Marcos wants job back, but U.S. supports Mrs. Aquino

HONOLULU (AP) — The United States is stressing its support for the fledgling Philippines government of President Corazon Aquino following President Reagan's courtesy call to Ferdinand Marcos in which the deposed leader reportedly pleaded for help in getting his old job back.

Reagan and his wife, Nancy, meanwhile, took a walk on the beach and stopped for a rare chat with some strangers before leaving Hawaii today for a 14-hour flight across the Pacific to the Indonesian resort island of Bali.

White House efforts to gloss over human rights problems in Indonesia were set back by the Suharto government's determined refusal to permit two Australian journalists accompanying Reagan to cover the U.S. president's visit. President Suharto has banned the Australian news media from his country following publication of an article in a Sydney newspaper comparing Suharto's family to that of Marcos. And U.S. efforts to exempt members of the traveling White House press corps were only partly successful.

The reporters, Jim Middleton and Richard Paley, both employees of the Australian Broadcasting Corp., said they had decided to leave the press entourage in Honolulu and go on to Tokyo, where they will rejoin the presidential group for next week's economic summit.

When Reagan, in Honolulu for a rest stop on his way to the Far East, telephoned the exiled Marcos to pass along personal good wishes, Marcos indicated he would like Reagan's support for a return to power, a senior U.S. official said.

The source, speaking on condition he not be identified, told The Associated Press that Reagan "said nothing to encourage him."

The conversation, described as an emotional talk, particularly for Marcos and his wife, Imelda, who spoke with Mrs. Reagan when the men had finished, occurred shortly after Reagan arrived Saturday.

Presidential spokesman Larry Speakes, at a briefing for reporters Sunday, refused to discuss the content of the Reagan-Marcos conversation. But he stressed, "We support President Aquino's government and encourage its policies of economic, political and military reform. ... We support political stability in the Philippines, and our policy has been and remains, in the final analysis, it is up to the Philippine people themselves to determine their future, and they have voiced their will in this regard."

Speakes said Reagan called Marcos "because he's an old friend and ally."

The president, staying at a private beachfront residence a short distance from where Marcos has been living in exile since February, had no intention of meeting face-to-face with the ousted leader, Speakes said.

After Reagan's plan to call Marcos was disclosed, the White House announced a new $150 million aid program for the Philippines.

Pampa man and teenage son killed in Oklahoma collision

ALTUS, Okla. — A Pampa man and his teenage son were among three people killed in a head-on collision early Sunday on U.S. Highway 283, 1.5 miles north of Blair in southwestern Oklahoma.

Zearl D. Devoll Sr., 43, and Zearl D. "Doug" Devoll Jr., 17, both of Pampa, were pronounced dead at the scene, when their 81 Pontiac, driven by Doug Devoll, collided with a 1985 Dodge van, driven by Brad W. Collier, 16, Taloga, Okla., according to the Oklahoma Highway Patrol report filed by Trooper Kerry Pettingill. The report said both were pinned in the vehicle with head and internal injuries more than an hour before being removed by the Altus Fire Department using a jaws of life device.

Channing T. Leak, 17, Taloga, a passenger in the Collier vehicle, died Sunday afternoon at St. Anthony's Hospital in Oklahoma City from head injuries suffered in the accident.

Injured in the collision were Glenda Devoll, 39, wife and mother of the victims, Collier, and Hiroshi Hayasi, age unknown, a Japanese foreign exchange student living in Taloga.

Mrs. Devoll was listed in critical condition at Jackson County Memorial Hospital in Altus this morning. She received head, leg and arm injuries.

Also at Jackson County Memorial is Collier, listed in stable condition with head leg and arm injuries.

Hayasi was transferred from Jackson County Memorial to the intensive care unit at Comanche County Memorial Hospital in Lawton where he was listed in critical but stable condition with head injuries this morning.

Pettingill's report says the younger Devoll, for whom an Amarillo address was listed, was driving south, about 13 miles north of Altus, when his vehicle travelled left-of-center and collided head-on with the oncoming van in the northbound lane.

The report said there was no evidence of alcohol being a contributing factor.

Services for Mr. Devoll and his son will be at 2 p.m. Wednesday at Carmichael-Whitley Colonial Chapel in Pampa with the Rev. Henry Veach, pastor of Spirit of Truth Church, officiating. Burial will follow at Fairview Cemetery.

Mr. Devoll moved to Pampa in 1952 from Oklahoma. He married Glenda Parker in 1968 in Pampa and was a member of the Pampa Masonic Lodge and Moose Lodge.

Survivors include his wife; two daughters, Jackie Devoll and Patty Devoll, both of Pampa; two brothers, L.D. Devoll and Vernon (Curly) Devoll, both of Pampa; and a sister, Connie Tauton of Louisiana.

Doug Devoll was born and raised in Pampa, attended Pampa schools and was a student at Pampa High School. He was active in 4-H.

Survivors include his mother; his two sisters; and his grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Kermit Rasco of Pampa and Edna Harris of Perkins, Okla.

SEATING AT THE STAGE - Parks and Recreation Department employees installed 20 benches at the Central Park stage on Friday afternoon. From left are PARD superintendent Bill Hildebrandt, Pampa Concrete Co. truck driver Tommy Carver and city employee Brent Bailey as they place concrete around the support posts. The benches were purchased through a donation by the Pampa Fine Arts Association from its Chautauqua funds. Three other benches are being located near wading pools in the city parks. (Staff photo)

Four Demos want Precinct 1 Justice of Peace position

Election '86

Pampa News special

With incumbent Justice of the Peace Margie Prestidge stepping down to run for a different office, four Democrats are running Saturday for the chance to face Republican Bob Muns for the Precinct One position in November.

Precinct One covers the Lefors area and northwest Pampa. Three of the candidates, Mary Lou Winegeart, Pat Steele and Mary Warniner, are from Lefors. The fourth, Ronald Gallagher, lives in Pampa.

The three candidates from Lefors said one of the major issues in the race is whether the precinct's justice of the peace office should stay in Lefors.

Winegeart said it is definitely important to keep the office in Lefors because, she feels, if it is moved, Lefors will never get it back. She called the Lefors location centrally located.

Steele also said the Lefors office is centrally located for those in the area around Lefors and Laketon. She added it provides the community with a "law enforcement image."

"It's something I'd hate to see the town lose," she said. "If I'm elected, it'll stay in Lefors because I'll fight to keep it in Lefors."

Warniner said the biggest question is why the precinct is split up the way it is. She said the Lefors office is a convenience for those in Lefors, but not for Precinct One residents in Pampa.

"I really don't think it matters where the office is because you're going to do your job whether you're in Pampa or Lefors," she said.

Gallagher said it is difficult to determine issues in a justice of the peace race because "you can't foresee a JP job. Everything changes day to day with the new laws and so on."

He called fairness and impartiality the main issues in the race.

Winegeart said she decided to run because she enjoys working with the public. If elected, she pledged to run a full-time office in Lefors "as I have no other obligations."

"I think we need an honest and fair person in all county offices, and a person that will think things over and make good judgements," she said.

She cited her experience maintaining an office in her home and keeping books 10 years for her husband's oil-stemming business as her main qualifications.

Winegeart said the Lefors vote may be split between the three women, but said she also thinks a majority of votes in the precinct will come from Pampa.

"I think it depends on how hard you've worked," she said. She added she has worked every street in Precinct One and is now concentrating on the rural areas.

Steele said she decided to run after a number of her customers at Shop-A-Minit mentioned it to her and she thought of how she would like the office to be run.

"Impartiality is the main thing — being honest," she said.

Steele said her determination, working with the public and bookkeeping experience are her main qualifications. She said every job she has ever held has involved bookkeeping.

Steele also said the job must be full-time and must have regular office hours.

"I think the doors should be open for the convenience of the people," she said. "A justice of the peace's duty is to be available — you're talking 24 hours a day here."

She said she feels most of the focus in the election will be on the candidates in Lefors and added she feels she is respected by most Lefors citizens.

"It gives me a pride for them to let me know that they feel that I am capable of handling the job," she said.

Warniner, a hair stylist in Pampa, said several people in Lefors also approached her about running. She said she enjoys being and working with the public.

"I kind of thought I grew up there and could pay everybody back for what they'd done for me," she said.

She cited her experience and love for working with the public as her main qualifications for the job.

Warniner said she would try to run the office like Prestidge has run it.

"You couldn't find a person as good as Margie," she said.

Warniner said she does not see the three candidates from Lefors as a problem with splitting the vote. She said she is well-known in Pampa because she has worked in Pampa for some time.

Gallagher decided to run, he said, because he looks forward to serving the public and because he thinks the job will be interesting.

"It does sound like a very interesting job and it is serving the people and that's what I've always wanted to do," he said.

He said his experience working with the public over the years is his main qualification and added he would try to run the office on the same basis Prestidge was running it before she resigned.

"What goes for one person may not go for another," he said.

Gallagher said he feels he has a good chance of winning the nomination because the three Lefors candidates may split the vote there. He added he feels he is well-known in Pampa, living in the community since 1959.

Greece takes odd-man-out position on Libya, terrorism

ATHENS, Greece (AP) — Greece once again has stepped out of line with its Western allies, refusing to impose diplomatic sanctions against Libya for sponsoring terrorism on grounds that no proof exists.

Premier Andreas Papandreou claims that reprisals against terrorism such as the U.S. air strike on Libya could escalate into warfare.

"We've entered a new and highly dangerous phase where terrorism is being transformed into a weapon of conflict between states," the 67-year-old premier told Parliament last week.

He said Greece could not apply sanctions against Libyan diplomats because "not one shred of proof of the guilt of specific countries in terrorist activities" has been given to the 12 Common Market members.

Papandreou's remarks are reminiscent of the anti-Western outbursts that marked his first three years in office beginning in 1981, and gave Greece a reputation as NATO's odd-man-out.

Opposition Conservative Party politicians charge that Papandreou's refusal to condemn Libya is tainted by his personal friendship with Libyan leader

Col. Moammar Khadafy.

But following Libya's missile attack against a U.S. Coast Guard installation on the small Italian island of Lampedusa, there were fears Khadafy could next target the Greek island of Crete, 120 miles from Libya.

Greece has moved F-4 air force jetfighters to Crete, ringed a Greek airfield on the island's southern coast with tanks and sent three destroyers to patrol offshore.

A U.S. Air Force surveillance station and a U.S. 6th Fleet anchorage and supply facility are located on Crete.

The current U.S.-Greek defense agreement stipulates that military bases in Greece cannot be used to launch an attack against countries friendly with Greece, a clear reference to Libya.

Meanwhile, Papandreou has improved relations with the United States during the last 10 months as Greece's economic problems mounted. He no longer threatens to close American military bases.

Trustees will study soccer group request

A request by the Pampa Soccer Association will be considered when the Pampa Independent School Board meets in a work session at 5 p.m. Tuesday.

The session, in which items are discussed but no action can be taken, will be the first of its kind for the board since new board president, Dr. Robert Lyle, took over earlier this month and said he would like to see the board hold a work session every month.

The soccer association requested in March that soccer be made a school sport. The board agreed to look into the possibility, with several board members expressing support for the idea.

In other business, the board plans to discuss:

- weather make-up days for the 1986-87 school calendar, currently set for March 9, the first day of spring break, and April 17, a teacher in-service day.

- a district policy that currently limits students to seven extra-curricular activity-related absences in any one-semester course. Exceptions to the policy had to be made this year to allow the spring sports teams to compete in post-district play.

- a separate policy regarding student travel to extracurricular activities.

- tuition for 1986 summer school.

- a payment procedure for due bills and invoices.

