U.S. helicopters shoot Iranian navy minelayer; crew killed or captured

By ALY MAHMOUD Associated Press Writer

MANAMA, Bahrain — Iran acknowledged today that a ship attacked by a U.S. helicopter gunship in the Persian Gulf was part of its navy, but denied the vessel was sowing mines in the waterway.

State-run Tehran radio said five sailors were killed and demanded that the U.S. Navy hand over surviving members of the crew.

In Washington, the Pentagon said three Iranians were confirmed dead and two were missing. A Pentagon statement said a Navy boarding party found 10 mines aboard the vessel, the Iran Ajr, and that 26 crewmen — four of them wounded — were either picked up in a lifeboat or removed from the

"The ship belonged to the shipping company of the Islamic Republic of Iran and had been placed at the disposal of the country's navy," Tehran radio said in its main broadcast at 2 p.m.

The report came only a few hours after Parliament Speaker Hashemi Rafsanjani insisted the United States had attacked an unarmed cargo

Rafsanjani "categorically denied" the Iran Ajr was laying mines, according to Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency

'Those who have entered the region by force and embarked on wicked acts will soon regret their actions," Rafsanjani told the Iranian Parliament today, according to an IRNA reported monitored in Cyprus. He said the raid "will not go unanswered.

Rafsanjani said the Americans fired on the ship ''to overshadow'' Iranian President Ali Khamenei's speech to the United Nations General Assembly today. Khamenei was expected to outline his country's stand on a U.N. cease-fire resolution aimed at ending the 7-year-old war Iran-Iraq

An Iranian Foreign Ministry statement said U.S. charges that the ship was laying mines were "a fictitious excuse.'

NFL to launch Oct. 4 season with has-beens

By The Associated Press

Twenty-eight new groups of football players will report to NFL training camps on Wednesday. And, within 48 hours, the NFL will have become the New Football League

Everything changed after midnight Monday, when the long-threatened strike by the National Football League Players Association became a reality

"There have been other industries who have started with new people and started all over again," Detroit Lions general manager Russ Thomas said. "That's unfortunately the process that we're confronted with.

No one in management is pretending that quickly assembled teams of free agents can be molded into NFL-caliber units by Oct. 4, the planned debut for alternative football.

"We are not putting on games as typical of the Cowboys," said Tex Schramm, president of the Dallas Cowboys. But he promised "exciting and competitive games' even with free agents.

"We are not pretending that it is the same product,' Schramm added.

Iran president scolds U.N., doesn't mention U.S. attack

Iranian President Ali Khamenei today told the U.N. General Assembly its Security Council is a "paper factory" for issuing useless orders and said it should condemn Iraq for starting the Iran-Iraq war.

Khamenei's address came as his nation, under worldwide pressure to end the war, vowed to avenge a U.S. attack on one of its

The 29-page prepared text of Khamenei's speech made no reference to Monday's attack, the most serious American military strike against Iran since the United States expanded its Persian Gulf presence to protect Kuwaiti tankers and other shipping.

The text also did not provide a clear Iranian response to a Security Council cease-fire resolution, which many diplomats hoped to Khamenei repeated earlier Iranian statements demanding that Iraq be named the aggressor in the war. He accused the Security Council of letting the United States push it into passing the resolution and called the council "a paper factory for issuing worthless and ineffective orders.

The Iranian president also attacked the United States for its "dangerous, peace-threatening" gulf presence

U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar greeted Khamenei, dressed in a black turban and long black robe, as he and Iranian Foreign Minister Ali Akbar Velayati arrived at the United Nations.

None would comment on the ship attack.

U.N. before his speech, which began with a prayer Iran's official news agency quoted Iranian Parliament Speaker Hashemi Rafsanjani as denying the ship was sowing mines. He was quoted as saying the Monday night attack — in which Iran said five crewmen - was intended to divert attention from Khamenei's speech, "because the United States fears that Iran's voice will echo from the United Nations and that the Americans will hear things they have never heard be-

Rafsanjani, addressing the Iran Parliament in Tehran, also declared the attack "will not go unanswered," the Islamic Republic News Agency said in a report monitored in Cyprus

Before the attack Monday night, a British diplomat said Khamenei's speech was widely volution, was given a tour of the anticipated in light of Iran's ambiguous response to a U.N. Security Council resolution calling for a cease-fire in the 7-yearold Iran-Iraq war

"It's quite clear to us that many members are waiting to see what the Iranian delegation has to say in the course of this week." said the diplomat, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar visited Iran and Iraq earlier this month to seek compliance with the cease-fire resolution.

Iraq said it would comply if Iran did. Iran has indicated it would accept a cease-fire if Iraq were branded the aggressor.

Perez de Cuellar said a meeting Saturday in New York with Iranian Foreign Minister Ali Akbar Velayati didn't clarify Iran's response.

Pampa submits half-hearted, last-minute prison proposal

By CATHY SPAULDING Staff Writer

Pampa Chamber of Commerce Director Bruce Barton admits that Pampa has almost no chance to get a state prison in the area

But, Barton confirmed today that Pampa took that chance and submitted a deadline prison proposal to the Texas Department of Corrections. Pampa's is one of 33 proposals that were submitted to the TDC before the Monday deadline.

The TDC is seeking sites for two prisons — one 2,250-bed minimum-security unit and one 2,250-bed maximum-security unit. According to the Associated Press, the TDC sent site request "packets" in August to 120 communities that had expressed an interest in having one of the prisons

We were always going to send in a prison proposal, but it was not our central focus," Barton said, adding that the chamber's top priority continues to be industrial recruiting.

Barton said that it took about one to two weeks for his staff to draft the Pampa proposal and to fill out the TDC site packets. The proposal was completed Friday and sent to the TDC by overnight

The chamber director added that no land had been dedicated for a Pampa prison, although he said suitable ground exists near the industrial park, east of Pampa on U.S. 60. The city of Pampa agreed to extend water and sewer service (with no apparent change in rates) to the site.

The city utility service was the only "local incentive" the Pampa chamber listed on its site prop-

In contrast, Borger put prison recruiting as a top priority, drafting a detailed proposal suggesting that inmates can operate a plastics manufacturing plant with cooperation of Phillips Petroleum Co. Borger officials also had a site selected for the unit. The Borger proposal was hand delivered to the TDC, Barton said.

Another area town seeking TDC's blessing is Dalhart, which prepared a videotape sales pitch and has set aside 1,700 acres for a prison. Amarillo and Childress also sent proposals to the TDC

Barton expressed little optimism that Pampa's proposal will be seriously considered.

The TDC packet requests that proposed sites be located adjacent to a county with more than 100,000 population and near adequate educational opportunities and medical care.

The TDC also wanted to know how close Pampa is from its distribution centers and treatment facilities, all located in eastern Texas. The nearest units were the Ramsey III canning plant at Rosharon and the Huntsville main unit, both 600

The Pampa proposal noted that the site would be 700 miles from the nearest TDC medical facility and 60 miles from the nearest accredited medical school or health science center in Amarillo. When the TDC asked how many "health care" providers were located within 30 miles from the site, the Pampa proposal listed 31 physicians, 13 dentists, one psychologist and no psychiatrists.

Not very good prospects, Barton admits, "but you never can tell.

Pampa City Manager Bob Hart admitted he was never certain that the TDC would support a Pampa proposal or that Pampa would support a TDC proposal. But, he added, it was worth a try just to get Pampa's name on the list.

"The city was involved in the early stages," Hart said. "But the city didn't spend a lot of time on it. See PRISON, Page 2

Magazines argue over who's the richest of them all

AP Business Writer

By PETER COY

NEW YORK — A Japanese landlord is the richest person in the world, says Forbes magazine, which places his wealth at $20 billion. Not so, says Fortune, which put the Sultan of Brunei at the top of its list of fatcats and potentates

Forbes gives the golden laurels to Yoshiaki Tsutsumi, but Fortune credits Tsutsumi with a meager $2.5 billion and said Brunei's "freespending sultan of oil," Hassanal Bolkiah, has a net worth of $25 billion.

Forbes, however, said it disqualified the sultan and others "since their power is political first and economic only secondarily.

The sniping broke out last weekend as the rival business magazines issued news releases on their forthcoming issues.

Fortune said Monday that Forbes, in a "bizarre move," rushed its list into print this week to beat Fortune to the newsstand by a week. Forbes admitted it, but noted that it has been printing its own list of the 400 richest Americans since 1982

Fortune struck back when it caught wind of the Forbes list and issued a press release Saturday promoting its Oct. 12 cover story. Forbes' news release on its Oct. 5 cover story came out a day later.

Calculating the wealth of billionaires seems to be more art than science, judging from the discrepancies between the magazines' calculations. Forbes' list is heavy with Japanese, while Fortune's is strong on Arab royalty and North Americans. Tsutsumi, No. 1 on the Forbes list, is the 53-year-old head of Seibu Railway Group. Japan's biggest and richest landlord. The empire consists of railways, more than 30 hotels, 25 golf courses, ski resorts and other Forbes' cover story includes only foreign billionaires, but the magazine issued a statement Monday with the names of the top 49 Americans on its annual Forbes 400 list.

Only three individuals or families make the top 10 on both magazines' lists of combined U.S. and foreign billionaires. They are Albert, Paul and Ralph Reichmann, Canadian real estate, newsprint and oil magnates; Kenneth Roy Thomson, a Canadian with interests in news media and real estate, and Sam Moore Walton, the discount retailing king from Bentonville, Ark.

Fortune's list also included American publishing magnates Samuel I. Newhouse Jr. and Donald E. Newhouse; Queen Elizabeth II, and candy makers Forrest E. Mars Sr., Forrest E. Mars Jr. and John F. Mars of

Hart called the prison proposal a "quality of life According to the Associated Press, TDC director

Jim Lynaugh hopes the prison board will select a site by Oct. 15, allowing construction bids to be solicited in February and inmates moved 16 months after the bid is awarded.

Hart compared the "proposal experience" to area towns' repeated efforts to seek grants through the PRPC. Each time, a town making a request should improve its presentation.

American aggression will certainly receive an appropriate response and the Islamic World.

The attack Monday night was the deadliest U.S. strike against Iran since the Reagan administration began expanding the American presence in the gulf in July in an effort to protect Kuwait's tankers and keep the oil shipping lanes open.

