U.S., Europe to seek solution to terrorism

By CHARLES J. HANLEY
Associated Press Writer

Italian and West German Cabinet ministers, in advance of next week's Western summit in Tokyo, have proposed forming a multinational commando force that could be thrown into action in future terrorist emergencies.

The international anti-terrorist unit is one idea being discussed as the seven biggest industrial democracies prepare for their 12th annual summit, an economic conference overshadowed this year by the terrorist threat.

Past summits produced little more than joint declarations of war on terrorism, but this time President Reagan says a "grandiose statement" will not be enough. The recent surge of terror attacks, followed by the U.S. retaliatory air strike on Libya, may have set the stage for concrete steps.

"The general public in the various nations will not be satisfied with tinkering. They've become tired of inadequate responses to terrorism," Paul Wilkinson of Aberdeen University, an internationally noted expert on terrorism, said in a telephone interview from his office in Scotland.

Reagan administration officials say that at the summit they will seek closer cooperation in sharing intelligence information on terrorists. Wilkinson said he believes the Western allies may agree to boycott the airports of "pro-terrorist" states Libya, Iran and Syria.

European officials, for their part, say Western governments also must work harder toward resolving the Arab-Israeli impasse — the root of much of today's terrorism.

As recently as February, the French, who have long sought to limit the summits to economic issues, objected to putting terrorism on the agenda of the May 4-6 meeting. But after conservative Jacques Chirac became premier in elections March 16, France relented.

"The (French) government has decided to act so there can be a sort of coordination of action among the Western democracies," Chirac said in a French television interview last Wednesday.

In the past three weeks, in a widening campaign against alleged Libyan sponsorship of terrorism, West European governments have expelled at least 64 diplomats and other Libyans from six countries, and have tightened visa restrictions for entry by Libyans.

But, except for Britain, they refused to support the U.S. air attack on Libyan cities April 15, and none has joined in the U.S. economic embargo against Libya, whose trade with Western Europe and Japan totaled $12 billion in 1985.

For West Europeans, the threat may be too close — they fear a widening military or economic conflict in their backyard. For the Japanese, it may be too distant.

"In general, the Japanese can't feel the fear brought on by international terrorism," Kiichi Saeki, a Japanese scholar on defense issues, told The Associated Press in Tokyo.

Few expect the Western leaders next week to agree on broad anti-Libya economic sanctions. But here are some ideas being raised:

—Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher of West Germany and Defense Minister Giovanni Spadolini of Italy suggest creation of a multinational anti-terrorist police unit that could be deployed under joint agreement in skyjackings and similar crises. The U.S. administration was rebuffed last year when it sounded out the Europeans about stationing an all-American commando unit on their soil.

—The British have called for shutting down Libyan embassies in all West European capitals, rather than simply cutting back embassy staffs. Britain closed the London embassy in 1984.

—A U.S. presidential task force on terrorism has urged governments to modify bilateral extradition agreements to keep terrorists from escaping through loopholes. Britain complains, for example, that U.S. courts block extradition of some alleged Irish Republican Army terrorists who have fled to the United States.

Economic woes hang over political races

Hemphill hopefuls promise frugality

By CATHY SPAULDING
Staff Writer

CANADIAN — With dwindling oil activity chipping away at the county tax base, candidates for Hemphill County offices say they can keep the county operating without having to slash the budget or raise taxes.

In the only two contested country races, Canadian rancher and banker Don Schaefer is challenging Hemphill County Judge Bob Gober, while Frank Pfannenstiel is challenging Precinct 2 commissioner Don Thomason for that position. All are candidates for the Democratic nomination.

The total 1985 property value in Hemphill County was $1.253 billion, with most of that revenue coming from minerals. A spokesperson for the Hemphill County Central Appraisal District says that while estimates for 1986 have not been compiled, she does anticipate a decrease.

Former First National Bank of Canadian president Schaefer says he is proud to be a conservative and will take these beliefs to office with him if elected county judge.

"I want to be the people's servant," he said.

The past chairman of the Hemphill County Hospital Board, Schaefer was president of the First National Bank of Canada for 13½ years and was an employee of the bank for a total of 26 years. He was voted Canadian Man of the Year in 1985.

"I'm very proud of that plaque," Schaefer said of the plaque denoting his Man of the Year honor. "You have to work hard to get an honor like that."

"I feel that I can serve Hemphill County through my experience in fiscal matters, an understanding of our taxes and their proper use," Schaefer added. "The top administrative office in the county requires broad experience and dedication which I will provide."

Schaefer believes that by applying his conservative philosophy and banking experience to county government, he can help keep the county going through the oil crunch.

"Every attempt ought to be made to curtail spending to make it easier on the taxpayer," he said.

He added that he will operate his office on a "full-time basis by working in harmony with other courthouse officers."

"I'm not going to run it like I'm the kingpin," he said.

He feels he "can be a county judge dedicated to, and involved with Hemphill County, as an individual, husband and a father living within the community."

Among the activities Schaefer said he supports are such youth activities as the Future Farmers of America, the Junior Rodeo Association and

Challenger Schaefer

4-H Clubs. He is a member of the Canadian Rodeo Association.

Schaefer added that he has a "commitment for maximum use of county facilities and equipment in keeping with the needs and interests of the people of the county and not on a personal bias."

He also calls for "stong and consistent, but fair adjudication of the criminal docket."

Gober has been Hemphill County judge for eight years and says there have been

Post Office move opposition forms

By LARRY HOLLIS
Staff Writer

Unless Pampa residents who want to keep the present U.S. Post Office building in the downtown area show their concern soon, there's a good chance it will be vacated by the U.S. Postal Service, officials say.

The postal service is "already putting the wheels in motion for a new building," and local opposition to the plans is being organized, said Main Street Project Manager Lyn Moulton.

Barring any changes in attitude on the part of regional postal officials, groundbreaking ceremonies for a new Post Office — "if it goes" — will be happening in 1988, Moulton predicted.

At the Pampa City Commission meeting last week, City Manager Bob Hart said Harry Hall of Lubbock, regional section chief for managers and postmasters, had met with city officials and leaders from the Pampa Chamber of Commerce and the Pampa Industrial Foundation.

Based on a report presented by Hall and discussions at the meeting, "it looks like they will be trying to justify a need to abandon the present building," which was erected in the early 1930s, Hart said.

Moulton said Hall provided a set of guidelines used in formulating a decision analysis report (DAR), and steps to be taken in reviewing the local post office situation.

"In not one of those steps was it indicated they would consider staying in that building," Moulton claimed.

In the "schedule for U.S. Postal Service Action regarding the anticipated space requirements for the Pampa, Texas, post office," Hall lists eight steps and estimated time periods for the DAR leading up to the construction award.

The first step, requiring up to 30 days, is the initial DAR report from the Capital Investment Steering Committee. After that report is made, a divisional review and approval of the recommendation will take one to three weeks.

Then the project will be assigned to the Real Estate Office for 60 days, followed by assignment to project officers for site acquisition and design, with 120 days allotted.

Ninety days are allowed for advertising for a site and an architect, 30 days for site and architect selection, 120 days for design completion and 60 days for the construction award.

In a letter written to Hart and copies sent to five other local residents, Hall states, "Rest assured that after Step 1 (the committee DAR report) . . . is completed — as promised — I will furnish you with a copy of our Decision Analysis Report and await any response you may have for it (for a period of 30 days). After that time, I plan to proceed with my formal recommendation to our Divisional Headquarters in Oklahoma City."

Hall concludes, "I feel that our See POST, Page two

Gray candidates urge spending cuts

By PAUL PINKHAM
Staff Writer

Controlling spending in the face of a declining tax base is the biggest issue facing Gray County, according to two McLean Democrats seeking the nomination for Precinct Four county commissioner Saturday.

Glen Curry and Tony Smitherman both said the county has to begin cutting corners due to the dropping oil and agriculture bases.

The two will face the winner of the Republican race between the incumbent Ted Simmons, who switched parties earlier this year, and Earl Smith, a Pampa farmer and rancher. Precinct Four includes the McLean area and a corner of Pampa roughly east of Duncan Street and north of Browning Avenue.

Curry, who runs a meat processing plant in McLean, said

Election '86

One of a series

businessmen have already been cutting corners and if the government does not start doing the same, times far worse than the Great Depression lay ahead. He said he cannot say until he is in office where cuts should be made specifically, but basically feels they need to be made across-the-board.

"I want to see what there is to do before I say what I'm going to do," he said. But, he added, "We have got to cut taxes and we've got to quit giving money away."

Smitherman, a McLean area farmer and rancher, said declining oil and agriculture bases mean cutbacks are necessary in all segments of government and "I feel like the county level is where we have to start."

He said a conservative approach is the solution and called for better maintenance of county equipment to keep from having to make new purchases, a cutting down of travel expenses and closer checking of county expense accounts. Beyond that, he said, "I think it's just more of a belt-tightening all the way around."

Curry said he feels qualified for the job because his 26 years in business has taught him how to deal with the public "and Uncle Sam."

"The people that've been commissioners, if they can handle it, I don't see why I can't," he said.

Curry said he likes the idea of a public golf course in Pampa but is wary of using tax money for it. He said the commissioners should put a price tag on it before putting it to a vote and then, if enough people want it who are willing to raise money to build it, the city and county should help out.

"I would be in favor of it but, at this time, I don't feel we should take taxpayers' money to do it with because if you do, another group up there might want you to build a lake for them to go boating in," he said.

Curry, a member of the McLean Volunteer Fire Department, said he thinks a new fire contract with the city of Pampa is "way out of line" when compared with the McLean department. For example, he said, Pampa's contract is based on one truck

Band wins Sweepstakes honors

AMARILLO — The Pride of Pampa High School band took Sweepstakes honors again during the University Interscholastic League District I band competition Saturday at the Amarillo Civic Center.

The band, which played Thursday night, won Division I (superior) ratings in concert and sight reading competition. These honors, plus the Division I rating it garnered in the district marching contest in October, give it the coveted Sweepstakes designation.

The three numbers the band performed were Valdres by Hanssen and Bainum, Symphony for Band, Movement I, II and IV by Perischetti and Lincolnshire Posy.

In Junior High School Competition, held Saturday at the Civic Center, Pampa Middle School won Division II (excellent) ratings in sight reading and concert. The band, under the direction of Joe DiCosimo, performed the Citadel Concert March, Korean Folk Song Medley and Declaration Overture.

Results of the Canadian Middle School Band, which performed late Saturday evening, were not available.

"I am very, very pleased," Johnson said. "I am pleased so many parents showed up, more than 60. That's just a credit to our kids."

In sight reading, a band is given an unfamiliar piece of music and must play it.

Post Office move

Moulton said she feels the citizens of Pampa have "only a short time" to contact congressmen, postal officials and others to express their concern about the abandonment of the existing U.S. Post Office in downtown Pampa.

Employed here to help with the revitalization of the downtown area in connection with the city's selection in the Main Street Program, Moulton said the proposal to build a new post office building conflicts with the main thrust of the Main Street Project.

She noted that the Main Street Project is just starting in Pampa. Though not directly connected with that program, current plans for the rehabilitation of City Hall and the former Schneider Hotel are important projects for improving the downtown business area.

"Here we are, trying to build up the heart of the city," yet the abandonment of the downtown post office "is contradicting with all our efforts," Moulton declared.

"It's like having a major anchor (store) of a mall pull out of the mall," she said.

The U.S. Post Office building is a major anchor for downtown, Moulton said. "It brings more traffic downtown, which means more money is spent downtown."

And good business downtown, in connection with the Main Street Project goals to bring more out-of-town customers to the city, is generally good for the rest of the city also, she said.

That is one good reason for keeping the existing post office downtown, Moulton said. She listed three other reasons why she thinks the postal service should consider maintaining the present building:

"They're in an existing building. If money is going to be spent, it ought to be spent reasonably to improve the existing building (such as installing handicapped access ramps and acquiring nearby property to expand parking) instead of spending more to build a new building," she said.

"The aesthetic value of the building is important to Pampa," she claimed. "From what I hear, its value justifies keeping an important business there," such as the post office. Any other use of the building "would not do it justice at all."

"It will be a contradiction to things we're trying to do downtown" with improvements in line with the Main Street Project, she added.

Moulton said it's urgent that residents write letters and make contacts soon to protest the removal of the post office from the downtown area.

She said she had talked with Mack Nichols, National Main Street Center advisor.

"He told me that in cases like this, for the most part, one of the arguments they (postal service officials) use is they need to move into a more centralized part of the town," Moulton said.

"But in 90 percent of the cases, that never happens. Instead, they take whatever is cheapest to meet their requirements," and that's likely to be away from the downtown area of a city, she said.

She also has talked with a U.S. Department of Commerce official and received similar information.

Moulton said she and other concerned citizens are "drafting a letter to reach everyone we can in Pampa, provide them with the facts of this little problem — this major problem — and ask them to write their congressmen and their senators."

She said efforts need to be made to let the divisional postmaster and other postal officials "know Pampa finds the move very controversial."

It's important that Pampans from all areas of the city participate, "not just for downtown but for the city," Moulton said.

"So if Pampans want to do something, right now, they need to write a letter soon," she added.

Air Force confusion charged

LOMPOC, Calif. (AP) — Worried people seeking information when a Titan rocket exploded into a toxic cloud at Vandenberg Air Force Base got little help from local authorities, who charge that the Air Force was slow to tell the public they were not in danger.

An Air Force general insists he did everything right, and one county supervisor says local officials must share responsibility for the confusion that immediately followed the explosion. But local officials say that for the first half-hour after the April 18 blast, communications foulups left them with inadequate information.

"There was never an affirmative statement that 'there is no danger, don't worry about it,'" said Sgt. Dale Schade, commander of the local Santa Barbara County sheriff's station. "I would have expected definitive information from the Air Force when I requested it."

Police Chief Bob Hebert said no one panicked in the Lompoc Valley, where the 50,000 residents are accustomed to the thunder of missile tests and rocket launches eight miles away. Eventually they will watch space shuttles take off from a new launch complex.

Hebert said his officers had to monitor emergency radio traffic to find out that the cloud posed no danger because the Air Force never called police directly — a claim disputed by Vandenberg officials.

Lompoc District Hospital Administrator Bill Diebner said he had to ask his nurses to call their husbands at Vandenberg to learn that most of the cloud was drifting harmlessly to sea.

School district officials, unable to immediately contact Vandenberg because of the phone overload, kept 9,000 pupils indoors as a precaution.

And KRQQ-FM radio news director Jaimie Roedel said his station broadcast what turned out to be an incorrect report that Vandenberg and schools might be evacuated because the Air Force "did a less-than-average job. They should have said from the start there wasn't a problem."

Vandenberg's commander, Maj. Gen. Jack L. Watkins, said the Air Force was criticized unfairly, since city and county firefighters at the blast site apparently failed to promptly tell other agencies there was no threat.

He said rockets are never launched when the wind blows toward Lompoc.

"Everything went exactly right," said Watkins.

Star of 'Highway Patrol' Broderick Crawford dies

RANCHO MIRAGE, Calif. (AP) — Broderick Crawford, whose Academy Award performance as a Southern dictator in "All The King's Men" was overshadowed by his "Highway Patrol" television role, died Saturday. He was 72.

Crawford recently was admitted to Eisenhower Medical Center, said long-time agent Al Melnick.

The actor had been under treatment at several hospitals after suffering a major stroke about a year ago, Melnick said.

His two sons, Chris and Kelly, and their mother, Kay Crawford, were with him when he died. Also surviving is Crawford's current wife, Mary Alice, said hospital spokesman Mike McFadden.

Crawford also is survived by a daughter, Lauren.

Crawford was a beefy, loose-jointed man with a kicked-in face he considered his career insurance.

"The guys with ugly faces are working," he once said. "And a lot of the pretty boys aren't around much any more."

The face and its unusual contours didn't come naturally. Crawford carried a cleat mark from a prep football game, and had his nose broken six times — four times in football games and twice in barroom fights.

A Broadway actor in the 1930s who took jobs as a stevedore and merchant seaman between engagements, Crawford first came to notice for his portrayal of dim-witted Lenny in the stage version "Of Mice and Men."

He had limited success in movies before World War II, which he spent as a sergeant in the Army Air Corps.

After the war, he again found little work until he was offered a reading for "All The King's Men." He won the role of political boss Willie Stark on a Thursday and stepped in front of the cameras four days later.

Crawford won the 1949 best actor Oscar and New York Critics Award for his portrayal of Stark, a man who forgot his populist goals and became a virtual dictator after election to the statehouse.

Stark was assassinated at the end of the movie, virtually mirroring the rise and fall of Louisiana's Gov. Huey Long.

Although Crawford followed "All The King's Men" with an impressive comic performance as the crooked tycoon who loses his girlfriend to her tutor in "Born Yesterday," he was subsequently cast in a series of largely unwarding movie roles. He said it didn't matter.

"An actor should make as many pictures as time will permit," he once said in an interview. "Sure, there will be some stinkers, but there will be good ones, too."

Marrried three times and twice divorced, Crawford fought a longtime battle with alcoholism. He was twice arrested for drunken driving, and divorce lawsuits against him alleged mistreatment.

Court ruling favors ousted McLean cemetery officers

BY CATHY SPAULDING
Staff Writer

McLEAN — With less than one month until the next annual meeting of the Hillcrest Cemetery Foundation, Leona Sitter and George Terry may assume their offices on the Foundation board, according to a ruling made Friday by 31st District Judge Grainger McIlhany.

Pampa attorney Harold Comer, who is representing plaintiffs Terry, Sitter and Miro Pakan, confirmed Saturday that their request for an injunction against cemetery foundation president Richard Everett, vice president Sam A. Haynes and trustees Kenneth Everett and Tony Smitherman has been granted, although McIlhany has not yet drawn up or signed the final judgement.

Terry, Sitter and Pakan filed suit against the officers and trustees in December, maintaining that Terry was wrongfully denied his elected position as vice president of the Hillcrest Cemetery Foundation. At the foundation's annual membership meeting May of 1985, four proxy votes helped Terry defeat Haynes. Richard Everett later removed Terry from office and removed Sitter, who solicited the proxy votes, as secretary-treasurer.

The suit also contends that the foundation was wrongfully using its funds to maintain the gravesites in the cemetery which are owned by the city of McLean and that defendants have not maintained corporate records at the foundation office or made them open to the public or to their attorney.

Comer said Saturday that McIlhany agreed to all the plaintiff's requests except the one restraining the officers from maintaining property owned by the city and seeking reimbursement for attorney's fees. Comer said each party will pay its own attorney fees.

Comer said that the judgement means that Terry and Sitter may assume their offices until the next election and membership meeting next month. Sitter, as treasurer, was granted possession of the foundation's financial records. The foundation must also maintain all its corporate records — board and committee meeting minutes, and financial books — be maintained at a "place reasonably accessible to the plaintiffs." And that the defendants cannot keep the plaintiffs or other foundation members, officers or attorneys from inspecting the records during regular business hours.

The ruling passed in the defendant's favor allows the foundation funds to maintain property owned by the city. Comer explained that his clients wanted to put the cemetery on a perpetual care status. They maintained that the foundation was wrongfully using its interest from government securities for payment of the cemetery's maintenance and operating expenses instead of a perpetual care fund.

However, Comer said, the judge ruled the Hillcrest Cemetery is not now a perpetual care cemetery and thus does not fall under statutes governing perpetual care cemeteries.

Pampa attorney Phil Vanderpool, who represented the defendants, said that the judge had told him how he is going to rule, but he does not have anything official yet.

"I don't think it will serve any purpose to comment on it," he said, adding that the ruling is open to appeal.

Richard Everett said he had heard that a ruling had been made, but that he did not know the details of it. He declined comment.

Sitter also declined comment because the next meeting is so close at hand.

many improvements during his tenure.

"We built a new jail and renovated our courthouse for accessibility to the handicapped," Gober said. "We knew we had to build a new jail and we knew the old jail was in bad shape," he said, adding that the new jail was built before the State Jail Standards board made the county do it.

Similarly, he added, the courthouse added elevators and wheelchair ramps without the federal government requesting it.

During all this, he said, the tax rate has gone down to 16 cents.

Gober believes that the county can survive the oil price crunch without having to raise taxes or cutting county services.

Gober's goal is to "continue to provide the people in Hemphill County with the best service we can provide at the lowest tax rate possible."

Gober said that the state indigent care law, which requires counties to set aside 10 percent of their general fund for indigent care, will be taken care of by the Hemphill County Hospital District.

"We are fortunate to have a Hospital District within the county," he said. "So it is the Hospital District's Responsibility to provide the indigent care."

Before taking office in 1978, Gober was the county's justice of the peace.

In the commissioner race, Pfannenstiel says he wants to cut "inefficiency and waste" within the precinct while incumbent Thomason says he wants to be commissioner "for all the county."

Precinct 2 covers the northeast part of the county and parts of Canadian.

"We have a quarter million dollar surplus in precinct 2," Pfannenstiel said, declaring that his goal is for the precinct to operate on a "nearly balanced budget."

"Work today and plan for tomorrow," added the candidate, who operates a consulting firm in Canadian.

"I feel I am qualified because I have worked with budgets for 30 years and because of my business, I am familiar with building and maintaining roads," he said. "I feel I am fair and that I use good judgement and common sense. I know the value of a dollar bill."

Pfannenstiel said he couldn't speculate on how the current oil and gas situation will affect the county.

"You can't make a statement today and expect it to be good nine months from now, especially with the world situation the way it is," he said. "I don't want to put my finger on the county rebounding, or staying the same or getting worse."

Still, Pfannenstiel believes that commissioners should research, plan and set guidelines before they vote on special issues.

"They should not rush into something and not know what the after effects are," he said, not specifying what "special issues" he has in mind.

Thomason, who is seeking his second term, said he is proud that the county was able to get a $221,000 carry-over in its budget, and he denies allegations of waste.

"In the past two years, we've cut my budget $100,000," he said. "As a dirt contractor, I feel I can handle any road problems as well as take care of the business of running the courthouse," he said.

Thomason said he believes the declining oil activity and prices are going to hurt the county: "Oil contributes 80 to 90 percent of our tax roll."

But the effect that the decrease will have depends on how the price will be Jan. 1, 1987.

Still, he said, "with the economy the way it is, I don't think it's time to change."

He said that in his 3½ years in office, he started a road improvement program that has been a top priority. He said he's added 25 miles of serviceable roads. He wants to continue improving the county roads and to use taxpayers' money wisely.

"I have something good to offer Hemphill County," he said.

