Blaze claims unattended Pampa baby

Liquid found; arson probed

By PAUL PINKHAM
Senior Staff Writer

A 7-month-old boy died Tuesday afternoon, two hours after a woman pulled the burning child from his mother's smoke-filled rent house in south Pampa.

Justin Tyler Calfy, 607 E. Gordon Ave., died at Coronado Hospital while a local oilman's plane waited at Perry Lefors Field to fly the child to the Shrine Burn Institute in Galveston.

The three-room house is owned by Heliodoro Silva, 1057 Huff Road, fire officials said. Fire Chief J.D. Ray said the kitchen, where the fire started about 2 p.m., was gutted, but the rest of the house suffered mostly smoke damage.

Fire Marshal Tom Adams is investigating the fire for possible arson.

Medical personnel spent close to three hours trying to stabilize the badly burned infant, who was brought to the hospital by his mother, Judy Calfy, 25.

"They worked on him for quite some time," a tearful Linda Haynes, Coronado spokeswoman, said Tuesday.

Haynes said the youngster had burns over 60 percent of his body, including his head, face and trunk.

Candace Biegler, 1344 Coffee St., said the baby's hair was burning and his back already was severely burned when she entered the smoky house to rescue the child.

Biegler said she was driving a fellow Furr's Cafeteria employee home from work when she noticed smoke coming from the tiny house. She said she yelled to ask if anyone was inside, and, when she received no answer, she called the Fire Department from a nearby house.

When Biegler returned outside, she said, she saw Mrs. Calfy rounding the street corner while walking with her other son, Jaysun, 2.

"I said, 'Is your baby in there?' She said, 'Yes,'" Biegler told The Pampa News Tuesday, soot still covering her arms.

She said the two women then ran to the house, but Calfy was prevented from entering because of the thick, blinding smoke. Biegler said she then entered the burning house, groped for the baby's crib and pulled the crib toward the door.

Mrs. Calfy said that after Biegler pulled the crib close to the front door, the mother reached in, grabbed her baby and drove to Coronado Hospital, Fire Marshal Adams said this morning.

Adams said he has launched a full-scale investigation into the blaze, which he and other officials suspect may have been set.

The fire marshal said Tuesday that burn patterns on the kitchen floor indicate some type of liquid was dumped on the floor shortly before the fire started. He said this morning that floor samples and wood scrapings will be sent to a laboratory for testing.

"A good lab can tell you if there was anything poured on (the floor) and what it was," Adams said.

He had not yet determined this morning which lab will be used.

Tuesday night, police detectives and arson investigators were at the house, beginning what one investigator said could be a "long process" of checking into the cause of the blaze.

Coronado spokeswoman Haynes said hospital officials were locating a plane to fly Justin to a burn center in Oklahoma City, when Pampa Shriners offered to fly the infant to the Shrine Burn Institute.

A plane belonging to Pampa oilman Leonard Hudson was standing by, but Haynes said medical personnel couldn't stabilize the youngster enough for the lengthy plane trip to Galveston.

Precinct 1 Justice of the Peace Bob Muns ordered an autopsy to be performed by Amarillo forensic pathologist Ralph Erdmann. Erdmann was to have performed the autopsy in Amarillo this morning.

Tuesday's fire was the second fatal blaze in Pampa this year, and the second in Gray County in the past eight days.

Albert Lee Brookshire, 73, died Jan. 14 in his trailer house at 604 S. Reid St. Authorities determined that the trailer house caught fire after Brookshire dropped a cigarette in a chair.

Reagan urges nominee Bork to hang in there

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan held a surprise meeting today with embattled Supreme Court nominee Robert H. Bork at the White House and urged him to "stay in it," his spokesman said.

The two men met for 25 minutes, White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said.

Asked if Bork had asked that his name be withdrawn in the face of the Tuesday's negative vote by the Senate Judiciary Committee, Fitzwater said, "Absolutely not."

"My interpretation is that the president wants to fight it out, and we have no indication otherwise from Bork," Fitzwater said.

Meanwhile Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., said on the Senate floor there still are 10 or 12 undecided senators, "still enough to confirm the nomination." He added that among Republicans, there is "a feeling there ought to be a vote. I conveyed that to Judge Bork."

Even White House officials, however, were conceding that it would be very difficult to win confirmation now, in light of Tuesday's 9-5 Senate Judiciary Committee vote in opposition to Bork and in view of the dozens of senators who already have declared against him, including five of the Senate's 46 Republicans.

Bork's chances suffered yet another setback today as Sen. John Breaux of Louisiana became the ninth Southern Democrat opposing Bork in a region that had been considered crucial.

Hours earlier, Sen. Patrick Leahy of Vermont told an interviewer on the NBC-TV "Today" show:

"I think the president ought to ... allow Judge Bork to withdraw his name for the sake of the judge and his family but also for the sake of the country. Until this (consideration of Bork) is out of the way, we can't even start confirming another nominee."

Leahy is a member of the Judiciary Committee who voted with the 9-5 majority that opposed Bork on Tuesday.

Reagan, meanwhile, says he has no intention of pulling the nomination and one of his staunchest Senate allies said today it's too early to talk of a replacement for Bork.

Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, said talk of another nominee is premature. Interviewed with Leahy, he claimed the White House and the public still can persuade enough senators to support Bork's nomination on the Senate floor to win confirmation.

"I hope that there's still an opportunity, a good opportunity to have Judge Bork confirmed," Hatch said. "It's going to take a lot of work on the part of the White House ... I still think Judge Bork can win it if the people out there get mad enough about what's happened."

Nonetheless, the GOP's Senate whip said that, if Bork loses, the White House would be ready with a short list of replacement candidates.

Asked if he would withdraw the Bork nomination under any circumstances, Reagan replied, "No."

Pastor blesses beasts

Legend says St. Francis of Assisi preached to animals when nobody else listened.

The bond between this 13th century saint and earth's creatures was remembered Monday and Tuesday at St. Matthew's Episcopal Church at its annual Blessing of the Animals.

Area children and older residents brought their dogs, cats, parakeets, hamsters, goldfish, even stuffed animals, to the church courtyard to be blessed by St. Matthew's rector, the Rev. William Bailey.

Bailey, in his second month with the Pampa congregation, figures he blessed about 80 beasts Monday and 30 Tuesday.

He says the custom is an old European tradition that dates to the days of St. Francis, the patron saint of animals.

"The blessing was originally upon farm livestock," Bailey explains, admitting, though, that he has never blessed farm animals.

Bailey says the tradition was revived about 20 years ago, "when the rise of environmental concerns made St. Francis a hero."

Now, the blessing is used to encourage proper pet care, Bailey notes.

"It reinforces the belief that we are all God's creatures," Bailey says. "Stuffed animals are also blessed to keep children without pets from feeling left out and because they bring security to the children, too."

The Rev. Gary Sides, pastor of St. Vincent de Paul Catholic Church, says his church remembers St. Francis on his feast day, Oct. 4, but does not bless the animals.

"We tell the children how he loved animals," Sides explains. "He had a great devotion to all God's creatures."

Bailey says it is now up to the young pet owners to continue the blessing by caring for their pets.

Bell strikes queen's foot

MIAMI — Football homecoming should be a happy memory to cherish long after one's high school years, especially for a homecoming queen.

But to Miami head cheerleader Autumn Walls — who was crowned 1987 MHS queen last week — the bells tolled a less-than-pleasant memory.

The pre-game ceremonies went without a hitch while Walls, 17, was crowned, kissed and presented roses.

Misfortune struck in the second quarter when Walls went to ring the victory bell after Miami's first touchdown against Vernon Northside. The bell, mounted on a knee-high base, tipped over on Walls' left foot.

Walls said this week that she lifted the bell off of her foot and sat down to check her injury.

An ambulance took Walls from the game to Coronado Hospital, where she was treated and released.

The All-American cheerleader was given crutches and told stay off of her injured foot.

Fund set up for boy who has brain tumor

A fund has been established at First National Bank of Pampa to help defray expenses for brain surgery for 5-year-old Michael Paul Brown, son of Donny and Chris Brown of Mobeetie.

The Browns, formerly of Pampa, will take Michael to Children's Hospital in Dallas on Oct. 12 for X-rays. Doctors will then determine when to perform surgery to remove a brain tumor.

The tumor has already paralyzed the boy's left side, said Mrs. Glenn Honeycutt of Pampa, Michael's great-grandmother. Michael's father is marshal of Mobeetie. His grandmothers are Alice Appleton and Pam Willis, both of Pampa.

Donations to the fund may be made to Janelle Cochran at the bank.

United Way reaches 14 percent

With the third check-in out of the way, the Pampa United Way drive has hit the 14 percent mark for donations and contributions toward its $296,000 goal.

Drive Chairman Duane Harp, following the turn-in of reports from division chairmen Tuesday afternoon, reported $42,572 has been collected in donations and pledges to date.

Harp said he feels the 1987 drive has begun to make progress, "with all the major contributions still to come."

He thanked the workers and agency representatives who remained to hear the total during the report session in the M.K. Brown Meeting Room of the Pampa Community Building.

"Obviously you're enthused, or you wouldn't be here today," he said. Harp encouraged division chairmen to invite their workers and friends to attend the weekly report sessions at 5 p.m. Tuesdays to participate "in some good fun and entertainment."

Repeating as the top divisions again were the Public Division, with co-chairmen Jane Steele and Scott Hahn, and the Special Gifts Division, with co-chairmen Carol Cofer and Bill Harris. The division chairmen won door prizes donated by the Salvation Army and Tralee Crisis Center.

The Public Division has turned in $8,158, some 54 percent of its goal of $15,000 for the drive. The Special Gifts Division has collected $15,750 to date, for 26 percent of its goal of $60,000.

The prizes this week were awarded on the basis of the divisions' percentage of goal collected to date.

Coming in third was the Commercial Division, with its $9,865 representing 25 percent of its $40,000 goal. The Major Firms Division reported $7,700 in collections, 5 percent of its $165,000 goal, while the Professional Division turned in $1,100, representing 7 percent of its goal of $15,000.

Speaker to discuss nuke dump at Kiwanis club meeting Friday

Dan Welty, public relations speaker for the Texas Repository Evaluation Committee, will discuss "Science of Managing Nuclear Waste" at the Friday luncheon of the Downtown Kiwanis Club.

The public is invited. Reservations can be made by contacting club President Dick Stowers or any other Downtown Kiwanis member by noon Thursday. Lunch will begin at noon, with the program beginning at 12:30 p.m. and ending by 1 p.m.

Welty has done public relations work for the U.S. Council for Energy Awareness for the past two years. USCEA is a group of about 150 public utilities and their suppliers that concern themselves with significant energy, electric power and nuclear issues.

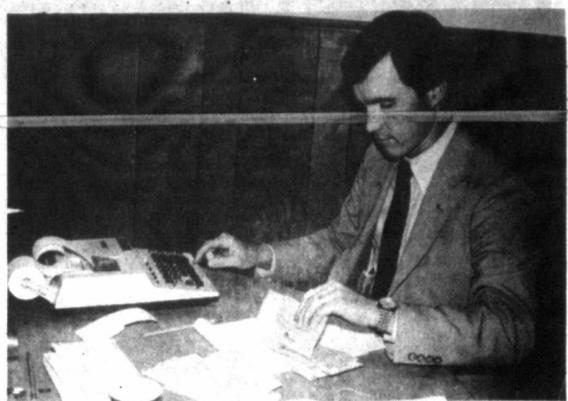

The proposed nuclear waste repository in Deaf Smith County is one of those issues. Working with USCEA, Welty helped form the Texas Repository Evaluation Committee, headquartered in Amarillo. He has spoken to approximately 50 civic and service groups in the Texas Panhandle area about the nuclear waste repository.

Included in his program Friday will be a short movie.

The TREC's primary objectives are to monitor the site selection process of the proposed nuclear waste repository in Deaf Smith County and to provide a forum for community education pertaining to aspects of its development.

Welty said the organization draws its membership entirely from the Panhandle and other areas of the state.

He added that TREC to date has taken no stance with regard to locating the depository in Deaf Smith County. But the committee feels that the safe storage of nuclear waste is a national problem that grows more critical with each passing day.

Harp tallies United Way pledges.