The Iran Ajr, an amphibious landing craft, was attacked 50 miles northeast of Bahrain in international waters, Pentagon and White House officials

The 1,662-ton ship was under tow today by an American warship, witnesses reported. It was not clear where the ship was being taken. Witnesses aboard a chartered television news helicopter said that from a distance of about three miles the Iran Air showed no visible signs of damage

The U.S. strike came shortly after a British tanker reported it was attacked about 100 miles north of Bahrain. The Pentagon said the incidents were not Lloyds Register of Shipping for 1982-83 lists Iran Air ac a 1.662-ton roll-on, roll-off cargo ship, built in 1978 and owned by the Iran National Shipping Lines. The vessel does not appear in later editions of the registry, indicating it may have been removed from Iran's civilian fleet.

Pentagon spokesman Fred Hoffman said at least two American helicopters were on patrol from the frigate USS Jarrett when they spied the minelaying through night-vision devices. One of the helicopters opened fire with 7.62mm machine guns and 2.75-inch rockets, setting the ship ablaze, the Pentagon said.

Although the Pentagon indicated one American helicopter opened fire, Pentagon sources said two choppers may have taken part in the assault.

The attack occurred as Iran faces increasing pressure to halt attacks in the gulf and accept the U.N.-sponsored cease-fire resolution. President Reagan opened the general debate session of the 42nd U.N. General Assembly Monday with a call for international sanctions against Iran if it rejects

The war between Iran and Iraq spilled over into the waterway in 1984, and the two countries have attacked more than 350 ships in the gulf since then. will not be either The Reagan administration agreed to reflag 11 Kuwaiti tankers to protect them from attacks from Iran, which accuses Kuwait of aiding Iraq. Five West European governments have sent forces to the gulf to safeguard commercial shipping.

The United States and Iran have confronted one another in the gulf before. A Navy F-14 Tomcat fighter fired two missiles Aug. 8 at an Iranian jet that was judged to be making a "hostile" approach on another plane. However, both missiles missed

Iran has said in the past that the gulf would be "full of mines" until foreign powers withdrew their forces from the waterway. It has also claimed it sowed mines to protect its waters.

A reflagged tanker, the Bridgeton, struck a mine July 24, prompting the United States to send minehunting vessels to the gulf.

Diplomats at the United Nations expressed surprise at the American attack.

"We regret any incident that happens. That's why we're trying to end the war," said Diego Cordovez, U.N. undersecretary-general for special political affairs.

Gulf-based salvage sources and Lloyds Shipping Intelligence Unit in London said a British-flag tanker, the Gentle Breeze, was sailing empty to Kuwait when it was attacked about 9 p.m. Monday about 20 miles southwest of Iranian-held Farsi island.

A Filipino boatswain was killed as the ship was hit by 14 shells, said Aswin Atre, managing director of the ship's operating company, Wallem Ship Management Ltd. of Hong Kong.

Lloyds said the vessel radioed that it had been attacked by an "Iranian missile boat," but Atre said the captain could not see the attackers.

Pickens trims cash for Newmont

AMARILLO (AP) - In response to a hefty cash dividend announced by Newmont Mining Corp., an investor group led by oilman T. Boone Pickens today scaled back its hostile offer for the company's stock.

Ivanhoe Partners announced its recently commenced tender offer for 28 million shares of common stock of the New York-based mining company's stock would be reduced from $105 to $72 per share.

The Pickens group said the move was triggered by Newmont's announcement Monday of a special $33-per-share dividend payment to shareholders to fend off Pickens' hostile bid.

Newmont's board of directors, which previously had rejected as inadequate the $105 bid, said it would pay the dividend as part of a previously-announced restructuring aimed at enhancing shareholder value and focusing on its key gold business.

Ivanhoe's bid for Newmont shares contained a clause providing for a reduction in the pershare if Newmont declared or paid certain dividends, according to a statement issued by Ivanhoe Partners.

In addition to the cash dividend. Newmont also said Monday that it had signed a 10-year agreement with Consolidated Gold Fields PLC of Britain, its largest shareholder with 26.2 percent of Newmont's shares, to limit the company's stake to less than a majority.

Newmont also disclosed, however, that Consolidated Gold intends to increase its Newmont holdings to as much as 49.9 percent, as indicated in a document the British company filed Monday with the Securities and Exchange Commission.

That would give Consolidated Gold — which supports Newmont's management — a hefty stake in Newmont and effectively block Ivanhoe Partners from taking control, according to some observers Ivanhoe Partners, which currently owns 9.95 percent of outstanding Newmont shares, is made up of Pickens' Amarillobased Mesa Limited Partnership, Harbert Corp. of Alabama, NRM Energy Co. of Dallas and Galactic Resources Ltd.

"It looks like it would blow Pickens out of the water," said Andrew Geller, an analyst for Provident National Bank in Philadelphia. Much will depend on how quickly Consolidated Gold increases its holding, he suggested

On Sept. 8, Ivanhoe launched a $95-a-share tender offer for the 28 million Newmont shares and later sweetened the offer to $105 a share. If successful, the tender offer and the 6.65 million shares the investor group already holds would have given it a majority stake in Newmont.

In its SEC filing, Consolidated Gold indicated that it would expand its holdings in Newmont through both purchases on the open market and negotiated deals - which means it could arrange to buy Ivanhoe's 6.65 million shares, representing 9.95 percent of the total outstanding.

Newmont's special dividend. besides appealing to shareholders in general, might also have been aimed at compensating leading holder Consolidated Gold for its support in helping thwart Ivanhoe's bid, some observers suggested.

Newmont Chairman Gordon R. Parker asserted that shareholders would be better served by receiving the dividend and by participating in Newmont's future as a gold company than by accepting Ivanhoe's offer.

"Our restructuring plan will focus Newmont on its gold business - a business in which we are one of the world's premier participants," he said.

"At the same time, the $33 dividend delivers - equally to all stockholders - substantial immediate value, while enabling stockholders to continue as the owners of a company having the values which are inherent in its gold producing assets.'

Newmont expects in due course to sell some of its portfolio investments and certain non-gold assets, he said.

The U.S. Department of Health and Human Services plans to award grants to states' to help lessen the strain on their welfare systems from newly legalized immigrants under the nation's first immigration amnesty law

The amount to be received by each state is figured by a complicated formula partly determined by the number of legalized immigrants and the amount of social services provided them by the states, the Dallas Times Herald reported Monday.

Under the plan, Texas would receive the third-largest grant although it is expected to have the second-largest population of legalized immigrants, about 307,000, according to the preliminary disbursement calculations by the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services.

New York, which is predicted to have the third-biggest number of immigrants - 258,000 - would get the secondbiggest grant. California, with as many as 50 percent of the nation's illegal immigrants, would receive the largest

Gov. Bill Clements and most of Texas' congressional delegation say the proposed federal formula unfairly penalizes Texas for its decentralized welfare system, which fails to accurately reflect the number of illegal aliens in the state.

A congressional plan created last fall includes a four-year, $4 billion federal pot to help states with welfare costs, but is awaiting public comment before it can become final.

Newly legalized applicants will be barred from receiving most of the federal aid for five years, causing them to continually turn to state and local programs for help.

Under the formula, Texas would get about $38.6 million for the first part of 1988, New York would get $38.8 million and California would get $233.6 million, the Herald reported.

The payments for the rest of the year, and for those following, could change depending on how many illegals actually apply before amnesty ends next May

Texas officials say the plan should distribute the money on the basis of how many newly legalized citizens the state has. The newspaper said if the payments were figured that way, Texas would stand to get $17.3 million more for the first part of 1988.

Opponents of the calculating method say it is based on an estimate that Texas had about 9 percent of the nation's illegal population. But as of Sept. 11, the state had accounted for 14 percent of all the applicatons filed in the first four months of the amnesty program.

Critics also say Texas would suffer from the allocation scheme because it has a less-centralized system of assist ance than many other states, with most services provided at the local level and thus more difficult to identify.

Some state officials and immigrant advocates say the state is at fault for the shortfall because of a miserly approach to helping the poor.

"Texas' traditional disdain for social services, in this case, may end up hurting not only poor people but the entire state budget," said William Beardall.

"It's really very simple," said Mark Helmar, assistant secretary of California's health and Welfare Agency. "The more people who know about the program will become legalized, and the more that are legalized the more money we will get

Circus performance, Carnegie stint among Neiman-Marcus gifts

DALLAS (AP) — The perennial purveyor of posh presents, Neiman-Marcus, this year is inviting its well-heeled clientele to run away to the circus for a day, raise a lamb to make a living sweater or wave a baton at Carnegie Hall. The people who gave the world the Spangled Cat and his-and-her camels in the traditional Christmas catalog have several other pricey seasonal suggestions, including a cruise on a sumptuous

This year's selection of gifts plays upon adult fantasies, said Jan Roberts, spokesman for the department store chain.

For one — and only one — aspiring Arthur Fiedler with $50,000 to spare, Carnegie Hall is the setting for a directorial debut.

After taking lessons from Skitch Henderson, music director of the New York Pops, the buyer will direct the orchestra in a stirring rendition of 'The Stars and Stripes Forever." A chair with a special commemorative plaque bearing the guest conductor's name also will be installed.

Ms. Roberts said Monday morning the Carnegie debut had not yet been spoken for, but added most customers had not received their catalogs.

Couples willing to plunk down $7,500 can spend a day as a Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey circus performer, with 25 friends looking on in the said Ms. Roberts. "We anticipate it to be very popular.'

"A lot of adults have that childhood fantasy,"

To give aspiring ringmasters across the country an equal shot at the 10 spots available, Neiman-Marcus has set 10 a.m. CDT Nov. 10 as the start for taking reservations.

For $29,000, you can sail the open seas for a week aboard the 112-foot yacht, "Never Say Never," equipped with a two master suites, two staterooms, crew of five and a Cordon Bleu-quality chef. Those on a budget can rent the yacht for a day

But if you're tired of all the glitz and yearn for the simple life, raising a Colorado Karakul lamb or Mohair goat kid can be the starting point for a one-of-a-kind sweater for a mere $700.

The presents come complete with tools and instruction for raising the animals and shearing and spinning their wool.