Convicted man shoots himself after verdict

ODESSA — A 26-year-old man who had just been convicted of manslaughter and sentenced to eight years in prison went home, put a pistol to his head and killed himself, police said.

Larry Calicut, convicted Friday of voluntary manslaughter in a 1985 shooting death, shot himself in the head with a .38-caliber pistol about 7:15 p.m., less than an hour after an Ector County jury convicted and sentenced him to prison, authorities said.

Justice of the Peace J. Hungerford ruled Calicut's death "self-inflicted," said Police Sgt. John Magee.

Calicut's cousin, Joseph Stevens, was in the house at the time, and later told police that the convicted man had been despondent over the outcome of his trial, said Lt. Terry Lange.

Calicut was convicted of voluntary manslaughter in the May 8, 1985, fatal shooting of 22-year-old Robert Clark. Clark died in a hospital two weeks after Calicut shot him in the face in an apartment complex parking lot, according to police reports.

Initially, Calicut was charged with murder. But his lawyer, Michael McLeish said that since the jury opted for the lesser charge of manslaughter, they apparently believed he was acting out of "sudden passion" when he shot Clark.

After he was sentenced, Calicut collapsed in sobs outside the courtroom, McLeish said.

The convicted man was due to return to court on Monday, where formal sentencing was to have taken place, the lawyer said.

They don't understand Texas

I received a call the other morning from an old friend now living in Baltimore.

"Hullo," I muttered into the phone. "Thank God you're alright," came the instantly recognizable but obviously excited voice.

"Well, that's debatable. What time is it anyway?" "Ten o'clock. Listen I wouldn't have called so early but I just heard the news on the radio and I was concerned for your safety and—"

"Ten o'clock!" I interrupted, my mind now sufficiently awake to subtract one hour. "That makes it nine o'clock here. For crying out loud, it's the middle of the night! You know how I like to sleep in whenever I can."

All I heard was a giggle on the other end of the line. "What's so funny?" I snapped.

"Say the time again."

"What?"

"Say what time it is there."

"Non-a'clock. Now what's so funny?"

"Your accent," she laughed. "You've really picked up a southern accent down there."

"It's not southern," I replied, remembering it was not so long ago when I made the same mistake in chatting with a college chum from Little Rock. "This is half Kansas drone and half Texas drawl."

"Sound southern to me. Just like Jimmy Cartah."

"Very funny. I do not sound like Jimmy Carter."

"Anyway, whadda ya mean it's only nine o'clock?" she asked. "I thought the time didn't change until you got way out west."

"This is 'way out west' — to a Yankee Easterner like yourself. For goodness sake, Pittsburgh is out west for y'all."

"Y'all?"

"Y'all. Hey, what's this about being concerned for my safety. What are you talking about?"

"Well, I heard about the tornado on the radio this morning. How bad was it? Is your house still standing?"

"Gee, let me look and see. (I hate myself when I'm sarcastic). Of course it is. What tornado? For the Lord's sake, I sleep with a police scanner next to my bed and I didn't hear anything about it. How'd you hear about it in Baltimore?"

"I heard it on the radio. It happened in some place called Sweetwater, Texas. I looked on the map and that's pretty close to you. I guess it was really bad."

"Sweetwater!?! That's four hours from here!"

"You're exaggerating. Four hours and still in the same state? That's impossible."

"Texas is a big state."

"Oh, I guess you're right. Will you have to go out and cover it?"

"OK, let me put it to you this way. The distance between here and Sweetwater is roughly the same as between y'all and New York. Get the picture?"

"Here and New York! That's a long way. It's four states away!"

"Exactly. That's my point."

"Oh, well, anyway, while I've got you on the phone, we're thinking of coming out for a visit sometime. Texas looks like it has some nice beaches. Do you think we could go to the beach for the day?"

All I could do was groan.

"Let me try to explain..."

while McLean's is based on several going to a rural fire.

"There needs to be a lot closer unity between the county and the city of Pampa," he said.

Curry said he would support a volunteer station near Pampa "if it comes to that" because it probably would be cheaper than the existing contract. He said he thinks Pampa would support a volunteer station.

The candidate said he feels the county should hold on to its $4.2 million reserve fund from the sale of the hospital for now.

"As long as our taxes can meet the demand, I say hold it," he said.

Smitherman, a self-described conservative, said he decided to run because things in Gray County need attention and he thought a new commissioner could provide a fresh outlook.

He cites experience — nine years on the McLean Independent School Board (four as president) and time on the ASC committee, soil conservation board and Gray-Roberts County Farm Bureau board — and his conservative attitude as his main qualifications.

Smitherman said he does not feel the southeastern part of Gray County will benefit from a public golf course in Pampa nor does he feel people in the Pampa area want to spend tax dollars on it. He said he thinks a decision could have just as easily been made on the course in the commissioners court and a mail vote to the taxpayers is just postponing that judgement.

"I think it's asking a little too much to ask the people from all over the county to pay for a golf course in Pampa," he said.

Smitherman said he thinks the fire contract with Pampa is too high but added he does not think a volunteer station near Pampa would solve anything. The solution, he said, is not to let the contract go up.

The candidate said money from the sale of the hospital should stay in reserve for now, but should probably eventually be used for capital improvements and upkeep on the jail, courthouse and other county buildings. He said a new jail, or at least renovation of the old one, will probably be forced on the county eventually and the county should use the reserve fund and state aid, not an increase in taxes, to pay for it.

Cattle industry's beef is legitimate

As might have been expected, the federal government's latest program to reduce milk surpluses isn't working out quite as planned.

Congress, in its five-year farm bill enacted last year, authorized the government to pay dairy farmers to slaughter their herds and get out of the milk business.

The movement of sizable numbers of dairy cows to slaughter houses has begun, and this has gotten beef growers in a dither. It seems that all the extra meat on the market is driving beef prices down. Beef growers claim that during one week alone they lost $25 million in revenue because of declining prices.

Three beef-raising groups have filed suit to stop the federally subsidized slaughter of dairy cows. The government's program is a second economic blow to beef-producing states such as Texas and Oklahoma, which also are big oil producers and have been badly hurt by falling oil prices.

Killing a cow obviously is a sure way to stop its milk production, but Congress evidently didn't think about the ramifications on the beef industry.

That's about par for the course. Every time Congress tries to fix something in the farm sector, the plans usually go awry.

It might be hoped that after so many failures, Congress would get out of agriculture's way and let farmers solve their own problems. But that's probably asking too much from lawmakers, who couldn't tell a hay baler from a milking machine, but who like to think they know what's best for American farmers.

Jackson's policy racist

According to Newsweek (3-31-86), Jesse Jackson's Operation PUSH organized a boycott against Chicago's CBS-owned WBBM-TV to protest demotion of black anchorman Harry Porterfield. In 1982, when popular anchorman Bill Kurtis left for "CBS Morning News," WBBM's ratings fell. To make room to rehire Kurtis, WBBM demoted Porterfield.

WBBM did not give Porterfield his job back, instead it hired Jonathan Rogers, its first black general manager. Rev. Jackson is claiming victory. From outward appearances, CBS gave into the boycott threat.

But that's not the end of the story. To call off the boycott, Jackson demands more: CBS must hire two black anchormen (not women), donate $10 million to the United Negro College Fund and other charities, and set up a policy institute.

In the face of these demands one can have little sympathy for CBS. It's simply a case of the chickens coming home to roost. If that were all we could sit back to chuckle at the media getting its just deserts. But that's not all.

Like baseball managers, television managers and news anchors get fired or demoted summarily. Baseball managers get fired because of a losing season or disputes with the owner. News anchors get fired or have their contracts go un-renewed for any number of reasons, including falling ratings. That's par for the particular course. Jackson's action is an attempt to exempt blacks from a standard industry practice.

Anytime the cost to fire someone is raised, however, you also increase the cost to hire him. If television companies perceive they will be Mau-Maued by Jackson when they make personnel decisions involving blacks, they will have reduced incentive to experiment and hire blacks. They'll feel that if things don't work out, or conditions change, it will be difficult to get rid of a black whereas they could fire a white easily.

Jackson's demand that CBS hire two black anchormen will give viewers the message that they are on the air not because of their qualifications but because of their color. This suspicion and self doubt won't be shared just by viewers and co-workers; black anchormen may experience it as well. Moreover, it will provide grist for the nation's racist and do nothing for the poor blacks whose name Jackson evokes and uses to justify his actions.

Buoyed by his successes at Mau-Mauing CBS, it's a safe bet Jackson will turn to NBC and ABC. In the face of Jackson's doggerel, they may prove to be spineless too, or they may preempt him — start a quota themselves.

Jackson is calling for nothing less than what is known in South Africa as job reservation, where the government designates job racial requirements and mandates specific black-white employment ratios. South Africa employs this policy in the name of "labor peace." Jackson wants the same policy in the name of "social justice." Moreover, CBS insults black people. Were an Armenian to show up and make the same demand they would throw him out. Why? They would apply "white" standards of conduct. Obviously, Jackson's behavior is evaluated in terms of CBS' "black" standards.

Job reservation, in the pursuit of any goal, is despicable racism. But I doubt whether we can leave it up to the networks to fight it. Jackson's boycott is well within the law, protected, as it should be, by the Constitution. But the same strategy is available to black and white Americans who find CBS' caving in to Jackson's call for job reservation offensive.

"That's Khadafy's new 'Line of Death.'"

Today in history

Today is Sunday, April 27, the 117th day of 1986. There are 248 days left in the year. A reminder: most of the country goes on daylight-saving time.

Today's highlight in history: On April 27, 1937, the nation's first Social Security checks were distributed.

On this date: Ten years ago: Jimmy Carter won the Pennsylvania Democratic presidential primary, with Sen. Henry M. Jackson, D-Wash., placing second.

Five years ago: The body of 21-year-old Jimmy Ray Payne was pulled from the Chattahoochee River in Atlanta — the 26th victim in a string of slayings of young blacks in the Atlanta area.

One year ago: President Reagan used his weekly radio address to say that his upcoming visit to Europe would provide a fitting way to commemorate the 40th anniversary of the end of World War II.

Today's birthdays: "Woody Woodpecker" creator Walter Lantz is 86. Former Ambassador and Federal Reserve Board Chairman Arthur Burns is 82. Actor Jack Klugman is 64.

He can't cut the mustard

I wonder if anybody else has the same problem with mustard that I have. The problem I have with mustard is I'm always getting it all over me and my clothes.

I've had this problem for years. My mother used to marvel at how much mustard I could get on me at school. She routinely held a mustard check upon my arrival home.

"Where is the mustard today?" she would ask as she frisked me for mustard stains.

"Oh, here's some in your shoes," she would say.

"But Mother," I would plead, "I didn't eat any mustard today."

"So how did mustard get in your shoes?"

I never could answer, but for some years I feared the Mustard Monster, a hideous, mustard-colored thing who put mustard in your shoes when you weren't looking.

My mustard woes continued into adulthood. I was making a speech in New Orleans during this year's Super Bowl week.

I needed something to eat before my speech, but the restaurants were all packed. I bought a hot dog from one of the street vendors in front of my hotel.

I eat only mustard on my hot dogs. If you put other substances on your hot dog, besides mustard, you are in violation of Hot Dog Bylaw No. 1 that says anybody who eats anything on their hot dogs besides mustard does not have a full loaf in his or her breadbasket.

After I ate my hot dog with the mustard on it, I went in to make my speech. Just before I was to take the podium, I noticed to my horror I had mustard all over my blue blazer.

I dipped a napkin into a glass of water that was on the table before me and tried to wash off the mustard.

You can't get mustard off a blue blazer with a wet napkin. That's like trying to stop a panzer division with a popgun.

But I figured the audience would understand about the mustard. What's a little mustard on a man's blazer?

Then, I looked on the front of my shirt. There was mustard there, too. There also was mustard on my pants and a big splat on the top of my Guccis.

I thought of running out of the room screaming, but I had to stay. They hadn't given me my check yet.

I tried to make a joke about the mustard in my opening remarks.

"I was attacked by the Mustard Monster." Nobody laughed. The speech went downhill from there. My God I thought, mustard could end my career.

The point here is to be careful around mustard, and don't think you aren't in any danger when there doesn't appear to be any mustard around.

Mustard could be as far as six blocks away and still find a way to get all over you and embarrass you, and perhaps even cost you your job and family because people will think you are a slob.

Imagine if mustard fell into the wrong hands. What if Khadafy decided to use it as an instrument of terrorism? Come to think of it maybe Khadafy is the Mustard Monster.

Somebody should do something about that mad dog.

When 'we won't have nothing'

"If everybody believed like you, we wouldn't have nothing."

That's a statement those of us who argue for libertarian principles hear over and over. I heard it again last week, this time from a furious fellow on the phone who demanded to know "who wrote that blankety-blank editorial about the golf course?"

After I admitted that I was the fellow who wrote the editorial opposing the use of taxpayers' money in building a public golf course, he said I was probably a tennis player and that he didn't like his taxes being used to pay for lighting tennis courts. I assured him that I don't play tennis and said I agreed that it would be wrong for him to have to help pay for lighting so that other people could play tennis.

"Well do you do anything for recreation?" he demanded. I told him I used to play golf, but had to quit when I moved to Pampa because I don't have a place to play.

"They why are you against the golf course? Are you people just opposed to progress?" he asked.

"We're not opposed to the golf course and we're not opposed to progress," I said. "We're opposed to theft."

"What to you mean, theft?"

"We think if people who want a golf course force people who don't want one to help pay for it anyway, that's theft," I said.

"I guess you think taxes are theft," he said.

"When something is forcibly taken from people against their will, we do define that as theft," I said.

"Well I'd sure hate to live in a blankety-blank world where everybody thought like you," he said. Then came the old familiar:

"We wouldn't have nothing."

I have noticed that people who disagree with libertarian principles always stop arguing about the morality of taxation when you ask them why they think it would be wrong for 10 men to get together and rob five with a gun, but okay for those 10 to call themselves a government, hold an election and vote by a 10-to-five margin to rob the five in the minority.

That's when they always change the subject, moving the debate away from right and wrong and into the area of expediency. That's when they always say "we wouldn't have nothing," or "How would we get anything done?"

When they abandon arguments on morality, what they're really saying is this: "Maybe it is theft, but how else are we going to get things done?" They are admitting that they accept stealing if it is done in the name of "the public good."

This country has concluded that it is wrong for one man to rule two. We call that slavery. But we cling to the notion that it's okay for two men to rule one. We call that democracy.

If we don't some day abandon the notion that the majority has a right to take from the minority, there'll come a time when the majority will consist only of takers, supported by a minority composed of producers.

When that happens, we really "won't have nothing." And we get closer to that situation each day.

Simmons is managing editor of The Pampa News.

Letters to the editor

We don't need a new Post Office

To the editor,
As a tax-paying citizen of Pampa, I am concerned that the U.S. Postal Department is considering a new Post Office building for our city. I do not believe that a more desirable location can be found as our Post Office is centrally located and is convenient for the majority of our citizens. Our present building is well-built and is a beautiful structure. With proper utilization of the basement and some remodeling inside, it will accommodate the needs of the postal service of our city for many years.

More parking is needed. However, I am aware that the lot adjoining south of the Post Office has been offered and is still available for a nominal sum. With this lot, postal vehicles could be parked and additional parking would be available. There are two or three other vacant lots to the east that could also be purchased. A ramp for the handicapped could certainly be installed at the front or east of the entrance. I am aware that the U.S. Postal Department has operated in the red for years, and I know that constructing new Post Office buildings in cities that do not need them is one of the unnecessary expenses.

We, as taxpayers, do pay for these buildings and the expenses of having mail service. Therefore, we do have the right, even obligation, to let our wishes be known.

Let us get petitions and letter going to our U.S. Postal Department and to our senators to let them know we want our Post Office at the present location in the now-existing building.

KATHERINE SULLINS

Consider artistry

Dear sir,
This letters is to express my concern as to the probable disposition of the beautiful Postal building in Pampa.

There is no doubt that the Pampa facilities need to be up-dated and modernized. I am sure that the easiest solution is to abandon the present facility, move to a new location and construct a duplicate of facilities that have been built many times throughout the United States.

The new facilities I have seen are modular, functional, sterile and void of any artistry. These structures appear to be designed by a mechanical engineer, not a qualified architect. Perhaps this is the result of specifications that call for "the most facilities for the least money." I do not advocate wasting money, however I do not feel that to include aesthetics or artistry in a public structure is "waste."

I feel, and many people in Pampa agree, that $1.2 million can be used to increase the present work area and install new functional equipment. This will tax the ingenuity and architectural skill of the selected architect, provided the postal authorities do not place too many restrictions on the architect.

It is hoped that the present beautiful building will be restored and preserved. Let's consider aesthetics as well as space.

W.A. MORGAN

You have choice

Dear editor,
It does seem a shame that so many good local Democrats feel they must identify themselves with that party in order to be elected. Perhaps that association was necessary in the past, but not now.

It is also a shame that the National Democratic Party is now trying to punish any local candidate that makes a disparaging remark about those at the national level.

However, since Gray County is and has been a stronghold in Republican politics for many years, there is now a choice that both candidate and voters can make with pride. Some candidates for county office have made that choice, displaying both their integrity and understanding that the Democratic Party "has left them."

If others are not willing to make the change, let us hope they will tell us their reason. Then if the voters understand and sympathize, okay; if not, then they have an easy choice when they got to the polls on May 3 and vote in the Republican primary and for the Republican candidate in November.

He begs to differ

Dear editor,
I would like to express my views concerning the Off Beat column in the Friday, April 18, edition by Dan Murray. He mentioned that by eliminating Khadafy, you will not eliminate terrorism. The way I look at it is this: to eliminate terrorism, you have to start somewhere. Now maybe the other terrorist countries will sit up and take notice.

Also, he wrote about the President's commission on pornography. He said that anything can lead to violence. Well right now rape is the highest rated crime in America. And I wonder why. I assume that Mr. Murray has nothing against pornographic magazines. And if he reads them, then Mr. Murray you are an adulterer. The Bible says in Mathew 5:28 "...whosoever looketh on a woman to lust after her, hath already committed adultery with her in his heart."

Mr. Murray also said that less than 500 people in Borger subscribe to the Playboy Channel and to date nobody has killed anybody here or there yet. In Galatians 6:7 the Bible says "Whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap." If a man watches an X-rated movie with sex and violence, well it's gonna have to be reaped.

Now Mr. Murray's comments on gun control. This country was paid for with guns not Playboy. He said "...you can get a lot with a smile but you can get more with a smile and a gun." The only people I know that uses a gun to get things are thieves and robbers, and they don't smile. He said, "...Reagan's philosophy: a picture of a nude woman is more dangerous than a gun." Pornography has ruined more lives, more homes than any gun ever has. What I think is the most dangerous is a picture of a nude woman and the person looking at it who has a gun.

No sir, I do not own a gun. I'm only 16 years old.

Keep parks clean

Dear editor,
Well the baseball season is almost here for the Optimist Club. I hope this year the ball park and the presidents of these leagues can make it a better place to play in.

I was ashamed to bring parents and friends there. There was garbage and trash all over last year. In the T-ball field, you couldn't find your ball because the grass wasn't mowed. The restrooms were unfit for people to use.

You would be surprised what a little paint and some cleanup can do. What's wrong with Pampa? Let's get other people in there that can keep up the ball park. It can be a beautiful ball park, Pampa.

Objects to flag

To the editor,
I would like to express my opinion on something that was done at a local plant west of town on Monday, April 14.

A group of Russian businessmen visited the plant on the 14th. From what I understand, they were interested in buying some rigs. A Russian flag was flown, along with an American flag, from one of the rigs.

I don't know how other people feel about this, but it just totally disgusts me. I think it is degrading not only to the employees of that company, but to the owners too. If they want to do business with them, fine. But flying a Russian flag is going just a little too far. They've never flown a Chinese flag when businessmen from China have been out there, or a Japanese flag or a German flag.

I can just imagine the conversation should someone from out of town drive by and see that Russian flag displayed next to the American flag. Something like this: "What kind of plant is that? They are flying a Russian flag." "Oh, that's one of Pampa's leading businesses. They just laid off a lot of employees the other day."

They can do business with whoever they want. I just can't believe they have the audacity to flaunt it in that way. It makes me sick.

Spend for parks

Dear sir,
I was surprised and disappointed in your editorial April 20. Not necessarily because of remarks regarding the proposed golf course, but the apparent unconcern relative to parks and other municipal recreation facilities. Pampa or any other city would be a bleak place without city involvement in parks of the community.

I am not sure but there are higher priorities in Pampa at this time than a new golf course. However, I hope that those people working on this project will ignore your negativism and continue to work for the betterment of our community.

If one took your editorial seriously, there would be no swings in the parks since a "majority" of people do not use swings. There would be no tennis courts because, relatively, only a few people play tennis. For many years, the county and city spent many dollars on the rodeo facilities. I do not care for rodeos, but I am glad Pampa has these nice facilities.

I hope after your got over your headache or removed the pebble from your shoe, you will feel better about the community in which you are a part.

W.A. MORGAN

EDITOR'S NOTE—We have trouble understanding the logic which would accept opposition to spending taxpayers' money on a golf course, but does not accept opposition to spending it on parks. We didn't include tennis courts or rodeo facilities in our list of illegitimate use of taxpayers' money because we didn't think about one and didn't know about the other. Be assured, we would oppose those expenditures, too. And, we don't understand how standing up for the taxpayer indicates any bad feelings for a community.

Majority sleeps

To the editor,
Wake up America. Our great hetrogenic society and form of government is based on majority rule, but the majority sits passively by while things happen.

First, let's discuss majority-minority as it really is in America. We refer to non-white people as minorities, but they actually outnumber whites. We refer to women as a minority, but actually they outnumber men in the United States. In reality, the real majority now is the common class people, regardless of race, color, culture or sex. The real minority is the elite, powerful controllers of our country.

We common class people, the majority, should unite and make majority rule beneficial. Our politicians should be considered well-paid servants to the people instead of wealthy tyrants who are part of the wealthy organization that blows our money foolishly, manipulates our lives, overrules us and bleeds us through poverty.

Our system of government is set up for majority rule, but to rule we must communicate and input information such as public opinion, desires, instructions, needs and demands.

The input that our government receives now is mainly from special interest groups, pressure groups and the wealthy who contribute to campaign funds.