Harp encouraged campaign workers to get their pledge cards out and to check on the collections as the drive enters its final weeks in the official campaign. He said there's only three scheduled work sessions remaining for reports to be turned in.

Providing entertainment at Tuesday's meeting were the Pampa High School cheerleaders and the Harvey mascot, who led the assembled workers and agency representatives in special cheers.

Refreshments were provided by the Pampa Sheltered Workshop, with decorations by Collectors Corner.

The weekly sessions, featuring refreshments and entertainment, have been organized by Betty Brown, local High Plains Epilepsy representative. Brown said entertainment for next week's check-in at 5 p.m. Tuesday will be from the Top o' Texas Revue, a high school variety and entertainment group being organized by M.K. Brown Auditorium manager Danny Parkerson.

Next week also will see a special United Way tribute during the halftime Friday night of the Pampa Harvester football game with Lubbock Dunbar.

The tribute will follow the presentation of the Harvester Band Sweetheart, with the band playing a special number for the United Way. United Way workers and agency representatives will file out onto the field, with boy and girl scouts, dressed in their uniforms, releasing balloons at the end of the tribute.

United Way office executive administrator Katrina Bigham said businesses, groups and individuals are still being encouraged to arrange for special agency tours.

The tours are available during the week, with visits to selected United Way assisted agencies included. Arrangements for the tours can be made by contacting Bigham at 669-1001.

Bigham said the tours can be very informative in showing how United Way contributions are used to aid Pampa area residents in health and human service agencies.

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — Officials are taking seriously a damage claim made by a 16-year-old girl who lost an arm in an April 18 shark attack.

Oil prices plunge on Saudi Arabia rumors

NEW YORK (AP) — Oil prices are under the first significant pressure in weeks because of a rumored shift in Saudi Arabia's pricing strategy that traders fear could lead to a widespread market collapse.

Industry sources said Tuesday that Saudi Arabia, the world's largest oil exporter, has begun linking prices of a large volume of its crude oil sales to spot prices, rather than mirror OPEC's attempt to hold prices at agreed levels.

On the New York Mercantile Exchange, the November delivery price of West Texas Intermediate, the key U.S. crude, fell 38 cents to close at $19.44 per 42-gallon barrel in its first major move in several weeks.

The benchmark crude had been off as much as 42 cents a barrel before the close. Analysts predicted there would be further selling when trading reopened. Among refined products traded on the exchange, the November delivery price for wholesale heating oil fell 1.11 cents a gallon to 54.82 cents. The November delivery price of wholesale unleaded gasoline fell 0.96 cent a gallon to 50.58 cents.

Analysts said the move came as a surprise because Saudi Arabia typically has abided by pricing policies established by the 13-nation Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

While linking prices to the spot market is likely to make Saudi oil more competitive, it also could have a domino effect by forcing other oil producers to discount their products to attract buyers, said Chris McCormack, an analyst with E.D. & F. Man International, Inc.

"This is the first major crack in the (OPEC) price structure in 10 months," he said. "OPEC agreements to hold prices are defeated when a leader changes policy."

Rumors of the policy shift spawned widespread concern among traders, analysts said.

"Traders felt that they did not want to be holding long (oil) positions" and sold heavily throughout the afternoon, said Peter Beutel, assistant director at Elders Futures Inc.

"There is more supply than demand now, and if the Saudis are allowed to float more crude, it would allow prices to drift lower," Beutel said.

According to the reports, sources said the Saudis appear to have agreed to the new strategy in order to sell their allotted quota under the most recent OPEC pricing and production agreement.

That agreement limits Saudi Arabia to a national output quota of 4.34 million barrels a day under an overall OPEC output ceiling of 16.6 million barrels a day for the second half of the year.

Analysts said the move was probably politically motivated rather than an attempt to gain any further market share beyond the Saudi's OPEC quota. They speculated that Saudi Arabia initiated the policy change to hurt the Iranian economy by forcing Iran to cut its prices to match.

"Iran already is discounting its crude to finance the war" with Iraq, McCormack said. While Saudi Arabia has "more room to absorb losses," lower oil prices would be detrimental to Iran, analysts said.

McCormack speculated that other OPEC members are likely to follow suit to punish Iran. If oil producers are mainly concerned with destabilizing the Iranian economy, "the oil market is going to be in trouble," McCormack said.

Sources cited in the reports said Saudi oil industry officials recently approached the four U.S. companies that make up the Arabian-American Oil Co. — Exxon Corp., Texaco Inc., Chevron Inc. and Mobil Corp. — in an attempt to develop a formula that would assure their steady contract purchases of Saudi oil.

Police plan pre-game test of state's new open container law

DALLAS (AP) — The traditional Friday night romp before the Texas-OU football game could become a testing ground for the state's new open container law, which took effect Sept. 1, police say.

Deputy Chief W. L. Cannaday of the Dallas Police Department, who is leading crowd control and security preparations for the annual bash, said officers will issue citations to drivers they see drinking.

"It'll be just like a traffic citation," Cannaday said of the law, which made drinking and driving a Class C misdemeanor.

Pedestrians, however, will be permitted to drink and walk, so long as they do so in the right direction, with the proper frame of mind and without stopping.

Everyone in the rally "parade" must walk in the same counterclockwise direction, and dawdlers will be encouraged to move along by the 450 police and reserve officers who will be on duty downtown, Cannaday said. Foot traffic will move west on the north side of designated streets and east on the south side, he said.

"The 'moving sidewalk,' as the continuous-motion plan has been dubbed, was created by police several years ago to reduce confrontations among celebrants.

About 15 or 20 years ago, arrests approached 1,000 the night before the University of Texas-University of Oklahoma football game in the Cotton Bowl. In recent years, Cannaday said, only about 100 people have landed in jail on that particular Friday night.

"We're expecting about 100 arrests again this year," Cannaday said. Most of those will be for being drunk and disorderly.

In the years before police and lawmakers got involved, the pre-game rivalry was far more raucous and dangerous.

When the old Baker Hotel at Commerce and Akard streets (since replaced by the Southwestern Bell Towers) served as mayhem headquarters, it was not unusual for guests to dangle such objects as chairs, lamps and each other from the windows to incite the mob below.

Police officers, whose white helmets made ideal targets, sometimes took direct hits from falling bottles.

Now the police are in place every few feet, the Baker is gone, the crowd is less frantic and, at midnight, the city's street department rolls out the water wagons and begins washing down Commerce Street and anyone who is left, thus signaling an end to the celebrating.

Merchants along Commerce Street no longer seem to fear the Friday night crowd. Several, including the downtown Neiman-Marcus store and the Adolphus Hotel, said they are taking no extra precautions.

And at the Adolphus Barber Shop, owner Joe Bob Henderson was at a loss for a promotional gimmick this year.

Last year, he offered "Boz Haircuts," a sort of multicolored shaved-and-braided style created by OU's All-American linebacker Brian Bosworth. But Bosworth has graduated and now plays professional ball.

"I've wracked my brain for three months trying to think of something. I thought, maybe, a Jamielle Holloway haircut?" Henderson said.

Kearns and J. Jones discuss bank reopening.

Woman to resurrect closed bank

WACO (AP) — A California investor has assured a judge she will deposit $8 million to $10 million to reopen the failed Leroy Private Bank, prompting him to delay the bank's liquidation for the fourth time.

State District Judge Bill Logue approved extending a temporary restraining order through Nov. 3 after meeting Tuesday in chambers with investor Judith Kearns.

The 28-day extension is the fourth the judge has granted since the Texas Banking Department declared the bank insolvent Aug. 7. Unless the money to reopen the bank comes from Ms. Kearns or other sources by Nov. 3, the department will sell the bank's assets.

The Leroy bank, which opened in 1907, has about 600 depositors with $5 million to $6 million in deposits. The bank is not insured and depositors could lose all their deposits if the bank does not reopen.

"It's like people on the Titanic waiting for another life raft," said Alex Tandy, who represents two depositors.

Depositors on Tuesday filled Logue's courtroom to ask for another extension, fearing the judge would approve immediate liquidation. But agreement on the extension was reached without a public showdown.

Texas Banking Commissioner Ken Littlefield argued that the temporary restraining order should be extended only seven days, while Bill Vannatta, representing the Leroy Depositors Association, asked for 30-day extension.

When Ms. Kearns entered the room unannounced, depositors burst into applause. She said she has already hired a staff of seven to manage the bank, but that she has never been allowed to see the bank's records.

"I've never seen a whit of paper," she said. "I'm assuming the bank at best is worth zero. But you saw those people. Would you walk away?"

Ms. Kearns, has for the past five weeks promised sums of $8 million to $10 million, but the money has not materialized.

MHMR to release patient information

AUSTIN (AP) — State records may show there are many other people like a woman who says she was wrongly held in state mental institutions for 51 years, the woman's attorneys say.

Under a court order negotiated Tuesday in the lawsuit filed by Opal Petty against the Texas Department of Mental Health and Mental Retardation, the agency will release information on other involuntarily committed patients.

"Opal Petty was released from (San Angelo State School) not because of the institution's policy but because she had a family member who was persistent," said attorney Deborah Hiser of Advocacy Inc. Her group and the Texas Civil Liberties Union are representing Ms. Petty, 69.

"A lot of people in institutions don't have persistent family members looking after their interests," Ms. Hiser said.

Ms. Petty, who was in Austin State Hospital for 37 years and in San Angelo State School for the mentally retarded for 14 years, said in the lawsuit that she did not receive judicial review of she was committed.

Ms. Petty, who now lives with her nephew and his wife in San Angelo, was not considered to be mentally ill for at least nine years before her release from Austin State Hospital, according to the lawsuit.

State District Judge Harley Clark on Tuesday set a Nov. 23 hearing on whether the case should be made a class-action lawsuit and a Dec. 14 hearing on whether MHMR patients are being granted due process. A Feb. 8 hearing was set on Ms. Petty's request for monetary damages from MHMR.

"The purpose of the suit is not only to redress the wrongs that Opal Petty has suffered for having been confined for 51 years in an institution, but is also to help (others like her) so they themselves will also have a hearing to determine whether or not they should be here," said Jim Harrington, TCLU legal director.

Student says one arrest won't stop telephone fraud attempts

AUSTIN (AP) — The arrest of a University of Texas student for illegally obtaining and using long-distance access codes won't stop other students from trying the same thing, a student involved in similar activity says.

Austin police Tuesday arrested a UT student who authorities say may have made up to $100,000 in long-distance calls.

A UT student who says he has used and distributed long-distance access codes illegally said one arrest will not stop others from using unauthorized long-distance codes.

"The smart ones never get caught. It's the stupid ones who don't know what they're doing," the computer science sophomore, who asked to remain anonymous, told the Austin Daily Texan newspaper.

"I've distributed numbers all over the United States," he said.

He said he never got caught and used illegal access codes for about four years before giving it up.

"I realized the summer of '86 that Austin had a white collar crime task force, that's when they started cracking down," he said.

But the penalties and fear of getting caught will not stop everyone.

"Everybody knows the penalties, that's part of the game. If it weren't illegal, we wouldn't do it," he said.

Officers confiscated computer equipment they said was used to break through access codes from the residence of the student, said Austin police Sgt. Robert Ansley.

Authorities had not filed charges by Tuesday night, but Ansley said charges would probably be filed sometime today.

Several three-foot high marijuana plants found growing in the apartment were turned over to narcotics officers, Ansley said.

Sessions has relapse, hospitalized

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — FBI Director-designate William S. Sessions is hospitalized in stable condition after suffering a relapse from his bleeding ulcer.

The twice-postponed swearing-in ceremony for the 57-year-old federal judge has been put off indefinitely.

Sessions "is believed to have experienced more bleeding" and was sent Tuesday to Methodist Hospital in San Antonio, Dr. Richard Rubio, Sessions' private physician, said in a statement issued by the FBI.

Rubio said he does not consider the illness life-threatening and that surgery was not anticipated.

Sessions became ill and fainted in the aisle of a jetliner last Wednesday en route to Washington to be sworn in the next day at FBI headquarters.

Doctors in Washington discovered a previously undiagnosed bleeding ulcer in the upper portion of his small intestine.

On Monday, the FBI rescheduled the swearing-in ceremony for this Thursday, but the oath of office now "has been postponed indefinitely," said the bureau's acting director, John Otto.

