U.S. defends continuation of attacks

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration says it acted in defense of international seaways and U.S. forces when it continued to pound Libyan naval vessels and an anti-aircraft base hours after Libya stopped firing the missiles the Americans say started the fight started the fight.

Calm prevailed into the early morning hours today in the disputed Gulf of Sidra. But for a second straight day Tuesday, the U.S. 6th Fleet directed missile fire against Libyan forces. Four Libyan ships were hit in the two days of fighting, three of them sunk. And a Libyan radar site was struck Monday, then hit again less than four hours later.

U.S. officials in Washington issued conflicting and admittedly erroneous reports early Tuesday that the Libyans continued to fire on U.S. warplanes. They later justified the second round of firing by saying the Navy's 30-ship armada had orders declaring any Libyan plane or boat approaching them to have hostile intentions.

"We have been given ample evidence of hostile Libyan intentions ... and we will defend ourselves," Pentagon spokesman Robert Sims declared, referring to Libya's launching of ground-to-air missiles against U.S. planes on Monday.

In disclosing new confrontations Tuesday, the Pentagon and White House initially said as many as 12 missiles had been fired at U.S. planes and that some of the additional missile launches had occurred Tuesday.

Later, however, both the White House and Pentagon said Libya had not fired any missiles at U.S. planes since 1:14 p.m. EST Monday, or 7:14 p.m. in the Mediterranean. Only six missiles can be absolutely confirmed as having been fired but there were probably more, Sims said.

"We are asserting the right of passage, one of the oldest American foreign policy positions," said Rep. Thomas Foley, D-Wash., the third-ranking Democrat in the House leadership.

Libya claims the 120-mile gulf as its own. The United States regards it as international waters, recognizing only a 12-mile territorial limit along the Libyan White House spokesman Larry Speakes insisted the United States used force Monday only because the Libyans fired Sovietbuilt anti-aircraft missiles at American planes operating over the gulf.

He said it was not President Reagan's intent to punish Libyan leader Col. Moammar Khadafy for supporting international terrorism, a charge the United States had repeatedly leveled against him.

However, when asked if the United States wanted to put Khadafy "back in his box," Speakes replied: "Certainly, if the man would conduct himself within the norms of international behavior, he could run his country. But when he starts exporting terrorism and expanding and expanding, that's when he needs to be put back in his box."

The New York Times reported today that White House officials have said the plan to engage Libyan forces in the gulf was approved after intelligence reports disclosed Libya was "zeroing in" on American diplomats as potential terrorist targets. It did not identify the offi-

City approves audit report, fills Main Street board spot

By LARRY HOLLIS Staff Writer

Pampa city commissioners accepted the 1984-1985 comprehensive financial report and audit during their regular meeting Tuesday evening.

Prepared by H. V. Robertson and Co. of Amarillo, copies of the report will be available at Lovett Memorial Library for reference and check-out, City Manager Bob Hart said.

"I feel very confident that we had a good audit," stated Commissioner Bob Curry.

Commissioner Clyde Carruth also expressed support of the audit, saying "it's the best I've seen" since he has served on the commission.

The commission appointed Nancy Duncan to the Main Street Advisory Board, bringing the board up to its full membership of 15 members.

Commissioners also approved by-laws for the Main Street Advisory Board, which will specify goals and priorities for the implementation of the Main Street Project for the economic revitalization of the downtown business area.

Commissioner Joe Reed raised questions about which businesses could apply for the low interest loans made available for the

Hart explained the loans were mainly for downtown businesses, especially those involved in historical renovation of their buildings in keeping with the concept of the Main Street Project. The advisory board would have to approve designs for the businesses seeking the loans, he

Main Street Project Manager Lyn Moulton said businesses should contact their banks first about the loans and then approach the advisory board for design approval.

Hart said some exceptions for the loans might be allowed for businesses outside the main downtown business area if historical renovation was involved.

While the loan project is aimed mainly at the downtown area, all businesses in the city can participate in the workshops and seminars involved with the project, he said.

In other matters, the commission:

- approved the final plat for Braum Place, located north of Culberson-Stowers Chevrolet;

 authorized payment of $11,252.38 from Certificates of Obligation to Wagner and Klein, Inc., for architectural services; declared Monday, April 21, as a holiday for city employees in observance of the Texas Sesquicentennial, and

- approved accounts payable. Following an executive session, the commission authorized the city staff to secure bids on the acquistion of land for future city use, subject to refusal if the land does not meet the city's criteria.

The commission honored Sgt. Charlie Love of the Pampa Police Department as employee of the month. Love, who has served with the department for more than 14 years, was recognized as "a dedicated police officer who is committed to the service" of the people and of the city.

Reading from a resolution,
Carruth noted Love had rendered assistance to citizens "in a considerate manner" going beyond his regular duties.

In his report session, Hart said five persons will be attending a one-day orientation workshop for the TEXCEL readiness program in Amarillo on Monday, April 7, from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.

The workshop will focus on three primary areas: TEXCEL readiness schedule and requirements; community assessment and formulation of a local economic development strategy; and establishing an economic development budget to support the strategy.

Hart reported contracts had been awarded for the widening, resurfacing and installation of traffic signals for road improvements on Hwy. 60 (Brown) and Hwy. 70 (Hobart). Successful bidder was Lewis Construction Co. of Dumas, with a bid of $387,754.

The contract calls for increasing the turning radius, modifying traffic signals and resurfacing the intersection of Hwy. 60 at Hwy 70. Also, Hwy. 70 will be planed and resurfaced from Hwy. 60 north .7 mile to Hwy. 152 (Alcock).

Jerry Raines of Pampa will be the State Department of Highways and Public Transportation resident engineer directly supervising the work, expected to require about six months for completion.

Hart said bids had been received on the City Hall renovation. The lowest is $897,100, "a lot higher than what I had anticipated," he said. The staff will review the renovation plans to trim back some areas to keep spending more in line with what had been estimated, he said.

The city will be keeping a complaint register regarding cable television services in the city, Hart said. A copy of the register will be forwarded to Sammons Communications regularly. The register also will be kept for study when franchise renewal comes up, Hart said.

In other matters, Hart discussed a proposal for placement of sculptures in the city parks, the preparation of an employee newsletter, the annual report for Lovett Memorial Library and quality circles for employee management training.

Sandinista troops trapped

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras (AP) — More than 1,500 Nicaraguan soldiers who pursued U.S.-backed Contra rebels into Honduras are trying to fight their way out again, but are meeting fierce rebel resistance, military intelligence sources said.

A spokesman for the U.S. Embassy told The Associated Press late Tuesday: "The anti-Sandinistas performed efficiently ... and they continue doing so after killing in combat more than 100 soldiers of the regular Nicaraguan army, which is now receding."

The spokesman, who refused to be identified, said he had no additional details. However, Honduran military sources said the Sandinistas were facing about 3,000 members of the Nicaraguan Democratic Force, or FDN, the largest of the Contra groups seeking to overthrow the leftist Sandinista government in Nicaragua.

"The invading troops now want to return to Nicaragua, but that situation is being impeded by the insurgent forces, who continue inflicting large numbers of casualties on them," one source told the AP.

President Jose Azcona Hoya of Honduras on Tuesday demanded Nicaragua remove its troops, estimated by military sources to number about 1.600 number about 1,600.

Nicaragua denied it had any soldiers in Honduras, and claimed that the reports were aimed at influencing the Senate to approve President Reagan's request for $100 million in aid to the Contras. The House rejected that request last week

In Washington, President Reagan gave $20 million in emergency military assistance to Honduras and agreed to the use of U.S. helicopter pilots in response to the incursion.

However, U.S. officials here and in Washington said no U.S. aircraft or personnel were used to ferry 3,000 Honduran troops to the border and that no U.S. soldiers would be involved in combat.

Energy secretary says oil import tax would be harmful

WASHINGTON (AP) — Energy secretary John Herrington told a Senate committee that an oil import tax would "damage the U.S. economy" by raising energy costs and would invite retaliation from other countries.

Herrington told the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee Tuesday that although the oil price plunge has had "serious and adverse consequences for our domestic energy producers," an import fee would reverse five years of free-market policies that have produced "more adequate (oil) supplies and cheaper energy."

The price of crude oil has dropped from about $27 a barrel in January to $12 to $15 a barrel now.

Some lawmakers have said an oil import fee is needed to insure companies continue producing and exploring for domestic oil and natural gas.

Herrington cited the Reagan administration's reliance on free-market policies and called for steps besides an import fee: continued tax breaks for petroleum companies; price decontrol for all natural gas; simpler licensing procedures for nuclear power plants; more coal production on federal lands; and increased oil exploration off the U.S. coast.

Members of the committee challenged the administration's approach.

Chairman James McClure, R-Idaho, said Saudi Arabia manipulates the world market by increasing production in a "strategy to force lower oil prices in the short-term in order to achieve higher prices in the long term"."

He said that because of lower prices, U.S. "oil and gas producers, the producing states and banks with large energy portfolios are now fighting for their lives."

Sen. Don Nickles, R-Okla., said, "You have a manipulated market, not a free market.... The Saudis can do it overnight. That's not a free market. That's a king and two cousins deciding what the price of oil will be."

The lawmakers said the country will become even more dependent on Middle Eastern oil if the United States continues to lose marginally productive oil wells.

Herrington told the committee that the oil price drop is causing the administration to rethink its opposition to continued filling of the nation's Strategic Petroleum

A GOOD SIGN — The Marvin Bowmans put up this sign at their home, 2117 Mary Ellen, Tuesday to celebrate the appointment of they son-in-law, Pampa native Darrell Carey, to the office of Court At Law Judge in Randall County. Carey was appointed Tuesday by Randall County Commissioners to fill the unexpired term of Rick Wilcox. A legal counselor for Pioneer, Carey is a graduate of the University of Texas and was with the Randall County District Attorney's court-at-law from 1980-1981. He will serve until a new judge is elected in November.

Two LaRouche Democrats guaranteed wins in Texas

AUSTIN (AP) — The Lyndon LaRouche wing of the Democratic Party, fresh from two stunning upset wins in Illinois, is guaranteed at least two wins in the Texas Democratic primary in

Two Houston congressional candidates who support LaRouche's ultra-conservative views are unopposed for the nomination to run against incumbent Republicans in strong GOP

In all, the LaRouche faction has about 200 candidates - a dozen congressional contenders. four for the Legislature, one for agriculture commissioner and a slew of local party position hope-

State Democratic Chairman Robert Slagle of Sherman wants to make sure that "regular" Democrats know who the LaRouche backers are. So this week, he is sending out 18,000 copies of a list of the LaRouche candidates, who he says are not 'real Democrats.'

The list will include a message, Slagle said Tuesday.

"I'm not going to call anybody a lunatic fringe," he said. "But I'm going to describe what it is they say and I'm going to say I don't think it's healthy.

Slagle is wary of a replay of the Illinois primary in which LaRouche candidates were nominated for lieutenant governor and secretary of state, forcing Democratic gubernatorial nominee Adlai Stevenson III to consider a third-party race that will put some distance between him and the LaRouche people.

