State to fight nuke dump

Deaf Smith County named finalist for waste site

AUSTIN (AP) — By selecting a Texas Panhandle site as a finalist for a nuclear waste dump, the Reagan administration has shown it does not understand the region, says Gov. Mark White.

"The Department of Energy has ignored the fact that the Ogallala Aquifer, the largest and most economically important to the nation, supplies water from Texas north to the Dakotas," White said.

Texas will sue the federal government to prevent the Deaf Smith County site from winding up as the nation's dump for high-level nuclear waste, officials said.

"DOE's announcement is no surprise to us, so it should come as no surprise to the federal government that we will see them at the courthouse as soon as possible," said Attorney General Jim Mattox.

The Reagan administration on Wednesday eliminated sites in Utah and Mississippi as potential dump sites. The remaining finalists are Deaf Smith County, Texas; Yucca Mountain, Nevada; and Hanford, Washington. Sites in Utah and Mississippi were eliminated.

The first repository is scheduled to open in 1998, with the present picking the site in 1994.

The site testing will include the drilling of a hole into the aquifer.

White and Texas Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower said the federal government could be heading toward a mistake similar to that made at the Soviet Union's Chernobyl nuclear plant.

"We have just seen a terrible tragedy in Russia," White said. "The Soviet Union experienced a bitter mistake because it didn't make the right technological choice. This administration today made the same terrible mistake, choosing to ignore both scientific evidence and common sense in making a site selection for high-level nuclear waste."

"Didn't we learn anything from the accident at Chernobyl, where essential food supplies for part of a continent were contaminated?" Hightower said.

"For the sake of future generations as well as our own, we must resist the headlong rush of shortsighted interests to fine a hole — somewhere, some place — in which to put this deadly, long-lived waste," Hightower said.

State Sen. Bill Sarpalius, D-Canyon, said he was not surprised that the site in his district was picked.

"I'm still opposed to drilling a shaft through a major water supply and putting nuclear waste below some of the most fertile farm land in the country," he said.

Hightower said there are 200 grain warehouses, 100 food and beverage processing plants, 40 feed manufacturing businesses and 80 feedlots within 150 miles of the proposed site.

Evelyn Richardson, who operates a seed farm in Vega, Texas, next to the proposed site in Deaf Smith County, said she wasn't surprised by the decision.

"I get irate when they start infringing on my personal rights, but I guess that what makes Texans apart from everybody else," she said.

Attorney General Jim Mattox filed suit against the federal government after an unofficial December 1984 announcement that the Texas site was a finalist.

Graduation

Pampa, area seniors to receive diplomas this week

Pampa and area high school seniors will bid farewell to their alma maters in graduation exercises tonight, Friday and Saturday.

Pampa's graduation will be at 8 p.m. Friday at Clifton McNeely Fieldhouse.

Delivering the valedictorian address will be Carol Ann Morgan, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Tom Morgan. Class salutatorians are Karin Trgovac and John Snuggs.

The Pampa High School choir will sing Battle Hymn of the Republic accompanied by the high school band, which will also play the traditional processional, Elgar's Pomp and Circumstance, and recessional.

Class president Stacy Bennett also will speak.

Diplomas will be handed out by school board president Dr. Robert Lyle, Supt. James Trusty, Principal Oran Chappell and senior class sponsor Richard Peet.

In addition to Morgan, Trgovac and Snuggs, honor graduates are: Bennett, K. Jill Birdsell, Gayle Lynn Collier, Scott Louis Drdul, Rene LeAnn Eakin, Traci Leigh Gibson, John Michael Glover, Brian Keith Gordzelik, Eric William Hallerberg, Julie Lynn Hamilton, Amanda Jean Holt, Karen Ann Hurdle, David Robison McGrath, Carol Monique Morgan, Stephanie Lynn Phillips, Sherry Lee Ray, Beth Ann Reddell, Trent Alan Sellers, Jay F. Snow, John David Stevens and Dana Katharyn Wood.

Other graduation ceremonies scheduled in this area are as follows:

CANADIAN

Presentation of the 56th annual Liske Cup and the presentation of 56 awards and scholarships will highlight commencement for 48 seniors at 8 p.m. Friday at the CHS gymnasium.

The all-student program will feature a salutatory address by Jeanna Patton and a valedictory address by Steve Lusk. The senior class, directed by Marilyn Wilson, will perform a song. Class vice president Tina Ledbetter will give the invocation and Geoff Dockray will give the benediction.

WHITE DEER

Commencement for 29 White Deer-Skellytown seniors will be at 8 p.m. Friday at the White Deer High School Auditorium.

Valedictorian Dave Nicholas and Salutatorian Cody Wheeler will speak. Among the scholarships to be handed out are the Delta Kappa Gamma, Venado Blanco, Alpha Theta Omega, Xi Sigma Beta and the $1,000 Wal-Mart Scholarship.

Diane Dalton, who taught the seniors when they were in kindergarten, will provide the musical accompaniment. The class of 86 was her first kindergarten.

GROOM

Sixteen seniors will receive their diplomas at 8 p.m. Friday at the auditorium.

Four scholarships — the Parent Teacher Organization, State National Bank, Eldred M. James and the S.S. Scott Scholarships — will be presented. The scholarships are based on academic achievement, leadership and citizenship. The State National Bank Scholarship also awards athletic achievement.

Valedictorian Melissa Fields and Salutatorian Roberta Kuehler will speak. Kuehler's older sister, Beth, a 1981 Groom High School graduate will perform special music.

More than half of Groom seniors are graduating with honors. Honor students include Fields, Kuehler, Lindy Kotara, Carmel York, Tim Case, Tim Weinheimer, Karen Britten and Ken Ruthardt.

Unemployment up despite job gains

The unemployment rate in Pampa and most area counties jumped sharply in April even though some showed increases in the number of people holding jobs, according to statistics released today by the Pampa Texas Employment Commission office.

The Gray County unemployment rate soared from 6.9 to 9.2 percent, highest in the area, said Charles Vance, director of the local TEC office.

Wheeler was the only county among the five served by the local office showing an improvement in its employment picture, with the jobless rate there falling from 7.5 in March to 6.8 in April.

Pampa's unemployment rate climbed from 6.8 to 9.0 percent during the month.

Both Pampa and Gray County had more people holding jobs than in March, but the jobless rates climbed as more people entered the job market and were added to the list of unemployed.

Vance said the substantial rise in the size of the labor force was apparently caused by young people entering the labor force and housewives who started seeking jobs after their husbands lost theirs.

The statistics in Pampa, for example, listed almost 200 more people holding jobs than the previous month. But the number listed as unemployed climbed from 737 to 1,016 to push the jobless rate higher.

The Gray County statistics showed 120 more jobholders than in March, but the list of unemployed climbed from 928 to 1280.

The situation was pretty much the same in Hemphill, where the jobless rate rose from 7.1 percent in March to 7.6 in April. The number of people holding jobs increased by 74, but the county was shown as having 179 unemployed, compared to 160 the previous month.

Roberts' County's rate jumped from 4.8 percent to 8.5 percent. The number of unemployed there rose from 31 to 57, while the number holding jobs increased by one, from 609 to 610.

Oddly, Wheeler's jobless rate fell even though it had fewer with jobs. But its number of unemployed also decreased, possibly as some residents moved out of the area to seek employment. The Wheeler country figures showed 194 unemployed in April, compared to 226 in March.

Blind youngster in spelling finals

WASHINGTON (AP) — Three times Terra L. Syslo was led to the cluster of microphones in the center of the stage, faced the audience she could not see and in a soft voice spelled her word correctly.

The 12-year-old from Fullerton, Neb., who has been blind since birth and studies her words in Braille, advanced to today's final rounds of the National Spelling Bee by spelling "lambda," "megalopolitan" and "acetylene."

She is among 115 spellers in a field of 174 — the largest ever — who made it through the first three rounds of the two-day competition.

At the end of the day-long competition Wednesday, Terra said she was tired and hot. Near the end of the day's third round, many of the children still seated on the stage were fanning themselves to cool off.

The early rounds eliminated the only two fourth-graders in the contest — Mican Jeffery, 9, of Aberdeen, Idaho, and Kanika Bahl, 10, of Beavercreek, Ohio. Fourth grade was the lowest grade represented in this year's competition.

The only other 9-year-old in this year's field — Robert Pryor, a fifth-grader from Washington, D.C. — remained in the running after confidently spelling "pedicure," "tarogato" and "assessable."

Priya A. Karnik, 13, from Lima, Pa., was the first to be eliminated in the initial round after she spelled "xeroplastie" the way it sounds.

Punctured pipeline spews out oil

AUSTIN (AP) — An underground oil pipeline spewed about 1,400 barrels of crude oil into a wooded area after being punctured by earth-moving equipment during road construction, officials say.

The accident in southwest Travis County sent oil gushing 30 feet into the air, stained trees and

Event to honor Lady Harvesters

Mr. and Mrs. Charles W. King and other residents will hold a covered dish dinner honoring the Lady Harvester track team at 5 p.m. Saturday at the Macedonia Baptist Church, 441 Elm Street.

sprayed oil over about two acres, authorities said.

By Wednesday afternoon, workers had cleaned up most of the oil at the site on the edge of the Edwards Aquifer recharge zone about Slaughter Creek is nearby, but the oil did not get into the creek, state officials said.

Removal of the contaminated soil was to begin this morning, they said.

Texas Water Commission officials said they did not know if any oil might get into the aquifer, a water-bearing rock formation that is a major source of drinking water in the area.

"There is no way of telling right now about any potential contamination," said Max Woodfin, the commission's environmental coordinator.

The spill occurred about 5:30 p.m. Tuesday when an earth-mover put a gash 1 foot long and 8 inches wide in the pipeline, according to officials of the Shell Pipeline Corp., which operates the pipeline.

The 24-inch pipe, which carries crude oil from McCamey in West Texas to refineries in the Houston area, is about two feet underground.

The accident occurred as Garey Construction Co. workers cut an extension of Slaughter Lane, a four-lane street that is to provide access from Interstate 35 to farm to market road 1826, Shell officials said.

Chris Eakle, construction project coordinator of the construction, said the worker who caused the accident should have been 800 feet west of the site.

The spill occurred in a wooded area and stains on trees indicated that oil had gushed up to 30 feet in the air, he said. About six trees near the pipe were covered with oil.

Shell spokesman John Holden said construction company workers built an earth containment dam after the accident to prevent the oil from getting to Slaughter Creek, about 600 yards from the pipe.

Hereford S&L official says he didn't know about rules

AMARILLO, Texas (AP) — A Hereford savings and loan's former president who is charged with conspiracy to commit fraud has testified he was ignorant of several regulations governing how the S&L should be run.

James Gentry said Wednesday he didn't know regulations prohibited him from transferring to a loan broker more money than a loan being purchased was worth. He also said he never checked the S&L's regulations concerning disbursing money to borrowers until federal examiners pointed them out to him.

Gentry and W.W. "Doc" Taylor, a Dallas financier, are on trial on charges they conspired to defraud Hi-Plains Savings and Loan Association of Hereford by misapplying more than $3.8 million of its funds between September 1982 and February 1983.

Each faces up to 30 years in prison and a $35,000 fine if convicted on all charges.

Gentry's attorney closed his case Wednesday afternoon, allowing attorneys for Taylor to begin presenting their case.

After Gentry testified for 1 1/2 days, three men who said they knew him told the jury Gentry had a good reputation for being law-abiding and honest.

Taylor, 59, who lives in the Dallas suburb of Farmer's Branch, is president of Southwest Mortgage Service Corp. of Dallas. Gentry, 42, of Quinlan, was reared in Hereford and has worked as a farmer and real estate broker, he testified.

Gentry and Taylor contracted with Hi-Plains in the fall of 1982, promising to obtain high-rate loans for the financially troubled S&L, according to testimony.

Gentry was elected to the S&L's board of directors in December 1982 and became its chief executive officer one month later.

In December 1982, Taylor opened a $6.6 million line of credit with the association, purportedly for purchasing loans that would be assigned to the association, witnesses testified last week.

But when the S&L transferred $3.8 million to Taylor's business at Gentry's direction in late 1982 and early 1983, the association had no collateral whatsoever for the transfers, according to testimony.

Gentry testified that in transactions forming the basis of the indictment, he was never more than a middleman who helped the S&L and Taylor get together to tap Taylor's "consulting services."

Speeders may cost two states heavily

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Transportation Department will cut highway aid to Arizona and Vermont for failing to reel in their speeding motorists, the first time the government would penalize states for not sufficiently enforcing the 55 mph speed limit.

Transportation Secretary Elizabeth Dole told the governors of Arizona and Vermont on Wednesday that their states are not complying with regulations requiring that no more than half the motorists exceed the speed limit.

Under the law, the two states could lose up to 10 percent of their non-interstate highway assistance — about $1.9 million for Vermont and $5.1 million for Arizona.

The states would become the first to lose money because of speeding drivers. Maryland also is in danger of being found in non-compliance, but a final decision in that case has yet to be made.

The actions against Arizona and Vermont culminate long negotiations and formal proceedings before a department administrative law judge. The two states did not meet federal compliance requirements in 1984 and 1985, officials said.

Officials noted that both states have 20 days to present mitigating circumstances or evidence of hardship that could affect how much money actually is withheld.

An aide to Vermont Gov. Madeleine Kunin said in Montpelier that the state would appeal Mrs. Dole's decision. It was unclear to whom the appeal might be made since the department has made a final ruling of non-compliance.

Stephen Kimbell, Vermont's planning director, said the state will argue that the 55 mph compliance order is an unfair standard for a rural state. "We don't have many 55 mph roads. They are almost all interstate highway," he said.

In Arizona, Charles Miller, the state's transportation director, called the enforcement proceeding illogical, but acknowledged that the state likely will lose some money.

