Test procedures concern at Lefors

By LARRY HOLLIS
Staff Writer

LEFORS - Student skills tests are in and teachers' tests are on their way, but Lefors administrators already have complaints about the testing procedures and other aspects.

The Lefors Independent School District has received results for students taking the Texas Educational Assessment of Minimum Skills (TEAMS) tests in the third, fifth, seventh, ninth and eleventh grades.

During the regular board meeting Thursday night, Lefors Elementary School Principal Bill Crockett said students are doing generally well in the reading and mathematics areas, but the test results indicated some problems in the writing skills area.

He said the TEAMS scores indicated nine of 17 third grade students did not master the writing area. "It looked bad" until he checked the results for each student he said

But Crockett questioned the grading procedure on the objective test section. Of the 24 questions provided, a student has to answer 21 to achieve mastery level, he explained.

For example, one of the students had mastered each of the six separate objective skill areas. But because the student had answered only 20 questions correctly overall out of the 24, the student was not given mastery level, he noted.

The objective test covers such areas as spelling, punctuation and capitalization. Students also had a composition section.

Crockett also had some complaints about the compilation of school education in Texas.

tests results by the Iowa testing

Math results from one grade initially indicated some had not mastered that area, he said. But when he checked the results, he discovered more than 30 students were listed when Lefors had only 16 students in that grade.

Apparently the Iowa testing firm had mistakenly included scores from another district in with the Lefors results. Crockett said he had contacted the Iowa firm offices and Texas state education offices but had not yet received any satisfactory explanation as to how the mistake occurred.

When he checked each student's results, he found that 100 percent of the fifth grade students had received mastery in reading and math areas.

"Overall, I think we did really good," Crockett stated, except for the writing area. But a closer analysis of the writing scores alleviated the initial disappointment in the objective test area concerning the 21 of 24 questions standard, he said.

"We can concentrate more on the writing now since we know it's a weak area," especially in the third grade, he said.

Lefors High School Principal Gene Gee also had some complaints about the grading standards in the writing area. Compositions are graded on a 1 to 5 scale, with a 2 being the minimum passing score, he noted.

In the seventh grade, for example, just over 50 percent were given a 2 rating with 41 percent receiving a 1 score. Gee said the composition area is being graded more strictly now, resulting in more students not passing.

"We are going to use this as an indicator to focus more on writing" at all levels, Gee said. But "I feel reasonably sure the clamp down on writing has caught everybody," not just Lefors students, he said.

Math and reading levels for the high school students are "in pretty good shape," he said. Juniors had a 100 percent mastery level in all three areas.

But more efforts will continue in all areas to do even better, he said

Gee said he has no question of the need to improve writing skills, but he thinks the standards perhaps are being set too high now. He said efforts will be made to incorporate more writing skills into other content areas besides English classes, including less use of multiple choice tests in some cases

Supt. Earl Ross said he was generally pleased with the TEAMS results. "They just need to do more writing," he said. "And our teachers are working on that."

Ross said he had planned to discuss the Texas Evaluation of Current Adminstrators and Teachers (TECAT) tests, but not all the results are in yet. The forms have been mailed, but not all teachers and administrators have received them yet, he explained.

Gee said he had a complaint about the TECAT results. The forms indicate only whether a passing or failing score was made, he noted, but no actual test scores are provided.

Roberts, Rice still the winners

Wayne Roberts and Ronnie Rice are still the winners of their respective primary races following recounts Thursday and today.

Roberts defeated Jeanine Augustine for the Democratic nomination for Gray County Justice of the Peace from Precinct Two by six votes in Saturday's primary election and that result was the same in Thursday's recount. Roberts will face write-in candidate Margie Prestidge in November.

The Republican recount, requested by Precinct Two Commissioner candidates James Kennemer and Richard Smith, left the incumbent Rice still way ahead of his three opponents. In the recount, completed this morning, Kennemer picked up one vote from a ballot that County Clerk Wanda Carter said was marked by ballpoint pen and should have been counted Saturday.

The extra vote gives Kennemer 62 votes compared to Rice's 228. Smith finished with 58 votes and Justice of the Peace David Potter polled 36.

Rice will face the winner of a June 7 run-off election between Democratic challengers Jim Greene and W.C. Epperson.

Reactor fire reported out

International official says meltdown never occurred

KIEV, U.S.S.R. (AP) — An International Atomic Energy Agency official said today that the fire at the Chernobyl nuclear reactor has been put out. The mayor of Kiev said a quarter-million children will leave school early this year because of the devastating accident.

The agency official, Morris Rosen, told a news conference in Moscow that an adjacent reactor at the Ukrainian facility was not damaged by the fire and was not in danger of releasing radiation.

The director of the U.N.-affiliated agency, Hans Blix, said at today's news conference, "It is clear the radioactive consequences of this accident are far more serious than in any acident so far."

Blix also said the Soviets never shut down their 11 other Chernobyl-type nuclear reactors, as some reports indicated earlier.

Earlier, Kiev Mayor Valentin Sgursky said schools attended by a quarter-million of the city's children will close May 15, several weeks early, because of the power plant accident. He said the move was not an emergency me-

"We are simply advancing the normal school holiday a little bit," Sgursky told a group of foreign reporters.

Ukrainian Premier Alexander Lyashko had said Thursday that crews still were trying to put out the reactor fire. Blix, flew over the reactor Thursday and said on Soviet television that smoke was coming from it.

But Rosen said today, "The fire is out."

Rosen said the smoke seen Thursday was light gray and appeared to come from smoldering sand, lead, boron and dolomite thrown over the reactor to smother the fire. He said smoke was thicker and darker when the fire was burning.

Rosen also said Soviet officials reported the reactor core temperature had fallen to a degree that indicated the fire was out.

Lyashko had said Thursday that the reactor temperature had fallen to 300 degrees Celsius, 572 degrees Fahrenheit. "This means that the burning has practically stopped," he said.

Rosen said a meltdown never occurred, but a statement by his agency said the reactor core was extensively damaged. Rosen said workers were trying to build a concrete shield under the reactor in case a nuclear reaction should resume, sending radioactivity into the earth.

to the earth.

Western scientists have said they believe a meltdown did

Ukrainian Health Minister Anatoly Romanenko was quoted earlier as saying on Kiev radio that school children would be moved out of the area as a precaution. Kiev, the nation's third-largest city with 2.4 million inhabitants, is 80 miles south of the damaged reactor.

At the Moscow news conference, Rosen said workers were trying to seal off the No. 4 reactor at the Chernobyl facility where a chemical explosion occurred April 26, setting off a fire and spewing a radioactive cloud over Europe.

"The aim is to encase the whole fourth unit in concrete and work has begun to place a concrete foundation under the reactor," he

Blix said at today's news conference that the Soviets have agreed to release daily radiation levels beginning today from a monitoring station $37\sqrt{2}$ miles from the reactor and from six other stations along the country's western border.

Rosen said most of the 204 people injured in the accident, which officials said began April 26, were firefighters and that all had been sent to Moscow for treatment.

Romanenko warned in an article in today's issue of the newspaper Pravda Ukrainy that people should wash well, water down streets and yards, and keep children indoors as much as possible.

"The situation has markedly improved since my last address. The level of background radiation is gradually falling. At present it is in the limit of the norms recommended by national and international organizations and does not represent a danger to the health of the population, including children," he wrote.

However, it was not clear whether he was referring to radiation levels in the accident area, or in Kiev itself.

Lyashko also told Western reporters Thursday that authorities had not ordered the major part of the evacuation until six days after the accident, and had waited for two days to inform Moscow of the full scope of what is now believed to be the worst disaster in the history of nuclear power.

Today, the Communist Party daily Pravda said in Moscow that Kiev residents may not have been kept informed in a timely fashion.

"This provided grounds for all kinds of rumors which, incidentally, were quite actively disseminated by various 'voices' in the West," said Pravda.

$4.7 million test proves most teachers can read and write

AUSTIN (AP) — Most Texas teachers passed a statewide test aimed at determining if they are competent in the classroom, according to results presented the State Board of Education.

The figures released Thursday showed 96.7 percent of the 202,084 certified educators who took the reading and writing test on March 10 passed.

About 3.3 percent, or 6,579, failed. If they do not pass a second exam on June 28 they will lose their teaching certificates.

The test was required by the 1984 school reform act in an effort to improve the quality of public

The results were reviewed by board members Thursday with no further action required when the formal board meeting is held Saturday. "That's an 'A' in anyone's book," said Gov.

Mark White of the results.

"The teachers did fantastic, far exceeding our expectations," said Education Commissioner William Kirby.

Officials earlier had predicted that about 5 percent or about 10,000 might lose their right to teach.

Kirby said the March test failures included 6 percent Hispanics, 18.4 percent blacks and 1.1 white.

State law requires local school districts to offer the failures remedial help to prepare them for the June test.

Less than 1 percent, or 1,597 people, failed the reading portion; 1.7 percent, or 3,514 educators, failed the writing portion, and less than 1 percent, or 1,468, failed both parts, Kirby said.

Board member Mary Ellen Berlanga, Corpus Christi, urged all possible assistance be offered the failures, particulaly the more than 2,800 black Member Jack Strong, Longview, asked the Texas Education Agenncy to investigate the failing grades and find out where those teachers received their teaching certificates. "We need to take an intense look at the colleges where these come from," he said.

"We have asked our teachers to do more than any other state has required. Texas teachers have met the challenge and have passed their test with outstanding success," White said.

"The teachers have done what we asked them to do," Kirby told reporters. "People have got to make teachers understand they support them. If we don't, we're going to keep losing teachers."

Kirby said he could not make any estimate how many of the 6,500 who failed would fail the second test in June.

Joining White and others in praising the results was John Cole, president of the Texas Federation of Teachers.

"We think that the teachers of Texas should be congratulated on their A work on the TECAT test," Cole said.

"These tests underscore the fact that we have just wasted some $4.7 million of taxpayers' money," said Charles Beard, president of the Texas State Teachers Association, which opposed the exams. "We do not know any more about teacher competency in Texas than we did two months or two years ago."

"We're elated but not surprised," said Al Bookman, associate communications director of the Association of Texas Professional Educators. "It's a big hurdle for everyone. Now we need to sit down with the 6,500 and see if we can help them out."

"We're delighted," said Sherry Fults, communications director of the Texas Classroom Teachers Association, which held workshops to train teachers for the test. "We think teachers and the teaching profession are finally vindicated."

Kirby said the TEA was authorized by the Legislature to extend the teaching certificate of a teacher who fails the tests, if the school board can prove there is no replacement. "But the districts will have to demonstrate an emergeny need in order to get the waivers," Kirby told reporters.

Kirby told the state board on Feb. 8 that Texas may be short about 15,000 teachers in September because of the teacher tests and class defections. He estimated as many as 5,000 teachers will leave the profession for various reasons.

He told the board Thursday that a source of teachers might be in the 300,000 teachers who once were certified in Texas but have left the profession and did not take the March test.

White - who two months ago asked some 200 state agencies to trim spending 13 percent by Aug. 31. 1987 — said it will take a little time for his spending reduction effort to show results

"I think the overall savings goal we've set is still on course. We still feel we're going to achieve those numbers," he said.

The executive order was issued after Bullock predicted that state revenue would fall $1.3 billion below the 1986-87 state budgets because of plunging oil prices and oil tax revenue.

Oklahoma town hit by tornado

EDMOND, Okla. (AP) - A suppertime tornado bounced through a neighborhood, injuring 12 people, destroying dozens of homes, and leaving residents amazed that no one was seriously hurt.

"I don't know how we kept from being killed, but we did," said 74year-old Frances Forehand, who suffered cuts and bruises when the tornado tore through the home of her granddaughter Vicki Taylor on Thursday night. "It looked like a big ball of fire went through the house.

Police spokesman Lt. Mike Wooldridge, whose home was one of those damaged in southwestern Edmond, said 12 people were treated at a hospital for minor injuries.

Fire Marshal Ron Williamson said at least 35 homes were destroyed and at least 30 others damaged.

Although there were no reports of fatalities, Williamson said he could not be certain that everyone was accounted for Lefors meeting.

It cost the state $12 million to administer the tests, he said, but if an individual wants to know his or her actual score, "you have to send in another $15" to get a computer print-out of the test scores.

The Iowa testing firm is really making money from the tests, he stated.

In other matters last night, the principals gave a report on grades from the fifth six-weeks period. Crockett said 41 or 48 percent of the 85 grade school students made the honor roll listings, with a few more making the all-A's list. Seventeen percent failed one or more subjects, he said. He said the grade school is now in the process of administering the Metropolitan testing for students. Also, the first phase has been completed for beginning the Gifted and Talented program in the next school year. Teachers have begun to identify the students who will be included in the Gee said 40 of 100 junior high and high school students had made one of the three honor rolls, with four on the all-A's list, 15 on the B list and 21 on the honorable mention roll. Twenty-five failed one or more subject areas.