- reports from the long-range planning, budget, policy and facilities committees.

- 1985-86 class counts.

New traffic lights installed

By BOB HART
 Pampa City Manager

The new signal lights have been installed at the intersection of Kentucky and Hobart streets; however, the signals are in a pre-timed mode at this time.

We are unable to complete the signal detectors on the west side until Kentucky has been widened to accommodate the left turn lane.

This widening project is our number one priority on the street repair projects. We are hoping to start on this project today or early this week.

We want to apologize for any inconvenience and also to caution the drivers in this area when the street project is underway.

The rehabilitation of City Hall will start this week as well. A number of offices will be moved temporarily for repairs and to accommodate the installation of the elevator.

If you have business in City Hall, you may find that some of the offices will have been moved to various places within the building. The top floor will be closed initially.

The project is designed to make the building weather-tight, conduct extensive repairs to the electrical and plumbing systems and also make the building accessible for the handicapped through the installation of ramps and an elevator.

Additionally, work areas in most of the building will be improved.

Peres: path being reopened to negotiate peace with Jordan

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Prime Minister Shimon Peres says Israel and Jordan have opened a channel of communication through quiet diplomacy that could lead to a renewal of the stalled peace process.

Jordan's King Hussein said in mid-February he could not continue preliminary contacts with Israel after he broke his year-old agreement with the Palestine Liberation Organization on a joint negotiating strategy.

But Peres said there were new possibilities for negotiations with Jordan after Hussein's break with PLO chief Yasser Arafat, whom Peres called "the greatest obstacle to peace." Peres spoke Sunday in an interview with Israel Television.

"What is visible is a clear and unequivocal rift between King Hussein and Arafat, which everyone sees. This is the first time that an important Arab leader has said Arafat is impossible, he is not a partner," he said.

Peres said that despite the stalemate brought on by the break between Hussein and Arafat, a line of communication had opened between Israel and Jordan.

"At this stage it is of quiet diplomacy, at this stage it is more of understanding than of agreement — but here too, very interesting things have happened," Peres said.

He did not elaborate about what contacts were taking place. But the daily Hadashot newspaper reported on Friday that Peres met with King Hussein of Jordan in person during a two-day visit to France last week.

U.S. Assistant Secretary of State Richard Murphy also shuttled between Jerusalem and Arab capitals earlier this month to try to revive peace efforts.

Peres has agreed to an international forum which would be the overall framework for peace negotiations, but has remained vague about the precise role of the conference. He has indicated that the real bargaining must be done between Israel and a joint Jordanian-Palestinian delegation that may not include the PLO.

Jordan broke the partnership with the PLO because it refused to accept United Nations resolutions that recognize Israel's existence. However, Jordan recognizes the PLO as the representative of the Palestinians and has said it will not negotiate any separate agreement with Israel.

While the peace process is held up and the PLO is suffering from internal conflicts, Peres is working on a plan to provide the 1.3 million Palestinians living in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip more autonomy and a higher standard of living.

Israel started by appointing, with Jordanian agreement, a Palestinian mayor in Nablus in place of the army officers running nearly all the West Bank towns. Mayor Zaafer Al Masri, the uncle of Jordan's foreign minister, was assassinated March 2, and radical PLO groups claimed responsibility. Other candidates for mayoral posts immediately pulled out.

Foreign tourists also have become targets for gunmen.

A 28-year-old British tourist was shot and killed Sunday near a Christian holy site. He was the third tourist shot in six weeks in predominantly Arab east Jerusalem. The two other victims survived.

Hance under fire for ad; White sends teacher mailing

HOUSTON (AP)— Campaign officials for GOP gubernatorial hopeful Kent Hance say they have no intention of pulling a commercial about illegal aliens which shows Hispanic schoolchildren in the background, despite protests from Mexican-Americans.

"Kent Hance is fighting something that is illegal. We are trying to protect jobs in the United States," a prepared statement by Hance's campaign said Sunday. "Studies show that illegal aliens take more jobs from minorities than from any other group."

The statement, issued in response to a protest rally Sunday in Houston, also noted that Hance opposes amnesty for illegal aliens.

Meanwhile, other candidates for governor spent the day resting or campaigning with the primary election just six days away.

In Dallas, Gov. Mark White, a Democrat, campaigned at black churches, while Republican U.S. Rep. Tom Loeffler campaigned in McAllen where he claimed White "hasn't expanded economic opportunity in our state."

Hance and the other Republican in the race, former Gov. Bill Clements, spent Sunday resting.

White has mounted a counter-attack to the criticism he has received from teachers over his support of teacher competency testing and other education reform measures.

The governor has sent almost 200,000 teachers a special mailing defending his education reforms, signed into law two years ago.

Meanwhile, in Houston Sunday, Hance faced criticism of his own, though he was not there in person. About 150 people held a protest rally with some carrying signs saying, "Deport Kent Hance" and chanting, "Give us a chance, deport Kent Hance."

"We are here to specifically respond to the racist ads gubernatorial candidate Kent Hance has been spouting on TV," said Carlos Spector-Calderon, spokesman for the League of United Latin-American Citizens.

"He specifically has some ads equating Mexican-Americans as illegal aliens by having pictures of Mexican-American children and saying that the problem in this state is the presence of illegal aliens," Calderon said.

Calderon said the ads inflame a prejudice that already exists in the state and targets the Hispanic community as the scapegoat for the state's problems.

Calderon said he has challenged Hance to a public debate prior to the Saturday primary because "the facts that he relies on are drawn from the twilight zone."

"Hance is desperately looking for an issue and he's definitely not going to find it in the Hispanic community," he said.

Calderon not only wants Hance to withdraw the commercial but also his name from the ballot.

But Byron Nelson, a spokesman for Hance's campaign in Austin, said there are no plans to pull the commercial, which started airing April 22. The commercial says the illegal alien problem is driving taxes up, contributing to crime, crowding schools and hurting the economy.

Nelson pointed out that apprehension of illegal aliens crossing the Mexican border is up 41 percent from last year.

We are the stress seekers

Newspaper people are stress seekers. Until last week I had never really considered this odd conclusion reached by Robert L. Jones, a Houston psychologist and management consultant who works extensively with newspapers, until I read an article on "Burnout in the Newsroom" in the Washington Journalism Review.

I had realized, of course, that those of us who work in the editorial departments of newspapers were different from the remainder of the human race, but I had never given much thought as to why we were different.

The article stated that Jones said, "reporters and editors complain a lot about their job pressures — maybe because, unconsciously, they like living under the sword." The psychologist was quoted, "Newspaper people as a group exhibit quite high stress levels. ... But they're also stress seekers. They use it as a reinforcer. For many of these people, it'd really be more stressful to be in a nice, quiet job — they actually enjoy having to do things well under deadline."

For me, that seems to be a fairly accurate summation. I can think of nothing more boring than working on an assembly line in a factory, doing the same thing day after day. Working in a newspaper newsroom is different, there is always something new going on and you never know when you arrive at work each day what you will be involved in before you go home.

Of course, there are those crazy hours involved in being a reporter or editor. The job means going to work early in the morning, or working late at night covering meetings. It means that often you will be called out of a warm bed in the middle of the night to cover a fire or major accident.

It also means working on most holidays since most newspapers publish every holiday, except for Christmas. It can mean working all or most of election night compiling the results and writing all of the stories about who won or lost their bids for election to some city, county, school, state or national post.

But, it also means the satisfaction of having met the challenge when all of the stories are in type and the press run starts on time. That press must start on time, so the papers can be delivered to all of the customers at the usual time and this causes the biggest pressure on the newsroom.

Sometimes the clock seems to run faster as the time approaches to complete all of the pages for the paper. I have often felt there was no way to complete the task as the minute hand raced around the clock's face.

According to the article in the Washington Journalism Review journalists seem prone to certain kinds of mental problems linked to stress depression. Those cited in the article were: "depression, self-destructiveness, marital problems, difficulty in switching from the objective deadpan of the newsroom to the intimacy of personal life."

It noted, "One expert even blames stress for that bane of the writing craft, hackneyed phrases." It seems that only recently has anyone begun to seriously consider the problem of what has been termed "burnout." It has always been a fact that journalists have been plagued by early deaths, occasional suicides, alcoholism and drug abuse. The article noted, "stress-related illness among both reports and editors is far more widespread than these extremes would indicate, therapists say."

The article noted that a ruling in February 1985 by the Rhode Island Supreme Court, upholding a workers' compensation board ruling, in the October, 1978, death of Edward Mulcahey, 60-year-old sports editor of the Pawtucket Evening Times, was the result of "repeated episodes of meeting a deadline." A blood vessel burst in his brain and the court ruled a blood-pressure problem was aggravated by the deadline pressure.

According to the article, this was the first legal link between a newspaper's job pressures and physical illness. It has resulted in the management of many newspapers beginning to take a serious look at the problems resulting from stress in newsrooms.

"The motives behind publishers' new push to combat stress are not entirely altruistic," the article stated, adding, "some managers view the Pawtucket case as a harbinger of other stress-related workers' compensation complaints in the news business."

I personally know of the problems placed on family life by being a journalist. How can you explain to your wife that you cannot eat that beautiful roast she spent all morning fixing because it reminds you of the charred remains of a human body you saw pulled from burned truck that same morning and that you still have the smell of burned flesh in your nostrils.

Or, how do your children react when you have to cover a meeting during the evening instead of going with them to a school play they are in or to a Scout activity?

Also, how about the times you couldn't go on a family trip or outing because you had to work that weekend or when you couldn't stay up late to enjoy a movie on television with the family because you had to get up at 4:30 or 5 a.m. to go to work?

Those of us who earn our living by keeping track of the events in our town, area, state, nation and the world have all seen the effects of stress on our colleagues — but we still keep at it because of the challenge. There is an excitement to the job and always there is the satisfaction of knowing the job was completed on time.

It will always remain in the back of my mind that a close friend of mine who worked on the Toledo Blade while I was laboring at The Lima News, a Freedom newspaper in Ohio, accomplished something not many journalists manage to do.

One afternoon the friend, Chet Swegan, busily typed something at his typewriter and placed the copy in the basket on the copy desk before going home in the middle of the afternoon.

Less than an hour later, his fellow workers learned he had died of a heart attack shortly after arriving home. When they learned of his death, they went to the copy desk to see what the last story he had written was about.

Chet, apparently ill, had taken time to write his own obituary, with only the time an place of services missing, before leaving the office for the last time.

To me, he was a journalist — not leaving work for someone else to do!

Carson commissioner candidates want to help work on county financial plight

Carson County faces a double-edged swipe at its tax base from decreasing oil prices and independent "white oil" production halted by litigation and regulation.

Two White Deer Democratic candidates for the Precinct Four seat on the Carson County Commissioners Court, incumbent Pleasant Meadows and challenger Lee Lockridge, want to see what they can do about it.

Precinct Four covers the northeast part of the county and encompasses Skellytown and White Deer. Both candidates say they believe they can fairly represent both towns without slighting the people in the rural areas. Both men cite their experience in business and on the White Deer City Council as qualifications for the county commission seat.

Meadows is seeking a second term on the commission and says he enjoys serving the people.

Still, he admits that the shutdown of independent white oil activity, which was especially heavy in the White Deer area, could force commissioners to squeeze their budget.

"It's going to be a trying time for the schools and the counties," he says. "87 percent of our oil tax base comes from white oil activity. It will have its worst effect in this county."

"It's hard to bring up a budget up when you have a big decline in activity," he adds. "And it's hard to set budget when the federal and state government is kicking things back on the counties. With the cutting of Revenue Sharing, we may have to cut back on some of the services."