Some animal rights activists criticized the gifts, saying the farm animals may be neglected if buyers order them as a joke or a toy. But Neiman's officials said a company employee will talk with any customer who orders an animal to try to determine the purchaser's suitability.

N-M picks up on the no-smoking trend with a page devoted to kicking the habit, featuring a hand-held fan to blow away smoke endorsed by "Dallas" star Larry Hagman.

Georgetown war memorial slabs stolen

AUSTIN (AP) — Fund raisers who spent seven months collecting money for a monument to Williamson County's war dead now have to start all over. Somebody stole their marble slabs.

AUSTIN (AP) - An FBI official says a former teller who is accused of embezzling almost $600,000 from a savings and loan association may have fled to South America

An indictment filed in federal court Monday named George Alexander Estrada, 24, formerly of Austin. It recommended that bond be set at $750,000 when Estrada is apprehended.

Estrada who embezzling $594,600 from the First Federal Savings and Loan Association during the last months he worked there, is believed to be in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, according to FBI agent Greg Rampton, who investigated the case.

The man worked at the bank for four years, working his way up to a position as a vault teller, investigators said.

Jackson becomes victim of 'quotas'

By all accounts, the Rev. Jesse Jackson leads the pack of Democratic presidential contenders. A recent Time poll of Democrats gave him 26 percent of the vote, more than double the 11 percent given the runner-up, Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis. Yet those contenders, and the national media, continue to count Jackson as one of the "seven dwarfs." Nor has Jackson's announcement that he intends to announce his candidacy — the latest stupid ploy in political PR — improved his position. What's going on here? When Walter Mondale held the same front-runner position at this point in the 1984 campaign, no one questioned his place. At that time the other contenders — Gary Hart, Alan Cranston, George McGovern and the rest — began taking aim at Mondale, further proof of his kingpin status.

None of this has happened to Jackson. Instead he is treated as a totem. The other six candidates (seven if Rep. Patricia Schroeder is counted), and their media cheerleaders, patronize Jackson. But they don't seem to take him seriously.

Jackson was executive director of Operation Breadbasket from 1966-71; he founded and was national president of Operation PUSH from 1971 to 1983; and now he leads the Rainbow Coalition. That is more leadership experience than Biden has, or than has been chalked up by such contenders as Sen. Albert Gore and Rep. Richard Gephardt.

Others suggest that Jackson is too left-wing for the pack. True enough, Jackson supports higher taxes, more government control of industry, affirmative action, and other de facto racist quota schemes, and appeasement of the Soviets. But all the other Democratic candidates support the same positions.

So what's the deal? Jackson is black. And that is the dark secret of the Democrats: They expect blacks, who make up 20 percent of the party, to support them, but they don't want a black as their nominee. Jackson is the victim of his own support of racial quotas.

But Jackson won't compromise with white liberal Democrats by agreeing to take a traditional 'black'' cabinet post, such as U.N. ambassador or H.U.D. secretary, in a future Democrat administration. Though Jackson supports such patronizing devices as affirmative action, he won't be patronized

Instead, Jackson may raise a fuss during the campaign, insisting on his rightful place as front runner. By thus repudiating the racial quota assigned him, Jackson will, by his actions, contradict his own support of racial quotas. It would be too much to expect Jackson to repudiate quotas in other areas as well; he is, after all, a politician.

Whatever happens to his candidacy, and however hypocritical his own stance. Jackson's mere presence in the race is a continuing rebuff to the social engineers (in whatever party) who would impose a racial stamp on America. Right on, Jesse.

Bork neglects individual rights

At the start of the fight over Robert Bork's nomination to the Supreme Court, one unsettled issue was whether his constitutional philosophy and its practical implications were a proper subject for Senate inquiry. That issue is now largely resolved: Bork's allies as well as his opponents are plainly motivated by ideology, and the historical record shows that the Senate has often scrutinized such matters. The question now is whether his views deserve greater representation on the Supreme Court.

It's a hard question, complicated by a spectacularly unfair campaign against him. Bork has been accused of the most hideous intentions imaginable. An article in The New Republic by one of his shrillest critics, journalist Renata Adler, found him guilty of "sheer racist, alarmist demagoguery," detected a desire to impose a "totalitarian silence" on political debate and suggested that he would allow the forcible sterilization on a specific non-racial minority. Adler then had the imagination to denounce Bork's 'relentless habit of extreme overstatement.'

The campaign to discredit Bork is no more honest than the effort to associate him with revered justices whose views he doesn't share such as Louis Brandeis, whose opinions on the constitutional protection for speech advocating lawbreaking have been a special object of Bork's scorn, and John Harlan, who voted with the majority in the landmark Griswold case that, to Bork's everlasting regret, found a constitutional right to privacy.

Bork deserves to be judged by his own views, not those ascribed to him by friends and enemies. Over decades of writing and speaking, he has fashioned an interpretation of the Constitu-argued. It is also wrong. President Reagan chose Bork because of the judge's views. In light of the decisive effect they are likely to have on the Supreme Court's future, those views are ample grounds for the Senate to reject him.

At the heart of his thinking is a deference to democracy. Bork's central article of faith is that when a law has been passed by elected representatives, unelected judges should be loath to overrule them - except when the Constitution clearly gives them no choice. The framers, he insists, "provided wide powers to representative assemblies and ruled only a few subjects off limits." He quotes G.K. Chesterton: "The liberty to make laws is what constitutes a

There is obvious wisdom in Bork's case. One press. of the obvious purposes of the Constitution was to subject most government policies to the consent of the majority. Judges undermine democracy when they usurp decisions properly reserved for political bodies.

But Bork's stress on majority rule neglects the other crucial purpose of the framers: To put a host of individual liberties beyond the reach of less. There is no reason to entrust either to him tion that is honest, principled and persuasively the majority. The Bill of Rights — in fact the in the future.

entire Constitution — was written to safeguard the rights of minorities by restraining democracy. Contrary to his view, what makes people free is not the power to exercise control over others, but the right not to be controlled.

Bork's errors are ones of emphasis. But in interpreting the Constitution, emphasis is everything. As Harvard political scientist Stephen Macedo puts it, Bork sees individual rights as islands in a sea of government powers, instead of seeing government powers as islands in a sea of individual rights - as the framers intended.

He is often unfaithful to the intent of the framers or the language of the Constitution. He thinks the First Amendment protection of free speech mandates tight restrictions on libel actions, though the framers saw no conflict between the two. His claim that the Constitution protects only specific rights mentioned in the text is at war with the 9th Amendment, which says other, unnamed rights are nonetheless "retained by the people.

The result of this cramped, selective method is to call into question a host of vital Supreme Court decisions that give force to constitutional protections - from the separation of church and state to the right against unreasanable search and seizure to the guarantees of free speech and

If Bork had been the pivotal vote over the past few decades, as he may be in the coming years, some Supreme Court mistakes would have been avoided — notably on abortion and affirmative action. But, on balance, the Constitution would be a far feebler document than it is today, and the freedom of Americans would be perceptibly

Tips for cutting college costs

Everyone worries about how much it costs to go to college.

I read a figure that said the cost of one year of schooling at prestigious insitutions such as Yale and Harvard and other places, where the football teams never go to a bowl game, was $17,000. One female student interviewed on the Yale campus said, "I think it's worth it."

A Porsche is worth it at $50,000 too, if Daddy's check is coming in each month.

It's been 20 years since I was in college, but I still feel I am qualified to offer a few suggestions to parents as to how to cut down on the price of educating their little spoiled darlings.

If you can't finance $17,000 a year on what you make in annual salary down on at the plant, and your kid wants to go to Harvard because that's the best place to go if you want to meet, and perhaps later marry, a Kennedy, suggest alternatives

'How about good Ol' State U?'' you might ask. Your kid's eyes will roll back in his or her head, the classic teen-age expression that means you have been completely out of touch with what's happening since the year Rome was

Then say, "OK, I can't afford Harvard, and you don't want to go to State U, but I can get you on the third shift at the plant." That should work. You wouldn't want your kid to meet and marry a Kennedy anyway. Those people probably wear ties at dinner.

Speaking of work, here's another way to cut down on what it costs to put your child through Suggest he or she get a part-time job to help pay for some of the expenses. This suggestion likely will send your child into a fainting spell.

"But how," your daughter will ask, when she is revived, "can I work and still have time to be on the Homecoming Float Committee at the sorority house?' Explain how you had to sell magazines doorto-door to put yourself through college, and if she doesn't get a job, there won't be enough money for sorority dues.

Your daughter will hate you, but only until her own children reach college age.

Here are some other ideas of how to cut the high cost of college:

1. Never send your children off to school with a convertible sports car or a credit card. The sports car will break down and you will have to pay for it to be repaired.

A college-age individual with a credit card will wear the writing off the plastic before Christmas break. 2. Don't allow your child to do anything because one of his or her friends is doing it - you sell used cars, the friend's dad is a television evangelist.

3. As soon as your child leaves for college, move to a new address and get an unlisted phone number so you won't be getting any letters or phone calls begging for money.

Some of these suggestions may seem cruel, but it's either use them or wind up spending a fortune on your kid's education and have him or her marry a Kennedy, and when they come over for dinner you won't be able to eat in your shorts. It's your decision.

Plan would lead way to Latin democracy

By Ben Wattenberg

The Constitution's 200th anniversary has been celebrated in diverse ways in America. There have been parades, fireworks, and readings; toasts have been offered, saluting the importance and reach of our remarkable founding document; our brilliant Founding Fathers have been hailed.

But for my money, the best demonstration of the ongoing potency of our charter took place at a gathering where the words "U.S. Constitution" weren't even mentioned: the first meeting of the "Central American Peace and Democracy Watch." This is "an ad hoc committee for the full implementation of the Central American Peace Plan." (Co-chairmen of the committee are former Gov. Charles Robb, D-Va., and John Joyce, president of Bricklayers International and chairman of the AFL-CIO defense committee.) Now, that peace plan has properly come under criticism. It allows Soviet-bloc arms to keep flowing to the Nicaraguan Sandinistas — although it calls for the cessation of aid for the contras. It calls for a "cease-fire" in the Sandinista-contra civil war - but the Sandinistas claim that means a contra surrender. The plan may also let the Sandinistas stall. President Reagan is right to ask for standby contra funds lest they die on the vine.