Ross said the district has received notice from the Department of Energy that approval has been given for a grant for the energy conservation project on the high school building. He said the district now can proceed with the bids process.

Ross said he had provided a brochure to school board members regarding training as required by House Bill 72 for district trustees. He said the state . requires 20 hours of training, though no penalty has been set for board members not getting the 20

Town mourns slain

HAWKINS, Texas (AP) - Still shocked and grieving, more than 800 Hawkins residents gathered to mourn the death of one of the city's brightest young people.

Suzanne Denise Harrison, an 18-year-old Hawkins senior, had been slain and two of her companions, Gena Turner and Bryan Boone, are still missing.

Somber relatives, classmates and friends filed quietly into Hawkins High School Auditorium Thursday afternoon to pay respects to Miss Harrison, a young woman whose bright smile left its mark on all who knew her. "Even those who didn't really know Suzanne remembered her as the smiling girl at the drugstore or the smiling cheerleader on crutches," said the Rev. Bob Layman, pastor of Hawkins First Baptist Church. "They always identified Suzanne by her smile."

Nuzum of Big Sandy's New Hope Baptist Church recalled Miss Harrison as a young woman who led by Christian example, and in doing so, touched the lives of those around her.

Opening Miss Harrison's Bible, Layman read underlined verses from Ephesians 4:31-32 that he said typified her life: "Let all bitterness, and wrath, and anger, and clamour, and evil speaking, be put away from you, with all malice: And be ye kind one to another, tenderhearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you.'

"As I read those verses," Layman said, "I knew how they had been pressed upon her heart."

Though Miss Harrison's life ended at a young age, "it was 18 full and packed years," he said. "She was that kind of person. It was a good one, the sermon this precious one preached. But it was a short one. Now she has passed it on to you to finish.

Nuzum told those gathered to take solace in the Scriptures and look to the Lord for guidance in times of tragedy.

Comforting the bereaved, Nuzum said, "He wouldn't think of taking her home until He had readied her a place. And may I say this to you, Mom and Dad. don't ever forget the memories that you have (of Suzanne).

Most importantly, Miss Harrison was prepared to meet her Savior because of the exemplary life she led, said Layman, who baptized her.

Voters could unseat the popular Mayor Frank Selfridge, Mayor Pro-Tem Judy Flanders and councilman Bill Slaybaugh. The three have been re-elected to the council a total of eight times in the

The special vote was brought about by three long-time Borger women who feel the three council members have cost the taxpayers the city over a million dollars by mishandling an offer to settle a controversial suit involving city police officers.

In the past two months, the town has not only witnessed an attempt to unseat three of five council members, but also a suit by the city against their attorneys, the alleged shutting down of a local radio station's news division, charges of incompetence, a case being appealed to the Supreme Court not to mention the one million dollars the city stands to lose

The saga began on lonely road in Hutchinson County in August 1981. A team of area law enforcement officers were in hot pursuit of a fugitive who was tracked to an area near the home of 6666 Ranch Foreman James Grandstaff

In the heat of the chase, officers accidentally shot and killed Grandstaff when he appeared to investigate. The family of Grandstaff took the city of Borger to court and was awarded $1.4 million in damages from U.S. District Judge Mary Lou Robinson in Amarillo.

Currently, lawyers for the city of Borger and the North River Insurance Co. which wrote the city's $500,000 liability policy, have appealed the case to the Supreme Court.

After the trial, all was quiet until February 1986 when local news broke the news of a letter sent by the Haynes Fullenweider of Houston, which represents the family of Grandstaff, offering to settle with city for $499,950, $50 less than the city's insurance coverage at the time.

The offer had it been accepted could have saved the city $1 million plus.

But city council members — including Selfridge, Flanders and Slaybaugh — all deny ever hearing about the offer to settle.

Copies of registered mail receipts show that secretaries for the Gasaway, Gurley, Sheets and Mitchell law firm of Borger, which had represented the city for 13 years prior to that time, signed to receive the settlement offer on July 1, 1983. Similar copies also show secretaries for Wayne Sturdivant, a lawyer representing North River Insurance Company of Amarillo, also re-

Rosalie Ussery, Mary Ward and Louise Payne, all long-time residents, decided to take matters into their own hands. The three fromed Citizens for Honest City Government and are dedicated to unseating the three council members.

The group is bound by the belief that the council members knew of the offer to settle but covered it

$15 oil prices could lead to Texas recession, economist says

insistent chorus that Texans will one day soon have to swallow their pride and submit to an income tax

'There will have to be a redistribution away from oil and gas.'' Jared F. Hazleton, president of the Texas Research League, said Thursday at a symposium his group sponsored on the state's economic

"There are only two real long-term options — a corporate and a personal income tax," he added. "It is clear to me that the tax system Texas has had is going to have to change. It's something we should

Texas is one of only six states that have no corporate income tax, and one of four with neither a corporate nor personal income tax. Many legislators have insisted they will not even consider adopting those taxes, but economists at the symposium said that attitude may have to be discarded.

Hazleton said that if the price of oil stabilizes at $18 a barrel, Texas'

HOUSTON (AP) — Another voice has been added to the increasingly economy won't be too disastrous, but the state could face a recession if the price continues at or under $15.

He said he expects the price of oil to peak at $18 by the end of the year and remain stagnant for two years.

'If you assume oil prices stabilize at $18 a barrel, you get not disaster in Texas, but a fairly moderate growth. If you assume $15 a barrel you get a real problem with the Texas economy continuing for a couple of years," he said. "If you assume prices lower than $15 you will see a very significant recession.

Texas is in for a period of sluggish growth, both in its economy and population, Hazleton said. And along with the stunted growth, the state is being affected by inflation, interest rates and the falling value

'This year, inflation is going to be as low as 1 percent' because the buying factors are not as strong as they used to be during the height of Hazleton said the lower value of the dollar is supposed to promote exports, but it hasn't. Yet he remains confident exports will pick up and stengthen the dollar.

He said many thought Texas was growing as a diversified state during the early 1980s when it actually was just becoming more dependent on oil.

Growth and income for the state was at its height at 14 percent during 1982. In the third quarter of 1984, the rate was 12 percent and has declined since then to less than 4 percent, he said. The Texas Research League is a non-profit group funded by corpo-

"It is irresponsible of Mr. Hughes to be alarming state employees unnecessarily, especially when these employees are working so hard to serve clients,' he said.

"I think Mr. Hughes, if he thinks about it, will understand that the state is trying to do everything we can to see that state employees are not affected adversely," Meriwether said.

Community placement is required by U.S. District Judge Barefoot Sanders' order that all state schools reduce their populations and place clients in "the least restrictive environment.'

Hughes said budget cuts by the Texas Department of Mental Health and Mental Retardation resulting from community placements would be about $1 million for the Kerrville State Hospital and about $1.6 million for the San Angelo State School.

Hughes, who has been an outspoken critic of White and has led opposition to his re-election, said that because the governor appointed the members of the MHMR board, he is responsible for the acceleration of community placements.

About 700 clients have been placed in community settings in the past seven months.

But Meriwether said there has been no direct intervention by Gov. White on this matter with respect to encouraging or discouraging this particular set of circumstances

He added that "we are not talking about layoffs at all. We're talking about a reduction in force that would occur as a result of attrition.

I think it's safe to say that those who know me have no envy for the job my mom faced in raising Dan. Looking back, she should've received hazard pay.

I was one of those kids who would commit the household crime of the century then look like such an angel, but with a dog grin. To avoid school, it wasn't beyond me to play sick and stick the thermometer to a light bulb for fever proof, or call the school and try and fake mom's voice saying I wouldn't be in (after mom had already gone to work). I was one of those kids that didn't always care about yeses and nos, who bucked authority enough times to make the calmest of parents shudder. Sometimes I got a smart mouth. 'How many times do I have to tell you, Danny Brett?'' (That's me

Or, "Don't you understand English?"

'Not fully. No. Then came high school, girls and cars.

Let's see, three of my cars are now official, totalled, wrecked hunks of metal (though none of the accidents were my fault). I got three speeding tickets within four months of getting my drivers license, once with the cruise control set on 95.

I remember calling mom after I totalled my Toyota in the weirdest hit and run in the history of Dallas freeways. I hit this guy's car and he ran. I blacked out for a bit, and came to in what used to be a Toyota. It was the city, at 6 a.m., so no one had stopped to help, and the first thing I could think to do after pushing my car to the shoulder was call mom and the police. In that order.

'Mom "Dan.

"I wrecked my car. My head hurts. Come and get me."

"What!?

Of course, mom was on the road in five minutes. Mom called the insurance company. Mom drove me to work until the insurance money came, and then she took me car shopping. Mom was always good about getting me places, since third grade and Pop Warner football.

Teenagers seem to discover girls, beer and cars about simultaneously. I did. I don't have to tell any of you parents what a headache that is, and I'm not talking hangovers. I'm talking Dan coming in at 4 a.m. when he never even said he was leaving.

Then came college

'Mom.

"I'm broke, my car's broke, the payments on it are two months late and I need tuition money.

Danny Brett.

That's you mom. Happy day. I love you.

Finally there's Dan in the Real World, which eases mom's worries some, but not enough so she can ever truly relax. She likes it when I I'm a bit of a Linkhorn, and prone to doing things like taking off to Mexico for 10 days when only four were planned, and not calling. Flying to New Orleans at 1 a.m. on a Saturday night. And not calling. In short, I'm not a perfect son, but my mother doesn't give a dime about that. I'm her first, born when she was 17 and a preacher's daughter in Pampa, and if you ask her about me, she won't tell you the things I just have. She'll tell you the good things I've done. How proud she is. How she loves me I'll tell you the same things about mom, but I can never tell her often enough

Along with my other faults (not counting the adulterer and glue sniffer charges we've discussed on other ocassions in this space) I'm very bad about not calling home much and not writing letters. Which may or may not be strange for a writer, but is in any case fact.

So I never talk to mom often enough, and it's very strange going months, and even years without seeing your mother. But every time you do, it's like being born again.

I have partially solved the communication problem, though. I got mom a mail subscription to our paper. So this column has at least one fan, and it's the only one it needs.

Grand jury again refuses to indict ex-airport chief

DALLAS (AP) - A second grand jury has declined to indict the former Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport executive director on charges of accepting a gift from a contractor doing business at the airport.

Ernest Dean was the highestranking official implicated in an eight-month investigation into contract irregularities and official misconduct at the airport.

'The grand jury found insufficient evidence for the case to go to trial." Assistant District Attorney Hugh Lucas said Thursday. "I presume that unless something additional comes up, that this would be the end of the Dean matter.

Dallas police obtained a Class A misdemeanor arrest warrant April 25 that charged Dean with receiving $5,642 worth of free surveying work from Carter & Burgess Inc. of Fort Worth.

A prosecution report stated that the engineering firm provided the work in 1984 on property Dean owned in the Grapevine Industrial Park adjacent to the air-

Carter & Burgess was awarded at least eight contracts at the airport from 1978 to 1984, totaling $6.4 million.

Dean, who resigned under pressure in July, said after the jurors declined to indict him that he feels he has been exonerated.

"I thought that's the way it would go, but you can never be sure." he said. "It's been a long time and it's been very traumatic. I'm just tired of seeing my name in the paper.

Police officials' filing of charges in Dean's case marked a departure from previous procedure in an investigation of contract irregularities. The probe officially ended last week.

EVER STRIVING FOR TOP O' TEXAS TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Sticks might work better than carrots

Relations between the United States and Ethiopia have deteriorated even further than most Americans realize. In the best long-term interest of both countries, they ought to deteriorate some more

According to The Washington Post, the CIA has been providing propaganda materials and other nonmilitary assistance to anti-communist dissidents in Ethiopia since 1981.

The country's Marxist government responded two years ago by abducting a CIA officer, subjecting him to various tortures, including Russian roulette, and releasing him only after intervention by U.S. ambassador at large Vernon Walters, now this country's chief delegate to the United Nations.

Ironically, the U.S. Agency for International Development has been sending Ethiopia massive food shipments during the same period. Despite Ethiopia's increasingly repressive rule, Washington judged the goal of rescuing millions from famine was more important than political disagreements.

But AID administrator Peter McPherson now believe conditions have changed. Reports from his investigators have convinced him the Ethiopian government is using U.S. relief shipments to force villagers to move from rebellious northern provinces to diseaseridden areas in the south. The regime's deliberately brutal treatment of these people is now probably causing more deaths than famine. So McPherson is considering an end to the shipments.

The state Department is also taking a harder line. Last fall an official announced the department had made several efforts to improve relations, but the Ethiopian leadership failed to respond. The House Africa subcommittee unanimously supports a bill promoted by Rep. Toby Roth, R-Wisc., and Rep. Stephen Solarz, D-N.Y., that would formally classify Ethiopia as "a communist country" and thus cause it to lose favorable trade terms with the United States. It could also be the first step toward a trade embargo. After several million dollars worth of carrots, it's time to try a few sticks.

