Tax overhaul to include battle on oil taxing

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Texas economy has slipped into a recession for the first time since the 1950s, and the House-approved tax overhaul is likely to make things worse by eliminating breaks for the oil and gas industry, Sen. Lloyd Bentsen says.

A Southern Methodist University study, released by the Texas Democrat, indicates the state's economy has shrunk for at least two consecutive three-month periods and that it is in an "official" recession.

"This is the first time Texas has recorded two consecutive quarters of negative growth since the 1950s," said Bernard L. Weinstein, director of the SMU Center for Enterprising and Edwin L. Cox School of Business.

He said Texas' gross product fell slightly during the first quarter of 1986 and is expected to continue declining during the second quarter at an annual rate of 1 percent.

Weinstein estimated that Texas' unemployment would reach double digits by mid-summer. He attributes the economic slide to falling oil prices.

Bentsen, who released the SMU study over the weekend, says the House-passed tax overhaul legislation will increase taxes on oil and gas producers.

"Now if you go to that conference and you add more taxes onto the oil and gas industry, as the House bill does, you just add to the problem and further the problem in Texas," said Bentsen.

The House and Senate are expected to meet in conference in mid-July to wrangle over differences in their two versions of tax overhaul legislation.

The Senate bill would leave preferential oil and gas taxes in place, which the Reagan administration supports. The House version would phase out or reduce them.

The tax overhaul legislation is aimed at reducing overall tax rates while eliminating many deductions.

The House bill would eliminate the "percentage depletion allowance" and reduce the amount of "intangible drilling costs" now deducted by oil and gas producers.

Intangible drilling costs include such items as labor and fuel. The depletion allowance allows qualifying producers to deduct 15 percent of a well's income each year.

Bentsen and his Republican Texas colleague, Phil Gramm, both say the tax preferences are good for the industry and thus good for national energy policy.

Bentsen favors an oil import fee in addition to retaining preferential tax treatment for domestic producers. Gramm supports tax incentives instead of an import fee.

Gramm says it would be "bad public policy" to increase taxes on the oil industry and is confident the Republican-controlled Senate will agree.

Some observers suggest the Senate version of the tax legislation will have more clout in conference, in part because of its bipartisan support. It passed the Senate 97-3.

Conferees on the tax bill have not been selected. Bentsen is a member of the Senate Finance Committee. Rep. J. J. Pickle, D-Austin, and Bill Archer, R-Houston, are on the House Ways and Means Committee.

Burger says Americans wouldn't stand for government restrictions of liberties

WASHINGTON (AP) — Chief Justice Warren Burger foresees a revolution in America if government tries to restrict the liberties Americans enjoy.

But as he nears retirement after 17 years on the Supreme Court, Burger says even he "tends to take for granted the liberties" secured by the Constitution.

"I don't stop to appreciate them enough," Burger said in a recent interview with The Associated Press.

And he thinks most Americans are guilty of the same shortcoming.

"It's hard to fully appreciate something that you've had for so long and take for granted," Burger said.

Nevertheless, he thinks Americans are protective of their freedoms and would forcibly resist any attempt to restrict them.

"If there were any effort, and it would have to be by governmental power to limit our liberties, you'd have another revolution in this country," Burger said.

But he doesn't see any real threat to liberty in America.

"This country wouldn't stand for it very long," he said.

The 78-year old Burger stunned the legal world by submitting his resignation to President Reagan on June 17. It designates July 10 as his date of departure.

He will devote his time thereafter to serving as chairman of the Commission on the Bicentennial of the United States Constitution.

With that in mind, Burger agreed to a rare interview to reflect on the state of freedom and liberty in America.

"The freedom and liberty we have in America is, beyond any question, the greatest of any country or any society in the world," he said.

He concedes there are restraints on that liberty, but he has difficulty thinking of any restraint that is not "legitimate and necessary."

What we have in America, said Burger, is "an ordered liberty."

"If you just had liberty without order — you've got anarchy. I see this country as having the best balance of any society that I've ever observed."

Burger said he recognizes that some people's freedoms are limited by their health or economic status. But Burger said a greater percentage of people enjoy freedom and opportunity in this country than in any country other.

"But we've got to make it better," he said.

Burger takes part this week in ceremonies marking the 100th birthday of the Statue of Liberty.

On Ellis Island in New York Harbor, the port of entry to millions of immigrants to the United States, Burger will administer the oath of citizenship to 200 newly naturalized Americans. Tens of thousands of others will take the oath from him via a satellite transmission to sites around the country.

"I'll enjoy the occasion, I assure you," said Burger, whose grandfather, Joseph Burger, entered the country through Ellis Island as a boy from Austria just before the Civil War.

Burger said he swells with pride when he sees the Statue of Liberty.

"Oh, I do. I do."

Reagan has fought many Contra aid rounds

By TIM AHERN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — After the House approved President Reagan's plan to provide $100 million worth of mostly military aid to Nicaraguan rebels, a jubilant Reagan declared, "It's only round one, but, oh, boy, what a round!"

Actually, though, it wasn't round one — it was round 15.

In the past four years, there had been 14 votes in the House or Senate dealing with U.S. support for the Contras fighting Nicaragua's leftist government.

And more votes are likely.

"The fight is over for now, but you can be sure we'll be back on it," Rep. Edward Markey, D-Mass., said Thursday, a day after the House approved, 221-209, Reagan's plan.

Although the issue won't go away, House members were tired of dealing with it, at least for now, said Rep. Tom Foley, D-Wash., the third-ranking Democrat in the House.

Why can't the fight be decided once and for all?

The answer is rooted partly in the nature of the U.S. government, particularly the constitutional division of authority between the White House and Capitol Hill.

While the executive branch makes foreign policy, it is the Congress, through the power of the purse, which pays for that policy.

Also, Congress, in the wake of the perceived executive branch foreign policy excesses of the Vietnam War, has tried to increase its influence over foreign policy.

That effort is reflected not only in Central America, but on issues like arms sales to Saudi Arabia and U.S. policy toward the Philippines.

Besides the constitutional split of authority, Congress is divided on how to deal with Nicaragua. Polls show voters don't like the Sandinistas, but also don't want the United States to get involved in a war there.

In the House, there are 252 Democrats and 182 Republicans, along with one vacancy. Of that total, about 150 members strongly support Reagan's policy and another 150 oppose it. It is the votes of the rest that must be captured.

In Reagan's first term, when the CIA directed the covert war against Nicaragua, the issue of U.S. policy toward the Sandinistas received less attention than some other issues.

But as the covert war became more overt, it attracted more attention. The first major fight was two years ago when Reagan openly sought $21 million in Contra aid. The Republican-controlled Senate approved, but the House, on May 24, 1984, voted 241-177 against the plan.

Later that year, the House voted 294-118 against a different aid program, while the Senate approved $28 million. In a conference committee called to resolve differences on a spending bill, the two sides split the difference, approving $14 million.

In spring 1985, the Senate approved $14 million more, but the House voted against, 248-180. Months later, Reagan sent up a $38 million aid package. That, too, ran into trouble, even though Congress approved $27 million in non-lethal aid.

Thus, in each of the past three years, Reagan has lost a round in the House but, after increasing the pressure on Congress through private appeals and speeches, he has ended up with at least some of the money he wanted.

OPEC talks end, no agreement on reversing oil price decline

BRIONI, Yugoslavia (AP) — OPEC today ended a six-day series of oil talks without reaching full agreement on how to reverse the decline of oil prices, sources said.

The ministers of the 13-member Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries planned to hold another conference in late July, said the sources, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Saudi Arabian Oil Minister Ahmed Zaki Yamani, appearing briefly at a balcony outside the hotel meeting room, said a final communique was being written. He declined to give details, but said there would be no more sessions in the current talks.

Iran's oil minister, Gholamreza Aghazadeh, told reporters before the end of the session that if OPEC failed to reach a unanimous agreement in Brioni, oil prices would stagnate, or fall further, during the summer.

Asked what Iran would do on its own to try to push prices higher, he said, "First of all we will pray."

Yamani said Sunday the crucial question of how any production pie would be divided among the members was unlikely to be resolved. Without a full agreement on a new production policy, OPEC is unlikely to reach its goal of raising prices.

"What we have to do is for every minister to go back home and consult with his government and meet again, probably in a month's time, to take a decision," Yamani said in a telephone interview with CBS's "Face the Nation."

A majority of OPEC members support a target price $17 to $19 a barrel — up from the current range of $11 to $14.

But any target price would be virtually meaningless unless OPEC could agree on production quotas.

Nine members have said they favor limiting OPEC's overall production to 17.4 million barrels a day this summer and 17.9 million a day for the final three months of the year. The 1986 average would be 17.6 million barrels daily.

That compares with OPEC's estimated current output of 19 million barrels a day — its highest since 1983.

Iran, Libya and Algeria have argued that production must be cut more drastically to restore prices to the $28-per-barrel level that prevailed last November.

Gabonese Oil Minister Etienne Guy Tchioba, who left the conference after Sunday's session, told reporters he suggested OPEC set a target price of $20 to $25 a barrel.

The split in opinions on pricing and production policy has virtually paralyzed OPEC. Its two previous meetings this year, in March and April, ended in confusion and disarray.

Algerian Oil Minister Belkacem Nabi left the conference on Saturday.

Aghazadeh, Iran's oil minister, said Sunday he would never accept the majority's position on prices and production.

Teachers happy with White apology

HOUSTON (AP) — Teachers here are happy with Gov. Mark White's apology for stress caused by the competency test, but they say they aren't ready to endorse him for re-election.

"The big question is whether teachers are going to accept his apology," said Gayle Fallon, president of the Houston Federation of Teachers. "He finally understands it is a very difficult thing to tell people their entire career hinges on a test."

In an address to Texas Democrats meeting in Austin Saturday, White paused after a series of rebukes of his Republican opponent, former Gov. Bill Clements, and said: "Let me say a few words to our teachers.