With all that, the plan also calls for something else that should not be underestimated. It calls for true democracy in Central America, including Nicaragua, to be set into motion by Nov. 7. The nature of that democracy is not spelled out, but its broad strokes are clear: a free press, free elections, freedom of public association, freedom of religion, rule of law. If those ideas sound familiar, they should: Their modern incarnation began 200 years ago during a hot Philadelphia

Will the communist Sandinista gov ernment live up to these standards? Normally, any hardheaded observer would rule it out. But something very strange seems to be going on in the world. Democracy - our kind of constitutional mass democracy - is on the move. Almost all of Latin America has gone democratic. The Philippines is struggling, but democracy is still on top. South Korea is going democratic. There may even be a little light in some communist countries.

The idea of the Peace and Democracy Watch group (of which I am a member) is to help turn the media spotlight on Nicaragua. They want to send observers down to Nicaragua before the Nov. 7 deadline. Mayor Ed Koch of New York has already agreed to head up one group What will happen? Well, If by some chance the Sandinistas really live up to the agreement - not just shortterm cosmetics - then the march of democracy may continue. Later, it might be hard for the communists to turn it off. If the Sandinistas don't make a real effort at democratization now, they can be exposed by a relentless world media blitz. Thus: Suppose the democratization doesn't come. Suppose the world's media spotlight is on. Suppose the Nicaraguan opposition demonstrates, again and again, and is

Won't the U.S. Congress then be much more likely to vote contra aid? Might our dear friendly allies, the European democracies, finally stop supporting the Nicaraguan communists?

. I don't know. But the Sandinistas may have been challenged by some-thing that can prove to be more powerful than a guerrilla army. They have been given two months to sign on to an ever-more powerful idea that began to bubble in the United States 200 years ago and is now percolating almost everywhere. If the Sandinistas don't play — and if the whole world is watching — Nicaragua may become democratic whether the Sandinistas like it or not. That would be the best birthday present for the Founding

Average verbal scores were 430, down a point from 1986, while average mathematics scores rose a point to 476, according to statistics in "College-Bound Seniors: 1987 Profile of SAT and Achievement Test Takers," published annually by the board since 1972.

National SAT averages, regarded by many as a barometer of the nation's educational health, have leveled out the last three years following slow but steady gains from 1981 to 1984.

The SAT is a two-part multiple choice college entrance examination with the verbal and math sections scored on a scale of 200 to 800. Nearly 1.1 million high school students took the exam in 1987, an increase of almost 80,000 from "The increasing number of students taking the SAT is an encouraging sign since it means that a great many more students are actually considering going to college," said Donald M. Stewart, president of the College Board, which sponsors the test.

In Washington, Secretary of Education William J. Bennett said in a statement about the SAT scores: "Holding ground is better than losing ground, but we're still seeing an insufficient payoff for what we've invested in education.'

Average composite scores on the rival ACT exam, the predominant college entrance test in 28 Midwestern and Western states, dipped 0.1 percent to 18.7 from the year earlier, on a scale of 1-35. National averages on the four-part exam, consisting of English, math, social studies and natural science sections, have changed little since the mid-

The ACT is administered by the American College Testing Program in Iowa City, Iowa, and was taken by approximately 777,000 graduating high school students in 1987

Blacks continued gaining on both the SAT and ACT, a fact that testing officials attributed largely to improved high school preparation.

Blacks averaged 13.4 on the ACT in 1987, up from 13.0 in 1986, but still considerably lower than the 19.7 average among white students or the 19.8 average among Asian-Americans.

Likewise on the SAT, average verbal scores among blacks have improved 21 percent to 351 since 1977, and 20 percent on the math in the last decade to 377. But they still trail whites, who averaged 447 on the verbal section in 1987 and 489 on the math. No ethnic data were kept in

Despite those gains, the College Board's 1987 statistics, were likely to fuel the contention among standardized test critics that the exam may be biased in favor of the wealthy, the male and the

SAT scores rose consistently along with family income. Students with annual family incomes of less than $10,000 averaged 416 math and 364 verbal. Students with family incomes of $70,000 or more averaged 523 math, 471

Males continued to outperform females, especially in math. Boys averaged 435 verbal and 500 math, while girls scored 425 verbal, and 453 math.

Among other ethnic goups besides whites and blacks, American Indians averaged 393 verbal, 432 math; Asian-Americans 405 verbal, 521 math; Mexican-Americans 379 verbal, 424 math; Puerto Ricans 360 verbal, 400 math; other Hispanics 387 verbal, 432 math.

Costa Rican president pleads for peace in Central America

WASHINGTON (AP) — Costa Rican President Oscar Arias, the primary author of a Central American peace initiative, pleaded with Congress today to "give peace a chance" by supporting diplomacy, rather than military action, in the re-

"It is time to focus on the positive," Arias said in remarks prepared for delivery on Capitol Hill. where debate has intensified over U.S. aid to Contra rebels seeking to overthrow Nicaragua's leftist Sandinista government.

"War signifies the failure of politics. Let us restore faith in dialogue and give peace a chance," Arias said.

The Costa Rican leader noted that the peace accord signed by presidents of five Central American countries on Aug. 7 already has led to a Nicaraguan promise to reopen the opposition newspaper La Prensa, free of censorship, and has begun efforts to arrange a cease-fire by a Nov. 7 deadline.

But he appeared to ask Congress not to hold the leaders strictly to that deadline.

"Some steps may be taken before those deadlines expire. Others may require a longer period. We will not fall into a trap set by someone who shows us a calendar every day, anxious to bury the last hope," Arias said.

Arias was scheduled to meet with President Reagan at the White House before traveling to Capitol Hill to address Congress.

As the Costa Rican leader began a weeklong U.S. visit in support of the peace initiative, 123 House Democrats accused President Reagan of attempting to kill the so-called Guatemala City agree-

The administration "has done nothing but criticize the agreement and call for more aid to the Contras and a continuation of their ineffective war against the Nicaraguan government," the group wrote in a letter to Reagan.

The lawmakers are led by Rep. Mike Lowry, D-Wash., chairman of the Democratic Study Group, the party's House legislative research arm. The signers included primarily House members who are longtime opponents of Contra aid. Sen. Christopher J. Dodd, D-Conn., who led a delegation to Central America during the weekend, said Nicaragua is more likely to abide by an agreement reached with its neighbors than one imposed through U.S. pressure.

Arias' was invited to address Congress by House Speaker Jim Wright, D-Texas.

But when Wright sought administration assent last month for a formal joint meeting of the House and Senate, the White House demurred, saying it did not want to accord special treatment to Arias when other Central American presidents also were important to the peace effort.

Some House Democrats saw White House rejection of a more formal session as an attempt to discredit the peace process.

Bork supporters challenge dissenting ABA panel members

WASHINGTON (AP) — Conservative Republicans on the Senate Judiciary Committee are assailing members of the American Bar Association panel who voted to declare Robert H. Bork unqualified for the Supreme Court.

Sen. Orrin Hatch said at a Monday night session of Bork's confirmation hearing that the four members of the 15-member panel voting "not qualified" were playing politics, and that some of them were allied with liberal groups opposing the nomination.

Ten members of the panel gave Bork the highest rating of well qualified, and one took the neutral course of "not

Hatch, R-Utah, and Sen. Alan K. Simpson, R-Wyo., leveled their criticism after 12 grueling hours of testimony by opponents and supporters of Bork. Nineteen additional witnesses from both sides were to testify today.

In Monday's session, four former attorneys general praised Bork as a man who would be fair to women and minorities, but true to the intentions of the Constitution's framers.

But another former attorney general a former secretary of transportation, the mayor of Atlanta and a former congresswoman said they feared Bork would be insensitive to women and minorities and erode Americans' right to privacy

The sixth day of the hearings — and the first without Bork on the stand was the longest yet, and lawmakers became increasingly irritated as the session wore on

An exasperated Simpson, one of Bork's staunchest supporters, said at one point that groups opposing Bork are telling followers "he's a racist, he's a sterilizer, he'll be in your bedroom.

At another point Bork opponent Howard M. Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, became embroiled in an angry exchange with former Attorney General William French Smith, an ardent supporter of the nominee.

Metzenbaum said "you can walk down any street and find women who are worried" about Bork's position on privacy rights. "What you have done is propagandize that issue," Smith said. "It borders on dishonesty and it borders on lying to the American public.' "Propagandize, my eye," Metzenbaum shot back.

Retired Judge Harold R. Tyler Jr., chairman of the ABA recommendations panel, told the committee four of the 15 panel members believe Bork is not qualified because of "concerns as to his judicial temperament.

Tyler said that by "judicial temperament" the dissenters meant "his compassion, open-mindedness, his sensitivity to the rights of women and minority persons or groups, and comparatively extreme views respecting constitutional principles.

Tyler and Fiske also released to the committee Bork's comments to the ABA six years ago on the firing of Watergate special prosecutor Archi-

Documents trace Iran-Contra diversion idea to North in 1985

WASHINGTON (AP) — An Israeli government chronology and notes from an Israeli official show that Lt. Col. Oliver North was talking about diverting Iran arms sale profits to Nicaraguan rebels earlier than he admitted, according to congressional investigative sources.

Documents obtained by the congressional committees investigating the arms sale and diversion show that North already was thinking about using profits for the Contras in December 1985.

He told investigators the original idea for the secret diversion came in January 1986 from Manucher Ghorbanifar, an Iranian middleman who also has been described in congressional testimony as an Israeli intelligence agent.

The documents, according to congressional sources familiar with them, say North mentioned a need to generate profits from the Iran arms sales and also talked of the needs of the Contras in a Dec. 5, 1985, conversation with an official of Israel's military purchasing office in New York.

The development was first reported Monday by the Wall Street Journal.

North testified that when Ghorbanifar raised the Contra diversion idea to him during a bathroom conversation at a European meeting. North thought it was "a neat idea.