We shouldn't bar ideas

The First Amendment's guarantees for free speech and free press rest on the belief that bad ideas, like good ideas, must be free to contend for the allegiance of the people. It is not the task of the government to decide which is which, much less to suppress the former and encourage the latter. If dangerous doctrines are preached, said Thomas Jefferson, they should be tolerated 'as monuments of the safety with which error of opinion may be tolerated where reason is left free to combat it.

That is the only approach befitting a free people. But even in this country, there is a constant war with those who regard offensive ideas as the moral equivalent of disease from which Americans must be protected. That idea is at the heart of a dispute now before the Supreme

Federal law requires agents of foreign governments to provide the attorney general with copies of any "political propaganda" disseminated by those governments. In distributing it, they must attach a statement identifying the sponsoring government and indicating that its registration with the Justice Department "does not indicate approval of the contents of this material by the United States government."

In 1982, the Justice Department identified as 'political propaganda' three films submitted by the National Film Board of Canada, two dealing with acid rain and one with nuclear war.

Barry Keene, a California lawyer, then sued, arguing that the government had officially "denigrated" the films and thus unconstitutionally discouraged him from showing them.

A district court ruled in Keene's favor, agreeing that the term "political propaganda" was "designed to express the suspicion with which Congress regarded the material" and thus to "place a whole category of materials beyond the pale of legitimate discourse."

It isn't clear that the Supreme Court will agree. The case hinges on the tedious question of whether the term "propaganda" is pejorative. In everyday usage, it is. But as defined in this law, which follows some dictionary definitions, it is a synonym for advocacy.

And the required statement, which is inserted at the beginning of films, avoids the term entirely. in favor of more neutral language. The typical viewer would never know that the Justice Department has classified the film as propaganda. The Court may decide that the term has no necessary negative connotations, or that its use doesn't deter exhibition or both.

The law's defect, however, goes deeper than this particular term. What should be at issue here is not whether the government may afix a disparaging label to imported books or films, but whether it may require identification before they may be distributed to Americans.

The point of the identification, after all, is to put the audience on its guard, by suggesting that there is something dangerous about the material. This is merely an oblique way of doing what the Court has said and government may not do: "prescribe what shall be orthodox in politics, nationalism, religion or other matters of

It's hard to imagine that the Court would uphold a law requiring, with no clear and legitimate purpose, that domestic books or films dealing with political topics carry a label providing infomation about their source. The only likely purpose of such a law would be to inhibit free expression.

Political propaganda, by whatever name, is in the eye of the beholder. What looks impartial and non-political to one citizen may look just the opposite to another. The law invites abuse. No administration can be trusted to classify material even-handedly, unswayed by its own politic-

The government should have no right to shut out materials advocating disfavored ideas, or to erect barriers to their dissemination once those material are admitted. This law presumes that America can't be trusted to hear and consider imported ideas. But a system of free expression, in which ideas of all sorts are exposed to relentless examination and debate, is all the protection Americans need.

Chief Justice Warren Burger says our justice system has been so misused that lawyers who should be "healers" have become "hired guns." And even in criminal justice, a "life sent-

Can't conservatives enjoy victory?

By William A. Rusher

pany will pay it."

The dinner in honor of the Heritage Foundation, held in Washington late last month, was one of those triumphal occasions we conservatives are getting pretty good at staging.

Easily 2,000 people crowded into the Shoreham's ballroom to see and be seen, indulge in the usual political table-hopping and hear President Reagan warn that Nicaragua's Sandinista regime is threatening to become "a Libya on our doorstep.

Almost everybody who is anybody in the conservative movement was there. Over there, beaming like an elderly pixie, was Russell Kirk, whose "The Conservative Mind" was one of the foundation stones of the movement a third of a century ago. A few tables away was Paul Weyrich, who two decades later brought his keen political intelligence to the task of translating Kirk's principles into votes in Congress.

Indeed, most of those present had poured their lives into the task of bringing the movement to its current high estate. And presiding over the occasion from the dais were the men who had most cause to celebrate the $37 million dollars the Heritage Foundation has raised since it observed its 10th anniversary in 1983: its board Chairman Shelby Cullom Davis, its tireless President Ed Feulner and Joe Coors, the Colorado beer magnate who had the foresight to back Heritage financially long before those $37 million were raised.

A "think tank" such as the Heritage Foundation is absolutely indispensable to a presidential administration which, like Ronald Reagan's, has a serious agenda of things it proposed to accomplish. That agenda is what Heritage has so largely managed to flesh out for the Reagan administration, and why that glittering party was held in its honor at the Shoreham.

And yet every triumph inevitably involves certain reservations. As it happens, there came into my hands just the other day a copy of the spring 1986 issue of the "Intercollegiate Review," a conservative quarterly. The first half-dozen essays in the magazine constitute a "symposium" on what's wrong, these days, with the conservative movement.

Well, gosh, I thought things were going pretty well! And yet the memof the symposium are all thoughtful conservatives (one of them, in fact, was Russell Kirk), whose doubts and reservations must be taken seriously. There are, of course, people who just can't stand success - born nay-sayers (Madame Lenin reputedly was one) who will oppose whatever group is in power, even though they worked a lifetime to put it there. But that doesn't seem to be the mood of "Intercollegiate Review's" essayists.

Rather, they have two basic complaints. One has to do with what they regard as the dubious types that have joined the conservative movement in recent years: the so-called neo-conservatives (typified by Irving Kristol, Norman Podhoretz and "Commentary" magazine) and the New Right (i.e., the quasi-populist activists like Richard Viguerie, Howard Phillips and Terry Dolan of NCPAC). The conservatives in "Intercollegiate Review's" symposium are purists. They suspect the neo-conservatives of not being quite enthusiastic enough about untrammeled free enterprise. And they feel equally uneasy over the New Right's readiness to make populist noises about big corporations, etc.

Second, the "Intercollegiate Review's" purists are slightly contemptuous of what they evidently perceive as the office-grubbing mood that has come over a good many conservatives inside Washington's famous Beltway. ("You got your job; now help me get mine."

I am glad I was at the Heritage din-ner. I am with them heart and soul, and I see nothing wrong with rejoicing, now that conservatism's years in the desert are over. Nor do I fear the New Right or the neo-conservatives, or regret the number of conservatives now in public office. But I am glad, too, that "Intercollegiate Review" published its symposium. It never hurts to be reminded that principles

House budget committee approves spending plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House Budget Committee approved a fiscal 1987 budget that endorses a tax increase but, unlike the Senate, puts most of that money toward deficit cutting instead of Pentagohrough a $994.2 billion spending plan over Republican complaints that it would cripple the military and that Democrats would spend any new tax dollars

Only a single Republican, Rep. Vin Weber of Minnesota, joined Democrats in the 21-11 final vote to send the package to the floor. Full House action could come next week.

The budget, proposed by committee Chairman William H. Gray III, D-Pa., would increase taxes by $7.3 billion over President Reagan's budget plan — the same increase passed by the Senate last week.

But while the Senate's bipartisan plan boosted military spending to cover inflation, the House plan would freeze the military buildup

The deficit in the House plan would be $137 billion, $7 billion below the statutory limit which the Senate's budget just met.

Republicans said they couldn't go along with the military cuts or new taxes.

"The Defense Department can't live with that budget," said Rep. Delbert L. Latta of Ohio, senior Republican on the committee. Latta proposed more cuts in domestic programs to bring military spending up to the Senate's level, but was defeated as Democrats muscled their plan

Democrats also defeated a Republican amendment to eliminate the tax boost.

The committee plan would cut military budget authority next year to $285 billion, $1.8 billion below this year's level. The plan would hold $3 billion of that aside until Pentagon audits show how past years' increases were spent.

The Senate approved a $301 billion budget for the military, while President Reagan requested $320 billion. Budget authority includes some money actually spent over several years, so actual cash spending totals differ.

The Democratic plan spreads out domestic spending cuts, with many government agencies facing an across-the-board 2.5 percent cut. Selected programs would be increased, mostly those for children, education and medical care for the poor

The $4 billion program of revenue-sharing with local governments would be eliminated, as it would in the Senate plan.

Highway programs would be cut 5 percent and mass transit cut 10 percent.

Amtrak, however, would have its budget slightly increased.

The House proposal would give military and civilian government workers a 3 percent raise. However, Social Security recipients and federal retirees would get only a 2 percent cost-of-living boost. The Senate approved 2 percent for all except the uniformed military, who would get 3 per-income tax debate, focus is on IR

WASHINGTON (AP) - Individual Retirement Accounts, that newfound but widely used tax shelter for middle America, are becoming the focus of Senate debate on a plan for overhauling the income-tax

A full month before Senate floor action on the bill is likely, two Republican members have introduced a resolution that would put the lawmakers on record in favor of keeping fully deductible IRAs for everybody who can afford them.

It is no secret that President Reagan and Treasury Department officials are concerned about a provision in the overhaul bill that would allow the full IRA tax break only for workers who are not eligible for company pension plans.

Reagan telephoned Sen. Bob Packwood, R-Ore., chief author of the bill, on Thursday to congratulate him on the effort and said he is generally satisfied with the plan, White House spokesman Larry Speakes told reporters. Packwood chairs the Senate Finance Com-

However, Speakes declined to say whether Reagan supports the anti-IRA part of the bill or another sensitive provision, which would repeal the preferential tax treatment of individual capital gains.

Reagan's own tax-overhaul plan would retain a fully deductible $2,000-a-year IRA for all workers and allow the same set-aside for spouses who earn no wages. Non-working spouses now are limited to a tax-deferred contribution of $250 a year.

And rather than repealing the tax break for capital gains, the president proposed to expand it so that inflation-caused increases in the value of stocks and other assets would not be taxed

Data-tracking problem surfaces at dump sites

YAKIMA, Wash. (AP) — Poor sites has been going on for nearly record-keeping in geological studies has led to research being stopped at proposed sites for the nation's first high-level nuclear waste repository in Washington state and Nevada, spokesmen

The U.S. Department of Energy stop work orders are not expected to affect recommendations due later this month that the sites be studied further for suitability as the nation's first highlevel nuclear waste dump, spokeswoman Ginger King said Thursday.

A recent quality assurance survey showed that some of the documentation needed to be improved" at waste isolation projects on the Hanford nuclear reservation and Yucca Mountain in Nevada, Ms. King said.

"The documentation wasn't in the best order, so we said, 'Go back and get it in order,'" she said in a telephone interview from Washington, D.C.

Some work on the Basalt Waste Isolation Project at Hanford, near Richland, Wash., will be 'redirected'' while recordkeeping and management controls are tightened, Barry Moravek, a spokesman for Hanford Rockwell Operations, said Thursday.

Hanford Rockwell, a division of Rockwell International that is prime contractor on the BWIP project, is expected to announce Monday its plans for improving record-keeping and what research will be stopped pending quality assurance reviews, Moravek said.

A similar work stoppage is in effect at the Yucca Mountain site in Nevada, 100 miles northwest of Las Vegas.

A third site in Deaf Smith County in the Texas Panhandle also is expected to be recommended for additional study.

Preliminary research at both the Hanford and Yucca Mountain

10 years. Should they be nominated, as much as $1 billion would be spent at each site on five-year "characterization" work.

Congress has mandated that the Energy Department recommend a site for the first repository by 1990 and have that site operational by 1998.

The Nuclear Regulatory Commission must issue a license before the dump begins accepting nuclear waste.

Should Hanford be selected as a finalist, the department wants the basalt program to be ready for NRC licensing requirements, said Energy Department spokesman Mike Talbot in Richland.

"We didn't feel that enough progress was being made toward developing procedures for documentation, training, or management controls, to meet the needs of NRC licensing," Talbot said.

Moravek described the action as "a switch from a purely research mode to a site characterization mode."

The stop work order went into effect at Hanford on Wednesday after discussions between the Energy Department and Hanford Rockwell, Talbot said

The record-keeping and document-tracking problem was first noticed at the Yucca Mountain site by the U.S. Geological Survey, Ms. King said. The Energy Department then issued its stop work order, she said.

A number of activities at Hanford are exempt from the stop work order, including "those things necessary to achieve adequate implementation of the BWIP quality assurance program," Talbot said:

He called the work stoppage a 'redirection of efforts. "Nobody is being laid off, no funds are being cut," he said. Neither Talbot nor Moravek could say which projects would be "redirected" at Hanford.

Senate Democratic Whip Alan Cranston of California attacked the Finance Committee bill Thursday on both issues and several others as well, as did Sen. John Melcher, D-Mont. Their complaints and the effort by Sens. Bill Roth, R-Del., and Alfonse D'Amato, R-N.Y., to keep fully deductible IRAs marked a departure from what has been strong congressional support for the bill since it was approved by the committee on Wednesday.

"IRAs are absolutely essential for working middle-income families," D'Amato told colleagues. "They have made it possible for famillies of modest means to plan for the future.