Slagle said Texas Democrats better vote for something more than just names on the ballot.

Jurors believed

Nursing home negligent but not murderer

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Prosecutors proved negligence but not murder in a sevenmonth murder-by-neglect trial against a nursing home firm and four other defendants, jurors who deadlocked on a verdict say.

Members of the eight-man, four-woman jury who deliberated nearly 36 hours before Judge Don Morgan declared a mistrial Tuesday said the majority favored an involuntary manslaughter conviction against Autumn Hills Convalescent Centers Inc.

But most of the jurors favored innocent verdicts for Autumn Hills president Robert Gay, 59; vice president Ron Pohlmeyer, 43; nursing consultant Mattie Locke, 44; and former Texas City nursing home administrator Virginia Wilson, 64.

The corporation and the individuals were charged with murder in the Nov. 20, 1978, death of an elderly patient at an Autumn Hills home in

The state claimed Elnora Breed, 87, died of starvation and infection, both caused by poor nursing care. The defense contended Mrs. Breed, who died about six weeks after entering the nursing home, died of a recurring cancer.

Prosecutors said because of time and expense, the case would not be tried again and charges against all defendants would be dismissed. The state spent more than $1 million prosecuting the

"We all felt there was criminal negligence at the home," said juror Sherman Miller, 54, but he added that he believed all the defendants were innocent of murder

Morgan had instructed the jury they could return murder as well as involuntary manslaughter convictions against all defendants

He also said the jury could find the defendants guilty of criminally negligent homicide. But since the two-year statute of limitations had expired on that charge, an innocent verdict would have had to

Another juror, Clifton Jenschke Jr., 25, said he felt "there was some negligence on the part of the people, but not enough to convict them

But Linda Aldridge, 27, said she "was really hoping we would come up with one" conviction.

Galveston County District Attorney Mike Guarino said he still believes "in the facts of the case, but I also understand their (jury's) problems in arriving at a verdict. It was a complicated case.

Guarino said he hopes the trial will create "more of an awareness on the part of the public concerning health care problems of the elderly

He added he hopes the case "will act as a deterrent to those who don't give adequate care.' Attorney General Jim Mattox, who supported prosecution of the case, said that despite the mistrial, the trial "has firmly established that you cannot mistreat our senior citizens without being called before the bar of justice.

Ruth Linscomb, 84, Mrs. Breed's sister, said she too hoped the case will "make them (nursing homes) treat 'em better."

Mrs. Linscomb, who testified in the trial, said she was convinced Autumn Hills neglected her

"She'd be laying up there wet and dirty, no bath, her hair hadn't been combed, bedsores, always losing weight," she said.

Gay, who spent nearly $2 million to defend himself, the corporation and the other defendants, said. he was happy about the end of the trial and said he plans to go back to work in the nursing home in-

But for others, he said, the case "will make you" think twice about going into the nursing home busi-

Mrs. Wilson, who started as a church volunteer at the nursing home and worked her way up to administrator, said the mistrial was a weight lifted off her shoulders.

"I would've rather had an acquittal," she said, but added she plans to continue volunteer work in nursing homes.

Phillips Petroleum said Tuesday that 226 homeowners have signed up to participate in the moving assistance plan being offered to some 430 homeowners near the company's refining and chemicals operations here.

Of those, 145 have indicated they want to settle on land the company is developing nearby. Phillips has offered to pay a major portion of the development costs, and the homeowners' portion will be $1,500 per lot.

Homeowners have until Monday to sign and return the agreement to M M Cattle Co., a firm that Phillips purchased late last year. A total of 430 homeowners live on land owned by M M.

M M gave homeowners an Aug. 31 moving deadline. But those who agree to remove their houses will get an extension until Dec. 31, a waiver of future rental payments and will be eligible for one of the lots being developed by Phillips.

Texas seeks a court order against federal budget cuts

'The funding cuts are not only contrary to the law, they also are immoral," Attorney General Jim Mattox said after the suit was filed Tuesday in an Austin federal

The suit says funds for the Low Income Home Energy Assistance Program and the Alcohol, Drug Abuse and Mental Health Block Grant were supposed to be cut only 4.3 percent across-the-board for all states as a result of the Gramm-Rudman deficit cutting

But Mattox said the federal Department of Health and Human Services cut fund to Texas by 12 percent and did not cut the funding at all for some other states.

The saga of the controversial bridge between Patrick and Gholson is well-documented, capturing the attention of at least eight county, state and federal agencies concerned that the bridge was built illegally in March 1985.

The state and McLennan County sued Trice and his gravel company to prevent him from completing the structure. Officials said the bridge was built without authorization, impeded navigation, trespassed on the public right-of-way on the river bed and violated the county's 100-year floodplain ordinance.

Biggest crowds on island in years

PORT ARANSAS, Texas (AP) So many vacationing students flocked to Mustang Island in the past week that they backed up traffic as much as seven miles, and even more crowds are expected this weekend, officials

Port Aransas Mayor Dale Bietendorf said about 150,000 students on spring break visited the island from Friday through Sunday night.

"I was told at one time ferry traffic was backed all the way to Aransas Pass," he said Monday. Aransas Pass is about 7½ miles from the ferry landings at Port Aransas.

Bietendorf said the crowds were the largest he has seen in his Mustang Island, near Port Aransas, had its most violent weekend in recent memory, said Nueces County constable DeeWayne Matthews. He said seven stabbings were reported, as well as fights involving tire tools and pick axes.

'The people that caused all the problems came over there for that specific reason," Matthews said. "I don't know why. From Victoria to Kingsville, they're coming over with that in mind, to cause problems.

Justice of the Peace Jim Atwill said authorities issued more than 100 citations issued over beachrelated incidents, mostly involving fights

Let private sector have role in space

The Rogers commission isn't the only investigative panel that's taken a critical look at NASA's operation of the space shuttle program. The Grace commission has also studied NASA and the shuttle, with an eye to discerning whether outer space might be a fertile field for another experiment in privatization. But the Grace commission's preliminatry recommendation — that NASA "privatize" space operations by finding private investors to underwrite purchase of a fifth space shuttle — doesn't go nearly far enough.

The question we should be asking about NASA and the space shuttle is whether a branch of the U.S. government should be writing about the space. ernment should be running what amounts to a commercial enterprise at all — particularly when, by doing so, it discourages development of a private space exploration and development industry.

Today, every time NASA launches a commercial communications satellite, it eats up between $80 million and $175 million in taxpayer subsidies. Ending these subsidies altogether and letting those who want to launch statellites pay private firms to do it for them would save the federal government between $9 billion and $20 billion over the life of the shuttle program.

Nor would this be the only savings NASA could realize through privatization. A private consortium has already expressed interest in building and launching a solar-power satellite to serve as a power sources for NASA's proposed space station. Taking the consortium up on its offer would spare the federal government the considerable cost of building such a power

Other space entrepreneurs have expressed interest in developing other cutting-edge technologies at their own expense and their own risk, but they have been stymied by NASA's exploration and development. As long as tax subsidies enable NASA to launch services to private firms at a savings of about $5 million over the price another private firm could offer, it will be difficult for space commerce to realize the potential

The Reagan administration should live up to its freemarket rhetoric and impose an outright ban on participation of NASA in commercial activities like launching communications satellites and experiments aimed at producing goods for the consumer market. NASA should also be required to make available to the private sector, on a fully reimbursable basis, all the information and technology it has developed over the years at public expense and has kept out of private

The western frontier of the 19th and 20th centuries would never have been exploited and developed if government had stood in the way of those who saw its potential. Government should not be allowed to stand between the entrepreneurs of the space age and the opportunities presented by the high frontier.

Those 'friendly' Chicagoans

For those of us born and raised south of the Mason-Dixon line, life in the North country is a continuing education. The experience is something like that of Margaret Mead in Samoa, residing among a people who practice curious folkways, speak an unintelligible language and heed an unfamiliar political ideology. To survive, we are forced to become amateur anthropologists, endlessly striving to make sense of an alien culture.

This is not easy. In my native Texas, like the other states of the old Confederacy, courtesy and friendliness are not only esteemed but expected. Southerners arriving in Chicago get a shock when they find that the daily routine features endless affronts of the sort that, in a Dallas courtroom, would be treated as grounds for justifiable homicide. It's easy to spot expatriate Southerners: look for people grinding their

I once thought most Chicagoans were rude. In fact, I once wrote a column disparaging the general lack of courtesy here, earning me torrents of abuse that validated my thesis. But further study has convinced me I was badly mistaken.

Far from being the inconsiderate boors they generally appear to be, Chicagoans are exquisitely polite. In some cultures, people signify agreement by shaking their heads instead of nodding - the opposite of what most of us are used to. Similarly, Chicagoans show their conterpreted by outsiders.

Consider the case of a Texan who, passing a native Chicagoan in a hallway at work, smiles and says hello. The Chicagoan will keep eyes forward, maintain a grim expression and say

These people are actually looking out for your welfare. They fear that you may not understand the film, that you may be unacquainted with the off-screen exploits of the stars, that you may not anticipate the ending. A lot of my fellow Southerners would have taken that the wrong way. I know the guy was only signaling, in the inimitable Chicago fashion, that he'd like to get to know me better. It really made my day

Trying to avoid the final hurdle

I am forever being amazed at the sensitivity people display toward the general subject of death, and in particular toward any information on how they might possibly avoid it. Shakespeare has Julius Caesar express a rather similar surprise:

"Of all the wonders that I yet have heard, / It seems to me most strange that men should fear / Seeing that death, a necessary end, / Will come when it will come

Yet millions of Americans are out there jogging, eating more fiber, avoiding the Rome airport and taking all sorts of other odd precautions in a desperate effort to prolong their stay on this highly controversial old planet. It seems almost cruel to point out to them that, as the saying goes, life is a disease whose mortality rate is exactly 100 percent.

The latest news item from the battle front concerns a study of 17,000 Harvard alumni whose living habits have been observed over a period of many years. According to a story that rated a two-column headline on page one of The New York Times recently, 'Men who participated in activities such as walking, stair-climbing and sports that used 2,000 calories or more a week had death rates onequarter to one-third lower than those in the study who were least active.'

Now, on first reading that sounds like spectacularly good news. But what, precisely, does it mean? Does the study intend to imply that active men have from a quarter to a third less chance of dying than more sedentary types? Presumably not; we are all going to die sooner or later - you, me and Arnold Schwarzenegger.