"We asked you to take a test, and, honestly, I didn't realize the intensity of the stress that it would cause," White said. "For that, I am genuinely sorry."

Fallon said she believes meetings the governor's wife has held with teachers around the state brought home to White the intensity of the educators' feelings about the test and other aspects of 1984's education reform bill.

Linda Gale White met with Houston area teachers Friday. She indicated that White would work to give teachers and administrators more local control over student disciplinary problems, a major complaint from teachers about the reform law.

Although the HFT has endorsed a candidate in past governor's races, Fallon said her 3,055 members are so split she does not believe the group will endorse this year.

But she told the Houston Post that the teachers' negative attitude toward White does not translate into support for former Gov. Bill Clements.

"They remember when Clements called them a 'pack of malcontents' and that he vetoed two raises," said Fallon, who supports White over Clements because if Clements wins, "it will be the last time teachers are listened to for a long time."

Clean up is concluding in Ward 2

By BOB HART
Pampa City Manager

The Clean Up Campaign is continuing.

We will complete Ward 2 this week and move into Ward 1 next week. As you are stacking items in the alley to be picked up, please set the items behind your fence rather than next to a dumpster.

One change you may have noticed with the work on the signal lights at Kentucky and Hobart is that there is an arrow for a protected left turn. However, instead of changing to red, it now goes to green, which means that cars may continue to turn left after yielding to oncoming traffic.

This same type of light control will be installed at most of the lights on Hobart Street and should enhance the traffic flow through those intersections.

Our drive-thru window for the utilities office is now open.

However, because the window office and the remainder of the water office is temporarily separated, we are only able to accept payments at the window when you have your utility bill with you.

If you need to transact other business with the water office, it is located on the main floor of City Hall in the old City Commission room. There are parking spaces reserved on the east side of the building for water customers only.

Our contractors have indicated that work will soon begin on the signal lights at the intersections of Foster and Hobart and of Alcock and Hobart. Both projects include street realignment work.

Also, contractors expect to begin work on Somerville Street in about four weeks.

With the recent rains, we are having problems with mosquitoes. In order to help, I would request that you keep your property mowed. City ordinances require that vegetation growth may not be more than 10 inches high. Additionally, property owners are responsible for mowing to the curb and the center line of the alley.

Flies are also a problem. Our Sanitation Department is scheduled to begin spraying for flies in and around dumpsters in approximately two weeks.

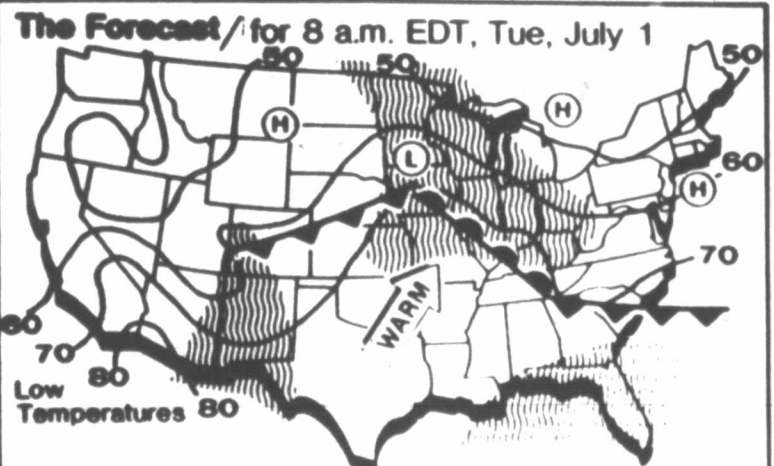

The staff at Lovett Memorial Library is completing the conversion to a computer system. The card catalog is now on the computer and the library cards will soon be computerized.

Because of this change, it is necessary that new applications be completed to reissue the cards. The additional information helps to protect the card from unauthorized use by other persons.

We appreciate your help and understanding in completing these applications.

TEXAS/REGIONAL

White promises help in state budget crisis

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Mark White interrupted a crucial political appeal to Texas Democrats to pledge he would take "whatever steps necessary" to solve the state's worsening money crisis.

"We are facing some bad problems in our state budget right now," White said Saturday in departing from his prepared speech for the state Democratic convention.

"I assure you I propose to take whatever steps are necessary to see us through," he added. "I also assure you the leadership of our Legislature is dedicated to that task."

White, after hearing the state faces a $2.3 billion gap between expected revenue and current spending plans, has said he will call a special session of the Legislature to deal with the crisis. No date has been set.

White directed his attack Saturday at his Republican opponent, former Gov. Bill Clements, who he unseated in 1978.

"Now that we are down to two, we've been hearing a lot about the 'new' Bill Clements," White said. "Well, they can make him smile, but they can't make him care."

The rousing reception of White's speech was the only significant spot of enthusiasm of the two-day meeting. Party officials had stressed they wanted a serene and harmonious session to concentrate attention on the 1986 races, not the 1988 presidential contest.

The only roll call of the convention came when State Democratic Chairman Bob Slagle was elected to a fourth term. Slagle got 5,619 votes and John "Preacher" Hays, a Dallas public relations man, got 25.

The third announced candidate, Coleen Gibson of Dallas, a follower of political extremist Lyndon LaRouche, got no votes but several boos and hisses when she tried to talk.

White also stirred applause from the convention with an apology to Texas teachers for competency tests.

"We asked you to take a test, and honestly, I didn't realize the intensity of the stress that it would cause," White said. "For this I am genuinely sorry."

He congratulated the 97 percent of the state's certified teachers who passed and added, "They are not going to have to take a test again."

Teachers who failed the exam the first time took it for the second time on Saturday.

U.S. Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, who introduced White, drew applause for saying President Reagan's lack of a coordinated world trade policy had cost the nation and Texas money and jobs.

"This administration has created a crisis in world trade," Bentsen said. "They are not exporting products, they are exporting jobs."

White carefully pointed out that a number of the state's present problems existed while Clements was governor from 1972-78, including with schools, roads and water systems.

"Didn't the care?" White asked. "What did the Republicans do with all the oil revenue pouring in four, six and eight years ago?"

WELCOME HOME — Midland Mayor Carroll Thomas, right, is welcomed home after a 16-day trip to the Peoples Republic of China by members of the Chamber of Commerce at the Midland Regional Airport. The trip was an endeavor to establish diplomatic relations with Midland's sister city Dongying, China. A delegation of 29 Midlanders made the trip in order to sign economic, educational and cultural agreements.

Midland talks oil business with Chinese sister city

MIDLAND, Texas (AP) — A business delegation from this West Texas oil town, where the slump in oil prices has ground the economy to a crawl, has returned from a trip to Midland's Chinese sister city hopeful that an outlet has been found for Midland's under-used petroleum expertise.

Dongying, with a population of 1.6 million, is about 15 times the size of Midland and lies near the Shengli oil field, the second largest in the People's Republic of China.

The Shengli field accounts for nearly a fourth of that country's oil production, said Richard Dunbar, who markets oil and heads the Midland Chamber of Commerce's International Affairs Committee.

The business leaders are hoping an agreement signed by Midland Mayor Carroll Thomas and his Dongying counterpart, Tang Shenghai, will be the boost Midland's petroleum industry needs.

The pact calls for an exchange of technological data in oil and gas production, distribution and equipment.

"We have invited them to the oil show in October and we hope they come to see the cutting edge of oil technology," said Joan Baskin, president of the Midland

Chamber of Commerce.

Thirty Midland representatives, including Thomas and Ms. Baskin, went to China June 13. Dunbar was on hand to greet Thomas, who arrived in Midland late Sunday night with part of the group. Others are due to return Tuesday.

Although the travelers did not strike any firm business deals with their Chinese hosts, friendships were established and "the stage is set for future trade," said Roger Dameron of Dameron Petroleum Corp.

"It was a landmark trip in that we came to understand what the Chinese do in their oil fields," said Dameron. "They have a different approach to production because it's all under one ownership. Their technology needs improving. I'd say they're roughly 15 years behind."

The Permian Basin, of which Midland has been the financial center, currently produces about four to five times as much oil as the Shengli oilfield, said Dameron.

"I don't believe we're in competition with them," he said, adding that two large refineries are being planned in the Dongying area.

The people of Dongying also want to sell their wares to the West, including textiles and agricultural products, Dameron said. "We were really impressed with the pragmatism of the government, who has decided to get joint ventures, foreign money, into China," said Ms. Baskin. "They're not doctrinaire communists."

The mayor talked with Chinese officials about sharing technology for shrimp farming and said a similar operation could be set up in Midland using brackish water.

"They work in five-year plans. Their goal by the 1990s is to increase oil production by 50 percent," said Thomas. "They now have 52 producing areas in the Shengli field. They have some areas that need development, so they'll be a market for oil equipment."

Incorporated in 1983, Dongying is about 200 miles south of Beijing in eastern China.

Bush visits religious gatherings

DALLAS (AP) — Vice President George Bush wrapped up his latest swing through Texas, a three-day visit that included political pitches for campaign riches, with two doses of old-time religion.

Bush spoke Sunday to a leadership group of the Greek Orthodox church, meeting in Dallas for the 28th Biennial Clergy-Laity Congress, and then went on to greet a standing-room-only crowd at the First Baptist Church downtown.

Earlier in the weekend, he gave the keynote address at the annual Texas Republican convention Saturday and later one at a fundraising dinner for U.S. Rep. Joe Barton, an Ennis Republican running for re-election.

At the Greek Orthodox gathering Sunday, Bush said he came to pay respects to Archbishop Iakovos, the spiritual leader of the church in the Western Hemisphere.

"I have found him in a very personal way ... to be a tremendous source of wisdom," Bush said, adding that he was limiting his political pitch to a commendation for grassroots party workers.

But he did speak about national politics, saying he believes the Soviets will respond positively to the recent announcements that the United States will not feel constrained to follow the SALT II treaty after the end of the year.

Bush said he expects the Soviet government to respond to the action by agreeing to a meeting.