The popular perception seems to be that most Americans feel oppressed, economically insecure, governmentally unimportant, over-ruled and over-taxed for the sake of our wealthy leaders, who, in turn, practice foolish spending habits, personal pocket stuffing and giving millions of dollars away to countries who don't even like us; money that should be recirculated in America for Americans. Furthermore, it seems that most Americans don't like the seat belt law (an over-rule), unemployment, dependancy on foreigners or parochial issues such as our doubled vehicle registration or the local gas price fixing.

There seems to be a lot of pro-Americanism in the air right now; proof of this was displayed at the M.K. Brown Auditorium Monday night where the high school band got a standing ovation after playing a patriotic tune.

Common Americans (majority), we need to become active pro-Americans and make majority rule, security, prosperity and the government work the right way for us for the sake of our nation's future.

Please communicate with your elected officials now.

U.S., Russian vets reunited

CHICAGO (AP) — Forty-one years after they first met on the banks of the Elbe River in Germany, veterans of the U.S. 1st Army and the Red Army met and embraced at another river — the Chicago.

Three former Soviet generals and a retired American colonel were among the veterans who gathered Friday on the Michigan Avenue Bridge to honor a former private who used to stand there handing out leaflets to passing strangers.

Carrying their nation's flags, the Soviets and Americans marched from opposite ends of the bridge until they met in the center.

Then, as a bagpiper skirled "Taps," they dropped wreaths into the river in remembrance of dead comrades — including former Pfc. Joseph Polowsky, a Chicago cabdriver whose faith in a soldiers' oath had brought them there.

On April 25, 1945, forward patrols of the 1st Army's 69th Division encountered the vanguard of Marshal Koniev's 1st Ukrainian Army on the Elbe near the towns of Torgau and Strehla in what is now East Germany.

The linkup marked an Allied line across Nazi Germany, which surrendered 12 days later to end the war in Europe.

Some soldiers from both armies swore friendship and pledged never to engage in another world war.

Polowsky, who was one of them, wrote out a formal version of the "Oath of the Elbe" in 1947. He abandoned his botany studies at the University of Chicago to work full time promoting U.S.-Soviet friendship.

formation about what patients can do to assure they get the care they need. Your readers should know about a new booklet available from the American Association of Retired Persons called "Knowing Your rights."

This booklet described important changes in the way Medicare pays hospitals for services. It also outlines specific steps Medicare beneficiaries can take to control their personal health costs and still get quality care.

We continue hearing reports of patients being discharged from hospitals too early, or being asked to leave the hospital with nowhere to go for further care. These things don't have to happen. Health care providers must act responsibly and patients must learn how to protect their rights.

AARP's booklet explains health care rights in detail. I urge Medicare beneficiaries, their families and friends to order a free copy of this new booklet from AARP Fulfillment, Stock No. D12330, 1909 K Street, N.W., Washington, D.C., 20049

Wave of terrorism continues

By The Associated Press

Bombs ripped through an American Express office in France and a British bank in Lebanon Saturday, one day after terrorist violence in four countries killed at least five people and left a U.S. Embassy employee wounded.

Libya has vowed retaliation for the April 15 U.S. air raid launched to punish Col. Moammar Khadafy's government for its alleged involvement in international terrorism. But there was no clear indication that any of the attacks in the past two days were linked to the North African nation.

A bomb estimated to contain 33 pounds of TNT tore through the British Bank of the Middle East in Moslem west Beirut before dawn. Lebanese police said there was extensive damage but no casualties. There was no immediate claim of responsibility.

British employees of the bank had fled west Beirut earlier in fear of terrorist reprisals, as have dozens of other Westerners.

Another terrorist group has claimed to have hanged a British journalist missing in Lebanon, but his body has not been found.

In Lyon, France, a bomb exploded at the American Express office at 4 a.m. Saturday, touching off a fire and slightly wounding one person with flying glass, officials said.

There was no immediate claim of responsibility, but police found an inscription daubed in red paint on a wall near the building reading: "American Express, Black & Decker, Control Data, U.S. Go Home."

Control Data is an American computer firm whose Lyon offices are located in the same building as American Express.

Friday morning in Lyon, a Briton who was the chief representative of the U.S.-owned Black & Decker Manufacturing Co. was shot to death by a man dressed in black and armed with a sawed-off shotgun.

Libyan newspaper editorial critical

TRIPOLI, Libya (AP)—An influential Libyan newspaper has called for an investigation into what Libya did wrong during the U.S. bombing raid—the first official acknowledgement that the country was poorly prepared.

It also criticized Libyan news media claims that more than 20 U.S. fighter-bombers were shot down, and urged more professional reporting at a time when "the whole world is listening to us."

Official propaganda had been describing the April 15 U.S. air raid as a failure and had praised Libyan air defenses for their performance.

The frank editorial appeared Friday in the al-Jamahiriya, weekly paper of the influential revolutionary committees, which were set up by Libyan leader Col. Moammar Khadafy to carry out his policies.

The commentary did not specify whether the investigation should center on the armed forces or other groups within the Libyan leadership.

Diplomatic sources said the U.S. raid deeply shocked Libya's leadership and led to complaints among senior officers that the military was ill-prepared because it was short-changed in favor of internal security forces in getting needed resources.

The sources spoke on condition of anonymity.

Some of the sources said Libya's poor response to the attack also alarmed the Soviet Union, which has been pressing the Libyans for an accounting of what went wrong during the attack.

"We have to know exactly who got confused, who was wrong, who ran away and who remained on the scene," the newspaper said. "We have to clean up our Libyan house and (examine) how we behaved hour by hour in the crisis."

Despite weeks of propaganda warning that the United States would attack, the American raid did severe damage, and was estimated to have killed some 100 people in the capital.

Lights remained on in the Libyan capital of Tripoli as waves of F-111 bombers from bases in England roared in from the sea.

U.S. Navy jets from the aircraft carrier Coral Sea in the Mediterranean, meanwhile, pounded targets in the port of Benghazi about 750 miles away.

The U.S. Defense Department has acknowledged losing one F-111 in the attack.

This baggage was handled with care

LONDON (AP)—Startled baggage handlers at Heathrow Airport found themselves eyeball to eyeball with a snarling, 250-pound cheetah on the prowl Saturday when they opened the cargo door of a Boeing 747 from South Africa.

"He was only two or three feet away, with just a thin piece of net between me and him," said baggage handler Bob Arnold.

"I was looking into his eyes to see if he would back off," Arnold said. "But he started growling, so I thought, 'I'll leave it.'"

The sleek, tawny cat with black spots was being flown from Johannesburg to a zoo in Dublin, Ireland. Airport officials said the animal had been drugged for the trip but that the drug must have worn off during the 6,000-mile flight.

Arnold and fellow baggage handler Howard Kirby, who opened the cargo hold of the British Airways flight to unload luggage, found the cheetah had broken loose from its shipping crate and was on the prowl.

Only a safety net designed to keep baggage in place separated the two men from the testy beast.

Arnold, 45, said when he opened the door and realized "there was something looking at me, ... not even the cheetah would have caught me at the rate I was going."

Kirby, 41, said that when Arnold opened the door, he "suddenly froze and said something which I wouldn't like to repeat."

"He told me, 'There's a wild animal in here, so I went to have a look,'" Kirby said. "When I saw what it was, I thought I would shut the door. But he snarled and his paw reached out toward us."

Police surrounded the jetliner and sealed off a nearby terminal for fear the big cat might dart from the cargo hold. One marksman with a high-powered rifle took up position with a clear view of the tarmac.

Security tighter than ever as Reagans tour Far East on way to economic summit

By MICHAEL PUTZEL
AP White House Correspondent

HONOLULU — President Reagan sets out Monday for the working portion of his 13-day journey to the Far East, going first to Bali for meetings with officials from Southeast Asian nations, then on to Tokyo for a seven-nation economic summit likely to be overshadowed by talk of terrorism.

Reagan and his wife, Nancy, are to be met in Bali by their host, President Suharto of Indonesia, who will escort them to one of the resort island's modern tourist hotels, which has been taken over and sealed off by the White House for the occasion.

Security surrounding the presidential entourage is always pervasive, but it has been tightened another notch for this trip, which follows in the wake of the April 14 reprisal raid against Libya. Reporters accompanying the president but on a separate aircraft have been told they must personally present each piece of luggage to special baggage handlers, and bags must be unlocked for physical searches before they will be loaded on the plane.

Guards are posted not only around Reagan and top government officials, as usual, but outside the press rooms for White House reporters at each stop as well.

During the four-day stopover in Bali, Reagan is scheduled to meet Salvador Laurel, the new vice president and foreign minister of the Philippines. Laurel will be the first official of the new Philippine regime to meet with Reagan.

The White House on Wednesday proposed to send $150 million in new economic and military aid to the Philippines after the transfer of power from Ferdinand Marcos to President Corazon Aquino.

The president also will hold formal talks with Suharto, a meeting U.S. officials expect will be characterized by a friendly discussion of trade matters and proposals for increasing U.S. investment in Indonesia, a major oil-producing nation hit hard by the collapse of world petroleum prices.

Despite an appeal by the U.S.-based Asia Watch Committee, which contends that Suharto's authoritarian regime routinely ignores human rights concerns, Reagan is not expected to dwell on that issue in his talks with the Indonesian leader.

"Our policy is one of quiet diplomacy," one senior administration official said when asked if Reagan would raise the issue. "We don't have any major problems" with the Suharto government.

Reagan also plans to confer with the foreign ministers of member governments from the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN), an organization of six non-Communist nations in the region bound by favorable trade agreements. All have friendly relations with the United States, which has dramatically increased its own trade with the ASEAN nations in the past two decades.

While in Bali, Mrs. Reagan will embark on a separate schedule to be introduced to the volcanic island's unique culture and to visit a drug treatment project before heading off on her own for Malaysia and Thailand to press her campaign against drug abuse. She is scheduled to rejoin her husband at the close of the summit in Tokyo.

From Bali, Reagan flies directly to Tokyo for separate talks with several allied leaders.

A senior administration official, speaking on condition he not be identified, said the United States doesn't expect its European allies to agree in Tokyo to impose long-sought economic sanctions to punish Libyan leader Moammar Khadafy for espousing a policy of terrorist attacks.

"Most of the important actions are probably not in view, and desirably so," the official said, noting that one area where there has been sharp improvement recently has been in the gathering of intelligence about impending attacks.

The nations represented at the summit are Britain, Canada, France, Italy, Japan, the United States and West Germany. The European Common Market also sends a representative.

This will be their 12th annual gathering to discuss mutual economic concerns, which this year are likely to include changing trade relationships, particularly with export-oriented Japan, the falling price of oil, fluctuations on world currency markets and arrangements for a new round of talks aimed at further reducing trade barriers between nations.

Reagan denounces Vietnam for occupation of Cambodia

LOS ANGELES (AP) — President Reagan, promoting the United States as a "Pacific power," headed toward the Far East on Saturday with a sharp denunciation of Vietnam's continued occupation of Cambodia.

In his weekly radio address, Reagan said efforts to resolve the Cambodian issue will be a principal item on the agenda when he meets with Southeast Asian allies in Indonesia as part of his 13-day Asian trip.

Reagan's taped address was broadcast minutes before Air Force One took off across the Pacific for Honolulu, the second stop on the longest foreign trip of his presidency.

The journey will end with the May 4-6 seven-nation economic summit of industrialized nations, a session expected to be overshadowed by talk of how to deal with terrorism.

National Security Advisor John Poindexter, before boarding Air Force One with Reagan, told reporters that the terrorism issue "is going to be a good part of the discussion. We're more interested in action than in rhetoric."

However, Reagan did not mention terrorism or the U.S. bombing raid on Libya in his radio address, which he taped earlier Saturday in his Los Angeles hotel room.

Instead, he gave an optimistic assessment of political and economic prospects for the Western world, saying: "These are exciting times to be alive, to be free and to be an American."

He focused his address on Southeast Asia and said Vietnam's occupation of Cambodia since the late 1970s remains a troubling, unresolved issue in the region.

"The United States has made it clear that it's ready to participate constructively in an overall settlement," Reagan said. "The communist government of Vietnam, however, to the detriment of their own national interest, remains intransigent."

After a two-night stopover in Hawaii aides said was designed to give Reagan a chance to adjust to time-zone differences, the president will fly to Bali, Indonesia, where he will meet Thursday with leaders of the six-nation Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN).

The bloc of non-communist nations — made up of Indonesia, Malaysia, Singapore, the Philippines, Thailand and Brunei — is a major U.S. ally and trading partner.

"ASEAN has demonstrated exemplary responsibility and leadership concerning the Vietnamese invasion and continuing occupation of this country," Reagan said.

"America, along with our ASEAN friends, believes that Vietnam should withdraw its forces from Cambodia and permit the Cambodian people to determine their own destiny."

While in Honolulu, Reagan likely will telephone ousted Philippine President Ferdinand Marcos, according to White House aides.

Reagan has no plans to meet with Marcos, who has been in exile in Hawaii since he fled the Philippines in late February.

The president called Marcos' successor, Corazon Aquino, from Washington before beginning his trip. In Bali, Reagan is to meet Salvador Laurel, the new vice president and foreign minister of the Philippines.

Longhorns go on trail again

MOUNTAIN HOME, Texas (AP) — Cowboys, longhorns and trail drives haven't gone the way of the Old West, and they won't as long as Charles Schreiner III runs the Y.O. Ranch.

Schreiner gathered about 150 of his cowpoke friends to the rolling 55,000-acre ranch Saturday for an old-fashioned longhorn trail drive.

"We have fun," Schreiner said when asked why he puts on the trail drive, now in its 11th year.

"We like to keep out here as much of the Old West as we possibly can under the circumstances," he said.

Except for the pickup trucks and four-wheel drives, the trail drive looked much like those that have been depicted on television and in western art.

Cowboys and cowgirls were dressed in jeans, chaps, bandanas, spurs, cowboy hats and boots.

They rode on spirited horses and the less hardy jostled along in covered wagons and a stage coach.

The real wranglers chased and shouted at about 35 head of longhorn that they had flushed out of the underbrush on the rugged ranch.

"Whoa, cattle," cooed Kenny House, U.S. marshall from Dodge City, Kan.

House said he helped Schreiner with the first trail drive in 1976, which extended to the newly opened Ranching Heritage Center at Texas Tech University. Subsequent drives have been held at the ranch.

"In the movies they said 'head 'em up and move 'em out. Here in the brush country of the Y.O., they say 'head 'em out and split 'em up,'" he said, referring to the thick underbrush and trees on the ranch near Mountain Home.

Schreiner's grandfather Capt. Charles Schreiner founded the ranch about 100 years ago and herded 300,000 head of longhorn to Dodge City in his lifetime.

Schreiner, who has been active in keeping the longhorn a thriving breed, sponsored a trail drive from San Antonio to Dodge City in 1966. Most of the trek was made by truck, with stops along the way for short trail drives.

"We decided that was so much fun we'd never do it again," joked Schreiner.

Schreiner, known as "Three" to his friends, said he is more satisfied with the trail drive being held on the ranch.

Tenneco ordered to pay $4 million

STILLWATER, Okla. (AP) — An 87-year-old Glencoe widow has been awarded more than $4 million in a lawsuit against Tenneco Inc. over alleged salt water pond contamination that the woman's attorney contends could take "10 to 50 years to clean up."

Tulsa attorney Randy Miller, who represented Allena R Gould, said he was told the judgment returned by a Payne County jury Thursday was the largest in the north-central county's history.

Dave Simpson of Oklahoma City, attorney for the Houston-based Tenneco, said no decision has been made about appealing the lawsuit. But Miller said he expects Tenneco attorneys to appeal the case.

The jury, which heard eight days of arguments in the civil trial before specially assigned District Judge Donald E. Powers of Chandler, deliberated more than two hours before returning the verdict.

The judgment provided $2,002,000 in actual damages, $2 million in punitive damages and $50,000 for Mrs. Gould's inconvenience, annoyance and discomfort, court officials said.

Miller said the lawsuit first sought $1.2 million but later was amended to seek at least $10 million.

Miller said his case detailed how Wilcox Oil Co. dug a 2-acre salt water retention pond in 1951 atop a hill on the northwest quarter of the 400-acre farm Mrs. Gould owned with her late husband, Edward A. Gould Sr., who died in 1977.

The pond was filled with salt water from two oil wells on the property and, as the water evaporated, it produced an "ever-thickening residue of salt," Miller said.

He said Wilcox officials filled in the pond in 1961 after the state Corporation Commission concluded salt was leaching into the ground, but Miller said the layer of salt remained below ground.

Wilcox Oil was taken over by Tenneco in 1964, and Tenneco assumed the earlier company's assets and liabilities, Miller said jurors were told.

Over the years, Miller said, salt from the former pond has continued to spread.

"It has severely polluted the whole countryside," he said.

Dear Voter,

I have had the privilege of serving as your County Commissioner since April of 1977. It has been a pleasure for me, and I trust that I have represented you in a fair and honest manner.

I am proud of the accomplishments of Gray County. Our excellent financial condition is the envy of every Panhandle county and other counties across the state. Our 21.6¢ tax rate compares to Dallam Co.--44¢, Deaf Smith Co.--42¢, Ochiltree Co.--42¢, and Potter Co.--36.4¢.

Experience and knowledge of county government are more vital now than ever. I ask you--"Does nine years of success need to be changed--especially when the future looks as though it will need experienced leadership?"

I wish to continue doing the best job possible as your County Commissioner, and as always, your input regarding our county government is appreciated and helpful.

I am using this means to ask you to allow me to continue serving. Your vote and influence for me would be greatly appreciated in the May 3rd Republican primary.

Sincerely,

Texans to decide on governor, others

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas voters head for the polls Saturday to choose party nominees in dozens of races, from the statehouse to the county courthouses.

But the big campaign money — likely to total more than $8 million by May 3 — has been spent on the gubernatorial primaries, particularly the GOP battle.

Opinion polls indicated a possibility that Texans could set up a rematch between Democratic Gov. Mark White and the man he ousted in 1982, Republican Bill Clements.

According to a recent survey commissioned by The Dallas Morning News, Houston Post and four other news organizations, White and Clements each led their respective races.

White pulled 50 percent in a six-candidate field. Second was Dallas businessman Andrew Briscoe III, who received 17 percent, followed by Dallas lawyer A. Don Crowder at 7 percent, Sheila Bilyeu of Corpus Christi at 4 percent, Bobby Locke of San Antonio at 3 percent, and Ron Slover of Amarillo at 1 percent. Eighteen percent were undecided.

That poll showed Clements with a strong lead in the three-way Republican race. The former governor received 54 percent support from those who said they plan to vote in the GOP primary, while former Democratic congressman Kent Hance of Lubbock and U.S. Rep. Tom Loeffler of Hunt got 18 percent each.

If no candidate gets 50 percent of the vote in either primary, the top two would advance to a June 7 runoff election. Both Hance and Loeffler said they expected to be in a runoff.

Neither leader seemed worried.

"Wouldn't it be amusing, with all the wise owls talking about me in a runoff, if it turns out that White is the one in a runoff?" said Clements.

"With the race developing as it is, I feel very confident of our victory. I think we're in good shape," said White.

Spending on the race totals millions.

Loeffler spokeswoman Nancy Dorhn estimated the congressman would spend about $4 million by May 3. Reggie Bashur, press secretary for Clements, said the campaign had budgeted $2.1 million for the primary. Byron Nelson III of the Hance campaign said that effort would spend about $2.5 million.

Dwayne Holman, White's campaign manager, said the governor would spend about $1 million on his primary campaign. White's closest opponent, Briscoe, last week estimated he might spend $300,000 by May 3. Much of that is his own money.

In the lieutenant governor's race, incumbent Democrat Bill Hobby, who has held what some consider the most powerful job in state government for a record 13 years, is asking voters for four more.

His apparent popularity chased off all but one primary challenger — perfume salesman David Young, 41, of Austin, who is making his third bid for statewide office in six years.

On the Republican side, four candidates seek the nomination: David Davidson, founder of the non-denominational Emmanuel Fellowship Church at Gonzales; District Judge Virgil Mullanax of Gilmer; Glenn Jackson of San Antonio, a self-employed instructor of applicants for real estate and insurance licensing exams; and Aaron Bullock of Kingwood, who has refused requests for interviews and so far hasn't been seen by his opponents.

While Democratic Attorney General Jim Mattox is unopposed, three Republican candidates are seeking the chance to challenge him.

GOP voters will be asked to choose from two judges and a former prosecutor: San Antonio District Judge Roy Barrera Jr., 34; District Judge John Roach, 39, of Plano; and former Democrat Ed Walsh, 39, the ex-Williamson County district attorney who sent confessed serial killer Henry Lee Lucas to Death Row.

Challengers for agriculture commissioner this year include a nuclear power plant worker, a man whose nickname is "Farmer," and a candidate who incumbent Democrat Jim Hightower dubbed "Chicken Man II." Hightower's only Democratic challenger is Noel Cowling of Dublin, power plant worker and a backer of arch-conservative Lyndon LaRouche.

On the Republican side, Bill Powers, 43, is executive vice president of the Texas Poultry Association. He faces Charles "Farmer" Trompler, 43, of Malone.

Three Republicans are seeking nomination for land commissioner, although state GOP Chairman George Strake says Democratic incumbent Garry Mauro isn't one of those targeted by the GOP for defeat this year. Mauro has no Democratic opponent.

Two other Democratic incumbents did even better — they drew no opponent from either party. Comptroller Bob Bullock and Treasurer Ann Richards are home free.

The Railroad Commission race is considerably more crowded — with a total of eight candidates seeking one seat.

The GOP field includes two state representatives — Ed Emmett of Kingwood and Milton Fox of Katy; Austin real estate broker John Thomas Henderson, who nearly upset Commissioner Mack Wallace in 1984, and Ralph Hoelscher, a farmer and rancher from Miles.

Seeking the Democratic nomination are John Poulard, a Dallas lawyer who headed Sen. Gary Hart's southwestern presidential campaign in 1984; state Sen. John Sharp of Victoria; Dallas oil and gas consultant P.S. Ervin, and Austin lawyer William MacNaughton.

The traditionally low-key Supreme Court races were surprisingly high-profile, with appointed Justice Raul Gonzalez, a Democrat and the first Hispanic on the high court, seeking election to a full term, and veteran state Sen. Oscar Mauzy, D-Dallas, challenging 18-year incumbent Sears McGee.

A total of four places on the nine-judge court are up for election, with Republicans challenging for three seats. Three seats also are up for election on the Court of Criminal Appeals, the state's top criminal court.

There are 173 Democratic House candidates and 100 Republicans, with 45 Democratic incumbents and 18 GOP incumbents unopposed. In the Senate, there are 22 Democratic candidates and 11 Republicans for the 16 vacant seats. Six Democrats and two Republican senators are unopposed.