"Any time you defer a major highway construction improvement project you in turn affect safety," Miller said. "It just, to put it bluntly, don't make a helluva lot of sense."

TEXAS/REGIONAL

Vega in the dumps, planning legal retaliation

VEGA, Texas (AP) — Being near one of three possible sites for the nation's first nuclear waste dump might bring economic growth to this West Texas town, but its residents aren't exactly leaping for joy.

"In the short run it might help our economy," said Jimmy Walker, 40, a county extension agent. But "in the long run, I'm more worried about our community more than anything. Money is not everything."

Texas Department of Agriculture and U.S. Department of Energy sources estimate the tiny town would experience a 2.6 percent population growth when site characterization begins nine miles south of here. That, in turn, would probably spur economic growth.

But Walker said he could not trade the lifestyle assets of the town for financial wealth.

"I'm one of those people who moved to Vega, Texas, (14 years ago) because it is a small community with a good school system," he said. "If the repository is placed nearby, this won't be the same community that I moved to."

Local leaders in the fight against placing a nuclear waste dump in Deaf Smith County say they won't settle for being bitter and are bracing themselves for a stiff legal battle that was set to begin today in Washington.

Attorneys for the Nuclear Waste Task Force Inc., an organization comprised of Panhandle landowners, citizen and commodity groups, said they air-expressed legal documents Wednesday night and expect their lawsuit to be filed today.

The suit, to be filed against the Department of Energy by an Albuquerque law firm, is aiming to delay, and eventually stop, the site characterization, which is set to start in two months.

"I think we've got a very strong lawsuit," said an attorney for the Task Force. "The Department of Energy has done a lot of things fundamentally wrong. They violated both the spirit and the language of the Nuclear Waste Power Act."

Every few weeks for the past three months, about 10 Task Force leaders have been meeting at Texas Department of Agriculture offices in Amarillo, planning ways to combat a dump site in Deaf Smith County.

"The battle's just been joined," said George Drain, a task force member and president of STAND, or Serious Texans Against Nuclear Dumping. "A lot will happen before any dirt is turned over or any land is lost."

Almost everyone at the meeting expressed fear of an accident at the site, which would encompass a nine-square-mile patch of land nine miles south of Vega and 17 miles north of Hereford.

"Just one mistake will contaminate the whole county and the water supply for eight states," said Swisher County farmer Brian Borchardt.

"I feel they would ruin the whole Texas Wheat Belt should the water get contaminated," said Deaf Smith farmer Anthony Paschel. "If there's an accident here like there was in Russia a few weeks ago, then there won't be water left for a jackrabbit."

Farmers who oppose a possible dump site in the Panhandle have been vocal opponents since DOE first announced its interest.

This time I was there!

Early Sunday afternoon, Dan, Paul and I spent a few moments trying to decide whose car to take. It turned out to be a simple choice — only mine had a full tank of fuel, even though purchased at the ridiculous Pampa price.

We headed south, our conversation consisting of such inspiring comments as Dan's outburst over a poorly cropped photograph in Sunday's newspaper, our concern about whether Terry had caught a plane ride and disputes concerning the merits of various songs we were listening to on the American Top 40 countdown.

But in our thoughts was anticipation at what we were about to become a part of. There was some worry because of the lack of vehicles heading south.

As we passed Lake Greenbelt and neared the Hwy. 70 intersection with Hwy. 287 outside Clarendon, I began to wonder if this was really the day. Where was all the traffic? But then I saw a line of vehicles parked to the west of the intersection, and I knew that at least we wouldn't be alone.

Still, I was disappointed at the few that were there. I had, perhaps naively, expected a long, solid line, with delays at finding a place to join the line. Instead, I was soon parked at the side of the road, still able to see the intersection only a couple of hundred yards back.

However, it was yet 45 minutes to the appointed time, and I hoped others would be arriving to join with us. Many did, but I realized at most the crowd would only be counted by a few hundred instead of the thousands for which I had hoped. And I knew the rope lying at our feet on the highway shoulder would be a major part of the link to connect us with the rest of the nation.

Whiling away the time, we wandered back towards the intersection to see if we recognized anyone. The first one I saw was Parrish Potts, former Harvester valedictorian back home for the summer. Then there was Ramona Hite, who had the three of us posed with our joined hands held in the air by a flag-decorated van so she could snap our picture; for some reason, we had forgot to bring a camera ourselves.

We then became engaged in conversation with a couple from Amarillo who had recognized the line while traveling back home and stopped to participate in the event. Later we passed a station wagon, with some young girls excited by the Harvester booster shirts Paul and I had chosen to wear. Cathy Spaulding met us, also traveling around to check out the others. And we encountered Margaret Spearman, a teacher. Others stopped us, just to chat briefly. Some recognized us, thanks, I guess, to the photos gracing our columns.

But 2 p.m. neared, so we headed back to my car, parked to fill in a gap that was not completed. I turned the car radio on, its sounds mingling with the other car and portable radios all turned to different stations.

It became obvious that the three of us would be joining hands with no one but each other. Apparently not excited by that prospect, Paul and Dan nonchalantly sauntered further west where a small group offered more beautiful scenery. I remained at my car to hold that rope up, not wanting it to touch the ground, wanting it instead to be in the air as Hands Across America finally formed the line from New York to Los Angeles.

As "We Are the World" and "Hands Across America" played over my car radio, I started to sing along. But I found myself singing only parts of them; my voice alone is no treat, and I was missing the chorus of voices I had wanted to hear.

And I was wondering where all the others were. Why wouldn't the travelers, most with Texas tags on their cars and vans and campers, stop for just a few minutes to join hands with us? Couldn't the crowd at Lake Greenbelt stop their boats for a few moments to come down with us? What exciting events had kept so many Pampans in town that they couldn't spend a few hours to show support for the hungry and homeless? I know many of them willingly give money and time for the various human service agencies in town; was that all they felt they needed to do?

Soon it was over, and the opportunity had passed for so many.

But I had been there. And I was glad of it, and several days later I still find myself pleased by that.

While I was in the Army one summer, that of August, 1969, several of us had talked about trekking up to a concert gathering in New York. But we decided instead to remain in Baltimore, and missed the chance to become part of the Woodstock experience.

And despite my concerns and compassion and strong feelings, I avoided any opportunities back in the 1960s to indicate public support for the civil rights movements. I was only a youth. But those who knew me knew of my beliefs in civil rights for all, and my disgust with Wallace and Faubus and Maddox. Still, I never had — or took — the chance to make some public statement, though there were many private arguments.

Nor, despite inner confusions which caused my initial feelings to swing from left to right, did I ever take advantage of the few chances I encountered to join in any of the protests against the march toward insanity that developed with the Vietnam "conflict." Privately I sang the songs, muttered the slogans and eagerly discussed the situation with a few friends, even while in the Army in Germany. I did put up a monogrammed Peace Sign, made reluctantly by a girlfriend, in my office at work. And I put up enough of a protest against an enraged sergeant that the major said I could display it in my barracks room, but not in the office.

Still, that wasn't a public incident by any means, though my fellow Army and Air Force one-termers cheered me for weeks afterwards. It was quite a strong stand for mild-mannered Hollis (my nickname then) to make.

And Live-Aid was too far away, as were Monterey and Farm Aid and numerous other such events all too far distant from the Texas Panhandle.

But this time I was there.

Where were you at 2 p.m. Sunday, May 25?

Historical marker lodged in subdivision

By CINDY HORSWELL
Houston Chronicle

HOUSTON (AP) — "She died the death of the righteous and is forever blessed" — David G. Burnett.

These words were elegantly penned in a Bible in 1858 by the first president of the Republic of Texas — on the day his wife, Hannah, died.

David G. Burnett also noted that he buried his wife next to the graves of two of their children on their farm overlooking Burnet Bay.

Today, a large state marker denoting her grave is curiously lodged between two houses in a Baytown subdivision. Few people can boast of having such a conversation piece in their sideyard, although nearby homeowners are thankful few tourists make pilgrimages to this little-known Texas shrine.

How the gray granite marker came to be placed on that obscure, unlikely spot is a town mystery, says Jean Shipherd of the Bay Area Heritage Society.

In fact, as Texas celebrates the 150th anniversary of its independence, some history buffs question whether the marker indicates the authentic gravesite.

"I first learned it existed when we created the Baytown Historical Museum in 1977. It always seemed like a dumb spot for a marker to me," said Ms. Shipherd. "After research, it looks like someone put it in the wrong spot. I don't think that is her grave."

The large Centennial marker decorated with a bronze Lone Star encircled by two leafy branches — the Seal of Texas — bears the simple inscription:

"Hannah Este Burnett, born Morrison, N.J., December 8, 1800, died in 1858; wife of David G. Burnett, president ad interim of Texas, March 16 to Oct. 26, 1836."

Boughs of flowering crape myrtle and a planter containing white lilies and aspidistra shroud the marker from the street 100 feet away — hiding it from view.

The marker and homes in the wooded Lakewood subdivision are situated on a bluff overlooking Burnet Bay. On the opposite shore sits the San Jacinto Monument, commemorating the battle where Texas won its independence.

The house on one side of Hannah's marker is owned by a pathologist and his wife, while the house on the other side is abandoned after being partially destroyed by an arson fire last Thanksgiving.

A Baytown policeman rediscovered the marker this spring, when he was called to the burned house to chase away children who had been scrawling graffiti in the drained swimming pool and using it for skateboarding.

"The marker seemed so inappropriate there next to that burned out hull," the officer said.

"It looked forgotten, discarded. It was especially upsetting because it's the Sesquicentennial."

"Most people don't know the marker is here," said Anna Haley, the pathologist's wife who has lived beside it for 21 years. Very rarely do sightseers tramp through her yard to view it, she said.

"Once I remember being scared when I pulled into my drive and saw a group of people standing around. I thought maybe some kids had been swimming in the bay and drowned," she recalled. "But it was only some students making a rubbing of the seal for a school report!"

Since the state does not maintain the site, she became the self-appointed keeper. She has nurtured the plants growing there and has kept the grass neatly trimmed: "I planted some bluebonnets there once, but they never bloomed due to the lack of sun."

As president of the Lakewood Garden Club, Mrs. Haley is considering making beautification of the spot a club project. However, she still wants to keep it a peaceful setting, a respite, away from trampling feet.

"We're contemplating cutting down some of the crape myrtle trees to make it more noticeable from the street. Or moving it a little closer to the street. Then we might do some landscaping," she said.

Instead, Ms. Shipherd and others think the marker ought to be moved a few miles farther west about two miles from the ferry in Lynchburg. There, amidst the playground equipment in a 10-acre Harris County park, lies a historical marker commemorating Burnett's home on his farm called "Oakland."

It was placed there by the San Jacinto Chapter of the Daughters of the Republic of Texas when the David G. Burnett Park was created in 1958.

Researchers into the marker's positioning in the Lakewood subdivision have been confounded. Little or no documentation exists today for Centennial markers authorized in 1936, said Cindee Langdon of the research and records department of the Texas Historical Commission in Austin.

"We now require and keep documentation for all state markers," she said. "But we didn't 50 years ago."

She said that a few of the 1,100 Centennial markers have been found in inaccessible areas — a cow pasture in Galveston and a farmer's field in Fredericksburg — but she said she knows of no others in the middle of a housing subdivision.

The marker is briefly mentioned in the "Kemp Papers" kept at the Barker Texas History Center in Austin, written by L.W. Kemp and published in 1938 by the Centennial Commission.

It indicates that the Sydney Sherman Chapter of the Daughters of the Republic of Texas helped obtain the marker for the unmarked gravesite and also granted the authority to have Mrs. Burnett's body dug up and reburied next to her husband at Lakeview Cemetery in Galveston.

The state authorized $119 for the project, but Kemp made a note in 1946 that: "The grave couldn't be found and the contract was canceled."

No member of the Sydney Sherman Chapter in Galveston — the oldest chapter in the state — remembers the episode.

Controversy also has surrounded David Burnett's burial. Daughters of the Republic of Texas members say Burnett was a pauper when his wife died and he came to live with his longtime friend and patriot, Sydney Sherman in Galveston. Burnett died at 82 and was buried there. The authoritative Handbook of Texas, however, contends his body was later moved to a state cemetery in Austin. The state cemetery has no record of Burnett being buried there.

Two Sydney Sherman Chapter members, now dead, were quoted in Mary Clark's Burnett biography written in 1969 that they would like "nothing better than to unite Burnett and his family in one final resting place." They also told of successfully fighting the state "body snatchers" who attempted to move Burnett's body to Austin.

Two members, Alice and Mildred Cherry, went with the author to search for Hannah Burnett's grave but found only the home site.

"It is a mystery what happened to the granite tombstone of Hannah Burnett," Clark wrote, noting a La Grange man had written about visiting the Burnett homesite in the Centennial year and finding three graves. One belonged to Mrs. Burnett, another to her child and a third to the wife of one of Mrs. Burnett's relatives.

CARETAKER — Anna Haley, who has lived beside the Hannah Burnett Historical Marker for 21 years, has become the caretaker of the marker since the state does not maintain the site. No one is sure how the marker came to be located between two houses in the Baytown subdivision. (AP Laserphoto)

Free market for body parts

BY MICHAEL M. KURTH

"The big four-oh." I had ignored its steady, irrevocable approach hoping it would come and go just like any other day, but turning forty quietly is on a social par with driving drunk: friends don't let friends do it. My "friends" celebrated the way one might celebrate if Khadafi broke his leg: "Hey! How's it feece!" They would shout across a crowded room. And if public humiliation wasn't enough, there were gags like the dirty-old-man birthday cards and the fire extinguisher next to the candle-laden cake. The real "fun," though, was after the celebration when, in private, I began the forty-year parts inventory.