One of the burdens the state government is handing counties is indigent health care, for which counties must set aside 10 percent of their general funds.

"Its going to be hard on smaller counties," he says. "But we have to set it in reserve if we need it, and hopefully we won't."

Meadows' goal is to provide better roads and higher living standards for the people in the county. And he hopes to do it without raising the county's 19-cent tax rate.

Lockridge, a general contractor, sees the county commission as a "public service job," and one that he has wanted for several years. He sees his 20 years in business as one of his main qualifications. His jobs have included road and dirt work and laying pipeline and telephone cables.

"With this experience I feel I can use county money efficiently," he says.

He adds that with the white oil crunch and the decreasing oil prices, "we're going to have to spend every dollar as wisely as possible."

"I don't know how much revenue we'll lose but it's going to be quite a bit," he says. "I don't foresee any tax increase. I'm sure we'll need to cut expenses where we can, but I don't think we'll cut services."

Lockridge says he is not familiar with the indigent health care issue.

"Every county is going to have to pay its fair share of the bills," he says. "I don't think Northwest Texas Hospital and other hospitals can keep on without our help. But we're fortunate that we have very few indigent people. South and east Texas have a far bigger problem."

Black tar heroin is moving into Texas

EL PASO, Texas (AP)— Federal drug officials say Mexican black tar heroin, many times stronger than its white or brown counterparts and potentially deadly in small doses, is moving into Texas through this West Texas city.

Phil Jordan, regional director of the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration in Dallas, said El Paso is a "significant transit city" for black tar heroin.

El Paso Police Department Narcotics Division figures show that during the first three months of 1986, agents confiscated 279 grams of Mexican black tar heroin from 39 people arrested on heroin charges.

In 1985, narcotics officers confiscated 1,447 grams of black tar from 101 people arrested. In 1984, 2,157 grams of black tar were confiscated from 92 suspects.

Trafficers can make big profits smuggling small amounts of the black tar because of its purity, said Jordan.

"One ounce of 90 percent pure black tar can sell for $4,000 to $9,000 — wholesale," he told the El Paso Times.

A report issued last month by the Drug Enforcement Administration said a milligram of black tar may sell on the streets for as little as 25 cents, compared with the $2.32 average price nationwide for more traditional forms of heroin.

Black tar heroin has been discovered in 27 states. In 1983, it was reported only in Arizona, California, Oregon and Washington.

Jury selection resumes in drifter's death

KERRVILLE, Texas (AP)— A state district court jury will consider prosecution evidence against a Hill County family and a hitchhiker accused of torturing to death a drifter who had been forced to work on a ranch.

District Attorney Ron Sutton said the jury selection process probably will take a week to complete. It began with the selection of an initial panel on March 24.

Jury selection resumes today in the state's organized crime case against Walter Wesley Ellebracht Sr., his son Walter Wesley Ellebracht Jr., and the younger Ellebracht's wife, Joyce.

Prosecutors accuse the trio, along with hitchhiker Carlton Robert Caldwell, of the March 1984 death of drifter Anthony Warren Bates.

Bates was one of several hitchhikers who went to the Ellebrachts' sprawling Hill Country ranch after he was promised work, and then was forced to stay, prosecutors allege. The state contends Bates was tortured to death with an electric cattle prod and his body burned.

EVER STRIVING FOR TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Government can't run like business

The president's Blue Ribbon Commission on Defense Management is the latest institution to fall for the "if only government bureaucrats would act more like businessmen we'd have a lean, mean fighting machine of a government" fallacy. The fallacy is so widespread, particularly among Republican politicians seeking easy answers or currying favor with business supporters, that it deserves discussion.

From all the proposals we hear to "run government like a business," you might think that there was some sort of "efficiency gene" possessed by businessmen but somehow lacking in bureaucrats.

Contrary evidence never seems to dim the eternal hope of those who believe that with a little common sense and hardnosed business acumen, government can be run like a business and produce joy in the souls of efficiency experts everywhere.

The hard truth is that business is generally more efficient than government because a business firm must break even or make a profit to survive, and the only way it can do so in a reasonably open marketplace is to get people who have a choice in the matter to pay for its products or services. As anybody who has worked in a large business firm can tell you, many firms tolerate a remarkable amount of inefficiency, but sooner or later they run up against a bottom line. Though plenty of mistakes are made in businesses, those who can contribute to improved efficiency are tolerated and sometimes even rewarded.

A government, on the other hand, is defined by political scientists as the institution with a legal monopoly on the use of force. It doesn't require willing buyers of its products or services. While democratic processes and checks and balances may impose some rough limitations on its activities, they seldom contribute to efficiency.

A government agency doesn't have the same kind of bottom line related to consumer satisfaction that a business has. It may have to please a congressional committee, but the incentives involved in that relationship hardly ever militate toward efficiency. More often, wastefulness and profligacy that would horrify a businessman turn out to be politically efficient — i.e., they buy votes.

Most of the horrors of government bureaucracy — empire building, turf protection, power seeking, multiplying subordinates, meaningless meetings, avoiding decisions and responsibility — can be observed to some degree in business organizations large and small. The way businesses get a modicum of efficiency from the process is not through superior talent or organizing ability, but by having to face the necessity, sooner or later, to make a profit or go out of business.

The only way to get a government agency to act like a business is to convert it to a real business, by requiring it to sell its goods and services in the marketplace to consumers who have a real choice about whether to buy them or not. Any proposal that falls short of that is a fantasy and a pipedream.

Remedy without a problem

In its recurring impulse to do something, anything, about the illegal entry of foreigners into the United States, Congress is preparing to consider once more an overhaul of the nation's immigration laws. The proposal is a remedy in search of a problem.

The alleged problem is a flood of illegal immigrants that threatens to overwhelm something — our public resources, our political heritage, our capacity to absorb newcomers. The idea is nonsense. Most of the alarming numbers tossed around are pure guesses, aimed at inflaming public opinion.

Nor is it a new phenomenon for large numbers of foreigners to come to this country. Hoover Institution scholar Annelise Anderson, who served on the attorney general's task force on immigration and refugee policy, notes that even granting the inflated estimates of illegal immigrants, the number is "well under 4 percent of the population" — "far lower than for long periods in our history."

The supposed dangers are equally dubious. In the late 19th and early 20th century, the nation accepted a tide of foreigners that was proportionately larger than the one now being decry — and not only survived but flourished. Given that the U.S. is far richer now than it was then, it should have no trouble coping with the transient problems presented by a continuing influx of newcomers. But those members of Congress who favor a crackdown don't let facts get in their way. The bill to be considered by the House Judiciary Committee, approved last year by the Senate, tries to dam the flow of foreigners mainly by denying them jobs. For the first time, anyone knowingly employing an illegal immigrant would be subject to federal penalties.

Employers would be expected to require any suspect applicants to produce proof of legal status: birth certificate, driver's license, U.S. passport. Those guilty of a "pattern and practice" of hiring illegal workers could go to jail for six months.

This new requirement will be burdensome to both employers, who will be required to police the immigration laws under threat of imprisonment, and to foreign-looking legal workers, who will be under particular suspicion from companies eager to avoid unnecessary risks.

But it probably won't work. The weak link in the chain is the required documentation. Nothing is easier than to produce fraudulent driver's licenses, birth certificates or passports, and enactment of this law would merely stimulate greater supplies to meet expected demand.

Experience elsewhere provides no grounds for optimism. The General Accounting Office studied employer sanctions in 20 countries and found none of them effective. Wayne Cornelius, a professor at the University of California at San Diego and one of the nation's leading experts on immigration, says "there is not a single documented case of successfully using employer sanctions laws to reduce the population of illegal immigrants anywhere in the world."

Only one part of the bill makes sense — a general amnesty for illegal foreigners who have been here for at least six years. However, this too is flawed, since proving long-term residence won't be any harder than "proving" legal status. A few forged documents will do. An amnesty should be enacted, but it ought to apply to all illegal foreigners, except those posing some genuine danger.

It also should be coupled with a strict policy of denying welfare benefits to newcomers for their first few years. Americans have every reason to resist inviting foreigners to become public charges, but those who are willing to earn their own way ought to be welcome. And it should coincide with a new emphasis on integrating foreigners into American life — by emphasizing the need for a common language, English.

With those dangers removed, we would have nothing to fear from immigration. Then we could get on with the only plausible solution to the "problem" of illegal immigration — not futile punitive measures, but a realistic expansion of legal immigration.

Shortage of secretaries

An aspiring author by the name of Karen Kenyon once took a secretarial job between books. She told of her experiences in a Newsweek opinion piece: "I was asked one day to make some Xerox invitations to a party, then told I could keep one. (Not exactly a cordial invitation, I thought.)"

Yet she was pleased when asked later if she planned to attend. She said yes and was informed, "Well then, would you pick up the pizza?"

She was equally dismayed when colleagues expressed gratitude to the company because "they really treat us like human beings here."

What is so ironic in all this is that everyone knows how indispensable secretaries are. Furthermore, a recent Kelly Services poll shows that 93 percent of secretaries like their jobs and 54 percent intend to stay in the profession. Nowadays, secretaries are often expected to understand computers, accounting and administration and still "do" dictation, typing and filing. Much of their work, in the new electronic office, is done on word processors. Because they handle most of the telephone calls, secretaries are the chief link between people both inside and outside the company.

Going for coffee may be a dead issue, but raises, respect and recognition for their expanding role are still being sought by the nation's 4 million secretaries. Aye — there's the rub. Their average annual salary, Census Bureau figures reveal, is $14,000, slightly above janitors and far below plumbers. Even the average salary for a top executive secretary is $17,000, according to Professional Secretaries International, a support group with 42,000 members.

"Yet, how many times have you heard a boss refer to his/her secretary by saying, 'She knows more about it than I do,' or 'When I'm away, the office runs like clockwork'? If that's the case, why is the executive making $75,000 and the secretary $15,000?"

Asking this question is Mary Bridget Carroll, a Greenwich, Conn., stockbroker. A former secretary, she used her experience to write the book "Overworked and Underpaid." She told me she thinks it is crucial for secretaries to develop greater self-respect for themselves and their jobs.

"Demand to be part of the team" is her advice. She also feels secretaries need the support of other women: their female bosses and those working for women's causes.

Another staunch secretarial ally is Carol Kleiman, associate financial editor and "Women at Work" columnist for the Chicago Tribune. In a recent Ms. Magazine article, she told of secretaries who call her to complain about their jobs.

One woman, an executive secretary for 21 years, told how she drew up a list of her increased responsibilities and achievements and presented them to her boss with a request for a new title and higher salary. His reply: "If it weren't for the damn women's movement, you wouldn't be causing all this trouble."

To combat such negative reactions, Ms. Kleiman urges secretaries to form support groups and attend career-development seminars. Failing that, it seems to me each secretary should evaluate her own situation and change jobs until she finds a boss who appreciates her expertise.

Employers should be aware that pay equity concerns and stress and other health issues related to office automation have already fueled successful union organizing drives among secretarial and clerical workers.

It is interesting to note that 80,000 secretarial jobs go begging every year and that by 1990, 500,000 new secretarial jobs will be created. If employers want those positions filled, they will have to be ready to upgrade pay and benefits.

Roses just won't do it anymore.

Michael Deaver is getting a bum rap

By William A. Rusher

I have known Mike Deaver casually ever since he and Ed Meese were the Gold Dust Twins on Gov. Ronald Reagan's staff in Sacramento nearly 20 years ago. Temperamentally I always felt somewhat closer to Meese, who wore his conservative principles on his sleeve. (This was in the days before he switched to Adam Smith neckties.) Deaver was more noncommittal on ideological issues, at least when I was around. But nobody who knew Deaver ever doubted his rock-solid loyalty to Ronald and Nancy Reagan — or doubted that it was reciprocated.