"IRAs are just beginning to accomplish their goals," Roth said. 'They have only been in place effectively since 1982. But worse than : the absurdity of repealing a provision so early is the signal it sends to middle-class savers.

"If we were to implement savings incentives in the future," Roth said, "who would believe us?"

IRAs for all workers, including those eligible for company pension plans, were enacted as part of Reagan's tax cut in 1981, to help take pressure off the Social Security system and to increase incentives for saving. The investment industry estimates about 28.5 million families have IRAs, including about 20 million who are covered by employer-paid pensions. Majority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., plans to begin Senate floor action on the tax bill in early June. He told reporters Thursday that "it's got so much zip right now we won't be able to hold it up too long." The proposal is so popular, he added, that it could sail through the Senate in two weeks assesses Libya bombing Pentagon

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Pentagon for the first time acknowledged that some U.S. bombs hit civilian areas during last month's air raid on Libya, and added that it is seeking details on the Arab country's claim it has recovered the body of an American flier killed in the attack.

The Defense Department said Thursday that three bombs dropped by an F-111 bomber missed their targets, "and it seems likely they impacted in the vicinity of the French Embassy," a building in Tripoli that was damaged during the April 15 raid.

In addition, two other bombs aimed at a terrorist barracks compound in Benghazi were errant. the Pentagon said.

The Defense Department has never provided a detailed breakdown on the number of bombs dropped during the night-time raid. Pentagon sources disclosed, however, that more than 225 bombs of various types - 500 pound, 750 pound and 2,000 pound - were used, totaling 100 tons worth of ordnance.

That would mean that about 2 percent of the bombs known to have been dropped during the raid hit civilian areas.

"Any other damage claimed by the Libyans, if actually true, most likely resulted from Libyan ordnance falling back to earth,' the Pentagon said in a written assessment of the assault.

The Pentagon has said dozens of anti-aircraft missiles fired by the Libyans at the American planes missed their targets and fell back to earth.

One top defense official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the F-111 that dropped three errant bombs is the plane that did not return from the raid

Pentagon spokesman Robert Sims also said Thursday that the United States, working through the Belgian government, had requested more information from Libya on its claim that it found the body of one of the two airmen missing from the raid.

Sims said no reply had been received as yet. But he said the United States was prepared to request the return of the body on humanitarian grounds.

The Defense Department has said five of the 18 F-111s dispatched on the raid and two of the 14 Navy A-6 attack jets did not drop any bombs, either for "technical" or "other" reasons.

Memo shows Reagan official advised Canada how to attack U.S. absestos law

WASHINGTON (AP) - A Canadian diplomatic document discloses that a Reagan administration regulatory official privately advised Canadians early this year on strategy to weaken a proposed rule to ban deadly asbestos in this country. The document, made public Thursday by the House Energy and Commerce oversight and investigations subcommittee, is an unclassified telex sent Jan. 31 to Ottawa by officials of the Canadian Embassy. The telex contains a report of a meeting a day earlier between two unidentified Canadian diplomats and Robert Bedell, deputy administrator of the Office of that oversees rulemaking by federal agencies.

The topic of the meeting, requested by Canada, was the proposed asbestos rule announced just days before by the Environmental Protection Agency after a long struggle against OMB.

The telex shows that Bedell not only voiced continued OMB opposition to banning asbestos but also advised Canada — which supplies about 90 percent of the asbestos used in this country how to focus it's battle against the EPA proposal.

The advice-giving brought Bedell a tongue-lashing when he appeared before the subcommittee. "You were out conspiring with officials of a foreign governrule," said Rep. Ron Wyden, D-

Bedell, who said he did not keep notes of the meeting, told the subcommittee it was "a briefing session" and that some portions of the unclassified report to Ottawa were "flat wrong."

"I was not telling them how to undermine an important health and safety rule," he testified.

The subcommittee declined to say how it obtained the telex, which characterized the meeting to which EPA was invited but did not attend - as "most encouraging.

Bedell encouraged Canada to participate directly in EPA's cifically told its two officials how to attack the proposed asbestos rule, according to the telex.

The advice centered on stressing that import restrictions on asbestos could violate international trade agreements and that portions of EPA's proposal could be rendered unnecessary by workplace exposure limits now in the final stages of preparation by the Occupational Safety and Health Administration.

The telex quoted Bedell as saying that one reason OMB late last year finally gave EPA the goahead to propose asbestos rules was "intense political pressure" from Congress, especially Rep. John Dingell, D-Mich.

Investors are against tax reform proposals

DALLAS (AP) - Many private investors and economists expressed shock at the proposed new tax reform bill that would restrict individual retirement accounts, and lawmakers braced for the angry reaction.

"It will have a catastrophic effect. It would essentially fin-ish the IRA program," said Bruce Reznick, account executive for the Austin office of Rauscher Pierce Refsnes Inc., a stockbroker.

He said the tax deduction that would be limited by the bill is the main reason that "95 percent of the people come to us to open an IRA.'

Of the 21 constituents who phoned Republican Rep. Steve Bartlett's Dallas office on Wednesday, 18 said they opposed the IRA provision.

'It's quite a popular program," said William Gibson, chief economist for Republic-Bank of Dallas.

He said the committee's proposal would reduce the national savings rate by discouraging investment in IRAs.

The plan by the Senate Finance Committee led by Bob Packwood, R-Ore. would prohibit the deduction for individuals eligible for private pension programs.

"It will remove the immediate tangible carrot for longterm savings," said Pete Fos-ter, executive vice president and manager of the trust banking and investments divisions of MBank in Austin.

"In some respects it's a heck of a blow," said Rich Matza, senior tax manager for the Austin office of the accounting firm Ernst & Whinney. "I personally think they may reinstate the IRA deduction - it's too popular a deduction. But they will have to come up with the dollars to make up for it."

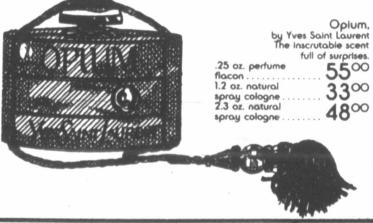

"It's going to take some grassroots groundswell of opposition," said Foster.

'I find it hard to believe they will kill a program that has been as successful as this one has been," said Reznick.

"Most, including ourselves, are watching with interest but aren't jumping to any conclusions," said Steve Chipman, executive vice president of MBank-Houston.

MBank has seen its IRA deposits grow from just a few million dollars in 1982, when the account provisions were broadened.

WASHINGTON (AP) - An upper-middle-income family of four with typical deductions would get a $1,125 tax cut under the taxoverhaul plan written by the Senate Finance Committee.

On the other hand, a two-earner couple with no children and total income of $75,000 would pay about $2,200 more in taxes if the plan becomes law, according to calculations by Ira Shapiro, director of national tax services for Coopers & Lybrand accountants.

A four-member family with $25,000 in wages and too few deductions to itemize would pay $533 less — a tax cut of 23 percent. A single person earning $25,000 wages and $500 interest would pay almost exactly the same taxes as under present law, Shapiro said.

The four examples indicate how varying incomes and expenses make it nearly impossible to generalize about what groups of people would win or lose under the far-reaching bill, which was approved by the committee Wednesday. It is awaiting action by the Senate, probably next month.

Backers of the legislation, including Finance Committee Chairman Bob Packwood, R-Ore., say the big winners would be lower- and middle-income families. The losers, they say, would be high-income people accustomed to using various investment gimmicks to shield much of their earnings from taxes.

But as Shapiro's calculations show, a person or family with relatively modest income could end up paying more taxes, even basic yuppie couple," Shapiro says — is a good example.

Winners, losers hard to identify under Senate tax plan

The husband earns $35,000 and the wife $40,000. Each puts $2,000 a year into a tax-deferred Individual Retirement Account. They pay state and local taxes totaling $5,035, including $375 in sales taxes. Their mortgage interest runs $16,500 a year. The interest on their automobile loan and credit cards is $5,000. They deduct $500 as miscellaneous expenses, the fee for having their tax return prepared. And they give $1,000 to charity.

Under the Finance Committee bill, the couple would lose the $3,000 deduction allowed twoearner couples. The bill would disallow the deduction for state and local sales taxes, for the $5,000 of personal interest and the $4,000 deduction for IRAs.

The bottom line: the couple's $7,377 tax liability under present law would rise to $9,570. The closest thing they have to a tax shelter is the IRA and a home with a high mortgage.

The couple with two children and $25,000 of wages would continue not itemizing deductions under the Finance Committee proposal. The tax liability, now $2,333, would drop to $1,800.

The chief reason for the big tax cut for that family would be the increase in personal exemptions and the standard deduction. The personal exemption under present law is expected to be about $1,160 per person in 1988, when the Finance Committee provisions would be fully in effect. Under the bill, the exemption would rise to $2,000 per person.

The standard deduction for a joint return, expected to be about $2,670 in 1988 under present law, would rise to $5,000 under the bill.

Together, the standard deduction and the personal exemptions would mean the family could earn $13,000 before any income was subject to income tax.

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP)— Even as you think about putting away some cash for a rainy day, there are rats here making the same choices. Thinking of changing brands of gasoline to get a better price? Ray Battalio, a Texas A&M University economist, has rodents mulling over a similar decision.

People deal with checking accounts, money market funds, savings accounts and income taxes. They buy gasoline, frozen dinners and cigarettes.

For the rats used in Battalio's economics research laboratory, the choices are different - food pellets, root beer, and tonic water - but the behavior is the same as people involved in the rat race.

'There are very few behavior patterns that are species specific," Battalio says, meaning rats, pigeons, monkeys, and even amoeba will do the same things as humans given the same

Economics is an old field, but economics research—the testing of theories to see if they're true or can be proven — is relatively new. A meeting of economics researchers 16 years ago had 16 participants. A meeting last month drew nearly 100 resear-

Most of them, however, use humans in their experiments. Battalio and colleague J.H. Kagel of the University of Houston may have the only rat lab in the country devoted to economics.

Battalio began using rats in the early 70s while at the State University of New York at Stony Brook. A psychologist suggested rats because they're cheaper and easier to control.

"It would be difficult to get a person, cut their income by 25 percent, for example, and study how they react," he said.

They began with one rat. Now there are 22 rats in the lab, located in an office building in the center of the A&M campus. Kagel, a former A&M faculty member, still works with Battalio on projects.

Battalio and Kagel get ideas for experiments from articles in economic journals. They read aabout new theories, interpret them and model an experiment to fit the interpretation.

A recent two-year experiment, for example, tested a theory that low income workers spend money rather than save it, while high income workers save money.

To simulate a human environment, researchers created two classes of rat: poor and rich. The poor rats were slightly underfed while rich rats were fed nor-

Each was put in a cage with a computer-controlled food dispenser. One lever was timed to pay off with one pellet after a sixsecond wait. The second lever gave the rats four pellets, but only after a 20-second wait.

The result was that the poor rats waited for more food, symbolic of their desire to save, while the rich rats couldn't wait, meaning they went for the fast payoff. The conclusion? Poor people are willing to invest in their fu-

Another theory tested showed that rats, given the choice between paying more for a favored food or making another choice, would rather work less for their second choice.

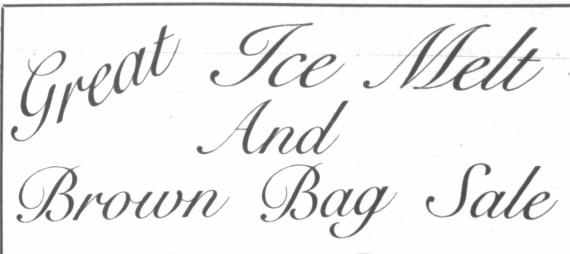

In this case, the choices were root beer, which they love, and tonic water, which they didn't like as much as root beer. Cost was represented by the lever. Pushing it a few times meant a low cost. Pushing it several times meant a higher cost. When given the choice of pressing the lever a few times for tonic water of many times for root beer, rats choose the tonic water. When the root beer cost the same, root beer won out four to one.

One educator decided to grow

By CHRISTOPHER CON NELL Associated Press Writer

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) - As Bill Honig tells the story, he was strolling through Golden Gate Park one day at the tag end of the 1960s, surrounded by hippies, Hare Krishnas and exhibitionists, when it struck him that "my generation was refusing to grow

"Emotionally, we were still children in the park," Honig says. "That's when I decided that the world could probably survive with one less lawyer but that one more teacher might make a difference.'

So Honig turned his back on a corporate law practice and joined the Teacher Corps. Struggling to help 9-and 10-year-olds in an alternative elementary school learn reading and math, he soon underwent another conversion: from progressive educator to tra-

Today, he is California's superintendent of public instruction and in the forefront of the school reform movement in America.

His words have impact far beyond California's berders, whether he is bearding publishers to restore evolution to their science textbooks, campaigning for a core curriculum or sounding the tocsin about teacher shortages

His own career, with the switch from open classroom zealot to rock-ribbed traditionalist, marks him as the Everyman of a journey that many U.S. educators have undertaken since the 1960s.