I started with the hair (almost all gray) and worked my way down, taking note of what had fallen out, been pulled, twisted, yanked or cut out, or simply stopped working. (Hmmm: could any of this be tax-deductible; perhaps accelerated depreciation or a capital loss?) I then took stock of what was still there but fading (brain cells die at the rate of—) and what still worked reasonably well (thank God!). I found most parts a bit worn, but the important ones still working. By Tullock's Criteria I'm doing okay.

Gordon Tullock was Distinguished Professor of Economics at Virginia Tech when I was a graduate student there. (He now teaches at George Mason University.) A brilliant man, he earned considerable notoriety as an "academic imperialist" by applying the tools of his trade—economics—to other academic fields of inquiry. He defended his aggression by claiming that people are economic in their use of scarce resources, regardless of what those resources are and to what end they are put. The body is no exception. In fact, vital body organs are among the scarcest of resources: when one goes, it's lights out forever. It would be "inefficient," Tullock reasoned, to die of, say, a heart attack when otherwise in perfect health because all the healthy organs would go to waste. Thus, Tullock's Criteria: take greatest care of those parts that are failing; use most intensely those parts that are strongest. If done to perfection, one should collapse in a heap as everything fails at once.

It may sound strange, but to an economist the human body is no different from any other piece of equipment. If automobile parts were as difficult and costly to replace as human parts, cars would be designed to collapse in a heap. Indeed, clunkers sometimes do just that. The reason is twofold: people won't pay for parts that last 200,000 miles if they expect the rest of the car to last only 50,000 miles, and automakers won't manufacture parts to last 200,000 if one crucial, irreplaceable part lasts considerably less. Of course, no one knows exactly when their car or their body will leave its last sigh, so there are often good parts left over by people who don't anticipate the end. That is why we have junkyards.

Junkyards may not be pretty, but they do serve an economic function beyond providing a home for gnarly dogs and fat men named Ernie. Inexpensive spare parts allow cars to be made to last longer; also, as a rule, the easier it is to replace or repair a part, the less quality will be needed in its manufacture and the less care it will receive from its owner. The same is true of body parts; if eyeballs could be purchased at the five-and-dime, fewer people would wear safety goggles.

Recent strides by medical science in trans-planting human organs have made it possible to extend body-life beyond the limits of "factory installed" equipment. This is not so much a matter of improving God's work, as it is improving man's ability to use fully, according to Tullock's Criteria, the gifts of God. But for medical science to work its wonders, there must be a market for "used" human organs; we need, quite literally, human junkyards (without Ernie and his dog, thank you). Unfortunately, the government will not allow that market to develop. Human organs cannot be bought and sold, even on a future basis. For example, it is illegal for organ banks to offer to pay someone's estate for usable organs recovered when that person dies. As things stand, organs must be donated and there is a severe shortage of donors due to the lack of incentive to give.

To help alleviate the shortage, the government declared April 21-28 National Organ Tissue Donor Awareness Week. While it has a catchy little title, sure to tug at the heart-strings of America, somehow I don't think this bureaucratic endeavor will be as effective as cash payments (a liver transplant now costs $250,000; a heart transplant $150,000).

I have a special interest in seeing a free market for body parts. I think they would make excellent 60th-birthday gifts. Twenty years from now, when someone hollers at me: "Heeee! The big six-oh! Does it still work?" I want to be able to holler back, "The old one was a bit worn, but you should see the new one my friends gave me!"

EVER STRIVING FOR TOP O' TEXAS TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Arms sale squabble means very little

There are a couple of ways to look at President Reagan's (so far) doomed sale of $354 million in military hardware to Saudi Arabia:

First, that the government has no business playing politics with arms sales (or any sales) in the first place and should end its monopolistic practice of deciding whether and when American weapons manufacturers can sell their wares abroad. Second, that the president may be wrong in his assessment that unless the United States government approves the sale, it will lose influence in the Middle East.

The proposed sales involves defensive weapons similar to ones the Saudis already have — there is no new technology involved here. It is a sale Israel, the natural opponent in this case, does not necessarily oppose. And yet Congress voted overwhelming against it.

The White House position is easy to understand, difficult to support. Think of a loaded truck running brakeless downhill. We have supplied arms to Saudi Arabia in the past; therefore, we must continue to supply them. Anything less would "undermine the credibility of all our security commitments, the president told Congress.

But if the government hadn't been so eager to control the sales in the first place — instead of allowing individual manufacturers to cut their own deals — it wouldn't have to worry now about whether the rejection would breach its security commitments.

The greatest fear of the Reagan team is that the Saudis will turn to the Soviet Union for the weapons, which means, in the eyes of the White House, that American politicians will have lost influence in the Middle East. But then, it's not clear that they had any real influence to begin with. Remember the high hopes and subsequent disappointments surrounding the Camp David accord?

Even if you accept — which we do not — the premise that American must play the role of the world's parent, there are times when it is entirely appropriate for a parent to tell a child he is free to make his own way — and to bear the consequences as well.

This is one of those times.

Frenchwoman fires back

I am a fair man. Because of that, I am offering today a rebuttal to a recent column in which I berated the French and Spanish for what seemed to me to be a startling lack of cooperation in this country's bombing raid against Libya.

The column brought much reaction — even a bomb threat. A high percentage of Americans who reacted by mail and phone agreed with me. There also were calls and letters from European-born individuals who wanted my head.

One such person was Catherine Berge, a French film and stage director who was visiting Atlanta, Ga. to conduct a seminar on French theater at Emory University.

She read my column. She neither called nor wrote. She came to my newspaper office to see me.

I wasn't there. Lucky me. My secretary said the lady was very attractive, very intelligent and was also very angry. My secretary told Mademoiselle Berge she would take down what she had to say and pass it along to me.

I read the rebuttal notes from Ms. Berge, and I offer some of them now with no comment other than to say if everybody had the same opinion on everything, this would be a very dull job.

Ms. Berge's rebuttal:

"Your column put me in a very unhappy mood. I watched a television show the morning your column ran and the Americans interviewed said they believed Europeans were jealous of Americans because of their prosperity.

"This is not true, but your column confirms their ideas.

"Most people who have never been to Europe don't understand our geography. For example, France is just across the Mediterranean from Libya. If the French had helped in the bombing raid, Khadafy would have immediately bombed Marseilles in retaliation.

"Americans don't know about the world. They don't know we have had so many wars in such a short time that we are traumatized still.

"We have terrorists bombs all the time. In restaurants where I eat, there have been bombs. It is selfish to say ugly things because we refused to allow planes to fly over our country, and it is selfish to say we are big-nosed and arrogant because we refused to help the strongest people in the world.

"Everyone knows France has the greatest love for the Americans and what they did for us in World War II. Your comments on this are immature.

"As for our arrogant waiters, in Montmarge, where I live, you can get a good meal for $2, and the waiters are insulting to anyone and everyone.

"I am also ashamed of what you said about Spain. Spaniards have a tough life. They live in poverty.

"I have heard that a majority of the French people approved of Reagan's decision (to bomb Tripoli). But we have such a fear of another war. If Khadafy bombed Marseilles, Americans would not be affected. We are the targets of terrorists and violence all the time. Americans are not.

"I love the United States. I have been here many times, and I will return many times. I want to see a cultural exchange between our two countries and all your column did was blind people against any sort of international cooperation.

"What you wrote was extremely dangerous."

20th century the bloodiest in history

By William A. Rusher

As the 20th century draws to a close, it becomes apparent that it is going to have the unenviable distinction of being one of the bloodiest on record. Technology is partly to blame: Killing people in really large numbers is simply easier today than it used to be. But the real villain is politics, which has raised up in our time a series of monsters — Hitler, Stalin and Mao, just for starters — for whom the deaths of millions of human beings were simply an inevitable by-product of their policies.

Precisely which of these men was the champion mass murderer of the century (and quite possibly of all time) depends on how you count. Does one include only deaths deliberately induced, or shall we also count those that occurred without a specific intention to induce them but nevertheless as a traceable and predictable consequence of certain actions? Finally, do we compare only raw numbers of deaths, or is preeminence accorded on the basis of the proportion of a total national population destroyed? (In which case the palm may go to Pol Pot, the Cambodian communist, who slaughtered at least a million, and more probably 2 or 3 million, of his approximately 8 million fellow countrymen in and after 1975.)

Taken all in all, however, the winner of this gruesome derby is probably Mao Tse-tung, who was responsible, over his long and busy life, for the deaths of somewhere between 20 and 50 million people — depending, as aforesaid, on how you count.

But let us narrow the focus to include only deaths deliberately induced. Who was the biggest first-degree murderer of them all?

Hitler's claim on the title is an impressive one, resting of course upon his "final solution" of the "Jewish problem": the Holocaust, in which an estimated 6 million European Jews perished in concentration camps of starvation, disease and/or deliberate gassing. But evidence only gradually coming to light suggests that Stalin may have edged Hitler out. According to an article by Peter Paluch in the April 11 issue of National Review, the famine deliberately induced by Stalin in the Ukraine in 1932-33 (because the peasants were stubbornly resisting his collectivization policy) resulted in "the systematized murder of 7 million human beings in less than a year, 3 million of them children under the age of 7. That is the conservative figure."

This, mind you, does not include the Ukrainian kulaks, whose resistance had earlier led to their "liquidation as a class" by deportation to Siberia, in the course of which "some millions" (to quote the Encyclopedia Britannica) died. The induced famine of 1932-33 came later, and was aimed at peasant families of a poorer class.

Interestingly, the very occurrence of the Ukrainian famine was flatly denied at the time by sycophantic Westerners like Walter Duranty, The New York Times correspondent in Moscow, and also coolly disregarded by the U.S. government, which was preparing to recognize the U.S.S.R. diplomatically. Thereafter it fell into the ruck of history, where (needless to say) the Soviet Union is at great pains to see that it stays.

Fortunately a 55-minute Canadian film about the famine, called "Harvest of Despair," won not only the gold medal for TV documentaries but the Grand Award Trophy Bowl for best film of all at the 28th International Film & TV Festival of New York last Nov. 15. Despite this, no American network has yet seen fit to air this devastating documentary of the world's greatest act of genocide: a crime, as Malcolm Muggeridge wrote at the time, "so terrible that people in the future will scarcely be able to believe it ever happened."

Bits of history

In 1822, Florida became a U.S. territory.

Seven states off nuclear dump list, three finalists named

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Energy Department lifted a cloud of uncertainty from seven Eastern and Midwestern states when it decided a second permanent nuclear waste storage depot is not needed now.

Energy Secretary John S. Herrington told a news conference Wednesday that 12 sites that had been selected in January for a second nuclear waste repository in Maine, New Hampshire, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Virginia, North Carolina and Georgia "are no longer under active consideration."

At the same time, the White House said Wednesday it had selected three Western states as candidates to host the first site for storing highly radioactive waste from nuclear reactors and weapons.

The White House said President Reagan has accepted the department's recommendations to proceed with detailed geologic investigation of a salt formation in Deaf Smith County, Texas; basalt on the Hanford nuclear reservation near Richland, Wash.; and volcanic tuff in Yucca Mountain near the Nevada nuclear weapons test site.

Sites in Mississippi and Utah were dropped from consideration, the White House said.

The Eastern sites for the second repository had threatened to become an issue in this fall's political campaigns, but Herrington said, "Politics is not in this decision" to drop the second nuclear dump.

"It is apparent that the volume (of waste) is growing more slowly than contemplated even a few years ago," Herrington said.

Just a month ago, Ben Rusche, director of the DOE's Office of Civilian Radioactive Waste Management, had defended the need for a second repository before the energy conservation and power subcommittee of the House Energy and Commerce Committee.

But he told reporters Wednesday there is ample time to start from scratch in selecting a second site in the mid-1990s if it should turn out one is needed, and to remove restrictions on the first site.

As part of a bargain to spread around the nuclear waste burden, Congress in 1982 authorized a first site limited to 70,000 metric tons of waste. Congress did not authorize a second site, but it gave the DOE deadlines for planning one.

At that time, the department had predicted it would need space for 140,000 metric tons in the year 2020. But Rusche said that estimate now has been revised downward to 110,000 metric tons in 2020.

A metric ton is about 2,200 pounds.

It was understood that one site was to be in the West and another in the East. But Herrington said, "I don't think this is an East-West issue."

Reaction to the White House and DOE decisions was mixed.

Brian McKay, attorney general of Nevada, said he was beginning lawsuits challenging the president's action. Rep. Larry Combest, R-Texas, said through a spokeswoman he "believes more than ever that serious problems and unanswered questions remain" pertaining to the Texas site.

Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., said he was "delighted" that Georgia had been taken out of the picture, and his comment was echoed in the other Eastern states. But Utah Gov. Norm Bangerter warned that if another site is forced out, Utah could be in the running again.

The department is supposed to take over ownership of waste currently stored at reactor sites in 1998. Many in Congress believe the schedule cannot be met.

Herrington said he was basing his plans on winning approval for a 15,000-metric ton handling and temporary storage depot, currently planned for Tennessee.

Rep. Edward J. Markey, D-Mass., chairman of the energy conservation and power subcommittee, said in a statement he expected the department to seek congressional permission to abandon the deadlines currently in the law.

Markey also said he would ask about possible political influences on the decision, and why Hanford was included when it ranked fifth out of five in the department's latest ranking system.

Strake: coalition could cause shake-up in Republican Party

CORPUS CHRISTI, Texas (AP)—Increasing strength in the Texas Grassroots Coalition may cause a Republican Party "shake-up," party chairman George Strake said.

The shake-up could occur because coalition supporters may have elected a majority of delegates to the Republican Party convention in June, said Strake, who is trying to be re-elected to the post.

But, he added, the real strength of the religious-oriented group won't be known for certain until the list of delegates is released in mid-June.

While some Republicans are saying as many as 65 percent of the delegates to the state convention are members or backers of the coalition, Strake disagrees.