"I believe there is going to be a meeting, a meeting that can take a great step toward world peace," he said. "The reason I feel so strongly is it's in the Soviet interest, it's in our interest and it's in the interest of peace among men."

At the Greek Orthodox Congress, which runs through July 3, Archbishop Iakovos presented Bush with the Cross of St. Andrew strung on a red velvet cord. The cross is a mark of distinction that is awarded by the archbishop of the denomination.

Changes in Central Park

Times have sure changed conditions in Pampa's Central Park since I first moved to town 31 years ago.

At that time I lived on North Cuyler, across the street from the park's wading pool, and on numerous occasions I took my young daughter to the park to play and wade in the pool.

In those days the park was a place where families spent the afternoons and evenings visiting with friends and children could safely play on the swings, slide and various other contraptions provided for their enjoyment.

During the time I lived across from Central Park in the middle-1950s, I do not recall any trouble or fights in the park. At that time I was covering the police beat for The Pampa News and was aware of all of the incidents investigated by the local police department.

Now the situation is different. It seems a different type of people frequent the park and there are often fights and other problems there, making it unsafe for children to play beneath those stately old shade trees.

My son David and a friend were at Central Park Saturday evening and quickly came home when a fight developed nearby. According to the boys a man who appeared to be drunk started calling another man names, resulting in the fight.

According to the boys, the second man was there with his family and only started fighting when forced to by the other man.

I'm sure that the man who was there with his family had no intention of becoming involved in a fight when he took his family to the park. I wonder if he will again bring his family to Central Park for an outing.

I know our local police officers patrol the park as often as possible in the evenings as their other duties will permit. But, the officers cannot be everywhere and are not always available when trouble starts.

What happened to the biblical exhortation of "do unto others as you would have them do unto you?"

Wouldn't it be nice if all of the residents of Pampa would once again start loving their fellow man and quit being so belligerent. All of the fighting would cease and it would once again be safe to permit the children to play in Central Park.

Speaking of parks, have you noticed the large number of kites being flown recently in the park area near Clarendon College - Pampa Center. The young people seem to have been enjoying the balmy breezes and the clear space north of the college building in recent weeks.

I've noticed that some of the kites are being flown at amazing heights and are often hovering several blocks away, across North Hobart.

I haven't noticed any of the youths having trouble with their kites while they are so far in the sky, but I've wondered if any of the kites have suddenly gone down in the midst of traffic on North Hobart. That would tend to be a startling experience for a motorist to find a kite landing on his or her windshield.

Driving back from Elk City, Okla., Sunday evening provided my family with a pleasant pastime of watching the many changes in lighting as the sun set behind a bank of clouds.

At first the sun could be seen behind what appeared to be falling rain. Then the sun's rays spotlighted the sky with rays through numerous holes in the clouds.

These various combinations of rays were highlighted by a variety of colors as we headed west from Wheeler to Pampa.

At one point the family agreed that the red glow through the clouds just above the horizon looked like the ocean. At other times the sun poked through an opening in the sky like a spotlight.

The heavenly show made for a pleasant trip home and resulted in the drive seeming to be quicker and shorter than it normally is.

Texas unemployment fund expected to be out of money late this week

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas may have to borrow cash from Washington this week to keep its unemployment insurance trust fund afloat and unemployment checks flowing, officials say.

A giant jump in claims prompted by the state's sagging economy is taxing the fund, which is expected to give out in a matter of days, said Texas Employment Commission administrator Bill Grossbacher.

With a balance of only $22.7 million, the fund is having to support daily payments of $6 million, and most of the employer taxes have already been collected for 1986, he said.

An 80 percent increase in claims was caused by a weakened Texas economy that pushed up unemployment to a record 9.6 percent in May, Grossbacher said.

For Texas, the unemployment fund's impending deficit is serious, but there are mechanisms set up to allow benefits to continue, Grossbacher said.

"We're concerned, but not so much about the trust fund as we are about the economy of the state. What caught us is that we now have back-to-back recessions," Grossbacher said, referring to the 1982-83 economic downturn.

Currently, the number of workers drawing unemployment benefits hasn't surpassed the levels reached during the 1982-83 recession, Grossbacher said. "But the payout is higher because the nature of unemployment is different from the last time. More higher-income workers are being laid off, particularly in the oil and gas industry."

During the 1982-83 recession, unemployment benefits averaged $4 million or $5 million a day, below the current $6 million a day, he said.

The amount of weekly unemployment benefits an individual can draw is directly related to his or her previous pay level. The average unemployment benefit check in Texas has been rising since January, Grossbacher said. In January, the average weekly check was $149, and last month, the average payment was $160 a week.

The state's fund was in a deficit position in 1982 and 1983, and a temporary recovery in Texas' economy in 1984 and early 1985 allowed the state to pay back funds borrowed from the federal government.

In March and April, the fund's balance dropped into a negative position only temporarily, because employer taxes were still coming into the state's coffers at a steady rate.

EVER STRIVING FOR TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Loans to Mexico aren't the answer

One is hard-pressed to try to predict whether a particular crisis will be the one to bring Mexico's house of cards crashing. Things seem particularly grim right now. The peso has undergone severe devaluation in relation to the dollar. Export revenues were cut one-third by the recent drop in oil prices. Foreign-exchange reserves are dwindling. Federal reserve chairman Paul Volcker has suggested somewhat vaguely that lenders should be lenient toward Mexico for the time being.

What is generally proposed as a palliative is a little hair of the dog that bit the Mexican economy—a short-term "rescue" package involving loans from various sources to be administered by the International Monetary Fund. But foreign loans are a part of Mexico's problem and are unlikely to be a solution. The administration proposal is a little like suggesting that a confirmed alcoholic switch to beer only, or putting a heroin addict on methadone.

Mexico's economic problems have been intensified by the recent drop in oil prices, but the major problem is a statist economy controlled by a single-party government that clings to power by patronage and heavy-handed domination of the economy.

Political leaders in Mexico routinely offer new plants and public works projects to buy votes rather than because of their economic value. Jobs are assigned and wage rates set to pay off political debts of the ruling Institutional Revolutionary Party. The system impoverishes an already weak economy.

Treasury Secretary Baker and officials in the World Bank and International Monetary Fund sometimes make soothing noises about the necessity of deregulating the economy, both in Mexico and in other debt-ridden countries. It is sometimes proposed that moves toward more reliance on the economic marketplace be a condition of new loans. But the loans are typically made to the very governments that have a vested interest in maintaining the system, who see deregulation as a threat to their power and prerequisites. Therefore they serve to prop up inefficient and economically unstable regimes rather than push them toward genuine reform.

With market-oriented policies, Mexico could be an economic powerhouse in time. With statist policies, its problems are likely to increase. More government-coordinated loans to the Mexican government are likely to reinforce statism and postpone the day of reckoning. They should not be made.

Choice for South Africa

In its determination to preserve white minority rule, the government of South Africa is overlooking no possible threat. Last week its unerring radar detected ominous signals coming from the casual wear department, which led to a prompt ban on the ownership of T-shirts decorated with the name of any of 47 different illegal organizations.

What we see here is not the lunacy of frightened fanatics but the relentless logic of tyranny. In an ostensible attempt to preserve an ostensible democracy, South Africa's rulers are turning increasingly to fascist methods. In supposedly defending Western institutions and resisting Soviet-supported communism, they have trampled Western ideas of freedom and devised methods of repression from which Moscow could learn.

Given their purpose, they have little choice. The threat they see in black unrest is not imaginary. A government based on the systematic denial of the rights of most of its population cannot tolerate open challenge from that majority. South Africa has tried to function half-slave and half-free. The result is a twilight zone in which skin color means the difference between living in a liberal society and living in a totalitarian one.

As long as the nation's blacks could be kept in a state of relative quiescence, this bizarre hybrid survived. But when they are moved to display their dissatisfaction, as the government knew they would be on the 10th anniversary of the Soweto riots that left 570 people dead, the iron control has to be applied to the entire society — to whites as well as blacks.

It was not enough simply to ban commemorations of the anniversary. To remove any possible obstacle to the government's effort to crush every manifestation of dissent, it put the entire country under emergency decree, including strict rules of movement, assembly, speech and press reporting.

The government barred reporters from black areas, forbade the publication of information about the state security forces without its approval and outlawed the reporting of "subversive statements," with the latter left undefined to maximize its chilling effect. The transmission of live interviews was banned. Pretoria even insisted that ABC edit an interview with the Foreign Minister according to the emergency rules, lest he shock American viewers by uttering a subversive statement.

All newspapers were censored. In some cases, that wasn't enough. The Sowetan, which had been printed with large blank spaces where censored information would have appeared, carried this notice on Friday: "We have been advised that the police interpret the blank spaces we have left in the newspaper over the past few days as being 'subversive.'" Mere silence threatens the perfect ignorance the government hopes to enforce on its people.

The experiment in unbridled government power went beyond muzzling the press. Virtually all restraints on the security forces were abandoned. Searches may be made without warrants. Those arrested can be held for up to six months without charge and without contact with relatives or lawyers. The names of those detained, who reportedly number about 3,000, are secret.

As if this latitude isn't enough, the government has provided that the security forces may not be prosecuted for actions taken under the emergency decree. To dispense with the inconvenience of declaring emergencies, it pushed through new laws effectively making the emergency powers permanent.

The South African government claims that its crackdown has restored a measure of order, quieting the turmoil that has produced some 1,900 deaths in 21 months. It hopes the new laws will enable it to crush opposition in black townships without placing the whole nation, whites included, under emergency decree. These are efforts to ignore what is obvious to the rest of the world. South Africa's rulers would like to preserve a measure of Western-style freedom for its white population, while stoutly denying it to the rest of the population. But that option is disappearing. Increasingly, Pretoria's only choice is to enfranchise all of its citizens or to transform the country into a thoroughgoing police state.