On his release from George Washington University Medical Center on Saturday, Sessions told reporters he generally felt good and headed back to his home in San Antonio. He said he planned to return to Washington today, be sworn in Thursday and "I'm ready to go."

Before his relapse, doctors had said Sessions will take medication to allow him to resume a normal workload by reducing acid secretions in the stomach, allowing the ulcer to heal.

Normally, a period of rest accompanied by light work for several weeks is prescribed for ulcer victims following the initial diagnosis.

Currently the chief U.S. district judge for the Western District of Texas, Sessions had been scheduled to leave today for Washington for his swearing-in ceremonies.

"He's doing very well," Rubio said. "He's stable and resting comfortably. Right now we're administering IV (intravenous) fluids and replacing some of the blood products. Certainly he is in no grave danger at this time. I would anticipate (Sessions) will stay in the hospital) at least five days."

Although Sessions did experience more bleeding, which is not uncommon in such cases, Rubio said he was unsure when that bleeding occurred.

Property insurance rates cut

AUSTIN (AP) — Texans will spend $53 million less on property insurance next year instead of the $226 million more the industry wanted to collect.

The State Board of Insurance, in a 2-0 vote, Tuesday approved a 3.6 percent overall cut in property rates, effective March 1. The insurance industry wanted a 15.3 percent increase.

The new rates include a 2.4 percent average reduction in homeowners' rates.

For example, the annual premium for a $100,000 brick veneer home in Dallas was cut from $477 to $459, a 3.8 percent reduction, the same cut approved for Austin, Fort Worth and Waco.

A decrease of 4 percent was approved for El Paso and San Antonio. A decrease of 3.2 percent was approved for Abilene, Amarillo, Lubbock, Midland, San Angelo and Wichita Falls. No rate change was approved for Corpus Christi and Houston.

"We're disappointed. We'll be back next year," said Rick Gentry, spokesman for the Texas Insurance Advisory Association.

Board member David Thornberry said rates might have been increased by up to 5 percent if not for the panel's method of considering the amount of investment income earned by insurance companies. It is a method insurance companies say short-changes them.

"This case highlighted some long-standing differences that we have had with the board, particularly regarding the profit and contingency allowance that is in the rate-making formula," Gentry said.

He added that no decision had been made on whether to ask a court to overturn the board ruling.

It was a "fairly good year" for insurance company investments, according to Thornberry, who, with board member Jim Nelson, voted for the decrease. The board, usually three members, will be one person short until new Chairman Jack Smith Jr. of Dallas takes the oath Oct. 19.

Texas property rates increased 5.3 percent in March of this year, including an average 8.6 percent increase in homeowners' rates. The industry's request for a 15.3 percent increase would have added $226 million a year to property insurance premiums.

Persian Gulf policy likely to spill blood

For an example of the continuing disarray of the Reagan administration, look to the Persian Gulf. President Reagan has finally "done something" with the huge U.S. Navy armada patrolling there. An American helicopter attacked an Iranian mine-laying ship. The ship and crew were captured. And on the diplomatic front — if speaking before the farcical United Nations can be called diplomatic — Reagan insisted to the gathered yahoos that Iran must "clearly and unequivocally" accept a ceasefire in the seven-year Iran-Iraq war. If Iran refuses, Reagan threatened to ask the U.N. Security Council to impose sanctions on arms imports to Iran. He also called on his new Soviet buddies to join him in working for peace.

On which planet does Reagan think he's president? Maybe Oz. Things are different here on earth. Let us count the ways. First, who can take the United States seriously, at least while Reagan is in office, on the issue of reducing arms sales to Iran? Reagan himself gave the Iranians hundreds of American TOW anti-tank weapons. True, he now repudiates that policy. But he's stuck with the fact that, whenever he talks about cutting off arms shipments to Iran, the world laughs.

Second, for seven years the Soviets have profited from selling arms to both Iran and Iraq. Despite what Mikhail Gorbachev might be cooing to Reagan, the Soviets gain if the war continues. Third, and most important, Reagan seems to know nothing of the Iranians' religious faith. The Ayatollah Khomeini may be nuts, but he isn't stupid; and Iranians seem willing to follow him anywhere. When he came to power in 1979, the ayatollah vowed to destroy three men: The shah, Jimmy Carter, and Iraqi dictator Saddam Hussein. Hussein, let us remember, launched the current war by invading Iran.

Having achieved the first two parts of his plan, including the hounding from office of one American president, the ayatollah certainly isn't going to let the speeches, or minor military acts, of another American president bother him. Why then has the United States, after maintaining a sensible neutrality for seven years, tilted toward Iraq? Because the ayatollah's postures are so offensive, there's a tendency to ignore Iran's strategic position and favor its foes.

Another reason is that Reagan wants to leave office looking like a peacemaker. He'll soon meet with Gorbachev to sign, with big fanfare, a treaty that most likely will undermine European security, and undercut Western Europe's control over its own destiny. In like manner, Reagan's aides are probably telling him he can cajole the ayatollah into suing for peace.

The sad thing is that Reagan's strategy is more likely to prolong the Iran-Iraq war, solidify the despotic rule of the ayatollah and his successors, and cost more American lives.

Smiling Navy man sold country

WASHINGTON — Now and then a book comes along that ranks as a can't-put-it-downer. Ordinarily such books are novels. This month brings Howard Blum's I Pledge Allegiance, a work of non-fiction as gripping as any tale by Tom Clancy. It is the biography of a rat, John Walker Jr. I couldn't put it down.

Most of us have a short memory span. Outside the U.S. Navy, the story of the Walker family already has begun to fade. Blum brings the sordid tale of espionage brilliantly back to life. It was a story spread over three decades, from the time 18-year-old Johnny enlisted in the Navy in 1955 to the day in 1985 when U.S. District Judge J. Calvitt Clarke sentenced him to two concurrent life terms in prison. Along the way, Walker sold out his country to the Soviet Union. He didn't do it for love. He did it for money. He did it for the fun of it.

John Lehman, former secretary of the Navy, has described the Walker case as "the most costly act of espionage in the history of our country." Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger has called the loss of cryptographic secrets "incalculable." Because of the Walker family, the Soviet Union was able to decode thousands upon thousands of secret messages before Johnny's wife at last blew the whistle on her traitorous husband.

Yet there was nothing so very unusual about Johnny Walker. He was a reckless teen-ager. He got in trouble with the law. Lots of teen-age boys get in trouble with the law. He developed a talent for making radios work. Nothing odd there. He went into the Navy, did his boot camp at the Bainbridge Training Center in Maryland, went to Fleet Sonar School, sailed on a destroyer-escort, USS Johnnie Hawkins. At every step he impressed his officers as a bright, clever, alert, energetic young sailor. His evaluations as a radio man were practically perfect.

Johnny's ambition was to serve on submarines. He moved from a sub-tender, USS Howard Gilmore, based in Charleston, S.C., to the submarine USS Balu, based in Key West, Fla. He served on the submarine Razorback, based on the West Coast, before winning a coveted assignment to the maiden trip of the nuclear sub Andrew Jackson. His last seagoing assignment, before the trouble began, was to the submarine Bolivar, based in Norfolk, Va.

By this time Walker had moved up from senior chief in 1966 to warrant officer in 1967 — a remarkable achievement for a non-com. He also had attracted troubles to match his hash marks. His marriage was in shambles, his wife a near alcoholic, his four children more of a burden than a joy. He was deeply in debt. He hungered for money; he hungered for excitement. An idea began to fester: He could get everything he wanted by selling cryptographic material to the Soviet Union. He could become a spy.

It was amazingly simple. Warrant Officer Walker had no problem stealing and copying a month's worth of settings for the top-secret KL-47 cryptographic machine. He drove from Norfolk to Washington, found the Soviet Embassy at 16th and L streets, and announced himself to "the guy with the hat."

"I want to talk with someone in security," said Johnny Walker.

There was a long pause. "Follow me," the guy said. So it began. Before it ended, Johnny had entangled his father, his brother, his best friend, his wife and his young son Michael in the web. He came under the control of a high-ranking officer in the Soviet KGB. He learned how to make drops of stolen material; and for every drop he collected a wad of $50 bills. He learned how to operate a camera, how to communicate with his Soviet masters. Before long he was rolling in money.

The scam lasted for 17 years. Johnny ran scared, but Johnny ran rich. He got out of the Navy, set himself up in the private detective business, and continued to feed the Soviets sensitive material obtained from his accomplices. Meanwhile, his family relationships soured. He abandoned his wife. When she turned him in, he stayed tough. He rattled on his co-defendants as part of a plea bargain. The FBI kept hounding him to make a damage assessment. Precisely what secrets had he turned over to the Soviets? He had turned over everything: "If I had access," said Johnny Walker, "color it gone."

There is no moral to this story. Walker was a con artist, first class. He joked, he teased, he played around. He was always laughing about something. Blum's book gives vivid meaning to Hamlet's observation that "one may smile, and smile, and be a villain." At least, said Hamlet, it may be so in Denmark. It was this way with Johnny Walker, too.

MORE DEMOCRATIC CANDIDATES HAVE COMMITTED SUICIDE THAN WERE KILLED IN CAMPAIGN '88

Can't trust leftists in Congress

Why didn't Ollie North trust Congress? Well, let's see.

Some members of Congress have been raising money for the wrong sides in both El Salvador and Nicaragua Senators and representatives who have signed fund-raising letters or whose names appear on the letters as "sponsors" include Sen. Tom Harkin, Reps. John Conyers, George Brown, Ron Dellums, Julian Dixon, Mervyn Dymally, Thomas Foglietta, Robert Garcia, Mickey Leland, Parren Mitchell, Pete Stark, Bruce Vento and Pat Schroeder.

Some groups opposed to United States policy held a mobilization day. The event was so openly dominated by communists that the AFL-CIO advised its members not to participate.

But those who did participate included Reps. David Bonior, Ted Weiss, Walter Fauntroy and John Conyers.

Why didn't Ollie North trust Congress?

Rep. George Crockett of Michigan refused to vote with the rest of Congress to condemn the Soviets for shooting down a civilian passenger plane. He voted against a resolution condemning the Soviets for the murder of an American Army officer in East Germany.

And yet this same Rep. Crockett has been selected by the leadership of the House — Jim Wright, et al — as chairman of the subcommittee on Central America — where he will be dealing with our interests in Nicaragua.

This same Rep. Crockett in the 1940s and 1950s sponsored receptions for convicted spies Julius and Ethel Rosenberg. And he was a top dog in the infamous National Lawyers Guild.

Why didn't Ollie North trust Congress?

When California's Rep. Ron Dellums was sent to investigate the Grenada airport, he offered to allow Marxists to review his report and suggest changes before he submitted it to Congress. He gave the Grenada Marxists a clean bill of health.

Dellums, a hard-line leftist, sits on the House Armed Services Committee and on the subcommittee on investigations and on the subcommittee on military installations and facilities.

Why didn't Ollie North trust Congress? Much has been said of the Boland Amendment intended to limit the prerogatives of the president.

Rep. Edward Boland insists he wants government to be frank and open with the people. His own staff in 1982 doctored a House Intelligence Committee report on a Soviet organization — thus to exclude any mention of the participation of six House Democrats who had been named in FBI testimony: Rangel, Dellums, Conyers, Dymally, Leland and Edwards.

Why didn't Ollie North trust Congress?

The question answers itself.

Health officials can't grasp AIDS crisis

By Robert Walters

WASHINGTON (NEA) — Here's a brief quiz about acquired immune deficiency syndrome that illustrates how little is known about AIDS six years after it first appeared in this country:

1) The average medical costs incurred by a single AIDS victim from the onset of the disease until death are: a) less than $30,000; b) almost $150,000.

2) The average incubation period for AIDS is: a) five years; b) 10 years; c) 20 years.

3) By 1991, the cumulative total of known AIDS cases in this country will be: a) 135,000; b) 270,000.

Regardless of which answers you picked, you've achieved a perfect score on the test. That's because all of the alternatives listed above have been offered to the public by reputable medical researchers as reliable estimates.

For members of high-risk groups, notably homosexual and bisexual men and intravenous drug users, the uncertainty of AIDS is whether they will contract the disease that invariably is fatal.

For those presumably not as susceptible to the virus, there is another uncertainty — how society will handle the epidemic, especially its mounting financial costs.