"I think that is too high," he said.

The Grassroots Coalition, organized by Adrian Van Zelfden in Austin, and its supporters gained sizeable representation in all county organizations in the state except San Antonio, Austin, Dallas, El Paso and Midland, Strake said Wednesday.

The group was particularly strong in Nueces, Aransas, San Patricio, Calhoun and Jim Wells counties, he said.

Strake said the group's growing strength is a sign that the Republican Party is growing in Texas.

"I view that from a position that you have to grow in some direction. That is the reason we had the biggest turnout for the Republican primary in the history of the state," he said.

The Republican primary drew 543,000 voters in May, Strake said, the largest Republican turnout since 1980 when 523,000 voted in the Republican primary.

The religious right feels more comfortable in the Republican Party, Strake said, because of his party's position on issues such as pro-life and a strong defense.

"Philosophically, we are not that different. We are in agreement with most of the new religious right. They are more vocal on certain social issues. It is the degree of public outcry they want to make about it. That is the biggest difference I see," he said.

Strake said he expects some support from the religious right in his campaign against Diana Denman of San Antonio to be re-elected as the state chairman of the Republican Party.

Van Zelfden said he hasn't decided who he will support in the race for Republican state chairman, but will announce an endorsement before the state convention.

Officials remove Anacin-3 from Walgreen drug stores

AUSTIN (AP)—State and federal health officials have confiscated Anacin-3 packages from 10 Walgreen stores and the drug chain has ordered the product removed from its shelves nationwide after a 24-year-old student died of cyanide poisoning.

The cyanide was found in the body of Kenneth Wayne Faries, a University of Texas chemistry senior who died May 21.

The poison was traced to a bottle of Anacin-3 pain reliever capsules purchased from a Walgreen's store and found in the medicine cabinet of his home.

Police said they were treating the death as a homicide and continuing an investigation. They did not rule out suicide.

The Anacin-3 taken by Faries was from a bottle containing 500-milligram capsules from Lot 6B11 bearing the expiration date 10-88, police said. They've advised anyone who has Anacin-3 from the same lot number not to take the capsules.

After the lab tests on Faries' blood were completed, Dr. Robert Bayardo, Travis County medical examiner, met with officials of the federal Food and Drug Administration to plan action.

Faries was the third person to die this year from cyanide in cases related to over-the-counter drugs. The February death of a New York woman is still under investigation. The death of a Nashville, Tenn., man in the same month was ruled suicide.

Faries died May 21, but his body was not discovered by his roommate until the next day.

Police said the initial autopsy last week found apparent cyanide poisoning, and investigators returned to Faries' apartment, removed the contents of the medicine chest and ordered toxicology tests on the body, which were returned Wednesday.

Bayardo said 46 capsules were in the bottle of Anacin-3, which tests revealed had traces of cyanide in it. He said one capsule showed evidence of tampering. Bayardo did not know how many capsules Faries had taken.

The victim's father, Wayne Faries, said in a telephone interview from his home in Garland that police "couldn't tell me anything about his death" until Bayardo phoned him Wednesday with the word that his son had taken cyanide in the Anacin-3.

The father said his son, who was buried in Dallas Monday, had planned to go to medical school after completing studies at UT.

A spokesman for Walgreen corporate headquarters said a message was sent to all Austin Walgreen stores asking managers to immediately cordon off store aisles where Anacin-3 is displayed to prevent sales of the product and to preserve any evidence that might be near the displays.

Bob Henna of the Texas Department of Health said agents from the agency and two Food and Drug Administration investigators were sent Wednesday evening to inspect the displays and confiscate remaining bottles of the pain reliever.

The drug chain "has sent out a computer message to its stores nationwide to pull the Anacin 3 capsules from the shelves and to quarantine the product until further notice," said Laurie Meyer, manager of corporate relations for Walgreens in Deerfield, Ill.

FDA commissioner Dr. Frank Young said the agency had decided to examine all Anacin capsules from Austin-area Walgreens stores, but emphasized this was "an added precaution."

"We do not have any evidence at this time that the capsules are tainted with cyanide," Young said.

He said if any evidence of contamination was found, those capsules would be forwarded to the FDA's Cincinnati laboratory for further analysis.

Young said Walgreens acted independently in removing the product from its shelves.

"We did not ask that at all. We felt at this time that the evidence indicates that this is a local occurrence. Walgreens felt for reasons I don't know directly that they wanted to go to a nationwide recall."

Success of no pass, no play challenged

HOUSTON (AP)—Texas' no pass, no play rule is sidelining more blacks and Hispanics than white athletes, according to an attorney who says he made a computer analysis of the policy.

Attorney Anthony Sheppard's analysis, compiled from a court-ordered questionnaire, has not been admitted into evidence yet, said T. Gerald Treece, a special master appointed to compile the statistics.

But a spokesman for the state attorney general's office called the findings "meaningless" because they are not compared to any past data.

After the suit was challenged in a class-action suit, State District Judge Marsha Anthony ordered the state's school districts to supply a racial breakdown of students affected by the controversial rule.

The rule, upheld earlier this year as constitutional by the U.S. Supreme Court, now is being challenged by Sheppard's clients on the grounds it discriminates against minorities.

The rule prohibits students who fail a class from participating in extracurricular activities for six weeks. Sheppard is representing 11 Houston families who filed suit last year challenging the rule.

Sheppard's computer analysis of 511 reporting districts showed that for the second six-week period this school year, blacks had a failure rate of 35 percent. Hispanics compiled a 38 percent failure rate, while white students posted a 26 percent rate.

As a result, 22 percent of blacks and Hispanics were excluded from extracurricular activities.

EMERALDS RECOVERED—Mel Fisher is open mouthed as he inspects a jar full of 2,300 emeralds recovered from the ocean floor about 35 miles from Key West, Fla. The jewels came from the 17th century Spanish wreck, Atocha, which has yielded gold, silver and jewels since it was discovered. Fisher, head of Treasure Salvors, and a spokeswoman, Bleth M. McHaley, figure the find worth multi, multimillions of dollars.

Thousands come away empty from strapped jobless system

EDITOR'S NOTE — Louisiana, severely stung by the drop in oil prices, now heads the nation's tally of joblessness. The state's unemployment offices are jammed, but almost 70 percent of the jobless workers get no benefits — many of them because there is simply no work to be had and their 26 weeks of benefits have expired. This is another in a continuing series looking at how the oil slide has touched lives and fortunes around the nation.

By SCOTT McCARTNEY
Associated Press Writer

HOUMA, La. (AP) — Out of work, out of money and out of luck, Ludjere Hebert sucked up his considerable Cajun pride and did what he prayed he'd never have to do: applied for unemployment benefits so he could feed his family.

No check came for six weeks. Bill Coker's April 10 unemployment check totaled $2, and the note attached said the 38-year-old Shreveport pipefitter had exhausted his benefits.

"Come back in September is what they told me," Coker said. "By September, I may have completely gone under."

As the oil industry has dried up, Louisiana has gained the unwelcome distinction of the nation's highest jobless rate at 13.1 percent. The state's unemployment offices have been flooded with hardship cases, and officials say the system is being stretched beyond its limits. About 178,356 of Louisiana's 258,300 unemployed workers, nearly 70 percent, receive no unemployment checks because their benefits have expired, they don't meet strict eligibility requirements or the checks are delayed in the crush of applications, state officials say.

"We have people calling up in a panic because their unemployment is running out and prospects for jobs these days are dim," said John Gianforte, director of the Family Crisis Center in Shreveport.

"People say, 'My God! There is nothing.'"

What's more, the state has been forced to borrow $545 million from the federal government at 9.96 percent annual interest to keep paying unemployment insurance claims.

"We have not had normal conditions in Louisiana since 1979," said Allen Johnson, a spokesman for the state Department of Labor.

Unemployment is 10 percent or higher in 62 of Louisiana's 64 parishes and is above 18 percent in 16 oil-dependent parishes — approaching what economists consider levels equivalent to those in the Depression of the 1930s, Johnson said.

Long lines and delays are the rule these days in state unemployment compensation offices, officials say. The number of new claims is up by more than 16 percent.

Hebert, 35, was laid off from an electrical supply company and was unable to find another job in this oil-dependent city near the Gulf Coast, where the unemployment rate is 14.3 percent, the 13th highest rate among U.S. cities.

A burly man with a stubble-covered face, Hebert comes from a long line of French Cajun stock. "The Cajuns," he said, "are survivors. They live off the land."

But with children aged 11 and 3, he found himself in the unemployment lines.

Coker, a pipefitter who's done jobs at oil refineries, found steady work for only six months in the last three years. He's worked a day here, a day there, and says he's never turned down a job. Unemployment in Shreveport is about 13 percent.

In the past, either his $205 weekly check was extended when he reached 26 weeks, or he was able to find enough work here and there to stretch the benefits over 12 months. Now there's no work, and no extension.

At Shreveport's Family Crisis Center, Gianforte is scrambling to find ways to hire more counselors to field the increase in telephone calls.

"Most people have been through the layoff routine before and have been able to get hired back on," Gianforte said.

"Now there's a more severe depression because they're looking down the road and not seeing any way out."

Massive search for life in outer space

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The most ambitious and sophisticated effort ever is being planned to scan the heavens for signals from outer space, but one expert doubts humans will be smart enough to understand the messages even if they hear them.

The project, when finished, will search for alien signals through the end of the century, Jill Tarter of the University of California, Berkeley, said Wednesday at the annual meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

"These are the first initial steps of what will be a grand exploration of the microwave system, looking for evidence of an artificially generated signal. Our civilization, for the very first time, can contemplate undertaking, out of pure curiosity, a search that may not bear fruitful results for many generations," she said.

However, Robert Jastrow of Dartmouth College doubts earthlings will get any message, and calculates that other civilizations — if they exist — may have been evolving for 1 billion years longer than humans.

"If you ask what life would be like on those planets that are a billion years or more beyond us in their evolutionary development," he said, "for a clue to the answer, one could look at the fossil record on the Earth."

A billion years ago, the highest life form on this planet was a worm-like creature, he said. So humans stand in relation to the aliens as worms do to humans.

"We communicate poorly with earthworms, which are not aware of our existence unless we step on them," he said. "I'm not sure how we'll be able to detect the presence of life, if it's there, and if we'll be able to communicate at all."

Tarter said the extraterrestrial search is in the third year of a five-year research and development program. Such searches have occurred, off and on, since Frank Drake of Cornell University conducted one 25 years ago.

The program, financed by the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, will eavesdrop on microwave radiation that reaches earth from space.

Machines and computers will listen for microwave patterns that nature never produces but that humans, with their crude technology, often do. The program will break the microwave spectrum into 10 million or 100 million channels and search them systematically.

"They will cover a volume of space that's 10 million times greater than everything that's been done over the past 25 years," Tarter said.

But even if microwaves are the right place to look for alien codes, no one can guarantee that the search will succeed, she said. "We hope that what we plan to do will be enough, but we realize that, in fact, there may be more to be done in the future."

THEY SEARCHED THE SCRIPTURES

"Now these were more noble than those in Thessalonica, in that they received the word with all readiness of mind, examining the Scriptures daily, whether these things were so. Many of them therefore believed; also of the Greek women of honorable estate and of men, not a few." (Acts 17:11-12)

Two things indicated the nobility of the Bereans. They were "noble" in character because, first, "they received the word with all readiness of mind." The second thing is that "they searched the Scriptures daily, whether these things were so (KJV)." Nothing is so commendable on the part of a hearer of God's word as a "readiness of mind" to the teaching therein. Such an attitude has always been somewhat in the minority. In the days that Jesus walked and taught by the Sea of Galilee, far too few manifested an attitude toward His teaching that would lead them to an acceptance of it. When the apostles by inspiration of the Holy Spirit proclaimed the gospel to the people of their day, far more rejected it than accepted it.

Today the same gospel, sustained by the same scriptures, is available to any who desire, as did the Bereans, the simple truth of God. But the wall of prejudice in the minds of many is strongly defended against any and all efforts of truth to penetrate it. The calloused and indifferent will always exist in a state of self-security determined to pay no attention to the word of God nor to those who plead with them to search and study it.

The parable of the sower (Matthew 13:3-23; Mark 4:3-25; Luke 8:5-18) indicates most strongly that the basic thing to have regarding the word is the right attitude toward it. Without respect for it and without a desire to learn God's way from the word nothing will be attained from the hearing of it. Faith comes from hearing the word of God (Romans 10:17). But just because the word goes into one's mind does not necessarily mean that faith is going to result. Only when people are noble and honest enough to investigate and search the Scriptures will they be convinced to the point of the faith which in turn produces salvation.

Opposition wins victory in Barbados

BRIDGETOWN, Barbados (AP) — The opposition Democratic Labor Party swept Prime Minister Bernard St. John and his entire Cabinet from their National Assembly seats in a landslide election victory Wednesday.

The Democratic Labor Party, led by former Prime Minister Errol Barrow, won all of the 15 parliamentary seats that had been declared by early Thursday and held substantial leads in 10 of the remaining 12.

St. John of the Barbados Labor Party lost his own seat to Robert Morris of the Democratic Labor Party.

"The people of Barbados have made their decision and I wish them well," St. John said. "As a democrat, I can have no quarrel with that."

St. John's party had been in power since 1976.

Economic activity reported up

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government's main forecasting gauge of future economic activity shot up 1.5 percent in April — the best growth in nearly three years and the third solid gain in a row.

The Commerce Department said today the rise in its Index of Leading Indicators followed a revised March gain of 0.9 percent, almost double the originally reported 0.5 percent. The index had risen 0.8 percent in February.

The April gain was the largest increase since June 1983, when it hit 1.9 percent, and equaled the 1.5 percent of October 1983.

With the latest advance, the eleventh straight, the leading index now stands at 179.2 percent of its 1967 base.