The government has made its preference clear: It will do whatever is required to preserve white supremacy. For the foreseeable, it has every prospect of succeeding. But white South Africans may find the price too high.

America discovers work

I am hearing from campuses everywhere that students have stopped complaining about curtailed government aid, are taking jobs, are working their way through college.

And not just a few; almost half are! The Department of Labor has been collecting and reporting statistics for 25 years. Never in all those years have there been this many undergraduates with jobs; 49 percent.

At the University of Chicago 70 percent. And among graduate students, 75 percent to 80 percent work.

Ralph Hamilton, assistant dean of students at U. of C. says, "Working has become a part of the college experience as much as studying in the library and playing basketball in the gym."

At the University of Chicago if students expect from the university any kind of financial help they must work. Again, "incentive."

With today's costs of tuition, books and housing, few jobs pay all the bills. But the larger benefit is an introduction to the work world, a crossfertilization between the academic and business environments.

They learn to budget time, to set priorities, to determine their own likes and dislikes.

Employment counselors, public and private, most often hear the unemployed protest, "I don't have the training for all those technical jobs that are advertised."

But wise counselors are learning to respond that most of the most plentiful jobs require no training:

Gardener, security guard, ticket seller...
Maid, busboy, bookseller...
Salesman, stagehand, hot dog vendor, public opinion pollster, child-care worker, building custodian.

If experience in menial jobs serves no other purpose it motivates the worker to prepare himself or herself for the technical fields where the grass is greener; engineering and computer science and such.

The fastest-growing of all occupations are paralegal and accounting personnel, data processing, computers, electrical and mechanical engineers and office machine repairers.

Summertime career-building opportunities are enormous with phone companies and office equipment companies and large retailers offering on-the-job training.

As Uncle Sam, tightening his belt in the interest of fiscal solvency, offers less incentive "not to work" Americans are rediscovering self-reliance.

Hempstead, Texas, is where Charles Martin was brought to court for failure to pay child support. He said he had no job.

Judge Oliver Kitzman presented him with a shoeshine kit and said, "Now you do." It wasn't very long before Charles Martin found a job as a cement worker and resumed his child-support payments.

Judge Kitzman says, "All I did was give him incentive."

Mormons emerge as threat to GOP

By Robert Walters

COEUR D'ALENE, Idaho (NEA) — Members of the Mormon Church have long been active in politics, especially here in the intermountain West where they traditionally have been identified with conservative values and the Republican Party.

Indeed, the church's political and ideological orientation is personified by its current president, Ezra Taft Benson, who was U.S. agriculture secretary in the 1950s under President Eisenhower, a Republican.

In an unusual development this year, however, Mormons have emerged as moderate-to-progressive Democratic candidates in political contests in three states where the church has a substantial membership. Their religious affiliation could be crucial in determining the outcome of these races.

Here in Idaho, incumbent Gov. John V. Evans, a Democrat, is stepping down to challenge Sen. Steven D. Symms, a Republican. Evans, a Mormon, is believed to have at least an even chance to deny Symms, who is not a Mormon, a second term in the Senate.

Although Idaho is not generally identified with the church, there is a sizable Mormon population in Idaho Falls and nearby communities in the state's southeastern corner, an especially conservative area where Evans has run well in the past.

"It's causing the Republicans to have fits," says one longtime leader of Idaho's Democratic Party who asks that he not be identified. "The Republicans could lose control of the Senate because of a bunch of Mormons."

This year's other Senate election in which a Mormon affiliation could be pivotal is in adjacent Nevada, where Rep. Harry Reid, a Mormon Democrat, is competing with former Rep. James Santini, a non-Mormon Republican, for the seat being vacated by retiring Republican Sen. Paul Laxalt.

As in the case of the Evans-Symms contest, the Reid-Santini race is too close to call five months before Election Day — but, in both, the Democratic candidates' religion almost certainly has made them more competitive.

Finally, Mormon Democrats have mounted challenges to Republican control of two of the three congressional districts in Utah, where the church not only is the dominant religious institution but also a powerful force in political, economic and cultural affairs.

In the district encompassing Ogden, Logan and the rural counties of western Utah, former Democratic Rep. K. Gunn McKay will be attempting to make a comeback by toppling the three-term Republican who unseated him, Rep. James V. Hansen.

McKay, a nephew of a former president of the Mormon church, the late David O. McKay, served five terms in the House before narrowly losing to Hansen in 1980.

In the congressional district that includes Salt Lake City and many of its suburbs, former Rep. D. Wayne Owens, a Mormon Democrat, is attempting to unseat incumbent Republican Rep. David S. Monson.

(Hansen and Monson — like most successful Utah politicians — also are Mormons.)

"We have a whole handful of exciting races in which Mormons are the Democratic standard-bearers," notes former Utah Gov. Scott M. Matheson, also a Mormon Democrat, who retired in 1984 after serving two four-year terms.

Politicians and analysts in the region generally agree that this year's unusual number of Mormon Democrats seeking office is more likely to be a short-term phenomenon than the beginning of a long-term trend.

Although the church has a reputation for emphasizing traditional, conservative values, its leaders are highly sophisticated in dealing with contemporary politics. Thus, they have encouraged the pluralism that has given the church influence in both major political parties.

"I'd like to think these developments represent a fundamental shift," says the Idaho Democratic leader, "but I fear they do not."

Cocaine deaths seen as warning to athletes

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP)—The deaths of star athletes Don Rogers and Len Bias from apparent cocaine overdoses eight days apart should be a strong warning to stay away from the drug, sports figures say.

Tests showed that cocaine was in Rogers' blood system when he died of heart failure Friday, the day before the Cleveland Browns' defensive back was to be married, James Beede, toxicologist for the Sacramento County coroner's office, said Sunday.

Pathologist Dr. Joseph Pawlowski said the results of tests on Rogers' blood, bile and urine confirmed his belief that Rogers died of a drug overdose, despite many claims by friends and teammates of the player that he never used drugs.

Rogers, 23, and Bias, 22, were alike in many ways. Friends, teammates and family of both players said that neither ever used drugs, that both were model athletes, respected by their peers.

Rogers was a Rose Bowl hero for the University of California at Los Angeles, a No. 1 pick by the Cleveland Browns in the National Football League's 1984 college draft, and the AFC Defensive Rookie of the Year. He was twice voted by the Browns as the team's hardest worker.

Bias was an All-American forward for the University of Maryland and No. 1 pick by the Boston Celtics in the National Basketball Association draft.

Rogers died a day before he was to marry his college sweetheart, Leslie Nelson. The wealth he made from football enabled him to live well and buy his mother a home in a nice neighborhood after growing up in a poor area.

Bias died two days after the Celtics chose him and before signing a lucrative contract.

Browns owner Art Modell said he wanted to wait until official results of the autopsy were released before making a statement, but after the toxicologist revealed the finding, Modell said:

"Conditionally, based on that information, I will say that tragically in death Don Rogers may have made more of a contribution to society than he could have on the playing field. Let's hope his passing serves as a warning to those who want to try or have used drugs."

In Washington, Houston Rockets forward Ralph Sampson and former NBA player Bob Lanier, an architect of the league's voluntary drug-testing program, said they favor mandatory tests for drug abuse.

"I tend to think that we might have to go towards that, only because it's very very important right now," Lanier said on NBC's "Meet the Press." "When you see people dying, I think we have to clean our house."

"I think there should be some sort of testing, no doubt," said Sampson. "Because you're going to have to have a way to prevent drugs (from getting) into sports so they can get their education. I favor some kind of testing for drugs, yes."

Pentagon wants large supply of frozen blood

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Pentagon, thanks to pioneering research work by a Navy laboratory, has launched an unusual program to produce what would be the world's largest stockpile of frozen blood for use in emergencies.

The effort, known as the "Military Blood Program 2004," is designed to ensure that doctors will have sufficient blood supplies overseas to treat combat casualties during the early days of a war. It calls for stockpiling 300,000 units of frozen blood by 1992.

The key to the program is research that has convinced military medical leaders that red blood cells, platelets and plasma can be stored safely through new freezing techniques for much longer periods than had been thought possible.

Indeed, work at the Naval Blood Research Laboratory in Boston indicates frozen red blood cells can be stored safely up to 20 years, Lt. Col. Anthony J. Polk, the director of the Military Blood Program Office, said recently.

That contrasts with the current method approved by the Food and Drug Administration, which allows storage of frozen red blood cells for only three years.

"Our goal is to build a stockpile and to bring selected (military) blood banks to the point where they can use some of these new technologies," said Cmdr. Jerry Baker, the deputy director of the blood office.

"The military blood system really hasn't been overhauled since World War II," added Polk.

"The problem with the current system is that it calls for an extremely quick response with fresh blood drawn in the United States in the event of war. And that would be difficult at best, particularly if we don't have air superiority," Polk said.

The idea of building such a large stockpile of frozen blood grew out of a special study conducted in 1984, Polk said. Military and civilian medical experts were given the task of assessing "battlefield requirements" for blood over the next 20 years; hence the name, Military Blood Program 2004.

In the process, the panel reviewed the work of Dr. Robert Valeri, a Navy captain who retired last fall but who still works at the Navy laboratory, which is affiliated with the Boston University School of Medicine.

The panel concluded Valeri's cumulative research over the past two decades offered a means of assuring a safe stockpile of frozen blood. The concept was approved last year by Dr. William Mayer, the assistant defense secretary for health affairs, and advanced planning has now been completed, Polk said.

Economic sluggishness: could it be the tax bill?

By JOHN CUNNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — Defying forecasts, the rate at which American business used its plant capacity fell to just 78.6 percent in May, at the very time it was widely expected to be rising.

Moreover, several surveys showed that capital spending plans also declined, and the consensus now is that business can't be expected immediately to expand or improve its spending on plant and equipment.

The sluggishness suggested by these figures has puzzled economists, who have been busily shaving their expectations for the second half of the year. Why, they've been asking, hasn't the economy been performing?