When Deaver announced early in 1985 that he would be stepping down as White House deputy chief of staff to go into business for himself as a public affairs consultant in Washington, reaction was divided. There were those who simply envied the millions they expected he would make. Others remarked, in guttural tones, that they could hardly wait for him to get out on the ice, away from that cozy White House.

Recent events make it appear that both sets of prophets were right. As an entrepreneur, Deaver has done very well indeed, signing up such prestigious clients as CBS and the government of Canada for fees that certainly sound astronomical to the average American. It was, however, largely Deaver's very success in his new career that recently landed him on the cover of Time as an allegedly outsized example of that dubious genre, the Washington "influence peddler." Now all sorts of people are taking up the cry, and it's high time someone rose to say that Deaver is getting a bum rap.

There are, of course, laws that specify when and how former public officials may use, for their private gain, the expertise and personal contacts they acquired while in government. But nobody seriously accuses Deaver of violating those laws. Rather, the complaint seems to be that his wealthy clients are paying him large sums because they believe that, if Deaver makes a request to a public official on their behalf, it is likely to get more favorable consideration than if one of their own officers made it.

Now, there never has been and never will be a time when human beings will not take a phone call more promptly, or give a request more personal attention, if it comes from someone of consequence, or at least prominence. A phone call from the president of the United States focuses the mind wonderfully. So, in only lesser degree, does one from Walter Cronkite or Jane Fonda — or, to come to the point, from Deaver.

Metaphorically, Washington is a jungle crisscrossed by twisting paths and full of quicksand and predatory animals. An outsider with a legitimate project involving Washington is well advised to consult with someone familiar with the capital's intricacies — just as a father whose child needs an operation will consult a surgeon. If it is a one-shot project and the outsider is an American citizen, he can often arrange for his congressman or senator to lead him through the bureaucratic thicket. But a foreign power, or an American businessman or corporation with a continuing need for advice on how to deal with the U.S. government, is almost compelled to hire a Washington expert. To assume, however, that such an expert is paid to influence the actual decision-making processes is like assuming that an ocean liner hires a harbor pilot.

American firms "harden" facilities against terrorism

Growing corporate concern about terrorism is proving profitable for security firms, which help clients defend themselves and advise them to keep a low profile overseas.

One company, for example, advises its corporate clients to avoid stretch limos.

"We're seeing a steady rise of multinational companies tooling up to protect themselves," said David Dickinson, vice president of Delta Scientific Corp., a Burbank, Calif.-based company which makes road barriers to defend against suicide bombers.

As concern about international terrorism grows, U.S. firms are taking a closer look at their security needs. While most focus on overseas operations, many corporations also are taking steps to "harden" facilities and protect key personnel in this country.

"Any security director, any management official will tell you budgets have increased considerably," said Myron Weinstein, chairman of the terrorism activities committee for the American Society of Industrial Security.

"When you have a man like Colonel Khadafy saying he's going to bring war to the streets of America, it's got to get the attention of upper management," he said.

Few corporations are willing to talk about their security programs. "You tell people what your recipe is and they'll bake your cake for you," said a security officer for a major oil company. An official with a computer manufacturer said, "Once you talk about your security procedures they are no longer secure."

But security consultants and equipment manufacturers talk of increased planning and accelerated spending for security among the Fortune 500.

"Those kinds of businesses are particularly representative of American capitalism. They are considered more vulnerable than a local manufacturing distributor," said Kerry Lydon, editor of Security World Magazine.

Weinstein said multinational companies have been tightening overseas security for the past several years. Following the lead of U.S. embassies, companies have installed new walls and barriers around their plants and have instituted auto and package searches.

"The U.S. government has spent several billion dollars to protect its installations," said Weinstein. "It makes them more inaccessible and safer, and makes the business entities softer and more desirable targets."

These steps now are being duplicated in this country, said Joe Barry, a security consultant and vice president with Hirsch Electronics Corp., a California-based manufacturer of high-tech locks and access controls.

"The last two years it's been the overseas facilities. Now we see that the operations in the continental U.S. are being looked at," he said.

Companies have been schooling executives on ways to avoid danger. Coordinating information from the State Department and overseas consulting firms, companies are advising top executives which air routes to avoid and what countries require extra caution.

Mexican police are searching for clues in bombing attempt

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Mexican police who deactivated a powerful homemade bomb outside the U.S. Embassy here say they are looking for those responsible for leaving it in a car parked near the downtown diplomatic mission.

Embassy press attache Vincent Hovanec said the device was deactivated Saturday afternoon and is the first time a bomb has been found near the embassy, although it has received numerous bomb threats in the past month.

Mexico City Police spokesman Alejandro Ortiz said Sunday authorities still have not determined who left the bomb in the truck of a small, blue car parked on a side street between the embassy and the fashionable Maria Isabel Sheraton Hotel.

The car was parked about 25 yards from the embassy and if it had exploded probably would have caused damage to one side of the building and the rear of the embassy.

Hovanec said there are several offices on the five floors on that side of the building, but added the offices of U.S. Ambassador John Gavin are located elsewhere in complex.

Ortiz confirmed reports published by La Jornada newspaper that the bomb contained a gelatin explosive, was about two feet in diameter and weighed between 20-30 pounds (10-15 kilos). The bomb was found in the car truck wired to a battery.

"Effectively, these reports are true," he said, adding the Federal Judicial Police also are investigating. There were no answer Sunday at the press office of the Federal Attorney General's Office, which oversees the judicial police.

La Jornada said a caller, claiming to represent a group calling itself the Simon Bolivar

International Command, telephoned the newsroom Saturday afternoon to report a bomb was set to explode in 50 minutes and asked the newspaper to advise workers remodeling a section of the hotel to leave the area immediately.

The newspaper Excelsior reported that some city newspapers received calls from a group claiming two names — the Command of the Bolivar Army and the Simon Bolivar International Front. The newspaper reported the caller took responsibility for the bomb threat and said it was in protest to U.S. aggression against Libya and U.S. interference in Nicaragua.

La Jornada said it notified the police bomb squad, known as Zorros or foxes, who found the device about 5:30 p.m. (7:30 p.m. EDT), deactivated it and carried it away in a specially-built bomb squad truck.

The embassy was closed at the time, with only security personnel and maintenance employees in the building, Hovanec said. Police made a 30-minute search of the embassy and reported "all is well."

Asked about increasing security at the embassy, Hovanec said, "We would hope the present security will be sufficient and the Mexican authorities will do what is necessary."

He said Mexican police are responsible for exterior security while security within the embassy is supervised by U.S. Marines.

"We have been working on interior security for some time, but right now, we feel we have done what is needed for the inside. The main problem has been on the outside," the press attache said.

The embassy, located on the main Paseo de la Reforma, is surrounded by a high metal fence and last year concrete barriers were installed around it as part of upgrade of security for embassies and consulate worldwide.

Tighter security measures implemented earlier this month resulted in the embassy closing its office for issuing tourist visas to Mexicans wanting to go to the United States.

Hovanec said that move was made as a direct result of heightened tensions between the United States and Libya.

"We have been receiving bomb threats...about a dozen bomb threats since the Gulf of Sidra," he said, referring to the March 24 crossing by U.S. Navy ships into the gulf and Libya's self-proclaimed "life of death." He declined to give specific figures.

"Most of the bomb threats, however, have been since the attack," he said Friday. "All have been telephone threats and in each case nothing was found after a complete search."

He said during the first week after the Navy crossed into the Gulf of Sidra, the embassy was evacuated five times as a precautionary measure whenever a bomb threat was received.

Hovanec said that, as usual at this time of the year, the embassy had been handling an average of about 1,000 non-immigrant visa requests each day, resulting in long lines of Mexicans waiting outside the fence and slowing moving inside the complex. Such a visa allows a Mexican to go the United States for a vacation or business travel.

The non-immigrant visas will continue to be issued at the nine U.S. consulates throughout Mexico. The embassy will continue handling immigrant visa requests for those wanting to live or work in the United States. Hovanec said the embassy handles about 75-100 such requests daily.

Candidate Waldheim convinced Nazi scandal will blow over

LEIBNITZ, Austria (AP) — In market squares and town halls, crowds clap and cheer when Kurt Waldheim says allegations that he hid a Nazi past are lies, calculated to hurt his chances in Austria's presidential election May 4.

The former United Nations secretary-general has made the accusations the centerpiece of his campaign, drawing enthusiastic applause with claims he is the victim of a witch hunt by opponents at home and abroad.

Waldheim claims he is not worried by suggestions of some Israeli parliamentarians and U.S. congressmen that he should be barred from Israel and the United States if he becomes president, a largely ceremonial post in Austria.

"It is completely ridiculous to say today that I will be rejected tomorrow abroad," Waldheim told The Associated Press while he campaigned in Styria province. "As a matter of fact, I continue to enjoy a great degree of respect abroad. No government in the world has spoken up in criticism to now."

The World Jewish Congress claims Waldheim has covered up a past that included membership in Nazi suborganizations, and in an army unit implicated in the deaths of 43,000 Greek Jews and atrocities against thousands of Yugoslav partisans.

While acknowledging recently that he erred in not detailing his past until forced to, Waldheim denies involvement in war crimes and with Nazi groups.

All Austrian opinion polls put Waldheim ahead of Kurt Steyrer, the former Socialist minister of health and his main rival.

The controversy has split Austrian public opinion into vociferous pro and con factions and resulted in a flood of crank mail to Jewish groups. An unprecedented public statement by President Rudolf Kirchschlaeger has not seemed to clear the air.

After examining U.N. documents on Waldheim's wartime activities, Kirchschlaeger said in a televised address April 22 that Waldheim must have known of atrocities against partisans. But he maintained the documents provided by the World Jewish Congress do not support the claim that Waldheim was aware of the deportation of Greek Jews to death camps.

Waldheim contends the Kirchschlaeger comments exonerate him, and his conservative People's Party agrees. Socialist opponents say the main issue, why Waldheim covered up his past, remains unanswered.

At Leibnitz, a town of 6,500 three miles north of the border, about 400 people huddled under umbrellas in a heavy rain for hours to welcome Waldheim.

Smiling broadly, he approached arm-in-arm with his wife Elizabeth, led by a marching band and white-shirted youths carrying Austrian red-white-red flags.

To loud and prolonged applause, Waldheim said, "I basically did nothing else than what 100,000 other Austrians did during this (war) time. I was a respectable soldier."

Big test for LaRouche's candidates coming up in four state primaries

WASHINGTON (AP) — Primaries in the next eight days in Texas, Indiana, Ohio and North Carolina will offer the first gauge of whether victories by disciples of political extremist Lyndon LaRouche in Illinois six weeks ago were a fluke or a forecast.

Democratic Party leaders in these four states dismiss the LaRouche candidates, who are running for elected offices ranging from city governments to U.S. senator.

"I believe Illinois was the beginning of the end for them," Ohio Democratic Party Chairman James Ruvoilo said.

But Illinois Democrats also scoffed at LaRouche candidates — until March 18, when backers of the bizarre LaRouche philosophy won nomination for lieutenant governor and secretary of state.

Since then, Democrats have tried to pinpoint LaRouche candidates nationwide and educate voters about their unorthodox views. A preliminary Democratic National Committee survey showed 140 LaRouche candidates in 21 states compared with LaRouche claims of more than 800 nationwide.

"We certainly don't want to see this fluke that occurred in Illinois occur in another state," DNC spokesman Terry Michael said. "We think the spotlight that's been placed on these people is probably going to do the job in defeating them. I think we'd be surprised if in any race of any visibility, they won again."