The strong growth over the last several months has given analysts hope the economy will rebound substantially in the second half of the year following two years of sluggish growth.

They base this hope on the belief that low oil prices, low interest rates and a weaker dollar will all contribute to hefty growth in the U.S. economy.

Soviet physician: Chernobyl death toll rises to 21

MOSCOW (AP) — The Chernobyl nuclear accident has claimed 21 lives, including those of 11 people who died despite receiving bone marrow transplants, a Soviet doctor said in a statement released today in West Germany.

Dr. Yevgeny Chazov, Soviet co-president of the International Physicians for the Prevention of Nuclear War, issued the statement as the group, winner of the 1985 Nobel Peace Prize, opened four days of meetings in Cologne.

The figures provided by Chazov raised the official death toll in the April 26 accident by two from the previous figure of 19.

Chazov said two people were killed immediately in the fire and explosion at the atomic power station 80 miles north of Kiev and that 19 others died later in hospitals. He said 299 people had "suffered radiation injuries and burns."

Of the dead, Chazov said in a written statement given to reporters, "11 had received bone marrow transplants," a technique employed to try to treat radiation victims. Large doses of radiation destroy bone marrow, which can be fatal.

Chazov, who was summarizing a Soviet report on the accident to the physicians' anti-war group, said the casualty toll was "as of our date of our departure from Moscow," without specifying the date.

On Wednesday, the official Soviet news agency Novosti indicated 1,000 people were injured in the Chernobyl accident, including residents evacuated from an 18-mile radius of the facility.

However, a telex sent today to The Associated Press in Moscow said the figure of 1,000 "refers to people examined and not to cases of radiation sickness."

Valery Neyev of the agency's North American Department said the telex was intended to serve as a formal correction to the Novosti report telexed to the AP and other Western news agencies on Wednesday night.

Novosti's English-language report Wednesday said a special team was created to screen the injured.

The original report said: "Four hours after the disaster, a special medical team was ready to fly from Moscow to the nuclear power station. Within 24 hours, they selected the hundred most serious cases out of a thousand. The third and last batch of patients now treated in Moscow are from among the evacuees."

Novosti editor Anna Nikolayeva, author of the report distributed Wednesday, told the AP by telephone that her original account had been poorly translated.

She said the Russian-language version, which was not made available to the AP, specified the 1,000 referred to people examined.

The AP had telephoned numbers for four different officials at the Novosti agency on Wednesday night seeking clarification of Ms. Nikolayeva's dispatch before reporting that it indicated there were 1,000 people injured in the Chernobyl disaster.

The only person reached at the agency was a woman who did not identify herself, but said she could not comment on the report.

Ms. Nikolayeva also said Dr. Angelina Guskova, chief radiologist at Moscow's Hospital No. 6, had specified that none of the patients hospitalized were residents of the evacuated zone around the plant. All the patients worked at the power station site, Ms. Nikolayeva said.

Moscow radio said two weeks ago that doctors examined all 92,000 evacuees, who did not begin leaving until 36 hours after the accident, and found none with illnesses related to radiation.

Argentines shoot up trawler they say was poaching

PORT STANLEY, Falkland Islands (AP) — Argentina today said one of its warships raked a Taiwanese trawler with machine-gun fire after it was caught fishing in Argentine waters. One sailor died and three were hurt, a Taiwanese official in Port Stanley said.

The incident occurred Wednesday outside the 150-mile exclusion zone imposed by Britain around the Falkland Islands, and was one of three reported encounters that day involving Argentine forces and Taiwanese fishing boats.

The Falklands, which Argentina claims, were the object of a 74-day war between Argentina and Britain in 1982. Britain, the victor, prevents Argentine ships or aircraft from coming within 150 miles of the archipelago. But other nations are allowed to fish within the exclusion zone.

Tsu-Kang Lei, who represents Taiwanese squid fishermen on these islands in the frigid South Atlantic, said the squid trawler Chiann-Der 3 was set ablaze by the Argentine warship's gunfire, and that its 22-member crew took to lifeboats.

He said the Argentine vessel later reported in a radio message heard in Port Stanley that it had picked up the sailors, and that one of them was dead and three others injured, although not seriously.

The Argentine Coast Guard, in a communique issued early today in Buenos Aires, said its cutter Prefecto Derbes crippled the Taiwanese ship with machine-gun fire after it was nabbed inside Argentina's 200-mile limit.

The communique did not mention any Taiwanese crewmen being injured, but said one had died "apparently of a heart attack," and said the fishing vessel's captain "later reported one of the other men missing, who could not be found despite a search."

The Argentine communique said the captain of the Taiwanese ship ignored repeated orders from the Prefecto Derbes to halt and be boarded.

"Warning shots from the 12.7mm machine gun were effected 200 meters (218 yards) in front of her bow, then at her structure," it said.

It said the Taiwanese vessel halted, "exhibiting smoke and fire, presumably in the engine room," and that the crew abandoned ship.

The Prefecto Derbes was heading with the Taiwanese to the Argentine port of Puerto Deseado, the communique said. Lei said the Chiann-Der 3, now ablaze, had been left at sea.

Lei, a representative of the Taiwan Squid Fishery Development Board, said the Argentine captain gave the crew of the Taiwanese ship a 10-minute ultimatum to sail for Argentina or be fired upon.

Monitoring radio messages between the vessels, Lei said that after the shooting, the Prefecto Derbes warned another Taiwanese vessel not to approach the Chiann-Der 3 because refrigeration machinery on board could explode.

Lei said the crew of the Taiwanese trawler Yu-Lian-Far told him by radio telephone that firing from the Prefecto Derbes had wrecked the mast and radio room of another Taiwanese vessel, the Chi-Fu 6.

The Argentine communique said the Chi-Fu 6 ignored an order to halt and be escorted to Argentina and instead tried to escape beyond the 200-mile limit, which most nations claim as the extent of their territorial waters.

It said warning shots from the Prefecto Derbes' 12.7mm machine gun were fired across the bow of the Chi-Fu 6.

The shots were ignored and the Argentine cutter gave up its chase when the Chi-Fu 6 reached the British exclusion zone, it said. Lei said it then pursued another boat, the Chian Yah, but was also unable to catch it.

Watchdog group claims

Salvadoran human rights abuses now fewer

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — An American human rights organization said today that political slayings and disappearances claimed almost 2,000 people in El Salvador last year, a relatively low number compared to some previous years.

The New York-based Americas Watch said the U.S.-trained armed forces or rightist death squads were responsible for 1,740 of the killings or disappearances, and blamed leftist guerrillas for the rest.

Americas Watch organization made the findings in a reported titled "Settling Into Routine: Human Rights Abuses in Duarte's Second Year." The report was issued days before President Jose Napoleon Duarte, a Christian Democrat, completes his second year in office on Sunday.

Americas Watch has issued reports critical of human rights abuses in countries ranging from right-wing Paraguay to Nicaragua, which is governed by the leftist Sandinistas.

Of El Salvador in 1985, it said, "by comparison to what went (on) before, the numbers of deaths are no longer so sensationally large."

In 1981, at the height of the civil war, 13,000 people were killed out of a population of 5 million in this Massachusetts-sized nation, the report said.

An estimated 60,000 people, the majority of them civilians, have been killed since the war began in 1979, according to the Roman Catholic Church and several independent human rights organizations.

Americas Watch said it obtained its 1985 figures from human rights organizations.

Except in the case of victims of the leftist guerrillas, the organization did not provide specific figures of the number of people missing as opposed to the number of people known to be dead.

The report blamed rightist death squads for killing 136 people in 1985, the lowest number in the last seven years.

FOSSIL BONANZA — The jawbone of the Propleopus, a small kangaroo-type animal which roamed Australia millions of years ago, is examined earlier this month. Scientists say they have found fossils that eclipse anything found before and dozens of new species are emerging from the ancient rocks on the outback ranch in Riversleigh, Australia. (AP Laserphoto)

Pair takes the worry out of arranging class reunions

By HOLDEN LEWIS
Associated Press Writer

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — Anyone who has ever planned a high school reunion knows it is a major task. Tracking down people and arranging for entertainment, food and accommodations can be time-consuming and expensive.

Enter the professionals, Cheryl Lankford and Sharyn Riffe. They saw a need for expert class reunion organizers and they filled it. Now they expect their La Reunion Enterprises, started in January, to grow more than tenfold by next year.

Mrs. Lankford and Ms. Riffe work with committees planning fifth, 10th, 15th, 20th and 25th class reunions. They will arrange just about anything, from locating students to hiring caterers, bands, disc jockeys, decorators and photographers. They book banquet halls and hotels, arrange transportation, put together picnics and mail out invitations.

Or planning committee members can do some tasks themselves. La Reunion will do just the work the committee wants it to do.

"It's been really fun," Mrs. Lankford said. "We've been received so well."

The women start planning reunions a year in advance. They are arranging for photographers and caterers for four 1987 reunions — one at a school in Cleburne, two at a school in Hurst and one in Arlington. But Mrs. Lankford and Ms. Riffe say they expect to arrange up to 52 full-scale reunions for 1988 — and they say demand in the Dallas-

Fort Worth area will exceed that. "We haven't even started on Fort Worth or Dallas," Mrs. Lankford said.

In the past, women did much of the planning and arranging for the reunions for their classes and those of their husbands, La Reunion's owners say. "But in a household where the husband and wife work, neither one has the time," Mrs. Lankford said.

"That's why we start well in advance. Everybody's rest assured we do send out the invitations and everyone receives an invitation."

Another advantage of using La Reunion, Mrs. Lankford said, is that the company can make the deposits with photographers and caterers and bill the reunion committee later. Usually, she said, members of the committee pay deposits out of their own pockets and hope for eventual reimbursement.

"When people hear about us, they say, 'Where were you when we needed you?'" Ms. Riffe said.

Mrs. Lankford also owns a job recruiting firm and Ms. Riffe owns a company which does opinion polling and surveys.

"Our previous experience required a lot of research and marketing," Mrs. Lankford said. "It helped us to know where to go and what to do."

Most of the research experience goes toward locating former students. That can be tough, especially if a student has moved several times.

The women contact class leaders, who try to reach as many people as they can. Those classmates call other friends, and so on. La Reunion also takes out newspaper advertisements and tracks people through voter registration records.

Ms. Riffe said the women find about 90 percent of each class and that about half of each class attends its reunion. She keeps a computerized list of names, addresses and phone numbers, updating it periodically.

The cost of the service is $35 a person and up, depending on the requirements of each particular class.

Judge holds court in church

By JAY JORDEN
Associated Press Writer

DALLAS (AP) — A judge says he is following spiritual motivation by spearheading a program that brings legal services to the poor, using volunteer attorneys and church offices to hold court and provide a law clinic.

State District Judge Merrill Hartman holds court on Thursday nights at Grace United Methodist Church in east Dallas to bring legal services closer to the community that needs them.

"The decision to share my gifts as a lawyer and judge with the poor was a spiritual one," Hartman said Tuesday. "The churches need to be in missions if they call themselves the body of Christ. He spent his time helping the needy."

Legal clinics at the church and at a southside community center are both staffed by volunteer attorneys, court reporters, paralegals and secretaries.

"They are the first free volunteer legal clinics" in the city, said Hartman, 47. "There has been government-funded legal aid and legal services, but these were the first free volunteer legal clinics manned by private lawyers at no fee."

Hartman, 303rd Family District Court judge, said the clinics are supported administratively by the North Central Texas Legal Services Foundation. Two other state district judges also volunteer their time for the clinics.

For the past year, 85 percent of the clinics' cases have been family matters, such as uncontested divorces, child custody cases and paternity suits, Hartman said.

Holding court in the church makes it easier for residents who otherwise could not afford legal services to receive them.

"The idea was that if I was going to give legal services free to the poor, I wanted it to be effective — not in name only — but to take it where they were and where they could find me," he said. "Some of them don't even have automobiles. That was the reason for the location."

Hartman said a clinic at the Martin Luther King Jr. Community Center was established in May 1983 and the church's clinic opened a few months later.

"I was just looking for a place in south Dallas that would be central to the need," he said. "I happened to be on the board of a community daycare center, Dallas Bethel Center, Inc., and in 1983, I asked their executive director for the use of some space."

Hartman, a member of Lake Highlands United Methodist Church, said the center is one of the church's charities.

He said that the Dallas County Bar Association was approached about the clinics and 15 large law firms volunteered the services of lawyers, paralegals and legal secretaries.

"We started with two lawyers and a legal services person doing intake and now we have about 250 people working in the two clinics," he said.

The clinics handle 20 to 30 cases per night, said Hartman. Lawyers will refer cases they cannot handle to a representative of North Central Texas Legal Services, he said.

Other district judges involved with the clinic are Dee Miller and Will Pryor, who helped establish the clinic at the Bethlehem Center, Hartman said.

"We have had cases where a person was married in 1965, separated in 1967 and had not gotten a divorce because he could not afford to hire a lawyer," said Hartman.

AT&T PUBLIC NOTICE REGARDING REACH OUT™ Texas OPTIONAL CALLING PLAN

AT&T Communications of the Southwest, Inc. (AT&T) is seeking approval from the Public Utility Commission of Texas to continue the REACH OUT Texas long distance plan. REACH OUT Texas is an optional calling plan which offers customers the opportunity to save on long distance calls placed within the state of Texas.

The Public Utility Commission has required that AT&T show why the REACH OUT Texas plan should not expire by August 1, 1986. To meet this requirement, on March 7, 1986, AT&T filed an application with the Public Utility Commission, and asked that the August 1, 1986 termination date be removed. This request and the related proceeding have been designated as Docket No. 6761 by the Public Utility Commission, with hearings scheduled to begin June 18, 1986.