Seven of the state's 27 congressmen are unopposed, with the highlight of the 20 contested races the battle for the West Texas seat being vacated by gubernatorial candidate Loeffler.

Improprieties called 'extensive'

AUSTIN (AP) — A lengthy investigation of the Lower Colorado River Authority has found conflict of interest, sexual improprieties, favoritism in choosing a major contractor, mismanagement and theft of equipment by river authority employees.

The misconduct included hunting and fishing trips paid for by LCRA contractors, use of house trailers for parties, strip poker games and sexual activities, and use of LCRA equipment and workers for personal business by some agency employees, according to a 155-page report.

Although only a few LCRA employees were involved, agency officials said they had taken immediate steps to prevent a repeat of such instances to ensure that money from LCRA electric and water customers is not wasted.

The changes should improve the tarnished public image of the agency to the half-million Central Texans receiving electricity from LCRA, officials said after the report was released Thursday.

"There will be a new team of leaders on my staff, including existing employees," said S. David Freeman, LCRA general manager.

Reagan aide says low oil prices won't bring tax help

AMARILLO, Texas (AP)—A special assistant to President Reagan cautioned Texans not to depend on the federal government for aid during the slump in energy prices, but use self-help instead.

Merlin Breaux, Reagan's assistant on economic affairs, said talk of a possible tax increase to make up state budget shortfalls from oil-generated revenues should be replaced by talk of a tax cut, which would spur economic recovery faster.

"The federal government is not going to be your savior," Breaux told the West Texas Chamber of Commerce meeting on Friday. "The savior is locked up, in my opinion, in this great state where we live."

Breaux, whose family lives in Beaumont, said raising taxes would not solve Texas's problems from declining crude oil prices. He said higher taxes discourage businesses from investing, expanding and growing.

The Reagan administration, in austerity moves in government, created nine million new jobs since 1982, he said. He said the prime rate, through efforts of Reaganomics, might reach 6 or 7 percent by the end of the year.

"I'm here to tell you the best thing that can happen to your dollar is for it to stay right here in Amarillo," the Lamar University graduate said, "and let you decide how you want to spend it."

Breaux said eyes should not turn to Washington,

D.C. during troubled times.

"You don't need a tax increase," he said, criticizing some state officials who believe otherwise. "What the (federal government) needs to learn is to live within its means. If we run our business properly and correctly, we're not going to need more tax money."

"Don't turn to Washington to save you," he said. "It can't even save itself, so how can it save Texas?"

Breaux, speaking to a group of 200 people at the chamber's convention, said he was concerned by speculation he heard throughout the two-day event that a tax increase would help turn the economy in Texas around.

"I think a very good starting point in Austin, Texas, would be for us to go en masse to the Legislature and say that we not only don't want a tax increase, but we want a tax cut," he said. "Economically, it would be the best thing ever done."

Breaux, who was a Gulf Oil Co. industrial relations executive, said Texans shouldn't be surprised their dependence on oil is waning.

"I would pray that some point in time we begin to learn our lessons in history," he said. "When the economic base that we have begins to erode out from under us, we've got enough sense to say 'OK, it's beginning to slip away from us. What are we going to do next?'"

Chamber drive gets off to fast start

The 1986 Triple I Brand Roundup is off to a running start, with the 14 ranch crews reaching the first waterhole on Friday during the Pampa Chamber of Commerce's annual membership drive.

"When the dust had cleared and the points were counted, it was evident that the roundup is well on its way to a successful drive," said President Bill Duncan.

Duncan said he was "elated" to report 30 new members have been signed up with $4,394.50 in investments collected already.

"With two more waterholes to go, only 30 new members and approximately $7,600 are needed to reach our original goal of 60 new members and $12,000 in investments," he said.

Chamber Finance Director Dona Cornutt said she was "very happy" that the citizens of Pampa are responding so well to the crew members. "We were worried that, with the economy being as soft as it is, we might not reach our goal," she said.

She said the citizens were proving the old adage "when the going gets tough, the tough get going."

"Pampa is the great community that it is today because of the pride of the citizens cause them to work harder and to become stronger in the long run," Cornutt stated.

Leading the way in the contest to receive the dream vacation for two to Epcot Center in Orlando, Fla., provided as a community service by Delta Airlines, is J. J. Ryzman with 1280 points.

Ryzman is followed closely in the contest by Roy Sparkman with 1255 points and Verl Hagaman with 997 points.

In the crew competitor Range Boss Bob Hart's City Slickers lead with 1980 points, followed by Range Boss Roy Sparkman's Over-the-Hill Gang with 1600 points and Range Boss Bill Duncan's Rustlers with 1544 points.

The City Slickers crew is composed of Hart, Ryzman, Danny Parkerson and Phyllis Jeffers. The Over-the-Hill Gang is composed of Sparkman, Jerry Sims, Robert Wilson and Larry Gilbert, while the Rustlers have Duncan, Hagaman, Ron Wood and Lyn Moulton on its crew.

"Leading" the way toward winning the infamous Drag Men award is the Stampeders crew with only 100 points.

The crews are competing for $1,000 in cash prizes donated by Pampa's financial institutions.

President Duncan said only a very small percentage of those who have been contacted have refused to invest in Pampa's future by investing in the Chamber.

"The citizens of Pampa are a proud group and will do whatever is necessary to make Pampa an even better place in which to work and raise a family," he concluded.

The 14 crews will reach the second waterhole at 2:30 p.m. Tuesday.

Western Company suspends payments to its creditors

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP)—Officials of the Western Company of North America suspended all payments of interest and principal on more than $400 million of unsecured bank debt because of adverse market conditions.

Company officials attributed the move Friday to "continued deterioration of market conditions" affecting both of their lines of business.

Western Company provides onshore oil and gas well services and offshore contract drilling services.

"The suspension of interest and principal payments was undertaken to conserve the company's cash position, which is currently in excess of $45 million," said Western Chairman H.E. "Eddie" Chiles in a prepared statement. "Western has discussed with its institutional creditors the necessity of these cash conservation measures until business conditions stabilize," Chiles said. "The company is continuing discussions with its institutional creditors in an effort to reach a mutually satisfactory restructuring of the company's indebtedness."

Company officials said the suspension applies to $368 million owed to 17 banks led by Manufacturers Hanover under a revolving credit facility, $30 million owed to Chemical Bank and $9.5 million owed another institutional lender.

Western also suspended the repayment of about $125 million in secured debt, officials said.

Western officials said suspension of payments will result in events of default under these and other loan agreements, including the company's 13 1/2 percent senior subordinated debentures due in 1992.

MANAGER—Dilip Parekh has been appointed manager of Pampa's Pizza Inn by Jim Moore, president of JDM Associates, Inc., franchisee of the restaurant. Parekh has been with Pizza Inn since 1983. He has a bachelors degree in accounting from the University of Bombay, India. He has already assumed his new duties and said he expects to become involved in local civic activities.

Neighborly thing to do links town with world

By OWEN CANFIELD
Associated Press Writer

KINGFISHER, Okla. (AP) — You'll pardon the residents of Kingfisher if they smile proudly when they hear a farmer in Indonesia has enjoyed a good crop, or a child in West Africa has reached another birthday in good health.

After all, they're only being neighborly.

Kingfisher, a community of about 5,000 located 40 miles northwest of Oklahoma City, is where World Neighbors was transformed 35 years ago from a preacher's dream to a small town's mission.

In 35 years, World Neighbors has worked in Africa, Asia and Latin America, affecting the lives of more than 25 million people through more than 250 programs. The philosophy is quite simple — to help people in underdeveloped countries become more self-sufficient by giving a helping hand, not a helping handout.

If loans are given, they are expected to be paid back with interest. If a farmer needs a new plow, he pays for it somehow.

"I grew up in a grocery store where my father kept up 300 tenant farmers through the years," said Virginia Shutler, who was host of the first World Neighbors meeting in Kingfisher 35 years ago. "When the crash came ... I saw the death of their dignity."

"To take a person's dignity is almost worse than taking their life," she said.

The World Neighbors organization strives to maintain the dignity of the dirt farmer, the sheep herder and the mother of four by letting them do the work. If they need a hand, World Neighbors is there.

"To me, it's the only way," Mrs. Shutler said.

She and the other Kingfisher residents know what it is to help someone in need. The community, steeped in farming tradition, holds three food drives a year to help their neighbors in Kingfisher County, where nearly 30 percent of farm loans are delinquent and where there has been a 400 percent increase in the number of farm families seeking assistance with the county welfare office.

In the past 12 months, the town's third-largest bank has failed, and the town's five largest businesses have closed their doors.

World Neighbors, with headquarters in Oklahoma City, is an interdenominational group rooted on the Judeo-Christian heritage. The organization says it doesn't try to save souls, it tries to save lives.

In its financial report for 1984-85, World Neighbors stresses that no government funds were used or accepted.

"Once governments and big business get involved, it loses that human touch that's so important," Mrs. Shutler said.

The first meeting in Kingfisher was called to listen to John Peters, a preacher who had been overseas and seen the starvation and drought and malnourishment, and wanted to see something done about it.

Those in attendance were willing to do what they could to help.

"Some preachers go through their lives waiting for something to happen, and nothing ever does," said Harold Hubbard, who attended the first meeting. "This was different. There have been good sermons and good speakers where nothing happened, but this time something did."

Hubbard, 79, said he was attracted because it was different than your ordinary charity — it wasn't one.

"When you helped somebody, you put something in their lap. This didn't seem to be that type of deal," he said. "We weren't just going to feed and clothe everybody. We were going to help them decide what to do."

Since then, Kingfisher residents have dug into their pockets for more than a half million dollars in aid. This year, chapter officials say they expect about $55,000 to be sent from Kingfisher even though times are difficult for this agriculture-based community.

"Why the thing took hold here I don't really know," said Hubbard. "But it did."

Emmanuel Vieth, a retired Kingfisher banker who is now chairman of the World Neighbors trustees, has some idea why.

"What you get in a farming community is that they know what it is to be a neighbor," he said. "We don't just give to World Neighbors, we are a world neighbor."

The Kingfisher chapter holds two meetings a year, at which time donations are accepted and information is shared concerning the work of World Neighbors.

New Policy: only four officers can eat at restaurant at a time

HOUSTON (AP) — According to a new policy in the Houston Police Department, only four uniformed officers can eat at a restaurant at one time.

But some night duty officers are finding the rule hard to swallow.

Police Chief Lee P. Brown, in response to citizens' complaints, created the policy to help improve the public perception of the department and its officers, said police spokesman Sgt. J.C. Mosier.

The policy, effective since early April, sets a limit of four officers in a restaurant at one time, regardless of whether they are on duty. Likewise, no more than two marked police vehicles can be parked at a restaurant at one time while the officers are eating.

"It doesn't look good for us to have a large number of officers eating at one time. We get a lot of complaints on this," Mosier said.

"Does it look good to have seven or eight officers eating in a restaurant? It is our belief that the public thinks it is bad," Mosier said.

When more than four officers bump into each other during mealtime, Brown advises the offending parties to leave immediately.

While some officers said they understand the reasons behind

ABSORBENTS

Absorbents are the ingredient most frequently found in over-the-counter anti-diarrhea products. They work by absorbing nutrients, toxins and bacteria from the intestinal tract. Because they generally are taken in large doses, most of them are flavored to taste good. Absorbents generally are used in the treatment of minor diarrhea because they are safe. They also have the ability to absorb digested materials as well as bacteria and other irritating matter when taken orally. They act like a sponge in the intestines and, sometimes, cause constipation. Before using this product, discuss it with the pharmacist. It may interfere with the body's ability to absorb other types of medicine when taken at the same time.

Our pharmacists at B & B PHARMACY are part of the 5,000 year old tradition of service to public health and well-being. Let that tradition of pharmacy serve you and your family by offering you the level of personal attention your family's health deserves. If you are new to this community we are located at Ballard and Browning, 665-5788 and open Mon.-Fri. 9-6 Sat. 9-2.

Sports Forum and Agin 'Um WARREN HASSE

THERE MAY HAVE BEEN A VERY, very small handful of football players to pass through Pampa High School that were as good, but there was never one any better than Jerry Walker. Listed at 6-3, 198 pounds, the big strong kid with the impish smile played tackle, both on offense and defense, and you could bet his No. 77 uniform would be right in the middle of the action on every play.

He and his teammates...names like Buzz Tarpley, Eddie Scheig, DeWey Cudney, Elmer Wilson, Dale Gantz, Carl Kennedy, Buddy Cockrell, Charles Ely, just to name a few...were the ones who sparked a team that initiated a five-year string of victories over the Amarillo Sandies and grabbed a couple of district championships between 1949-1953 for the Green and Gold.

Jerry was to go on to Texas Tech and continue his gridiron career with the Red Raiders. He was a four-year letterman for Coach DeWitt Weaver and helped the Lubbock school to a 25-14 win over College of the Pacific in the 1952 Sun Bowl and a 35-13 conquest of Auburn in the 1954 Gator Bowl. In addition, he was an All-Border Conference lineman selection his final three years. Selected by the then-Chicago Cardinals of the National Football League, Walker had to reject a professional career because his knees, weakened and battered by his all-out effort in every practice and game had undergone so much surgery (and still needed more), would not perform well enough to maintain the pride Walker had in himself.

The extent of that damage was truly brought home to me one day during a broadcast at Jones Stadium. I had visited with Jerry before kickoff and asked him to be my halftime guest. "If I can get up there," he said. "I'll tell the guard at the door to expect you," I said, feeling that he meant they might not let him in. Early in the second I glanced down below the press box, which at that time did not have an elevator. There was Jerry, trying to get those knees to lift him up each difficult step to the radio booth. He would grab a railing, pull himself up step by laborious step, time, laboring to fill a promise. I then knew what he meant when he said "If I can." I was embarrassed for not understanding, and for asking a friend to make such an effort.

In 1969, Jerry and current Texas Tech basketball coach Gerald Myers were inducted into the Texas Athletic Hall of Honor during the annual Dad's Day football game. It was significant, for Jerry never knew a true "dad". Each of his football coaches... Tom Tipps, Aubra Nooncaster, Dwaine Lyons at Pampa, and his college coaches, including his line coach Wade Walker at Tech... were the closest thing he had to a father. His mother, Mary, lovingly called "Ma" by her thousands of friends, had been forced to raise five children by herself, four lovely girls and the one fine son, Jerry. That lone boy served as the man of the house, working in those responsibilities along with farm duty before and after school and football practice each day. It made for long, tiring hours, but he never complained or backed off from the duty.

Meanwhile, Ma, despite lingering health problems, played the full role of Mother while holding down a fulltime job helping protect everyone in the Pampa area as a dispatcher at the Pampa Police Department, a responsibility she held for nearly 15 years. It wasn't easy for Ma, and life was not exactly a bowl of cherries for son Jerry, either. He married a high school sweetheart, Lwlyn. And when her father died, followed shortly thereafter by the heart attack death of her only brother, who had been a high school football teammate of Jerry's, he then became the only man for another household, meanwhile raising his own family of two fine daughters. His business success ebbed and flowed as he supported his family as a salesman, working in heavy machinery and operating his own toy store, working with kids and enjoying things he had been forced to miss as a child.

For some people, life never eases up. In recent years the final tragic blow struck. Continually deteriorating health was eventually diagnosed as cancer. And for the past couple of years, Jerry has been in and out of hospitals. His competitive attitude and smiling spirit, coupled with the strong faith instilled by his family, have made him believe he could win that game, too. But the scoreboard has been against him very heavily the past two years, and the late fourth quarter minutes are quickly approaching.

"I go over to see him at his home or the hospital every couple of weeks," Myers told me recently. "I go in feeling real dejected. But Jerry is always so cheerful, so optimistic, that I leave feeling good, just because of him."

Last fall, PHS teammate Buddy Cockrell underwent ankle surgery in Amarillo to repair damage done when a steer fell on his foot at his ranch in Australia. Who would be one of the first to visit him but teammate Jerry, painful as the effort might have been.

Walker heard many cheers for his football endeavors through the years. And they are still cheering for him today, nearly 40 years later. Teammates and coaches are calling and visiting. Whether he knows or recognizes them all the time is uncertain. But they are trying to assist a good friend who never asked for anyone to ever help him do his job, a responsibility he had accepted willingly and eagerly. Those teammates and coaches have had a huddle, and called a play in cooperation with the First Baptist Church in Lubbock, where Jerry has served as a deacon.

A tax-free account has been established at Jerry's church by his friends, to help defray the monumental and rapidly accelerating expenses. Helping block out a fee obstacle in the way of this teammate and his family was the least they felt they could do in an effort to repay the many holes he had, as a team player, opened for them each game day so that the Harvesters and the Raiders and their fans could enjoy the excitement of victory. And I'm sure those fans, along with all Tech Exes, would like to help. And here's how.

Send your tax-free gift to: First Baptist Church, Attn: Jerry Walker Fund, Account no. 800-812R, 2201 Broadway, Lubbock, Texas 79401. Be sure to designate either Jerry's name or the account number, as it is very important. And do it as soon as possible. It is urgent.

Mavericks advance; Lakers next opponent

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Don't tell Dallas Coach Dick Motta about the momentum his team will carry into the second round of the NBA playoffs against the Los Angeles Lakers on Sunday.

"Momentum, you can't eat it for breakfast," said Motta, whose team won the best-of-five first-round series with a 117-113 victory over the Jazz here Friday night. "You can talk all that stuff you want, but it's better just going in not worrying about momentum."

The Mavericks took the first two games of their series in Dallas, but dropped game three at the Salt Palace 100-98. Brad Davis helped keep the series from returning to Texas for a fifth game when he came off the bench to score a record five three-point baskets, including three in the fourth quarter.

The Jazz, using stellar performances from Thurl Bailey and Bobby Hansen and intimidating hooey shots by Mark Eaton, trailed by four, 84-80, going into the final period. But Dallas got 15 points from Davis and 10 from Mark Aguirre to pull away in the final 12 minutes.

"I thought the series would go to five," Motta said. "I thought Utah would protect their home court advantage."

Sam Perkins led all scorers with 29, Aguirre finished with 28, Davis 26 and Rolando Blackman 20. Bailey led Utah with 24, followed by Hansen's 22 and Eaton's 20.

Aguirre admits that the mystique of the Lakers can be overwhelming at times, but he says

Cowboys' draft

Brandt feels the pressure

By DENNE H. FREEMAN
AP Sports Writer

IRVING, Texas (AP) — Gil Brandt's telephone rings on his desk at such a constant pace he could be a stockbroker with a hot tip.

"I've got 43 telephone calls to return, all from sports writers," Brandt says.

He's talking to a writer from the Tulsa Tribune and quickly ticks off players from the Oklahoma area he thinks could be drafted.

A minute later Dallas Coach Tom Landry peeks his head into Brandt's office. It's time for yet another summit meeting.

It's the countdown to the NFL draft and Brandt, the Cowboys' talent guru, is as popular as ever.

Brandt laughs at a suggestion he should like talking to sports writers better than agents.

He no longer is in charge of signing players and negotiating with agents in part of club President Tex Schramm's shakeout from last season.

Brandt's primary duty now is the college draft and he says "I've got a lot more time to concentrate on the job at hand. The knowledge has always been there but now I'm concentrating better."

The Cowboys, all agree, are in dire need of a strong draft.

They could use a cornerback and a backup running back to veteran Tony Dorsett. They could use a linebacker and a slick wide receiver wouldn't hurt.

The Cowboys have been the talk of the NFL because of recent crop failures: Too many Rod Hills and Larry Betheas have offset past successes of draft bonanzas like Charlie Waters and Cliff Harris and free agents Mike Downs and Everson Walls.

In the NFL, it's how well did you do in the last draft. Memories of past success are short.

"It's a lot different when you are picking 20th instead of second," says Brandt. "Hill was a gamble who didn't pan out. Everybody says he was a bust but he started for Buffalo. He just didn't fit our system — that's the mistake we made."

"If Hill had been more competitive, than maybe everything would have worked out."

Although the Cowboys still subscribe to taking the best athlete available, they have changed a part of their basic doctrine.

"We put a lot more emphasis starting last year on competitiveness," says Brandt. "We're putting a lot more emphasis on that than how high somebody can jump."

Brandt refuses to call this draft critical although he obviously has a mandate to produce from Schramm. "All drafts are critical," says Brandt.

CHECKING THE STATS — Dallas Cowboys' personnel director Gil Brandt looks over a computer printout on all eligible players for the upcoming NFL draft. Brandt has his eye out for a cornerback and a backup for running back Tony Dorsett. (AP Laserphoto)

Estacado rally trims Harvesters, 7-6

LUBBOCK — Lubbock Estacado scored three runs in bottom of the seventh to edge the Pampa Harvesters, 7-6, Saturday in District 1-4A baseball action.

Pampa was leading 4-1 when Matadors' pitcher Curtis Neely tied the score with a three-run homer in the fifth. The Harvesters reclaimed the lead with two runs in the top of the seventh on RBI singles by Juan Soto and Paul Bowers.

Estacado in the bottom of the seventh tied the score with one out on run-scoring singles by Ryan Davis and O.T. Thomas.

Pampa pitcher Brent Cryer got Ed Walker on a flyball to center fielder Mark Williams. Pinch hitter Anthony McGee grounded sharply to shortstop Troy Owens who bobbled the ball, allowing Davis to trot home with the winning run.

Pampa took a 1-0 lead in the first when Grant Gamblin crossed home after a pickoff attempt backfired. Gamblin had drawn a walk and went to third on a double by Juan Soto.

Estacado countered in the bottom of the first to tie the score on Neely's RBI double.

Pampa's big inning came in the second when three runs crossed the plate. Paul Bowers led off with a single, Owens walked and Glen Pruet's bunt pop up was dropped by Neely to load the bases. Bowers scored on a passed ball and then Kenny Steward singled to score Owens. Jay Snow then laid down a bunt to score Pruet.

Cryer, a senior righthander, turned in a strong pitching performance through the first four innings, holding the Matadors to three hits. For the game, the senior righthander allowed nine hits while striking out three and walking five.

Neely, who went the distance for the Matadors, gave up six hits while striking out five and walking seven. Neely helped his own cause by knocking in four runs.

Soto and Bowers had two hits each for the Harvesters, who fall to 2-7 in district play and 5-16 overall.

Estacado is 6-3 and 13-8. Pampa's next game is Tuesday at Borger, starting at 4 p.m.