The study, then, is apparently trying to tell us something about longevity rather than mortality. But what is it, exactly, that is "one-quarter to one-third lower" in the case of energetic Harvard alumni? According to the sentence I quoted it is their "death

However, that is far from saying, as a casual reader might suppose, that they live from a quarter to a third longer than their indolent class-mates. My dictionary defines "death rate" as the number of deaths among members of a given group over a specified period of time. It is this number which, according to the Times, is "lower" among active men than among "those in the study who were least active." Even this, however, must refer to the number of deaths in the earlier age brackets, since ulti-mately all 17,000 must die. To put it the other way around, the number of active men who die will be relatively higher in the later age brackets. But just what length of time are we haggling over? At the very end of the Times article, 'way over on page 28 of section B, we are told that, in terms of years, the study reveals "that physical activity could increase life expectancy by one or two years at the age

Apparently this struck even the reporter as a little discouraging, because she went on to quote one of those who conducted the study as stressing that, in the case of any given individual, the increase could be much greater

Once, many years ago, I wrote a piece of doggerel which I entitled 'Ode to a Physical Training Instructor." It was a crude parody of Kip-ling's "If," and it concluded with a mordant little reminder:

"Race on, and fill the unforgiving minute / With sixty seconds' worth of hurdles run. / Yours is the earth, and all the muscles in it, / And every hurdle but the Final One."

Mexico wins another delay in debt payment

MEXICO CITY (AP) - Mexico, battered by the sharp fall in oil prices, has won a second sixmonth extension on payment of $950 million in principal on its $96.4 billion foreign debt, the government announced.

In a statement late Monday, the Treasury Department said the international financial community accepted in principle a 180-day postponement of payment of the money, which was originally due last October.

The nation's approximately 600 creditor banks were expected to ratify the arrangement in the coming days, according to the statement.

'The request was presented as a consequence of the fall in oil earnings and the putting in motion of the reconstruction program that originated through the earthquakes that affected the country last September," the statement said.

Mexico sought the original extension shortly after the Sept. 19 earthquake that badly damaged parts of the center of the capital, requiring a costly cleanup and reconstruction program. Under that postponement, the money would have been due next month.

The fresh extension will give Mexico more time to sort out its financial troubles, not only from the quake but also from the recent oil-price shock that has sharply reduced its foreign earn-

The $950 million payment represents repayment of principal on a $5 billion lean signed in 1983. In January 1985 Mexico made a $250 million principal payment on that loan.

The Treasury statement said the financial community should take into account the deferred principal payment when considering the nation's request for additional help this year.

The government has said it expects to ask commercial bankers and international financial organizations for about $6 billion in fresh money this year. Before the oil price decline, it had intended to seek $4 billion.

In San Jose, Costa Rica, however, Treasury Secretary Jesus Silva Herzog told a news conference Monday that Mexico could cover the $2 billion shortfall in oil revenues with additional exports of oil and non-oil products.

The Treasury statement released here said negotiations for the new financial package should take about three months and preparation of the formal document for the plan could take the same amount of time.

Mexico gets about 70 percent of its foreign exchange from sales of its crude to overseas clients. The money is used to stay current on its foreign debt, the secondhighest in the developing world after Brazil, and buy needed im-

Since November, Mexico has cut its oil prices by about half in an effort to hold onto its customers. President Miguel de la Madrid has said the decline will translate into a revenue loss this year of about $6 billion, nearly half the total sum the nation had expected to earn. Crude brought in $13.3 billion in 1985.

De la Madrid, in a nationally televised speech last month, said the nation cannot accept more sacrifices, and urged the commercial banks to make adjustments in the debt package to help Mexico meet its obligations. Mexico wants lower interest rates on the debt, the Treasury Department has said.

BROWNSVILLE, Texas (AP) The latest "Doonesbury" pokes at President Reagan are actually pretty close to the mark when it comes to South Texas' efforts to gird for a Sandinista blitzkrieg

Lewisville project seeks to restore flavor of yesteryear

By DON GEIGER Denton Record-Chronicle

LEWISVILLE, Texas (AP) -Carolyn Howard has plans for old Lewisville, and if she has her way downtown businesses will preserve their historic buildings and spruce up the district.

'There are some wonderful downtown buildings. Several of them, with minimal facade improvements, will help the downtown image," Ms. Howard said. "I think the trend has been in the past to modernize the buildings. Preserving it is the best route possible. Those buildings were built to stay.'

Ms. Howard, 27, is manager of the Lewisville Main Street Project, part of a nationwide plan administered at the state level to revitalize old cities. The Lewisville project does not receive direct state aid, but the Lewisville City Council has earmarked $30,000 a year for it and Ms. Howard may call state officials for advice.

"I think it's mostly opening doors and maybe giving suggestions. I'm the new one in town. I'm not about to tell someone what to do," she said.

Lewisville was one of five

Texas towns selected for the three-year Main Street Project. Ms. Howard said 30 to 35 Texas cities are part of the program, including McKinney, Grapevine and Greenville.

Members of the Old Town Business Association here provide office space for Ms. Howard and helped promote the project.

'Failure isn't even one of those things that come into consideration," said Bill Halbrook, association president. "If you take a look at the projects in other cities when they have had a successful project director, the project has been successful.

Although the section of Lewisville east of Interstate 35 is called Old Town, she will concentrate primarily on the two-block downtown area. Turn-of-the-century buildings line Main Street downtown and some business owners already have done restoration

"Main Street is a voluntary group and hopefully everyone will want to improve the image of downtown," Ms. Howard said.

"Sometimes you can't get the building looking like it did and that may not be the best thing, but you certainly strive for some historic preservation," she said.
"You just have to take it slow.

Everybody needs a shot in the arm.

She will ask downtown business owners to restore and improve building fronts and signs first. In addition, she will ask businesses to work on sidewalks, parking areas and landscaping.

'There needs to be a consistent image of Old Town. People need to see an easily identifiable downtown. That doesn't mean everything needs to look alike. Image is the key here," she said.

To achieve that goal, Ms. Howard said, she will work "to establish a consensus by building partnerships among the private and public sectors" by speaking to civic clubs and merchants and convincing local banks to offer low-interest loans to businesses for restoration.

The plan also calls for promoting downtown by offering sophisticated ideas for sales and marketing, festivals and building of traditions. "I'm kind of a catalyst to see better organization and promotional events ... all of that leading to economic

In addition, she will work to 'enhance the visual quality of downtown" and work to strengthen "existing economic assets."

FmHA official standing fast in face of farmer protest

CHILLICOTHE, Mo. (AP) -Twenty tractors, some with cabs towering 12 feet, ring the onestory storefront that's home to the Farmers Home Administration here, but the owners of the equipment don't want to keep the supervisor in.

They want David Stollings out, and several hundred signed petitions blaming him for impending bankruptcies in Livingston

Fields in the hills along U.S. 36 leading into Chillicothe are freshly plowed and ready for planting soybeans, milo and corn. Many farmers complain that Stollings has denied them loans they need to operate through the growing

"The real problem is David Stollings," said Charles Peniston, a hog farmer and one of the leaders of a group who have occupied a quonset hut near Stollings' office since March 17.

"It's one thing to be in trouble," said Peniston, who was denied an FmHA operating loan in October. "It's another thing to have this arrogant and egotistical man rub your nose in it everytime you go into that office.

"This man is a problem."

Northwest Missouri has suffered more than some other rural areas because two years ago, a two-year drought ended with too much rain. Farmers harvested a good crop last year, but prices were so low many ran out of money after paying interest on their debts.

Stollings said Tuesday that the size of those debts and tightened FmHA regulations forced him to deny some applications for operating loans this year. "I have a county with a large amount of borrowers with negative net worth. Some farmers are too indebted to service their obligations," he said.

Stollings took over the county FmHA office in May 1985, about the time it changed its rules. Previously, the FmHA, the so-called lender of last resort, would make an operating loan to a farmer who could prove he would be able to repay it at the end of the year. Other debts were not counted.

Farmers now must prove they can repay the operating loan as well as make interest payments on their other loans.

Stollings said he sympathizes with the farmers, but that his hands are tied by FmHA regula-

Marriage down, divorce up in 1985

WASHINGTON (AP) - Americans were about twice as likely to marry as to divorce last year, but new government statistics show the divorce rate was rising while marriage was on the de-

There were 10.2 marriages per 1,000 Americans in 1985, down 3 percent from 1984 and the lowest rate since 1977, according to the annual statistical summary from the National Center for Health Statistics.

At the same time, the divorce rate climbed 2 percent to 5 divorces per 1,000 people to match the rate of 1983.

The Center reported 2,425,000 marriages in 1985, down from 2,487,000 in 1984. And there were 1,187,000 divorces, up from 1.155,000

Overall 1,665,000 people were added to the United States population last year as a result of natural increase - the excess of births over deaths. The rate of increase was 7 per 1,000 people, the same as a year earlier.

The Center said there were 3,749,000 births during the year, the most since 1965.

But the increase in births is not another Baby Boom, since the rate remained constant, due to the larger overall population. The birth rate was 15.7 per 1,000. Population experts refer to the current increase in births as an echo of the post-World War II baby boom, since it stems primarily from the large number of Americans born after the war who now are in their prime childbearing years.

After 1987, the total number of births will likely decline — unless the birth rate rises - as the Baby Boom women grow older and leave fewer people in the usual childbearing years.

The report showed 2,084.000 deaths in the United States last year. That is 37,000 more than in 1984 and the largest death total ever reported in the United

Hatch: smokeless tobacco ban not possible, but people may steer clear

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate sponsor of a new law requiring health warning labels on smokeless tobacco says a ban on snuff and chewing tobacco could not now be imposed, but he hopes a landmark surgeon general's report detailing the products' cancer risk will persuade people to avoid them.

Sen. Orrin G. Hatch, R-Utah, praised a surgeon general's report released Tuesday as providing evidence that snuff and chewing tobacco are not a safe alternative to cigarettes.

The study, described as analogous to the famous 1964 surgeon general's report on smoking, declared snuff and chewing tobacco to be "a significant health risk" that can lead to addiction, dependence, mouth disease and Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee, said he doubted the report would prompt Congress to take further action against the products.

Congress already has passed legislation to require health warnings on smokeless tobacco containers and to ban their broadcast advertising. President Reagan signed the bill into law last month.

"I think it's the best we could have done at the time," Hatch said. "We'll just have to watch it and see what happens. But I don't think Congress has the desire to tell anybody ... at this point that they have to go out of business.'

"We are not in the business of trying to put people out of business," Hatch said. "What we want to do is give people the right to make the correct and proper

Hatch made the comments at a news conference where he and Surgeon General C. Everett Koop released the smokeless tobacco

The report concludes that "the oral use of smokeless tobacco represents a significant health risk. It is not a safe substitute for smoking cigarettes. It can cause cancer and a number of noncancerous oral conditions and can lead to nicotine addiction and dependence.

Koop said the report is important because of the growing popularity of snuff and chewing tobacco, particularly among children and teen-agers.

The report's conclusion was challenged later by Michael J. Kerrigan, president of the Smokeless Tobacco Council, the principal trade association for Mortgage rates have tumbled below 10 percent, house sales are booming and homeowners are storming banks to refinance and cut their monthly payments. Bob Allen thinks the trend, while it lasts, is out of this world.

"It's like a Halley's comet event. It only happens once in a while — and it's here,'' exclaimed Allen, office manager for Winchester Mortgage Co. in He's certainly not alone in his excitement.

"Oh, my God ... we're seeing tremendous activity," enthused Debbie Rumel, vice-president of Carolina Home Mortgage Corp. in Hendersonville, N.C. "We've been waiting a long time for this to happen. Now it's happening, we're understaffed and it's crazy.