The congressional committees investigating the affair read a reference to the earlier Dec. 5 North conversation with the Israeli official in a secret chronology provided by the Israeli government last month, said sources who commented Monday only on condition they not be

Then, while on a trip to Israel during Congress' August recess, Sen. Warren Rudman, R-N.H., the top Republican on the Senate Iran-Contra Committee, obtained a copy of the official's handwritten notes, in Hebrew, made at the same time the conversation took place.

ack of safeguards leaves elderly at risk

EDITOR'S NOTE — Once established, guardianships for the elderly have few safeguards, an Associated Press study found. What protections state laws offer are usually ignored by overworked judges. And the infrequent checks focus on the ward's money, not the person. The third story in a six-day series, "Guardians of the Elderly: An Ailing System," examines what happens after a guardianship is opened.

By FRED BAYLES and SCOTT McCARTNEY Associated Press Writers

GREELEY, Kan. (AP) - Minnie Monoff had a guardian, a court-appointed attorney and a judge who were supposed to look out for her, protect her. But to her, it seemed no one would

She recovered from a stroke and returned to her home. She wanted control of her life, she said, but her guardian wouldn't give it to her.

Instead, she said, the friend who'd been named her guardian got an emergency order from the court and had her sedated by a nurse, carried from her home by the county sheriff and placed in a nursing home.

Her court-appointed attorney waived a hearing on the order without talking with Mrs. Monoff. in part because of concern about her health in the hot summer weather

"You don't know what a sick feeling I had to leave my home where I was happy and taking care of myself," the 82-year-old woman said.

"It's rotten. It's no good," she said of her guardianship.

Five weeks of Mrs. Monoff's pleas eventually overturned the guardianship. What began as a plan to protect her affairs while she recovered from the stroke ended up a nightmare.

Mrs. Monoff's case, while rare, poignantly shows how courts, charged with overseeing guardianship cases, can ignore their wards. The result can be costly to the elderly, both in terms of their money and their lives.

A year-long Associated Press investigation into probate courts' handling of guardianships of the elderly found systems that have lapsed into paper-shuffling routines with few protections and, with alarming frequency, where life savings are exposed to mishandling, abuse and theft.

The few safeguards sometimes fail or are ignored by the courts. who routinely take the word of guardians and attorneys without independent checking or full hearings.

The result leaves the 300,000 to 400,000 people supposedly protected by a guardianships with little protection at all.

"We're going to have to change our court system and be watchdogs over these judges and lawyers," an angry Mrs. Monoff says now. A survey of more than 2,200 cases chosen randomly from courts in 50 states indicated that 48 percent of the guardians were delinquent in annual reports detailing how they spent their wards' money — a violation of the law. Without the annual accountings, the courts are blind to theft or negligence.

Even rarer are reports on the health and well-being of wards they showed up in only 16 percent of the files.

And few states have systems to check up on the guardians. Only California has a mandated system of state-funded court investigators who periodically visit the wards; separate court examiners audit how the wards' money is

Through checks of court files and extensive interviews in all 50 states, the AP encountered

A Chicago social worker discovered an 83-year-old woman lying in a urine-soaked bed suffering from severe malnutrition and dehydration in 1985. The woman, under guardianship of her daughter, was cared for by grandchildren who, the social worker said, fed her once a day, called her "Fido" and spent her Social Security checks. Despite their denials, the grandchildren "failed in their duty," a judge ruled and placed the woman with the public guardian.

A Pittsburgh accountant, guardian for an 82-year-old ward, spent $156,202 of her $161,968 estate in 22 months. Among the expenses were a $24,175 guardianship fee and a $20,000 commission for investing $45,000 of her money on his own business venture. The court this year ordered $123,000 repaid to the estate.

A Cincinnati man lost $7,000 after two years of guardianship, including $3,500 in missing payroll checks and two bars of silver allegedly taken from a safety deposit box. The guardian bond, required by the court to insure the ward's assets, had been forged. The guardianship was dismissed in 1985.

Judges and court clerks in many places acknowledge they have little control.

"We don't have many resources. Once in a while I'll yank one (a case file) and audit it," said Chris Tountas, a Phoenix, Ariz... probate court commissioner who receives information on 60 guardianships a day but audits only 12 cases a year.

"Does the court open files and look? I don't think that happens unless a problem is brought to the attention of the court by a family member or creditor," said Michael J. Carbo, a former probate court master in Fort Lauderdale, Fla

While most guardianships are properly administered, 13 percent of the more than 2,200 files examined by AP reporters contained no reports or accountings — not a single document filed after the granting of the guar-

Court clerks, the busy keepers of the county records, often were at a loss to explain what had happened to the ward, the guardian and the estate, or the money. Indeed, in many of the counties examined by the AP, court officials acknowledged they had no idea how many guardianship cases they were responsible for.

"There are only two of us here. We don't have time for all that," a Collier County, Fla., clerk said. In Ada County, Idaho, a clerk joined an AP reporter to look at files. They pulled 12 cases that contained nothing but the orders granting the guardianship. In each case, the clerk determined that the ward had died, yet those guardianships had never been closed and the final accountings never made, as required.

Spokane County in Washington uses interns to check guardianship files. But of 13 files picked at random in the courthouse, nine were either missing financial reports or should have been closed because the wards were

"That's surprising to me," said Robert Austin, the Spokane County Superior Court commissioner. 'It sounds like they are not looking at the files very carefully or very often. One upstate New York file opened in 1980 and involving an estate valued at $150,000 six years into the guardianship contained this notation: "This file made up 11-20-86 — original file seems to be missing." Among the missing material was information on the sale of the ward's property and the initial size of the estate.

In 1982, a special grand jury in Miami found a 92-year-old woman without relatives or friends who was living "in squalor in an adult congregate living facility since closed for its intolerable living conditions.

The woman had a bank account of $150,000, and her guardian was the owner of the adult home, in violation of Florida law, the grand jury said in its report. The guardian hadn't filed a report on the ward for two years.

"The thing that scares the hell out of me," said Frank Repensek, executive director of The Guardianship Program of Dade County, a Miami, Fla., non-profit group, "is that people are acting as guardian without any kind of supervision. Said Linda Weeks, a guardianship expert of the Florida Bar Association Disability Committee: "There's the way it should be, and there's the way it is ... the way you can get away with.

AP reporters found cases of questionable spending, usually approved by judges who routinely sign guardianship papers crossing their desk without audit or investigation.

Most statutes require that the money in a ward's estate be spent for the benefit of the ward. Yet the guardian of a Kansas World War I veteran, for example, ran through $112,000 in a little more than a year, paying for a car and car repairs for a relative, spending $1,800 on a hotel stay in San Francisco and loaning $2,000 to a relative who built kitchen cabinets.

The Veterans Administration challenged that case, and after a judge investigated, the guardian was removed in 1981 and the man restored to competency. The money was never repaid.

Payments to car dealers were found in files in South Carolina and Texas, even though wards are stripped of driving privileges. Vacations for guardians were paid for by wards' estates in several files, and guardians at times made gifts to themselves of wards' money.

Some observers said more guardians are justifying gifts and lavish spending because they will likely inherit the money anyway. Some files even include notes from guardians justifying some spending as a way to avoid inheritance taxes. More than 4 percent of the files studied included gifts.

"We haven't been able to convince them (judges) that some of these dear sons and daughters don't have the best interests of their old gray-haired mothers and fathers at heart," said Jim West, a legal aide attorney in Oklahoma who specializes in elderly law

Some judges contend cases of abuse and neglect are isolated, that the system runs well except for a few bad apples. Some, like Denver Probate Judge Field Benton, say budget restraints limit how much oversight a court can

"We only require (financial) reports on guardianship cases, and I'm scared about that. That's not to denigrate (the importance of) a person's living condition, but I've got to choose," Benton said.

In Pennsylvania, where the presumption of good faith is woven so tightly into the systen that even annual financial accountings are optional, the counsel for the Legislature's Joint State Government Commission challenges the idea of formal safeguards

"Even with the scoundrels, the system works remarkably well," said William Nast. "We wouldn't want to see that changed. If you had a guardian guarding the guardian, who's going to guard the guardian guarding the guardian?"

Yet others question how, if so many cases get so little supervision, judges have any idea of what's going on with their wards.

U.S. told that freedom of expression enhanced

WASHINGTON (AP) -Soviet authorities have told the Reagan administration that they plan to repeal a law which makes defamation of the Soviet system a crime, according to a top State Department official.

The official also said the Soviets confirmed, during last week's high-level talks, that they plan to repeal parts of the penal code limiting religious freedom and to release prisoners convicted under those sta-

At the same time, the Soviets pressed the American side about aspects of the U.S. system of justice, including laws in certain states that permit the death sentence against persons for crimes they committed as minors.

The exchanges occurred during a discussion of human rights issues, one of four items on the agenda for the talks between Secretary of State George P. Shultz and Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze and their respective delegations.

Ambassador Richard Schifter, the assistant secretary of state for human rights, said in an interview Monday that the Soviets informed him that all prisoners convicted on charges of defaming the state will be pardoned or released.

The sentence under that article is three years. There are no plans to repeal a related article under which a citizen found to have engaged in anti-Soviet agitation and propaganda faces a seven-year prison term and five more in internal exile, Schifter said.

The discussions indicate the Soviets are making changes, Schifter said.

'But they are changes and they make no bones about it — within the framework of a Leninist dictatorship... Anything that is threatening to this Leninist dictatorship is going to be repressed, but they are much more sophisticated in going about all this.'

He added that the Soviets have concluded that "certain practices" are no longer needed to maintain the system.

Schifter discussed the rights question with Yuri Reshevtov, a deputy director of the Soviet Foreign Ministry's department of humanitarian and cultural affairs.

In response to Reshetov's comments on the death sentence for crimes committed by minors in the United States, Schifter said he replied that the issue is now before the U.S. Supreme Court. He offered to provide Reshetov with legal briefs on the subject.

Private Americans resort to guns in bid to free supposed POWs in Laos

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) - A collection become "missing in action." of American idealists, swindlers and aging jungle fighters is trying to find and free what they say are U.S. prisoners of war being held in Communist Laos.

The way James "Bo" Gritz, Mark Smith and other missing-in-action (MIA) searchers see it, the U.S. government has not done enough and may even be trying to cover up the existence of POWs 14 years after the end of U.S. military involvement in the Indochina

Since the early 1980s, private American citizens have staged clandestine forays into Laos, hired Laotian guerrillas and bandits, and most recently floated plastic bags along the Mekong River with offers of a $2.4-million reward for any defector who whisked out an American POW.