Pampa golfers eye regional trip

With the Class 4A golf regionals fast approaching, the Pampa High boys' and girls' teams are in the midst of a 72-hole team qualifying round to find out who will be going to Brownwood.

"There's a good battle going on with the boys," said Pampa Coach Frank McCullough. "That's good because that will get them used to a little pressure when they get to Brownwood."

Both the Pampa teams captured District 1-4A championships last weekend at Phillips. The boys won by 13 strokes over Canyon and the girls had a four-stroke margin over Dumas. The Pampa boys won two of the five district rounds outright and tied for first in another. The Pampa girls won four of their five district rounds.

The two-day regional tournament will be held Wednesday and Thursday.

"You can't hit the ball enough in a week's time to make a difference, so we're getting used to playing different shots from different positions," McCullough said.

The Harvesters are led by Dyran Crosier, who was second in the district medalist standings. The Pampa girls are led by Jessica Baker, who was third in the medalist standings.

Baker played last Saturday's final district round with a pulled back muscle.

"Jessica is feeling a little better, but it looks like she might have to play with a little pain at Brownwood," said McCullough. "Her back is still a little sore."

Other members of the girls' team are DeLynn Ashford, Kim Harris, Becky Starnes and Lisa Coon.

Crosier is joined on the boys' team by John Snuggs, Jeff Langen, Brian Loeffler and Monte Dalton. Jody Chase and John Starnes played on the Pampa JV team in the last round, but they both have a good shot at making the varsity for the regionals.

One of the teams entered in the regional boys' division is Austin Westlake, coached by former PHS golf coach Mike Brent who lead the Harvesters to the state championship in 1984. Westlake won the District 12-4A championship.

Olajuwon leads Rockets' victory

HOUSTON (AP) — Denver center Danny Schayes says the Nuggets are going to need some help if they're going to do a good job defending the Houston Rockets center Akeem Olajuwon.

"Akeem played great. We've got to help out more on defense against him," Schayes lamented after the Rockets defeated the Nuggets 126-119 Saturday in the opening game of the second round of the NBA Western Conference playoffs.

Game 2 of the best-of-7 NBA playoff series will be here Tuesday night.

Olajuwon finished with a game-high 38 points and pulled down 16

"It's tough for Schayes and (Blair) Rasmussen to guard Akeem. We didn't make a good enough effort to block him out," Denver Coach Doug Moe said.

"Akeem said at the start of the game he felt a little tired and sluggish, but in the second half he took control of the game," Houston Coach Bill Fitch said.

But Olajuwon said that as far as he was concerned, "the big difference was that we were able to get long rebounds and not give them second and third shots. Denver played their best game this year today."

Sandee Stokes sets PHS long jump record

RECORD BREAKER — Pampa senior Sandee Stokes soared 18 feet 5 inches in Perryton Saturday to break Kristi Hughes' school record in the long jump by 2 1/4 inches. Stokes' jump bettered her previous best this season by more than a foot, and regionals are next week. (Staff photo by L.D. Strate)

Lady Harvesters, Canadian dominate tuneup meet at Perryton; Regional showdowns next

PERRYTON — Pampa senior Sandee Stokes soared a school-record 18 feet 5 inches in the long jump as the Lady Harvesters tuned up for next week's regionals by ripping the competition in a regional track qualifiers meet here Saturday.

Stokes' astounding record jump was more than a foot better than her previous best this season, and eclipsed Kristi Hughes' old record of 18-2 1/4, set during last year's regional meet.

"If Sandee can jump like she did today she can be a real plus for us at regional," said Pampa coach Gary Cornelison, who, like his team, has to be entertaining serious thoughts about a possible state championship.

But the Lady Harvesters have to win the regional meet at Brownwood first, and they tuned up well for that Saturday in Perryton.

"It was a good warmup for next week," Cornelison said. "We had good times, so we have to maintain what we've got...The teams at Brownwood will be strong, but we seem to be coming along at the right time."

Stokes had a busy day Saturday, also winning the triple jump with a leap of 36-8 1/2 and running on Pampa's three winning relays.

Yolanda Brown placed third behind Stokes in the long jump, as did Tanya Lidy in the triple jump. Andrea Hopkins took second in the shot and discus, while Sandra Farrah finished third in the discus.

Shana Merritt won the 3200 in a time of 13:20.0, while Tonya Dearman took second. Laquita Brown won the 200 in 26.0 seconds, and Tacy Stoddard finished second in the 1600.

Pampa's relays were unbeatable. In the 400, Yolanda and Laquita Brown, Stokes and Lidy won with a time of 49.8, despite the gusting wind. That same quartet took the 800 relay with a time of 1:45.2, and Stokes, Lidy, Laquita Brown and Schivon Parker breezed to win the 1600 relay.

Regional's next. "Hopefully everybody will improve on what we've done and we'll be a contender," Cornelison said. "I hope we improve in the jumps and the distance races, but we have to do well in all the events."

In boys' action, Willie Jacobs won the 3200 with a time of 10:48.0, and took second in the 1600, while Gary Jernigan finished second in the 100. Canadian's Rodney Boyd took second in the discus with a toss of 139-5 1/2.

While it was Pampa as usual in the girls division, the Lady Harvesters weren't the only area athletes to do well at Perryton.

Canadian's Lady Wildcats finished second behind Pampa in the overall totals, and Miami got strong performances from Lanece Lisenby and Alane Dinsmore.

Canadian's Wendi Burns won the 100-meter hurdles with a time of 15.0, and took second in the triple jump. Kimberly McEntire won the 800 easily, running a

2:22.7 despite the torrid wind. "She really ran well considering the wind," Lady 'Cats coach Jackie Burns said. "She's got a chance to go to state."

The Lady 'Cats Tracie Conn took second in the 100 and 200 and helped Canadian finish second behind Pampa in the 800- and 1600-meter relays, and Michelle Hankins took third in the shot.

Canadian will run its regional at Odessa.

Miami's Lanece Lisenby ran a 60.6 to nip Borger's Tanya Bowie in the 400, and jumped 18-1/2 to finish behind Stokes in the long jump. The Warriorettes' Alane Dinsmore finished third in the 1600.

The Warriorettes and other area Class 1A squads will compete in regionals in Levelland next week.

Littler-January capture lead in Legends of Golf tourney

AUSTIN (AP) — Don January and Gene Littler, leaders after Saturday's third round of the Liberty Mutual Legends of Golf, agree with the second-place teams that it will take a strong final round to beat them.

The defending champs carded a 65 Saturday to give them a 54-hole total of 191, four strokes better than four teams.

January said the leaders' Sunday strategy in the $500,000, better-ball tournament will remain the same.

"In the fairway, on the green and see who can make more putts," he said. "You never know, someone could shoot a 60 or 61."

The defending champions had entered the third round on the par-70 Onion Creek Country Club course with a two-shot lead over Lee Elder and Chi Chi Rodriguez.

Tied at 195, four strokes behind the leaders, were the teams of Charlie Sifford and Jim Ferree, Peter Thomson and Harold Henning, Mike Fetchick and Bob Toski, and Elder and Rodriguez.

Asked what it would take to overtake January and Littler, Sifford said, "Sixty."

"Sixty or 62," partner Ferree chimed in.

"Sixty," Sifford said definitively.

Thomson said a Sunday 62, and a few missed putts by January and Littler, could dethrone the defending champs.

"If you can go a round without missing putts it would be 62 every day," he said.

At 196 were Orville Moody and Bruce Crampton, and Doug Sanders and Christy O'Connor.

January and Littler stretched their lead on the closing holes Saturday, when January birdied 16 and 18. But he said his key shot of the day was a putt for par on No. 3. He rolled in a 10-foot downhill putt.

"We felt we wouldn't make any more bogeys if we could get away with par there," January said.

Littler and January had no bogeys Saturday.

Thomson, with seven birdies, and Henning, with two, teamed Saturday for a second-straight 64, tying them with Arnold Palmer and Gary Player, and Howie Johnson and Billy Maxwell for the day's low round.

Palmer and Player, teamed for the first time in seniors play, had a three-round total of 198.

Dan Sikes, 56, dropped out after four holes Saturday because of an allergy attack that caused a severe nosebleed. Sikes was given injections but could not complete the round.

Sandee Stokes passes the baton to Laquita Brown during the 1600-meter relay. Pampa, as usual, won all three relays Saturday in Perryton with quick times, despite a torrid wind. The Lady Harvesters run in the Class

4A, Region I meet in Brownwood next Friday and Saturday, with the first and second place finishers in each event advancing to the state meet in Austin. (Staff photo by Dan Murray)

Physically fit Player says he doesn't feel like a senior

By KEN HERMAN
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN (AP) — Gary Player says a comment from a 65-year-old hand on his Johannesburg ranch helped get him ready for the senior golf tour.

"You just eat junk," Player recalled Willie Betha telling him.

Player, a three-time Masters winner, decided Betha was right. He took the advice of the ranchhand who has worked for him for 30 years.

"I was eating bacon, sausage, eggs, white bread with lots of butter, coffee, tea and sugar in the damned tea and too many desserts," Player said after Friday's round in the Liberty Mutual Legends of Golf.

The formula for eating like a senior is simple, he said: "You've got to eat one-third of what you used to eat."

By 4 p.m. Friday, Player had played 18 holes with partner Arnold Palmer and eaten only two bananas and a box of raisins.

The tour guide says the 5-foot-7 Player weighs 152 pounds. He appears to weigh less. At age 50, the mid-section beneath his rounded shoulders is slim and firm under his trademark black playing clothes.

"I don't feel like a senior at all. There will come a time when I will. I reckon I could compete in a physical fitness tournament with many players on the regular tour," he said.

"I never like to boast about health because you never know what's coming around the corner. But I work at it," Player added.

The work includes 280 sit-ups a day, 30 minutes on a bike, weight work for his forearms and stretching exercises. "Sometimes I just grab a branch and hang," he said.

Player hopes to write a diet book within the next few years. He's convinced that proper nutrition is the only path to health.

"The biggest danger to the human being is the knife and fork. Obesity kills more people than anything."

Draft advantage goes to Houston

HOUSTON (AP)—Houston Oilers Coach Jerry Glanville was working with four hours sleep. He lunched on a fajita while cradling a telephone between his cheek and shoulder.

He was talking draft but nothing definitive was coming out. "I'm more excited about what we do in the weight room with the people we've got than with the draft, really," he said.

The Oilers, by virtue of their 5-11 record last season, again have an advantageous bargaining position going into Tuesday's National Football League college draft.

Glanville hung up the phone and admitted he was tired, but not from worrying about the 10 selections the Oilers have in Tuesday's 12-round draft.

Glanville thinks the Oilers already have built a good enough nucleus in recent drafts to be competitive next season.

"We don't have any glaring holes," Glanville said. "In the past, we'd have a hole and no player at that position."

Whatever the Oilers get in Tuesday's draft will be gravy, reasons Glanville, who says he's spent less time charting the draft this year than in any of his previous years in pro football.

Glanville, who started last season as defensive coordinator, finished as interim head coach, replacing Hugh Campbell.

Following a lengthy search, Glanville was given a five-year contract as head coach.

"In the first year, my duties have been to concentrate on the players that we already have," Glanville said. "I have confidence that the other two gentlemen can handle it."

Glanville referred to General Manager Ladd Herzog and personnel director Mike Holovak, who have tended to the draft while Glanville selected a staff.

Two priorities for the Oilers this season will be to give better protection to quarterback Warren Moon and to get a stronger pass rush.

Moon was sacked 46 times last season and the Oiler offensive line allowed a total of 58 sacks, the fourth biggest total in the NFL.

"I'm tired of being one of those Timex quarterbacks — takes a licking and keeps on ticking," Moon said.

The Oilers also would like to strengthen their linebacking corps, especially the inside positions in their 3-4 defense.

Three share lead at Houston Open

THE WOODLANDS, Texas (AP)—Tom Watson bogeyed the last two holes to fall back into a three-way tie for the lead with Calvin Peete and Jay Haas after Saturday's third round of the Houston Open golf tournament.

Watson, who started the day two strokes off the 36-hole pace set by Peete, charged into the lead with five birdies in his first six holes. But bogeys on the last two holes gave him a round of 68 and a 54-hole score of 205, 11 under par. Haas had the day's best round among the leaders, a 67, and Peete finished with a 69 by sinking a 30-foot birdie putt on 18.

Two strokes back of the tri-leaders were Nick Faldo and Wayne Grady, who each had 2-under-par 70s for 207.

Watson was two strokes ahead of Peete and one shot ahead of Haas going into the final two holes of the par-72, 7,042-yard TPC course. But Watson drove into the rough on each hole and settled for bogeys.

The key to Watson's round was a 60-yard chip shot for a birdie after his second shot on the par-5, 530-yard 13th hole went into the water. Watson started his round with five birdies in six holes to drop to 12 under par for the tournament. A bogie on No. 7 cooled his charge.

After his birdie at 13, Watson ran in a birdie putt at 15 before faltering. After driving into the rough on 17, he sent his approach into the rough and, after chipping, missed a par-saving putt by six inches.

Watson went into the left rough on 18 and couldn't recover.

Peete, already a two-time winner on the PGA Tour this year, started the day with a two-shot lead, but he bogeyed the par-5, 515-yard first hole.

It was Peete's first bogey of the tournament. He played steadily through the rest of the front nine, running in a birdie on No. 8, and got back into contention with birdies on 11 and 12.

Haas, who started the third round at six under par, charged into contention with three birdies on his front nine, then added a birdie on 13 and an eagle on 15.

Canyon was a close second with 128 points.

The Pampa eighth-grade won two of the six meets they competed in this season, and finished second in two of them. In a fourth-place finish, there were only seven points separating Pampa and first-place.

In the seventh-grade division, Pampa came in third with 87 points and two school records were broken.

Mets hold off Cards' rally for 4-3 win

ST. LOUIS (AP)—Len Dykstra's leadoff homer triggered a four-run first inning Saturday and the New York Mets withstood St. Louis' ninth-inning rally for their eighth straight victory, a 4-3 triumph over the Cardinals. It was the Cards sixth straight loss.

Fernandez, 2-0, struck out 10 and walked two. The loss went to St. Louis starter Danny Cox, 0-1.

McMullen ponders Astros' move

HOUSTON (AP)—Houston Astros board Chairman John J. McMullen may be thinking about pulling out of Houston, but he would face at least two major obstacles — Baseball Commissioner Peter Ueberroth and the other baseball club owners.

McMullen would need the approval of two-thirds of the 12 National League team owners and more than one-half of the 14 American League owners to move the Astros, a spokesman in the National League office told the Houston Chronicle Friday.

The National League has not had a franchise shift since the 1966 season, when the Milwaukee Braves moved to Atlanta. The last American League franchise to move was in 1972, when the Washington Senators moved to Arlington and became the Texas Rangers. McMullen wouldn't need Ueberroth's approval, but the commissioner could lobby for the owners to block a move. The owners next meet in Houston during the All-Star Game on July 15.

On Friday, Edwin Druso, executive vice president of Major League Baseball, the umbrella organization for the commissioner's office, said Ueberroth likely would resist an attempt to move the Astros.

Durso said Ueberroth has established a policy of opposing franchise moves unless there is no other way for the team to survive.

"We like to go the extra mile," Durso said. "The Astros have not been a stellar attraction, but we don't think they are beyond the point from which other clubs have been able to climb out." McMullen said Friday he did not initiate a report that he was considering a move to Washington, but he refused to deny that any move might happen.

McMullen, who serves on baseball's Long Range Planning Committee, the group that deals with franchise relocation and expansion, said Friday he has been disappointed with attendance at Astros' games the last few seasons.

"We've done everything we know to get people to come see us. It just isn't improving. I don't know what we can do," McMullen said.

If McMullen wants to move to Washington, another obstacle would be where the team would play.

Kentucky Derby is a sure thing

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (NEA) — The 112th consecutive running of the hallowed Kentucky Derby at Churchill Downs will be held on May 3.

That is nearly as sure as the proverbial death and taxes.

Through hail and storm, through war and devastation, come the first Saturday in May, the "Run for the Roses" is held.

Leading up to this year's Kentucky Derby — and continuing, perhaps, through the May 17 Freakness and the June 7 Belmont Stakes — the names of Snow Chief and Badger Land are being heard. They are among the 3-year-olds trying — like, most recently, Secretariat (1973), Seattle Slew (1977) and Affirmed (1978) — to use the Kentucky Derby as the first jewel in their Triple Crown.

Snow Chief is the latest wonder horse out of California, winner of the Florida Derby (in which Badger Land finished second) and the Santa Anita Derby. Badger Land retrieved esteem by winning the Flamingo.

Other Kentucky Derby possibilities this time: Broad Brush, winner of the Wood Memorial, and fast-finishing Mogambo, winner of the Gotham.

Whoever wins, the Derby itself is as fixed on the calendar as the IRS deadline. That is, with one exception: In 1945, the U.S. government banned horse racing for the remainder of World War II, but the ordinance was soon lifted after V-E Day — and the Derby was run on June 9.

Actually, the very first Kentucky Derby was held on a Monday in May 1875, because that was the day that Churchill Downs opened (the winner, Aristides).

Among the 10,000 in attendance was a 13-year-old kid, Matt Winn, who saw the race from the infield atop the flatbed of his father's horse-drawn wagon. Matt never missed a Derby again until he died in 1949 at the age of 88.

Part of a group that bought the track in 1902 for $40,000, Winn became president of Churchill Downs in 1938. He built the Kentucky Derby into one of those "must-see" events of a lifetime, like the World Series, the Super Bowl and the Indianapolis 500.

The largest attendance for a Kentucky Derby was 163,628 in 1974, the centennial running of the race, and 23 horses (including winner Cannonade) stamped out of the dual starting gates.

In the Derby, thoroughbred owners quest for the most coveted trophy in their sport — an 18-carat gold cup now worth $45,000 — not to mention the $600,000-plus (depending on the size of the field) for finishing first.

Yet there are some who shy away from saddling up their expensive horseflesh for the Kentucky Derby. They claim that 3 is too young an age for a tender thoroughbred to be jostled for 1 1/4 miles under the most trying conditions.

The ages of race horses are reckoned from Jan. 1, when all thoroughbreds born anytime during preceding year are counted as 1 year old. The traditional breeding time calls for them to be born in the early spring. However, some have been foaled as late as July. So there have been horses in the Derby who had not actually reached their third birthday, chronologically.

The Kentucky Derby evokes some of the mistiest sentiment in sport, starting with the 80,000 mint juleps (using 8,000 quarts of Kentucky bourbon) that are poured from daybreak. Throats get lumpy and eyes get wet when the strains of "My Old Kentucky Home" blare through the loudspeakers and over the twin spires which are symbolic of Churchill Downs.

Everybody is standing only 45,500 are privileged to sit down at anytime the rest of the day because that is the number of total seats in the place.

Last year, when gate prices were doubled — to $20 for infield positions, $30 for clubhouse gardens and $5,500 for a 16-seat table on Millionaires Row — attendance dropped to 108,000.

The pari-mutuel handle set a record of more than $12 million for the day, with $5,770,000 wagered on the Derby.

Brewers slaughter Rangers

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — The Milwaukee Brewers have kept alive their Arlington Stadium jinx on the Texas Rangers.

The Brewers swept the Rangers in their own park in five games last year and followed Teddy Higuera's five-hit, nine strike-out pitching to an 11-1 slaughter on Friday night.

Milwaukee needed it, snapping a three-game losing streak. The Brewers had lost 8 of their last 10 games.

The Brewers pelted five Rangers' pitchers for 18 hits. Jose Guzman took his third loss in four decisions.

Paul Molitor backed Higuera's strong effort with three doubles, a single and four RBIs.

In 18 career innings Higuera is 2-0 and has struck out 21 Rangers.

Milwaukee Manager George Bamberger said "I've been waiting 14 games for this one. Teddy had great stuff out there tonight. He kept the Rangers off balance. It's a shame he didn't get his shutout."

"He had a lot of stamina. He could have gone 11 or 12 innings. If he keeps itching the way he has been he will be one of the best in the American League."

Higuera, who led Milwaukee in victories last season with 15, said "I made just one mistake on Don Slaught and it cost me my shutout. Other than that I'm satisfied."

Slaught's one-out fly in the bottom of the eighth inning hit the yellow line on top of the fence for a home run.

The Rangers went into the game at the top scoring team in the AL.

"That one wasn't much fun at all," said Rangers' manager Bobby Valentine. "Higuera is a good pitcher and he made us look pretty flat."

"He's one of the better pitchers in this league. He was the rookie pitcher of the year last year for a good reason."

The Rangers' Pete O'Brien, leading hitter in the AL, said he was impressed by Higuera.

"You're not going to get many hits when you face a guy who's pitching like he was," O'Brien said. "He had just great stuff."

Bamberger said he hoped the loss would stop the Brewers' slide.

Questions abound in draft

NEW YORK (AP) — There are enough story lines in Tuesday's National Football League draft to fill a season of "Dynasty."

—Will Bo bypass the Bucs for baseball?

—Will Byars be bypassed because of his break?

—Will the NFL provide a home for the 57 prospective draftees who tested positive on their first pro football drug exam?

The annual round-robin session begins at 8 a.m. EST Tuesday at the Marriott Marquis Hotel in the heart of Times Square and will continue for 12 rounds and approximately 19 hours. The draft will be televised live by ESPN cable.

But the real action will be at 28 sites around the country that approximate battlefield command bunkers where coaches and general managers make career threatening decisions based on information from intelligence staffs no less diligent than the CIA in separating fact from rumor.

This year, the decisions may be harder to make than usual. The draft is deep in running backs and offensive linemen and relatively thin everywhere else.

"It's the kind of draft where you may have to sacrifice position for quality," says Dallas Coach Tom Landry. "If the position we want isn't there when it's our turn to pick, we'll take quality even if it's where we're well stocked."

"I'd say there are six rounds of make-it players plus about 10 more," says Dick Steinberg, director of player development for the New England Patriots. "But at some positions, you can't find much at all. We need a tight end desperately, but there's no tight end worth a first-round pick."

There also is the question of the 57 players who tested positive for illegal substances during drug tests given after the Super Bowl by the NFL scouting combine. Most of those were for marijuana, but one player — a potential first-rounder — showed traces of cocaine in his urine.

Dan Reeves, coach of the Denver Broncos, says he won't draft any of the players on the list. But most other coaches probably will look at each case individually.

"You have to determine if there's a permanent problem," says Gene Stallings, coach of the St. Louis Cardinals.