Now, a growing number of them seem to be zeroing in on a most unlikely culprit: fear of the tax-reform proposals put forth in the House and Senate.

In spite of what appears to be widespread popular support for the tax measures, some economists are reminding clients that if passed, the bill would transfer billions of dollars in tax burdens from individuals to business.

While such tax relief might spur consumer spending, the economists are saying that it is hardly likely to encourage business spending, which is already lagging, or business investment, output or profit.

Such reasoning may or may not be correct, but conceivably it could spread because of the economy's mysterious lassitude and the inability of economists to account for it.

Business Week magazine this week called attention to big cuts in projections now being made by operators of the widely followed economic models, including Chase Econometrics, Data Resources, Evan Economics and Wharton Econometrics.

"I am surprised by the euphoric rush to support this bill," it quotes Joel Prakken, vice president of Laurence H. Meyer & Associates, an economic consulting firm, as saying.

Howard Ruff, editor of the "Financial Success Report," a newsletter, recently devoted almost an entire issue to denouncing the proposals.

"This scheme will cost most of you big bucks, could cause a recession, and later could open the tax floodgates for 'tax, spending, and elect' politicians," he wrote.

At least one aspect of the new tax plan — regarding capital gains — also could have a negative impact on the stock market, which is now near the peak of a four-year advance during which many stocks have more than doubled in price.

If the tax plan is passed, capital gains will be taxed at 27 percent, a rise of 7 percentage points from the current level. Applied to the big gains made in recent years, the higher rate could produce considerable investor pain.

As a result, some well-known investment advisers are encouraging clients to consider taking at least some of their profits by selling shares this year.

Third world elections: frauds or free tests of public will?

By GEORGE GEDDA
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Nineteen years ago, South Vietnamese President Nguyen Van Thieu, under American pressure, scheduled presidential elections in the hope that democratization would broaden the base of support for his U.S.-backed country.

Thieu, an army general, found himself under constant fire from American liberals, who claimed the election process was not free and fair and that he was rigging the system to ensure that his candidacy would be successful.

"What more can I do to show that this is a genuine test of popular will?" Thieu plaintively asked a group of American reporters on election eve.

"Lose," replied a television correspondent. As it turned out, Thieu won the election. But the notion that he was the beneficiary of an electoral hoax continued to haunt his country's ties to the United States.

Echoes of that oft-told anecdote are being heard closer to home nowadays as, with U.S. encouragement, many Latin American countries are trying their own hand at democracy.

Sometimes, Latin American elections go smoothly, with no argument about the outcome. At other times, however, there are allegations of ballot box stuffing, fraudulent vote counts, unexplained suspensions of the ballot count and American manipulation during the campaign to ensure the U.S.-backed candidate wins.

A case in point is the Panamanian presidential elections of 1984. The New York Times reported a week ago the United States had assembled conclusive evidence that the military strongman of Panama, Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega, ordered the Panama Defense Force to intervene and overturn the outcome. Noriega's candidate, Nicolas Ardito Barletta, was declared the winner.

The State Department version of the election is that it was aware many Panamanians felt the result was fraudulent but that, on balance, the process was a step toward the U.S. goal of encouraging greater civilian rule in Panama after 16 years of military-dominated leadership.

State Department deputy spokesmen Redman suggested last week that allegations of fraud in the election posed something of a dilemma for the administration. He said the problem was summed up by the report of a group of Americans who went to Panama in May 1984 to observe the election process.

"To give even a qualified seal of approval to a disreputable election would be to destroy hope and cause a general disillusionment with democratic processes," the group said.

"On the other hand, to condemn as unacceptable what was only a muddy and untidy performance might irremediably tarnish a significant step toward a more perfect democracy."

A few days before that article appeared, Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., said Mexican President Miguel de la Madrid was fraudulently elected in 1982 and that his party falsified the legislative election results two years later to ensure a favorable outcome.

There have been occasions when the United States has used its influence to ensure an honest outcome. Authorities in the Dominican Republic halted the vote count in the 1978 election when it appeared that opposition candidate Antonio Guzman might win.

D'Aubuisson has never been a favorite of Washington's. Four years ago, it appeared that d'Aubuisson might be elected as head of government by the Salvadoran Constituent Assembly. It was a close call but victory went to Alvaro Magana, a banker.

Of d'Aubuisson's presidential bid, he said, "We stopped that one on the one-yard line."

Syrians ready to break up combats in North Lebanon

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Leaders of five northern Lebanese towns asked Syrian soldiers to disengage warring militias, and bulldozers leveled fortifications at Beirut refugee camps today to consolidate a truce between Palestinian and Shiite fighters.

Peace moves on the two war-fronts coincided with quarrels be-

Scientists seek answers about AIDS virus

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the fifth in a series of articles on the myths and realities concerning the disease AIDS and its implications for residents of the Pampa area.

By LARRY HOLLIS
Staff Writer

When AIDS was diagnosed as a new disease, researchers found themselves contending with determining where the disease started and how it had spread into the United States, Caribbean islands, France and Africa.

After some initial studies, researchers first thought the disease had started in Africa.

A virus thought to be the cause of Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome (AIDS) was found to be prevalent in green monkeys in Central Africa, where a number of AIDS victims had also been diagnosed.

Researchers felt the virus in the monkey probably had been transmitted to humans by bites or by eating of the monkey's flesh, with residents of Central Africa becoming infected with the virus and then transmitting it to others.

Health officials thought AIDS was then brought to the Caribbean islands and then into the U.S. The route into France was thought to be either from Africa into Europe or from the Caribbean and the U.S. into France.

But the origins and the routes of transmission still are uncertain.

As recently as last week at a world AIDS conference in Paris, two World Health Organization officials said evidence showed the disease started in Africa at the same time as in the U.S., Haiti and Europe, around 1978. They suggested AIDS came to Africa from somewhere else about 1975.

However the routes began, officials generally agreed a new disease had developed in three continental areas in the late 1970s.

And apparently there are different strains of the virus. African AIDS differs from that in the northern hemisphere because its victims are evenly divided among men and women. In the United States and France, however, its victims are overwhelmingly men, to date.

In the U.S., for example, a 14 to 1 male to female ratio "has stayed pretty much consistent," noted Karen Gregory, R.N., director of Inservice Education and Infection Control at Coronado Community Hospital.

And the victims are fairly young, with 90 percent being between 20 and 49 years old, and most being between 25 and 39, she said.

Of the approximately 20,000 confirmed AIDS cases in the U.S. since 1981, 71 percent are homosexual or bisexual men; 17 percent are intravenous needle drug abusers; five percent are Haitians or other Caribbean islanders; four percent are blood transfusion related; two percent are children and one percent have no risk group identified.

And despite some advances in treatment and vaccine research, AIDS is virtually 100 percent fatal, Gregory said. Of the 20,000 cases, some 10,000 victims have already died. Eighty percent are dead within 18 months of confirmed diagnosis, with most of the others dying within two years of diagnosis.

the ones having the most reported cases, which is to be expected, Gregory said. The number of cases is still relatively small compared to the population — 20,000 cases in a population of more than 200 millions. And that, along with the deaths that have already occurred, is one of the reasons researchers are working hard to find a cure. But the more than 2,000 experts who attended the three-day world AIDS conference last week were warned that a practical vaccine could be a long time coming, probably at least two years away and possibly longer.

Successful experiments of genetically engineered products have prevented AIDS in the test tube. Specially made proteins have been injected into animals, creating antibodies which, when extracted and injected into test tubes containing AIDS virus, have prevented the virus from infecting human cells.

But further tests with animals and then humans have to be conducted. Also, several strains of the virus are concerned, which means multiple vaccines or serums may have to be developed.

And that may take several years, the conference participants were told, especially since the use of a live vaccine would be a risk which would have to be measured against the threat of AIDS.

J. B. Brunet, an official of the French Ministry of Health, said health education is still the only known weapon against AIDS.

Conference participants also heard new details that AIDS clearly can be spread only by exchanges of blood or semen through certain sexual activities or IV injection of the virus into the blood stream.

Gregory said the news media generally "has done a good job of informing the public" about AIDS, its effects and its transmittal routes.

"I really don't think we're being kept in the dark," she said. What the experts know, they have revealed, not trying to hide anything from the public, she added. And the media are informing people about the research and discoveries.

"But people interpret articles as they may want them to be or misperceive the information," she said.

Some become overly cautious, even phobic, about contact with AIDS victims or with gays, for example. Others are not cautious enough in their sexual relations or in IV drug abuse.

People need to make sure they read the information "as it's presented," Gregory said, not reading more into it and not imposing their own biases, opinions and fears on the material.

She said she felt there was "a lot of hype" in area newspapers and broadcast media, for instance, about a prison inmate in Amarillo who was discovered to have AIDS within the past year.

The man was a transient, passing through the city, when he told officials he had AIDS. People overreacted, she said, with prison and hospital personnel destroying even his bedding. "No one wanted to care for him," Gregory said.

But more is known now and "hopefully that wouldn't happen now," she said.

NEXT: AIDS in Pampa and its avoidance.

Few have survived more than three years, she said.

AIDS — which is actually not one disease, but instead is a set of symptoms — somehow reduces the body's immune system's ability to ward off infections, especially certain types of pneumonias and cancers.

Of the confirmed AIDS victims, 80 percent of the dead had had related pneumonia disorders (including famed movie star Rock Hudson), with 37 percent getting the cancer forms, Gregory said.

In the United States, the states with the highest number of AIDS victims have been New York, California, New Jersey, Florida and Texas. North Dakota, South Dakota and Idaho have had the least number reported.

The larger populated areas are lion in the U.S., for example, is only about one ten-thousandth percent of the population, very much less than deaths occurring from heart disease, cancer, accidents or infectious diseases other than AIDS.

But AIDS is still very much a matter of concern, Gregory said.

In the U.S., 2 million people are estimated to be infected though they don't have the disease, she noted. And the World Health Organization estimates 5 to 10 million people worldwide are infected and could transmit the disease though they may not have it themselves.

