TV of Providence, quoting sources it did not name, said the women got involved in the alleged ring by answering a personal ad in a newspaper.

Ms. Smith, in a telephone interview, declined to discuss the circumstances of her and Ms. Kidd's arrest, citing advice from her attorney.

Tornadoes batter three states

By The Associated Press

The National Guard patrolled Covington, Ky., today under a state of emergency declared after at least 20 tornadoes sliced through three states, killing five people and injuring dozens of others.

Some of the tornadoes that struck in Indiana, Ohio and Kentucky, spinning off winds up to 90 mph, also left Cincinnati's airport—across the Ohio River in Erlanger, Ky.—a shambles, with up to 50 planes damaged, officials said.

"It's a complete disaster," said San Juan Romero, an air traffic manager at the airport. "A bomb could not have done the damage this has done."

Across the three states, the storms and tornadoes tore roofs from buildings, sent mobile homes flying and ripped into the city of Covington, also across the Ohio River from Cincinnati.

Two men died in Indiana, one of them when a barn collapsed on him after he had sought refuge inside. There were two deaths in Ohio when twisters flattened houses. A man using a chain to hold down a barn roof in western Kentucky died when it blew off, dragging him 78 feet, said County Coroner John Muster.

In Johnson County, south of Indianapolis, a roof at a day care center caved in on 130 pre-schoolers, but only three suffered injuries, all of them minor, said Rhea Furry, the center's director.

Cincinnati airport spokesman Ted Bushelman said six people suffered minor injuries when the control tower windows blew out.

"There are also 30 to 50 airplanes damaged beyond repair," Bushelman said. Most of the damaged airplanes were small Cessnas, Pipers and a few Lear jets. The airport was closed to flights for two hours while debris was cleared.

In Covington, officials declared an emergency and warned non-residents to keep out after high winds knocked out power to most of the city and ripped the roofs from dozens of buildings. About 50 National Guard troops were sent there, said Gordon Nichols of the state Division of Disaster and Emergency Services.

"At about 20 minutes till 5, we heard this really strong wind. The next thing, it sounded like a bomb went off," said John Carey, who was working in his advertising agency near downtown Covington.

"We saw the wind coming down the street and toppling trees, and we heard glass shattering and debris landing," Carey said.

Police cordoned off large sections of the city. Nichols said no estimate of damage could be made until today when disaster crews begin inspection.

Officials said high winds damaged at least 300 homes in Lexington, Ky.

The tornadoes and winds were spawned by a cold front that rapidly moved across the Ohio Valley and met warm, moist air, said Pete Reynolds at the National Weather Service's Severe Storms Center in Kansas City, Mo.

Tornadoes and winds up to 90 mph swept through these states Monday, killing at least five people. At least 60 others were injured. (AP Laserphoto)

Utility freezes executives' pay

BEAUMONT, Texas (AP) — A salary freeze for about 2,000 Gulf States Utilities executives marks the latest in a string of austerity measures implemented by the Beaumont-based utility.

Company officials announced Monday that salaries for workers will be frozen indefinitely effective April 1. About 3,000 workers under union contracts are unaffected but could face similar pressures when their contract expires in June, officials said.

"We regret that this action has become necessary," GSU Chairman Paul Murrill told affected executives in a company memorandum. "I am sure you join me in the earnest hope that our company will come through this crisis in the shortest period of time."

The compensation board of GSU directors voted Thursday to freeze management salaries, one day after Wall Street threatened further downgrading of GSU bonds and preferred stock.

Calling All Home Makers
Bright To You
By Aline Johnson

DON'T BE AFRAID TO ASK

Sometimes women are reluctant to ask for help in choosing and arranging furnishings for their homes. But we don't want you to be afraid to ask us for this help.

We are ready, willing and able to do it, and in fact, we invite you to come in and talk over your particular decorating situation.

We want you to know that we have the experience in helping people like yourself with furniture and other furnishings.

And it doesn't matter if you have a big budget or a small one. We've helped many people who must work on a limited budget. We can work around existing furniture that you now have and want to keep, suggesting, for example, just the few pieces you might need at this time to brighten your home, or we can, of course, help if you want a whole room-full or a whole house-full of furniture.

We've helped newlyweds just starting out as well as those who've been home makers for many years.

The main thing to remember is that no matter how small your budget may be, you should not hesitate to come in and talk over your furnishing needs and hopes. We can evaluate your family's way of life and suggest furnishings tailored to your specific situation. Remember, don't be afraid to ask. Stop in.