LaRouche spokeswoman Nereida Cordero-Thompson said Illinois was not an exception.

"In terms of making any predictions, we do not do that," she said in an interview last week. "In all the states (with upcoming primaries), LaRouche Democrats have done very well in previous races and we expect that to be the case again unless there's another vote fraud that takes place."

Even as voters prepare to cast their primary ballots in Texas on Saturday and in Ohio, Indiana and North Carolina the following Tuesday, LaRouche supporters have won four congressional nominations in Ohio and Texas by default. No other Democrats filed for the races.

The DNC's Michael said LaRouche candidates in past elections have attracted only marginal support.

"I think we're concerned that voters be appropriately educated to the presence on the ballot of people who are LaRouche candidates. To know them is to reject them," he said.

But Ms. Cordero-Thompson said LaRouche candidates have polled support from all voting segments in earlier elections. "It wasn't a phenomenon that was a fluke. It was across-the-board support," she said.

LaRouche, a political extremist who has run for president three times and is expected to try again in 1988, espouses bizarre views involving global conspiracies.

Recuperating police chief-elect hopes to attend own swearing-in

CHILDRESS, Texas (AP) — Wayne Abbott missed his own election day because he opted instead to become a hero, rescuing a jail inmate from a fire.

Instead of celebrating his victory as new police chief, the 25-year-old sergeant wound up spending his time in a hospital bed where he remained early today, recuperating from smoke inhalation.

But Abbott insists "there was no hero business involved" and he just hopes to be out of the hospital in time for his swearing-in today as police chief.

In an interview from his hospital bed, Abbott said Sunday night he was feeling better, but weak.

"But we have high hopes that maybe I'll get to go home (Monday)," he said.

Abbott defeated incumbent Bob Seagroves in this Panhandle community Saturday in a hot election, 630 to 502.

But things were even hotter on Friday when a fire was discovered in the jail where Abbott had just booked a 31-year-old man on misdemeanor assault.

FORM AND SPIRIT

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Walker Art Center will premiere the exhibition "Tokyo: Form and Spirit" from April 20 through July 20.

The exhibition will be the centerpiece of a three-month festival of Japanese culture and the arts.

The show illustrates the inventiveness of Japanese design from the period 1603-1868, when Tokyo was named Edo, to the present.

Dear Abby

'Real' Americans look like just about anyone

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1986 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: Regarding "100 Percent American," the American of Oriental descent who complained that within five minutes of being introduced to a Caucasian, he was asked, "What are you?": You replied that it was rude to ask personal questions at any time, but because the average Caucasian doesn't know a Chinese from a Japanese, Cambodian, Vietnamese, Korean or a Thai, the question seemed reasonable — but it was still rude.

Rude? I disagree. Inquiries about a person's roots are not necessarily rude. It shows a sincere interest in their heritage.

The Orient is a rich and diverse geography. The face of an Oriental reveals his heritage. His looks tell of a passage through villages, cultures and languages — but which ones? His story is probably quite fascinating. I don't think it's rude to observe that such a face has a rich ancestry. I think it's a positive component of international understanding.

AN AMERICAN NAMED FINN

percent American — and not a recently arrived immigrant from some foreign country.

Many people have the false impression that all "real" Americans must be white (or at least black). I don't speak with a foreign accent, my dress is typically American, but because I am not the "right" color, many people automatically assume that I am not American.

Being white is not a prerequisite for being a real American. This country started out as an empty land, and all the races that are represented here now (yes, even the American Indian) came from other parts of the world. We are all Americans, regardless of our ancestors' origins.

Americans come in all shapes, sizes and colors, and I, for one, think it's high time everyone realized it.

A REAL AMERICAN

DEAR AMERICAN: My mail was heavy on this one. Without exception, all writers of Oriental descent resented being asked, "What are you?" shortly after being introduced.

A typical letter:

DEAR ABBY: I, too, am 100 percent American, and because I am of Asian ancestry, I am often asked, "What are you?" It's not the personal nature of this question that bothers me, it's the question itself. This query seems to question my very humanity. "What am I?" Why, I'm a person like everyone else!

Another question I am frequently asked is, "Where did you come from?" This would be an innocent question when one Caucasian asks it of another, but when it is asked of an Asian, it takes on a different tone. I suppose I am expected to say that I am from faraway China or Japan. When I reply, "I'm from right here — Portland, Oregon!" they are invariably surprised. Why? Because they find it hard to believe that an Asian-looking person is actually a native, true-blue, 100

DEAR ABBY: Why do people resent being asked what they are? The Irish are so proud of being Irish, they tell you before you even ask. Tip O'Neill has never tried to hide his Irish ancestry.

JIMMY

DEAR JIMMY: For Tip O'Neill to "hide" his Irish ancestry would be like trying to smuggle dawn past a rooster.

***

DEAR ABBY: I am another "100 Percent American" of Oriental heritage, but I was born in the United States of America.

When I am asked (by Caucasians), "Where are you from?" I always reply, "Texas."

TERSE IN TEXAS

Garden Clubs form foundation

Two Pampa garden clubs have formed an outdoor art and sculpture foundation so that tax-exempt contributions may be collected for art and sculpture to be placed in the city's parks and public places.

"Grandfather's Vision," a bronze sculpture created by Pampa sculptor Gerald Sanders is the first piece of art the foundation hopes to acquire. "Grandfather's Vision" is a 12- to 14-foot bronze of a cowboy and Indian, portraying the history of the area in bas relief designs around the base of the sculpture. This piece will be placed outside M.K. Brown Auditorium and is expected to be completed in October 1987, at a cost of from $60,000 to $100,000.

Sponsoring the foundation are Pampa Garden Club and Las Pampas Garden Club. These groups have already donated the proceeds from their Christmas Home Tour last December to the foundation.

Members of the foundation's board of trustees include Thelma Bray, Christine Campaigne, Darlene Birks, Georgia Mack, Fauncine Mack, and Shirley Jensen. Other board members from the community will be selected at a later date.

Do homework before purchasing

By DONNA BRAUCHI
County Extension Agent

The purchase of a major appliance is one of the most important investments you make for your home. A wise purchase will reward you with the valued service and convenience your investment deserves. Wise consumers do their homework before making a final selection.

Here are some pointers to help you make a wise purchase decision.

(1) Ask the dealer for specification sheets from several manufacturers of the appliance types you plan to purchase. Study them carefully and note the different features, designs, and capacities.

(2) Ask the dealer to see the warranty before purchasing the appliance. Does the warranty cover the entire product? Only certain parts? Is labor included? How long is the warranty coverage?

(3) Ask the dealer for the use and care manual. Read it carefully before you purchase the appliance. The dealer should have manuals available from the floor models on display. These manuals will help you to ask pertinent questions, tell you how the product operates and what special care it needs.

(4) Decide what special features you will really use. Consider the possibility of adding on features at a later date such as an icemaker for a refrigerator.

(5) Decide what capacity or size your family's lifestyle requires. For example, if purchasing a room air conditioner, know the dimensions of the room and number of windows. Make certain the model you choose has sufficient Btu's to cool the area.

(6) Check the space available for the appliance. Will it fit where you plan to put it? Is there adequate clearance space in the hallway or doors through which the appliance will have to pass before installation?

(7) Check the product design carefully prior to purchase. Does the product's design meet your usage habits? Compare the designs of different brands. If you are purchasing a combination microwave oven-range, check the space between the units to be sure your favorite pans will fit.

(8) Clearly establish the cost of delivery and installation. Are these costs included or are they extra?

(9) Ask the dealer if he services the appliances he sells. If not, ask him where to go for authorized factory service on the appliance you plan to purchase.

(10) Compare price in relation to convenience and service. Both vary according to model. As more features and conveniences are included, the price increases.

(11) Be sure your house has adequate electrical circuits. Also, be sure your house has adequately grounded, three-hole receptacles.

After making your selection, follow these tips for getting satisfaction from your appliance.

(1) Know your service agency and the terms of your appliance warranty.

(2) Keep an "appliance file" of use and care manuals, warranties, sales receipts, and service history for all your appliances in a convenient spot for easy reference.

(3) Study the use and care manual and refer to it often.

(4) Have the installer, electrician or plumber check to make sure your household wiring and gas lines are adequate.

(5) Budget for appliance repairs and replacement.

(6) Check plugs, fuses, pilots, controls, and your use and care manual before calling for service.

For more information on appliance use and care, contact your Gray County Extension Office.

Greeting cards reflect humor of motherhood

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — This year's Mother's Day cards reflect the fact that motherhood is back in style, says an official of a greeting card company with headquarters in Kansas City.

The current crop of sentiments recognizes that there's more to motherhood than baby talk and bottles, and reflects its reality — and humor, says Sally Groves, greeting card product director at Hallmark Cards.

"Mothers, including the 3.7 million who will give birth this year, know that being a mother is hard work," she says, "and a good laugh can provide some much-needed relief."

"Friends can be the best support system a mother has, and there's no better time to show that support than Mother's Day," she adds.

A special group of the company's cards, for example, is designed for friends to give to each other. They describe the victory of dressing a squirming infant, the sanctuary of a relaxing and prolonged bubble bath as family members vainly knock on the door, or the horrors of housework.

One offers some advice for a great Mother's Day: "Pile the kids, the dog, sandwiches, potato chips, soft drinks, games and a radio into the car... then go back to bed and go to sleep."

Other cards confirm that the job of being a mother is doubly difficult when mom works. One, for instance, has a carnival barker extolling the miracle of the modern age: "She walks, she talks, she juggles a challenging career and an active family life! Fantastic? Incredible?" Inside, the card says, "Happy Mother's Day to the star of the show."

Another asks what you get when you cross an octopus with a high-speed computer, and answers, "I don't know, but it still can't do everything a working mother can do!"

A card that shows a young mother in robe and slippers holding a screaming baby on her hip while ironing a blouse says, "Being a mother is a snap! First your mind snaps, then your nerves snap..."

"Such cards are really inside jokes, and sending them is a way for mothers to share feelings, as well as support each other," Groves says.

Cooperative use expands computers

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — Millions of personal computer users in companies across the country can now expand their machine's capabilities — and at a surprisingly low cost.

Bezalel Gavish of the University of Rochester's Graduate School of Management says new technology has now turned once-limited personal computers into powerful work stations with the capacity for printing, facsimile transfer, high-resolution graphics, direct-access storage, voice synthesizing and optical scanning.

"All this can result when users of personal computers within an organization agree to share their limited resources in a local area network," Gavish says. "This is especially true when executives concentrate the resources and efforts in a few departments, instead of spreading them thinly over the whole organization."

SALTY DISPOSITIONS
Q: Is salt consumption necessary to the health of the body?
A: Salt is composed of sodium (40 percent) and chloride (60 percent). Sodium is a major mineral component in blood and tissue fluids. It helps regulate blood pressure and control blood volume, aid in heart and other muscle contractions, affects nerve impulses and enzyme action, and controls the fluids surrounding body cells.

The body requires only 200 mg. of sodium per day, equivalent to the amount contained in one-tenth of a teaspoon of salt. As much as 1,100 to 3,000 mg. per day (up to 2 teaspoons) is still considered safe. But the actual average consumption among developed countries varies between 4,000 and 10,000 mg. per day, or 20 to 50 times more than the body needs.

There is no data verifying the absolute dangers of too much sodium in the diet. However, excesses are unnecessary; and sodium restriction is a recommended preventive measure for hypertension. For more ideas on low-salt cooking, contact your local Diet Center at AUSTIN (AP) — For Don January, the 15th hole on the final round of the Liberty Mutual Legends of Golf summed up the way he and Gene Littler paired to win the tournament.