Gregory noted that 80 percent of the people who are exposed to AIDS will never get the disease, but some will still be carriers of the HTLV-III virus which trans-

Smart Money: bond holder wasn't taken

By Bruce Williams

DEAR BRUCE — On May 1, 1986, a coupon on a bearer bond that I held came due, so I cashed it. A few days later, my bank told me that the coupon had been returned and that the bearer bond had been called on Sept. 1, 1985.

I contacted the bank whose name was on the bond and was told that the bond had been called and that if I sent the bond by registered mail they would give me the money that the bond was worth.

I assumed that they would also send me six month's interest, but they only sent me the money for the bond.

I feel like I have been taken. What can I do? — D.D., ST. PAUL, MINN.

DEAR D.D. — I sympathize over your loss of interest and can understand your feeling of frustration, but I don't think you've been taken. Holding bearer bonds is similar to holding cash, since the issuer of the bonds has no idea who you are. You knew (or should have known) that you had bought a callable bond, and there were a few steps that you could have taken to protect yourself.

You could have asked the broker from whom you purchased these bonds to notify you of any calls. That's something that brokers are set up to do. If you chose not to share the fact that you own these bonds with a broker, then your only defense was to read the financial publications diligently to make sure that your bonds had not been called, because after the call option is exercised and the owner of the bond fails to respond, the interest stops accruing.

You can, of course, register any additional bearer bonds that you hold so you will be notified. But bearer bonds are now selling at a premium, since all bonds issued after a cut-off date must be registered. Before you register the ones you hold, you might wish to see if it would be to your advantage to sell them and replace them with registered bonds.

DEAR BRUCE — In 1970, my

Bad tires cause serious problem

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Bad tires cause more serious problems for drivers than any other part of a car, according to a car rental firm.

National Car Rental says close examination of a car's tires can often point to particular problems. For example, bald spots or "cupping" generally signal out of balance or worn shock absorbers. Or, if just one edge of a tread is worn this can mean the wheels are out of alignment.

If both edges are worn, the problem is under-inflation. By contrast, over-inflation often produces tires with worn areas in the center of the tread. Finally, if little bars of solid rubber begin to show through the tread, the tires are dangerously worn and it's time to replace them.

grandmother died and left my sister and me a 283-acre farm. As you know, farm prices are now very low. Would it be advisable for us to sell it, or should we keep it until prices go back up?

We also are thinking about keeping it as a place to live, but if we do that, we would have to subdivide the property, which costs a lot of money.

Is it worth it? What would you do? We figure the farm is worth about $300,000 now. — L.S., MOLINE, ILL.

DEAR L.S. — If it's worth $300,000, you are putting it at a value of just a bit over $1,000 an acre (not taking into account any improvements, such as buildings, etc., on the property).

In your part of the world, this is the worst time to be selling a farm. You have been holding on to this property for the past 16 years, and since you are not obligated to sell, you should hang on to it a few years more, assuming that the tax burden is not too great. Even if this is a problem, I am confident that you could lease the property for at least enough money to cover the taxes.

All real estate values go in cycles, and the farm land in many parts of the country now is at the bottom of the cycle. Your farm was probably worth considerably more a few years ago and probably will be worth considerably more in the future.

I'd sit tight. It's my view that property must go up in value, although that time may be some years away.

As for the subdivision, if you both want to put in buildings, it would be wise to subdivide the property so that neither of you would have any interest or claim on the other's building. In most cases, the cost of this kind of subdivision would not be unreasonable. And in your case, you might simply wish to spin off four or five acres apiece on which to build homes.

DEAR READERS — I genuinely enjoy reading your mail and answering the letters that seem appropriate. But frequently I find that I cannot answer a letter because a lot of essential information is missing.

Dear Abby

Vacationing parents are no picnic for children

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1986 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: I never thought I would be writing to you, but I just had to after reading the letter from the mother who wanted to know how long was too long for a visit with her children. She kept saying how she was no trouble — she didn't need her own room, and liked to spend the day watching game shows, having morning coffee, reading, and going to movies and playing cards. Abby, she may think that is no trouble, but please read on:

My husband and I live in a small two-bedroom apartment, 3,000 miles from my in-laws. They stayed with us for two weeks, and it was the worst two weeks of my life. They acted like they were on vacation and I was the hotel maid. I'm sure they felt that they were perfect houseguests, but that was not the case.

They stayed in the second bedroom and had the TV on constantly (and loudly), which almost drove me crazy, especially when I was trying to work or sleep. When they were not watching TV, they wanted us to go with them to places I had no interest in going to. If I said I did not want to go, they tried to make me feel guilty about it. Cooking for four is much more work than cooking for two. They offered to help after all the work was done. Let's not forget the digs about my working instead of staying home to clean, cook and raise a family.

Please, Abby, tell parents that if they want a vacation, the best place for them to stay is in a hotel. Sign me ...

THE REST OF THE STORY

DEAR ABBY: This is for "Perplexed Mother" who heard through the grapevine that some of her children think she overstays her welcome in their homes: She should ask herself these questions, and be completely honest when answering them:

1. Does Mother invite herself? (It's natural to resent houseguests who come to visit when it's convenient for them without considering their hosts.)

2. Is Mother critical of her married children and their spouses? (Some mothers assume they have a right to criticize their children's cooking, housekeeping, child-rearing, clothing, friends, habits, etc. They refuse to accept their children as the adults they are.)

3. Is Mother inflexible in her habits? (If she cannot tolerate changes in her daily routine, she should stay home. It's unreasonable and rude to expect a whole family to alter its routines to accommodate her. By the way, this applies equally to children visiting their parents.)

4. Does Mother disappear once in a while to allow her children some private time together?

Please print this, Abby. I want to send it to my mother-in-law. She also insists that she's "really no trouble at all." If that were true, it wouldn't take us weeks to get over one of her "short" visits: So, "Perplexed Mother" — clean up your act, and your children will welcome you with open arms.

NOT PERPLEXED AT ALL

DEAR NOT PERPLEXED: Read on for the flip side of that problem:

DEAR ABBY: I know that not everyone is what he or she appears to be, but the woman who signed herself "Perplexed Mother" sounds like she's very easy to get along with. My parents visit us once a year — twice if we're lucky. And when they do, we give them our bedroom and bath (if we can convince them to take it). We arrange to take our vacations while they're here, so we can spend as much time with them as possible. We even plan a few outings during their stay, but we never seem to have enough time together, and when they leave, we are all teary-eyed.

God gave most of us very loving, unselfish parents with no guarantee of how long we'll be blessed with them. I hope children everywhere, grown and not-so-grown, will take stock of how much love and respect they give their parents. Children get only one chance to return some of the love, patience, sacrifice and concern their parents have dished out while raising us, so don't wait until it's too late.

THEIR "GROWN-UP" CHILD IN MARRERO, LA.

DEAR CHILD: Amen!

GOAL-SETTING
Q: I need to go on a diet. Each morning, I have such good intentions. But by afternoon, those intentions have vanished; and another day is lost to bingeing. What can I do?

A: All of us have experienced similar frustrations while dieting. But, help is on its way! First of all, set a specific goal. It isn't enough to decide to lose "some weight." Decide exactly how much you want to lose by a certain date. Also, committing your plan to someone else helps you view your "intentions" more seriously. Second, plan your menus ahead of time and prepare fresh fruits and vegetables for those between-meal cravings. You will be less likely to snack on "illegal" foods. Third, be sure you eat consistently throughout the day. Starving yourself in the morning will only make you hungrier for your noon meal. Eating small amounts of food several times a day helps maintain level blood sugar, which minimizes sugar cravings and overeating. For more information, contact your local Diet Center at 669-2351

Mates give Argentine star help

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Sometimes even the best need help. Diego Maradona got plenty of it, which is why he and his Argentine teammates can call themselves world champions.

Maradona wasn't as magical on Sunday as he had been in previous World Cup games. But he set up two goals, including one by Jorge Burruchaga with six minutes remaining that gave Argentina a 3-2 victory over West Germany and its second world soccer title in the last three tournaments.

"Today you saw clearly that Argentina is not Maradona. It is instead a great team," the 25-year-old striker said after the Argentines blew a 2-0 advantage in an eight-minute span of the second half. Then Maradona's brilliant pass freed Burruchaga behind the defense, and he beat goalkeeper Harald Schumacher from 12 yards for the Cup-clinching goal.

One might have thought Maradona was all of Argentine soccer the way he stamped his greatness on this World Cup. But goal-scorers Jose Brown, Jorge Valdano, Burruchaga and goalkeeper Nery Pumpido were just as important in the championship game.

"Argentina deserved to win. It is a great team," West German Coach Franz Beckenbauer said.

The excitement throughout the Argentine camp was on the team victory. Though Coach Carlos Bilardo claimed once more that Maradona is the best player in the world. He also paid special tribute to the camaraderie of his players.

"People in Argentina must now get used to the idea that although it is important to have individual players, the strength of the team as a group is more important," Bilardo said.

Maradona bows under congratulations

Argentina controlled much of the first half and went ahead on defender Brown's first goal for the national team, at 22 minutes off a free kick by Burruchaga.

Valdano made it 2-0 at 55 minutes.

But the West German offense woke up in an eight-minute span. Karl-Heinz Rummenigge scored at 73 minutes.

Rudi Voeller then got free in the goalmouth and headed home a pass from Thomas Berthold off a corner kick by Andreas Brehme.

"When we scored the tying goal, I felt we fully controlled the game," Beckenbauer said. "But the crowd noise made it impossible to shout instructions to my players."

The crowd of more than 114,500 was decidedly pro-Argentina.

It was West Germany's third loss in its record fifth World Cup final. The Germans won the title in 1954 and '74 and lost to England in 1966 and Italy four years ago.