Going crazy, too, are the nation's home-building industry, realty-agent licensing offices and ordinary people who finally see a chance to realize the dream of owning three bedrooms and a bath-and-a-half of their own. The question now is: How long can it last? Some hard-sell consumers are holding out for even better deals, and opinion is divided on whether they'll be rewarded. "I still get the feeling the real rush is yet to come," said David Walker, chief economist with People's Bank in Bridgeport, Conn. "If the consumer perceives that interest rates have bottomed out and are on the way up, (the market) will become even more fever-pitched." 'Sometime in the near future we could see a rate below 9 percent," said Greg Childers of the Paramount Bond & Mortgage Co. in St. Louis.

'If they've got a loan that has a 12 percent mortgage or above, it will be switched out (down to 12 percent) with no cost at all - no origination, no points, no nothing to the borrower," said presi-

Among those better deals: 9% percent with 1½ points for a 15year fixed-rate mortgage at First Atlanta Mortgage Corp.; 9.875 percent with two points for a 30year fixed-rate mortgage at U.S. Bancorp Mortgage Co. in Portland, Ore.; 9.625 plus two points for a 15-year fixed rate mortgage at First National Bank of Maryland. The frenzy for mortgages began after the Veterans Administration in Washington reduced the top interest rate for VAguaranteed mortgages to 9.5 percent from 10 percent on March 3. VA loan rates peaked at 17.5 percent in 1981 and hadn't been below 10 percent in seven years.

Conventional home loan rates had been dropping gradually, but after the VA announcement "single-digit rates" — under 10 percent - seemed to be virtually everywhere.

Special church breaks silence among deaf

By MARK JONES The Brownsville Herald

SAN BENITO, Texas (AP) -Although scores of people were singing, only one voice could be heard.

,And, as the director moved his hands, so did the singers.

Deaf Valleywide Mission in San Benito is for the deaf, and sign language is spoken and sung here. The lone voice is simply a courtesy for the two or three hearing guests in the church au-

The Sunday service bulletin reads much like that in any other church - sing praises, prayerwelcome, reading of scriptures, announcements. But this is not a service in which speech is simply translated into sign. Worship itself is in sign, interim pastor Tom Cole said.

Deaf services begin at 9:45 a.m. every Sunday, and Bible study is conducted after that. Along with regular services, the mission offers two Sunday School classes for children, two for highschool age youths and two for adults.

But Deaf Valleywide Mission provides more than just church services for the deaf, said Cole and Becky Swadley, deaf coordinator for the mission. It takes advantage of any opportunities it can to promote public awareness of the deaf and to help the deaf make better lives for themselves.

They said they feel the church is providing a need that often is not being met by schools or agencies in the area.

"A lot of these young people, other than in school activities, don't do anything," Cole said.

'Most deaf (young) people live in a home with hearing parents who don't know how to communicate with them.

"I'm not trying to be harsh; it's just the way it is," Cole said.

And Cole said he feels the Valley has a deaf ear of its own. A survey completed in February by church strategist Joanne LeGette, stated there are an estimated 5,842 deaf people in the Valley.

Cole said a state agency offical told him the deaf made few requests for services, thus he believes that many deaf are not aware of opportunities open to

Despite economic conditions and hardships, some of the deaf have done very well, Cole noted, such as the three members of the mission congregation who are teachers at one of the Valley's regional schools for the deaf. One of the teachers is continuing study at Pan American University using an interpreter.

But when Reach Out to Texas Deaf began its work here, the mission goal didn't materialize as rapidly as expected.

Although its slow start was partly attributed to socioeconomic conditions, it also had to do with the large number of deaf people who are young; 70 percent of the mission congregation is in its late teens or early 20s, Cole

"Older adults are going to take the adult responsibility (faster)," he said. Also contributing, Cole added, was the general complexities of reaching out to the deaf.

So the congregation began with 12 people meeting in Fairview Spanish Mission in Harlingen. After the congregation grew to about 50, the mission moved to Baptist Temple Church in San Benito, where Cole is pastor.

Cole, a Houston native, had been a pastor in Indiana, Iowa and Missouri, before arriving in the Valley about the same time as Reach Out to Texas Deaf.

"I started working with the mission teaching deaf adults at that time," he said.

Deaf Valleywide Mission attendance has grown to about 65 to 80 people each Sunday, sometimes as many as 100 when special services are conducted. Transportation is the biggest problem limiting the mission's growth, Cole said.

While First Baptist Church of Harlingen is the primary sponsor of the mission, support also comes from First Baptist churches in Weslaco, La Feria, Combes, Santa Rosa, even Forest Wood Baptist Church of New Caney, north

"Before the team came here, some (of the deaf) had never been out of the Valley. We've taken them to choir competition, basketball tournaments, volleyball tournaments and youth camps, Ms. Swadley said. "They've never before had the opportunity to do these things."

Ms. Swadley, who herself has a deaf cousin, came to the Valley with the Reach Out to Texas Deaf group and decided to stay.

"The intent is not to look for pity for the deaf, but to promote awareness so they can function (in society)," Cole said of the church's role of promoting awareness of the deaf.

Cole is also concerned about employment opportunities for the deaf. Although two large industries in the Valley sensitive to the needs of the deaf have on several occasions hired them, the number of deaf employed in the Valley remains low, Cole added.

Ms. Swadley said the deaf can do many jobs such as filing, typing, printing and assembling which don't require much communication once the employee is trained.

'They're also good with loud machinery because it doesn't bother them," she added. "They're unusually good with their hands because that's their lives.

Cole said he also takes advantage of the Sunday service to help

"If I come across a word I think is new or strange I'll stop and spell it and give sign for it.

"Also, I think the socialization process is speeded up and en-hanced here," Cole said. "These people are not isolated."

Cole said he feels the worship experience for the deaf in their own language is vital to them both spiritually and socially because "it meets a deaf person where they are in their language. It has meaning for them."

And the language can be challenging: that the Father, Son and Holy Spirit are one is difficult even for a hearing person to comprehend, Cole noted. Concepts such as trust also are difficult to explain in sign.

"But if (the sermon) has to go from connotations of hearing (languages) transferred to sign, a lot is lost and comprehension will go down," he said. "Sign is not a put-down to them. It's their language."

the deaf improve reading skills. Woman reflects on 48 years in Soviet Union

By MICHAEL HIRSH Associated Press Writer

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — She thinks of herself as Rip Van Winkle, Margaret Wettlin says.

In 1932, Wettlin was a 25-yearold schoolteacher from suburban Philadelphia who, like many of her generation, looked wistfully to the Soviet Union. The Russian Revolution, still young, seemed to offer the hope that American democracy did not in the worst year of the Great Depression.

So Peg Wettlin decided to take a leave of absence from her job and travel to Russia for a year to

She stayed for 48 years. She fell in love with and married a Rusman, raised a family in Moscow and became absorbed into the Soviet intelligentsia.

And when she finally returned America after her husband's death, she "awakened" to discover, much like the mythical Van Winkle, that her home had become very different.

"I was shocked to see the high standard of living that was almost common," she said in an interview. "I couldn't help feeling that, seeing the rest of the world, it just couldn't go on."

Wettlin's new America had been largely censored by the Soviet media, she said. Suddenly, she was thrust into a world of electronic cash machines and supermarket shelves that overflowed with goods.

The daily routine in Russia, she said, "is a brutal struggle for survival ... a battle for food and clothes," giving queued-up citizens little time for anything

By the time Wettlin came home in 1979, the Soviet regime she once admired had suffered the gradual disintegration of its revolutionary ideals through the Stalinist purges, World War II and the entrenchment of a totalitarian tyranny, she said.

"My greatest feeling today for Russia is compassion for the Russians," said Wettlin, who at age 79 is sturdy and tall, with wide blue eyes and thick white hair.

"The average Russian has been through so much it's beyond the comprehension of Americans," she said. "Certain Americans see Russians as aggressive, crude, elementary individuals who want to conquer the world. Nothing could be further from the truth ... the Russian people have been put through the wringer since 1914, and they are simply wrung dry.

But Wettlin sees the beginnings of hope for change after returning to the Soviet Union for two months last fall to visit her son and three grandchildren.

Just recently, she said, after several years of stonewalling by Soviet authorities, she received word her family, including her son's Russian-born wife, would be allowed to leave the country to join her in the United States. She believes it is the result of Gorbachev's liberalized policies. "Gorbachev has promise," she said. "My hope is that he is really the enlightened leader he seems to be. Still, there is much to be changed, she added. In bitter contrast to the regime's professed egalitarian ideals, the ruling Politburo created an enormous gulf between the rich — the leaders themselves - and the poor most of the rest of the country, she said.

"If there is a big gap between the corporation chiefs in America and the working class, that is nothing compared with the difference between those in higher echelons in Russia and the average working man," she said.

As a highly regarded translator of Russian literature and the wife of theater director Andrei Efremov, Wettlin herself enjoyed some of those privileges.

> MOUNTAIN HOME, Texas (AP) — Joan and Perry Bushong stand in a limestone-studded field west of Mountain Home evaluating their herd of 3,000 mohairproducing Angora goats and nine of their ranch help.

> The Bushongs evaluate by observation because the "help" can't talk — they bray. But their record speaks for itself, say the Bushongs.

> The Bushongs bought donkeys in August to guard their goats from scores of predators that roam the rocky Real County terrain on four of their ranches. In the past six months, since the donkeys were first introduced, no goats have been lost to the jaws of hungry scavengers.

> Flocks of black buzzards, circling goat victims, used to be a familiar daily sight in the morn-

> The Bushongs live 60 miles from Kerrville and 36 miles from Rocksprings — where nights are filled with the wail of distant coyotes, where bobcats and Russian boar move across the wild countryside, where "ranch" still means 2,000 acres-plus and where even four-wheel-drive vehicles get stuck.

The land supports one animal unit per 25 acres. One cow, five sheep or six goats equal one animal unit. Fifteen windmills dot 20,000 acres of Bushong ranches, pulling water from below the arid soil.

Ninety-five percent of the U.S.'s mohair comes from within a 150-mile radius that includes this area. And ranchers like the Bushongs are struggling to protect their investments from a growing number of predators.

There was a time when controlling varmints in the area was something the family could manage with the help of their ranch hands and government trappers, but in 1984 increased numbers of coyotes and boars weighing up to 400 pounds moved into the area from the south.

The Bushongs estimate that in 1985 they lost more than 250 goats each worth about $60. Several lambs also were lost to the hungry culprits, and one longhorn calf was attacked and seriously injured. Bushong blames the recent predator population boom on the fact that many neighboring ranches are owned by absentee landowners who pay little attention to coyotes and boars. Although they might have no interest in goats, he said they should understand that the white-tailed fawn crop also is suffering. Frustrated by the predator problem, Bushong began studying control methods. He found that guard dogs, while useful on småller operations; weren't suitable for sprawling terrain of Cedar Springs Ranch or the 14,000-acre "West Kerr Ranch" he leases.