Securing the necessary funds will present an awesome challenge, but simply ascertaining how much money will be required is proving to be difficult, if not impossible.

There is no consensus on the cost of providing medical treatment to a typical AIDS patient, while estimates of how many people will be afflicted by the disease vary even more widely.

The federal Centers for Disease Control, the organization that has most closely monitored the epidemic, examined the costs of providing hospital care to the first 10,000 AIDS patients in this country, then reported in 1985 that the expenses averaged $147,000 per person.

But a subsequent scientific study of the costs of treating AIDS victims in San Francisco hospitals produced an estimate of just under $27,000 per person.

Reliable statistics are available on the number of people who have contracted AIDS and what proportion of them have died while relying upon currently available medical responses to the disease.

The number of cases reported to CDC now exceeds 42,000. One-half of those who have contracted AIDS have died within one year of the initial diagnosis. Almost three-fourths have perished within two years. Seven-eighths have died within four years.

There is no agreement, however, on what the future holds. "For every case of reported AIDS in the United States, there are about 100 or more carriers," a respected Harvard University researcher told a Senate committee last year.

"Once infected, (they are) infected for life," he added. "We see a wave of a devastating disease coming."

Other dismiss those views as unnecessarily hysterical, if not outrageously apocalyptic. One scientific projection places the cumulative total at 135,000 cases by 1991. CDC, however, believes the figure will reach 270,000 by 1991.

What is certain, in the words of one especially valuable new handbook on the subject, is that "the AIDS crisis is just beginning... yet already both our health care institutions and our social fabric are strained by the AIDS epidemic."

That timely observation comes from "AIDS Public Policy Dimensions," published by the United Hospital Fund of New York and the University of California's Institute for Health Policy Studies.

"The AIDS epidemic," the book aptly notes, "is suffused with and exacerbated by myriad ethical, financial, legal, medical, political and psychosocial issues that demand balanced discussion and careful analysis."

President Reagan has been notably unenthusiastic about participating in that dialogue, but the nation urgently needs the unified, coherent policy guidance that only the federal government can provide to deal with the crisis.

Analysts unfazed by 91.55-point drop in Dow

NEW YORK (AP) — Stocks tumbled in a selling spree that wiped nearly 100 points from the Dow Jones industrial average, Wall Street's biggest one-day drop ever, but analysts were unfazed by what amounted to a $73 billion paper loss.

"It's not the beginning of a great big decline," said Lewis Smith of Bear Stearns & Co. after the best-known measure of stock market performance fell Tuesday by 91.55 points, or 3.47 percent, closing at 2,548.63.

The previous record for a one-day drop in the closely-watched average was on Sept. 11, 1986, when it skidded 86.61 points.

As a percentage of the Dow, however, Tuesday's decline didn't compare with Black Tuesday, the worst day in Wall Street history. On Oct. 28, 1929, in the midst of the Great Crash, the average fell 38.33, closing at 260.64 for a loss of 12.9 percent.

The drop Tuesday in light trading was blamed on anxiety over rising interest rates and on gloomy forecasts, reportedly including one by the idiosyncratic Robert Prechter, that the market had reached a short-term high and would drop back.

"This thing fed on itself," said Smith. "It became a psychologically involved decline."

Prechter, a psychology graduate and former rock drummer who has attracted a wide following because of what traders call remarkably accurate forecasts based on such trends as skirt lengths and rock lyrics, was rumored to have issued a bearish forecast on his private hotline.

Staff members at his office in Gainesville, Ga., said he was unavailable for comment, and they declined to disclose any of his latest forecasts.

Smith and other analysts were not concerned that the decline was the beginning of a steep drop.

A.C. Moore of Argus Research Corp. predicted a continuation of the bull cycle because corporate profits are expected to keep climbing and the Federal Reserve Board is unlikely to restrict credit significantly.

Another reason for the lack of concern, besides the small size of the drop as a percentage of the Dow Jones average, is that wide swings in the market have become commonplace, largely because of computerized program trading, which allows professionals to unload stocks quickly.

The 10 biggest daily gains in the history of the Dow Jones average all took place this year. Eight of the 10 largest daily losses also have occurred since Jan. 1.

Over the course of these gyrations, the indicator soared more than 826 points, from 1,895.95 to 2,722.42, before falling back to its current levels.

Tuesday's plunge wiped out $73 billion in share values, according to Wilshire Associates of Beverly Hills, Calif. The market value of 5,000 NYSE, American and Over The Counter stocks tracked by Wilshire fell to $3.156 trillion, for a decline of 2.26 percent. A year ago, the Wilshire index stood at $2.390 trillion.

Also Tuesday, yields on the bellwether 30-year Treasury bond reached 9.78 percent, compared with about 9.20 percent in early September and an average of 7.39 percent in January. The rate is at its highest level since 1985.

There were concerns Tuesday that higher yields would make some Treasury issues a more attractive investment than stocks and would siphon money from Wall Street, said Michael Metz, a vice president with Oppenheimer & Co.

Disasters continue this week

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Earthquakes. Aftershocks. Wildfires. Blackout. Sweltering, triple-digit temperatures. What next?

For Southern California, an area noted for the variety of its disasters, the last six days have been particularly notable.

Clearing the rubble from Thursday's 6.1-magnitude earthquake had barely begun when a rash of big brushfires broke out, stoked by an unprecedented heat wave with readings as high as 108 degrees for two straight days.

A brush fire threatened even the venerable Palomar Observatory, charring 9,000 acres in northern San Diego county, disrupting telephone service and causing 27 minor injuries among firefighters, state forestry officials said.

Then came the kicker: After two days of record heat, a power failure early Tuesday blacked out a 6-square-mile section of downtown Los Angeles, leaving thousands standing outside the same high-rises they evacuated during the quake.

Despite the disaster-movie headlines, most of Southern California's 14 million inhabitants whose homes still stand go about life as usual.

Amusement parks and beaches are full. Shopping malls are busy. "Shake and bake" already has come and gone as the quip of the day.

In Whittier, where quake damage was heaviest, one real estate firm reported 500 calls from investors around the country looking to buy into a "depressed" market.

That's not to minimize the toll: seven dead and 1,500 left homeless by the quake and aftershocks, $125 million in quake damage to more than 10,600 homes and businesses, three homes destroyed and 15,000 acres of watershed blackened by the fires and at least one killed by the heat.

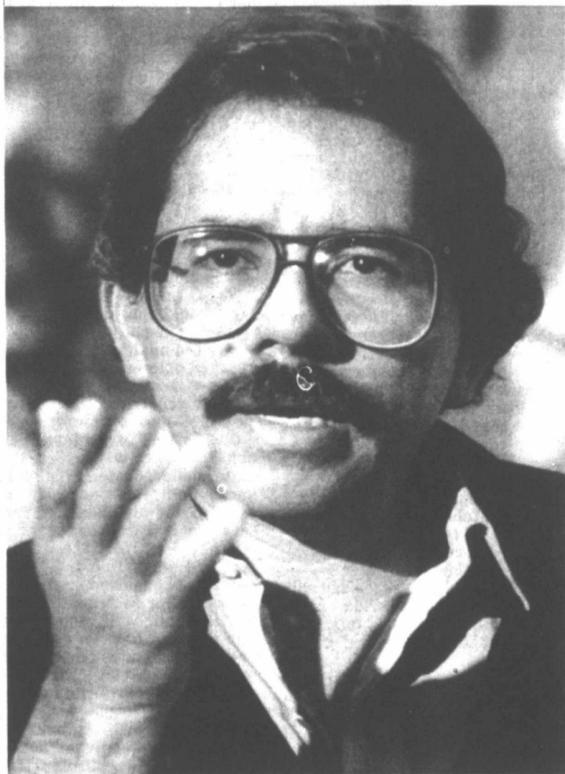

The ranks of the psychologically wounded are larger still.

Thousands of people, most of them immigrants from Latin America who bring with them memories of catastrophic earthquakes, still sleep in parks and yards for fear their tenements will collapse in another tremor.

The psychological aftershocks reverberate among the more affluent as well.

Some hesitate before getting into an elevator. Some involuntarily start toward the nearest door at even the slightest aftershock. Parents fret when young children talk about dying.

After all, Southern Californians are supposed to be accustomed to earthquakes and fires.

Ortega criticizes Reagan conditions.

Sandinista leader pledges democracy

NEW YORK (AP) — Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega says his leftist government will transfer power to an elected opposition in 1990 if that is the wish of the Nicaraguan people.

Rejecting Reagan administration claims that the Sandinistas intend to remain in power indefinitely, Ortega said Tuesday night that the concept of political pluralism has always been part of the Sandinista philosophy.

He said that in national elections three years from now, "if the people choose another form of government and another party, then there will be another form of government and another party... This is nothing new."

Ortega reacted sharply to administration claims that Nicaragua's compliance with the Central America peace agreement signed two months ago has been limited to "cosmetic gestures."

"The bottom line here is that President Reagan is simply not interested in backing the agreement and that's why he is trying to undermine the credibility of the steps we have taken in Nicaragua," said Ortega.

Ortega spoke through a translator to 10 American reporters at a local hotel after flying to New York for a speech Thursday to the U.N. General Assembly.

Reagan is scheduled to outline conditions for ending Contra aid in a speech today at the Organization of American States in Washington. The conditions reportedly include negotiations between the Sandinistas and the Contras and moving up Nicaraguan elections scheduled for 1990.

Under the peace agreement signed by five Central American nations on Aug. 7, Ortega committed his country to arrange a cease-fire with the U.S.-backed Contra rebels and to take a number of steps aimed at achieving genuine democracy.

Thus far, the Sandinistas have allowed an opposition newspaper, La Prensa, to reopen, as well as a Catholic radio station. In addition, a National Reconciliation Commission has been formed and several exiled priests have been allowed to return to Nicaragua.

A 30-day unilateral cease-fire declared by the Sandinista government is to take effect at midnight tonight.

Reagan calling for 'insurance policy' against the Sandinistas

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, casting a skeptical eye upon moves toward peace in Central America, wants renewed Contra aid as an "insurance policy" against backsliding by Nicaragua, his spokesman says.

Reagan was to discuss his plan for supporting the Contra rebels today in a speech being billed by aides as a major policy address before the Organization of American States.

The president planned to "emphasize his support" for the regional peace plan unfolding in the region, said his spokesman, Marlin Fitzwater.

But Reagan also was to relay his concerns about the regional accord and discuss his Contra request "as an insurance policy for implementation" of the agreement, the press secretary said.

Fitzwater said the president does not intend to issue "final judgments" about whether Nicaragua's leftist Sandinistas are complying with the peace accord.

"We just cast a skeptical eye and say, 'Watch,'" he said.

The speech came as House Speaker Jim Wright warned that no proposal for military aid is likely to get congressional approval as long as the peace process continues.

"I don't see any necessity for sending anyone military money while the peace process is going on," the Texas Democrat told reporters.

In recent days, Wright has accused Reagan of attempting to "torpedo" the peace process by making unrealistic demands of the Nicaraguans to appease "the extreme right wing."

Wright and Reagan agreed in August that any military aid request would be postponed until after Oct. 1 as long as Nicaragua took certain steps toward democracy.

Their plan was superseded by a regional agreement signed by Nicaragua and four other Central American nations. It calls for certain steps towards democratic reform and a cease-fire, to be implemented by Nov. 7.

Reagan has derided that plan as "fatally flawed," while Wright has urged that military solutions be put aside to allow it to flower.

On Tuesday, Fitzwater said Reagan may put his funding request before Congress prior to the Nov. 7 deadline.

Last month, Secretary of State George Shultz said the administration intended to seek $270 million in military and humanitarian aid for the rebels over 18 months.

Fitzwater denied that Reagan has arrived at a new set of guidelines — beyond those included in the regional plan — that would be used to judge Nicaragua's compliance with the peace accord and determine whether to send further Contra aid.

The peace proposal Reagan and Wright agreed to in August would be cited "as a way of judging" the peace process, Fitzwater said.

The spokesman said the administration believes the plan "has flaws," but he also praised it as a "dynamic plan... that can work and is working in many respects."

Lawmaker: Federal AIDS booklet needs more facts, less moralizing

WASHINGTON (AP) — A New York congressman says Education Secretary William J. Bennett's new AIDS education handbook is too long on moral prescriptions and too short on the facts teen-agers need to know to avoid contracting the disease.