January took a bogey 6 on the hole, lowlighted by a shot into the trees.

Littler then rolled in a 20-foot putt for a crucial birdie that helped keep their team in the lead.

In the end, the defending champs had won again, setting a tournament record 25-under-par 255 for 54 holes.

"At times during the 72 holes I played awful and he played awful," January said. "But we didn't seem to do it together."

They had a 64 Sunday to take a two-stroke win over Charlie Sifford and Jim Ferree, who were one shot better than Chi Chi Rodriguez and Lee Elder.

The win — the second straight here for January and Littler — was good for $100,000.

Littler and January timed their hot streaks well Sunday on the par-70, 6,367-yard Onion Creek Country Club course.

"I played the front nine well and he played the back nine well. It was a real good mesh in our games," said January, who had two front-nine birdies.

Their 25-under was two better than the 23-under posted by January and Sam Snead in the rain-shortened, 54-hole 1982 Legends.

Sifford said he thought his team had a chance to catch up Sunday, but Littler and January never relented.

"We couldn't do anything with those cats," Sifford said. "They were too tough."

Sifford and Ferree teamed Sunday for a 62. They closed to within a shot of January and Littler at the 14th, but shot par the rest of the way.

Elder and Rodriguez combined for a 63 Sunday that gave them a final score of 258. They pulled to within a stroke of the winners after 10 holes. But Elder and Rodriguez added only one more back-nine birdie.

"I knew we had to shoot about 60. When we didn't birdie 11 or 12 I knew we were in trouble," Rodriguez said.

January and Littler started the final round four shots ahead of Sifford and Ferree, Elder and Rodriguez, Leonard Thomson and Harold Henning, and Mike Fetschick and Bob Toski.

Arnold Palmer and Gary Player, paired for the first time in senior play, combined for a 63 Sunday, giving them a 19-under-par 251 and fourth place. A first round 70 kept them away from the top of the leader board.

Terry Catledge's mission was simple in the deciding game of Philadelphia's playoff series with Washington — take the ball to Bol.

The 6-foot-8 Catledge, playing center in place of the injured Moses Malone, scored 27 points Sunday, most of them in the first half against 7-foot-6 Manute Bol, as the 76ers defeated the Bullets 134-109 to win their first-round NBA playoff series 3-2.

"I was just throwing the ball up every chance I could," Catledge said. "If he (Bol) blocked it, I was just going to take it right back to him. I was going up as strong as I could."

"After my first two or three shots, he stayed off me. I seemed to have more room as the game went on," Catledge, the 76ers' No. 1 draft choice from South Alabama, said.

Catledge, who was 13-for-22 from the field, had 21 points in the first half while Bol, also a rookie, finished with no points, two rebounds and one blocked shot. The NBA's leading shot blocker played little in the second half after Philadelphia jumped ahead 70-52 at halftime.

Two second-round series had their openers Sunday, with Boston defeating Atlanta 103-91 and the defending champion Los Angeles Lakers routing Dallas 130-116. On Saturday, Houston beat Denver 126-119 in another second-round opener.

The playoffs resume Tuesday with Atlanta at Boston, Denver at Houston and Philadelphia at Milwaukee. On Wednesday, Dallas is at Los Angeles.

While Catledge and Charles Barkley, who had 19 points, 15 rebounds and 12 assists, controlled the Bullets inside, Philadelphia point guard Maurice Cheeks added 24 points and 11 assists before leaving the game in the fourth period with a twisted ankle.

Cheeks, whose ankle was to be examined today to determine if he can play in the opener against Milwaukee, said he expects to be ready for the Bucks.

The 76ers shot 68 percent from the field in racing to a 38-19 lead and ended the first period in front 40-22.

They built the margin to 61-38 with 5:10 remaining in the second period before settling for the 18-point advantage at halftime.

The Bullets were led by Cliff Robinson with 30 points.

Lakers 130, Mavericks 116

Los Angeles, which is yet to be challenged in four playoff games, also rolled to an 18-point halftime lead and then coasted against Dallas.

The Lakers, who won their first three games by at least 20 points against San Antonio, led 22-6 midway through the first quarter, shook off a Mavericks' rally in the second period and then pulled ahead 66-48 at halftime.

Los Angeles hit 64.4 percent of its field-goal attempts in the first half, while Dallas made just 35.4 percent. The Mavericks got no closer than 13 points in the second half.

Dallas Coach Dick Motta said it was unfair that the Mavericks had to finish their first-round series against Utah on Friday, travel on Saturday and meet the defending champions on Sunday.

"It definitely didn't do our team any good," Motta said.

But Motta's players didn't use fatigue as an excuse.

"As a professional athlete, you're supposed to deal with everything," Dallas forward Sam Perkins, who missed all but four of his 17 shots, said.

Kareem Abdul-Jabbar scored 28 points.

Celtics 103, Hawks 91

Kevin McHale sparked Boston on both ends of the court, scoring 24 points and holding NBA scoring champion Dominique Wilkins in check.

McHale had six of his points during a 14-0 run in the third quarter that extended a nine-point Celtics lead to 86-63. Only Atlanta's 28-17 advantage in the fourth period kept the final score respectable.

McHale also played the major role in holding Wilkins to four field goals in 15 attempts and 13 points.

The victory was Boston's 34th straight at home, setting an NBA record for combined regular-season and playoff homecourt wins. The Celtics broke the Minneapolis Lakers' mark that had stood since 1949-50.

The Celtics, who never trailed, got 17 points from Danny Ainge.

Hogeboom trade near

DALLAS (AP) — Dallas Cowboys quarterback Gary Hogeboom will be traded to the Green Bay Packers unless the Indianapolis Colts make a strong last-minute pitch for him, according to a published report.

The Dallas Times Herald quoted sources as saying Hogeboom will be traded Tuesday morning.

The newspaper reported in today's editions that Cowboys coaches have recently been studying films of three Green Bay running backs. A source told the newspaper the backs are Eddie Lee Ivey, Jesse Clark and Gerry Ellis.

The source said Cowboys Coach Tom Landry is especially interested in Ivey, the fastest of the group.

Green Bay Coach Forest Gregg said last week he was interested in Hogeboom but would not confirm a specific offer. The newspaper reported that Landry has twice confirmed phone conversations with Gregg, a friend who played one season for the Cowboys.

Sources told the newspaper Gregg and Landry discussed a Hogeboom-for-Ivey trade and worked out most of the details.

But an Indianapolis scout said the Colts regard a Hogeboom trade as a "stop-gap measure."

Hogeboom flew to Indianapolis last Thursday for a brief workout for Colts Coach Rod Dowhower.

Rangers' Witt overpowering; Mets roll on

American League

By BARRY WILNER
AP Sports Writer

Bobby Witt is proving he belongs. Rick Langford and Jim Clancy are showing they're back. And Jack Morris just keeps rolling along.

Sunday was a good day for some American League pitchers.

In Texas, for instance, Witt set a Rangers rookie record with 11 strikeouts and allowed three hits in seven innings in a 6-2 triumph over Milwaukee. He was aided by Greg Harris, who hurled the remaining two innings and got the save.

Langford, after three lean years for the Oakland A's, proved he's back, allowing only one hit through seven innings and striking out seven in a 1-0 victory over the Seattle Mariners. Sey Howell finished the two-hitter for his fourth save.

At Baltimore, the Blue Jays' Clancy, coming off an injury-plagued season which followed a losing one, blanked the Orioles on nine hits and struck out four in an 8-0 romp.

Morris, meanwhile, did what is expected of him in Detroit as he threw a six-hitter and struck out six in leading the Tigers to a 4-1 victory over the Chicago White Sox.

Also, it was Cleveland 9, New York 7, and California 8, Minnesota 7. The Boston at Kansas City game was rained out.

Rangers 6, Brewers 2 Witt, a rookie with a 95 mph fastball, is beginning to feel like a major leaguer. He should with a 2-0 record and 11- and 10-strikeout efforts in two of his four starts.

"I really don't know what to expect from myself this year," Witt, 0-6 last year at Double A Tulsa, said. "But if I can just relax, I feel like I can get into more of a groove. I'm feeling a little more relaxed each time."

A's 1, Mariners 0 Comfort has not been a companion for Langford since 1983, when he developed arm trouble and was nearly released by the A's. But he was all the Mariners could handle.

"I've come all the way back. I sure hope I erased some doubts with this game," Langford said after allowing only a single by Spike Owen in the sixth.

STRETCH — Milwaukee right fielder Paul Householder tries to reach out and touch second base before being tagged out by Texas' Scott Fletcher. The Rangers won, 6-2.

Blue Jays 8, Orioles 0

Clancy also is back from health problems that included appendicitis, a sore neck and shoulder. He was bombed by Texas in his last start, but he kept the Orioles off-balance.

"I used only two pitches, fastball and slider, but I was hitting the corners and staying ahead of the batters," he said. "The key to pitching against a good hitting team like Baltimore is keeping ahead of their batters and keeping them off base, against Baltimore."

George Bell, Cecil Fielder and Rance Mulliniks hit home runs for the Blue Jays, while Bell and Jesse Barfield each had three hits.

Tigers 4, White Sox 1 Morris and Joel Davis were hooked up in a pitching duel for six innings. Morris, however, continued his mastery, faltering only when Ron Kittle homered in the second, the 10th homer Moas allowed in five starts this season. Davis had a one-hitter before the Tigers broke through in the sixth. But a two-run triple by Lou Whitaker in a three-run spurt was enough for Morris, 3-2.

Indians 9, Yankees 7

The pitchers weren't dominant everywhere. At Yankee Stadium Cleveland's hitters staged two comebacks. The Indians reached New York relief ace Dave Righetti for five consecutive two-out hits — four singles and Brett Butler's two-run double — in the eighth inning. Butler and Joe Carter also homered for the Indians.

Dave Winfield went 3-for-5 and robbed Cleveland of three runs with two sensational catches in right field.

Angels 8, Twins 7 Ruppert Jones homered, singled twice and scored three runs and Reggie Jackson doubled, singled twice and drove in two. Jackson leads the majors with a .447 average.

Rookie T.R. Bryden picked up his second major-league victory in as many days.

National League

By BEN WALKER
AP Baseball Writer

The New York Mets are on a roll and no one can stop them these days, not even John Tudor.

"I don't want to hear anything about streaks. I just don't want to hear about it," said Tudor, the losing pitcher Sunday in New York's 5-3 victory over the Cardinals.

New York has won nine straight games, while the Cardinals have lost seven in a row. Tudor lost for only the second time in his last 25 regular-season decisions. He was trying to win his 15th straight game, which would have tied Bob Gibson's team record.

Kevin Mitchell and Tim Teufel hit home runs for the Mets while winner Bob Ojeda scattered nine hits.

In other National League games, Pittsburgh routed Philadelphia 13-5, Chicago outsluged Montreal 12-10, Houston blanked Cincinnati 6-0, Los Angeles downed Atlanta 7-4 and San Diego held off San Francisco

6-4. Tudor's loss was his first in the regular season since last July 20 against Los Angeles. It was his first defeat at Busch Stadium since April 22, 1985, versus the Mets.

Pirates 13, Phillies 5 Bill Almon homered, doubled twice and drove in four runs, powering Pittsburgh past mistake-prone Philadelphia.

The host Pirates broke the game open with seven runs in the second inning. The outburst included only two hits, one of them a two-run double by Almon, but was fueled by errors on three consecutive plays by the Phillies, who finished with five miscues.

Steve Carlton, 1-3, pitched five innings and took the loss.