The first choice will be exercised by the Tampa Bay Bucs, who say they will take Bo Jackson, the Heisman Trophy winner from Auburn who is considered the best running back prospect since O.J. Simpson in 1969. But Jackson, like John Elway in 1983, has a hole card to use in the negotiations that already have begun — he's considered a top major-league baseball prospect.

The second choice goes to the Atlanta Falcons, who say they will take Tony Casillas, Oklahoma's can't-miss nose tackle.

The Houston Oilers draft third and for the third year in a row have the broker's position. They can trade — perhaps to one of the Los Angeles teams that covets a quarterback — or they can draft.

Taking Keith Byars is one of their options.

When he's healthy, Byars is considered in a class near Jackson among running backs. But he missed most of the 1986 season with a broken toe, then reinjured it in the Florida Citrus Bowl.

"The team that drafts him has to be ready to let him sit out the season and hope to have him in 1987," says Bill Parcells, coach of the New York Giants, who pick 19th.

Small school district earns big praise

By JACK KEEVER
Associated Press Writer

DILLEY, Texas (AP) — In this desolate region of South Texas lies what the top educator in the state might describe as an oasis of a school district.

State Education Commissioner W.N. Kirby visited Dilley's three schools recently and said, "I have never seen a more positive attitude."

Dilley Superintendent Steve Jones was seated among his peers, presumably aglow with pride, at a recent statewide education meeting in Austin as Kirby lavished praise on the Dilley district.

"I have never seen school teachers that believed more in themselves and believed more in their students than I saw in that district," said Kirby. "And I can tell you that it was specifically because of the leadership of that superintendent and because of the work that he did in that school with the parents, with the students, and with the faculty — and I guarantee it has made a significant difference."

"They were not having major problems with no pass, no play. They are not among the wealthiest of districts; in fact, if we were to look at their property value, they come out in the bottom third," Kirby said. "Certainly their student population is a high-percentage minority student. And yet if we look at their 11th grade TEAMS test we find that they scored above the state average in terms of achievement."

"If you walk on the campuses you are going to find buildings that are old, but buildings that are well kept. You did not find trash all around and you didn't find buildings all run down and all junked up because they didn't allow that to happen. They don't have a lot of money to spend on buildings and they don't have new buildings. But their buildings are clean and the buildings are well kept because their attitude was a 'can-do' attitude. "What I want to tell you is that what we all need to develop is just that — and that's a 'can-do' attitude."

Kirby visited at the invitation of Pete Morales of the State Board of Education. The Associated Press, guided by Superintendent Jones, traced Kirby's steps to see what had impressed the commissioner.

Dilley, for Texans heading south to Laredo, is a gas stop along Interstate 35. It is mesquite and wildflower country. The land is sandy, red and flat. Temperatures in the summer get as high as 117 degrees. The population is 2,579.

Jones' office is in a one-story white frame building a block from the high school.

Jones, 37, worked at schools in Pilot Point, Lake Dallas, Spring Branch, Hitchcock and Maypearl before coming to Dilley two years ago. "Here I felt like there was an opportunity to make a difference," he said.

The Dilley Independent School District has approximately 900 students, 500 at the elementary level and 200 each in the middle and high schools.

"We have a lot of poverty here, a lot of economically disadvantaged people. Certainly we don't have an overabundance of wealth but what we have is adequate," said Jones.

The economy is based on farming, oil and gas and small businesses, and the school tax rate is a low $1.12 per $100, said Jones.

Teachers make $1,200 above the state base, which Jones says is standard. But the teacher-pupil ratio is low, under 1 to 20, which makes a teacher's life better. Jones said he includes teachers from the beginning in new projects.

"You've got to have the cooperation of the teachers because when the door closes, it's just them and the kids," he said.

The student population is 75 percent Hispanic, an ethnic group which Pedro Ruiz Garza, president of a Hispanic market research firm in Austin, says is characterized by high dropout rates and poor scholastic performance.

But on the pre-graduation test taken by Dilley's 11th graders, 89 percent showed a mastery of mathematics and 91 percent a mastery of language arts. Among 12 area school districts, Dilley ranked second in language and tied for third in math.

"We told the parents we expected their children to do well. We told the students we expected them to pass," said Jones. "If you tell children you expect them to do well, they'll do a lot better than you think. You've got to be positive about it."

With Jones' comment that "the most important person on each campus is, of course, the principal" the tour was on. First stop: Dilley High School, home of the Wolves.

The numerous open parking spaces indicated that most of the students don't have enough money to buy cars.

Principal David Deaver showed off the vocational home-making lab, computer center, and a classroom for students with remedial needs. Deaver said 60 percent of the school's athletes are on the honor roll and only one varsity player fell victim to the state's no pass, no play rule which bars from extracurricular activities any student who fails a class.

He said study hall is held three nights a week the final three weeks of each six-week grading period, and anyone with a grade below 80 is encouraged to attend.

Posters and photographs at each school highlight student performances. "We're very deliberate with it. We want recognition for the students," said Jones.

A plaque with the names of winners of the annual spelling bee hangs on the wall of Principal Albert Burton's middle school.

Teachers talked excitedly about student projects and piled written materials on visitors. Sixth grade students with learning problems stay in the same room with the same teacher all day. It works minor miracles, claimed teacher Connie Dorsel. She said three of the 12 students had improved enough to make the honor roll.

At the elementary school, Principal Marilyn Smyth touted the bilingual program and a special class for advanced students. She said several students whose first language is Spanish did especially well in English spelling contests as well as making the honor roll.

"We don't want the student to just be English-dominant," Jones said. "We want the student to come out of our bilingual education program proficient in English." Jones was reminded of Commissioner Kirby's remark about the cleanliness of the Dilley schools.

"I think it enhances the learning environment to have your restrooms clean, cafeteria well kept, all grounds pretty much kept in order, buildings painted," he said. "When things are kept in top shape, it speaks well for the school."

A visit to teacher Berta Carter's third-grade classroom concluded the visit. Ms. Carter likes teaching well enough that she's been doing it for 50 years.

Police providing security for Thatcher

DALLAS (AP) — Police, acting at the request of the State Department, are providing security for the son of British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher because of concern over reprisal threats following the air strike on Libya.

Dallas law enforcement officials received the request by the department's Bureau of Diplomatic Security, press officer Deborah Cavin said Thursday.

Officers are guarding Mark Thatcher's apartment in the exclusive Turtle Creek area near downtown Dallas.

State department officials decided to ask for security because of "increased levels of terrorism threats made in recent weeks against this country and the United Kingdom."

Ms. Cavin said the state department routinely provides security for visiting dignitaries.

Special rodeo time!

JENNIFER RODEN strikes a winning pose as she hones her abilities as a bull rider on the mock "bull" built for the Special Rodeo, May 10, by members of the Gray County 4-H

Horse Project, sponsors of the event. Likened to the Special Olympics, the Special Rodeo gives mentally handicapped residents the opportunity to participate in rodeo events.

As many as 40 Gray County mentally handicapped residents will have a chance to show their prowess in the rodeo arena, May 10, when they participate in the Special Rodeo, sponsored by the county's 4-H Horse Project.

The rodeo begins at 6 p.m. at the Top O' Texas Rodeo Grounds with contestants ranging in age from 55 to 3 years old. They will be joining in flag races, calf roping, barrel races, and bull riding events. None of the events will be times. All participants are considered winners. For their efforts they will receive t-shirts, trick ropes, a straw hat, belt and buckle, donated by local merchants.

In the flag race, two men will be with the rider, one of them leading the horse. The rider will put a flag in a bucket of sand on a barrel. A plastic calf head on a bale of hay will be roped in the calf roping event. Contestants stand in front of the "calf" and rope it.

Two men accompany the rider in the barrel race event; one leads the horse around the three barrels. A man-made bull, much like a teeter-totter, will be ridden by contestants in the bull riding event. Four men will make the "bull" go up and down for the contestants.

GEORGE PIERCE holds tightly to the flag he nabbed while practicing his skills in the flag race event. Pierce is the oldest contestant in the Special Rodeo set for May 10 at the Top O' Texas Rodeo Grounds. To Pierce's left is John Oxley who will be helping the rodeo riders. Contestant Jennifer Roden is in the foreground.

Special Rodeo's youngest contestant, R-Jay Douglas, 3, right.

CHOOSIN' A HAT — Richie Folmar, right, can't seem to make up his mind when it comes to choosing just the right cowboy hat to wear when he participates in the Special Rodeo, May 10. He's assisted in his choice by Karen Skaggs. Can't be in a rodeo without a good cowboy hat, you know.

ROPIN' A DOGIE — George Pierce swirls a loop towards the calf to be used in the calf roping event at the Special Rodeo, May 10. Mentally handicapped residents of the county will be able to get a taste of rodeo competition through the event sponsored by the Gray County 4-H Horse Project.

Board provides varied services for county

By DEE DEE LARAMORE
Lifestyles Editor

Most people have heard one thing or another about the Gray County Child Protective Services Board, formerly called the Child Welfare Board. But how many know just what this board does? What is the board's function and how is this board related to the county's cases of abused and neglected children?

John Glover, vice president of the Regional Council of Child Welfare Boards and an emeritus member of the local board, says the board acts as a go-between for the Gray County Commissioners Court and the county's Department of Human Services office.

"It's made up of interested persons appointed by (Gray County Judge) Carl Kennedy," Glover explains. The board lightens the heavy load of the county commissioners, he adds, by looking over bills submitted by the Department of Human Services for abused and neglected children who are in the county's custody. These bills cover foster care costs, clothing and other needs for the children in foster care.

Prior to 1978, Gray County was responsible for the financial needs of abused or neglected children from county placed into foster care by the Department of Human Services. "But if you had an organized child welfare board, then the state reimbursed those costs," says Bob Carmichael, chairman of the first Gray County Welfare Board. Gray County was paying more than $20,000 a year in foster child expenses before the formation of the board, he says. "This was reduced to nothing after the welfare board came into existence," he adds.

On May 9, 1978, the charter members of the board met for the first time. In addition to Carmichael, board members included Geneva Tidwell, secretary; Dorothy Stowers, George Massie, Ted Gikas, Bonnie Chamberless, and the Rev. Joe Turner.

In addition to the board's responsibilities toward the finances of foster children, Carmichael and Glover said the board also promotes public education on child abuse and neglect and encourage people to enter the foster care program.

"We started out not knowing what we were doing, but in the end we saw a lot of good come from it," Carmichael said.

Glover says for the future he hopes to see the following things accomplished and he feels the board can have a part in this accomplishment:

—For communities to get back to the philosophy of "taking care of our own."

—To create a greater awareness and acceptance of the problems of child abuse and neglect.

—To inform the public of what a child protective services board is and what it does.

At the time this article was written, Gray County had six children in protectorship in five foster homes. "This is a lighter load than we normally have," said this year's chairman of the board. The chairman asked that names of the current board members not be used. However, the six members represent a wide variety of the community including the professions of homemaking, law, education, business and medicine. Gray County also has more foster homes than usual, the chairman reported.

A Big Brother - Big Sister program to become effective in Pampa in the near future is the board's most recent "feather in our cap," the board chairman said. The board had been working on the project for sometime. Now the Sunrise Rotary Club and the Kiwanis are going to bring the program into being, he said.

The board chairman emphasized that the Gray County Child Protective Services Board does not make any decisions about whether or not a abused or neglected child remains in the home or in foster care. "We are an advisory board for the Department of Human Services (and the Gray County Commissioners Court). The only action we are able to take is in an advisory capacity," the chairman said.

Dear Abby

Young thieves stretch test drive into 3-week joy ride

© 1986 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: My wife and I are retired. We had a second car that we no longer needed, so we decided to sell it.

I parked the car on our front lawn with a "For Sale" sign on the windshield. During the noon hour, a young man rang our doorbell and said he was looking for a second car for his wife. (She was waiting in their car, in our driveway.) I went out, unlocked the door and started the engine. He asked the price and seemed interested. Then he asked if he could drive it around the block. I said he could, so he motioned for his wife to come. He asked her if she would like to drive. She got under the wheel, and he got in on the passenger side. She backed the car into the street, and they drove away.

Thirty minutes later, they had not returned, so I called the police. A policeman came out and checked the car this couple had left behind. It had been stolen in Oklahoma City—some 35 miles away.

This happened three weeks ago and our car is still missing. How could this have been avoided?

TECUMSEH, OKLA.

DEAR MR. HENLEY: When the prospective buyer asked for permission to drive your car around the block, you should have asked for his driver's license or some other identification to hold until he returned.

However, if you were dealing with professional car thieves—and you probably were—you would have been left holding some phony credentials, as well as the bag.

DEAR ABBY: A technique for helping persons one meets to remember a name:

In 1937 when I was a salesman for an Austin, Texas, new-car dealer, a fellow salesman, Lee Brasfield, took my arm, led me up to a tall, handsome man and said, "Lu, I'd like you to meet a friend of mine, Lyndon Johnson. He's just been elected to Congress from this district. This is Lu Lyman."

Every time I met Congressman Johnson in the next 23 months, I made a point of saying to him, "I'm Lu Lyman." This spared his racking his brain to remember who I was.

Being a good politician, the future president always assured me that he remembered my name.

This has been standard procedure in my military, business and social career.

LUCIUS B. LYMAN JR.,
KENT, OHIO

DEAR LUCIUS: Your "technique" may not help those you encounter to remember your name, but it will put them at ease immediately to know they don't have to.

To spare another the slightest possible discomfort is indeed the hallmark of a gentleman or a lady.

DEAR ABBY: I just finished reading the letter from "Ellie," who bought herself a pretty nightie, had it gift-wrapped and told her bridge club that her husband gave it to her for Valentine's Day.

I also have a story to share. My husband and I have been married for nine years. We're farmers. Our anniversary is during planting season, and my birthday is during harvest, so he never remembers either one. This past year, I knew he'd forget Valentine's Day, so I worked out a way to ensure myself against hurt feelings. I made arrangements with the florist in our area. If my husband placed an order for me, then she would fill his order. If he didn't order flowers, she should send those I ordered with a card reading as follows: "To my loving wife from her thoughtful husband, Love, Joey."

I was happy and cheerful all day even though I knew my husband would probably forget to send me flowers for Valentine's Day. I was right.

When Joey came home that day, I kissed him at the door and thanked him for the beautiful flowers. The expression on his face when he read the card was the best Valentine gift I ever had!

FARMING AND HAPPY
IN N.C.

DEAR HAPPY: That's a bloom-in' good idea. Why not do the same for your anniversary and birthday? (Ladies, make a note.)

Coffee named Artist of the Year

By LARRY HOLLIS
Staff Writer

White Deer artist Viola Coffee was recognized as Artist of the Year for 1987 during the annual banquet and business meeting of the Pampa Fine Arts Association last week.

In a special honor approved by the association's board, Pampa attorney Joe Gordon was named 1986 Patron of the Arts during the meeting held Wednesday night at the Pampa Country Club.

Receiving her plaque from outgoing PFAA president Hal Cree, Coffee thanked the members for the honor.

"I could not believe this thing could come my way," stated the area oil painter. "I'm going to work very hard in the next year" to prepare for the gallery show of her works.

Before naming the honored artist, Cree discussed the guidelines used in selecting the association's artists of the year.

The artist must be a resident of Pampa or the immediate area and have shown efforts in the community to further the interests of the arts. In addition, the chosen artist must be willing to present a show of his or her works in the visual arts.

The artist does not have to be a member of the PFAA to be selected for the honor, Cree noted.

The Artist of the Year Committee reviews artists nominated for the honor in accordance with the guidelines and with their work and then selects a few artists for further consideration.

"There's a lot of fine people on the list," Cree said, making it quite an honor to finally be named the Artist of the Year.

Presenting the Patron of the Arts honor, Cree said Gordon had made a "very significant contribution to our community and the association." A founder of the PFAA, Gordon "has certainly enriched the association," Cree stated.

ARTIST OF THE YEAR for 1987, Viola Coffee, left, receives her plaque from Pampa Fine Arts Association outgoing president Hal Cree.

thing you've done for this association," he added. Mentioning Gordon's influence and assistance to himself, Cree said, "I thank you from the bottom of my heart."

Gordon said he wanted to offer his thanks to the association "from an appreciative recipient."

In other business, the association members in attendance approved the report of the Nominating Committee for the election of new officers and board members.

Elected as 1986-1987 officers were Dan Snider, president; R. L. "Larry" Franklin, vice president; Duane Harp, treasurer; Dr. Joe Donaldson, membership; and Mrs. Robert (Barbara) Benyshek, secretary.

Named to the Board of Trustees for three-year terms beginning in May were Mrs. E. H. (Lilith) Brainard, Duane Harp, James T. Brown and Michael Hartsock.

Filling unexpired terms for trustee positions will be Barbara Benyshek, Eddie R. Burton, Hal Cree and Dr. Joe Donaldson.

Members of the 1987 Nominating Committee will be Mrs. Ken (Holly) Burger, Mrs. Roy (Mary) Braswell, Cree, Franklin and Snider.

In his comments as outgoing president, Cree said, "I've had a lot of fun this year... It's been a real pleasure... I've got to know a lot of people."

One of the fine things "about this association is that anyone can join it who has an interest in the arts," Cree stated. He encouraged present members to go out and find new members from the community.

Taking the gavel, incoming president Snider thanked Cree for the example he had set as president in the past year.

Snider called upon the other members to continue their support for the association and its officers. "I will be depending on you all for help," he said.

During the social hour, members viewed a gallery showing of oil paintings and pastels by Amarillo artist Ben Konis, known for this Southwestern art subjects.

Association member Jack Stroup received a watercolor by 1986 Artist of the Year Anne Harper as a doorprize.

At the start of the business meeting, Cree discussed the annual report, noting "we're in really good shape," and thanked the committee chairmen for their work in the past year.

Actors bring invisible rabbit to life

By CATHY SPAULDING
Staff Writer

Whether it is bringing an invisible six-foot-tall rabbit to life or introducing the audience to extra characters in a one-woman show, theater depends on the ability to imagine.

Two people faced with this task are William Lithgow and Bee Vary, who lead a 10 person-one Pooka cast in Mary Chase's 1945 Pulitzer Prize winning comedy Harvey, now being performed at the Country Squire Dinner Theater in Amarillo.

Lithgow, a Los Angeles actor, plays Elwood P. Dowd an amiable and somewhat tipsy heir to the Dowd Estate. The trouble is that he has this friend, a tall rabbit named Harvey, that he likes to introduce to people. This prompts the inconvenienced and embarrassed Veta Simmons (Vary) and daughter Myrtle May Simmons to question Dowd's sanity and have him committed. There, doctors prescribe a drug to make Dowd stop "seeing" Harvey.

"I think it's neat that I'd have the chance to play this great part," Lithgow said. "With all the insanity in the play, he's the one who's really normal. He's likeable, warm, kind, super guy. It's a change from having to be the nut as I have been in other productions."

In Harvey Lithgow is faced with the challenge of making an invisible rabbit as believable a character as he is.

"I'd try to do different things at first," he said. "I'd pantomime holding his hand, put my arm around him. I'd point to him. But the director (Country Squire veteran Joe Barone) pointed out that if I see him, and believe he is really there, I wouldn't have to point to him."

To help boost his imagination, Lithgow has an image of what Harvey looks, sounds and acts like. The dinner theater's program pictures him as a dapper fellow with a stately air and a bow tie.

"My Harvey is fatter, more unkempt. He has a mean streak," Lithgow said. "Each night there are different little responses I would have, like when someone is talking, I'd turn away and go 'What?'" rabbit, Lithgow has seen what its like to have a friend that no one else sees.

Although this is his first experience in conjuring up his own 72"

"About six months ago, I was in a restaurant, and this man had two plates in front of him. And he was talking and he had a fight with his 'friend' so he left. Then he came back," Lithgow remembered.

Although Vary's Veta refuses to see Harvey, Vary is no stranger to conjuring characters out of thin air. In Albuquerque and Michigan, she portrayed the reclusive poet Emily Dickenson in the one-woman show, The Belle of Amherst.

"One-woman shows are very scary and very satisfying," Vary said. "No one else is on stage but her, and she talks about people and she talks to people. Creating images of what the people look or sound like makes it much easier because you have to believe you are talking to them, that you see them."

Another play that stretched her imagination was Black Comedy, a play about a power failure where, with the stage lighting reversed, the audience gets to see how the characters grope about in the dark.

Lithgow knows he shares a last name with movie actor John Lithgow, but he isn't sure he's related.

"I might be a cousin, but I never met him," William said. "If it helps get people to the play, say that I'm related."

A Los Angeles native, he is making his third appearance in Amarillo, he appeared with Carol Lynley in A Dash of Spirits and with Larry Linville in Lunch Hour. He has also appeared "as maitre'd's and other minor roles" in episodes of All in the Family and Silver Spoons.

Vary, an Albuquerque resident, has appeared with Patrick and Ethan Wayne in Amarillo's Come Blow Your Horn.

An interview with Harvey

The Pampa News is especially pleased to have none other than Harvey, the six foot tall rabbit who provided the inspiration for Mary Chase's 1946 play.

We'd like to welcome you to our office, Mr. Harvey. How are you today?

Off!

Off?

Yeah, off. You're sitting on me. Other than that, I'm doin' fine. Okay. Harv, you've been with this play for more than 40 years, doing the role 13,627 times. Yet, you never seem to grow tired of it. What's kept you going for two generations?

Well, it's the people I get to work with, Spath. Ever since the play opened in 1945, I've had the opportunity to work with a variety of wonderful folks, both celebrities and plain people. Frank Fay, the first Elwood, Joe E. Brown. And Jimmy Stewart, my god where would I be without him? He made my cotton tale so popular on stage, in film and in special TV movie that it's almost a reflex to mention our two names in the same breath.

What about William Lithgow, who's cast in the Country Squire production?

Him? God, what a card. He sees things in me I never knew existed. He draws out my ornery side in the play. And that's both good and bad because, hey, while I do like to have a little mischief now and then, I don't appreciate being lumped in with some greedy little smart aleck who harasses black ducks and hunters with speech impediments. That stereotype really Bugs me.

How come nobody can see you except Elwood?

I dunno. I'm seeing a counselor to try to figure that out. My dad, Jack, was an anesthesiologist at Hutch. County Veterinary Clinic in Borger, one of the first Ether Bunnies in the area. Mom was a hare dresser who died young when some lady got pregnant. Anyway, my teen years were kind of wild because I'd hang out with Peter Rabbit and Little Bunny FooFoo and we'd go out in the forest to scoop little field mice and bop them on the head. When the authorities found out what we were doing, my Uncle Wiggly suggested I just kind of disappear for a while, and I took him literally.