"I have no problem sending a message of morality," Rep. Ted Weiss, D-N.Y., said Tuesday. But "to pretend that this problem really is being addressed by taking this moralistic approach only is not dealing with the real world."

Weiss, who is chairman of the House Government Operations subcommittee on inter-governmental relations, said that given the "tremendous amount" of sexual activity among teen-agers, the Education Department booklet should have offered extensive information "about the use of condoms, about sanitary needles and so on."

The Bennett booklet, in contrast to U.S. Surgeon General C. Everett Koop's own report on AIDS, frowns on condoms and says that if teachers discuss them, they should point out condoms "can and do fail."

Bennett said parents and teachers should teach youngsters that sexual restraint is a virtue and the one sure way to avoid AIDS.

"This is not moralizing; it is realism," Bennett told a news conference Tuesday while introducing the booklet.

His 28-page booklet, "AIDS and the Education of Our Children," suggests that schools ordinarily can wait until sex education courses at the junior high level to teach youngsters the facts about AIDS and how it is spread.

Koop has said frank instruction about AIDS should start in early elementary school. And he has urged men who engage in any high-risk sexual activity to wear condoms.

Without mentioning Koop by name, Bennett said, "People who have thought or who have been suggesting that condoms will provide an adequate safeguard against the spread of AIDS are, I think, now admitting either to overstatement or mistake."

Bennett said Koop recently acknowledged condoms had an "extraordinarily high" failure rate when used by homosexuals during anal intercourse.

Koop was in Europe and unavailable for comment.

Bennett said his department cleared its handbook with the White House, not the Public Health Service.

Weiss charged that the White House Domestic Policy Council is bottling up AIDS education guidelines prepared by the federal Centers for Disease Control. "It's sort of a continuation of the struggle between Dr. Koop and Dr. Bennett to the detriment of fighting the disease," Weiss said.

Acquired immune deficiency syndrome is spread through the exchange of contaminated semen and blood. Most victims are homosexual men, but intravenous drug abusers who share needles also can contract the disease.

Bennett said the Education Department will mail nearly 300,000 copies of the booklet to school principals, school boards, presidents of parents' groups and other educators.

The Public Health Service plans to distribute 45 million copies of its own new pamphlet, "What You Should Know About AIDS," through employers, health departments and community organizations.

Reports Navy to test 12-warhead missile

NEW YORK (AP) — The Reagan administration is reported to have decided that tests of the Navy's new Trident 2 missile with 12 warheads will be conducted next month.

Until last month, the missile had never been tested with more than eight warheads. But the Pentagon broke that barrier in early September in a test with 10 warheads, according to a report in today's New York Times.

The Times says Defense Secretary Caspar W.

Weinberger has pushed for conducting the 12-warhead tests despite misgivings of the Joint Chiefs of Staff and the State Department.

In August, House Armed Services Committee chairman Les Aspin, D-Wis., sent a letter to Weinberger urging that the tests be put off. Opponents of the tests have expressed concern they could complicate arms control talks with the Soviet Union. Backers have said they are needed to keep the U.S. missile program on course.

AIDS panel still seeking its identity

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan's AIDS commission was born in controversy and beset by internal strife and is still searching for an identity, apparently with a change of directors barely a month before its first report is due.

The Washington Post reported today that Dr. W. Eugene Mayberry will resign as chairman and be replaced by panel member James D. Watkins, a retired Navy admiral.

The AIDS panel was set up to help develop national policy towards the deadly disease.

Maple Walnut Popcorn combines a feast of fall flavors to make a delightful snack.

October is National Popcorn Poppin' Month

There's no better way to celebrate October than by enjoying one of the country's most popular and great-tasting foods — popcorn!

Americans have reason to dive into batches of this ever-so-tasty snack since the Popcorn Institute has declared October "National Popcorn Poppin' Month."

What makes popcorn the munching favorite among young and old alike? William E. Smith, executive director of the Institute, a trade association representing United States popcorn processors, says popcorn's wholesome goodness, naturally delicious taste and surprisingly low-calorie status has earned it nationwide acclaim.

Smith said that emphasis on healthier, more balanced eating has been a big boost to popcorn popularity, since popcorn has won accolades from health and medical groups for its high fiber, high carbohydrate composition.

The Institute chose October for the celebration, Smith said, since the fall is traditionally popcorn harvest time, and the biggest eating season.

Popcorn munching, however, is not just limited to fall. Popcorn lovers are known to satisfy their urge for tempting white and golden kernels year-round, as consumption averages almost 11 billion quarts. That's 45 quarts per man, woman and child yearly.

Here are some quick facts that have earned popcorn its number one status:

- It's nutritious. Popcorn, like other cereal grains, has one important nutritional function — to furnish the body with heat and energy. Popcorn is high in carbohydrates and fiber, and gram for gram has more protein, phosphorus and iron than potato chips, ice cream cones, pretzels and soda crackers. It's low in calories (26 per cup air-popped; 33 per cup popped in oil), and if lightly drizzled with butter or oil, still is only 126 calories per cup.

The National Cancer Institute (NCI), the federal government's cancer prevention agency, recommends popcorn as a moderately high source of fiber which can help reduce the risks of some forms of cancer.

The American Dental Association includes popcorn on its list of recommended sugar-free snacks. The American Diabetes Association and the American Dietetic Association permit popcorn as a bread exchange on weight-control diets; the Feingold Diet for hyperactive children permits popcorn because it contains no artificial additives.

- It's economical. Popcorn doesn't hurt the pocketbook. A quart of home-popped popcorn costs between 4 and 9 cents to prepare; 17 cents for a bowlful for the entire family to snack on.

- Research and development means better popcorn. Today's popcorn continues to improve with advances in new hybridization, harvesting and processing. Our popcorn pops up nearly double the size of the corn our grandparents enjoyed.

Popcorn is the only corn that pops, and is one of five varieties of corn including sweet (corn on the cob), dent or field (used for animal feed), flint, and Indian or pod (used mainly for decoration).

Since moisture is the key to popped kernels, controlling moisture content allows popcorn processors to guarantee 98 percent of the kernels pop to maximum potential if stored and prepared properly.

There are many different hybrids of popcorn. Two popular varieties are snowflake and mushroom. Snowflake produces large, cloud-like kernels, commonly available for home and theatre eating. Mushroom varieties pop smaller into a ball-like shape, and are perfect for confections and coated popcorn treats.

In addition to white and yellow kernels, popcorn comes in a variety of ears, including black, multicolored, strawberry and blue corn. All varieties, however, no matter what the color, pop up white.

- It's All-American. As one of the oldest American foods, popcorn has a significant role in our history. Used by the Indians as a staple in their diet, popcorn was strung for headdresses, necklaces, corsages and other ornamental items.

Colonists were first introduced to popcorn at the first Thanksgiving feast at Plymouth, Mass. Quadequina, brother of the Wampanoag chief Massasoit, brought a deerskin bag of popped corn to the celebration as a gift.

From there, sugar and milk were added for an early-American breakfast cereal — and by 1929, the first flavored popcorn shop, Karmelkorn, in Casper, Wyo., was born.

Popcorn now comes in over 100 flavors and can be found in grocery stores, theatres, concession stands, ball parks, specialty shops, catalogs and vending machines.

Try your hand at some new popcorn ideas with a little creativity and some help from the spice cabinet. Shake on a favorite herb; add some cheese, nuts or bacon bits; diced, dried fruit; toffee, chocolate or caramel.

Here are two popcorn recipes that make tempting fall treats.

MAPLE WALNUT POPCORN
 ½ cup thick maple syrup
 ½ cup walnut halves or large pieces
 2 quarts popped popcorn
 Pour maple syrup over popped popcorn and stir to blend. Add walnuts and mix. Makes 2 quarts.

SOUTH-OF-THE-BORDER POPCORN
 1 cup shredded Colby and Monterey Jack cheese
 2 ounces butter, melted
 1 teaspoon taco seasoning mix
 2 quarts popped popcorn
 In a small saucepan, melt butter. Add cheeses and stir until smooth. Stir in taco seasoning mix. When combined, pour over popcorn and toss to coat. Makes 2 quarts.

Apples take center stage in October

While the many virtues of the apple certainly aren't new to us — history shows that mankind has enjoyed apples since the Stone Age — October, National Apple Month, may be the perfect time to pay tribute to America's favorite fruit.

Apple growers have their own special recipes for enjoying the fruits of their labors. Ben Lacy from Virginia offered the simplest recipe: Just pop the bottle on the sparkling cider he produces and dispense with cooking altogether!

Nearly every apple grower interviewed for their recipes made a point of advising cooks to take the time to choose the right variety for the purpose. Some apples are best for eating fresh out of the hand, others for baking, still others for sauce-making or salads.

 "L.F." and Marge Garrett bring their favorite recipe of President Harry Truman's to neighborhood potluck dinners where they live in Macos, Colo.

OZARK PUDDING
 1 egg
 ¼ cup sugar
 2 tablespoons flour
 ¼ teaspoon salt
 1½ teaspoons baking powder
 ½ to 1 cup chopped apples
 ½ cup nuts
 1 teaspoon vanilla
 Beat egg and sugar well. Mix flour, salt and baking powder. Add to sugar mixture. Add chopped apples, nuts and vanilla.

Bake in buttered pie tin at 350 degrees F. for 35 minutes. (May fold top in every 10 minutes.)

 Harold Brayman of Greenville, Mich. puts apples in cakes to add moisture, but ice cream on this apple crisp is his all-time favorite dessert.

APPLE CRISP
 4 cups baking apples (about 6 medium)
 ¾ cup packed brown sugar
 ½ cup flour
 ½ cup rolled oats
 ¾ teaspoon cinnamon
 ¼ teaspoon nutmeg

Apples play role in history

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The apple. Surely no other fruit is as firmly rooted in our history and our hearts.

Since time began, mythology, poetry and literature have been filled with references to apples as symbols of beauty, goodness and love.

In recognition of October as National Apple Month, here are a look at the roles the apple has played in history and folklore, art and language.

The apple tempted Eve in the Garden of Eden, prompted Sir Isaac Newton to discover the law of gravity, immortalized the archery talents of William Tell and, according to Greek mythology, indirectly caused the Trojan War.

Today we call something we prize "the apple of our eye," and the great city of New York "the Big Apple." As the founders of one well-known computer company can attest, the name "Apple" conveys a positive image (...Would you buy a "Lemon" computer?) and may help tip the scales toward success.

Apples are entwined with American history. The first apple crop was picked from trees planted by Pilgrims in the Massachusetts Bay Colony. Two of Peel and slice apples. Put sliced apples in greased 8-inch square pan. Blend flour, oats, cinnamon, nutmeg and butter together until crumbly. Spread over apples. Bake 35 minutes at 350°F until topping is golden brown. Put a great big blob of ice cream on top.

 Some variations on the apple pie were offered by Alton Wendzel and his wife, Millie, who grow apples in Benton Harbor, Mich.

APPLE PIE WENZEL
 6 or 7 Jonathan apples
 1 cup sugar
 2 tablespoons all-purpose flour
 1 teaspoon cinnamon
 Dash of nutmeg
 Dash of salt
 1 tablespoon butter
 Pastry for 2-crust pie
 Pare apples and slice thin. Combine sugar, flour, spices and salt; mix with apples. Fill pastry-lined 9-inch pie plate and dot with butter. Adjust top crust; sprinkle with sugar. Bake in 400°F oven for 50 minutes or until juices bubble through the top.

 Steve and Mary Putnam have been baking this pie for years, using a blend of Cortlands and Northern Spys when they lived in upstate New York, and changing to York and other apple varieties now that they live in Winchester, Va.

PUTNAM APPLE PIE
Crust:
 3½ cups all-purpose flour
 4 tablespoons sugar
 1 teaspoon salt
 1½ cups margarine
 ½ cup cold water
 Combine flour, sugar and salt. Cut in margarine. Add water. Toss until evenly moistened throughout. Divide and gather into two approximately equal balls. Transfer one ball to lightly floured board. Roll into circle for bottom crust and place in 9-inch pie plate. Repeat rolling process with second ball for top crust.

our great statesmen, Presidents George Washington and Thomas Jefferson, were apple growers.