The results: None of the 544 U.S. servicemen currently listed as MIA in Laos has emerged alive; neither has solid evidence of their presence, such as recent photographs, videotapes or voice cassettes.

The costs: Several million dollars has been spent on private efforts; at least 100 Laotians have been killed or captured in cross-border penetrations, according to knowledgable American operatives; at least one American has died and several others have themselves

"Alive? Absolutely. I've been tracking him for years through various means," says Jefferson Donahue, whose brother was lost in aerial operations over Laos in 1968. Donahue and others offer graphic information about purported POWs, down to precise locations of prison camps, numbers of guards, what the prisoners eat for breakfast

Indochina analysts note that the image of Americans wasting away in jungle camps has taken on a life and mystique of its own, fueled by passionate statements from MIA families and by a string of Hollywood films whose heroes rescue American POWs after bloody, behind-the-lines operations.

The Reagan administration has repeatedly warned that the real-life forays, some mounted by decorated Indochina war veterans, could derail government-to-government efforts to determine the fate of the MIAs.

Some 1,850 Americans are listed as MIA in Vietnam and Cambodia, but Laos is the searchers' target because its long, relatively porous boundary with Thailand makes crossborder operations relatively easy.

Access to Vietnam, on the other hand, is difficult, and civil war is still too intense in Cambodia to permit easy movement.

A half-dozen continuing private operations are based in Thailand, including "Project Freedom" and "Skyhook 2," which is headed by John Leboutillier, a former Republican congressman from New York.

With funds coming from the United States, groups establish representatives in Bangkok who direct "field operations" - interviewing refugees, debriefing agents and sending paid guerrillas "across the river."

The Thai-Laotian border, largely defined by the Mekong River, is a haven for Laotian insurgent bands fighting - or claiming to fight — the Communist government in their country, as well as for smugglers, bandits and opportunists trying to cash in on the MIA

The U.S. Embassy spokesman here, Ross Petzing, says purported informants show up weekly at the mission claiming "all sorts of off-the-wall stuff" related to Americans supposedly alive in Laos.

Albert Shinkle, a former U.S. military officer who coordinates "Skyhook 2" in Thailand, says he trusts some Laotian operatives and believes the reports they bring out about

Only a dozen or so Americans have actually crossed into Laos.

Tanning tale is half-baked

DEAR ABBY: I just received a letter from my daughter, Kathy, who is attending school in Provo, Utah. She related the following story that I found so horrifying, I want to share it with you so that you can warn others:

"A 17-year-old girl won a trip to Hawaii. She wanted a really nice tan for the trip, so last week she went to a tanning parlor. She'd never been to one before, so she asked how long was the maximum time she could stay in, and they said half an hour. Well, she wanted a really dark tan, fast, so she went to seven places and spent a half-hour Valley Regional Medical Center in each - three and a half hours

"Well, this poor girl is now in Utah Valley Regional Medical Center. They estimate that she has about 26 days to live. She's totally blind, and they say it's as if she had microwaved' herself - it's basically the same principle. Anyhow, she just cooked herself from the inside out. And the worst part is, there's not a thing they can do for her. Not a thing! It's just tragic. Her poor family!' Of course, the girl was foolish. But most of us do things that are foolish sometime in our lives, but we live to laugh about them. This girl will not. Please warn your readers, Abby. You may want to verify these facts in Provo.

SPRINGFIELD, ORE.

writing. I wondered how "they" could estimate the number of days "this poor girl" had can I be sure?
to live, so I called the Utah WONDE

Dear Abby

in Provo and its spokesperson, Mr. Clark Cares, stated that there was no such patient in the facility, but that story had been circulating at Brigham Young University.

Joann, secretary to the medical director, said that she had just returned from Pocatello, Idaho, where she had heard the same story. In checking with The Provo Daily Herald, Rene Nelson told my staff that they had also heard that rumor, but were unable to confirm it.

Well, friends, so much for the "tanning" story.

DEAR ABBY: Here's a question ANITA HALLOCK, I've never seen in your column: My recently divorced wife, "Sue," and I would like to get back together, but DEAR ANITA: Thanks for during our marriage, Sue constantly fooled around.

She says she has changed. How WONDERING IN WYOMING

DEAR WONDERING: Until you and Sue get to the root of what compelled her to "constantly fool around" and the circumstances are changed, you can't be sure. I would strongly recommend professional premarital counseling before you return to the altar with Sue.

DEAR ABBY: I am flabbergasted at your answer to "The Boxer Rebellion"! I can't believe you'd approve a 14-year-old girl wearing men's underwear as an outer garment. Have you ever looked at a man's boxer shorts? I have dozens of them, by different manufacturers, and every one of them has an opening in the front big enough to stuff a grapefruit through! I sincerely believe that's half the trouble with our younger generation these days - parents not instilling in them a lot of the "old values," corny as that may sound. I'm with the parents on this one and believe the child will ultimately benefit from being taught to be feminine. Boxer shorts as an outer garment on a 14year-old girl? Gross, in my book!

And in the same column you suggest not turning on a washerdryer until one knows where the cat is. Takes me four or five hours to find my cat sometimes. Why not just carefully check the machine to make sure nothing is in it that doesn't belong there? Might save a dog, or a parakeet, or whatever. WILLIAM W. GRIFFITH,

NFL strike is on

Games may continue using free agents, rejects

By DAVE GOLDBERG AP Football Writer

NEW YORK (AP) - The NFL strike, which came as no surprise and could be at the mercy of a mystery man, showed cracks in union solidarity shortly after it started.

The walkout, the second in six seasons, was announced Monday night by union head Gene Upshaw during halftime of the New England Patriots-New York Jets game. It began officially at 12:29 a.m. EDT, when the last player walked off the field at East Rutherford, N.J.

While emptying the lockers of 1,400 NFL regulars, the strike will bring an influx of free agents and castoffs, who are supposed to pick up play in two weeks. Although this week's games have not been officially canceled, they will be unless there's some instant settle-

Upshaw held out some hope of that when he said the union had "initiated a move to a person with some authority," a person he would identify only as "someone I hope can get the process going so we can resolve this."

Speculation centered on Commissioner Pete Rozelle and Dan Rooney, president of the Pittsburgh Steelers. Rooney is credited with ending the 57-day strike that wiped out seven weeks of a 16-week season in 1982.

But Rozelle said earlier Monday the two sides were too far apart for him to do any good. "He might be right about that," Upshaw said.

And Upshaw said it wasn't Rooney. "The ball is in Gene's court," said Jim Conway, assistant executive director of the Management Council.

Union solidarity, however, quickly showed it wasn't that solid.

Immediately after the Jets' 43-24 victory, Mark Gastineau said he would not honor the strike and teammate Harry Hamilton said he would cross a picket line, although he wasn't sure he would play

One unidentified member of the St. Louis Cardinals voted against a walkout, the only one on the team to do so.

"I'm not sure whether he is going to cross or not," said Joe Bostic, St. Louis' player representative.

The San Francisco 49ers are due to vote today, and haven't been entirely solid in the pre-strike period. Upshaw made a special trip to talk to them last week after quarterback Joe Montana said he was considering playing.

And while the Chicago Bears voted unanimously to strike, several players, including assistant player rep Dave Duerson, said they were not happy with the major issue, free agency

In fighting for free agency, the union demands that any player with more than four years' experience be free to choose his team; the owners insist on keeping some compensation for teams losing free agents, a system that has seen only one player out of an estimated 2,000 eligible change teams in a de-

"Free agency was our first goal. I don't know anything about it," said Nate Newton of the Dallas Cowboys. "I just have to go with the union.

Since the 1982 strike over money, the average player salary has risen from $90,000 to $230,000 a year.

Bargaining began April 20, with 19 sessions held between then and Aug. 14. The contract expired Aug. 31.

During two sessions in early September each side made a second proposal, immediately rejected by the other. The last talks occurred Friday, when Upshaw met with Jack Donlan, the executive director of the NFL Management Council. Donlan said he offered concessions on pension and roster size; Upshaw said he never got specific and wouldn't budge on free

Jets fly past Patriots

By BARRY WILNER AP Sports Writer

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) - If the New York Jets are an accurate measure of the solidarity of NFL players concerning a strike, the walkout may be in trouble as it

The second strike to hit the NFL in five years started after the Jets routed the New England Patriots 43-24 Monday night. Several Jets, including defensive end Mark Gastineau and safety Harry Hamilton, said they would not honor the strike.

Jets captain Freeman McNeil, who has indicated he, too, would not strike, said "It would be inappropriate for me to say what I'm going to do now." But he added he would state his case after the players hold a meeting today.

"I spoke to Gene Upshaw," Hamilton said of the NFL Players Association executive director. "I told him I was opposed to a number of union decisions and I would not support the strike.

Hamilton did not say he would play during a strike, but would help train replacements. Gastineau, who comes off the worst season of his career, would play. 'Right now, I feel like I've put a lot of work in in the offseason," Gastineau said. "To give up on it now is against my judgment.' The owners claim they will stage games, using free agents, during the strike. None of the Jets were thrilled with the idea

"They'd better win if they play," tight end Mickey Shuler said. "I don't think many will come in.

Johnny Hector, who scored on runs of five and nine yards in a 21-point third quarter that blew open a close game, joked that the playoff race already was decided. "We're 2-0, so are the Raiders," he said. "I guess we can play them.' The Minnesota Vikings and Chicago Bears

The top three teams in The Associated Press college football poll were idle last weekend and retained their positions. Ohio State slipped from fifth place to seventh with a shaky 24-14 victory over Oregon.

Oklahoma, Nebraska, Auburn and LSU held on to the top four spots in Monday's poll while Miami and Florida State moved ahead of Ohio State. In addition, Michigan State and Pitt fell out of the Top Twenty while Texas A&M and Iowa appeared for the first time since the preseason poll.