Talking to other ranchers at a goat sale, Bushong said he heard a "tall tale" about burros protecting flocks from coyotes.

It sounded far-fetched, but Bushong said he had nothing to lose. So last August the Bushongs bought nine jennies and a jack from a local horse trader. Prices ranged from $125 to $250 each. The animals had no prior training and probably had never seen goats before, Bushong said. 'You got to get 'em when they're young or you'll never make a goat out of 'em,' he added

MANOR, Texas (AP) - The sound of classical music, emanating from the clearing in the woods, serenades the modest, cluttered empire of Nebern B. Young.

But the musical interlude is brief, and the screeching, grinding, pounding, hammering and rumbling begin again.

The proprietor is at work. Time is short. The world is discarding things faster than Young can reclaim them. There are logs to saw - boxes, chests and tables to Young, a spry 68-year-old, makes things out of wood and metal that other people have thrown away. Many of them are unusual, ingenious contraptions.

Words such as "conservation" and "improvise" spring up frequently in Young's conversation. He complains about wastefulness.

"This is a young country. Two or three hundred years ago this was virgin forests from sea to shining sea. Now we have to go begging to other countries like China and Japan, which have been around for thousands of years," he said.

Unlike some others his age, Young doesn't talk about the past unless he is prodded. He invariably steers the conversation toward his plans for the future, and mortality is not on the agenda. Young views himself as a retiree just trying to keep busy. He is, in fact, an American original, remarkably full of optimism, ideas and energy

"People say I work all the time, but, hell, I enjoy it," Young said. "Sometimes I hate to see the day get away because I haven't had a chance to get everything done I wanted to get done.

Young's clearing in the woods along with his barnlike home and workshop, his sawmill, and his Toyota with 350,000 miles on it - are several miles east of Manor, at the end of a network of small roads. To get back there, just follow the trail of pipe, wood, wire, glass, belts, pulleys, motors, batteries, sheet metal, plastic and chain.

Young scrounges and barters to get his junk, but sometimes he even buys it. He is also a bit sensitive about using the word "junk," but he acknowledges that most people would indeed consider it that.

"To me, what you say is junk is not. When you make something useful out of it, it's not junk any-

The junk - or salvaged materials as Young prefers — is used to construct machinery that allows him to build his wooden furniture and boxes more efficiently. He sells his products at flea markets, determining prices by his cutomers' ability to pay and their interest in the objects.

'Money isn't everything," he said, "but you need some, not much, just to breathe.'

He recently completed what apears to be a cedar coffin, but it has shelves like a cedar chest. "During your life you use it as a cedar chest, then when you die the shelves come out, and it is a coffin," Young explained. "If I don't sell it. I'll use it myself.'

Purchasers of his wood products - made from oak, cedar, bois d'arc, sycamore and pecan can be assured that Young began with a log, probably a mammoth log. He sawed the log into boards by himself, on the sawmill that he built from junk. The boards were planed on a machine he built from junk and sanded on a machine he built from junk. Young works in his barn, which he built from junk, even hoisting up the roof beams by himself. He used hoists fashioned from junk, of course.

Other machines made from junk are scattered around the property amid the piles of raw junk waiting for tomorrow's pro-showpiece. "Maybe this place will be worth a million dollars by the time I'm 100," he said. "Then I retired in 1980 and moved to his 10 acres in the country. He hauled his homebuilt sawmill from a rented building in East Austin to his clearing in the woods.

Young lives alone modestly in a corner of the barn. He generates his own electricity on a salvaged generator and collects his water in cisterns that once were stainless steel ice cream mixing vats.

During the 1960s, when "Austin really started to grow and lots of apartment houses were being built," he decided to build the sawmill. "They would clear a whole big lot and just push down huge oak trees, maybe 200 years old, and bulldoze them and burn them on the spot. I hated to see that wood go to waste. They destroyed that pretty wood," he said.

In 1969, Young participated in a bit of Austin history when UT's strong-willed regents chairman, Frank Erwin, had ordered the removal of several large trees to allow the expansion of Memorial Stadium. Students protested loudly and climbed the trees, but Erwin prevailed.

Young recalled driving past the stadium and seeing the fallen trees. He convinced the contractor to give him the trees, which were four feet in diameter and weighed about 75 tons.

He sawed them up and made things from the wood, included a 10-by-6-foot table. A few scraps of the famous trees are still laying around his shop.

Young's sawmill utilizes the Rube Goldberg theory of industrial design. The mill and an adjacent planer, made from a commercial ice cream maker, are driven by a six-cylinder Chevrolet engine. A sliding table that moves the logs back and forth is powered by a lawn mower engine. The table moves on rails salvaged from an abandoned East Austin rail line

The framework at the top of the mill is constructed from natural gas pipeline, torn from the ground during the construction of an Interstate 35 interchange.

An ingenious device moves the logs closer to the saw blade after each cut. It is hashed together

World War II cargo aircraft and an automobile generator, which he has reversed electrically to make it into a motor. "They don't come out perfect," he said of his machines, "but the damn things work." Electricity for Young's lights, electric blanket and the radio that plays his classical music comes from massive batteries that the phone company discarded years ago. They are periodically charged by the generator from an arc welder.

This arrangement is soon to change, Young hopes. He is planning a 65-foot-tall windmill, hooked to a series of automobile alternators to charge the batteries. Then he will drill his own well with a rig he will build himself. He needs a new band saw, so he is attempting to barter for large pulleys from a cotton gin being demolished.

Sometime, he plans to build a heated summing pool surrounded by an 80-foot greenhouse.

So often in the course of history, we forget the significance of the fact that people had to eat, no matter what else happened. Whether men were fighting wars or settling the frontier, it was the women who cooked for them (along with hundreds of other chores). Their food oiled the machine of wars and settlements.

In a large bowl, combine 2 cups of the flour, the sugar, salt and yeast. In a small saucepan over low heat, combine milk, water, butter, orange peel and nutmeg. Heat to very hot (120 to 130 degrees). Butter need not melt completely. Stir milk mixture into yeast mixture and beat with electric mixer at medium speed for 2 minutes, scraping bowl as needed. LUBBOCK-Women are smoking cigarettes now more than ever - and cancer statistics are showing it.

Breast cancer, one the leading killers of the female population, is being overtaken by cases of lung cancer because of increased cigarette usage, says Davor Vugrin, M.D., chief of oncology at Texas Tech University Health Sciences Center.

"In the next decade, about 1.5 million people will develop lung cancer and 1.25 million will die from it, providing there is no breakthrough in treatment or prevention," he said.

"We now know that some environmental factors predispose cancer," Vugrin said. "An everybody knows that smoking promotes development of lung

Translated into English, the statement says, "We learned

Single women might find good moves at chess club

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: You have often been asked a question like this: I am a 26-year-old female who would like to meet a decent, eligible man. I've tried the bar scene, but most men are after a one-night stand. I've tried church groups, but the few men who are present came because their wives made them go. So where do I go from here? Abby, I have a suggestion: Join a chess club. Women are always welcome. Furthermore, they will find that men outnumber women 10-to-1. Not bad odds! Also, from 25 percent to 40 percent of the men will be unmarried. Men who play chess on a regular basis are usually of good character. The game requires that the player make individual, intelligent, patient and logical decisions. These attributes carry over into everyday life. For example, I estimate that 95 percent of steady tournament players do not smoke, and I have never met one who abuses alcohol or drugs. They are almost always employed, are high achievers and have a stable family life.

A woman could counter with, "But I don't know anything about chess.' Well, that could be to her advantage. What better way to break the ice than to ask a man of her choice to show her the moves? If you print this, some women will probably write in and say, "I married a chess player, and you can have him!"

I realize that not every chess player is necessarily an ideal prospect for marriage, but it's a good way to meet eligible men.

LYLE PROSTERMAN COLUMBUS

DEAR LYLE: It's a novel idea for a place for women to meet decent men, but the typical chess player (as I perceive him) is not exactly a barrel of laughs. He's apt to be quiet and pensive, more of an introvert than an extrovert, highly competitive, and slow to make decisionswhich isn't all bad. The moves in chess have often been compared with those made by two opposing generals on a battlefield. A chess game resembles a war in that it consists of attack and defense, whose object is making the "king" surrender. On second thought, it could be a good training ground for mar-

Youth tries to warn Jesus of imminent arrest

EDITOR'S NOTE — This is the second installment of a five-part series, "Easter's Unsung Heroes," about the peripheral, secondary characters seldom noted but who sometimes performed more bravely than the apostles. This part is about a boy.

By GEORGE W. CORNELL AP Religion Writer

The boy pulled a linen cloth around his shoulders and dashed out of the house. He must find them. They probably had gone to their usual place, the olive press in the old Gethsemane garden across the valley and up on the

He latched the courtyard gate behind him and struck out at a fast trot down the street.

The hour was past midnight, with most of Jerusalem in darkness. But high on the city's farther side, rows of yellow lanterns ringed the Temple porches, crowning the eastern hill with jewels of fire. It was Passover, time of festival.

The young man cut through open squares, taking the shortest route, plunging three steps at a time down the occasional stone stairs descending eastward into the lower city. Some urgent motive had driven him to quit his home in the third watch of night and go in search of Jesus and his men. Most likely, a friend had brought word of an unusual nighttime militia leaving Fort Antonia adjoining the Temple, the rumored purpose being to arrest Jesus

In any case, the youth took off in a rush, hastily dressed. His name was John Mark, later to record the Gospel that bears his name. He was then only a lad in his teens, his boyhood role barely mentioned in the records, his identity known only by deduction.

Yet even at his young, untested age, he showed spunk, loyalty and heroic initiative, sticking by friends, risking trouble to defend them against the martial tromp

He was among rarely mentioned participants in the Easter events who acted with splendid merit, but with little appreciation for it since

Mark was the son of a hospitable, wealthy Jerusalem widow whose home in the upper city served as quarters for Jesus and his 12 apostles. It is probable on that night the troops first had come there, trampling her gardens, clomping through the house, examining chests and storerooms, pressing her with questions.

There, on that eve of Passover, Jesus and his men had shared their solemn supper in an upper room. Mark had heard their voices, smelled the piquant odors of roast lamb and spices drifting down into the dark court outside.

Something Jesus said, if Mark heard it aright, shocked him. Truly ... one of you will betray me." A hush upstairs, and then the stunned reactions, "Is it I? ...

Easter's unsung heroes

Is it I?" It sounded incredible. Mark stared at the lighted doorway above, and one disciple came plunging down the stairs and left the house.

Then, in the room above, Mark heard more mystifying sayings, Take, eat, this is my body." And then. . this is my blood ... poured out for many." Swallowing hard, Mark edged up closer to the landing, and Jesus' words floated through the doorway

"It is expedient for you that I go away ... A little while, and you will see me no more ... You will weep and lament ... But your sorrow shall be turned into joy ... Abide in me, and I in you ... This is my commandment, that you love one another as I have loved you ... In the world you have tribulation; but be of good cheer, I have overcome the world."