Currently more than 39,000 Texans subscribe to REACH OUT Texas service. REACH OUT Texas customers pay a one-time $6 charge to establish the service, and a monthly charge of $14 which entitles them to one hour of AT&T's intrastate/interstate "Direct Dialed" (1+) calling during the weekend and night rate periods. Customers also receive an additional 15 percent discount on the same type of AT&T long distance calls placed during the evening rate period. In addition, an hourly rate of $12, or $.20 per minute applies for weekend and night rate calls beyond the initial hour of calling provided under the REACH OUT Texas basic rate.

AT&T estimates current annual revenues generated by the REACH OUT Texas service to be over $14 million.

Persons who wish to intervene or otherwise participate in these proceedings should notify the Commission as soon as possible. A request to intervene, participate or for further information should be mailed to the Public Utility Commission of Texas, 7800 Shoal Creek Boulevard, Suite 400N, Austin, Texas 78757. Further information also may be obtained by calling the Public Utility Commission Consumer Affairs Division at (512) 458-0223 or (512) 458-0227 or (512) 458-0221 teletypewriter for the deaf.

School for handicapped geared for success

By KIM ESTES
Sherman Democrat

SHERMAN, Texas (AP) — JoAnna's, a small private school for disabled children, wants to raise $1 million dollars, and school officials are taking on the project with the same philosophy that prevails in its teaching program.

According to Joyce Wesson, director of the school, JoAnna's School for Learning Differences is geared for success.

"Some of these kids come in with their heads hanging down to their knees," Ms. Wesson says, "because they feel like life is useless, like 'I can't do that, I'll never be able to do it so I'm going to quit and I won't do anything.' So what we have to do is we have to gear for success."

The school's fund-raising campaign was launched earlier this month, and Chairman Fay Humphrey says the drive will continue until the last dollar of the $1 million is collected.

JoAnna's School currently meets in a 1,600-square-foot red school house, east of Sher-Den Mall off Highway 82. The school has three teachers and 22 students with a variety of learning disabilities, ranging from dyslexia to mental retardation.

"I've been really surprised at some of the kids here," Ms. Wesson says. "But because we have geared for success they are now beginning to take more and more responsibility for their own learning."

When a student first enters JoAnna's, Ms. Wesson says, "we spend a lot of time just letting the child know that he's loved, that somebody cares about him, that he's worthy."

Thereafter, a lot of individual attention is given to the student and instruction is tailored to his or her abilities. One example of this is oral tests, which Ms. Wesson says public schools cannot give.

Marilyn Perkins of Denison says her son, who has dyslexia, failed in public schools simply because he could not read the tests. Mrs. Perkins says, "I could give him a test (orally) at home and he answered all the questions and I said, 'Michael, why didn't you answer the questions (when taking the written test)?' and he'd say, 'Mama, I couldn't read the test.'"

But since he came to JoAnna's, Mrs. Perkins says her son is learning and trying to learn more. "He progressed...not just in what he can read and learn but he's more relaxed now. He tries more now because before he would try and fail and he'd just say 'why should I try,' where now he feels he can sing popular songs. She was our poet. She made up poems for our birthdays. My mother told me that we were selfish because the sis said would attain only the intelligence level of a 4-month-old baby. However, she has now reached the intellectual level of an 8-year-old.

JoAnna and her four brothers and sisters, all adopted by Ms. Wesson, have Down's Syndrome. What Ms. Wesson has learned in raising her own handicapped children she hopes to incorporate into the school.

In fact, one of the school's goals is an infant stimulation program, a direct result of what Ms. Wesson was able to teach her children. "The earlier we can get them, the more we can do with them," she says.

According to Ms. Wesson, JoAnna's School offers a full Christian curriculum, including social studies, health, science, math, physical education, art and music. She hopes one day to expand the course offerings to computer and typewriting. "Some of these children's handwriting is very poor," she says. "We have worked on typewriters in the past, and it worked ideally for these kids on the fact that it builds up the muscles in their fingers, plus the hand and eye co-ordination. Also, so many times when these children write they can't read what they write but if they could type it would help them throughout life."

Ms. Wesson says JoAnna's also needs science equipment and a bus for field trips. "One reason we're doing our push for our $1 million campaign," Ms. Wesson says, "is because if the community doesn't help we're not going to be able to continue on and this area needs this school."

Ms. Wesson's long-range goal for her children and students is to teach them how to function in day-to-day living.

"Maybe they won't graduate from here on a 12th grade level, but if they can graduate and know their reading and writing and know how to function in society and know how to handle themselves...what we try to emphasize around here is, it's not hopeless," she adds.

"But if you get a pattern of failure started they won't ever try," Ms. Wesson says. "They won't do anything. If they constantly meet failure they give up and they quit. Even adults would do the same thing if we continually saw failure...and they don't have the stamina adults do."

According to Ms. Wesson, 75 to 90 percent of juvenile delinquents are victims of learning disabilities. "We do not want that to happen to the kids we know," she says. "In other words, we want to be part of the solution, not part of the problem."

Be patient in the year ahead regarding your rewards and recognition. Nature may be a trifle tardy in getting started, but she will deliver as promised.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Financial fulfillment is likely to be in the offing for you today, but you're not apt to do as well where your social interests are concerned. Career advantages and problems in the year ahead are discussed in Gemini's Astro-Graph. Mail $1 to Astro-Graph, c/o this newspaper, Box 1846, Cincinnati, OH 45201. Be sure to state your zodiac sign.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Guard against tendencies today to repeat a mistake. Don't penalize yourself because of a poor memory.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Your best interests won't be served today if you impose upon others to take care of important matters that you should be attending to yourself.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Your mate's judgment as well as your own might not be up to snuff today. Before making an important decision, consult a wise counselor.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) Co-workers may find you a trifle difficult to get along with today. This is because you might interpret their suggestions as a form of criticism.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Today either devote your full attention to business or your full attention to having fun, but don't try to do both. It's a mix that won't jell.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) A compromise is called for today regarding an issue where you and your mate have taken opposing positions. If each gives a little, it can be remedied.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) If you react negatively to situations today, opportunities will slip past you. Come out from under that dark cloud into the sunshine.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Credit cards do not make a good substitute for cash today. If you haven't got the money in your purse or wallet, don't go into debt for momentary gratification.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) A change of scenery will be good for you and your mate if you've been cloistered at home too much this week. Step out on the town.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) The heavy hand of neglected duties could be weighing on your shoulders today. Respond to it even though you can't clear up everything at once.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Put sensible limits on what you intend to spend today for a good time. Unless you have proper guidelines, you will be extravagant.

LIFESTYLES

Romances spark rebellion

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Romance novels in which beautiful, headstrong women win the undying love of powerful yet sensitive men can help the women who read them cope with changing female roles, a researcher says.

"In many ways you can see that romance reading is a tacit protest against the demands and costs of their jobs" as wives and mothers, said Janice Radway, a literary critic at the University of Pennsylvania who studied the attitudes of romance novel fans and read some herself.

"I was very impressed with the women," Radway said. "I felt they were dealing with issues I've dealt with as a feminist. I just think it doesn't go far enough."

"We need to know what gives the readers hope, makes them happy and gives them pleasure and satisfaction."

More than a third of the 42 romance readers Radway interviewed said they read five to nine romance novels a week, with one reader describing the habit as a kind of harmless alternative to drugs or drinking, she said Tuesday at the annual meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

Romance novels make up more than 40 percent of paperback book sales in the United States, said Radway.

She said she was somewhat surprised to find that reading romances was not a reaffirmation of traditional values but a kind of subversive activity, even though the novels seem to affirm male domination and the traditional sex roles in marriage.

She asked the women she interviewed to recommend the romance novels they liked best, and then read 20 of them.

The books follow a very clear pattern: The heroine is cut off from her family and forced to make her way alone in the world. She is invariably independent, strong, beautiful and intelligent, but "completely unaware of her effect on men," Radway said.

She meets a handsome, successful, powerful man who is always gentle beneath his masculine exterior. He comes to realize he needs her. In a dramatic climax he rescues her from some danger and expresses his love.

The readers interpret this transformation from dominant male to one who can be sensitive to a woman's feelings "as the woman's triumph," Radway said.

The books help women realize that a strong, independent woman can also express emotion, she said. "A lot of women assume that to be a feminist you can't have interpersonal relationships."

The romance readers were different from the group of women who watch daytime soap operas, she said. Scholars studying soap operas have found that they are about suffering, and romance readers don't want to read about suffering.

PREPARING FOR SHOW - Local photographers Michael Hartsock, left, and Heidi Rapstine measure and cut a roll of burlap to be used to decorate display walls for the upcoming annual Pampa Fine Arts Association's Photography Show. The exhibits of works by local area photographers will be displayed this weekend at the Pampa Mall from 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. Friday and Saturday and from 1 to 3 p.m. Sunday. Approximately 12 photographers will be displaying color and black-and-white photographs, including portraits, landscapes, wedding shots and other subjects. (Staff photo by Larry Hollis)

Pampa tot wins state pageant

Four-year-old Tandi Morton of Pampa has been crowned 1986 America's Charisma Girl for Texas at the annual pageant in Abilene, May 25, following three days of competition.

Tandi received a perfect score of 75 in the talent competition for her song and dance routine to "Pink Shoelaces." She also competed in interview, sportswear, party wear and photogenic in order to win in the ages 3 to 4 division of the pageant.

Daughter of James and Whitney Morton of Pampa, Tandi is now eligible for an all-expense paid trip to the National 1986 America's Charisma Girl pageant at Universal Studios in Hollywood, Calif., in July. In addition to the trip, a crown and trophy, she also won a $500 scholarship and $500 cash appearance prize.

"I would like to say thanks to Tandi's sponsor and to all the people who helped her," said Mrs. Morton. Tandi is the granddaughter of Zip and Raymond Swaney of Pampa, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Morton of Dumas, Mr. and Mrs. Bill Caswell of Mobeetie. Her great grandparents include Elsie Hall of Pampa and Esther Caswell of Wheeler.

Dear Abby

Gifts given in good faith deserve proper thank-you

By Abigail Van Buren
© 1986 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: Last Christmas a man I thoroughly despise left a gaily wrapped gift of lingerie in my vehicle without my knowledge. I did not thank him because I knew to phone him would encourage him. During the holiday season, you stated in your column that a thank-you for a gift was not necessary because a gift is presented with no strings attached. I agreed with you wholeheartedly.

Recently, you stated: "There is no excuse for failure to acknowledge a gift, however useless."

You are useless, and I'd thank you to keep your mouth shut while your brain is inoperative.

JOYCE MAYFIELD, BELLE PLAINE, KAN.
P.S. You may use my name. It really is Joyce Mayfield.

DEAR MS. MAYFIELD: I do not recall ever having stated that a thank-you for a gift is not necessary. I have always stressed the importance of acknowledging gifts — and promptly, assuming, of course, that the gift was given in good faith. (Most gifts are.)

Had I been asked if a lady should acknowledge a "gaily wrapped gift of lingerie left in her vehicle by a man she thoroughly despises," my usual advice would not have applied.

DEAR ABBY: Help us, please. My husband and I own a business and employ 12 people. One of our employees — I'll call him Peter — lives with a woman I'll call Patricia. They're not married — they just live together. Patricia has a daughter (I'll call Sue) who is being married this summer. I hardly know Patricia as I have seen her only a few times, and I have never met Sue.

My husband and I, and every one of our employees, have received an invitation to Sue's wedding. Today Patricia called and invited me to a bridal shower she is having for Sue. Then she asked me to call all the women who work for us as well as the wives and girlfriends of our male employees and invite them to the shower, too. I was shocked, but didn't know what to say at the time.

Abby, I would feel very uncomfortable inviting these people to a shower for someone I don't even know. Also, if a person is invited to a shower and doesn't go, does she have to send a gift?

And correct me if I am wrong, but aren't showers supposed to be given by friends — not relatives of the bride?

How should I handle this?
IN THE MIDDLE

DEAR IN: You are correct. Showers should be given by friends — not relatives. Simply tell Patricia that you would not feel comfortable inviting others to the shower she is giving for her daughter. Also, an invitation that has been declined does not require a gift. Gifts are always optional.

DEAR ABBY: Why is loud better? My husband and I are often invited places where music is played either by a live band or a disc jockey. Invariably the music is so loud that conversation is impossible unless we shout at each other! We find ourselves having to repeat everything we say in order to communicate.

Whatever happened to soft background music, or occasionally no music at all?
E.Z. IN TARZANA, CALIF.

DEAR E.Z.: I don't know what happened to soft background music, but I wish it would be brought back. We are raising a generation of young people who are destined to suffer a serious hearing loss — the fallout from turning up the volume at decibels that actually damage the eardrum.

(Every teen-ager should know the truth about sex, drugs and how to be happy. For Abby's booklet, send your name and address clearly printed with a check or money order for $2.50 and a long, stamped (39 cents) self-addressed envelope to: Dear Abby, Teen Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

Program offers women opportunity to decide on whether to be a nun

FRESNO, Calif. (AP) — Sister Celia Ann Cavazos oversees a "house of discernment," a new technique to help women decide whether to become Roman Catholic nuns.

Such facilities are becoming more common because nuns and women considering becoming nuns "both have a sense that this is a decision that is not entered into lightly," said Sister Sarah Marie Sherman, executive director of the National Sister Vocation Conference.

Residents must agree to live in the house for six months to a year. Rent is $200 a month.

They must participate in a discernment process aimed at increasing their perception. It includes counseling sessions with a spiritual adviser, weekend retreats and twice-a-week prayer meetings with Sister Cavazos and the other residents.

The Fresno house has had three residents since it opened in September. Only one, Suzanne Price, remains, and she moved in knowing she wanted to be a nun.

"You can think straight here," said the 23-year-old Fresno State University student, a convert to Catholicism. "You don't have people shoving down your throat what you're supposed to do."