In 1982, Honig, then a suburban school superintendent and member of the State Board of Education, came out of nowhere - he stood at 3 percent in the polls a few weeks before the first election — to trounce the incumbent superintendent, Wilson Riles, by 800,000 votes.

Some teachers wore black armbands to class. Honig had angered them by saying that 5 to 10 percent of the teachers were incompetent and by depicting California's school system as "a virtual caricature...in its lack of purpose, discipline and stan-on a Scarsdale diet for years, thanks to Proposition 13, the 1978 tax-limiting initiative, and a law dating back to Ronald Reagan's terms as governor that sped up the withdrawal of state aid as enrollments sagged.

"We were in a serious freefall," said Michael Kirst, a Stanford University education professor and former president of the State Board of Education. California had the shortest school day and some of the largest classes in the nation. The only state requirements for high school graduation were two years of physical education.

Honig engineered passage of a reform act in 1983 that lengthened California's school day, restored graduation requirements and boosted state aid by $3.5 billion to $13.7 billion in three years. Starting teacher salaries shot up from $13,500 to $20,265 in much of the state.

Today Honig is running for reelection against token opposition. He has strong support from teacher unions.

galaxy of top California business executives, who came to his support in 1983 when he was engaged in a tug-of-war with Gov. George Deukmejian over increasing the education budget.

Last fall Honig and the California Board of Education stared down major textbook publishers, forcing them to expand their treatment of evolution, sex and other sensitive topics in elementary and junior high science textbooks. Although such revisions were strongly opposed in some states, California controls 11 percent of the $1.3 billion-ayear textbook market and the publishers bowed to that state's wishes.

Many states are experiencing a miniboom in elementary enrollments. California is on the cutting edge of that trend, too. Schools are filled to bursting in the booming San Bernardino County, central Valley and Los Angeles areas.

Los Angeles, already teeming with 575,000 students, is switching to year-round classes as it girds for 85,000 more students by 1991. The schools can accommodate more children by operating all 12 months and alternating pupils' vacations.

Statewide, California officials say they need to build 26,140 new classrooms to keep pace with enrollments climbing from 4.1 million to a projected 4.7 million.

Honig figures he needs 85,000 new teachers - half as many as the current teaching force - to fill classrooms, new and old.

Minority students, who constituted 27 percent of the school population in 1970, now account for 42 percent and they will be a majority by the turn of the century. One in eight students -525,000 — is limited in English proficiency.

Honig 15 years ago found himself in an impoverished section of San Francisco called Hunter's Point where he and other Young Turks were sent to open an alternative public school called Second Community

"We had 120 kids, half blacks from the neighborhood and half bused-in whites, mainly the children of freethinkers who shared our enthusiasm for open education," Honig recalled in his 1985 book, "Last Chance for Our Chil-

It didn't take long for Honig to decide that the education fads of that era - open classrooms, relaxed discipline, English courses that substituted detective stories for Shakespeare - were a calamity for kids, both the poor ones he began working with from San Francisco housing projects and affluent children in a suburban district where he later became superintendent.

In 1975, he became a member of the California Board of Education, courtesy of a former fellow law clerk, then-Gov. Edmund G. "Jerry" Brown Jr.

Tall, bespectacled, balding and gaunt, Honig cuts a figure that invites comparisons with Ichabod Crane. California magazine once said he came across on television like "an escapee from a Brother Anthony Xerox commer-

Choir schedules free car wash

The Young Promise Choir of First United Methodist Church will have a free car wash from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Saturday.

The youth will be at the car wash in the 500 block of West Foster just west of Ogden and

The choir members have received pledges from members of the church for each car washed during the activity. Last year students washed more than 200 cars.

"We would very much appreciate you bringing all of your cars in so we can clean them for you," said Sara Wheeley, church secretary.

Proceeds earned from the pledges will fund activities for the choir.

Religious life improving in Soviet Union

By GEORGE W. CORNELL AP Religion Writer

NEW YORK (AP) - A widely respected British center that monitors religious conditions in the Soviet Union sees signs of potential improvements for religious life there.

Researchers for the center outside London, called Keston Colege, say that for the first time, there has been published word of changed Soviet legislation concerning the churches.

If the described "postive developments" actually are implemented, "it will be a clear indication of a more realistic policy by the Soviet authorities toward the church," the analysis says. It says the changes would mean

'a recognition of the church as a permanent force in society and a step in the direction of compliance with the constitutionally guaranteed (but to date abused) separation of church and state.' Alyona Kojevnikov, Keston's nformation director, and Michael Rowe, its research head, make that assessment of a report carried in the Journal of the Moscow Patriarchate, headquarters of the Russian Orthodox Church. Their analysis was distributed through Keston's U.S. branch in Framingham, Mass.

They say the report "clearly indicates that some revision has either already taken place or is in process" and that the steps cited would give the church "a greater degree of control over its own affairs."

This could "only serve to enhance the church's authority as a responsible body rather than a temporary concession to religious believers, and promote a better image for the Soviet government both at home and abroad," the analysis says.

At the same time, the center noted that the new Soviet leader, Mikhail Gorbachov, in his speech to the recent Communist Party Congress, gave no indication of 'any major shift in policy toward

However, the center noted that at the end of the amended party program, a new first sentence was added to a section on atheist education, saying:

"The party will use all forms of ideological influence for the wider propagation of scientific understanding of the world, for the overcoming of religious prejudices without permitting any violation of believers' feelings.

The center says the purpose of the addition "is probably to demonstrate the 'moderation' of the party's policy" since the sentence balances an ensuing warning that "religion cannot be used to the detriment" of individuals or society.

HIS TOUCH

By Charlotte Barbanne

Scripture: And the peace of God, which transcends all understanding, will guard your hearts and your minds in Christ Jesus. (Philippians 4:7 NIV)

I lay in a hospital bed with the smell of soap and antiseptics assaulting me.

Two nurses, three nurses aides and a doctor moved in and out of the room at what seemed to me to be freeway speed and racket.

My husband had been called to my bedside. Too sick to struggle, I waited.

In the midst of the alien environment and the scurrying of medical personnel, I found a quietness in my soul of a unique quality and depth. No death-bed prayers or confessions were required. I had nothing to fear from either life or death.

The Christ within me was my assurance plan - the peace which transcends all understanding

Establishing Ridley turtle nests on Padre Island is the goal of a head start turtle hatchery project started in 1978 by the National Marine Fisheries Service, which released about 990 sea turtles six to eight miles off the shores of northern Padre Island and Mustang Island.

The Ridley's last natural nesting site is Playa del Rancho Nuevo in the state of Tamaulipas,

In 1947, about 47,000 Ridley females crawled onto the Mexican beach and laid 80 to 100 eggs each. Last year, fewer than 500 females appeared.

Each year since 1978, Mexican and U.S. government agencies have placed plastic bags under Ridley turtles on the Mexican beach, packed the eggs and then transported them to Padre Island for hatching.

Once hatched, the baby turtles are allowed to run across the Texas beach and enter the Gulf of Mexico before being taken to Galveston for a year's growth.

The theory is that hatching on the Texas beach — and never having been allowed to touch the Mexican sand, even in the egg will cause the turtles to nest there when they reach maturity. But wildlife officials aren't certain how long it takes the turtles to mature.

On April 22, 560 of the turtles were released in the western portion of Copano Bay near Rockport, Texas. The year-old turtles released Tuesday - weighing 21/2 to 3 pounds - bring to more than 10,000 the number of Ridleys given a head start on life.

American women plan to climb Chinese peak had met for five days in Conifer

By CLAIRE MARTIN The Denver Post

DENVER (AP) - When Kathleen Giel was trekking in rugged western China last summer, she often gazed at the nearby Himalayas, wondering what it would be like to climb among them. This summer she and eight other women will find out.

Giel and the others, four from Colorado, are the first all-female expedition to receive permission from the People's Republic of China to climb the 25,325-foot Mount Kongur, the highest peak in the Pamir range of the Hima-

The Chinese government began allowing foreign expeditions there only five years ago. Five teams have attempted to climb Kongur so far. Only one team was successful, and one climber died.

"We're trying to set ourselves up for success physically and psychologically," said Pat Dillingham of Boulder, a 29-year-old former Outward Bound teacher. She said the group members recently, getting to know one another in the mountain home of expedition member Carole Petiet, a psychologist.

"I think it's a first," Dillingham said. "Most expeditions men or women - don't meet until base camp. I think the distinguishing thing about this group is that we did get together and lay that social groundwork. I think there'll be good payoffs for that."

Added Petiet: "A lot of expeditions don't prepare climbers for psychological stress, and group dynamics can interfere with a climb just as much as technical problems.

She said she planned to present a paper to the American Psychological Association on the "communication and power styles among the expedition team members, looking at how that impacts on the process of the climb."

In addition to her paper on the psychological aspects of the Mount Kongur climb, Petiet is working with Dr. Brenda Townes, a University of Washington psychologist who was involved in a similar project on Mount Everest.

She said that research involved the psychological and physical impact of altitude.

"It's the first research, to my knowledge, that's been done exclusively on women. Most research on the effects of altitude have been done on men, and there's been no neuropsychological research done at all on women.

Eight of the women on the team - Dillingham, Giel of Berkeley, Calif., Kathy Nilsen of Aspen, Deb Piranian of Leadville, Suzanne Hopkins of Boston, Nancey Goforth of Anchorage, Alaska, Nancy Fitzsimmons of Driggs, Idaho, and Joan Provencher of San Francisco - are or were teachers in outdoor adventure programs such as Outward Bound.

All are seasoned climbers. Dillingham said several had climbed at or above 20,000 feet. Petiet has mountaineered in the Swiss Alps and in the Canadian Rockies. Dillingham has climbed in the Cascades, including winter ascents, and the Rockies. Piranian has mountaineered in Washington, Switzerland and Colorado. Nilsen, a registered nurse, has spent seven seasons climbing in Alaska and the Canadian Rockies, and ascended the Yukon's Mount Kennedy via a new route.

"I think there's enough mountaineering experience that the length of the trip - two months isn't an issue for people," Dilling-

'Actually, that length is typical for an expedition. Our concern was conflicts, in terms of our needs, or in terms of personalities; what we're like when we get under stress, and what we need other people to do so we can continue to function effectively.

She said that during the Conifer gathering, the group had talked about strengths and weaknesses, and "about how we'd feel if we didn't come back. ..

"As for myself, I said that if I didn't come back, my attitude would be that I don't have a death wish, but if I had a choice in the matter, I'd rather die on a mountain than in a crash on the road."

The women have local equipment sponsors but are still looking for contributions.

Tiger has to find new home DUNCANVILLE, Texas (AP) "gentler than a house cat."

- Jumping Jack, a 9-month-old Bengal tiger, has nine more days to find a new place to roam.

Citing an ordinance prohibiting the keeping of wild animals unless the owner receives a specialuse permit from the City Council, officials informed Glen Gossett on Wednesday in writing that his 200-pound tiger must go within 10 days of the notice.

Gossett, owner of a car lot where the tiger roams unleashed behind a fence, said he will hide his pet until he hires a lawyer to appeal his case to the City Council.

One of Gossett's neighbors complained about the animal, which was purchased for $2,500 from an Amarillo animal breeder four months ago.

Gossett said he didn't know about the permit rule and hoped to convince the council the declawed tiger is, as he put it,

But some city officials are skeptical. Four years ago, they say, a pet panther got loose and sent a shudder through the city until police, firefighters and animal control officers caught up

"A tiger is a tiger is a tiger," said Councilman Grady Smithey. "The tiger just has to go. There's no way you can say a tiger will never be a potential hazard."

Gossett, who calls Jumping Jack "my kitty cat," said about 200 people a week come to his car lot to see the Bengal tiger, which is on the federal government's endangered species list.

"I gotta see that cat every day," said George Repka, a local car dealer. "Everyone is attached to him that comes around here.

Gossett said he's willing to cage Jumping Jack as long as he

Choir schedules free car wash

The Young Promise Choir of First United Methodist Church will have a free car wash from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Saturday.

The youth will be at the car wash in the 500 block of West Foster just west of Ogden and

The choir members have received pledges from members of the church for each car washed during the activity. Last year students washed more than 200 cars.

"We would very much appreciate you bringing all of your cars in so we can clean them for you," said Sara Wheeley, church secretary.

Proceeds earned from the pledges will fund activities for the choir.

Religious life improving in Soviet Union

By GEORGE W. CORNELL AP Religion Writer

NEW YORK (AP) - A widely respected British center that monitors religious conditions in the Soviet Union sees signs of potential improvements for religious life there.

Researchers for the center outside London, called Keston College, say that for the first time. there has been published word of changed Soviet legislation concerning the churches.

If the described "postive developments" actually are implemented, "it will be a clear indication of a more realistic policy by the Soviet authorities toward the church," the analysis says.