Cubs 12, Expos 10

Jody Davis, back in the lineup after being given a day off to rest, drove in five runs with two homers, including a grand slam. Chris Speier also homered for Chicago while Hubie Brooks, Tim Raines and Vance Law connected for Montreal.

Davis' fourth-inning grand slam was the fourth of his career. Steve Christmas' pinch-hit, two-run double broke a 9-9 tie. Christmas' blow was sandwiched between a pinch-single by Jerry Mumphrey and a pinch-double by Shawn Dunston. The three consecutive pinch-hits tied a major-league record last accomplished by Pittsburgh in 1961.

Padres 6, Giants 4

Tony Gwynn hit two home runs, the first two-homer game of his major-league career, and San Diego held off San Francisco.

Gwynn, who went 3-for-4, singled in helping the Padres take a 1-0 lead in the first inning against Mike Krukow, 3-1. Gwynn hit a two-run homer in the third and had a solo home run, his third of the season, in the seventh.

Dave Dravecky, 2-1, shut out the visiting Giants for seven innings.

Astros 6, Reds 0

Bob Knepper became the first four-game winner in the NL, tossing a four-hitter that led Houston over Cincinnati.

Knepper, 4-0, struck out four and walked two. The victory was the third straight for the host Astros.

Sudden death birdie gives Strange Houston Open title

THE WOODLANDS, Texas (AP) — Curtis Strange sank a 30-foot birdie putt on the third sudden death playoff hole to win the $500,000 Houston Open over Calvin Peete.

But the stroke that started Strange toward Sunday's $90,000 payday came in Thursday's opening round on the 13th hole when he angrily broke the putter that helped him win a PGA Tour record $542,321 in 1985.

It turned out to be Strange's lucky break. After snapping the shaft of his putter on a wooden bridge, Strange chunked the head into a lake and parred the final five holes putting with his pitching wedge.

He finished the first round at even par 72 and started Sunday's final round three strokes off the pace.

But Strange birdied the first three holes Sunday and charged into a tie with Peete with a 15-foot birdie putt on No. 17.

Strange's new putter worked again on the third extra hole when his second shot stopped 30 feet from the hole.

"I putted great the last two days using a putter I'd had around the house," Strange said.

Strange sank his pressure putt but Peete, who had led or shared the lead all four rounds, stroked his 20-foot putt to the left of the hole.

Peete, who earned $54,000, shot a final round 69 and Strange had a 6-under-par 66 to end regulation play tied with 14-under-par 274 72-hole totals.

Peete had started the final day tied with Tom Watson and Jay Haas with 205 totals, 11-under-par.

Watson fell off the pace with a 71 and to finish third at 276 and earn $34,000. Watson narrowly missed a 188-yard drive to the green for an eagle on No. 18 that would have put him in the playoff.

Peete and Strange parred the first two playoff holes. Peete's 20-foot birdie putt on the par 4, 376-yard No. 17 stopped at the lip to force the third playoff hole.

"Playing against the top players, you can't beat them with pars," Peete said. "I just didn't play as good as I should have. This was his tournament."

Bradley keeps cool to take S&H Classic championship

By FRED GOODALL
AP Sports Writer

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. (AP) — A word often used to describe Pat Bradley's golf game is "intimidating," although the winner of 18 LPGA events and nearly $2 million usually shrugs off suggestions that less successful players are awed by her ability to thrive under pressure.

After she birdied the 18th hole from 25 feet to win the $200,000 S&H Classic by one-stroke Sunday, however, even Bradley admitted she probably rattled Janet Coles, who missed an eight-footer that would have forced a playoff.

"I've been in situations like that a lot," she said. "I was in control of my nerves ... I felt like I would make it. When I did, I know Janet flinched."

Bradley, who shot a 65, finished with a 72-hole score of 16-under-par 272 that equaled the S&H record set by Alice Miller last year. Coles carded a 69 she said "you'd ordinarily think would be good enough to win," when you start the day with a three-shot lead.

Jane Crafter, who made a hole-in-one on the 142-yard No. 17 to grab sole possession of third place, finished six shots behind Coles' four-day score of 273. Jan Stephenson, Betsy Barrett, Betsy King and Cathy Kratzert were one stroke farther back at 280.

"Nobody but Pat Bradley could have beat me today the way I played," said Coles, who had five birdies and two bogeys.

The $30,000 S&H paycheck boosted Bradley's career earnings to $1,996,921 in 13 LPGA seasons. She's won a tour-leading $202,724 in 1986 with nine top-10 finishes in 11 tournaments, including a victory in the Nabisco Dinah Shore three weeks ago.

"After 13 years, I guess it's just my time to shine a little brighter," Bradley said.

Her latest victory, leaving her only $3,079 short of becoming the tour's first $2-million winner, was accomplished in typical Bradley fashion. She played solid, but not spectacular golf the first three days and then put together a superior round when she needed it.

She had seven birdies and no bogeys on the par 72, 6,013-yard Pasadena Yacht and Country Club course after shooting rounds of 69, 67 and 71 the previous three days.

Horned Frogs grab SWC golf crown

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Before the Southwest Conference golf tournament began, the nine league coaches were asked for their thoughts.

Interestingly, TCU Coach Bill Woodley said a team does not have to play its best golf in January or February.

"You want to get just a little bit better each week and peak right around the conference and national tournaments," he said. "If you win those two, nobody remembers what happened in the other tournaments."

On Sunday, with senior transfer Jim Sorenson leading the way, the Frogs peaked at just the right time and won their first SWC golf title by eight shots over Houston and Arkansas.

Sorenson shot a course record 67 for a 54-hole total of 213, three shots better than teammate Pete Jordan and Houston's Steve Jackson. Jordan shot 72 on Sunday and Jackson had a 71.

The Frogs wound up the team competition — based on the four best 54-hole scores — with an 876 total. Houston started the final round two shots in front of TCU and 11 shots in front of Arkansas.

Prior to the tournament, Woodley noted that Houston, the defending NCAA champion and No. 2 in the country, had beaten the Frogs a total of 12 strokes in the last five tournaments. "Hopefully, we're just waiting for the conference tournament," he said.

"It seemed like we had knocked and knocked on the door all year long," Sorenson said. "We finally knocked it down. It was much more fulfilling to win the team than the individual championship."

In addition to Sorenson and Jordan, the Frogs counted Joe Beck's 222 and Gavin Munro's 225. Beck finished with a 75 and Munro had a 74 on Sunday. Sorenson, Beck and Jordan are seniors. Munro is a junior.

Sorenson, from Bloomington, Minn., went to Texas Lutheran College without a golf scholarship, but earned one in a semester. After three years, he transferred to TCU and sat out a year.

"He wanted to play for a good program," Woodley said. "He knew we were going to be pretty tough on down the line and I knew if we got him, we'd be pretty good."

Houston's top four scores were Jackson at 216, Mike Standly with 76-221, Marc Pendaries with 77-223 and Tray Tyner with 74-224. Arkansas got final round 70s from John Daly and John Sadie, both of whom finished at 218.

"It was one of the best comebacks any of my teams ever has had," said Arkansas Coach Steve Loy. "Our goal was to shoot even par as a team and we were 2 under par."

Sorenson started with a bogey but was 1 under through eight. The first two rounds, he made bogey and double bogey on No. 9, a 455-yard par four. On Sunday, he was over the green in two.

"I was bound and determined to make par," he said. He chipped to within three feet and made the putt. "That was the turning point," he said.

He holed a 10-footer on No. 10 and a 15-footer on No. 11. He canned a short birdie putt on No. 12 after a nice nine iron second and then sank a six footer for a two on the 175-yard 13th.

Sorenson lost a shot on 16 when he three putted but made another two on the 205-yard 17th.

TCU, Houston, Arkansas and possibly one or two other SWC teams are likely participants in the NCAA tournament next month.

TCU golf coach Bill Woodley hugs team members on the 18th green Sunday after the Frogs won their first-ever SWC golf championship.

Rangers, Whalers surprise winners in NHL playoffs

By KEN RAPPOPORT
AP Hockey Writer

Back in February, no one would have believed the New York Rangers or Hartford Whalers would still be playing hockey at this time of year, no less winning key games in the NHL's Stanley Cup playoffs. But that is exactly what has happened.

With their 2-1 victory over the Washington Capitals Sunday night, the surprising Rangers clinched the Patrick Division title and moved into the semifinal round of the playoffs.

The Whalers, meanwhile, beat the Montreal Canadiens to force a seventh and deciding game in the Adams Division playoffs. The winner gets to meet the Rangers, who have knocked off two of the highest regarded teams in the league, first the Philadelphia Flyers and then the Capitals.

"It's a great feeling — who would've thought it?" said New York forward Don Maloney, referring to the Rangers' mid-season problems which very much resembled that of Hartford's.

Perhaps even a bigger shock is Calgary's lead over Edmonton in the Smythe final, which resumes with Game 6 tonight in Calgary with the Flames holding a 3-2 lead over the defending Stanley Cup champions. A loss would end the Oilers' two-year reign and send the Flames into the Campbell Conference final against the winner of the Norris Division series between St. Louis and Toronto. The Blues hold a 3-2 lead in that one, with Game 6 scheduled for tonight in Toronto.

PATRICK DIVISION
Rangers 2, Capitals 1

The Rangers got two goals from Pierre Larouche and an outstanding performance in goal from John Vanbiesbrouck to beat the Capitals.

The Rangers won their first division title by playing brilliantly in a low-scoring, high-tension contest between two of the NHL's top defensive teams. Washington finished second in goals allowed and the Rangers fourth this season.

Larouche, with the help of rookie linemate Mike Ridley, scored at 12:36 of the first period and then connected on a power play 34 seconds into the third for his eighth goal of the playoffs.

That was all the offense needed by Vanbiesbrouck, who made several outstanding saves throughout the game. He stopped 27 shots, giving up only a third-period score to Bobby Carpenter at 5:38.

ADAMS DIVISION
Whalers 1, Canadiens 0

Mike Liut, back in goal after missing two games because of an injury, stopped 32 shots and Kevin Dineen scored his sixth goal of the playoffs to lead the Whalers over the Canadiens.

The Canadiens, as they have in four games of the series, outshot the Whalers 32-17 but Liut proved equal, making up for several defensive lapses by his teammates.

Dineen, the Whalers' scrappy right wing and inspirational leader, scored the goal the Whalers needed to send the best-of-seven series back to Montreal for a final game Tuesday night.

Patrick Roy, the Canadiens' 20-year-old rookie goalie, had another outstanding game, stopping 16 shots to keep the contest close.

SMYTHE DIVISION
Calgary Coach Bob Johnson

admits the Flames have been playing over their heads against Edmonton.

"We have a lot of overachievers playing above and beyond their talents. That's what this is all about," said Johnson as the Flames hoped for a knockout of the Oilers in Game 6.

The Flames, who have never trailed in this series, are coming off a 4-1 victory over the Oilers on Saturday night. One more victory, either tonight in Calgary or Wednesday night in Edmonton, and the Oilers will find themselves on early vacation.

NORRIS DIVISION
The Blues can wrap up the Norris Division championship with a victory over the upset-minded Maple Leafs. They took a 3-2 lead with an overtime 4-3 victory Saturday night in St. Louis.

ANNIVERSARY — Afghan government members stand on the rostrum in Kabul on Sunday at the eighth anniversary celebration of the Communist takeover. Afghan leader Babrak Karmal failed to make the keynote address at the celebration, fueling speculation that he may be ill or in political trouble. According to Afghan radio reports, Karmal went to the Soviet Union three weeks ago on what was called a private visit, and Soviet sources in in Islamabad, speaking on condition that they not be identified, said Karmal had gone to the Soviet Union for medical reasons. (AP Laserphoto)

South Texas seen as new home for Florida monkeys

CORPUS CHRISTI, Texas (AP) — South Texas' image as the land of the longhorn and home to such ordinary wild game as deer and quail may be making a change.