Apples were staples in colonial kitchens, where they were cored, peeled and dried during harvest time for winter and spring storage. "Hard cider" (fermented apple cider) was the only fruit beverage in plentiful supply, and it was enjoyed year-round by the whole family, with meals and between meals.

One of our most beloved legends is the story of "Johnny Appleseed," the nickname of John Chapman, a real person who spent nearly 50 years roaming the frontiers of Ohio, Indiana and Illinois in the early 1800s, planting and caring for apple trees, and teaching apple culture to local farmers. There are still a few old apple trees alive today which are claimed to have been taken from nurseries planted by "Johnny Appleseed."

Since those days, nearly two centuries of American children have been raised on apples. As babies, our first fruit and beverage probably were applesauce and apple juice. We've brought apples to our teachers, swung and climbed on apple trees, stolen our first kisses under their shady boughs.

1 cup sugar
 1 egg
 2 teaspoons vanilla
 1 and 1-3rd cups sour cream
 1 tablespoon cinnamon
 Preheat oven to 450°F. Peel, core and slice apples. Combine with flour, sugar, egg, vanilla, sour cream and cinnamon. Mix well and spoon into lower crust. Cover with top crust. Bake 10 minutes, reduce oven temperature to 300°F and continue baking for about 40 minutes.

 Bob and Debbie Lievens of Londonderry, N.H., shared this recipe which they often serve to dinner guests. Debbie admits it's a time-consuming recipe, but says the rewards are great: "The finished product looks like an elegant dessert served at a fine restaurant."

RICH APPLE TORTE
 Butter or margarine, softened
 1½ cups blanched almonds
 3 eggs
 1 cup sugar
 2 tablespoons flour
 One 3½-ounce package instant vanilla pudding and pie filling
 2 cups milk
 1 teaspoon vanilla
 3 red apples (Baldwin, Rome, etc.)
 1-3rd cup red currant j. lly
 2 tablespoons lemon juice
 Grease well 9-inch layer cake pan. Line with wax paper, then butter paper. Cream ½ cup margarine until light and fluffy; set aside. Grind almonds until fine; set aside. Beat eggs and sugar until foamy. Alternate adding creamed margarine and ground almonds to eggs and sugar, mixing well after each addition. Stir in flour until well mixed. Pour into pan and bake in preheated oven 30-35 minutes or until cake tests done. Cool on rack. Turn out on serving plate and remove paper; cool.

In mixing bowl, combine pudding mix, milk and vanilla. Beat until smooth, then chill until thick enough to spread on cake. Refrigerate while preparing apples. Core apples and cut into nine ½-inch slices. Melt 2 tablespoons margarine in large non-stick skillet. Add apples and saute on both sides until apples are golden and soft, but still retain their shape. Cool slightly. Spread custard over cake. Arrange apples, overlapping slices, on top of custard. Combine jelly and lemon juice in small saucepan; melt over low heat, stirring. Cool, then spoon over apple slices. Serve in wedges.

 Serves 8-10.

 Apples can add spice to many main dishes. This is a family recipe of Kurt and Ruth Eckert, Bellesville, Ill.

PORK CHOPS WITH APPLES
 1 tablespoon minced onions
 1 tablespoon shortening
 1 cup dried bread crumbs
 A few springs of parsley, chopped
 ¼ teaspoon savory seasonings
 Salt and pepper, to taste
 6 lean pork chops
 3 tart red apples (Jonathan)
 ¼ teaspoon

Saute onion and parsley in shortening. Add bread crumbs and seasoning. Stir until well blended. Sprinkle chops with salt and pepper, rub lightly with flour and brown in skillet.
 Lay chops on a rack in baking dish with cover. Cover each chop with bread crumb mixture and then halve an apple (cored, but not peeled, with cut side down). Cover and bake in moderate oven, about 350°F, for 30 minutes.

 Here's a unique mulled cider which Larry (Kurt and Ruth's son) and Judy Eckert of Bellesville, Ill., often serve to friends.

PARTY PERK MULLED CIDER
 1 gallon cider
 Two 1-inch cinnamon sticks
 5 whole allspice
 16 whole cloves
 1 whole nutmeg
 1 cup light brown sugar
 Pour cider into large percolator. Place spices and brown sugar into percolator basket. Perk as you would coffee. Serve directly from percolator. (Spices may be saved for use another time.)

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

Sister says parents are snubbing stepchild

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I are expecting our first child. My only sibling, an older sister, has no children of her own but she's the stepmother to her husband's 5-year-old son, who lives with them. My parents are well-off and are setting up a trust fund for my soon-to-be-born child. My sister is outraged by the unfairness of this since they have not done this for "her" child. He has always been remembered by my parents on birthdays and Christmases, and he calls them "Grandpop" and "Grandma," but he knows that they are not his real grandparents. Both sets of his real grandparents are living, and he frequently visits them as well as his real mother, who is remarried.

My sister refuses to see the difference in our situations, and insists that what is done for my child should be done for hers. My parents are upset by her anger, but have no intention of setting up a trust fund for the boy. I agree with my parents, but find myself losing the affection of my sister, which I especially value at this time. Your views on this, please?

TIRED OF ARGUING

DEAR TIRED: What your parents choose to do with their money is their business. Your sister surely knows this, and she should not be hassling you (or them) about it.

I can, however, understand her hurt and anger because her parents are treating her son like a second-class citizen. In my view, a child is a child — birth, adopted, step or whatever. But then your parents didn't ask me.

DEAR ABBY: My husband's cousin (I'll call her Margaret) suffers from Alzheimer's disease. Whenever we go there for a visit, we greet everyone with hugs and kisses — including Margaret. Abby, what makes me uncomfortable is that even though Margaret has no idea who we are, she is practically forced to return the hugs and kisses. The poor soul looks so bewildered, my heart aches for her.

I think it's cruel to put her on the spot this way. What do you think? Maybe some of your readers who have had to deal with this problem can write in with helpful advice.

AWKWARD EMBRACE

DEAR AWKWARD: Treat a person with Alzheimer's disease just as you would treat anyone else. Greet Margaret in a warm and friendly manner and wait for her reaction. If she is accepting and responsive, give her a hug. If she views you as a stranger, don't initiate inappropriate affection.

DEAR ABBY: I have been going to the same hairdresser for well over two years. I tip her well, and up until recently I have been quite satisfied with her work, but a few months ago I began to notice that the operator next to her cuts and styles hair the way I would love to have mine done. I've hinted to my operator to do mine that way, but she can't seem to get the hang of it.

Abby, how can I switch operators without offending my girl? It's a small shop, conveniently located, but I am just not happy with my operator anymore. I admit I'm too embarrassed to tell her I'd like to try the other one. I like my operator personally, and don't want bad feelings.

NEITHER HAIR NOR THERE

DEAR NEITHER: I understand your dilemma, but it makes no sense to spend money for a hairdo you're not happy with. Tell your operator that you want to try the other girl "for a change" — then follow through. The alternative is to accept less than satisfactory work and seethe silently. The choice is yours.

Participants lined up to date for the Headstart sessions, scheduled for 10 a.m. and 7 p.m. on Thursday, Nov. 12, are Scotty's Wine and Cheese Shoppe, Baskets of Love, Harvie's, Cloyd's Stitchery Shop and Gay's Cake and Candy Decors.

The two fall programs are presented annually by Pampa Friends of the Library as a public service to those wanting decorating, cooking and gifts tips for the holiday season.

There will be no admission charge for any of the sessions.

Arts festival opens Saturday

Marking its 21st annual two-day run in Pampa, the Top o' Texas Fine Arts and Crafts Festival opens at 10 a.m. Saturday in M.K. Brown Auditorium.

More than 35 exhibitors from four states will display their works until 6 p.m. Saturday and again from noon to 5 p.m. Sunday. Admission is free.

A tremendous diversity in terms of both works and price will accent the festival, organizers say.

Noted painters and sculptors creating fine art in traditional media will display alongside some most unusual artisans. Among these are a clothes designer whose creations are hand dyed, spun and woven, and a poet whose works are hand illuminated.

Other craftsmen in the festival have produced ceramics, pottery, stained glass, woodwork, dolls and weavings. In the decorative arts, three jewelry designers bring to the show items varying from the most costly of precious stones to ones made with sea shells.

Workers in wood have hand-made items ranging from belt buckles to furniture.

Collectors of enameling, calligraphy, fabric work and ornaments can also find many of these items at the festival.

"All in all, something for every pocketbook and most every taste can be seen in these two days," said Karon (Mrs. Jim) Bonnell, who is serving her third year as chairman of the festival for the event's sponsor, the Pampa Fine Arts Association.

Besides the feast for the eyes, there's food for the palate. PFAA has a Gourmet Booth each year at which festival-goers may sit down and have refreshments and also purchase take-home items prepared in the kitchens of some of Pampa's outstanding cooks.

These homemade pies, cookies, cakes and home-canned jams, jellies and soups have been a yearly sell-out.

In conjunction with the Gourmet Booth, St. Matthew's Episcopal Church offers a touch of New Orleans with fresh coffee and French doughnuts.

Betty (Mrs. James T.) Brown and Jimmie Kay (Mrs. T.W.) Williams are serving as co-chairmen of the Gourmet Booth.

Nancy Brown, noted watercolor painter from Amarillo, is the festival's featured artist. She graduated from West Texas State University at Canyon with a degree in fine arts.

Brown has studied under Diane Maxi, Frank Webb and Robert E. Wood, in addition to her university training.

PFAA has purchased Brown's painting entitled A Poet's Garden for $500. It will be given as the door prize at the festival. Donation tickets for the prize may be had for a $1 contribution from any member of the PFAA board or may be obtained at the door this weekend.

A preview of the festival, open only to members of the Pampa Fine Arts Association, is set for 9 a.m. Saturday.

Renewals or new memberships in the association may be purchased at the door for as little as $10 for an individual or $15 for a family.

The Point is Pets

by Ron Hendrick, D.V.M.

Q: My dog is in heat. Male dogs are constantly in my yard! How long will this last? Should I have her "spayed" and if so, when?

A: The heat period is about 3 weeks long. It occurs every 6 months for most dogs. We prefer to spay the dog when she is NOT in heat. I'd suggest you schedule her surgery for 2 or 3 weeks in the future.

There are other, more important reasons for having your dog spayed. Most unspayed female dogs over the age of 5 develop breast cancer and/or infection of the uterus called pyometra. Don't forget about the many unwanted puppies (and kittens) that become strays, carry diseases and usually end up in the pound, only to be fed for a few days and then put to sleep at taxpayers' expense. Pet population control is increasingly important. If you are not planning on selling pure-bred puppies, by all means, call your veterinarian for an appointment for her surgery. You and your dog will feel better for it!

Speaking of spays... This is my 14th year in Pampa, and each year, in October, we have an anniversary "health clinic special". This year, Oct. 1-15, we will offer spays and castrations for dogs and cats at half-price, by appointment. In addition, each week during the month, we'll have a different health-related special, from vaccinations at 30% off to free flea collars with each bath and dip. This is my 14th year in Pampa, and I want to thank the pet-owning public for making Veterinary practice for me the interesting and enjoyable profession that it is. Call 665-1873 to take advantage of this once-a-year health care clinic.

Shockers host Canyon junior varsity at 7 pm tomorrow. The Pride of Pampa Band will entertain at halftime its UIL contest show.

Work appears to be nearly completed on the PHS tennis courts. Matches with Hereford last Saturday had to be spread across town, including indoors at the Pampa Youth and Community Center.

Strange how the highly paid professional football players have refused to play while the Chicago high school players have been denied the chance to perform for free by striking teachers. I wonder how many of those talented athletes will now lose college scholarships because of inability to totally develop their athletic talent or meet college entrance academic requirements. Now, who really does care about the kids?

Amarillo attorney Ben Sturgeon, a former Harvester griddler, is co-chairman of Parents for Athletic and Curriculum Education (PACE), an organization of parents studying all aspects of the Amarillo ISD move into a Middle School system. Sturgeon, a former Pampa ISD board member, also headed a penetrating study of the then, and still, stumbling local athletic program.

In a great move, the American Association and International League, both Class AAA minor league ball leagues, have agreed to inter-league play next season.

California State U., Fullerton, estimates it's football team will log 18,238 air miles while playing its 1987 schedules across all five US time zones, from the University of Florida to the University of Hawaii.