It says the changes would mean "a recognition of the church as a permanent force in society and a step in the direction of compliance with the constitutionally guaranteed (but to date abused) separation of church and state."

Alyona Kojevnikov, Keston's information director, and Michael Rowe, its research head, make that assessment of a report carried in the Journal of the Moscow Patriarchate, headquarters of the Russian Orthodox Church.

Their analysis was distributed through Keston's U.S. branch in Framingham, Mass.

They say the report "clearly indicates that some revision has either already taken place or is in process" and that the steps cited would give the church "a greater degree of control over its own

This could "only serve to enhance the church responsible body rather than a temporary concession to religious believers, and promote a better image for the Soviet government both at home and abroad," the analysis says.

At the same time, the center noted that the new Soviet leader, Mikhail Gorbachov, in his speech to the recent Communist Party Congress, gave no indication of any major shift in policy toward religion.'

However, the center noted that at the end of the amended party program, a new first sentence was added to a section on atheist education, saying:

"The party will use all forms of ideological influence for the wider propagation of scientific understanding of the world, for the overcoming of religious prejudices without permitting any violation of believers' feelings.'

The center says the purpose of the addition "is probably to demonstrate the 'moderation' of the party's policy" since the sentence balances an ensuing warning that "religion cannot be used to the detriment" of individuals

HIS TOUCH

By Charlotte Barbaree

Scripture: And the peace of God, which transcends all understanding, will guard your hearts and your minds in Christ Jesus. (Philippians 4:7

I lay in a hospital bed with the smell of soap and antiseptics assaulting me.

Two nurses, three nurses aides and a doctor moved in and out of the room at what seemed to me to be freeway speed and racket.

My husband had been called to my bedside. Too sick to struggle, I waited.

In the midst of the alien environment and the scurrying of medical personnel. I found a quietness in my soul of a uni-que quality and depth. No death-bed prayers or confessions were required. I had nothing to fear from either life or death.

The Christ within me was my assurance plan - the peace which transcends all understanding.

ico — to nest. Establishing Ridley turtle nests on Padre Island is the goal of a head start turtle hatchery project started in 1978 by the National Marine Fisheries Service, which released about 990 sea turtles six to eight miles off the shores of northern Padre Island and Mustang Island.

The Ridley's last natural nesting site is Playa del Rancho Nuevo in the state of Tamaulipas.

In 1947, about 47,000 Ridley females crawled onto the Mexican beach and laid 80 to 100 eggs each. Last year, fewer than 500 females appeared.

Each year since 1978, Mexican and U.S. government agencies have placed plastic bags under Ridley turtles on the Mexican beach, packed the eggs and then transported them to Padre Island for hatching.

Once hatched, the baby turtles are allowed to run across the Texas beach and enter the Gulf of Mexico before being taken to Galveston for a year's growth.

The theory is that hatching on the Texas beach — and never having been allowed to touch the Mexican sand, even in the egg will cause the turtles to nest there when they reach maturity. But wildlife officials aren't certain how long it takes the turtles to

On April 22, 560 of the turtles were released in the western portion of Copano Bay near Rockport, Texas. The year-old turtles released Tuesday — weighing 21/2 to 3 pounds — bring to more than 10,000 the number of Ridleys given a head start on life.

American women plan to climb Chinese peak By CLAIRE MARTIN The Denver Post

DENVER (AP) - When Kathleen Giel was trekking in rugged western China last summer, she often gazed at the nearby Himalayas, wondering what it would be like to climb among them. This summer she and eight other women will find out.

Giel and the others, four from Colorado, are the first all-female expedition to receive permission from the People's Republic of China to climb the 25,325-foot Mount Kongur, the highest peak in the Pamir range of the Himalayas

The Chinese government began allowing foreign expeditions there only five years ago. Five teams have attempted to climb Kongur so far. Only one team was successful, and one climber died.

"We're trying to set ourselves up for success physically and psychologically," said Pat Dillingham of Boulder, a 29-year-old former Outward Bound teacher. She said the group members recently, getting to know one another in the mountain home of expedition member Carole Petiet, a psychologist.

"I think it's a first," Dilling-ham said. "Most expeditions men or women - don't meet until base camp. I think the distinguishing thing about this group is that we did get together and lay that social groundwork. I think there'll be good payoffs for that.'

Added Petiet: "A lot of expeditions don't prepare climbers for psychological stress, and group dynamics can interfere with a climb just as much as technical problems.

She said she planned to present a paper to the American Psychological Association on the "communication and power styles. among the expedition team members, looking at how that impacts on the process of the climb."

In addition to her paper on the psychological aspects of the Mount Kongur climb, Petiet is working with Dr. Brenda Townes, a University of Washing-had met for five days in Conifer ton psychologist who was involved in a similar project on Mount Everest.

She said that research involved the psychological and physical impact of altitude 'It's the first research, to my knowledge, that's been done exclusively on women. Most research on the effects of altitude have been done on men, and there's been no neuropsychological research done at all on women.'

Eight of the women on the team Dillingham, Giel of Berkeley, Calif., Kathy Nilsen of Aspen, Deb Piranian of Leadville, Suzanne Hopkins of Boston, Nancey Goforth of Anchorage, Alaska. Nancy Fitzsimmons of Driggs, Idaho, and Joan Provencher of San Francisco — are or were teachers in outdoor adventure programs such as Outward

All are seasoned climbers. Dillingham said several had climbed at or above 20,000 feet. Petiet has mountaineered in the Swiss Alps and in the Canadian Rockies. Dillingham has climbed in the Cascades, including winter ascents, and the Rockies. Piranian has mountaineered in Washington, Switzerland and Colorado. Nilsen, a registered nurse, has spent seven seasons climbing in Alaska and the Canadian Rockies, and ascended the Yukon's Mount Kennedy via a

"I think there's enough mountaineering experience that the length of the trip - two months isn't an issue for people," Dilling-

"Actually, that length is typical for an expedition. Our concern was conflicts, in terms of our needs, or in terms of personalities; what we're like when we get under stress, and what we need other people to do so we can continue to function effectively."

ham said.

She said that during the Conifer gathering, the group had talked about strengths and weaknesses, and "about how we'd feel if we didn't come back. .

"As for myself, I said that if I didn't come back, my attitude would be that I don't have a death wish, but if I had a choice in the matter. I'd rather die on a mountain than in a crash on the road."

The women have local equipment sponsors but are still looking for contributions.

Tiger has to find new home

DUNCANVILLE, Texas (AP) - Jumping Jack, a 9-month-old Bengal tiger, has nine more days to find a new place to roam.

Citing an ordinance prohibiting the keeping of wild animals unless the owner receives a specialuse permit from the City Council, officials informed Glen Gossett on Wednesday in writing that his 200-pound tiger must go within 10 days of the notice.

Gossett, owner of a car lot where the tiger roams unleashed behind a fence, said he will hide his pet until he hires a lawyer to appeal his case to the City Council.

One of Gossett's neighbors complained about the animal which was purchased for $2,500 from an Amarillo animal breeder four months ago.

Gossett said he didn't know about the permit rule and hoped to convince the council the declawed tiger is, as he put it,

"gentler than a house cat." But some city officials are skeptical. Four years ago, they say, a pet panther got loose and sent a shudder through the city until police, firefighters and animal control officers caught up with it. "A tiger is a tiger is a tiger," said Councilman Grady Smithey. "The tiger just has to go. There's no way you can say a tiger will never be a potential hazard."

Gossett, who calls Jumping Jack "my kitty cat," said about 200 people a week come to his car lot to see the Bengal tiger, which is on the federal government's endangered species list.

"I gotta see that cat every day," said George Repka, a local car dealer. "Everyone is attached to him that comes

Gossett said he's willing to cage Jumping Jack as long as he can keep him.

Disaster service uppermost in mind of Red Cross

By LARRY HOLLIS Senior Writer

Though looking at new programs to expand its services, the American Red Cross disaster service is the area still "most on our minds," a national official told members of Gray County Chapter of Red Cross at its annual meeting Tuesday

"We were hit very badly last year" by disasters requiring Red Cross assistance, said Kent Hoffman, director of services to the armed forces and veterans with the Midwestern Operations Headquarters of ARC in St. Louis.

Speaking at the breakfast meeting in the basement of the First United Methodist Church. Hoffman cited the Mexico earthquake, hurricanes, the Columbia volcano, mud slides in Puerto Rico and tornadoes among the disasters occurring last year.

Red Cross assistance in those areas cut into the organization's reserve funds, requiring a campaign to raise more funds for disaster needs. Hoffman said.

He stated that some $40 million is needed to bring reserve funds up "to where we can feel comfortable" about the ability to provide disaster assistance. The disaster funds must be replenished so the Red Cross can meet the needs, he added.

But while the organization will continue to provide its disaster service, Red Cross chapters will also be moving into new service areas. Hoffman said

One new area is transplantation services for bone and tissue, a high technology field, he said.

We know there is a need for this in the U.S.," he explained, noting that the Red Cross can serve as a tissue retrieval service for the nation, maybe tying it in with its current blood programs. Many dentists need processed bone material, for example, he said, and there is also a need for it in many surgical areas. Some local chapters are already getting involved in the service, and now the national Red Cross is studying the area.

Another area in which the Red Cross can offer services is in the area of AIDS (Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome). Hoffman two people with the virus, though not necessarily having the disalready tested its donated blood supplies for the AIDS virus. Screening processes in the Panhandle area have discovered ease, he noted.

Red Cross chapters are also helping in the education end concerning the disease, informing AIDS, its risks, transmittal routes and other related matters, he said.

The health services arm of the Red Cross will be undergoing changes, Hoffman said. In the past the Red Cross used to be the major health services training organization with its CPR, first aid, swimming classes and other programs.

But now "everybody is getting into the act," Hoffman said. The Red Cross now has to be competitive and move into new concepts, he claimed

One change under consideration is the development of multichapter contracts to provide health services to corporations and other regional and national entities, Hoffman said.

For example, a corporation may approach a local Red Cross chapter about providing first aid classes to its employees, both in the chapter's city and at its other plants in other parts of the nation. The local chapter then would coordinate the training programs through the national headquarters to obtain the services of other Red Cross chapters located near the corporation's other plants, Hoffman explained.

Another change the organization is implementing is the offering of a corporate insurance plan to cover local chapters in liability areas. This is a result of the growing trend of liability lawsuits, he

The Red Cross also is starting a minority incentive program to get more minorities involved in the organization's management areas and to get more services to minorities, Hoffman said.

'We're always looking for good volunteers at the management level," both at chapter and beyond-chapter levels, Hoffman

Local chapter presents 1986 awards

New officers and directors of the Gray County Chapter of Red Cross were named and volunteers were honored at the chapter's annual meeting Tuesday morning at First United Methodist Church Heading the chapter for the 1986-1987 year will be Lee Waters, chairman; Steve Vaughn, vice chairman; Marion Fugate, secretary; and Betty Casey, treasurer.

New members of the board of directors are Jim Baker, Mark Buzzard and Carol Peet. Other directors are James Baird, Dave Brummett, James Fruge', Darrell Nordeen and Chuck Quarles

Presiding at the breakfast meeting was Mike Keagy, 1985-1986 chairman. Waters, who served as vice chairman in the past year, presented Keagy with a plaque of appreciation for her services as chairman and a member of the board of directors

Waters also presented a certificate of appreciation to Bill McComas for his services as a member of the board of directors for the past two years.

Disaster Chairman Ted Gikas presented the Volunteer Award to Vickie Moose for her assistance with the local chapter and for her volunteer service in the city's April, 1985, hailstorm program and her travels to Mississippi for hurricane aid and to Puerto Rico for assistance with the mud slides damages

Teen-aged virgin wonders just how far is too far

DEAR ABBY: I am a 19-year-old is petting. college student, and even though I've dated quite a bit, I'm, rather naive about sex. I am still a virgin and hope to remain one until I marry. Don't get me wrong, I'm no "Goody Two Shoes," but I don't want to risk an unwanted pregnancy. I'm dating a guy right now who has been around. He knows how I feel about sex before marriage, so he's never pressured me to go all the way, but I've come closer with him than I have with any other guy. I'm ashamed to tell you how far we've gone, but I'm still a virgin (I think).

A long time ago you explained how a virgin could get pregnant. I'm sorry I didn't save it, but I never dreamed I'd need it.

Well, last night I was with this guy and things really got out of hand. Everything happened so fast. Please run that piece again about how a virgin can get pregnant. I'm worried.

B., ST. PAUL

DEAR B.: The piece is from my booklet, "What Every Teenager Ought to Know." Many junior and senior high school teachers wrote to say that they had read it aloud to their students:

HOW TO GET PREGNANT One of the questions I have been asked often by teens is: "How far can I go without getting pregnant?"