Oklahoma, which returns to action on Saturday at Tulsa, received 53 of 60 firstplace votes and 1,193 of a possible 1,200 points from a nationwide panel of sports writers and

By L.D. STRATE Sports Editor

A half-century ago, good lefthanded golfers used to be about as scarce as a ricochet eagle off a tree. Not because the talent wasn't there, but because manufacturers just weren't producing southpaw clubs at an accelerated pace. In fact, most golf equipment executives didn't believe there were that many people out there who teed off on the wrong side

Now, however, all's right with the world for lefty linksmen-.thanks to the rapidly-growing National Association of Left-Handed Golfers started by an obscure St. Louis club professional. "I can't even think of the guy's name now, but he's the one that started everything," said NALG (National Association of Left-Handed Golfers) President Bob Linder, who was competing in the fourth annual Lefty-Righty Tournament last weekend at the Pampa Country Club. "He started promoting left-handed golf equipment back when they were trying to make everyone right-handers," Linder said. "He got the manufacturers to start making more left-handed equipment.

That was 52 years ago, and the NALG has grown to over 1,400 members who participate in state, national and world tournaments in both senior and open divisions

Left-handed tournaments are no longer considered a weekend sideshow. The National Tournament will be held at Hot Springs. Ark. next year and the site of the fifth annual World Invitational Tournament is in Australia. In addition, the NALG has a national newsletter which is mailed out regularly to state left-handed golf associations.

"We're beginning to have more lefty-righty tournaments and lefty-partnership tournaments are becoming more popular," added Linder, who hails from Homer, Linder said a state leftypartnership tourney is in the works for next year and will probably be played in Dallas. Ed Myatt of Pampa was recently appointed to the NALG committee and will assist with the promoting of left-handed senior tournaments. "We want to thank Ed for his

Aggies say anything that is done twice becomes a tradition at Texas A&M

Pampa Harvester Booster Club President Jack Gindorf not to be confused with an Aggie by any means - is hoping it won't take two years to establish a new Harvester tradition that will begin this Thursday night.

'The Burn the Bulldog Bonfire" - the first ever - will be held Thursday at 8:30 p.m. at the Pampa Rodeo grounds on Highway 60 east. The bonfire was discussed in Monday night's meeting of the Harvester booster club.

The blaze will burn in preparation for the Harvester's District 1-4A opener Friday night at Harvester Field against the rival Borger Bulldogs

'The community and school spirit that comes from a bonfire like that is somethin' else," Gindorf said. "It's very motivational for the team and the community.

Gindorf expressed hope that the premiere of the burning bulldog will draw a large amount of community support and will help boost the team's performance against Borger.

Also discussed Monday night by boosters, and a practice that will become official tradition (by Aggie standards) on Friday, was the painting green of one's thumb, called the "Gig 'em Green thumb.' The "Gig 'em" sign is a longtime A&M tradition whereby students and fans alike stick a thumb in the air — a sort of thumbs up sign to the home team to show their support.

In Pampa it is done somewhat differently. Fans and students are encouraged to paint a thumb green before Friday night's

By BEN WALKER AP Baseball Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Baseball players won their case, proving owners conspired to restrict the free agent market after the 1985 season. But the players still don't know how their victory will affect their future.

Arbitrator Tom Roberts ruled Monday that owners violated the collective bargaining agreement by not offering contracts to Kirk Gibson, Donnie Moore and 60 other free agents.

Roberts' 16-page decision. however, did not include any remedies. He will preside at hearings this week to determine solu-

Those remedies will determine the significance of the ruling. Until then, the impact of the decision is uncertain.

"Even though we won, we don't know if it is a win," said Willie Upshaw, player representative on the Toronto Blue Jays. Roberts wrote that teams' approach to free agency in 1985 was "not consistent with the existence of a free market." Those free agents "surely had a value at some price and yet no offers were advanced." wrote Roberts, who underlined "no" in his ruling.

"The arbitrator found that the clubs entered into a common Andre Dawson and Lance Parscheme, the effect of which was to destroy free agency," said players' union head Don Fehr. "In other words, they corked the Fehr said he planned talks with Barry Rona, the chief negotiator for the owners' Player Relations Committee, and then Roberts this week. Fehr said he will seek remedies through money or new free agent opportunities for players already affected, plus punitive damages from the owners.

Fehr predicted the ruling would help the players in a similar grievance regarding 1986 free agents. Tim Raines, Jack Morris, ish are among those involved in that action, currently being heard by arbitrator George Nicolau.

Rona maintained the owners had done nothing illegal, the stance he has held since Roberts began hearing the case last summer

"One of the great difficulties is trying to figure out what it is we have to do different in order to be in compliance," Rona said. "We want to comply and we will comply. But I can't tell a club to engage in free agency or not.'

Baseball Commissioner Peter Ueberroth did not offer any comment on the ruling.

The players' union filed the grievance on Feb. 2, 1986, contending that owners violated part of the Basic Agreement that reads: "Players shall not act in concert with other players and clubs shall not act in concert with other clubs.'

"I don't think it's real clear what it all means," Gibson said from Boston, where the Tigers played the Red Sox Monday

Despite a solid career with the Toronto Blue Jays, George Bell has had a tough run against Baltimore right-hander Mike Bod-

But Monday night, Bell finally started to catch up with him.

With only two hits in 35 previous at-bats against the Orioles' pitcher, Bell went 3-for-4 against Boddicker, including the gamewinning single in the ninth for a 2-1 Toronto victory.

"He's a great pitcher," Bell said after knocking in his 129th run of the season. "I was a little lucky. He's the only pitcher who gives me trouble

The victory be sted the Blue Jays into first place in the American League East by one half-game over the Detroit Tigers, who lost 9-4 at Boston

In the American League West, divisionleader Minnesota was idle, but gained ground on Oakland and Kansas City when both lost. Second-place Oakland lost to Cleveland 6-3 to drop four games behind Minnesota while Kansas City lost to Seattle 5-1 to fall 61/2 back.

In the only other AL game, it was Chicago 5, California 3. The New York Yankee-Milwaukee game was postponed by wet

Before Bell's hit in the ninth, LLoyd Moseby led off with a double and moved to third on a sacrifice bunt by Tony Fernandez. Boddicker, 10-10, bothered by muscle spasms in his back throughout the game, was replaced after Bell delivered and dealt the host Orioles their 18th loss in 21 games. The winner was John Cerutti, 11-4, the fourth Blue Jay pitcher who retired Fred Lynn with the bases loaded in the eighth inning. Tom Henke finished up for his American League-leading 33rd save as five Toronto pitchers combined on a three-hitter.

Red Sox 9, Tigers 4

Mike Greenwell triggered a four-run second inning with a leadoff homer and hit a sacrifice fly in a two-run fourth, leading Boston over Detroit at Fenway Park

Boston's Al Nipper, 10-11, allowed eight hits over 7 2-3 innings.

Greenwell put Boston ahead to stay by hitting a 2-1 pitch from Detroit's Nate Snell, 1-2, for his 18th homer.

Indians 6. Athletics 3

Brook Jacoby snapped a tie with a leadoff homer in the seventh inning and Cleveland went on to beat visiting Oakland and deny Dave Stewart in his third attempt to become the major league's first 20-game winner.

Jacoby broke a 3-3 tie when he hit his 31st home run on a 1-1 pitch from Stewart, 19-12, who has lost his last three starts. Doug Jones, 5-4, gained the victory by retiring the final 10 Oakland hitters, striking out

Despite the defeat, Stewart pitched his eighth complete game, yielding eight hits. Mariners 5, Royals 1 Rookie Mike Campbell pitched a seven-hitter for his first major-league victory and Donell Nixon homered and drove in two runs as host Seattle beat Kansas City. Campbell, 1-4, allowed the only Kansas

City run on a leadoff homer in the ninth by Kevin Seitzer, his 15th. The right-hander struck out three and walked one. Nixon gave Seattle a 1-0 lead when he led off the first inning with a home run off Bret Saberhagen, 17-10

Lady Harvesters host Canyon tonight

The Lady Harvester volleyball team ran their district record to 2-0 following a weekend defeat of Levelland

Pampa's girls won the Saturday match 15-11, 15-6 and head coach Mike Lopez said the team is continuing to play well

"They came out a little slow in the first game," Lopez said. "But they eventually started playing good ball with the help of good serving by Lisa Lindsey.

Lopez also mentioned that both Yolanda Brown and Tanya Lidy had some good spikes.

"In the second game we hustled really good," Lopez said. "We were real aggressive and managed to jump ahead to the point where Levelland just folded.

The Lady Harvesters will host the Canyon girls tonight in district action. Match time is set for 6:30 p.m. for the JV with the varsity immediately following in the McNeely Fieldhouse

GAO report: NRC lacks guidelines on when to shut unsafe nuke plants

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Nuclear Regulatory Commission lacks guidelines on shutting down nuclear power plants for safety violations, and some have operated for years with significant problems, according to a federal report released today.

The General Accounting Office's report recommends that the NRC "provide utilities clear signals on the types of safety and management problems that could result in a shutdown."

"Nuclear Regulation: Efforts To Ensure Nuclear Power Plant Safety Can Be Strengthened" was written in response to a request from Sen. Alfonse M. D'Amato, R-N.Y., who was to release the report at a news confer-

Victor Stello, the NRC's executive director for operations, responded to some of the report's criticisms in a telephone interview Monday, although he said he had not yet seen the docu-

Stello said the NRC explains what violations would lead to a shutdown in a "technical specifications" document each plant receives upon licensing

He said the NRC already has a "fairly comprehensive" system in place.

While the NRC has ordered shutdowns at five operating plants in the past 25 years, "its decisions to close these plants or allow continued operations look inconsistent because it did not take the same action for other plants with similar problems," the report said.

Some plants with chronic safety violations that were allowed to stay open wound up shut down anyway because of equipment failures, the re-

D'Amato called on the NRC to stop licensing any more nuclear plants until it adopts the GAO recommendations and improves enforcement of safety regulations.

The two plants that would be directly affected by D'Amato's demand are Shoreham in New York and Seabrook in New Hampshire. Both plants have been thwarted in their efforts to obtain full-power licenses because neither has an approved emergency evacuation plan.

The report also pointed to instances in which the commissioners could not agree on what types or degrees of safety problems should lead the NRC to close a plant.