How do you unwind after a performance?

I take the local rabbit transit down to the Salad Bar to be with my buddies, Flopsy and the March Hare for a carrot schnapps. But my counselor, the Tortoise, says I have to slow down some.

What next, Harve?

After I costar with Barbara Striesand in "Bunny Girl," me and my gal Cottontail are gonna hop down the bunny trail together and practice our multiplication.

Families urged to make most of mealtime

CARSON, Calif. (AP)—A common mealtime for the whole family is becoming an endangered tradition, but there are ways to counter the trend, says Dr. Virginia Long, a counseling psychologist at California State University, Dominguez Hills, in Carson.

The kids are busy with after-school or sports activities, and as American women continue to join the labor force, both they and their husbands may be working late, she points out.

Fast foods and frozen meals have increased in variety and availability, and with more and more women working, they have less and less time to cook.

"We're not rearing a generation of young women who know how to cook, who seek as a life goal to be Julia Child," says Long, who as part of her practice works with clients who suffer from eating disorders such as anorexia and bulimia.

But with planning, mealtime can still be a positive family experience, she says. One way of accomplishing that goal is to set aside a specific day to plan a meal and eat it together as a family. To make the event even more family oriented and to take the burden off one individual, she suggests dividing up the food preparation tasks among all family members.

"You have to have the entire family understand it's not the sole responsibility of the female in the house to do all the shopping and planning," she says. "I see the family in a state of change.

You now have women struggling to have the chores divided, trying to get husbands and children to cooperate more."

On the other hand, Long says, if one family member has a specific dish or meal he or she likes to prepare from beginning to end, that can become a special family occasion.

"At our house, my daughter has one special meal she likes to make. My husband has one he likes. That person has the responsibility to do the shopping and put it together. It's a treat for the family. You get rewarded psychologically because the family enjoys it."

Bright, warm days interrupted with a day or two of cool and grey ones, speak of a normal spring month when activities keep us all busy. Celebrations of all kinds rate high on the list.

Members of St. Matthew's Episcopal Church honored two dear members at their monthly covered dish dinner last Sunday. Honorees were Florence Bruton, who will be 85 years young on April 29, and Margaret Nichols, who will be 84 on May 31. Host couples were Iris and Bill Ragsdale and Sandra and Richard VanBergen. Florence, a frisky little fireball who will tackle anything, is the only living member of her family. Both ladies have been active in all facets of parish family life — Florence for 28 years and Margaret for 53 years. Margaret, who worked 25 years at Bentley's ladies wear store and 12 years at Dunlaps, has two older brothers, one in Kansas City and one in Okmulgee. Her daughter Joyce Roberts and son James C. Taylor live in Pampa. Churches need more Margarets and Florences.

FAMILY, FRIENDS AND EMPLOYEES attended a retirement party honoring Milo Carlson at the Pampa Country Club last Sunday afternoon. After 49 years in the construction business, 1937 to 1986, Milo will give the reins of management to his son Jerry. Their sons, Jerry, twins Jack and John, and Gene, their wives and children, came from all parts of Texas — Pampa, Houston, Dallas and Midland, for the big event. With all he and Pauline have going, the big question will be: How did he ever find time to work? He's a lapidary, a Kansas farmer, and hunter. He and Pauline are avid gardeners, travelers and proud, proud grandparents of nine. Happy well-deserved retirement, Pauline and Milo!

For Ola and John Hair, the awards banquet of Coronado Community Hospital was a double celebration. What a festive way to celebrate their 35th (?) anniversary. A few days before, Mab and Bill Calloway sneaked away to Amarillo for a quiet anniversary celebration.

OOPS & OOPS AGAIN! Apologies to Annabel Wood, not Anna Lee Woods, and Odessa Wilbanks, not Stepehns, who attended the Las Pampas Garden Club coffee at Fauncine Mack's earlier this month. Thanks for the note of correction, Odessa.

Jean Martindale's 50th birthday party was special from the beginning. The invitations, an original poem by Mary, were mailed in envelopes marked CONFIDENTIAL! David Martindale and Rick Harris sang a song they wrote for the occasion. About 50 guests enjoyed the festivities and all the goodies Mary had prepared. Congratulations on a milestone birthday, Jean!

Sandie (Mrs. Ed) Williams gathered the best possible group for a showing of toys — a group of GRANDMOTHERS! Carolyn Kessel was in charge.

LORETA AND ERNEST Walters are generous in sharing sweet pea vines with friends. Ernest vows the pretty plants grow wild! An item of interest. Bessie Inman has lived in the same house since Aug. 12, 1935, almost 51 years now. Laura Fatheree has lived in the same house 59 years. The Poole family now consisting of Garnet and her twin sisters, Jackie and Jody, have lived in the same house, though in two locations, for 58 years. The Poole house was moved to its present location in the early 1960s. At least two businesses have stayed in the family more than 55 years — Jones Evered Machine Company and Sullins Plumbing.

Congratulations to 11-year-old Andrew McCall who won four first place titles in ACRO Gymnastics at Levelland earlier this month. Proud parents are Nancy and John McCall.

COMMITTEES ARE FAST at work on plans for end-of-school activities. Chairmen for the eighth grade PARTY (not prom!) are Ramona Hite, Ruth Ann Sikes, Georgia and Doug Coon, Pam Harris, Cathy Massie, Beverly Teague. More details later.

Can hardly wait to hear the theme of the All-Night Party for graduating seniors on May 30. Daisy and Bill Bennett are general chairmen with the following special committee chairmen: Mary Martindale, Shari Langen, Coralie Laughlin, Marci Welborn, Betty Marak, Judy Taylor, Larry Cross, Betty Hallerburg, JoAnn Nail, Sue Reddell and Doug Coon. Sounds like a party to make all of us wish to be graduates again.

Lou Ann and David Waggoner are proud parents of a baby girl, Jeannie Lee, a wonderful accompaniment for two brothers Josh and Jonathan. Congratulations!

WARM CONGRATULATIONS, TOO to Terri and Ronnie Williams on the birth of Seth Daniel. Proud grandparents are Mary and Jerry Guinn.

Janyth and Charles Bowers are busy as can be with their new twin sons, Chance William and Collin Lackey. Chandler Paul is the proud big brother. Double congratulations to these parents!

Leanne McPherson and Nancy Brogdon were two of several ladies who wore light, light colored hose in contrast to dark and brighter dresses to the Beta Sigma Phi Yellow Rose Tea recently. Beta Sigma Phi members are a group of lovely, lovely, women who, while schooled in social graces, are committed to community service.

Thanks to Jannie (Mrs. Gene) Lewis for sharing a recent issue of Opera News. First space contained Mary Jane Johnson's rigid schedule that takes her from Fort Worth to England, Cincinnati, San Francisco, Houston and the Netherlands. Her proud parents are Maxine and Rex Rose.

OPERATION BABY SAVE, sponsored by the Junior Service League, resulted in 45 people being certified in infant CPR, Thursday week, at the downtown Pampa Fire Station. Because of a fire, the second session was postponed and transferred to Coronado Community Hospital Friday night. Margaret Spearman was Junior Service League project chairman. Assisting were Karen Gregory, Tamme Pike and Jane Poland from CCH; Jana Turpin, Larry Silvey and Jim Howard of Pampa Medical Services; D.T. Brown, training officer, Tommy Wheeler, mark Franks and Wayne Smith of the Pampa Fire Department, Barbara Evans and Margaret Haynes of the J.S.L. That's called community service at its best.

Jane Poland was selected April CCH employee of the month. "BEST WISHES," and "We'll miss you!" to Brenda and Gary Bell as they move to Atlanta, Ga., to be nearer to family. For 6½ years, Brenda has been medical staff quality assurance coordinator for CCH.

Billye (Mrs. Charles) McGowan and Dale (Mrs. Jack) Martin were seen having coffee and enjoying a friendly chat together in the mall.

Chalk up another successful spring ball for the Pampa Noon Lions Club last Saturday night. Dale West circulated among the crowd to make sure everyone had a grand time, which they did! Here's what a few of the lovelies wore... Cindy (Mrs. Rick) Harris, a beaded white crepe in dramatic contrast to her dark hair... Joyce Scott, intricately beaded ivory crepe to match Cliff's tux jacket... Kathleen and Ralph Hipkins, both in burgundy... Irvine Dunn, electric blue featuring a handkerchief hemline... Lynly Cambren, light apricot floral print accented with bows... Petite Irm (Mrs. Tom) Byrd, navy Victorian style with lacy collar and pearls...

APRIL (MRS. DOB) Hudson wore a dressy length raw silk suit in a severe cut to complement her upswept hairdo... Carolyn (Mrs. Dean) Copeland in soft pink with flowing skirt and beaded belt, collar and cuffs... Georgia (Mrs. Doug) Coon, pink strapless... Sharon (Mrs. David) Martindale in lemon satin strapless with an asymmetrical bow at the hip... Marilyn Imel in black evening harem pants. Dancers were tucked in bed by 2 a.m. after a long evening of fun.

Karen and Bob Gregory visited in Boston recently. Winnie and Lloyd Sweat spent a two-week vacation that included a reunion with old army buddies and meeting a cousin known through years of correspondence for a tour of the capitol.

You'll have time to make the Friends of the Library book sale tomorrow, if not this afternoon. Nancy Hill is project chairman and Glenna Lee Miller is group president.

Pampans graduate from Wayland

Four students from Pampa were among the 232 candidates for degrees this spring at Wayland Baptist University. They were awarded their degrees at the university's 76th spring commencement Saturday in Herral Auditorium in Plainview.

This list of Pampa students includes Charmy Marie Fellers, who received a bachelor of science degree in business administration. A 1982 graduate of Pampa High School, Fellers is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Don Fellers of Pampa.

The remaining three Pampa graduates attended class through Wayland's Amarillo Center and were awarded the bachelor of science in occupational education (BSOE) degree. They are Rodney

LEE CORNELISON

Eugene Caldwell, occupational technology; F. Lee Cornelison, occupational technology and James Daniel Laramore, criminal justice.

Members of the Class of 1986 received 22 master's degrees, 190 bachelor's degrees, eight associate degrees and 12 certificates of completion.

Former Pampan named 'merit mom'

Patricia F. Ward of Riverton, Wyo., a Pampa native, has been elected as 1986 Wyoming Merit Mother by the Wyoming Mothers Association of the American Mother Inc.

She was honored by the organization as an outstanding mother at the annual "Mother of the Year" banquet, April 12 in

PATRICIA FRANKLIN WARD
Cheyenne, Wyo. She and her husband, Alvin, have lived in Riverton for 27 years. They have five children and eight grandchildren.

The daughter of Mr. and Mrs.

W.B. Franklin of Pampa, Ward was a member of the Pampa High School Band, the National Honor Society, and a 1953 graduate of Pampa High School.

She is a member of the Riverton Memorial Hospital Auxiliary and has received the DIANA Award from Beta Chi chapter of Epsilon Sigma Alpha. She and her family are active members of the Hillcrest Baptist Church where she has served as organist for 27 years. She also was a leader in the Women's Missionary Union, a Sunday School teacher and director of the Children's department. She also developed and is director for Ministry of Puppets Squad for the Youth Puppet Team.

While raising her children, Ward was a room mothers, for as many as three rooms at a time, and avid spectator for her children's activities. She served as a 4-H leader for 16 years, gave music lessons and helped with school and scouting projects of all types.

Ward gives the following as her philosophy of parenting: "Successful parenting is achieving the balance between freedom given and discipline maintained. It is helping your children cope with changes, handle peer pressure and make decisions during adolescence. It is demonstrating stability, integrity, patience, a Christian faith, understanding and love."

Rolling Stones

'Old men' still fighting in the streets

By DAN MURRAY
Staff Writer

Listen up! Now! In the youthful, yuppiefest, techno-pop world of the Eighties, over-40 rock stars just do not make lean, mean albums like the Rolling Stones' newest, Dirty Work. Except the Rolling Stones.

The Stones first crawled into rock's ring 25 years ago, and with each year since the expectations have amassed among rock's tough ringside crowd. Yet the Stones have been defending their title of "The Greatest Rock & Roll Band In The World" for 20 years. And taking on all comers.

But they're all over 40 now, and each new Stones release is greeted with the wary eyes and ears of a fight crowd that's seen far too many soft, over-the-hill champions crawl through the ropes once too often. Then fall down flat.

Not the Stones. Not the champs. Still streetfighting men, the Rolling Stones in Dirty Work offer 1986 rock-solid proof that they're not just kicking, but thrashing, and unlike contenders half their age still carry a mean knockout punch.

The Stones last stirred the international scene in 1980-81, when Tattoo You was released to unanimous approval and backed up with a rare world tour, conducted in packed stadiums amid wild delirium.

While it was a fine album, Tattoo You offered glimpses of Mick Jagger, Keith Richards, Ron Wood, Bill Wyman and Charlie Watts as mellowed, subterranean passengers-to-be on the Eighties train. The two singles, Start Me Up and Little T&A, were fired-up Stones rockers, but over half the tracks on the album were melancholic and restrained. Not threatening, brash or rough, but polished, and maybe a bit too smooth from the rolling.

Five years later, rock's perennial bad boys are back to the dirty work. In Dirty Work, the exiles on Main Street shove you face-first into the dark, mean side of town the Eighties Yuppie dares not go near. There, amid the rude women and "dirty dirty rat scum," the fighting is fierce and the winning ugly.

Lead guitarist Keith Richards is ever the scratching alleycat, and this is a Keith album. Usually Jagger plays a larger role in the creation of a new Stones disc, but Mick was busy with his solo release when the band started Dirty Work, so Keith did a lot of the work.

The significance of that is evident. Jagger's more prone to experimentation, but Richards' idea of what the Stones should be is closer to the vest. His vision of the Stones is of an electric, bone-grinding Rock & Roll band tightly meshed in its soul, reggae, funk and R & B roots, and on Dirty Work that's what you get.

The album's tone is set on the first cut, "One Hit (To The Body)," and from the bell the Stones march straight in for the kill.

Behind Watts' intent bashing, Richards and Wood, playing tighter together than they ever have before, launch into their opening chords with an adolescent glee and soon the whole machine is revving behind them. The opening cut, one suspects, is Keith's coming to terms with his much heralded on-again, off-again addiction to heroin ("Oh your love is a sweet addiction. I can't clean you out of my veins."), given fierce intensity by Jagger's vocals.

Mick's on his toes throughout Dirty Work, singing with an intensity he sometimes doesn't carry through a whole album.

As if the Stones themselves weren't enough, the band enlisted folks like Bobby Womack, Jimmy Page, Patti Scialfa, Jimmy Cliff and Tom Waits for Dirty Work, and that's some one-two punch.

Round two is "Fight," a hard-rocking punk party piece that makes Elton John's "Saturday Night's Alright For Fighting" look like a cream puff.

For their first single, the Stones pulled out a 1964 soul hit by Bob and Earl, "Harlem Shuffle," and it's a winner. It's still utterly amazing that white boys like the Stones can play black music and do it so right. Forget the lyrics on "Harlem Shuffle" and shake a tail feather, baby.

In "Hold Back," the next-to-last cut on side one, Jagger sings, "I want your attention, so pin back your ears. I've been climbing this tree of promises for over forty years."

It's a catchy, staccato guide to success, filled with pitfalls that always jerk Jagger's soaring vocals back into line for the hook: "Don't hold back."

The last track on the side, "Too Rude," is pure reggae and the Stones' best work in the genre to date.

It's side two that best explains the leanness, the meanness of Dirty Work, for the Stones don't seem gloatful over the Rock & Roll mountains they've climbed.

In "Winning Ugly," a screaming, infectious rocker that's bound to become the anthem for some baseball team this summer, Jagger sings:

"I wanna be on top. Forever on the up and damn the competition. I wrap my conscience up. I wanna win that cup and get my money, baby."

But the chorus offers a complete attitude reversal ("I will not walk so proud, come down off my cloud") and breaks off with Jagger moaning, "How can I live my life this way?"

"Back To Zero," the next track, is an apocalyptic meeting of blues and techno-pop protesting nuclear war and featuring a snarling Jagger and a helluva hook.

"Dirty Work," the title cut, won't get airplay locally because of its lyric content, but it's an angry, soaring cut with mean Richards solos that certainly deserves to be heard.

It's also further evidence that the Stones don't like the glitzy, big-money world their success has dumped them in. Of the printable lyrics: "You pull the strings and you got the clout. There's something filthy living in your mouth. Pushing your buttons, you get away free . . ." and the oft-repeated, "It's beginning to make me angry. I'm beginning to hate it. You're a user you're a user. I'm gonna shake you."

The lyrics don't lighten up on the next track, "Had It With You," which for this money is the best cut on the album. It's little more than a vicious goodbye to a "mean mistreater and a dirty, dirty rat scum," but it's so much fun.

"Had It With You" is the Stones at their rootsy best; an all-out Delta boogie-woogie number that simply won't let you sit still — an overdue cussing that you never knew would be so fun.

"Sleep Tonight," the final cut, features Richards on lead vocals and is the only slow song on the album. Richard's alleycat vocals make it a dandy, and somehow it seems an apt ending to a record that maintains its continuity all the way through.

The fight crowd may get its way someday, and see the Stones fall flat. Not this time. Dirty Work is a winner by first round knockout.

Gwen instructs Debbie in 'Sweet Charity' role

By MICHAEL KUCHWARA
AP Drama Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — When Debbie Allen of Fame fame came back to Broadway to star in the revival of Sweet Charity, she had the best possible instructor — Gwen Verdon, the original Charity Hope Valentine.

"Gwen's never told me how to play the role. She's too great an artist to do it like that," says Allen, describing the woman who first played the dance hall hostess with a heart of gold. "Gwen knows we are different. Any really good actress is going to bring something to the part. Not just try to do what somebody else did."

Allen, dressed in black leotard and gray leg-warmers, sits on a folding chair in a barren rehearsal hall. She has an hour before another run-through of the show, which was a Broadway success 20 years ago.

The original production was directed and choreographed by Bob Fosse, who also directed the movie, which starred Shirley MacLaine. He's back again with this revival. In fact, it's his second show of the month. Earlier in April, Fosse opened Big Deal, a new musical for which he wrote the book and did the choreography and direction. While Fosse got Big Deal ready for Broadway, Sweet Charity was watched over by Verdon.

The show, according to Allen, is pretty much the same as it was on Broadway in 1966, right down to the costumes.

"You almost don't even know that it's 20 years old until the 'Rhythm of Life' number when all the actors are wearing hippie-style clothes," she says.

For Allen, Sweet Charity was the first show she didn't have to audition for. One lunch last year with composer Cy Coleman, producer Joseph Harris and Fosse, convinced the three that they had found the right woman.

To do Sweet Charity, Allen had to juggle her commitment to Fame, the syndicated television series she has starred in since 1982. The show, set in New York's High School for the Performing Arts, features Allen as Lydia Grant, a hardworking dance teacher. She also choreographs the show's dance numbers.

Filming Fame is a nine-month commitment each year with a long shooting schedule each day.

"MGM, which produces Fame, was good about letting me do Sweet Charity. They have a lot of respect for me and have allowed me to develop as a director and a choreographer with Fame. Plus I was pretty emphatic. I told them I really wanted to work with Bob Fosse," she says.

When Allen did Sweet Charity on the West Coast last summer, she filmed all her musical numbers for Fame in 10 days — scenes that could be inserted into the show so her character wouldn't disappear from the story line.

The 36-year-old Allen was born in Houston. Her father was a dentist, her mother director of a cultural center. Show business was always on their daughter's mind. As a youngster, there were ballet lessons and then membership in the corps de ballet at the Houston Grand Opera, Allen's first professional job.

After college at Washington's Howard University, she headed for New York in 1972. Within a week she had found work in George Faison's modern dance company. By the following year, she was in Raisin, the musical version of A Raisin in the Sun.

"I was the understudy who went on and made good. I was the understudy out of town and then someone got sick. I went on and the producers said, 'Let's keep her.' So I stayed," she recalls.

Since then, her other important roles have included the fiery Anita in the 1980 Broadway revival of West Side Story and Sarah in the film version of E.L. Doctorow's Ragtime.

Sweet Charity is the biggest part Allen has ever played, a role that requires singing, dancing and acting.

Tokyo's martial arts hall is popular gathering spot

By SALLY SOLO
Associated Press Writer

TOKYO (AP) — Singer Tina Turner, Emperor Hirohito and 10,000 Japanese farmers have something in common. They all chose the same place to air their messages in 1985.

Originally built for the 1964 Olympic Games, Budokan, or "Martial Arts Hall," has become one of the city's most popular indoor arenas for musical concerts and other events. As it is located on the grounds of the Imperial Palace, ceremonies involving Japan's head of state get preference — after judo and karate contests.

"Budokan was built to promote martial arts and encourage youth to study Japan's traditional sports," said Hisao Saito, deputy secretary general of the Nippon Budokan Foundation.

But, he said in an interview, after elementary, junior high and high school clubs complete their annual meets, almost 300 days are left for others to use the imposing structure, reached by crossing a moat and passing under the centuries-old stone Tayasu Gate.

Budokan was built in an octagon, reminiscent of a wing of the classic 8th-century Horyuji Temple in Nara. Its copper roof, shaped in the image of Mount Fuji, is capped with a golden onion-shaped ball.

The traditional touch the Tokyo landmark lends to the midtown skyline is sometimes deceptive of what's going on inside.

Political groups for the most part are not welcome, but almost anything else goes.

Foreign heads of state and government gathered there for the funeral in 1981 of Prime Minister Masayoshi Ohira.

In 1985, a year of milestones,

Hirohito led ceremonies at Budokan on the 40th anniversary of Japan's war defeat in August, and returned in November to celebrate 60 years of his reign.

For a fee, the hall is available for bargain sales or college graduations. Or it may be rented as a temporary stage for private and religious organizations.

The Central Union of Agricultural Cooperatives is a regular customer. Spokesman Akihiko Tochiori said farmers from around the country had converged on the hall every summer for about 10 years for rallies demanding that rice prices be increased.

The Japan Teachers Union has also rented the hall, most recently in early December, for a convention aimed at devising a counter-strategy to government education reform proposals.

"We would actually prefer not to use Budokan, but there aren't many places in Tokyo where 10,000 people can meet under one roof," said spokesman Saburo Hashimoto of the leftist union, which opposes the imperial system.

Budokan is probably less than 10 minutes' walk — if one could pass through security — from the emperor's private enclave in the vast palace grounds.