Six of the Notre Dame football players already have their undergraduate degrees and are attending graduate school while playing as 'fifth year seniors' in terms of eligibility.

Former West Texas State basketball coach Ron Ekker just signed a new two-year contract as coach of the LaCrosse, Wis. Catbirds of the Continental Basketball League, one-step below the NBA. "It's the best job I've ever had in basketball," Ekker tells me, explaining the new pact also has a part-ownership option the second year. The Catbird franchise is the most valuable in the CBA, averaging 4,800 a game the past season, and "we expect to go over 5,000 this year" says Ekker. "Our biggest fear now is an NBA strike, like the NFL, because they would just come in and wipe out our whole teams as replacements."

If you watched the NFL games last Sunday you saw for the main part the type football Dory Funk, Sr. was trying to bring to the Panhandle 20 years ago when he endeavored to obtain a stadium in which to play games, a request denied by Amarillo and WTSU officials. Now, an Oklahoma sports promoter, with business interests in Amarillo, is strongly considering Amarillo as the site of a CBA team.

Why schools cheat: Teams playing in this year's Gator Bowl on New Year's Eve will each receive $1 million dollars.

U-Pacific Coach Bob Cope: "In my five years here (17-33) we have broken every passing record and every rushing record, so that shows you that defense and the kicking game win football games."

On this day in baseball history, 1935, Goose Goslin singled in the winning run as the Tigers beat the Cubs 4-3 to win the World Series in six games. A kind principal had let me, at age 11, slip out of class and go across the street and listen to the game at the newspaper office. I went back to class in tears.

Switzer dons battle fatigues amidst charges

By OWEN CANFIELD
AP Sports Writer

NORMAN, Okla. (AP) — Oklahoma Coach Barry Switzer arrived at his weekly media luncheon wearing khaki-colored pants and a beige shirt.

"It's obvious how I'm dressed today. These are my combat fatigues," he told writers and broadcasters Tuesday.

Switzer joked as he began his luncheon with comments about this week's game against Texas. However, he turned much more serious as the game took a back seat to allegations that former players sold their complimentary tickets for huge profits and received breaks on automobile loans.

In an emotional defense of his program, Switzer called the copyright story printed in Tuesday's Dallas Morning News a "fishing expedition" and said nothing he read really surprised him.

"I remember what's been written in the past. I really wasn't that concerned about what they were going to write," he said. "I didn't think there was anything out there that I had to be concerned about."

Switzer later amended his remark, saying he would be concerned about "anything that's written about our athletic personnel that concerns any possible violation."

"The NCAA has made an in-depth look and I'm sure they will continue to and I'm sure they will follow up on this as they always do in regard to possible infractions," Switzer said, "and our institution will do the same."

Cards win Game One

By PAUL LeBAR
AP Sports Writer

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Second baseman Tommy Herr, a veteran of three National League playoffs in the last six seasons, says the St. Louis Cardinals are feeling a bit slighted.

"We realized that from all the commentary and talk that we were not the ones being seen as favorites," Herr said after St. Louis' 5-3 victory Tuesday night over the San Francisco Giants.

"I think they're selling us short a little bit," Herr said. "We've got a pretty good ballclub."

At least the Cardinals' resourcefulness was demonstrated by Greg Mathews, who was nominated to pitch only hours before gametime because of Danny Cox's stiff neck.

"He pitched a super game. You can't pitch any better than he did tonight," St. Louis pitching coach Mike Roarke said of Mathews, a left-hander who gave up just four hits in 7 1/3 innings as the Cardinals took a 1-0 lead in the best-of-seven series.

Mathews, who during the regular season had an 0-2 record against San Francisco, struck out seven Giants and delivered the Cardinals' key hit.

"He threw me a slow slider, and I flared at it," Mathews said of Rick Reuschel, off whom he hit a two-run single to cap a decisive three-run sixth inning.

Mathews surrendered Jeffrey Leonard's prodigious home run to start San Francisco's fourth and give the Giants a 2-1 lead, but he was in control for the remainder of his stay.

Ozzie Smith's leadoff triple and Willie McGee's two-out single gave the Cardinals a 2-2 tie in their half of the fourth. The stalemate lasted until Dan Driessen started St. Louis' one-out outburst with a single off Reuschel in the sixth. "If you get ahead of (Reuschel), then he has to bring the ball up and throw a strike," said McGee, who singled on the infield following Driessen's hit.

In addition to McGee's single, a hard shot San Francisco shortstop Jose Uribe flagged down by gliding to his right, the Cardinals benefited from an error.

Driessen broke too soon for third base on McGee's hit, thinking the ball would get through the infield. Driessen, although he was caught off second, advanced to third when Uribe bounced a hurried throw to second baseman Robby Thompson.

"Robby had an out at third (after retrieving the ball) but didn't see it," Giants Manager Roger Craig said of the pivotal play.

Terry Pendleton singled Driessen home, with McGee stopping at second to break the 2-2 tie. After Curt Ford's single loaded the bases, Reuschel retired Tony Pena on a pop foul but failed against Mathews.

"He hit a curveball pretty good. He didn't mash it, but he found an open spot," St. Louis Manager Whitey Herzog said of Mathews' soft liner up the middle.

After Mathews' hit made the Cardinals' advantage 5-2, San Francisco made its final bid in the eighth when Thompson drew Mathews' lone walk.

Bullpen ace Todd Worrell took over for St. Louis, inducing Kevin Mitchell to fly out before Leonard fisted a single to right field. Candy Maldonado followed with a ground-rule double to score Thompson and Chili Davis walked, but Ken Cardinal's Ozzie Smith, in his traditional pregame theatrics.

Dayley spelled Worrell and got Will Clark to fly out to end the inning.

Mathews, who learned only 3 1/2 hours before the game that he would replace the ailing Cox, delivered an assortment of pitches that baffled the Giants.

Left-handers, John Tudor, 10-2, of St. Louis and Dave Dravecky, 10-12, of the Giants were today's scheduled pitchers.

AL's best square off tonight in Metrodome

By MIKE NADEL
AP Sports Writer

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — It's Home Sweet Dome for the Minnesota Twins.

This season the Twins had baseball's best record at home and that's where the best-of-seven AL playoffs get under way tonight.

The Detroit Tigers will send Doyle Alexander, 9-0 since being acquired from Atlanta on Aug. 12, against Frank Viola, 17-10, in the opening game at the Metrodome. The Twins were 56-25 at home this year.

"If we're going to have a legitimate shot, we've got to do well here," Viola said. "The only problem is they do well here, too."

The AL West champions had the worst road record of any division or pennant winner in history, 29-52. The AL East champion Tigers, meanwhile, were tied with Toronto for the best road record in the league, 44-37, and they were 4-2 this season at Minnesota.

"Of course that makes us feel very good here," Tigers shortstop Alan Trammell said. "We should feel confident, but we're not overconfident, obviously."

Trammell said fielding high popups in the Metrodome can be an adventure because of what he feels is inferior lighting.

Despite the presence of the unbeaten Alexander, Viola gives the Twins a chance because he takes some of the left-handed power out of Detroit's lineup.

"It helps being a left-hander against Detroit," he said of the platoon lineup. "I'd definitely rather face Mike Heath rather than Matt Nokes."

The first two games will be here tonight and Thursday night. The teams will take Friday off, and Games 3, 4 and 5 are set for Saturday, Sunday and Monday at Tiger Stadium. The teams would return to Minnesota for the final two games, if necessary.

The Twins won the West with an 85-77 record. Detroit won the more competitive East with the best record in baseball, 98-64.

"Some people are predicting a sweep," Twins center fielder Kirby Puckett said. "But I think we're going to do OK."

Tigers designated hitter Bill Madlock said he isn't making any such predictions.

"No predictions," he said, "because the Twins have a great club with some very good ball-players."

The Twins clinched the division on Sept. 28, then lost their last five games of the season. The Tigers didn't clinch until the final day of the season, winning their last four, including a season-ending, three-game sweep of second-place Toronto.

Players, owners continue talks

WASHINGTON (AP) — Another week of substitute players and missed paychecks by striking NFL regulars was in the offing barring agreement at the negotiating table or a major breakthrough in union solidarity.

And neither seemed likely as union head Gene Upshaw and management negotiator Jack Donlan prepared for another meeting today to try to end the 15-day walkout.

"Resolution of the outstanding issues will take time," Donlan said in a statement issued from his New York office following a five-hour meeting

Tuesday with Upshaw at an undisclosed location near the nation's capital.

Free agency, once the major issue of the strike, was not discussed, according to the statement from the NFL Management Council.

Neither Upshaw nor the NFL Players Association had any comment.

offered illegal inducements.

"I'm not naive enough to think there's not some alumni out there or some alumnus somewhere that likes a kid from his town and that will do something for that athlete. That might happen," Switzer said.

"I think every program should be concerned about that type of interest. But how do we police everyone out there? I don't know."

He emphatically declared that neither he nor any member of his staff has ever offered illegal inducements to recruits, although he said recruits have asked him about receiving gifts.

"I've had 'em do that and I love to stick it right back in their (...)," he said.

"I've pointed to that picture on the wall (of Billy Sims) and said 'Do you know who that guy is?'"

And they always say they recognize him because his Heisman Trophy sits right over there on my desk.

"Oklahoma does not buy players. I've said that for years and I don't give a damn what any of you are thinking here," Switzer said. "We're too great a program and too good a program. I'm not going to jeopardize me and my staff and my position here and go out and be that damn dumb as to offer someone something to come to this program."

"I'm not saying we don't have problems," he said. "We will deal with those problems and we'll look at them."

Cockrell wins best cowgirl

Amy Cockrell of Pampa won all-around cowgirl honors at the Merritt Tri-State Rodeo last weekend in Sayre.

Cockrell won breakaway roping (3.171) and poles (20.876) and placed fifth in barrels with a 17.488.

Tammy Greene was seventh in breakaway roping with a 37.883 and Tamara Johnson was third in barrels with a 17.423. Sona Alexander was fifth in poles (22.720) and Cydney Morriss was third in goat tying (11.119).

Harvesters win again

The Pampa Lady Harvester volleyball team improved its district leading record to 7-0 after defeating Lubbock Estacado Tuesday night 15-7, 15-12.

Coach Mike Lopez said the girls were able to intimidate the Estacado spikers in the first game, thereby handily winning the contest.

In the second game, the girls laid back slightly and Estacado was able to make the game a bit more interesting.

In junior varsity action, Estacado defeated Pampa 15-12, 15-9.

Freshman spikers victorious

Pampa won the consolation trophy in a freshmen volleyball tournament last weekend at Dumas.

Pampa lost the tournament opener to Dumas 15-11, 15-12, but bounced back to defeat Perryton 15-2, 15-5. They won the consolation title with a 15-6, 12-15, 15-5 win over Borger.

Rocky Striplin and Shannon Organ scored several service points for Pampa.

Monday night, the Pampa ninth-graders played Borger again and won 8-15, 15-12, 15-7.

Jennifer Bailey played an outstanding, all-around game for Pampa.

Young Tibetans say their prayers on a Lhasa street.

Hundreds of police in Lhasa to prevent anniversary protests

LHASA, Tibet (AP) — Hundreds of Chinese police patrolled Lhasa to prevent pro-independence demonstrations today, the 37th anniversary of China's occupation of Tibet.

Tibetans and Chinese questioned on the street said they thought the anniversary would be quiet, despite rumors of planned protests, because of fears police would fire on any demonstrators.

Western witnesses said police shot protesters last week during an independence protest led by Buddhist monks in Lhasa. At least eight Tibetans and six Chinese police officers were killed in the demonstration Thursday, during which angry protesters burned a police station and several vehicles.

A source in the local Public Security Bureau, speaking on condition of anonymity, said China had sent 1,000 armed police in recent days to Lhasa, capital of the remote Himalayan region of 2 million people. Chinese officials have said any protests will be dealt with firmly.

China has claimed sovereignty over Tibet since the 13th century, but for hundreds of years exercised little control. That changed on Oct. 7, 1950, when 84,000 Chinese communist troops surged across the Yangtze River into Tibet.

Beijing has blamed the Dalai Lama, Tibet's former civil and religious leader, for inciting last week's demonstrations. The Dalai Lama fled Tibet in 1959 after a failed uprising, and now lives in India.