That is not a dumb question. It's a very intelligent one. A lot of kids get aroused by just lying close to each other while kissing. Then they just naturally proceed to the next step, which

Sometimes they remove some of their clothing because it's "in the way," or they burrow underneath it to explore each other's bodies with their hands. This is known as heavy petting, or "doing everything else but."

The technical (and legal) definition of sexual intercourse is 'penetration." (The male's sex organ must penetrate the female's.) However, as impossible as it may sound, in the medical literature can be found cases where there has been no penetration - the girl remained a virgin, but after engaging in heavy petting, she found herself pregnant.

How can that be? Simple. The boy and girl were lying very close to each other (unclothed), doing "everything but," when a small amount of sperm leaked out ... near (not inside, but very close to) the girl's vagina. The sperm got into the moisture around the vagina and found its way up into it, and fertilized the egg!

FROM THE NOTEPAD: Congratulations to the award winners at Monday night's Harvester all-sports banquet. Some of the MVP awards were interesting. Girls golf winner JESSICA BAKER has won or shared it for three straight years; RENITA HILL and BRAD POPE, both juniors also won the award as sophomores: and the same was true for STEPHANIE TROLLIN-GER and KELLYE WELBORN, both seniors, in girls tennis. Special kudos to Fighting Heart recipient DAVID CARTER, and Hustling Harvester PAUL SIMP-SON. Those are the two oldest and most prestigious honors given annually. As the rule stands, unless it is a state championship team, athletes can attend only one such function free each year. And since many athletes today, especially below 5A level, participate in several sports, they would have to purchase tickets to attend a second affair, hardly a way to be honored...Glad to hear the 1969 winner of the Fighting Heart, LES WEATHERLY, is about to again become a fulltime Pampa resident. LA, Rockets head for summit meeting

The Mavericks' James Donaldson (40) tries to block a shot by the Lakers' Bryon Scott.

Having disposed of their respective second-round opponents, the Los Angeles Lakers and Houston Rockets are heading for a summit meeting in the NBA's Western Conference playoffs.

"I think Houston has a great chance of beating Los Angeles if they don't tighten up during the close games," Denver Coach Doug Moe said after his team was knocked out of the NBA playoffs by a 126-122 double-overtime loss to the Rockets Thursday night. "I really think they'll win. They don't have the experience L.A. has, but if they can relax and stay calm, they've got a chance."

The Rockets earned a berth in the Western final against the Lakers, who also wrapped up their second-round series in six games with a 120-107 victory over the Dallas Mavericks Thursday night.

The results were according to form. The Lakers, defending NBA champions, had won the Pacific Division in a breeze and the Rockets had won the Midwest with the second-best record in the Western Confer-

Tonight, Milwaukee will host Philadelphia in their Eastern Conference semifinal with the Bucks leading the 76ers 3-2. The winner will advance to the Eastern Conference final against the Boston Celtics, who won their secondround series against Atlanta. The Lakers, aroused by pregame comment from Dallas management they considered derogatory, charged into the conference finals behind Kareem Abdul-Jabbar's 27 points and Earvin Johnson's clutch fourth-quarter play.

The Lakers were called "clowns" by Dallas General Manager Norm Sonju before the game, but the intense defending champions took control from the start.

"Dallas is history now and we didn't have to boast to do it," Lakers Coach Pat Riley said. "That's one of the strengths of this team.

An irate Abdul-Jabbar jabbed the quiet Dallas fans in the fourth period saying: "I was wondering where they were. They didn't have much to say then, did they?'

Rockets 126, Nuggets 122 Lewis Lloyd and Rodney McCray hit key jumpers in the final 1:45 of a second overtime period as Houston, despite losing three starters to fouls, outlasted Denver.

Lloyd's 18-footer, just beating the 24-second shot clock with 1:45 left, gave Houston a 124-121 lead. McCray sank a 17footer along the baseline with 55 seconds remaining, and Denver couldn't counter.

TCU banned from bowl game participation

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) -Texas Christian University will be banned from participating in a bowl game for a year under the NCAA probation to be announced today it has been learned by The Associated Press TCU football Coach Jim Wacker held an early team meeting with the players before today's scheduled press conference to announce the sanctions received by the Horned Frogs who admitted boosters paid at least seven Players were mostly tightlipped after the 45-minute meeting with Wacker, but the indications were TCU's penalties had been lessened by the NCAA because of self-disclosure.

"The one-year ban on bowls is going to hurt the seniors, but we can live with it," said Ricky Stone of the Horned Frog football team. "The bowl ban is really the only bad part. It hurts the seniors and except for that, though, the NCAA action is fair.

Sophomore Jarrod Delaney said Wacker didn't give the Horned Frogs all the details.

However, Delaney said, "The penalty wasn't severe and we all have a good attitude about it. The way Coach Wacker talked he seemed almost to be happy. We're just glad it's over."

The NCAA's David Berst, head of the organization's enforcement arm, was expected to give the details later followed by TCU Chancellor William E. Tucker.

Mariners fire manager, but still lose

By BEN WALKER

Some say baseball teams play better in their first game after a managerial shakeup. Not the Seattle Mariners, though. They kept playing the same way that got their old manager fired.

"It's the kind of game that makes you want to go home and kick the dog," coach Marty Martinez, the Mariners' interim manager, said Thursday night after a 4-2 loss to the Boston Red Sox.

The Mariners, picked by many to challenge this season in the American League West, dismissed Manager Chuck Cottier on Thursday afternoon. The loss to visiting Boston gave Seattle a 9-20 record, including five straight defeats and 17 losses in the last 21

"I've been in losing situations like the Mariners and you're always wondering what will happen next," said Boston's Marty Barrett, who capped a four-run rally in the seventh inning with a two-run triple.

In the only other two AL games on Thursday, Toronto rallied past California 7-6 and Oakland edged Milwaukee 2-1.

Boston squandered several scoring opportunities before breaking through against Mike Morgan, 2-3, in the seventh inning. Trailing 2-0, Wade Boggs and Bill Buckner singled with one

Watson leads Nelson Golf Classic

DALLAS (AP) - Mark Hayes, delighted with the apparent end of a four-year slump, was able to put at least one worry behind him.

"Maybe," the soft-spoken Oklahoman said Thursday after shooting a 6-under-par 64 for a two-stroke lead in the storminterrupted and uncompleted first round of the Byron Nelson Classic, "I don't have to worry about making the cut.

And that's been a problem this season for the man who once was ranked among golf's more promising young players.

"It looks like I've been trying to miss the cut this year. I'd be four or five shots under the cut with five holes to play and then make double bogey or something and miss it again," Hayes, who has failed to qualify for the final 36 holes in half his starts this year,

But since he held the lead when a thunderstorm forced a suspension of play late Thursday afternoon, his chances of failing to qualify for the final 36 holes seems remote.

Twenty-one players were stranded on the new Tournament Players Club at Las Colinas by the afternoon thunderstorm and were scheduled to complete firstround play this morning, then will go to second-round play.

None of those stranded players appeared to have a chance to overtake Hayes. Of those who had yet to complete play, Steve Jones was the leader at two under par with four holes to go.

Of the 135 men who completed play, Andy Bean and Barry Jaeckel shared second at 66. Ken Brown of Scotland was next at 67. The group at 68 included

George Burns, Ronnie Black, Bobby Wadkins, Jim Gallagher, Mark Brooks and Trevor Dodds. Lee Trevino had a 69, defending champion Bob Eastwood 71 and Tom Watson, a four-time winner of this title, struggled to a 74 in the strong, gusty winds. Hayes, the first man off the tee shortly after dawn, beat the worst of the winds and weather and birdied the first five holes. He once got it to seven under par for the day, but three-putted for bogey on the 18th.

But one good round, Hayes said, doesn't mean he's completely out of the woods.

"I need to back it up with something. I haven't had four good rounds in a long time, for four years or so at least," Hayes a non-winner since 1977, said.

"It's hard to come back when you've completely lost your confidence and don't know why.

"I can feel it coming back, but there's still a long way to go," he ck chefs add pounds to New Orleans diners on a diet, this story is not for you. It deals with a great tradition, the black chefs of New Orleans, who have added an undefinable something to New Orleans cuisine and quite a few pounds to the entranced partakers thereof.

By HUGH A. MULLIGAN AP Special Correspondent

NEW ORLEANS (AP) - Some day, before it's too late, the curators of New Orleans culture have got to erect a Preservation Hall of the Palate, dedicated to preserving and handing on the genius of the city's great black chefs.

The "black hand in the pot," which many gourmets regard as the innovative ingredient in Creole cooking, is as much a part of the New Orleans scene as Mardi Gras floats, as the St. Charles streetcar swaying past those Greek Revival mansions in the Garden District, as a frenzied Dixieland horn cascading moonbeams of melody over the old iron lacework balconies of the French Quarter, or the Olympia Brass Band, strutting before the hearse in syncopated sorrow out to the old burial grounds consolingly located near Elysian Fields. There was a time, less than a decade ago, when black chefs in tall white hats presided god-like over the kitchens of almost all the great New Orleans restaurants: Galatoire's, Brennan's, Commander's Palace, the Caribbean Room at the Hotel Pontchartrain, Broussard's, La Louisianne, Court of the Two Sisters, in addition to the famous black restaurants like Dooky Chase's and Chez Helene, which even in Jim Crow's sternest days always attracted a loyal white clientele.

Now the ranks of the master Creole chefs, like those of the great jazz musicians, are dwindling, and sadly there are not many waiting to take their

Nathaniel Burton, who trained so many great New Orleans chefs and was to the skillet what Louis Armstrong was to the trumpet, died in January at age 72. "Nate was probably the most accomplished chef in this city," says Louis Evans, who worked under him as sous-chef at the Caribbean Room and succeeded to his title of executive chef after a brief interlude by a chef imported from

"Burton was the master, I'd give anything to have studied with him," sighs Leah Chase, a master chef with a nationwide fan club and gumbo mailing list who had never set foot in a restaurant in her life until she got a job waiting tables in a New Orleans coffee shop at age 18. Black people didn't go to restaurants. That's the way it was."

But blacks, like Leah's mother and Louis Evans' mother, did cook, and they cooked superbly, with a flair for herbs and spices learned from the Indians and with imagination born of the necessity of doing something interesting with leftovers to feed a large family. Helping out around town, they were quick to drink in the slow simmering jambalaya of the traditional New Orleans ethnic mixture of French, Spanish, Italian, German, Irish and lately Oriental cultures

Even now Leah Chase uses only fresh sassafras leaves from her father's tree across the lake in Madisonville, La., for her "file" gumbo. "Daddy died but his tree is still there, and my sister brings me the leaves once a week," she says with a sniff, lifting the lid from a fragrant bubbling broth. 'Another sister makes the best pickled vegetables you ever tasted. I had to send for some more yesterday. That's the nice thing about being from a big family - we were nine girls and sharecropper's shack in Carlysle, Miss.

"That was city food, we ate country food," says Evans, whose mother was a fine cook but never wrote any recipes down and measured everything with her fingers and hands. "The way I do now. Cooking is something you got to feel.

"I never take the salt box and pour it into a pot. I pour some in my hand, the way mother did. Growing up, we were six boys and a girl, but the girl was the youngest and we all had to take our turn at the stove. I never dreamt I'd spend my life doing Celebrities and tourists besiege Evans for recipes, and unlike the older black chefs whom he trained under, he doesn't mind writing them out. "Some of those chefs never let us apprentices see what they were up to," he recalls with a laugh. "They'd hide the spice box behind their back, or send you into the icebox for something and when you came back it was already fixed. I always figured a secretive chef like that was a scared chef ... scared

By MICHELLE LOCKE Associated Press Writer

SEVEN POINTS, Texas (AP) — M.D. Anderson Jr., who reaped more than 47 percent of the Republican land commissioner vote without spending a cent on his primary campaign, credits his success to "word of mouth."

Anderson's opponents contend he is capitalizing on the good name of the M.D. Anderson Hospital and Tumor Institute in Houston, and question why he used his initials on the ballot since he is known as Dudley in Seven Points, a town of about 650 people 50 miles southeast of Dallas.

But Anderson denied any ulterior motive Thursday, saying he felt he had to run either under his full name or his initials.

"It's not unusual for people to run on their initials," he said. "I don't think Marion Dudley Anderson Jr. ... there's hardly enough room on most of the ballots.

Anderson's showing in last Saturday's primary came as a surprise to state GOP Party Chairman George Strake.

"I wish I could tell you more that I know about him, but I just don't know," Strake said Wednesday. "I intend to find Strake called The Associated Press on Thursday. however, to say he had made several calls and felt "a lot better about this fellow.'

Anderson, a former Seven Points city council member who is a construction contractor and operates the Cedar Creek Plowboys Club with his wife, took 47.3 percent of the vote in the primary and will face Grady Yarbrough, a Tyler schoolteacher who won 27.2 percent, in a June 7 runoff.

Land Commissioner Garry Mauro says he's not worried about running against a Republican opponent, but does worry about "running against a famous hospital."