Sister Cavazos said most women came "not saying yes or no, but asking questions. They're talking about what they want to be."

She must gingerly walk the line between parents who are concerned about their daughters choosing a non-traditional lifestyle and the daughters' interest in full-time religious service.

"Once they have a call to ministry, they need to have a community to support them," she said.

"You need to have friends with the same questions," Ms. Price added.

Some of the questions are individual.

Gail White, 36, a Pacific Gas and Electric Co. employee, is thinking about moving into the house and beginning the formal discernment process.

She wonders, though, if she could give up her privacy and total independence in becoming a nun. "I'm so used to coming and going when I please. I'm old and set in my ways."

Sister Cavazos advised her to "live with this group and see if you can."

Other questions are more universal — like how a nun deals with her sexuality and her commitment to a celibate life.

Enter the World's Greatest Dad contest

June 15 is Father's Day. Help us find the "World's Greatest Dad" by entering The Pampa News' "World's Greatest Dad" contest. The winner will receive $100 and a photo and feature story in the Father's Day (June 15) edition of The Pampa News. Second place winner will receive a $50 prize and a photo in the same edition.

Here's all you have to do:
Tell us why the father you are nominating is the "world's greatest" ... in 100 words or less, in your own handwriting or printing. The father must be living, he must live in the Pampa area (Gray, Roberts, Hemphill or Carson counties). Persons ages six and up may enter their fathers (or an outstanding father whose story can best be told by another person not his child) in the "World's Greatest Dad" contest.

Letters will be judged for originality and sincerity by a panel of four judges. Deadline for the letters is June 9. Send your letters to Dee Dee Laramore, Lifestyles Editor, The Pampa News, P.O. Box 2198, Pampa, 79066-2198.

Astros win over slumping Cards

ST. LOUIS (AP)—Unlike some people, right-hander Charlie Kerfeld says he has no trouble understanding the early success enjoyed by the Houston Astros' bullpen.

"We've got a good bunch of guys. Everybody knows each other's job," Kerfeld said after gaining credit for Houston's 26th victory Wednesday. "Nobody feels any jealousy. Some of us have never been on a winning team. It's a new experience."

Although the 22-year-old Kerfeld was the Astros' pitcher of record in a 4-3 triumph over the St. Louis Cardinals in 11 innings, he had lots of help.

Left-hander Frank DiPino stepped into the breach when tiring Houston starter Mike Madden walked Vince Coleman to start St. Louis' seventh. Larry Andersen, a Philadelphia Phillies castoff, took over after the Astros' second of three errors. He stayed until Kerfeld, 5-1, took over in the 10th and whittled his earned-run average to 1.44 with three strikeouts in two hitless innings.

Craig Reynolds eventually rewarded Houston's relievers by tripling home Glenn Davis to pin the defeat on Todd Worrell, 3-3, of the Cards.

"When we're ahead, we know Dave Smith (11 saves) is going to be our man," Kerfeld said of a Top Four in the Astros bullpen that boasts a collective 1.54 ERA and 15 saves. "When the game's tied, it's either going to be me or DiPino."

Andersen, in addition to one-hit relief over 2-2-3 innings, chipped in the game's biggest defensive play in St. Louis' seventh.

Coleman, after walking, moved to second on Jose Oquendo's sacrifice and stopped at third when first baseman Davis dropped third baseman Phil Garner's throw on Willie McGee's grounder. Andersen was summoned to face Jack Clark, who popped to second baseman Jim Pankovits in short right. Andersen, when Pankovits' throw home got past catcher Mark Bailey, backed up the play and threw out Coleman at home plate.

"The strangest things happen to us," Cards Manager Whitey Herzog said of the double play, one of seven in the game, that preserved a 3-3 tie.

"He (Coleman) was just (faking). He wasn't going to go (but) he went too far," Herzog said. "I can't blame him for that. He just went a little far and couldn't get back. If he'd known that the throw was going to skip by the catcher, he'd kept going."

The chance was the final one for St. Louis, which scored twice in the first inning on Jack Clark's double and totaled only seven hits.

"I doubt it," Herzog said when asked if a day off today would help the Cards, who have lost four straight. "I hope it does, but we've had days off and we've had 'off' days when we've played."

As St. Louis was bowing for the 11th time in 14 contests, Houston won for the fourth straight time to strengthen its lead in the National League West.

"We're staying in contention. That's what we want to do," Reynolds said. "With the kind of pitching that we have, if we can stay in contention until September, we have a good shot."

Cards second baseman Tommy Herr's error accounted for the Astros' first run, and Kevin Bass hit a two-run homer off St. Louis starter John Tudor in the fourth.

Rockets eye different game plan

BOSTON (AP)—Houston Rockets Coach Bill Fitch says his team needs to do three things differently and one the same if it is to beat the Boston

Celtics in Game 2 of the championship series. "We have to take better care of the ball, play better team defense, get our running game going and maintain what we established in Game 1," Fitch said Wednesday, the eve of the second game of the best-of-seven NBA series. "I would be happy to see Larry Bird get 21 points and the man who's guarding him, Rodney McCray get 20."

The Celtics will be going for their 40th consecutive home victory. They are 47-1, including the regular season and playoffs, in 1985-86, with the only loss coming to Portland on Dec. 6.

Three things that did not go right for the Rockets in their 112-100 loss in the series opener were the foul situation and the play of starters Ralph Sampson and Lewis Lloyd.

Sampson and Akeem Olujuwon, the Rockets' Twin Towers, both got in foul trouble and Sampson scored two points on 1-for-13 shooting and Lloyd scored four.

"Ralph and Lewis didn't play their game," Olujuwon, who scored 33 points, said. "I'm not a one-man team. We need them to do better and we need to hold our ground, rebound and cut down on turnovers."

"But in every playoff series

we've adjusted after losing and I think we can again."

Olujuwon said the foul trouble would not have occurred if the officials had called the first game evenly.

"If the officials call it equal on both sides, I don't mind whether they call it close or let us play physical," Olujuwon said. "But they were calling fouls on me that they were letting slide on the Celtics."

Olujuwon said a foul could have been called every time he touched the ball in the first half.

"I can play physical or not, but the officials can't let the Celtics be physical and make me play with finesse," the Rockets' leading scorer said.

Fitch said he talks to the team about staying out of foul trouble, and he has drills designed to teach players to ignore head and ball fakes.

"At times in the first game, we looked like popcorn poppers jumping up and down," Fitch said.

For the second year, the championship series is being played with a 2-3-2 homecourt format instead of the previous 2-2-1-1-1.

Gambling probe of Pats' players underway

BOSTON (AP)—The National Football League reportedly is investigating allegations that wide receiver Irving Fryar and others on the New England Patriots bet on football games last season.

Warren Welch, director of NFL security, confirmed Wednesday that an investigation is under way, The Boston Globe reported today.

"But we never comment one way or another about any ongoing investigation," Welch said. "That is our policy and we are going to stick with it. I'm not going to say any more than that."

It was not certain whether any of the alleged betting occurred on any Patriots games or on the Super Bowl, which New England lost to Chicago 46-10, the Globe said.

The Patriots reported to the league "an unsubstantiated rumor that Irving (Fryar) might have been involved in gambling," General Manager Patrick Sullivan told the newspaper.

"We followed NFL guidelines and asked the league to investigate, just as we ask them to investigate any rumor," he said. "As far as we're concerned, it's an unsubstantiated rumor, nothing more than that, and that's the way we'll continue to handle it."

The Globe quoted unidentified league sources as saying information on the alleged gambling was given to Coach Raymond Berry a month ago.

"I don't want to talk about it at all," Berry told The Globe. "I don't think it's appropriate."

The newspaper said it could not reach Fryar at his home in Easton.

Patriots spokesman Jim Greenidge said the team had informed Fryar of the reported rumor "so that he would not be shocked when he learned of the investigation." Fryar said nothing to confirm or deny the rumor, Greenidge said.

A news conference originally scheduled for today by Sullivan to answer questions about the allegations was postponed until next Wednesday, said Greenidge.

Top-seeded players keep winning in French Open

PARIS (AP)—Springtime in Paris is wonderful for lovers and seeded tennis players.

While romance blossoms like the roses at Versailles, the men and women at the top of the seeding lists continue to march through their fields at the French Open.

On Wednesday, one-half of the remaining men's seeds and all but one of the women's ranked players started the second round. By day's end, all had moved into the third round, and all but a few with very little trouble.

In fact, all the women's seeds except No. 12 Catarina Lindqvist and No. 13 Carling Bassett won in straight sets.

The No. 1 seeds, Ivan Lendl of Czechoslovakia and Martina Navratilova of the United States, won in straight sets, and took little time doing it.

Chris Evert Lloyd and Steffi Graf, Nos. 2 and 3 in the women's draw, also had straight-set victories and acknowledged they were not pushed.

Besides Bassett struggling to win and Lindqvist rallying after losing the first set, the biggest stir of the day came when France's fourth-seeded Yannick Noah lost a set, and that in a tiebreaker.

Today's action was to see the rest of the men's draw, led by No. 2 Mats Wilander of Sweden and No. 3 Boris Becker of West Germany, finish the second round, and the women start the third.

The lone American seed left in the men's draw, Johan Kriek, advanced with a 6-1, 6-3, 5-7, 6-3 victory over Milan Srejber of Czechoslovakia.

Optimist roundup

Lions Club defeated Grant Supply, 9-4, Tuesday in a Babe Ruth baseball game.

Winning pitcher Matt Brock pitched a four-hitter while striking out eleven and walking five.

Robert Perez pitched for Grant and gave up six hits while striking out seven and walking eight.

Matt Brock and Kevin McKnight had two hits each to lead the Lions. Mike Kelly and Daniel Jimenez added one hit each.

David Doucette led Grant with two hits while Chris Morris had one.

In little league girls' softball action Tuesday, Randy's Foods defeated Pulse Bros., 15-5, and Williams Appliance slipped by Moose Lodge, 10-9. It was the second straight victory for Williams after a 19-game losing streak. Laura Williams knocked in four runs with three singles and a double to lead Randy's 23-hit attack. Joy Cambern had four singles and one RBI and Kerri Barr had three singles, a double, and one RBI.

Top hitters for Pulse were Jerrie Douglas, single, double, and one RBI; Angie Brewer, single and two RBI, and Shannon Harper, single and RBI.

Winning pitcher Kerri Barr allowed just eight hits while striking out six and walking two. Shannon Harper struck out four and walked four for Pulse.

In the Williams Appliance victory, the top hitters for the winners were Carianne Dewey, three singles and one RBI; Jenny Everson, three singles and one RBI, and Jennifer Walker, two singles and one RBI. Leading hitters for Moose were Heidi Phetteplace, two singles, one double, and one RBI; Valerie Brown, one single, one double, and one RBI, and Tammy Martindale, two singles and one RBI.

Winning pitcher was Veronica Santa Cruz, who struck out three and walked thirteen. Misti Thomas struck three and walked fourteen for Moose.

In a National Little League boys' game, Ryan Erwin and Matt Edgar combined for a no-hitter as Cabot defeated Duncan, 16-6, last night.

Erwin and Terin Peet had three hits in four trips to the plate for Cabot. Kurt West was two of two.

Edgar, Andy Sutton, Tracy Peet and Gary Frasier also had hits for Cabot.

Cabot has a 5-2 record.

Trick pitch has grip on baseball

SAN FRANCISCO (NEA) — A year ago, Roger Craig showed Sandy Koufax how to throw a split-finger fastball. Koufax, it should be noted, is 50 years old and ensconced in the Baseball Hall of Fame.

"Right away he wanted to make a comeback," grins Craig, whose main distinction in 12 seasons of pitching major-league baseball himself was losing a total of 46 games in successive years for the New York Mets.

In fact, Craig claims he even thought of seeking vindication when he learned how to throw the split-finger fastball in 1980 as the pitching coach of the Detroit Tigers. "But I was 50 years old then, too," he says, "a little too old to make a comeback."

The split-finger fastball, it appears, is the new rage among aficionados of the mound. And Roger Craig has become its guru.

This spring, Craig took over as manager of the San Francisco Giants, who finished last in the National League West in 1985 with a 62-100 record. He had 25 pitchers in spring camp, and 21 were throwing a split-finger fastball. Using the new pitch, San Francisco got off to a fast start this season and surprised the experts by remaining in contention several weeks into the '86 campaign.

"Right now," Craig says, "on every ball club, you'll see almost half the pitchers throw it. It's amazing how it's magnified. Three years ago, you had maybe one per club."

Without getting too technical, the split-finger pitch imitates a fastball but doesn't have the same velocity because of the widened grip. And as it reaches the plate it dips like a sinker. It's hard to hit, of course.

Major-league pitching used to be a simple profession. The basic requirements were a strong arm and the ability to throw accurately.

These were manifest in a fastball that was varied with a curve.

Then sometime after World War II came the slider, which was really a cross between a fastball and a curve — a breaking pitch that retained swiftness. It was to become the staple of great pitchers like Tom Seaver and Steve Carlton.

Through the years, meanwhile, there had been iconoclasts who were successful with special pitches — the screwball as practiced by Carl Hubbell, who threw it so often that the wrist on his left arm is turned permanently outward; the knuckler, which induced amazing longevity in specialists from Hoyt Wilhelm to Phil Niekro; and the forkball, which enabled Elroy Face to rack up a remarkable 18-1 record as a reliever in 1959.

The forkball was really the precursor of the split-finger fastball, whose first apostle was the late Freddie Martin, a herkie-jerkie flinger who had toiled briefly for the Cardinals after the war.

Martin, serving as an itinerant pitching coach, taught the split-finger fastball to a struggling young minor-league hurler named Bruce Sutter. Immediately, Sutter graduated to the Chicago Cubs in 1976 and became the outstanding reliever in the majors, the first million-dollar pitcher. And he is still being paid handsomely a decade later, with Atlanta.