After Argentina's victory, hundreds of fans poured out of the stands to surround the players. Maradona led the Argentines to the presidential box, where Mexican President Miguel de la Madrid presented the trophy to the team captain. With tears streaming down his face, Maradona kissed the World Cup and passed it on to his teammates.

They, too, kissed the award they spent the last month chasing.

"With this victory," Maradona said, "we have shut up those who had criticized us in Argentina."

Argentina was 6-0-1 in the tournament, the only blemish a tie with Italy in the first round. West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl saw his team finish at 4-2-1.

Yankees, Atlanta swap outfielders

NEW YORK (AP) — Having failed in their efforts to acquire one former New York Met, the New York Yankees settled for another.

Desperate for pitching, the reeling Yankees acquired outfielder Claudell Washington, 31, and minor-league shortstop Paul Zuvella, 27, from the Atlanta Braves on Sunday in exchange for disgruntled 36-year-old outfielder Ken Griffey.

The deal was announced as soon as Griffey hit into a game-ending double play that sealed the Yankees' 10th consecutive home setback, a 6-3 loss to the Toronto Blue Jays.

It also came hours after the American League East-leading Boston Red Sox beat the Yankees to Tom Seaver and acquired the 41-year-old pitcher from the Chicago White Sox for utilityman Steve Lyons.

The Braves were as happy to get Griffey as he was to leave the Yankees, who acquired him from Cincinnati in 1981, for two minor-league pitchers. Griffey had been seeking a return to the National League since he left.

"We think Griffey is a quality hitter," Atlanta Manager Chuck Tanner said.

Griffey left the Yankees with a .303 average, nine homers and 26 runs batted in. His lifetime average is .300 — .307 with 60 homers and 424 RBIs for the Reds, .285 with 49 homers and 251 RBIs for the Yankees.

Astros sweep LA to regain lead

HOUSTON (AP) — On paper, the game figured to be a classic pitching matchup.

And it translated perfectly to the field Sunday as the Houston Astros scored two unearned runs in the seventh, edging Fernando Valenzuela and the Los Angeles Dodgers by a score of 2-1 and sweeping their weekend series.

The victory propelled the Astros back into first place in the National League Western Division with a half-game lead over the San Francisco Giants last weekend.

The Astros' Nolan Ryan pitched six strong innings, striking out eight, walking three and allowing only three hits and a run-scoring double by Dodgers rookie shortstop Craig Shipley.

"I am throwing the ball real well and my arm is not hurting," said Ryan, who made his second start since returning from the disabled list.

"Ryan is so important to our club," said Astros second baseman Bill Doran. "It was encouraging to see him throw so well today."

Dodgers first baseman Len Matuszek, a Ryan strikeout victim twice, called it "typical Nolan. You have to lay off his high fastball and make him throw down low. Some of us did and some of us didn't." Valenzuela, 10-5, pitched a complete game, his 10th of the year. He had a one-hitter going until the seventh inning, when the game fell apart.

Phil Garner led off for the Astros with a groundball to shortstop and reached second base when Shipley threw the ball into the dugout.

Glenn Davis then struck out but reached first base on a wild pitch by Valenzuela with Garner taking third. Consecutive singles by Kevin Bass and Jose Cruz drove in the two Astro runs.

"Valenzuela pitched a super game," said Dodgers manager Tom Lasorda. "I feel bad for him, but you can't give a team five outs in an inning and expect to win."

The winning pitcher for the Astros was Manny Hernandez, 2-3, who pitched one scoreless inning.

Frank DiPino relieved Hernandez to earn his third save and found the sweep very sweet, especially because of Lasorda's recent comment that the Astros were only "renting" first place.

"I felt a little extra confidence," DiPino said. "Especially with the things they've been saying. All you hear is Dodgers this and Dodgers that. I'm sick of it."

Astro first baseman Glenn Davis reaches low to scoop hot shot

Reid thinks Rockets have already arrived

SAN ANGELO, Texas (AP) — The professional basketball career of Robert Reid has been one marked by change.

His position has been changed, perhaps permanently, from forward to point guard. He's changed his uniform number from 50 to 33. Even his role on the Houston Rockets has changed from starter to sixth man back to starter.

But one thing that hasn't changed is his ability to play consistent — and winning — basketball.

Reid was in San Angelo recently to hold court at Angelo State University head basketball coach Ed Messberger's summer camp for an enthralled group of young boys and girls, and a smaller group of star-struck adults.

"I figure the best part of basketball is not the season, but afterwards when I can come to camps of this nature and work with the kids," Reid said after playing abbreviated pick-up games with the campers.

"They're excited about it, but it's not because Robert Reid is here, it's because they've seen you on TV. They're miles away from an NBA franchise, and they're thrilled because 'Magic' Johnson has sweated on you or (Larry) Bird has bumped into you or you know Kareem (Abdul-Jabbar)."

Reid spent a lot of time playing against all three players this past season, as he helped the Rockets make a surprise appearance in the National Basketball Association championship finals against the Boston Celtics.

Houston took the Celtics to six games before losing, signifying the Rockets emergence into the elite teams of the league.

"I think we've arrived," the 6-8 St. Mary's University graduate said. "People ask me how far away the Rockets are, and I tell them we're not a player or two players away, we're minutes away. By that I mean during the Celtic series we'd go five minutes at a time without scoring while they'd be scoring every time down. We're just minutes away from being very dominant."

Reid said the Rockets "were national heroes for awhile" because they were underdogs taking on the mighty Boston Celtics.

"But now, all the other coaches are going to judge their teams by us. Look what Houston did last year. So we're going to have to come out with our guns loaded next year."

And their tempers under control. The Rockets (read Olajuwon and Sampson) came out swinging during the playoffs, and after the Rockets won Game Five following Sampson's ejection, the team came out flat in the sixth and final game.

"The one thing I did wrong was not walk in the locker room and tell them, 'Forget the Boston crowd. Forget Larry Bird. Forget the tradition. Forget everything except to kick some tail,'" said Reid.

"We downplayed the effect of the crowd so much that we forgot about the Celtics. And when they came out with that 'Eye of the Tiger' look, it was all over. They, not the crowd, took us out of the game."

Reid hopes the Twin Towers will be a bit more subdued next season.

"We're not getting a reputation as a rough team, but the coaches and scouts are looking at film and deciding to try and get us intimidated into taking a swing at them," Reid admitted. "They'd rather see the back of Akeem's and Ralph's jerseys walking to the dressing room than seeing them dunk on their team."

"I told them if they want to get back at people, start dunking on 'em, start scoring on 'em. They're (Sampson and Olajuwon) still young and immature, but they're starting to become the veterans we need to put that ring on our fingers."

Reid is going to spend some time this summer working out with a friend who plays with the Harlem Globetrotters in order to work on his ballhandling skills.

Murphy finally wins again after 11-year drought

OAKVILLE, Ontario (AP)—Bob Murphy's victory in the Canadian Open ended a frustrating, injury-plagued 11-year non-winning streak during which he seriously considered retirement from golf.

"I thought I might not ever win again, and I wondered why," the 43-year-old Murphy said Sunday after putting an end to the doubts and frustrations with a three-shot victory in the Canadian Open.

"It's hard to fight your way through injuries," said Murphy, who, at one time or another has had thumb, hand, wrist, shoulder and back problems. Even now, after winning again at last, he is bothered by a pinched nerve in his neck.

"I fought through the problems to be a player again," the chunky Murphy said, a wistful smile creasing his face. "But there's nothing like winning. That's the thing. This is a very happy occasion."

Murphy won the tournament, and the check for $108,000 (U.S.) with a patient, tenacious final round of 1-under-par 71 while his would-be challengers self-destructed around him.

Murphy's first victory since the 1975 Jackie Gleason-Inverrary Classic came on a 280 total, eight under par on a Glen Abbey Golf Club course that was lashed by a brief, violent thunderstorm on Sunday that caused a 40-minute delay in play.

Greg Norman, the Australian who has been on a rampage in recent months, came on to claim second alone with a hard-won 73 and a 285 total.

He pulled out of a tie for second with a last-hole birdie, an effort that enabled him to set a new, single-season money-winning record for the PGA Tour.

Norman won $64,800 to advance his winnings for the year to $547,779, breaking the record of $542,321 set by Curtis Strange last year.

Norman, who hit out of bounds and made double-bogey 7 on the fourth hole, was one of five who led or shared the lead over the final round.

One by one they dropped back, with Mac O'Grady the last to go.

He was tied with Murphy for

Murphy blasts way to victory the top spot when they returned to the course after the storm delay.

O'Grady was short of the green on the par-3 12th, pitched across the green into a bunker and eventually made double-bogey 5.

That staked Murphy to a three-shot lead and the canny veteran brought it home with ease, nailing it down with a birdie-4 from a greenside bunker on the 16th.

"It's been a long, long time," Murphy said. "I felt good about my chances, but I've been in this position about 25 times and ended up not winning."

Andy Bean, Mike Donald and rookie Davis Love III tied for third at 284. Bean matched par 72, Donald had a closing 73.

Palmer joins list of victorious vets

INDIANAPOLIS (AP)—Add Sandra Palmer to the list of veteran athletes who will cherish the memory of 1986.

A 12-foot birdie putt on the first playoff hole in the $350,000 LPGA Mayflower Classic golf tournament put the 45-year-old Palmer in a group that includes Kentucky Derby-winning jockey Bill Shoemaker (54), Masters champion Jack Nicklaus (46) and Ray Floyd, at 43 the oldest ever to win the U.S. Open.

"Overall I probably played four rounds as well as I ever had," said Palmer, who finished 72 holes with an 8-under-par score of 280.

Chris Johnson and Jan Stephenson, who each made birdie putts on the final hole after just missing eagle bids, also had 280s after four trips around the 6,186-yard Country Club of Indianapolis layout. Johnson closed with a 68, including a 3-under 33 on the last nine, to pull even while Stephenson matched Palmer's 72.

"I was very determined today," said Palmer, whose 21st career victory was worth $52,500 and made her the 13th LPGA player to top the $1 million mark. She almost doubled her 1986 earnings—now $113,124—and moved to the season money-winning list.