"I have considered changing my name to Gary Indi-Mauro, a Democrat, said jokingly.

Anderson paid the $3,000 filing fee but reported no expenses, according to campaign records filed with the secretary of state's office in Austin. He listed only $450 in contributions, including $100 from former Houston Mayor Louie Welch.

Anderson and his campaign manager, Ronald Hinds of Dallas, say they used GOP contacts throughout the state and made frequent visits to Republican women's clubs to publicize his candidacy.

Anderson said he was asked to run by Hinds and Tom Pauken, an unsuccessful congressional candidate in 1978 and 1980 against Democrat Jim Mattox, now Texas attorney general.

Hinds said he and Pauken touted Anderson's candidacy in their day-to-day business calls and urged Republican contacts to make calls on Anderson's behalf.

"You aren't going to find any yard signs, any posters; anything that cost any money," Hinds said.

Anderson, who received 179,039 votes, said he plans to use the same low-key strategy for the runoff and, if successful, for November's election.

'I was absolutely astounded at how many good Republicans that Ron Hinds and Tom Pauken know over the state,'

Strake said Wednesday the problem of candidates winning on the strength of their names is part of the political nature of a state as big as Texas, where reaching the electorate can be an expensive

In 1976, Texans elected Don Yarbrough, a Democrat whose name resembled former U.S. Sen. Ralph Yarborough's, to the Texas Supreme Court. Less than a year later, Yarbrough was indicted for perjury. He resigned in 1977.

Strake called McKinney surveyor George Collis, who finished third in Saturday's primary with 25.5 percent, 'the experienced candidate.'

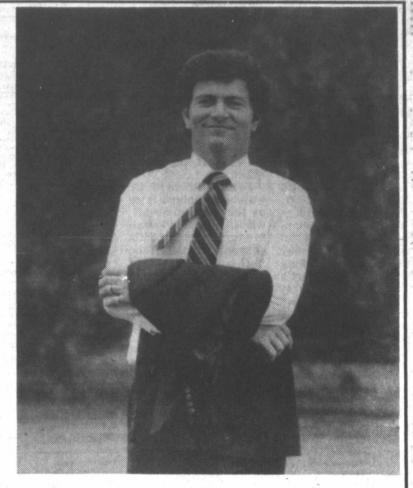

"Obviously, a lot went on names," said Strake, who would not endorse a candidate in the runoff.

Collis said he considered Anderson a mystery candi-

"No one else that I've talked to has ever seen or talked to him," Collis said election night. "I think he did so well because his name is the same as the famous Houston clinic.

Hinds conceded some voters may have cast ballots because of the similarities between Anderson's name and the respected Houston hospital.

'I suppose that there could be some people that may have voted on that basis," he said. "I think really that's more kind of a creation of people who are looking for a reason for his having done so well in the election.

Crude oil prices gradually increasing; OPEC in control

SEATTLE (AP) — The United States may be benefiting from lower oil prices now, but industry analysts expect prices to rise and the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries to stay in the driver's seat in setting prices. The analysts at the annual meeting of the Western Interstate Energy Board here Thursday said that oil probably will approach $20 a barrel by the end the year, and slowly rise to between $25 and $32 per barrel in

The turmoil of the past six months saw prices drop to less than $10 a barrel then come back to about $15, setting big changes into motion, a three-member panel agreed.

"The world will be considerably different 10 years from now, because of this past year's events," said Ted Eck, chief eco-

Ron Smith, with the Los Alamos National Laboratory in New Mexico and a former CIA analyst, said there would be a redistribution of players among countries as well as companies.

Already, Mexico and China, he said, have both reduced drilling activity, and North American companies are curtailing exploration for new oil and gas fields. Exploration and drilling in Africa could also expect to suffer major cutbacks, panelists said. There is a golden lining for U.S. consumers, said the third panelist, David Montgomery of the federal Energy Information Administration. "For the country as a whole, it's great news," he said. The three spoke to officials from the member states of the energy board, which include Alaska, Washington, Oregon, California, Montana, Idaho, Utah, Nevada, Arizona, New Mexico, Colorado, Nebraska, North Dakota, South Dakota, Wyoming and Hawaii.

Smith said oil-producing countries that don't belong to OPEC particulary Great Britain - may give conflicting signals, but are better off cooperating with Saudi Arabia in setting a price and production scheme to control the oil

"It seems to me that they should be nearly ready to cut a deal," he said. He expects an agreement by midsummer.

Otherwise, Smith said, Saudi Arabia might send oil prices tumbling to achieve a long-term, lower price structure.

Smith expects the price to be pegged at $18 to $19 per 42-gallong barrel of crude oil

That means more American dependence on foreign oil and less domestic drilling.

George Shultz brings assurances of support to Corazon Aquino

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Secretary of State George P. Shultz met with President Corazon Aquino today to assure her of U.S. support for her government but rule out increases in aid beyond $150 million already ledged.

Shultz made no comments to eporters after his 40-minute meeting with Mrs. Aquino at a guest house next to the presidential palace. However, he earlier said the Filipino government should concentrate on rearranging the economy rather than asking for more U.S. assistance. The secretary of state also met with former supporters of deposed President Ferdinand E.

Marcos who said they appreciated U.S. interest in Philippine stability, and that they mentioned Marcos "only in passing."

As when he arrived Thursday, Shultz was greeted by about 200 leftists chanting "Reagan terrorist" when he arrived at the gates of Malacanang Palace for the meeting with Mrs. Aquino.

The protesters, who held signs saying "Marcos Mad Dog Made in U.S.A." and "Reagan the Great Terrorist," dispersed peacefully soon after Shultz left for a series of meetings with other officials, including Vice President Salvador Laurel and Defense Minister Juan Ponce En-

Earlier, police held back more than 200 Marcos loyalists who shouted "we want Marcos back" as Shultz stopped to lay a wreath at the foot of a monument to the Philippine's national hero, Jose Rizal, on his way to Malacanang.

Shultz met with former Labor Minister Blas Ople and seven other members of Marcos' New Society Movement after a breakfast meeting with Mrs. Aquino's economic ministers.

Ople, who broke with Marcos' party after the February revolution that ended the strongman's 20-year rule, indicated Shultz asked the opposition to avoid actions that could destabilize Mrs. Aquino's government

Six dead in fiery light plane crash

SHREVEPORT, La. (AP) - The Caddo Parish tax assessor and his five assistants joked about needing a new jet moments before they boarded a twin-engine plane that crashed shortly after takeoff, killing all six aboard.

The Cessna 411 plummeted to the ground and burst into fire Thursday afternoon after taking off from Shreveport's Downtown Airport, police said. Caddo Parish Tax Assessor Charles Henington was piloting his own plane en route to Baton Rouge for a state meeting today of assessors, his office

"He has been an outstanding assessor. It is a real tragedy,'' said Shreveport Mayor John Hussey, one of several officials who praised Henington as a wellrespected public servant. Henington had been hailed as an influential lobbyist in the state Legislature on tax issues.

One of the last to talk to Henington, John Johnston, a line supervisor with Southern Aviation Corp., had helped the assessor take the plane from a hangar and joked with him while air was added to the aircraft's tires

One of the deputy assessors pointed to a jet near the terminal and told Henington, "That's what we need," Johnston recalled. According to Johnston, Henington replied good-naturedly, "Yeah, if we could afford it."

Johnston said he watched minutes later as the plane took off. when it appeared to stall in a turn - several puffs of smoke coming off the right engine - and plunged to the ground in a fireball.

The plane went down inside the Bossier City Limits, not far from the city dump.

'It sounded like it lost all power and went into a spin. You could hear whining when it started dropping," said Thomas Peters, who lives less than a mile from the crash site. "It hit the ground and blew up. And a second after the first explosion there was another explosion. It shook the ground so hard it threw us up off the chair "

Peters said the first thing he saw when he left his house was the plane's tail section poking up amid black smoke and flames

Islamic school stresses personal attention

By NORMA ADAMS WADE Dallas Morning News

DALLAS (AP) — Little about the exterior of the old frame house distinguishes it from other modest dwellings on the four-lane street in South Dallas. The neighborhood is a mixture of aging houses — some converted to small retail stores — overgrown vacant lots, industrial warehouses and commercial businesses.

But the activities inside the eight-room school on South Harwood Street are a continent away from the everyday goings-on of its neighbors.

At 3 p.m. at the Sister Clara Muhammed School, Principal Wanda Sharif and six staffers prepare the 30 young students for the end of another day of "international education." The Islamic school, one of 60 in the nation, is the only five-day-a-week Islamic school in the Dallas-Fort Worth area and is run by a community of members formerly known as "Black Muslims."

Imam Yahya Abdullah, 30, head of the Dallas Masjid of Al-Islam and regional director of the school, said the former religious and social reform movement called Black Muslims began a slow transition in the late 1970s that ultimately led to decentralization.

"There are no Black Muslims now," said the imam, Abdullah's title as religious leader.

But the membership of the Dallas masjid, one of eight masjids—the Arabic word for mosque—in the Dallas-Fort Worth area, remains predominantly African-American.

The school's classes in basic courses, including science, math and grammer, are augmented by courses in Arabic, social studies and geography that emphasize "the international community"—shores beyond the boundaries of South Dallas, Mrs. Sharif said.

But its curriculum is only one distinction of the 3-year-old school where students, dressed in green, military-style uniforms and berets, prostrate themselves on the floor and offer prayers to Allah three times a day.

"Our emphasis is on keeping the childrens' minds on a Godconsciousness," Mrs. Sharif said. Al-Islam translates as "the religion of peace and submission to God."

Before morning classes begin, students remove their shoes and gather in the "Musallah," or prayer room, for morning devotions and greetings. More prayers, chanted in Arabic, are offered at midday and again in the evening before students leave for home:

"... Most merciful master of the day of judgment, Thee do we worship and thine aid we seek..."

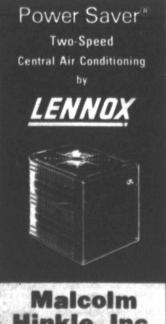

But while the average teacherstudent ratio of one teacher for every seven students at the school has allowed for individualized instruction and a pleasant, homey atmosphere, school officials hope to move to a larger facility at a different location over the next three years. Enrollment now is 30 students in preschool through sixth grade.

School officials say if they move to another location, they could provide space for 350 students through 12th grade. Fundraisers recently helped finance a new nursery classroom at the existing site that was put into use on April 21.

"We believe strongly in independent education," Abdullah said.

The school opened with four students in January 1983, including Abdullah's son and Mrs. Sharif's daughter. Many of the children of masjid members attend public schools for various reasons, including limited space at the Islamic school, Abdullah said.

All the Cool at about Half the Cooling Cost

The school was named for Clara Muhammed, wife of Black Muslim founder Elijah Muhammed. They both died in the early 1970s. Mrs. Muhammed had resisted pressure from truant officers, insisting on teaching her children at home in Detroit before the family moved to Chicago.

Their son Warith Deen Muhammed succeeded his father as leader of the former Black Muslims. He decentralized the former Chicago headquarters and gave autonomy to individual masjids. He ranks now as an imam but many members still honor him as a national figurehead.

Change gradually began after the death of founder of Elijah Mohammad in 1975. The name changed from Black Muslims to the Nation of Islam to World Community of Al-Islam in the West, to American Muslim Mission. Today, the sect identifies itself simply as a part of the international community of Muslims, Abdullah said.

Abdullah started the school after he accepted the leadership of the 200-member masjid and moved here in September of 1982 from his hometown of Jacksonville, Fla., where he also had established a school.

"That was the first item on the agenda when I came," he said. Abdullah and his wife, Stella Amidah, taught their children at home until the state approved a license for the Sister Clara school. Until then, the masjid held classes on weekends, adding Afro-American and international affairs to subjects taught in public schools, Abdullah said.

Mrs. Sharif said the school demands high academic standards and offers individualized instruction. She said students are encouraged to advance at their own pace and many exceed public school standards for their age.

For example, she said, she is teaching fifth-grade mathematics to fourth-grader Warith Abdullah, the imam's 8-year-old son: "He was able to do it so I began teaching him along with the fifth-graders."

And while many adults still struggle to interpret the Arabic of the Quran, the sacred book of the Islamic faith, she said Warith and her son, Curtis Sharif, 9, are able to read the book. They also excel, she said, in their Arabic class, taught by Sahira Mohammed, who moved to Dallas from her native Baghdad, Iraq, in 1982.

Students are tested under the school's own guidelines and are not given standardized tests, Mrs. Sharif said.

Howard Adams, an inspector for the Department of Human Resources that licenses the school, said it meets all state requirements for safety and administration but that those requirements, as with all religious-operated schools, do not govern curriculum and instruction.

Mrs. Sharif and her family moved here in February 1982 from Atlanta, where she taught at a Muslim school her children attended. She enrolled her children in a public grade school here but objected when the school placed them according to age and not performance.