After awhile they left, filing down the outside stairs and strolling slowly up the street, their conversation fading into the night. Mark went to bed but didn't sleep.

Later something happened, either a message from a friend or the preliminary military search of the house, and it sent the young man flying across the city toward the Mount of Olives, his heart

The midnight pavement echoed with his running footsteps. He went through the eastern city gate, down into the valley of Kidron, thick with the tents of Passover pilgrims.

He bounded across the little bridge, breathing hard, and started up the mountain, dodging through trees and brush. Branches scraped his cheeks and stones bruised his bare feet.

Then as he neared the walled garden of the olive press, he heard the metal clank of armor and saw the leaping lights of the torches. He was too late!

Scared, dismayed, he crept forward in the darkness and came upon the scene. He crouched in a thicket, panting. A fully armed Roman cohort pushed into the clearing, their armor and weapons rattling, led by a knot of Temple guards and robed

Jesus stood there, the flaring torches lighting his face, tired and strained

It was a confusing, frightening tableau - the kiss of Judas, branches snapping as Roman troops closed in, the darting lights and shadows, the apostle Peter swinging his sword, a scream, and Jesus' stern, quieting voice. "Put your sword into its sheath perish by the sword. Then Jesus turned to the Temple chiefs with the Roman captain. "Have you come out against

. For all who take the sword will me as a robber, with swords and clubs to capture me? Day after day, I was with you in the Temple teaching, and you did not seize me." He paused, nodding slowly. 'But let the Scriptures be fulfilled."

The soldiers grabbed his arms, twisting them behind him. They tied his hands, looped the rope several times around his body and knotted it, leaving a length of rope to lead him away.

All the apostles had fled in panic. But Mark, that brave young man, seldom cited in the recollections of Easter, stayed with Jesus until forced to quit the

"And a certain young man followed him, with nothing but a linen cloth around his body," Mark set down this incident years later. No other Gospel source knew about it, but Mark knew, because he was there.

As he related, the soldiers spied him trailing along behind the bound Jesus. They tried to seize him, rushing after him and grasping his garment. But he squirmed out of the skimpy garb. His account says, "He left the linen cloth and ran away naked.'

Mark's Gospel is considered based mainly on accounts given him by the apostle Peter, to whom Mark later became an assistant. But he never forgot that midnight, boyhood race to try to help, and couldn't resist including it.

He slipped it in unobtrusively, anonymously, without boasting. But it was part of the record of dedication under fire, of the brash idealism of the young.

London's Tower Bridge has that medieval look

By LARRY THORSON Associated Press Writer

LONDON (AP) - Which London museum opens at irregular times, looks medieval but has fiberglass adornments, carries over 17,000 vehicles a day and teaches the meaning of the word bascule?

Clues: It's owned by the City of London, the borough in the center of the British capital where the world does a major part of its financial business and which also holds such tourist attractions as Roman-era walls, the Tower of London and .

Yes, it's Tower Bridge, the best-known of the 25 spans across the Thames in the London area, the last bridge before the Thames empties into the sea 20 miles to the east.

Though the bridge is this year marking only the 100th anniversary of its cornerstonelaying, it is not uncommon for a tourist to look at its fairy-castle stone towers and conjecture that it was built about the same time as its neighbor, the Tower of London, a 12th-century fortress.

People may also confuse the histories of the two neighbors and wonder whether Prince James of Scotland was imprisoned by Beefeaters in a garret of the bridge towers in 1406. No, that was in the Tower of London, centuries before a population explosion mandated the building of another span below London Bridge.

The stonework of Tower Bridge masks a steel structure as modern as could be managed in the 1880s. "It's a remarkably tough structure, a really good piece of kit," said Bridgemaster Roy Dalton, an engineer.

But when the bridge was opened in 1894, it was denounced in The Builder magazine as a "monstrous and preposterous architectural sham." The Buil- the Docklands redevelopment der thought it would have been better just to show the steel, but that wasn't the aim of the designer.

Architect Horace Jones had won a competition for the design, with the requirement that the bridge stand in harmony with its medieval neighbor, the Tower.

That it does. The two structures are both clad in light gray stone, and they impart a Gothic charm to a part of London where the steel-and-concrete skycraper favored by bank headquarters has taken over.

But the bridge has become a bit of a fiberglass fake. The City of London spent $7 million fixing it up in 1981-82, and to save weight. cast-iron decorative panels were replaced with fiberglass, painted blue and white like the visible steel bow-shaped girders.

Even bits of the stonework now aren't stone, but plastic, including the elaborate fleur-de-lis forms atop eight spires.

Despite those changes, Tower Bridge still opens, though not nearly so often as when it was new and there was a busy docks district between it and London Bridge.

On average five times a week nowadays two 100-foot sections of the two-lane roadway swing up on pivots — those pivoting sections are called bascules — to let ships

Originally the bridge machinery was steam-driven, with immense hydraulic pumps pivoting the bascules. The steam machinery has been replaced by electricity, but the old boilers are on view in the museum sections of the bridge.

For the tourist, a must is the view from the walkways that link the two towers, 139 feet above the water. There one sees a unique panorama of Thames-side London - from the distant sight of Big Ben at the Houses of Parliament, to the new construction in

Courtney Brown set a new school record in the 100 with a winning time of 11.97. Pampa's 440-relay team of Courtney Brown, Yolanda Brown, Sandee Stokes and Tanya Lidy broke their own personal record with a 48.1 clocking.

Sophomore sprinter Tanya Lidy went unchallenged again in the 200 as she beat freshman teammate Shavonne Parker to the tape by 2.5 seconds.

"Tanya ran well as usual," Cornelsen said. Lidy was also second in the long jump

Lidy, with her smooth, effortless stride, is unbeaten in the 200meter run after four races this year. In last year's state meet, Lidy's 24-10 was the fastest time after recorded by a panhandle schoolgirl even though she was beaten at the tape by Lisa Ford of Forth Worth Poly. She has won the 200 eleven times since her freshman year.

Cornelsen was pleased with the efforts of freshman tracksters Parker, Yolanda Brown, Shana Merritt and Tonya Dearman. Brown was second in both the 100 hurdles and the triple jump and third in the long jump. Dearman was third in the 1600 and second in the 3200. Merritt was third in the "All our ninth-grade girls did well," he added.

Pampa dominated the shot and discus events. Andrea Hopkins won both events while Sandra Farrah was second in the shot and third in the discus.

Tacy Stoddard was second in the 1600 and Sandee Stokes was third in the triple jump.

Pampa finished third in the boys' divisiion with 92 points.

We had several boys make improvements, but it's been hard to get them all to perform well all on the same day," Cornelsen said.

Gary Jernigan won both the 200 and 100 and improved his times in both events. Pampa's 400-relay team of Donovan Lewis, Lance Ripple, Gary Jernigan and Mark Williams took first with their personal best time of 44.2. Mark Williams was third in the 300 hurdles with his best time of 39.7.

Robert Perez, a freshman, placed second in the 3200 with a time of 10:51.9. Shawn Greene also had his best throw in the discus and finished second.

"Perez ran well for us," Cornelsen said. "We had guys like Scott Vanderburg who had a big improvement by clearing 12 feet in the pole vault for the first time ever." Vanderburg placed sixth in the vault.

Dennis Dailey was third in the 400 and the 1600-relay team of Mark Williams, Brandon Bard, Robbie Ellison and Dailey also placed third with their best time

Paper reports UT infractions

Longhorns and Sugar Daddies

AUSTIN (AP) — Sports agents and University of Texas boosters gave Longhorn football players cash, liquor, meals, free dental and legal services and discounts at apartments, the Dallas Morning News reported today in a copyright story.

Such gift-giving would be violations of the National Collegiate Athletic Association extrabenefit rules.

In two months of interviews with 28 former Texas players, whose careers spanned 1978 to 1985, 11 told the News they accepted cash payments — in some cases amounting to more than $10,000 — while they played football at Texas.

Seven of the 11 former Longhorn players who admitted accepting money said they established long-term relationships with boosters — whom they called their "sugar daddies" or "sweet daddies."

Darryl Clark, a UT running back from 1980 to 1982 who went on to play two seasons with the Arizona Wranglers of the USFL, said "It's like a dream for a lot of players. They never knew they could live like this."

Head football coach Fred Akers, interviewed by the News in his Austin office on Friday, said he was unaware his players had received benefits beyond the tuition, room, board and books provided by their athletic scholarships.

"I am really, I am surprised," Akers said. "I am surprised, and I intend to turn this over to the NCAA."

Tony Degrate, who signed recently with the Tampa Bay Buccaneers of the National Football League, said his relationships with alumni didn't begin in earnest until his senior year, when he won the Vince Lombardi Award as the nation's outstanding college lineman.

"My senior year just got hotter and hotter," Degrate said. "From alumni walking up to me in the locker room, to my room, shaking my hand and giving me a bill (money)."

Degrate added, "I never purbome some

Degrate added, "I never pursued a sugar daddy. If I had wanted something, I could have had it. But my senior year I made up for all those years I lost."

The News reported Sunday that some players had sold complimentary game tickets to boosters for inflated prices. Shortly after the article appeared, UT Athletic Director DeLoss Dodds said he had reported the allegations to the NCAA, and announced that he had retained Houston lawyer Knox Nunnally, a former UT football player, to conduct the university's own investigation.

Maurice McCloney, a wide receiver and a letterman on the 1980 and 1981 Longhorn teams, said he received cash from two boosters, one from Dallas, the other from Beaumont, his hometown.

"Over three years," McCloney said, "I got about $10,000 from them."

An Austin dentist, who in 1977 founded a black professionals' organization to befriend black UT football players, said he and some colleagues have provided free legal, medical and dental services to some black football players — many of whom, he said, would have had no other way to pay for it.

"As far as medical care, they haven't had it," said Dr. Norman Mason. "If he comes in here with real pain and needs a tooth pulled or something, I'll just do it and send him back to school. But now a root canal, where I would have to sit down and spend some time, we get an understanding. Maybe he'll come over to my house and cut the lawn, wash the car."

Degrate said his senior season in 1984 was full of free dinners, nights on the town, cash handshakes, free clothes and jewelry, and offers from agents.

"I had one agent come in and say, "Sign this contract — for $30,000 cash, and it also guarantees you a house and a car," Degrate said. "I turned it down."

Duke's low key manner may be result of earlier losses

DURHAM, N.C. (AP) — Senior forward David Henderson says Duke's low-key demeanor may be the result of some early disappointments the Blue Devils saw before they worked their way to No. 1 this season.

"We were once the team that was laughed at—now we're highly regarded," said Henderson, who remembers when Duke was 11-17 in 1983. "We are the team that's hunted now. But because we were highly regarded as freshmen, people expected a lot right away. It doesn't work that way in the (Atlantic Coast Conference)."

"I definitely think it's ironic," said senior guard Johnny Dawkins. "We accomplished every goal we set out to accomplish in one season. Maybe it hasn't sunk in. When it's over, we'll get together and have a party."

together and have a party."