It may one day be known as the land of the monkey.

Officials in Florida are seeking out South Texas locations for shipping 80 rhesus monkeys that are overrunning parts of central Florida like invaders from a banana republic.

And these are no ordinary monkeys. They're believed to be descendants of movie star monkeys that escaped into the forest when Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios imported them for Tarzan movies being shot on location in the Florida Uplands in the 1930s.

The encroaching human population in the Ocala National Forest area — where bands of the monkeys roam — has prompted officials to begin capturing nearly half the monkey population.

Though they are not known to have assaulted anyone, they're territorial creatures and have occasionally frightened off humans who come too close, said Georgia Brown, spokeswoman for the Silver Springs nature park in Florida.

Silver Springs is where the troublesome monkeys are being rounded up for possible deportation to Texas.

Humane Society officials in Corpus Christi are expected to be consulted this week about exploring three or four exotic animal preserves in South Texas being considered as sites for the monkeys.

The leading site right now is Primarily Primates, a nine-acre preserve for unwanted apes and monkeys in northwest Bexar County, said Marc Paulhus, director of the Humane Society's southeast regional office in Tallahassee, Fla.

But director Wallace Swett said he may be unable to take them because he already pays about $5,000 a month to feed and care for 250 apes and monkeys at the facility.

Another 80 monkeys probably would require an additional $15,000 to $20,000 a year in donations just to feed them, he said.

"There's only a 75 percent chance we can take them. So much depends on the general public, whether we can raise enough donations," Swett said.

"If something can't be found for them, the only alternative is death, either in a laboratory through torture, or through euthanasia. I'm really worried about it. It seems like we've exploited these animals, so we owe them something," he said.

Paulhus said the South Texas climate "is one in which they can thrive and feel comfortable."

"There may possibly be some reasonable way of confining them to one area without going to the extremes of building moats and walls."

Though it is not widely known, South Texas is already home to thousands of rhesus monkeys, mostly at the Hazelton Research Animals facility near Agua Dulce. In 1984 an estimated 8,000 were counted there.

Another 1929 for stock market?

By JOHN CUNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — Great heights create great changes in perception and attitude — as in the stock market, where one of the favorite discussions of analysts these days is whether the market will crash.

One theory, highly subjective as it is, assumes that vigilant investors, like wary hikers in the Alps, aren't likely to take themselves out on a precipice and be killed in an avalanche.

A less optimistic view of the market states there will be a collapse if when the dividend return of the Dow industrial average falls below 3 percent — because companies fail to raise dividends or because stocks have risen sharply.

That yield is now about 3.4 percent, a safe level, according to the theory. But, says Charles Allmon, a popular adviser, if it falls to 3.1 percent or lower "you could see an interesting decline." What's interesting? A 25 percent to 50 percent decline, the kind that will "jar some eyes."

No guide is infallible, but one put forth by John Dessauer, publisher of Dessauer's Journal of financial markets, is attracting much attention. This guide offers the news that the ascent up the mountain is clear and safe.

Dessauer's measure of the market is based on book value, which is the difference between a company's assets and its liabilities and which can be compared to the equity in a person's home.

"Watching book value with a sense of history can provide important investment information," says Dessauer.

In 1929, he points out, stocks were selling at 4.18 times book value, a very high level. The year before, they had sold at 3.57 times book value, and in 1927 at 2.6 times book value.

Those who spotted the increase knew something was wrong, even if one of the most popular measures, the price-earnings ratio, looked healthy. The P-E failed to signal bad times; earnings were actually rising, thus "supporting" prices.

The support was fragile — as measured by book value. From 4.18, book value plunged to under .50 in 1932, which meant that stocks were selling for 50 cents on the dollar. A slow, unsteady rise then began; in 1937 it reached 2.2.

Dessauer calculates book value now at 1.83, which leads him to the conclusion that "the current bull market will not run into serious resistance until the Dow has breached 2 times book value, or risen above 2,000."

It is too soon to be worrying about another great stock market crash like 1929," he says. "Stocks would have to rise to more than 4 times book value (currently more than 4,000 on the Dow) to make such worries legitimate."

Longhorns herded down the dusty trail

MOUNTAIN HOME, Texas (AP) — The 11th annual Y.O. Ranch Longhorn Trail Drive attracted a wide assortment of cowboys and cowgirls, including a U.S. marshall from Dodge City, Kan., and a bride from New Braunfels, Texas.

"The trail drive is something I've always done," said Helen Burnett, who got married at the ranch pavilion on the eve of the drive, which ended Sunday.

"I love what this has done for the heritage it preserves," she said Saturday, standing next to her new husband Sam Burnett, an insurance executive from San Antonio.

The Burnetts were among 150 cowpokes who saddled up Saturday and headed down the dusty trail.

The group herded about 35 head of longhorns through the rugged, rocky 55,000-acre ranch on a two-day trek.

"Whoa, cattle," coed U.S. Marshall Kenny House from Dodge City as he coaxed the longhorns through the trees.

House said he helped Y.O. Ranch owner Charles Schreiner III run the first trail drive to Lubbock in 1976.

"Some of my closest and best friends are here," he said, adding that he participates in the trail ride because he wants "to help out — help Charley."

Schreiner, whose grandfather Capt. Charles Schreiner founded the ranch 100 years ago, said he conducts the trail drive for fun and to keep history alive.

"We like to keep out here as much of the Old West as we can under the circumstances," he said.

"You got to remember your roots — where we all came from," he said, a pinched, dirty cowboy hat in his lap.

So Schreiner invited his friends for a pre-1900s costume party Friday night, a trail drive and night of festivities around the campfire Saturday.

The drive concluded

Sunday after a cowboy prayer meeting on horseback and the last few miles of the journey.

The only ones who weren't having a good time were the longhorns.

"These steers are not real wild about participating in this thing," said C.D. "Fibber" McGehee, wildlife biologist for the ranch. "They can be ornery as all git out."

Except for the pickup trucks and four-wheel drives, the trail drive looked much like those that have been depicted on television and in western art.

Cowboys and cowgirls were dressed in jeans, chaps, bandanas, spurs, cowboy hats and boots. They rode on spirited horses and the less hardy jostled along in covered wagons and a stage coach.

Schreiner, who has been active in keeping the longhorn a thriving breed, sponsored a trail drive from San Antonio to Dodge City in 1966. Most of the trek was made by truck, with stops along the way for short trail drives. "We decided that was so much fun we'd never do it again," joked Schreiner, a pinched cowboy hat resting on his lap.

Schreiner, known as "Three" to his friends, said he is more satisfied with the trail drive being held on the ranch.

"Besides, we don't have to have parade permits and police escorts," he said. "The drive attracted 'doctors, lawyers, ranchers — average ol' boys, just whoever's interested in these western type deals,'" McGee said.

At family school: Astronomy and goat farming

BOONVILLE, Calif. (AP) — It's a school even Huck Finn could love, one without tests, report cards or homework assignments.

But then, the students at remote Mountain School in Mendocino County are a teacher's dream. Two graduates of David and Micki Colfax's home-based school for their four sons have won scholarships to Harvard University.

This past weekend, Drew Colfax, 18, decided to accept an offer from Harvard and turned down those from Yale, Princeton, Amherst and Haverford, he said Sunday.

Drew will join his 21-year-old brother, Grant, an honors pre-med student at Harvard. Drew's younger brother Reed, 16, is "mathematically precocious," according to their father, a former university professor in sociology. And Garth, 10, has a deep interest in ceramics and painting.

"I think they're very bright and very motivated, but I don't think they're particularly gifted," Micki Colfax said Sunday of her sons. "They just have a lot of interests, and they pursue them vigorously."

A spokeswoman for Princeton, where fewer than one in six applicants was accepted this year, called Drew "one of our most extraordinary applicants."

"We've never seen a kid like this," said Princeton's Laura Clark. "He is home-educated and has demonstrated an amazing academic excellence in an unorthodox learning environment."

A Harvard spokeswoman, Margery Heffron, said accepting someone who was taught at home isn't unique, "but it's unusual."

All four boys have been virtually self-educated. Mrs. Colfax said in an interview between goat-keeping chores at their ranch.

Mountain School is the family-coined name for the informal school, and that's how it's registered with state and county authorities to permit the home-based schooling.

"There really isn't any format to it," said Mrs. Colfax, a former English teacher. "After the boys learn to read and write and do math up to pre-algebra, they're pretty much on their own. Rather than being in a school, I like to think of them as self-taught."

The do-it-yourself schooling started 13 years ago when the family moved here to create a homestead.

Family members support themselves by growing their own food, breeding prize-winning goats and operating a bed-and-breakfast inn. David also is a free-lance writer.

Motivating the boys to teach themselves has never been a problem because "what they're doing here is very real," said Mrs. Colfax.

"For instance," she said, "they built their own sheds to house their animals. That means designing and constructing, and you have to know not only carpentry but math. And they put in the plumbing, laid the tiles and did the electrical system for the bed-and-breakfast."

Drew, an avid stargazer, says he has read more than 300 books on astronomy. He writes a weekly astronomy column for the local newspaper and built his own telescope from scratch, as well as an observatory to put it in. He ground the mirror by hand to an accuracy of a millionth of an inch.

Mischievous prophecy of Richard Nixon

By DONALD M. ROTHBERG
AP Political Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Imagine letting Sen. Bob Dole play a major role in setting Vice President George Bush's travel schedule next year when both are likely to be campaigning for the 1988 Republican presidential nomination.

That is a real possibility if Richard M. Nixon turns out to be a good prophet. Nixon is predicting that the 1986 elections will leave the Republicans and Democrats in a 50-50 tie in the Senate.

That would be the outcome if in November the Democrats picked up three Senate seats held by Republicans.

Offering his forecast last week in a speech in San Francisco, Nixon noted that in the event of such a deadlock the Republicans would retain control of the Senate by virtue of the vice president's tie-breaking vote.

But Bush would pay a heavy political price for his service to his party.

"The vice president is going to be tied down a great deal in that critical two-year campaigning period," said the former Republican president.

Dole would be no less so. "Every day would be an adventure," said Walt Riker, spokesman for the majority leader. "It's tough enough with the majority we have." The Republicans currently control the Senate by a 53-47 margin.

As majority leader, the Kansas senator has the strongest voice in determining what issues will be debated and when they will reach the floor. Bush has no say in the schedule.

Having far more power than Bush in determining the Senate schedule in 1987 and 1988 would be the Democratic leader, his influence enhanced by the increase in the party's numbers.

Sen. Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., is now the minority leader, but he is almost certain to be challenged for the leadership post if the Democrats emerge with 50 or more seats.

Whether the Democratic leader is Byrd or someone else, he could hardly resist the temptation to help force Bush onto the record with tie-breaking votes on a range of controversial issues.

The Senate was locked in debate on the budget resolution and with the vote 49-49, Bush broke the tie and assured that the measure calling for a freeze on cost-of-living increases for Social Security recipients would pass.

The National Council of Senior Citizens was quick to issue a statement saying the nation's elderly had been "double-crossed" by the Senate and the administration.

The politically sensitive issue of Social Security is one on which Democrats and Bush's GOP rivals want to see him forced to break ties. There certainly are many others.

The budget battle, in which many Republicans are at odds with the administration, is likely to produce close votes on whether to go along with the president's plans to shut down government programs.