On Tuesday, about 60 people chanting the Dalai Lama's name marched to a government office in Lhasa. Chinese security forces arrested them and drove them away in trucks.

There was no word on the whereabouts of the detained marchers, believed to be Buddhist monks wearing street clothes. About 2,000 bystanders made no attempt to help them.

Four other monks were arrested Tuesday afternoon in the Jokhang Temple square, the site of last Thursday's protest and a smaller demonstration on Sept. 27.

An American, Derek Olson of Oak Park, Ill., said bystanders watching Tuesday's march to the Tibetan regional government office started to scatter twice, apparently in response to moves by security forces.

Amber Kvanli, like Olson a student from St. Olaf College in Minnesota, watched the arrest of the four other monks near Jokhang Temple. She said Tibetans ran in panic from the busy market next to the temple when about 30 armed police marched up to the monks sitting on the ground chanting.

Monks at the Sera and Drepung monasteries reported previously that police came and arrested 47 members after Thursday's demonstration. Other participants in the protest were also missing.

In Washington, the Senate voted 98-0 Tuesday to link the future provision of defense articles or services to China to a presidential certification that the Chinese government is "acting in good faith and in a timely manner to resolve human rights issues in Tibet."

The resolution also calls on President Reagan to meet with the Dalai Lama and "call attention to the rights of the Tibetan people."

During the first decades of communist rule, Chinese authorities shut down Tibet's monasteries and banned worship. Since the end of the extreme leftist Cultural Revolution in 1976, some monasteries have reopened and the right to worship has been restored, but resentment against the Chinese lingers.

Wooden launch overturns at sea, killing at least 50

SANTO DOMINGO, Dominican Republic (AP) — A wooden boat filled with refugees capsized in shark-infested waters off the Dominican Republic, killing at least 50 and leaving scores missing, officials said.

Rescue workers picked up 32 survivors, many suffering from sun exposure and injuries, and took them to two hospitals.

Eugenio Cabral, head of this Caribbean nation's civil defense, estimated that between 100 and 150 Dominicans were on the launch when it overturned Tuesday morning in rough seas off the northern coast of the Dominican Republic. The craft had been headed for Puerto Rico, where the passengers were apparently hoped to find jobs.

Cabral said in a telephone interview that several small fishing boats, a light plane and a Dominican navy launch and air force helicopter were being used in the rescue effort, which was continuing today.

He said that based on his observations from a plane flying over the area where the ship sank in the Atlantic Ocean, "there are many dead, more than 50."

"I saw sharks eating the bodies of the people," said Cabral.

The craft, thought to have been powered by an outboard motor, was headed toward Puerto Rico, a U.S. commonwealth and the closest land area from the eastern point of the Dominican Republic.

Authorities said the craft left a beach area near the town of Nagua, on the northeast coast of the Dominican Republic, about 4 a.m. Tuesday and that the vessel overturned two to four hours later, about five miles offshore.

Police said they detained for questioning 152 people who were waiting on the Nagua beach to take a launch to Puerto Rico. Police said they wanted to learn who agreed to transport the people on the ship that sank Tuesday. Those detained were expected to be released today or Thursday.

Beaches on the northeast coast of the Dominican Republic often serve as jumping-off points for Dominicans aiming for jobs and a better life in Puerto Rico — and eventually the U.S. mainland.

The neighboring islands are separated by the 100-mile wide Mona Passage, which runs between the Caribbean Sea and the Atlantic Ocean.

No one knows how many Dominicans have drowned crossing the shark-infested passage that separates Puerto Rico and the island of Hispaniola, which is shared by the Dominican Republic and Haiti.

More than a dozen people died in an attempt in December.

James H. Walker, regional director of the Immigration and Naturalization Service in San Juan, estimated last year that an average of 1,000 Dominicans enter Puerto Rico each month. The number is slightly higher during the winter when the Mona Passage is relatively calm.

Hasenfus sues for capture during Contra aid operation

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Richard Second and other Iran-Contra affair figures are defendants in a $35 million lawsuit filed by Eugene Hasenfus a year and a day after he was shot down over Nicaragua while dropping weapons to the Contras.

Hasenfus alleges in the Superior Court lawsuit filed Tuesday he was deceived by Corporate Air Services of Miami, which hired him to throw supplies out of the plane as it flew over Nicaragua.

Hasenfus said Corporate Air officials told him when he was hired that their operation was "run right out of the back door of the White House."

Hasenfus was captured Oct. 6, 1986, by Nicaraguan soldiers, a day after the C-123 transport plane in which he was flying was shot down over southern Nicaragua. He was held for three months.

In the lawsuit, he said his employers lied to him, provided him with improper survival equipment, failed to acknowledge he worked for them after he was captured and failed to reimburse him for expenses incurred in the operation.

The lawsuit charges he was told Corporate Air was similar to a CIA-backed company, Air America, that Hasenfus had previously worked for. Hasenfus accused Corporate Air of using out-of-date airplanes and failing to provide him with a parachute, compass or radio. He said he used his own parachute to bail out of the plane when it was shot down, but added that lack of a compass or radio led to his capture by Sandinista troops.

Two Americans and a Nicaraguan were killed in the crash. Corporate Air officials could not immediately be reached for comment. A call to the company's office went unanswered Tuesday night.

Other defendants are Southern Air Transport, which Hasenfus claims paid some of his expenses and furnished at least one plane for the operation, and Stanford Technology Trading.

Individuals named in the suit were Second, a retired Air Force major general; Albert Hakim; Robert Dutton; and William Langton, who Hasenfus states are officers of Stanford Technology Trading. Many of the defendants testified in Washington during the Iran-Contra hearings that probed arms sales to Iran and the diversion of funds to rebels fighting against the leftist Nicaraguan government.

Container ship said attacked by Iran; Iraq claims hits ship

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — Iranian commandos in speedboats attacked a Saudi Arabian tanker near the entrance to the Persian Gulf today, and Iraq said it raided a "large naval target" in the waterway, shipping executives reported.

In another development, the Japanese government decided today to provide $10 million to install a navigation system to help protect shipping in the Persian Gulf, a Foreign Ministry official said in Tokyo.

In Washington, the U.S. Congress passed legislation banning Iranian imports.

The marine shipping executives, speaking on condition they were not identified, said the 21,032-ton Raad Al-Bakry VIII was hit as it headed toward the narrow Strait of Hormuz passage, 20 miles off the coast of Sharjah, in the United Arab Emirates.

The incident occurred at 5 a.m. — about the time Sharjah residents reported hearing a series of loud explosions and seeing flashes of light in the gulf.

The cause of the explosions was not known. One shipping company radio monitor said they were caused by an Iranian gunboat attack on a "small container vessel." He said the unidentified ship's generator exploded, but that there was no report of injuries.

Other sources, also speaking on condition of anonymity, said Iran may have been launching raids on Iraqi targets, in retaliation for Iraqi bombing runs Monday that damaged five tankers at an Iranian terminal.

The Saudi vessel attacked today is listed by Lloyd's Register of Ships as an oil chemical tanker. However, an official at its owner's office in Jiddah said the ship was carrying fuel oil bound for that Red Sea port.

The official, speaking on condition of anonymity, confirmed the attack but declined to give other details.

A war communique carried by the official Iraqi

News Agency said Iraqi jet fighters raided a "big naval target" at 6:30 p.m. Tuesday. The term generally describes a large tanker or cargo vessel. The agency did not name the vessel and there was no immediate confirmation of the attack.

About 380 commercial vessels have been attacked by Iran and Iraq since their war began in December 1980.

A Japanese Foreign Ministry official said today that his government would provide funds to set up "high-accuracy radio aids" in gulf nations. The equipment would be used to transmit information on mine-sweeping operations and other data vital to ships plying the gulf, the official said, speaking on condition of anonymity.

The Japanese plan follows talks last month between Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone and President Reagan on possible Japanese contributions to U.S. efforts to defend navigation in the gulf.

Japan has come under criticism from some U.S. legislators for not assisting U.S. activities in the gulf, through which 55 percent of Japan's oil imports pass.

The post-World War II Japanese Constitution bars the government from playing any military role in international conflicts.

The Reagan administration agreed last summer to reflag and provide Navy escorts for 11 Kuwaiti tankers. Iran began targeting Kuwaiti shipping a year ago, charging Kuwait aided Iraq. It also attacks other shipping in retaliation for Iraqi raids on its oil facilities and tankers.

The official Iraqi News Agency said the two Iranian missiles fired into Baghdad Monday damaged a school and destroyed homes, shops and businesses. It gave no number of casualties.

In Washington, defense sources said the U.S. Coast Guard was sending a "handful" of patrol cutters, small airplanes and helicopters to assist Navy forces in the gulf.

Aquino orders crackdown on radio stations

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — President Corason Aquino today ordered several radio stations closed for allegedly transmitting propaganda by right-wing rebel groups.

Presidential spokesman Teodoro Benigno said three or four stations would be closed but refused to identify them.

He said the order, effective immediately, was issued because the stations had been "openly defying the government of President Aquino by continuously transmitting the propaganda of right-wing rebel groups and other enemies of the state."

Benigno made the announcement after a 3½-hour Cabinet meeting held amid tight security. Sandbags were piled on the veranda of the main palace administrative building and at least one armored personnel carrier guarded a gate to the walled compound.

On Tuesday night, a private television station broadcast an interview with Col. Gregorio "Gringo" Honasan, who led an attempted coup Aug. 28. Another renegade officer in hiding met reporters Tuesday night.

Benigno said Chief of Staff Gen. Fidel V. Ramos briefed the Cabinet on plans by at least five opposition groups to stage a coup attempt this month aimed at allowing ousted President Ferdinand Marcos to return from exile in Hawaii.

Newspaper reports today said as many as 20 people were detained in Tuesday night raids on homes of Marcos supporters and suspected hideouts of groups loyal to renegade military officers, including Honasan.

Many areas are expected to have to adopt emissions inspections as part of their efforts to comply with federal clean air standards.

Despite Kozlowski's optimism, EPA Administrator Lee M. Thomas said it was "troubling that tampering rates remain at an unacceptably high level" and hinder the agency's efforts to bring urban areas into compliance.

Lead, used to boost gasoline octane ratings, disables the catalyst in the tailpipe converters installed on almost all cars since 1975 to remove other exhaust pollution.

Motorists sometimes use leaded gasoline because it is a few pennies a gallon cheaper, but EPA says studies show improper use costs owners 19 cents a gallon over the life of the car in shorter engine life and more frequent repairs.

EPA in 1985 ordered maximum lead concentrations lowered from 1.1 grams per gallon to 0.1 grams per gallon. The agency is considering a proposal to ban it from gasoline altogether.

One in five motorists trying to beat no-lead gas restrictions

WASHINGTON (AP) — Studies by the Environmental Protection Agency appear to show as many motorists as ever — one in five — are trying to beat the anti-pollution controls on their cars.

But an agency expert says the figures don't tell the whole story and he insists he's not discouraged.

"If you study the data you'll see the right trends," EPA fuels specialist Richard Kozlowski said after the agency released its annual tampering report Tuesday.

The agency's report covers 7,541 cars and light trucks that were checked in 15 metropolitan areas between April and September 1986. It showed:

—Twenty percent of the cars had had their equipment tampered with, the same proportion as last year. The year before that, it was 22 percent.

—Of cars requiring unleaded fuel to avoid disabling the pollution control catalyst, 9 percent had used leaded gasoline, compared with 10 percent last year. It was 14 percent the year before last.

—Fifty-four percent were classified "OK," against 52 percent last year and 46 percent the year before. The balance either needed repair or no determination could be made.

Kozlowski's first point is that the sample is not random. The agency sometimes checks cars in an area to help local officials set up an inspection program there. About 65 areas have those programs, either analyzing tailpipe gases or visually making sure the equipment is in place.

A visual inspection could determine whether someone had removed the catalytic converter, for instance, or whether the restriction in the fill pipe that keeps out the large nozzles of leaded gasoline pumps had been removed.

In areas where inspections are undertaken, results are often much better, Kozlowski said.

For instance, the highest misfueling rates were found in two of the four cities without an inspection program of any kind — 15 percent in Orlando, Fla., and Covington, Ky.

"There are going to be more inspection areas and this will reduce misfueling and tampering further," Kozlowski said.