To get to the NCAA championship game, Duke will have to get past Kansas, a team the Blue Devils defeated for the NIT Big Apple championship in early December. A victory Saturday would match Duke with the winner of the Louisville-LSU game for the national basketball championship.

Duke Coach Mike Krzyzewski dismisses descriptions of his team as a workmanlike group that wins games in a wooden fashion.

"I don't think (people who say that) have been around our team," he said. "I do think we're a close-knit group. This is a spe-concentration.

"If you get too emotional, especially during a game, it (blocks) your ability to think," Krzyzewski said. "You use up energy with that emotion. We really like each other. We think a lot of each other. If we won down there (in Dallas), I think we'll be emotional."

Final 4: Bananas & Beds

DALLAS (AP) — At the Adolphus Hotel in downtown Dallas, where the Kansas Jayhawks and many of their fans will stay during the Final Four national college basketball playoffs next weekend, the chef has ordered a change in the menu.

The University of Kansas is apparently mad about Kansas City beef. And bananas.

"Lots of bananas," said Peter Gamble, executive chef at the Adolphus. At the request of KU officials, Gamble also has placed a special order of Kansas City steaks, instead of the usual Chicago cuts.

To meet KU specifications, one meal for the Jayhawks will include steak, stuffed baked potatoes, lasagna, corn and, of course, bananas.

Officials of the Adolphus and the three other host hotels for Final Four teams say they are busy trying to accommodate other special requests, including over-sized beds.

over-sized beds.

Representatives of the University of Louisville and Duke University explained to the Fair-

Americas that twin beds, which many hotel rooms contain, won't accommodate even a second-string forward.

Because two players will share a room, two large beds are required in each room on one floor.

"You can't put a 6-10 player on a twin bed," Louisville trainer Jerry May told the Dallas Times Herald. "Every time he rolls over, his feet are hanging off. He has to decide which part of his body is going to sleep first."

The Fairmont has moved several larger beds onto rooms on the floor that Louisville players will occupy.

Plaza of the Americas has made sure that Duke players are assigned only to rooms with kingsized beds.

"If they sleep diagonally, those beds will probably do," said Wolfgang von Baumbach, general manager at Plaza of the Americas.

The teams have requested or arranged stringent security for the floors they occupy to shield players from curious fans and reporters.

Louisville, which has reached the Final Four several times in the past decade, will bring its usual City of Louisville policeman to stand sentry.

However, no team will do the Georgetown University disappearing act, which involves staying outside the city where the playoffs are held to maximize privacy.

When Georgetown officials came to Dallas several weeks ago to make arrangements in the event the Hoyas reached the Final Four, they told Adolphus managers they would stay in Waco, 100 miles away.

"We're not going to be like Georgetown," assistant Duke coach Peter Gaudet said.

CORPUS CHRISTI, Texas (AP) Freddy Fender relaxed in the chair at Hacienda Recording Studio with the peaceful look of a 49year-old man who has come to terms with his life.

to stay. "I've reached a state of contentment, serenity and acceptance of my life and the things around me," Fender explained. "I have no regrets and no resentments. I would like to enjoy life. Maybe get a hit and pace my bookings, but not go crazy like I did before.'

To understand what has happened to Freddy Fender, you have to go back to the beginning.

He was born Baldemar Huerta and grew up in San Benito and anywhere else the family went to pick cotton and sleep under trees or in tents. Actually, Fender said he never was much good at picking the wooly stuff, but he did learn how to pick a guitar.

During cotton-picking trips to Arkansas, he relaxed in beer ioints on Saturday nights and listened to rhythm and blues.

"It was like heaven, listening to the music that came out of the juke box," he remembered.

The sounds of R&B, rock and country were all fashioned together in Fender's original sound, but it took awhile for that sound to reach the public.

In 1958 he signed a contract for "Wasted Days and Wasted Nights" but never received any money other than a $500 advance, even though the song sold over 800,000 copies. Two years later, he was arrested for possession of marijuana in Ruston, La., and a conviction sent him to prison for

It wasn't until 1975, when Fender was 37 years old, that the now-famous song hit nationally. And that came after the release of "Before the Last Teardrop Falls," which went to No. 1 on the country chart. "Secret Love," which reached the Top 10, fol-

He bought a house on Ocean Drive and drove around in a 1947 midnight-blue Cadillac that once belonged to George F. Parr - the so-called "Duke of Duval County.

But what he gained in money, he lost elsewhere.

"When I became an international success, that's when the pressure started," Fender said. 'My worries came in trying to fix and control other things instead of just taking care of myself. I was killing myself mentally and physically

His family life deteriorated and he and his wife came close to divorce in 1981. They finally reconciled two years later while Fender was in the midst of a bankruptcy suit, brought on by a bus accident that killed two of his band members

The accident did more than send him toward financial doom. It almost destroyed his mind.

Just 20 minutes before the bus crashed head-on with a tractortrailer, Fender had given up his seat on the passenger side to Joseph "Little Joe" Lambert. Lambert, Fender's drummer and friend of 20 years, and driver Joseph "Sonny" Parker were both killed. Fender, who was not on the bus, blamed himself.

Slowly, Fender had to learn that the accident wasn't his fault. Slowly, he had to give up drinking and drugs and learn to face life on his own.

"Today, if something goes wrong, I can handle it. I don't break into little pieces and I don't have to pick up a bottle to get over my anger or hate or frustration," Fender said.

He left the fast lane with something akin to a sense of relief. For years, he had been trying to be something he wasn't, something different from the honest South Texan he was born.

"I lost all my rat race instincts that I developed early in my career," he said. "I got skyrocketed into a fast-lane environment. Now, my ego has just about faded away. I don't have to dress up for people or put up fronts for anyone. I am what I am.

'I don't have to impress anyone but God, and I don't think he needs me to impress him.'

Instead of living "Wasted Days and Wasted Nights," Fender is living "Vaya Con Dios."

He and his family, now his "top priority," live in the country outside of Corpus Christi. For the past seven months, he said, he has stayed off booze and drugs and has lost 20 pounds. He said he hopes he can hold this feeling.

"Some people would call it surrender," he mused. "I have quit going against the tide, against life. The things that keep you from reaching this point are ambition and want of material things. I've had money. Now, I don't have that much. We live in the country and that's all we want and it's been there all the time. I've discovered it doesn't take that much to make a man happy. "I lost a bunch of years I could have been really happy with instead of acquiring material wealth," Fender said. "I've run a complete cycle and now I'm back to where it started with just me and my music.

The music, which Fender and his producer Rick Garcia were fine-tuning two weeks ago, is an all-Spanish album. It should be released in mid-April, Garcia said. It will be followed up with an English version.

At the time of the interview, Fender was working with Garcia and Garcia's wife, Patricia, on Reflections of My Life.

Fender's idea was to add her a capella introduction into the song. After a few tries, Garcia got the timing down perfectly and they all approved.

"I came up with this idea and now I'm afraid of it," Fender said with a grin. "A song is like a diamond. If you chip it wrong, you'll end up with a bunch of little stones instead of one perfect

The original "Reflections of My Life," first released in the early '70s, had to be completely re-written in Spanish. Some of the other cuts, like "Days of Wine and Roses," translated almost directly, Fender said. He has written or translated most of the songs on the album.

A few of the lines in "Reflections" could be a part of Fender's own hard-lived story. "El hombre, no llora se siguanta, no implora cuando ya no hay amor. Hay que seguir viviendo." ("A man doesn't cry, he does not implore when there is no more love. He must keep on living.")

Freddy Fender has finally learned how to do just that.

Business faces mediocrity crisis

By LINDSEY TANNER Associated Press Writer

CHICAGO (AP) — Mediocrity is infiltrating American business management, and U.S. companies will lose worldwide competitiveness unless corporations put more priority on employee training and development, a management expert contends. In recent years, severe costcutting and staff-slashing, a surge in mergers and acquisitions, and the "revolution" in computers and data processing have contributed to the coming crisis in management, said David Merrell, a management consultant at Rohrer, Hibler &

Replogle Inc. 'If we do nothing new, the consequence will be a cadre of poorly trained, narrowly experienced and hopelessly short-sighted managers," said Merrell, whose Chicago-based firm provides psychological consulting services to industry.

In the latest issue of the corporation's newsletter, Merrell warns that by the end of the decade, there will be a shortage of good, experienced general managers "because they are not now being trained.

Budget-tightening in the recession-plagued mid-1970s forced "most manufacturing and many other industries to cut back anywhere from 20 to 40 percent in the last five years," Merrell said in an interview.

In addition, the growing trend of mergers and acquisitions over the past several years threatens to breed mediocrity, he said.

Every time you get a merger or acquisition, many top jobs are lost. That cuts back on the number of positions you can move managers into," Merrell said.

Many of those positions also have been eliminated by "the data-processing and computer revolution," he said, resulting in less transferring and fewer growth opportunities for emplovees Without people getting a broadening of experience, they're not going to have the backround, the ability, to do strategic, long-range thinking, Merrell said. 'That means that business could do a poor job of new product development ... and could lose worldwide competitiveness," he said. To avoid the threat of mediocrity, Merrell said, the companies should re-establish their internal management programs.

"They must do a much better job of assessing, evaluating, picking out the people who have the most potential and then set up specific developmental plans' and training programs, he said.

Industry also should give its managers a bigger obligation to coach and develop their subordinates through fundamental managerial apprenticeship and counseling, not just in technical or job-related teaching, he said.

Anti-communist plunderers a problem for Washington

By-GEORGE GEDDA Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - The disclosures about the wealth of former Philippines President Ferdinand Marcos illuminate the problems the United States has in dealing with dictators who are strategically important and morally deficient.

The attitude of several American presidents toward leaders like Marcos has been ambivalent: he pleased them with his anti-communism and appalled them with his heavy-handed and corrupt ways.

But one source of encouragement for the United States is that, with the departure of Marcos and his Caribbean counterpart, Haiti's Jean-Claude Duvalier, the ranks of high-living, rightwing authoritarians are dimi-

Duvalier's wealth is widely estimated to be in the $400 million range, only a fraction of Marcos reputed fortune, but still a tidy sum in a country where per capi ta income is $300 a year.

The Caribbean was once fertile ground for showy strongmen. Cuba's Fulgencio Batista and Venezuela's Marcos Perez Jimenez both were known for their ostentatious wealth.