Other pitchers, however, did not follow Sutter. "I asked him how to throw it," says Craig, "but I could never learn the way he teaches it. Sometimes I wonder if he wants anybody to know."

So, Craig figured it out for himself. A former manager of the Padres (1978-79), Craig recalls: "I had a baseball school in San Diego and was working with 14 and 15-year-olds and wanted to show them an off-speed pitch that wouldn't hurt their arms."

"I had them spread the two fingers (index and middle) that grip the ball, hold it along the seams and throw a fast ball."

Big hands, such as Sutter has, are an asset (the fingers sometimes spread wide on the seams for greater movement) but not crucial.

As the pitching coach of the Detroit Tigers (1980-84), Craig's first pupil was Milt Wilcox. "He'd be pitching a shutout," recalls Craig, "and give up a three-run homer on a slider. 'You got to do something different,' I told him. 'I'm going to teach you a different pitch.' He won 19 games and the World Series."

Norman: Too many TPC courses

BETHESDA, Md. (AP)—Greg Norman doesn't like the fact that the Congressional Country Club will no longer be a regular stop on the PGA Tour.

Norman, who won the Kemper Open at Congressional two years ago, said Wednesday the transition to stadium-style courses will make the tour become bland, a charge made by other golfers.

"We have too many TPC (Tournament Player Club) courses," Norman said before today's scheduled start of the 1986 Kemper Open. "We're going to be playing one third of our tournaments on TPC courses. I don't want to play the same style of golf course. They seem to come out of the same mold."

Six of this year's 43 official events will be played on TPC stadium courses, with four more to be added next year.

"I like variety," Norman said. "Congressional, Winged Foot (Mamaroneck, N.Y.), Augusta (site of the Masters in Georgia), I like to see those kinds of courses. Everything has become stereotyped."

The 19th annual Kemper Open is being held over the 7,173-yard, par-72 Congressional course for the last time after seven years. It will move to a newly-opened TPC site at nearby Avenal, about a mile away.

Calvin Peete, a late addition to the field of 141 professionals and three amateurs, disagrees with Norman about the proliferation of TPC courses.

Many of the famous names of golf are not playing in the Kemper. Three of the top four money winners did appear, but Andy Bean, the leading money winner with $388,213, withdrew Wednesday because of back problems.

San Jacinto bids for JUCO title

GRAND JUNCTION, Colo. (AP)—San Jacinto Coach Wayne Graham, with his Gators bidding for a second straight National Junior College World Series title, started his best Wednesday. Steve Camarda, 16-2, came through, like he has the past two years for the Gators.

He was pulled in the eighth, but only after he had held Brevard, Fla., to three runs in San Jacinto's eventual 9-7 victory.

"We think Steve is the best pitcher we've ever had in our program," Graham said. "I think he pitched the best seven innings in the tournament."

Camarda is the school's all-time victory leader with a career record of 27-4. He was named to the all-tournament team here a year ago and appears a sure bet to repeat.

Earlier Wednesday, Brookdale, N.J., eliminated Nassau, N.Y., 17-13.

San Jacinto, the sole undefeated team in the tournament, will meet Yavapai, Ariz., Thursday night while Brevard will take on Brookdale in an afternoon loser-out game.

Brevard Coach Ernie Rosseau said he remains confident his Titans can win the national championship.

"All year long this club has won the games it's had to," he said. "San Jacinto's the best club here, a great club. They stuck it to us tonight."

David Vasquez laced a two-run double in the ninth inning to give San Jacinto its 9-7 victory over Brevard.

It capped a four-run ninth that gave the Gators, 51-12, the cushion they needed to withstand Brevard's four-run rally in the bottom of the inning.

Brevard, 41-10, took a 1-0 lead in the fourth on singles by Laz

Balsera and Billy Kull.

San Jacinto, with a two-run double by Joe Don Bourque and a three-run homer by Tom McGee, led 5-1 in the fifth.

Brevard cut the margin to 5-3 in the eighth on singles by Balsera and Pat Harding and a double by Rob Stiegle.

In the ninth, Gator Mike Randle led off with a home run, the next two batters flew out and Brevard allowed two base runners on errors.

Mark Simon singled a run home, followed by Vasquez and his two-run hit.

Brevard starter, Gary Osborne, 4-2, took the loss.

For Brookdale, Jeff Kipila slammed home runs in the seventh and eighth innings, with his second one good for three runs, as the Jersey Blues defeated Nassau 17-13.

Tracy Pancoski hit a grand slam in the seventh inning to give Brookdale a 13-10 lead. Then Kipila, the next batter up, hit a solo shot over the leftfield fence.

The dinger was the fifth for Kipila in the national tournament and tied the record for home runs set by Steve Coats of Louisburg, N.C., in 1975.

Nassau, 41-10, pulled within 14-13 in the eighth on a two-run double by Bill Arroyo. Fred Baum drove in three runs for Nassau with a home run and a single.

In the top of the ninth, however, Tony Bellavia singled in a run for the Jersey Blues, 38-8, Todd Walsack drove in two more and Kipila hit his three-run shot over the fence in deep left-center field.

White Deer honors athletes

WHITE DEER — Seniors Jeff Cox and Cathy Williams were named boys and girls athlete of the year at the White Deer High School Athletic Banquet held in Parish Hall here Saturday night.

Jackie Rogers won the Buck Award, given to the most promising male underclassman, while the Doe Award went to Monica Vigil. The "Ironman" Award, given for off-season work, was awarded to Jeff Younger.

Ruston McConnell was named the football defensive most valuable player, and Ron McIntosh won on offense.

Cox won the boys basketball MVP and Tami Canaday won it for the Does, while Williams was named the MVP for girls track.

In boys track, Cox was named the outstanding runner, Joe Don Brown the outstanding field events participant, Shaun Greene the most improved and Bart Thomas the outstanding newcomer.

Kane Barrow was named the boys golf MVP and Carrie Woodall the girls MVP. Tennis MVPs were Terri Penland for the boys and James Ingle for the girls.

Serious depression found very common, but is largely untreated

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Depression is more common in younger people than in older people, and is largely going untreated despite the availability of effective methods, according to studies of more than 20,000 Americans.

An estimated 11 percent to 12 percent of Americans suffer from depression, said one of the authors of the new studies, Myra Weissman of Yale University.

Women experience depression twice as frequently as men, and the illness is most common in people aged 18 to 44, Weissman reported Wednesday at the annual meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

The studies, part of a large effort by the National Institute of Mental Health to determine the prevalence of mental illness in the United States, identified a variety of factors that increase a person's chances of suffering from depression.

Those most at risk are the young, females, those who are separated, divorced or unhappy in their marriages, and those with a history of depression in their families, Weissman said.

"Forty-five percent of women who say they don't get along with their spouse are in a current episode of major depression," she said.

Among men who say they don't get along with their wives, 15 percent are suffering from depression, she said.

The studies, conducted in families and in five communities across the United States, also found a variety of factors that were not related to depression.

Education, income and occupation, for example, did not affect rates of depression. Nor did race. "Depression," Weissman said, "is an equal opportunity disorder."

The family studies showed that depression is two to three times more common among people whose immediate families include victims of depression.

Weissman reported that children of people suffering from depression are more likely than other children to suffer a wide variety of other ailments. They have more head injuries, operations, accidents and more difficulties in school, even though their intelligence is perfectly normal.

"For reasons we do not know, these children are at high risk for having bad things happen to them," Weissman said.

The risk factors that have been identified do not suggest simple means of preventing depression. "Unfortunately, these risks cannot readily be modified as in the case of diet or smoking for cardiovascular disease," she said.

The risk factors can, however, alert physicians to the diagnosis of depression, she said.

In another study presented Wednesday, M. Kathryn Jacobs of the Center for Infant Study at the University of Maryland presented a series of photographs suggesting why babies born prematurely are more likely than full-term babies to become depressed as adults.

Premature babies, even those who are otherwise completely normal, were shown in the photographs to be unable to maintain eye contact with their parents, unable to cuddle normally and lacked certain normal reflexes.

This combination of abnormal behaviors can lead parents to feel, subconsciously, that their children don't love them or don't want to be with them, Jacobs said.

By the time the behaviors correct themselves weeks after birth, parents may have already unwittingly stopped seeking eye contact and engaging in some forms of affectionate behavior, she said.

That could affect the babies' emotional makeup for the rest of their lives, she said.

Supreme Court to hear injury suit against school

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Supreme Court agreed Wednesday to review a Harris County case in which a mother sued the Spring Independent School District and a number of its employees for alleged negligence and failure to provide adequate medical care for the woman's daughter.

Celeste Eugenia Hopkins, the mother, contended that her daughter, who has cerebral palsy, was left unsupervised in a classroom and was pushed into a stack of chairs, causing a severe blow to her head.

Ms. Hopkins, a Spring ISD employee, was not contacted concerning her daughter's condition, and the child remained in school all day, it was alleged.

At the end of the day, the child was transported by bus to her day care center.

The lawsuit alleged that as a result of the employees' neglect and failure to provide adequate medical care, the child's life expectancy was dramatically decreased.

News in brief

WASHINGTON (AP)

The government has proposed intensifying the search for private health insurers that might be dumping their expenses on Medicaid, forcing the health program to pay nearly $325 million a year unnecessarily.

The Health and Human Services Department proposed new regulations that would require state welfare officials to quiz Medicaid applicants more closely on whether they have private health insurance that should be paying for their health care.

The proposed regulations, published in Wednesday's Federal Register, will be subject to public comment for the next 30 days. The government will then consider the comments in drafting final regulations.

The potential savings are estimated loosely because it is not known how often Medicaid pays when others should. However, a rough estimate indicates that the government could save between $50 million and $125 million next year, and between $125 million and $325 million annually by 1990.

WASHINGTON (AP) — A federal employee union has filed suit in U.S. District Court in an attempt to stop the U.S. Customs Service from enforcing a drug-screening program.

Robert Tobias, president of the National Treasury Employees Union, told a news conference on Wednesday that requiring workers to undergo urinalyses to detect use of illegal drugs is "lunacy" and violates the constitutional rights of Customs Service employees.

Jim Mahan, a Customs Service spokesman, said "we will not comment on anything that is in litigation." He did say the initial testing began on May 16 with some senior executives, and they all proved negative.

Children help to plan their own playground

GRAND PRAIRIE, Texas (AP) — Ask kids what their favorite thing to do is and the response probably would be "play."

Grand Prairie will soon have one of three "creative playgrounds" in the southwestern United States to accommodate the kid in everyone.

The project, a joint venture between the city, the park board, a group of residents and the students of Eisenhower Elementary School, will be constructed in southeast section of Waggoner Park.

An Ithaca, N.Y., architect, Robert S. Leathers, has worked with communities and elementary school-aged children to design creative playgrounds throughout the country.

The majority of the playgrounds have been built in the Washington, D.C., area, but the first one in Texas, Kidd Springs Park in Dallas, was completed last October.

Barbara Hagle, chairman of the Grand Prairie Playground Committee, grew up in the Kidd Springs area and became interested in getting a playground in Grand Prairie after seeing the one there last Christmas.

"I came back after Christmas and started making phone calls. I called John Sellar with the Parks and Recreation Board and asked him if he knew how we could get a playground like the one in Kidd Springs."

Ms. Hagle said Sellar and the Parks Board have been instrumental and supportive.

"Everybody we've shown it (the playground) to has been supportive," Ms. Hagle said. "We're getting more support every day, but we'll need all the help we can get before the project is completed. Hopefully, we'll meet our goal."

The playground committee's first step was to get monetary assistance from the Parks Board for the $6,000 payment to the architect. The board recommended that payment at the Grand Prairie City Council's May 13 meeting to fund the design services through park bonds.

"For $40,000 in materials, the city will build a $120 to $150,000 facility. That is what it would cost if the city bid it out," said Tim Shinogle, with the Parks and Recreation Department.

The $40,000 will be raised through a variety of fund raisers, Ms. Hagle said. Students are planning a Board Sale in which they will sell an imaginary board, representing a piece of the construction, for $3. When a board is sold a popsicle stick will be placed on a 10-foot-by-15-foot drawing of the park.

"When the drawing is covered with popsicle sticks, we should have enough money to start the work," she said.

Leather's design plan calls for three steps in getting the playground built — Design Day, Organization Day and a four-day volunteer Construction Weekend.

The first step was Design Day, in which students at Eisenhower were given the opportunity two weeks ago to tell an associate architect with Leathers' firm, Julia Haffka, what they wanted in their new playground. Ms. Haffka went around to each class to get the students' input and then she held a group session with the Children's Committee, which consists of 30 representatives of the school.

"Can we have a dinosaur that you can slide down its tail?" one student asked.

"Can we have tires that you jump on?" another enthusiastic kindergarten student asked.

After an evening meeting with the students and their parents, Ms. Haffka had completed a rough drawing of the proposed park.

"This is a picture of your playground," Ms. Haffka told the Children's Committee. "Over the next couple of weeks, I would like you to collect ideas from your classmates about what they want in the playground and we'll try to get everything they want in it."

She went over the drawing with the students and told them what was to be in each section. Tentative plans include: a space shuttle, a tire maze and tunnel, a castle with a tunnel slide, and a picnic area with a gazebo, swings, an Alamo Fort, a haunted house, a wiggly-waggly bridge and a dinosaur.

There also will be a special section of the playground for physically and visually handicapped children.

"We need the whole community to help us build your playground," Ms. Haffka said.

"We will need donations in the form of money and food and skilled and unskilled labor — anyone who can use a hammer — we need your help," said Kim Adams, a member of the playground committee.

"We'll need tools and people to man the day care center. And we'll need food donations for the workers," Ms. Hagle said.

The four-day volunteer work weekend tentatively is scheduled for October.