The most frequent Budokan users, however, are music groups and their fans. The 1985 musical parade included rock stars such as Huey Lewis and the News, Tina Turner and Chaka Khan.

Bob Dylan, who made an album from a previous Budokan performance, will be back there this year.

"If the musician is one that can handle Budokan, then Budokan is the chosen site," explained a woman from Udo Artists Inc., a firm that books foreign rock music tours of Japan.

From the arena floor, it is 139 feet to the concrete ceiling where a 40-by-26-foot Japanese flag hangs. There are folding chairs on the ground and bleacher-like slabs of concrete on levels two and three.

"No thought was given to the acoustics of the building," Saito said. Those sponsoring concerts "just bring big speakers and turn up the volume."

Classical concerts are given only rarely, he said, and then "it's hard to hear from the third level."

Budokan somewhat makes up for what it lacks in modern comforts with a rich history. Feudal lords inhabited the grounds in the 17th century when Edo Castle, headquarters of the Shogun who ran the government, spread over what is now most of Tokyo's central ward. In 1868 when the emperor moved from Kyoto to the new capital in Tokyo, the Imperial Guards took up their command on the site.

After the war, the emperor's residence was confined to the inner palace grounds. The northwest corner of the fortress became a police training ground until 1962, when the Japanese Diet (parliament) passed a resolution inaugurating the Nippon Budokan Foundation.

Two years later, the hall was completed. But construction has never really ceased.

"Today there's a rock concert; tomorrow something else. The activity inside goes on all night," said Saito, as workers continued past 5 p.m. to install ramps and lights for the next night's pop-song festival.

AGRICULTURE SCENE

Dry conditions are of concern to agricultural producers

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP) — While scattered severe thunderstorms and some hail dotted portions of North Central and Northeast Texas early this week, most of Texas remained dry, a fact of major concern to all agricultural producers, said Dr. Zerle L. Carpenter, director of the Texas Agricultural Extension Service.

In many central and southern portions of Texas, dryland crops are suffering severe moisture stress and are at the critical stage, Carpenter said in his weekly report on the state's agriculture. Other producers across the state have planted crops which have not come up, or have emerged to very poor stands, due to dry conditions, he said.

Crop insurance adjusters are monitoring the continuing dry conditions over the state as young crops wither due to high spring temperatures and lack of moisture.

Many ranchers in the western half of the state are continuing with supplemental feeding of their livestock, as pastures and ranges become drier and turn brown as temperatures climb. In portions of the Coastal Bend and South Extension districts, some cattlemen are again burning thorns off prickly pear cactus to feed their cattle, in an effort to stretch dwindling hay supplies. As cattle and range conditions decline, forced sales are beginning to occur, noted Carpenter.

Some wheat is being baled for cattle feed in Central Texas due to the market outlook and scarcity of hay, and some oat crops also are being baled for hay in West Central Texas. Other wheat and oat crops are being grazed out in those areas, since native pastures are very poor and forage for livestock in short supply. In irrigated areas of Southwest Texas, the first cutting of new-crop hay is under way, but yields are low, Carpenter added.

Rains averaging from 1 to 2 inches — accompanied by some hail, tornadoes and high winds — damaged from 80 to 90 percent of the wheat crop in some dozen counties of North Central Texas during the past weekend. Some replanting of crops will be necessary there and in portions of Northeast Texas following recent rains. Ranges and pastures in those areas are making rapid improvement following the rains.

District Extension Directors reported these mid-week conditions:

PANHANDLE: Soil moisture continues short despite some light rain. Dryland wheat is declining rapidly and watering of irrigated wheat is under way. The sugar beet crop is about 90 percent planted in Deaf Smith County and early planted fields are up to a good stand. Onion and potato plantings are off to a good start. Cattle are in good condition but markets are weak.

SOUTH PLAINS: Sorghum and cotton planting should begin in the next two weeks, and corn is 50 percent planted. The Russian wheat aphid is still a major problem for the wheat crop, which is 50 percent headed. Some scattered showers, accompanied by high winds, were received but pre-irrigation of land continues.

ROLLING PLAINS: Recent rains over part of the district will enhance cotton ground preparation but the moisture was too little and too late to be of much benefit to the wheat crop. Irrigation of potatoes has begun in Knox County, and some vegetable gardens are making fair progress despite wind damage. Ticks are plentiful on small animals and in lawns in King County. Ranchers are working the spring calf crop and shipping yearlings.

NORTH CENTRAL: Severe thunderstorms raced through portions of the district last weekend, spawning some tornadoes and dropping damaging hail and rains of 1 to 2½ inches. From 80 to 90 percent of the wheat fields in the storm's path suffered hail damage. Pastures and ranges are improving following the rain.

NORTHEAST: Rains and cooler temperatures will cause the replanting of some crops. Wheat is 90 percent headed with some leaf rust reported. Pastures and ranges are responding to recent rains although cool night temperatures are delaying growth. Vegetable gardens are doing well, with harvest of early vegetables continuing. Cattle are making good weight gains.

FAR WEST: Ranges are very dry and supplemental feeding of livestock continues to be a necessity. Pecan trees are looking good and cantaloupe thinning is under way, along with cotton planting. The Russian wheat aphid has surfaced in the area.

WEST CENTRAL: Soil moisture is critically short and all field crops are suffering from lack of moisture. Due to poor pasture conditions, about 70 percent of the wheat crop is being grazed. Oat fields are heading and some of the crop will be baled for livestock feed and the remainder grazed. Most ranchers are still providing supplemental feed for their livestock. Some stocker cattle are going to Kansas. Spring lambs are suffering from heat and dry conditions. Tornadoes devastated parts of Nolan County.

CENTRAL: Some wheat fields are being baled due to the market outlook. Hessian fly damage is being noted in susceptible wheat varieties in Hill County. Peanut planting has started in Comanche and Eastland counties, and grafting of pecan trees also is under way. Hornfly populations are high on area beef cattle herds.

EAST: Oats are making good growth although moisture is short. Some pastures are improving after scattered rains. Flies are a problem on cattle with some control measures being implemented. Several dairy herd buyout bids have been accepted by local producers. Vegetables are still being planted but need moisture. Peach trees have set fruit and some spraying for pests is under way.

SOUTH CENTRAL: Pastures are being sprayed to control weeds and moisture is short to adequate. Cotton planting has resumed and vegetable gardens are being bothered by insects. The cattle market continues to be depressed.

UPPER COAST: Cultivation and rice flushing is in progress. Conditions are extremely dry with crops needing rain for development and pastures are suffering. Cattle prices are down. Home gardens are doing well, but insects are becoming a problem.

SOUTHWEST: Cattle and sheep have been turned on small grain fields since pastures are dry and the crop outlook is poor due to continuing dry conditions. Most of the corn and cotton fields damaged by the April 4 hailstorm are recovering. The first hay cut is under way but yields are low. Small grain crop yields are expected to be 50 percent lower than last year as a result of the drought. Cattle numbers are down and ranchers continue to provide supplemental feed for their herds. Irrigated crops are making excellent progress.

SOUTH: Forced cattle sales are starting as cattle and range conditions decline. Most dryland crops are under stress, and heavy irrigation schedules are continuing where water is available. Sorghum is in fair condition and corn is making progress. Sugarcane is demanding heavy irrigation. The onion harvest is winding down and light supplies of carrots and cabbage continue to be marketed. Irrigation and insect control measures continue on citrus groves.

Critics are challenging quality of U.S. grain sold abroad

AP Farm Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Questions about the quality of American grain sold to foreign buyers are being raised again in Congress by critics who say the United States is losing credibility as a provider of the best that farmers produce.

Many in the grain trade, including some large companies that buy and export wheat, corn and soybeans, have claimed that often the complaints are generated by foreign buyers looking for better prices.

But U.S. exports are down and the world grain trade is highly competitive, so the problem is getting another look.

Lawmakers and industry representatives said Thursday the prime cause of the complaints is outdated grain standards that make it legal for exporters to dilute clean, high-quality grain with dust, dirt and broken or wet kernels to maximize their profits.

Exporters say buyers don't want to pay the price for the best grades, and they would be foolish not to maximize their profits under the law.

Exporters acknowledged some quality problems have arisen from bad weather in 1984 and 1985 that led to high moisture content and spoilage. But Myron Laserson, president of the North American Export Grain Association, told a Senate Agriculture subcommittee that quality problems have been "grossly exaggerated."

Laserson defended the re-blessing of dust and other material cleaned from grain as necessary to meet the specifications of buyers who want to buy lower grades of grain. And he cited Agriculture Department figures that indicated export grain is slightly cleaner than grain sampled at domestic markets.

The probe into grain quality comes as American farmers feel the pinch of declining exports.

World production of the major crops has climbed, but the international market for them has grown smaller. Prices have tumbled, and countries, including the United States, have turned to subsidies and heightened sales efforts to retain their share of the market.

Total U.S. agricultural exports, of which grains are the major component, have shrunk to a projected $28 billion this year from their $44 billion peak in 1981.

Rep. Cooper Evans, R-Iowa, showed the subcommittee 2,000 pieces of mail a farm magazine had received after running stories about the problem of dirty grain, and read a letter from a Tennessee farmer:

"Enclosed you will find a sample of the trash my local elevator was mixing with soybeans tonight off a large trailer into a semi truck," the man wrote. "The workers actually scooped mud off the ground and threw in with this junk before it was put on the semi. I saw all this while waiting to unload my truck of clean soybeans from the field."

Kenneth Gilles, administrator of the Federal Grain Inspection Service, said the Reagan administration would support congressional efforts to improve quality of exported grain, including the proposed prohibition against adding back foreign material removed from the commodity.

Conversations with foreign customers have shown "it was apparent ... that there is a problem," Gilles said.

RESISTANT HORN FLIES

A few cattlemen in the area have developed horn flies in their cattle herds that are resistant to pyrethroid fly tags. This past summer Extension Entomologist Carl Patrick gathered fly samples from cattle belonging to Gerry Ingram and the Flower's ranch. Horn flies from both herds proved to be very resistant to the pyrethroid ear tags.

Texas Extension Entomologists have developed the following recommendations for managing pyrethroid resistant horn flies.

1. Do not apply insecticide ear tags to animals before economically damaging populations of horn flies develop. Tags should be applied to animals when fly numbers reach approximately 100 to 250 per head.

2. Animal treatments with insecticides which have an alternate type action should be used in normal treatment schedules before pyrethroid resistance becomes prevalent. The use of dust bags, oilers and other self-treatment devices should be used to reduce and delay the pyrethroid resistance problem. Spray, "pour-on", "spot-on" or dust treatments with phosphate compounds (coumaphos, crotoxyphos, dichlorovos, dioxathion or malathion) provide a different mode of killing action. Pyrethroid ear tags could be used on a rotating basis on a ranch with other conventional treatments used during alternate seasons.

3. Horn fly resistance to pyrethroid insecticides can be suspected if fly numbers are not reduced below 150 to 200 per animal within 10 to 12 days after new tags are used in the herd.

4. Whole-body sprays of pyrethroid insecticides should not be applied to animals with resistant flies which can not be controlled with ear tags. Spray treatments will be at a much higher rate on the animal and thus provide a significantly higher short term selection pressure on already resistant flies.

5. Tags should be removed as soon as possible from the animal once they have lost their effectiveness in killing target pests. Tags emitting a sublethal dose to the animal appear to add to the resistance problem by prolonging fly exposure and killing or weakening susceptible individuals in the population.

6. Pyrethroid tags can be successfully used to manage horn flies where resistance has not developed. In general, the western and southern areas of Texas have not experienced a major resistance problem. Tagging herds year after year with pyrethroid ear tags can develop serious resistance. Apply tags to animals according to label directions.

From my experience, I believe cattlemen who have used fly tags several years should think twice before using ear tags for fly control this summer. You may be making the horn flies on your cattle herd very resistant to fly tags and have poor fly control as well.

French bakery big hit

NEDERLAND, Texas (AP) — They put the salt in about 10 minutes before the timer goes off. The dough still wobbles through the blades to hit the side of the mixing bowl in bulbous, flabby slaps. After the bakers add salt and yeast, the dough gets tougher and Hubert Nguyen braces himself to hold the waist-high spinning bowl in place.

It's 3 a.m. at the Golden Croissant on Farm Road 365, but Nguyen and Hoa Ngo already have drunk their second pot of coffee. Their loaves of French bread are rising, the croissants are baking; they can push their chef's hats back on their heads and know all is well. They are part of a large family that doesn't know the meaning of a small family.

They came over in 1983 with other relatives, and cousins Hung and Thuy Lam, a husband-and-wife team that had been in the United States for a decade, decided it was time to start a bakery. "We had lots of manpower but nothing to do with it," Hung says. "My family had lots of willpower but no jobs."

In Vietnam, family members ate croissants for breakfast whenever they felt like it and French bread with their evening meals. Hung and Thuy were surprised that this part of the country that sports such a French heritage didn't have a French

Because the concept of self-owned business always has been in the family blood and because more family blood had come into the country without jobs, Hung, an engineer for Texaco, approached potential financial lenders with his idea of a croissant shop. They were skeptical at best. Sure the family had a background in business, but that was back in Vietnam, they said. And who has ever heard of a croissant, the lenders asked, atrociously mispronouncing the delicate cressant roll that peels off in buttery flakes and sticks to the mouth.

The Lam family huddled. Each member, spread from California to Texas to Wisconsin, donated all their financial resources to start up the business. Family members in Beaumont and nearby areas worked without wages on weekends, lunch breaks and holidays, or even full time, to unload the expensive French ovens and other equipment needed to make croissants and French bread.

"When we started making money, even a little bit, we gave them whatever we could that we had left after overhead," Thuy says. "That was a long time ago. Now we are making money," she laughs.

Over the last two years, the Lam family has built a clientele based on its reputation: freshness. There's no such thing as day-old bread at their store; every day's leftovers go to the Salvation Army or other charitable organizations. "We don't want people to associate anything that isn't the freshest or cleanest with our store," Thuy says. "Here we try to serve only the best."

And they serve the unusual. They have a veritable menagerie of animals made from French bread dough: crawfish, alligators, turtles, Easter bunnies or giraffes. If they haven't made it before, they'll study a picture of the requested animal and give it a try, selling it only if it meets their qualifications of accuracy and the customer's satisfaction.

Two years ago they were approaching lenders. Now lenders are approaching them, they say. And they might just take them up on an offer sometime in the future, because the family is looking toward expansion into a possible franchise, Thuy says. "At this point we're not sure but we would like to get bigger. But never so big that we couldn't oversee the quality ourselves."

Military museum in New Orleans full of guns

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — If the bad guys ever try to overrun New Orleans, there's enough firepower at the Louisiana Military and State Weapons Museum to blast them back to the badlands.

For free, you can stare down the muzzles of about 275 rifles, 50 pistols, 40 machine guns, assorted artillery, Patton tanks and scores of other weapons — all live.

Retired Army Col. Francis Thomas, the museum's administrator, says the only items that aren't combat-ready are the ammunition and artillery shells.

"They've all been defused, of course, but just about everything else still shoots," Francis said.

The museum, located across from the headquarters building of the Louisiana National Guard at Jackson Barracks in eastern New Orleans, is one of 14 certified Army National Guard museums in the nation.

"This one ranks among the top," Thomas said.

It's not hard to believe. The building, a sturdy, slave brick structure that has served most of its 150 years as a powder magazine, has been renovated down to the last wooden peg and crammed with weaponry and military memorabilia from all nine major U.S. conflicts since the War for Independence.

It's surrounded by Air Force F-100 and F-102 jet fighters, tanks, personnel carriers and field pieces from both world wars.

Oddly, its prize possession isn't a weapon but a mint condition 1917 Cadillac touring car used by officers of the American Expeditionary Force in the Great War.

Thomas insists its 76-horsepower V-8 engine still runs good as new.

"It had a price tag of $2,080 in 1917," he said. "But I've had appraisers here say it would fetch $130,000 on the spot today."

When pressed, Thomas estimates the entire collection is worth over $4 million. But he quickly spins around in his stuffed leather chair, points to the wall and asks:

"But how can you put a price tag on this flag?"

It's a 28-star American flag flown during the Mexican War in 1845 and made of hand-sewn silk.

America consisted of 28 states for only a year, he said. Iowa entered the Union in 1846.

The oldest of about 2,000 items on display is a British six-pound cannon believed to have been used in the Battle of New Orleans in 1815. Thomas said it was cast in Bath, England, in 1765.

When it comes to money for the museum, Thomas admits it's "a very delicate subject" in view of the state budget crunch. He said he expects to see some federal money this year for the first time since the museum opened in 1976.

Nevertheless, he said, the museum is expecting delivery soon of a collection of the modern Army's full battle dress and of an F-4 Phantom jet. For years, the fighter has been the combat workhorse of the skies for the United States and many of its allies.

About 75 percent of the museum's display items are owned by the federal government, Thomas said. Twenty percent is owned by the state and the remaining 5 percent is on loan from private citizens.

San Antonio okays anti-smoking rule

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Beginning Sept. 1 smoking will be banned in city-owned buildings here, making San Antonio the latest Texas city to take action restricting smokers.

The San Antonio City Council voted 7-3 Thursday to forbid smoking in buildings owned or leased by the city.

In addition, the new law restricts smoking to designated areas in bus stations, airports and train stations, and restaurants with more than 50 seats will have to designate a smoking area with adequate ventilation and some sort of barrier.

Such places as banks, beauty salons and supermarkets also will be required to restrict smokers to certain areas, as will concert halls, auditoriums, exhibition halls, waiting rooms and lobbies larger than 750 square feet.

Businesses with 70 percent of their annual gross sales made through alcohol are exempt. After lengthy discussion, the council decided not to include the workplace in the ban, leaving that decision up to employers.

Ironwork art for Old Galveston Square

By BETSY WEBBER
The Galveston Daily News

GALVESTON, Texas (AP)—It's unusual to think of blacksmithing as an art, but the two blacksmiths working on Old Galveston Square, due to open on The Strand shortly after the May 31 completion date, are artists indeed.

No horseshoes for them. Doug McLean is restoring iron, steel and brass gates and railings that will turn the new shopping mall into a veritable museum of ironwork and Joe Pehoski is creating flowers in metal as perfect in form as those God makes every day.

J.R. McConnell, developer of Old Galveston Square, has acquired a fine collection of iron gates, arches and doors in varying conditions, all requiring restoration. He has also envisioned beautiful decor for the atrium of the building that has turned into something breathtaking at the hands of Pehoski.

Since the gates vary in size, jambs are being built to order for each one. The gates will mark entrances to the mall and to lease spaces within the mall. A final touch will be added with the ironwork cage for the French elevator, dating to about 1875. A stationary floor decoration for the elevator, it is made in six panels.

Each panel of the cage has 100 parts that had to be taken apart carefully to strip off the old paint and rust, then sanded, cleaned and treated and even more carefully reassembled.

"None of the pieces fit together easily," McLean said. Threads on the screws were all obsolete metric measures. Most had to be forced back into the desired pattern.

Once reassembled the cage was carefully coated with a recipe from a California blacksmith, Samuel Zellen, known as the father of American blacksmithing.

One of the gates was thought to be all steel, but when it was cleaned, bronze decorations were found. This door has its own jambs that match.

Each bronze ornament had to be sandblasted individually. Rust was removed with a needle scale, then a mechanical wire brush was used to remove the last vestiges of paint and rust.

The surface was then coated with a rust inhibitor that burns any remaining rust away and prepares the surface for paint. It was then wiped down with turpentine and a primer coat was added before the finish coat.

The gates are painted black, deep green, browns or an antique oil finish.

A clear lacquer is used over the bronze to inhibit oxidation.

A 1910 French gate was found to have bronze rosettes and a copper plate for the door knob. The knob has taken a brilliant finish and almost glows. The door originally had beveled glass panes, but these will not be replaced.

Another gate that has been painted green is made of hand-hammered steel and it, too, sports bronze rosettes. To McConnell's delight, this gate was found to bear the bronze letters "O.G.S." perfect for Old Galveston Square.

A set of curved gates, dating to about 1890, has its own curved transom. Another gate, of wrought iron, is one large, single gate and dates to about 1910.

Among the finest pieces are two arches of museum quality that date to the early 1800s. It takes a blacksmith to appreciate the hammered iron forge work done to lap decorative pieces over vital supports of the arch.

When the ironwork is set in place, each piece will have an identifying metal plaque that will give information about its history, making Old Galveston Square a veritable museum of ironwork.

Even more beautiful will be the ironwork decorations of the atrium, being crafted by Pehoski.

Balustrades, made by Pehoski, will line the sides of the atrium on all three floors, except on one side, where a garden of ironwork will serve as a balustrade. It consists of lilies, tulips and daffodils in an ironwork bed of long, graceful leaves with butterflies fluttering among them. Lilies are painted white; tulips a deep red; and daffodils a radiant yellow. Each leaf is carefully rubbed with a green patina developed in Italy 100 years ago, made with alcohol, shellac and raw pigments. Bronzing powder is then rubbed over the surface to add highlights.

Before building the flowers, Pehoski took real flowers and dissected them, using each part as a blueprint for the flowers he would build from metal. All the pieces were then laid out in his shop in the pattern he intended for the railing and the colors were assigned.

The floral group will be carefully bolted into place and will serve to counterbalance the French elevator that will be operated at the other end of the atrium.

Pehoski's shop is in Salado where he lives with his wife, Linda, and his son, Justin, 13.

McLean has lived in Galveston seven years, coming here from Syracuse, N.Y. He teaches at the Museum of Fine Arts in Houston and sculpts in iron, wood and mixed materials.

He and Pehoski both worked on the "Elissa."

To meet their Old Galveston Square deadline, McLean has used a staff of three. Pehoski has three assistants, too. All have left their own shops to do the new ironwork for Old Galveston Square.

Pehoski said the ironwork in the square will be an exhibition of the art of blacksmithing for the past 200 years, featuring English, Venetian, art nouveau and other styles.

Specifications were that it be historically correct in the Victorian style; have eye-catching value; and have a contemporary feel as a work of art.

He must also build the panels to fit into varying space, and they must be solid, structurally sound and must slide into spaces varying from 2 1/4 feet wide to 3 1/4 feet wide. The work must also meet all city codes.

Pillars supporting the floors of the atrium levels will be built in metal-like vines, winding up to the skylight. In the square's entranceway a fountain with metal plant forms will be featured.

At age 37, Pehoski has 15 years of experience in museum restoration. He attended a blacksmithing school in New Mexico and 15 years later he is still learning — "the creative potential is great," he said.