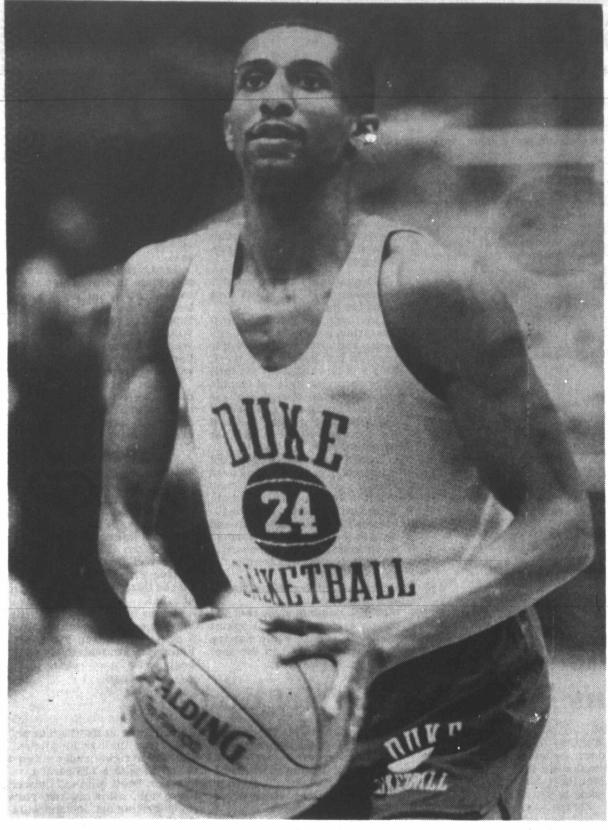

The late Nicaraguan President Anastasio Somoza and his family were worth about $100 million the fruits of more than 40 years of dynastic plunder, according to Walter LaFeber, an American historian. He said Somoza and his friends in the National Guard monopolized high-profit industries such as prostitution, gambling and construction.

Another Somoza-like figure was the Dominican Republic's Rafael Trujillo, who, according to biographer Robert Crassweller, was worth about $500 million when he was killed by an assassin's bullet in 1961.

While Marcos was not the first leader to build a fortune while in office, what set him apart from the others was the scale in which he and his wife, Imelda, carried out their self-enrichment.

Authorities of the new Philippine government estimate Marcos accumulated a minimum of $5 billion during his years in

Paper reports UT infractions

Longhorns and Sugar Daddies

AUSTIN (AP) — Sports agents and University of Texas boosters gave Longhorn football players cash, liquor, meals, free dental and legal services and discounts at apartments, the Dallas Morning News reported today in a copyright story.

Such gift-giving would be violations of the National Collegiate Athletic Association extrabenefit rules.

In two months of interviews with 28 former Texas players, whose careers spanned 1978 to 1985, 11 told the News they accepted cash payments — in some cases amounting to more than $10,000 — while they played football at Texas.

Seven of the 11 former Longhorn players who admitted accepting money said they established long-term relationships with boosters - whom they called their "sugar daddies" or 'sweet daddies.

Darryl Clark, a UT running back from 1980 to 1982 who went on to play two seasons with the Arizona Wranglers of the USFL. said "It's like a dream for a lot of players. They never knew they could live like this."

Head football coach Fred Akers, interviewed by the News in his Austin office on Friday, said he was unaware his players had received benefits beyond the tuition, room, board and books provided by their athletic scholarships

"I am really, I am surprised," Akers said. "I am surprised, and I intend to turn this over to the NCAA.

Tony Degrate, who signed recently with the Tampa Bay Buccaneers of the National Football League, said his relationships with alumni didn't begin in earnest until his senior year, when he won the Vince Lombardi Award as the nation's outstanding college lineman.

"My senior year just got hotter and hotter," Degrate said.

"From alumni walking up to me in the locker room, to my room, shaking my hand and giving me a bill (money).

Degrate added, "I never pursued a sugar daddy. If I had wanted something, I could have had it. But my senior year I made up for all those years I lost."

The News reported Sunday that some players had sold complimentary game tickets to boosters for inflated prices. Shortly after the article appeared, UT Athletic Director DeLoss Dodds said he had reported the allegations to the NCAA, and announced that he had retained Houston lawyer Knox Nunnally, a former UT football player, to conduct the university's own investigation.

Maurice McCloney, a wide receiver and a letterman on the 1980 and 1981 Longhorn teams, said he received cash from two boosters. one from Dallas, the other from Beaumont, his hometown.

"Over three years," McCloney said, "I got about $10,000 from

"I lost a bunch of years I could have been really happy with instead of acquiring material wealth," Fender said. "I've run a complete cycle and now I'm back to where it started with just me and my music."

The music, which Fender and his producer Rick Garcia were fine-tuning two weeks ago, is an all-Spanish album. It should be released in mid-April, Garcia said. It will be followed up with an English version.

At the time of the interview, Fender was working with Garcia and Garcia's wife, Patricia, on "Reflections of My Life."

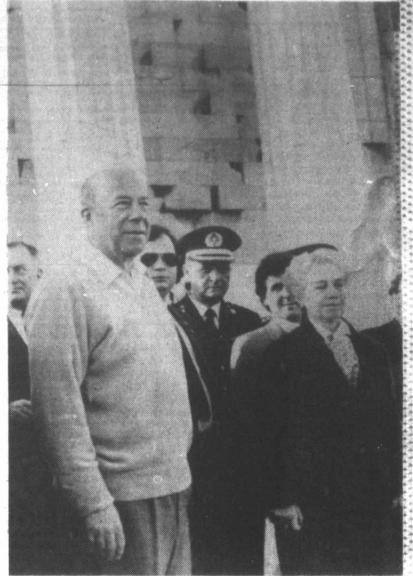

Fender's idea was to add her a capella introduction into the song. After a few tries, Garcia got the timing down perfectly and they all approved.

"I came up with this idea and now I'm afraid of it," Fender said with a grin. "A song is like a diamond. If you chip it wrong, you'll end up with a bunch of little stones instead of one perfect one."

The original "Reflections of My Life," first released in the early '70s, had to be completely re-written in Spanish. Some of the other cuts, like "Days of Wine and Roses," translated almost directly, Fender said. He has written or translated most of the songs on the album.

A few of the lines in "Reflections" could be a part of Fender's own hard-lived story. "El hombre, no llora se siguanta, no implora cuando ya no hay amor. Hay que seguir viviendo." ("A man doesn't cry, he does not implore when there is no more love. He must keep on living.")

Freddy Fender has finally learned how to do just that.

Expert warns

Business faces mediocrity crisis

By LINDSEY TANNER
Associated Press Writer

CHICAGO (AP) — Mediocrity is infiltrating American business management, and U.S. companies will lose worldwide competitiveness unless corporations put more priority on employee training and development, a management expert contends.

In recent years, severe costcutting and staff-slashing, a surge in mergers and acquisitions, and the "revolution" in computers and data processing have contributed to the coming crisis in management, said
David Merrell, a management consultant at Rohrer, Hibler &

Replogle Inc.

"If we do nothing new, the consequence will be a cadre of poorly trained, narrowly experienced and hopelessly short-sighted managers," said Merrell, whose Chicago-based firm provides psychological consulting services to industry.

In the latest issue of the corporation's newsletter, Merrell warns that by the end of the decade, there will be a shortage of good, experienced general managers "because they are not now being trained."

Budget-tightening in the recession-plagued mid-1970s forced "most manufacturing and many other industries to cut back anywhere from 20 to 40 percent in the last five years," Merrell said in an interview.

In addition, the growing trend

of mergers and acquisitions over the past several years threatens to breed mediocrity, he said.

"Every time you get a merger or acquisition, many top jobs are lost. That cuts back on the number of positions you can move managers into," Merrell said.

Many of those positions also have been eliminated by "the data-processing and computer revolution," he said, resulting in less transferring and fewer growth opportunities for employees.

"Without people getting a broadening of experience, they're not going to have the backround, the ability, to do strategic, long-range thinking," Merrell said.

"That means that business

could do a poor job of new product development ... and could lose worldwide competitiveness," he said.

To avoid the threat of mediocrity, Merrell said, the companies should re-establish their internal management programs.

"They must do a much better job of assessing, evaluating, picking out the people who have the most potential and then set up specific developmental plans" and training programs, he said.

Industry also should give its managers a bigger obligation to coach and develop their subordinates through fundamental managerial apprenticeship and counseling, not just in technical or job-related teaching, he said.

Anti-communist plunderers a problem for Washington

By GEORGE GEDDA Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The disclosures about the wealth of former Philippines President Ferdinand Marcos illuminate the problems the United States has in dealing with dictators who are strategically important and morally deficient.

The attitude of several American presidents toward leaders like Marcos has been ambivalent: he pleased them with his anti-communism and appalled them with his heavy-handed and corrupt ways.

But one source of encouragement for the United States is that, with the departure of Marcos and his Caribbean counterpart, Haiti's Jean-Claude Duvalier, the ranks of high-living, rightwing authoritarians are diminishing.

One such survivor is Zaire's President Mobutu Sese Seko, a pro-U.S. stalwart in central Africa and one of the world's richest men, with a reported $3 billion in assets. Mobutu, who has built 11 palaces in his impoverished country, runs what a Belgian newspaper once called a "kleptoracy"

Duvalier's wealth is widely estimated to be in the $400 million range, only a fraction of Marcos' reputed fortune, but still a tidy sum in a country where per capita income is $300 a year.

The Caribbean was once fertile ground for showy strongmen. Cuba's Fulgencio Batista and Venezuela's Marcos Perez Jimenez both were known for their ostentious wealth.

The late Nicaraguan President Anastasio Somoza and his family were worth about $100 million, the fruits of more than 40 years of dynastic plunder, according to Walter LaFeber, an American historian. He said Somoza and his friends in the National Guard monopolized high-profit industries such as prostitution, gambling and construction.

Another Somoza-like figure was the Dominican Republic's Rafael Trujillo, who, according to biographer Robert Crassweller, was worth about $500 million when he was killed by an assassin's bullet in 1961.

While Marcos was not the first leader to build a fortune while in office, what set him apart from the others was the scale in which he and his wife, Imelda, carried out their self-enrichment.

Authorities of the new Philippine government estimate Marcos accumulated a minimum of $5 billion during his years in office.

'The Rosebud Egg' was a gift from Czar Nicholas II of Russia to his wife, Alexandra, in 1895, and was long thought to be missing. Forbes' son Christopher writes in the April issue of Art & Antiques magazine.

But it turned up several months ago, and Malcolm Forbes shelled out an undisclosed amount for it, in one of two recent acquisitions.

In London, he paid $148,770 Tuesday for a jeweled snuff box presented by Queen Victoria to explorer Sir Henry M. Stanley, Christie's auctioneers said.

Don Garson, spokesman for Forbes, said the price for the 21/2-inchlong egg did not exceed the $1.8 million the publisher of Forbes magazine paid at a June auction for his 11th Faberge imperial egg.

The latest egg will be placed on display this week along with Forbes' other Faberge treasures at his Fifth Avenue gallery, Garson said.

The golden egg with rose diamonds opens to a velvet-lined interior that contains a life-size rosebud of gold. The acquisition of the Rosebud egg gives Forbes two more than the Soviet government.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Yoko Ono, the widow of slain former Beatle John Lennon, is postponing a series of North American concerts scheduled for April because of insufficient advance ticket sales, a spokesman said.

The concerts, scheduled to run April 1-29, were to follow her recent European tour, spokesman Elliot Mintz said Tuesday. 'Ms. Ono ... apologizes to the people who have already bought tickets for the North American Tour. She would have liked not to have postponed the concert," Mintz said.

The singer hopes that åfter her Japan tour next month, she may be Ble to do the concerts Mintz said. Information regarding ticket refunds will be announced at ticket outlets, he said.