In pointing out the NRC's allegedly inconsistent policies, the report noted that although the agency shut down the Peach Bottom nuclear plant in Pennsylvania because workers were found sleeping on the job in March, it did not order the plant closed when an NRC inspector observed a sleeping control room worker there on June 10, Stello responded that "what led to the shutdown is (that) a situation of inattentiveness was pervasive, not just a single operator. The first time that we had that knowledge was literally just a few days before we shut the

It cited five plants with chronic violations that the NRC did not close: Davis-Besse in Oak Harbor, Ohio; Rancho Seco, near Sacramento, Calif.; Pilgrim, in Plymouth, Mass.; Brunswick, in Southport, N.C.; and Browns Ferry, in Decatur, Ala.

Texas A&M officials will curb enrollment

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — In a move to curb enrollment figures, Texas A&M University System Board of Regents approved a plan to raise admission standards.

The regents on Monday set 6,600 as the target size for the entering freshman class next fall. Target sizes for subsequent classes would be determined each July, or 14 months in advance of the time most prospective students would enter col-

The need for the enrollment management plan was underscored by projections that uncontrolled growth would produce a student body of 46,000 by 1990 and 61,000 by the year 2000.

Enrollment jumped by more than 2,500 students this fall, to a record 39,092. The number of entering freshmen this fall was 7,496 - one of the largest freshman classes in the nation.

In Austin, University of Texas President William Cunningham proposed a revised admissions policy Monday that would be almost identical to the new A&M policy. UT regents will consider the new policy at their Oct. 9 meeting in Dallas.

A&M Regents Chairman David G. Eller said, "The fundamental question is one of how fast we can grow." The school has a 2,500-student increase this fall.

The regents targeted the school's enrollment at 41,000 by 1993

University officials said the proposed enrollment controls at the freshman level would alter admissions standards for all students except those who finish in the top 10 percent of their high school graduating classes.

Automatic enrollment for other students will apply only to those who score at least 1,000 on the Scholastic Aptitude Test or 24 on the American College Test and finish in the top quarter of their high school class

Alternative qualifications are scoring a minimum 1100 SAT score or 27 ACT score if they finish in the second quarter or scoring a 1200 SAT score or 29 ACT score in the bottom half of their class. Special evaluations would be possible in some cases.

Georgia murderer gives thumbs up before dying

JACKSON, Ga. (AP) - Timothy W. McCorquodale smiled and gave a thumbs-up sign before he was put to death for raping and torturing a teen-age runaway and then killing her by breaking her neck with his bare hands.

The 35-year-old inmate, the fifth person executed in Georgia this year and the 12th since the state resumed executions in 1983, was led into the death chamber Monday evening by six guards.

The 270-pound McCorquodale smiled at his father and three family members as and joked with the guards who strapped him into the electric

A minister offered a brief prayer, and when Warden Jack Kemp asked the 35-year-old inmate if he would like to make a final statement, McCor-quodale replied: "Yes, I would like to tell my dad and everybody with him, I love them very much. Stay strong in

He was pronounced dead at 7:23 p.m., eight minutes after the electricity began surging through

His father, James F. McCorquodale of Alma, sat motionless while witnessing the execution. McCorquodale, who was white, was executed for murdering Donna Marie Dixon, a 17-year-old runaway from Newport News, Va., in 1974. According to testimony, McCorquodale objected to a conversation between Miss Dixon, who was also white, and a black man in an Atlanta bar. McCorqudale and another man, known only as Leroy, took her to an apartment, where they beat her, raped her and mutilated her with their teeth, razor blades and surgical scissors.

The 6-foot-1 McCorquodale attempted to strangle Miss Dixon with a nylon cord. When that failed, he broke her neck with his bare hands, authorities Leroy disappeared and was never charged in the murder.

The U.S. Supreme Court on Monday denied two last-minute pleas from McCorquodale, both by 6-2 votes. Only justices Thurgood Marshall and William Brennan, who oppose capital punishment in all cases, voted to grant a stay of execution.

oice for abandoned speaks out in the Valley

The Brownsville Herald

LAS MILPAS (AP) - On Pharr's southern edge in the Valley's largest cluster of colonias, Carmen Anaya sits in a living room lined with family photographs and talks about neglect and suffering.

"There is a colonia out here that has no water, no roads, no sewers, no nothing," she said. "We call the people who live there the abandoned ones because that's what they are - abandoned.'

Mrs. Anaya, a former Mexican schoolteacher who speaks little English, is a voice for the abandoned in these rural outposts of the Valley. Scattered throughout the region are 600 colonias where 120,000 residents live in some of Texas' most impoverished conditions.

In these often haphazard neighborhoods that lie on the outskirts of most Valley cities, indoor plumbing and paved roads are infrequent luxuries and not basic necessities.

But Mrs. Anaya has told this story countless times before. She has told it to governors and congressmen and to mayors and city commissioners. She will tell it to about anyone who has the inclina-

Mrs. Anaya took the cause of the impoverished colonias under her wing 30 years ago when few would. Others now have joined her cause, most notably Valley Interfaith. But before anyone, there was the now 70-year-old Mrs. Anaya with her youthful vigor and unshakable commitment to Las Milpas, a colonia community of 10,000 residents.

'I've suffered with the people of my community," she said in an eloquent Spanish that reflects her teaching days. "It's a matter of dignity. Don't we have the right to live in dignity?"

With a reassuring nod, Mrs. Anaya answers her own question and settles back into her chair. The struggles, she says with a deep sigh, all the struggles fought over three decades.

We always worked with the politicians and they'd always say, 'Mrs. Anaya, this time we will do something.' But nothing was ever done. "The city wouldn't have anything to do with us and the county could never do anything," she said. Now after all those years of having her pleas fall upon the deaf ears of elected officials, there is $4.1 million. That's how much the state has committed to seeing to it that all of the residents living in Las

The pathway to that $4 million leads through Valley Interfaith, the Texas Water Development Board and the city of Pharr's decision to annex the network of 19 colonias that make up Las Milpas. But it all started in the small home located next to the Anaya food store in Las Milpas. That's where Mrs. Anaya has plotted strategy, held meetings and encouraged the people of her community to never give up hope.

"Mrs. Anaya is the example for others in her community," said Elizabeth Valdez, a Valley Interfaith organizer. "She has become their teacher, their mentor, and they look up to her

"We have brought out the colonias from the dark side of the Valley.

The victory, Mrs. Anaya insists, is not one for herself but for Valley Interfaith, an organization to which she has devoted much of her life since 1983. Mrs. Anaya has used Interfaith, an interreligous, grass-roots organization, as a vehicle to achieve goals she has sought much of her life.

Mrs. Anaya cares little about ideology, or criticisms that Interfaith is a leftist organization brought together by forces outside the Valley. Af-

"We've done more in four years than we were able to do in 30 years," she said. A devout Catholic; Mrs. Anaya says her work with Interfaith follows the principles of her religion.

"It's the gospel in action," she said. Looking out over a desolate colonia landscape of tattered homes, Mrs. Anaya said, "We've worked so hard, you can't imagine. But look, there's so much left to

A few miles north of Las Milpas, a new country club complete with fine golfing greens has been developed, and a sales pitch proclaims it to be "the finest in Southern living." The living in Las Milpas is harder.

Many of its residents are migrant farmworkers, and because of that, many of the community's homes are vacant until the work in the northern fields is finished.

Not all is rooted in despair here. The families are strong and the resolve of the people has never been

Canadian town offers view of past

ST. JOHN'S, Newfoundland (AP) — The easternmost point in North America is a rocky headland with the sea far below: Cape Spear, Newfoundland, just outside the provincial Canadian capital, St. John's. Ireland is 1,600 miles away. Signs near the edge of the promontory tell one not to go beyond them and other signs to the memory of people who drowned off the point reinforce the message. The guards in this national historic park warn: If you fall in, no one will rescue you.

The Cantwell family have been keepers of the light for well over a century — since 1846, ten years after the light itself started operations in the old, square former lighthouse that is now a museum and stands near the modern light.

The visitor can see how the Cantwells of old lived, the beds they slept in, the china they used. In St. John's itself:

"The British Empire began here over 400 years ago on Aug. 5, 1583," says a sign on the steep hill that mounts from the waterfront. (St. John's is all hills.) "Landing on this site, Sir Humphrey Gilbert claimed Newfoundland for Elizabeth

Sir Humphrey was not the first on the scene, though. The local historians relate that John Cabot had sailed through the Narrows at the entrance to the harbor and given the place its name on June 24, St. John's Day, 1497. Jacques Cartier visited here, too. The French and British fought over St. John's. The British finally won it for keeps in 1762.

a town of 155,000, has rows of wooden houses, painted gay colors, some of Victorian vintage and some modern copies, clambering up the steep streets. Bay windows and mansard roofs are typical of the architecture. Given all the wood, it's easy to understand that fires have periodically destroyed a good deal of the city.

On Signal Hill, the cliffs that rise at one's right coming into port, wireless communication was born when Guglielmo Marconi in 1901 received the letter "s' in Morse code from Cornwall, England, 1,700 miles away.

Another thing that's now taken for granted got its start in St. John's. In 1919, two men set out by plane from St. John's and reached Ireland some 16 hours later - the first non-stop trans-Atlantic flight.

Squat Cabot Tower sits atop Signal Hill, and there are ruins of other fortifications. Battle history is re-enacted on the hill during the summer, with a colorful military tattoo.

Just to the north of Signal Hill, connected to the open sea by the narrowest of narrows and virtually surrounded by cliffs, is the small fishing community of Quidi Vidi. Actually part of St. John's, it seems far away with its shacks, fish nets, little boats and a restaurant where one can sample the fish.

From Quidi Vidi, a channel leads to Quidi Vidi Lake, scene of the annual Regatta, held the first Wednesday in August, weather permitting. Everything shuts down. The entire town turns out. If it should dare to rain on that Wednesday, the Regatta is held on the next fair day.

So much for facts. How about the feel of the place?

It is enormously hospitable. Cars stop and their drivers wave pedestrians across the street. Sandwiches and beer in front of an open fire at the Step Inn are just the thing for a cold. foggy day. Fellow guests at the Victorian guesthouse on Bonaventure Avenue may invite one on a day's excursion into the countryside.

If one tires of Victoriana, there are very modern hotels, including one with a big indoor waterfall. On the waterfront, one can walk right up to ships from all over the world.