"I really didn't make many putts," said Palmer, who had two birdies, a pair of bogies and 14 pars in her final round.

Even though she is past 40, there are no thoughts of retirement.

"As long as you take care of yourself and you're somewhat in shape, and feel good, I don't see any reason why you can't compete," she said.

However, she said there have been many times when she thought her days of battling the sun, wind, rain and sand traps were about to end.

"I've had some really, really horrible stretches of play," Palmer said. "My short shots around the greens were really poor, and this week I played a few better. And that was kind of the key."

"I really felt like, going into the playoff, I just was knew I was going to make a putt and I felt like I hit a really good (tee shot)" on the 384-yard, par-4 14th hole. "That is such a hard hole. The drive is the whole key to that hole."

After the drive, she faced an approach from about 150 yards away.

"When I played it before, I hit it to the left. I didn't play it to lie enough, so I just tried to hold it up and I hit it nice and high and it came down softly," she said.

Johnson, who like Stephenson earned $28,000, had no complaint over the ending.

Saberhagen's dream season turns into 1986 nightmare

By WILLIAM R. BARNARD
AP Sports Writer

Bret Saberhagen is following his storybook 1985 season with a nightmarish sequel.

Saberhagen, who was 20-6 and captured two World Series victories and the Cy Young award as a 21-year-old last year, gave up eight runs in one-plus innings Sunday as the Minnesota Twins defeated the Kansas City Royals 9-4.

The horrendous outing dropped Saberhagen's record to 4-9 with a 4.13 earned run average.

"I feel like I'm throwing as well as last year, but the stats don't show it," said Saberhagen, who has lost seven of his last nine decisions.

In other AL games, it was Toronto 6, New York 3; Detroit 9, Milwaukee 5 in the first game and Milwaukee 3, Detroit 1 in the nightcap; Boston 8, Baltimore 3; Chicago 6, Oakland 5 in 10 innings; Cleveland 6, California 4; and Seattle 9, Texas 3.

Red Sox 8, Orioles 3
Boston won its eighth straight game on the road and increased its AL East lead to eight games by handing Baltimore its fifth consecutive loss.

Tony Armas hit a two-run homer and Dwight Evans had a run-scoring double and an RBI single, backing the pitching of Jeff Sellers, 1-3, who scattered nine hits for his first victory since being called up from Pawtucket on June 3.

Armas, who has only three homers this season after averaging 31 the last six years; hit his second in the three-game series after Dwight Evans drew a walk in the second inning, giving Boston a 4-0 lead.

Blue Jays 6, Yankees 3

Cliff Johnson keyed a three-run outburst with a run-scoring single in the ninth inning, lifting Toronto to its fifth consecutive victory and sending New York to its 10th straight loss at home, longest ever at Yankee Stadium.

Tony Fernandez added an RBI double and Garth Iorg had a sacrifice fly as the Blue Jays handed the Yankees their third consecutive series sweep at home.

Indians 6, Angels 4
California stayed in first place in the AL West despite the loss to Cleveland, which got a three-run homer from Joe Carter and solo homers from Brook Jacoby and Andre Thornton.

With the Angels leading 2-1 in the fifth inning, Ron Romanick, 5-6, issued two walks before Carter hit his 12th homer of the season on Romanick's first pitch.

Mariners 9, Rangers 3
Jim Presley drove in four runs with a two-run double, a homer and a groundout for Seattle against Texas, which remained a half-game behind the Angels.

White Sox 6, A's 5
John Cangelosi was hitless in eight at-bats in the three game series, but his sacrifice fly in the top of the 10th inning gave Chicago the victory over Oakland.

Tigers 9, Brewers 5
Brewers 3, Tigers 1
Milwaukee ended its five-game losing streak and Detroit's five-game winning run with the second-game victory.

Ted Higuera, 10-6, took a two-hit shutout into the ninth, but he was relieved by Don Plesac after giving up a leadoff homer to Kirk Gibson, his fifth in six games, and a single.

Charlie Moore homered for the Brewers off Jack Morris, 7-5, who pitched a complete game and struck out 10 despite the loss.

The Tigers won the first game as Darrell Evans collected two of Detroit's five doubles and drove in four runs. Lou Whitaker added a homer.

Becker's problems with serve raise questions

WIMBLEDON, England (AP)—Defending Wimbledon men's tennis champion Boris Becker has dropped only one set in three matches in defense of his title.

Yet, according to weekend reports, he faced a crisis going into the second week of the tourney because of problems with his serve.

In today's fourth-round action, Becker, seeded fourth, faced Sweden's Mike Pernfors, the No. 13 seed.

Ivan Lendl, the top seed and the world's top-ranked player, met American Matt Anger, while Sweden's Mats Wilander, the No. 2 seed, clashed with rejuvenated Australian Pat Cash.

Much of Becker's success depends on his destructive serving power. After the 18-year-old West German served 12 double-faults in his four-set victory over Australian Paul McNamee on Saturday, his critics brought out the knives.

Under the headline "King Becker faces double trouble," the Sunday Express said that a string of double-faults against McNamee "left a question mark over Becker's ability to cope with the hard and powerful men he still has to face."

McNamee, making his 10th Wimbledon appearance, was able to cast an experienced eye over the form of the young West German, and added fuel to the argument.

"The empire was ready to crumble today. He is his own worst enemy," the 31-year-old McNamee said. "He is letting the pressure get to him and somebody else might exploit it better than I did."

Another British newspaper, the tabloid Mail, highlighted an Achilles tendon injury Becker picked up during the match.

Becker, who still is troubled by an inflamed finger, admitted after the match that the tendon strain made it difficult to push off from his right foot for two or three games, but there was no trouble after that.

"Because I am the champion, people are trying 110 percent to beat me. So I have got to try 120 percent."

Report shows

Crimes per household hits the lowest level since 1975

WASHINGTON (AP) — The number of American households touched by a crime of violence or theft in 1985 fell by 600,000 to one in every four, the lowest level in a decade, the Justice Department reports.

In 1985, nearly 22.2 million households were touched by crime, compared with 22.8 million the previous year, the department's Bureau of Justice Statistics said Sunday. The total has been declining since 1982, when nearly 25 million households were affected.

In 1985, households with high incomes and households in urban areas were more vulnerable to crime than others, with black households somewhat more vulnerable than white households. Crime touched 26 percent of black households, 29 percent of households with incomes of more than $25,000 and 30 percent of urban households.

One in 13 households was burglarized in 1985 or had a member who was the victim of a rape, robbery or an assault committed by a stranger, a category the agency labeled "high-concern crimes." The rate of such crimes stood at 10.5 percent of all households in 1981, but declined steadily until 1984. It was unchanged last year.

When the survey was first taken in 1975, nearly one-third of U.S. households were being affected by crime each year. Twenty-five percent were affected in 1985, 26 percent in 1984, 27.4 percent in 1983, 29.3 percent in 1982 and 30 percent in 1981 and 1980.

Most of last year's decrease compared to 1984 was due to a 6 percent drop in the percentage of households touched by personal theft — an overall decline of more than 500,000.

One big factor is a drop of nearly 2 million during the past five years in the size of the 15- to 19-year-old age group, which is most responsible for property crimes, said Alfred Blumstein, a professor in the school of urban and public affairs at Carnegie-Mellon University in Pittsburgh.

More than a million fewer households were touched by crime last year than in 1975, despite the addition of 16 million new households in that period.

The survey is not a measure of the amount of crime occurring in the nation. A household is counted only once, no matter how many times it may be victimized.

Earlier this year, the FBI reported that major crime reported to police rose 4 percent last year compared to 1984. Total crime in America, which includes crimes that aren't reported to authorities, fell slightly in 1985 compared to the previous year, but the decline was not statistically significant, the Bureau of Justice Statistics said.

The proportion of suburban households touched by crime declined by 25 percent from 1975 to 1985, and the drop for rural households was 24 percent in that period. The proportion for urban households, on the other hand, was only 17 percent.

Thousands march in gay pride parades, counter-demonstrations

By The Associated Press

"Gay-lesbian pride day" parades attracted thousands of supporters and some counter-demonstrators in several U.S. cities, marking the anniversary of the birth of the homosexual rights movement 17 years ago.

No serious incidents were reported between pro- and anti-homosexual groups during demonstrations Sunday in New York; Columbus, Ohio; San Francisco; and Seattle. Three people were arrested in Chicago when fighting broke out among spectators at a Ku Klux Klan rally held to protest the nearby homosexual rights parade.

The parades marked the anniversary of the 1969 riots at a New York gay bar called the Stonewall, where patrons responded to a police raid with beer cans and rocks. The riots mark the beginning of the militant gay rights movement.

In New York, demonstrations for and against homosexual rights were held on the steps of St. Patrick's Cathedral after a federal court gave a Roman Catholic homosexual group the right to stand in front of the church during the parade.

Almost 2,000 police officers were on hand to keep the demonstrations at the cathedral peaceful. Aside from some shouting and several raised fists, there were no problems, said Sgt. Raymond O'Donnell, a police spokesman.

The San Francisco parade drew about 30,000 participants calling for more efforts to fight acquired immune deficiency syndrome and protesting a proposal to quarantine AIDS patients and ban suspected AIDS victims from school and food service jobs. The proposal recently qualified for placement on the November ballot in California.

In Seattle, a group of teachers, some wearing grocery sacks over their heads, marched under a banner reading, "Teachers with pride still have to hide."

Organizers of the march in Columbus estimated that 8,500 people took part there. "We need to keep parading until people realize that we are a major part of the population. We're workers, we're voters, we're taxpayers," said Scott Walton, one of the organizers of the parade.

In Chicago, former Mayor Jane Byrne sat in one of the parade's lead cars and was greeted by cheers and loud applause.

"I've been coming to this parade for a long time," Mrs. Byrne said. "We all have constitutional rights. I'm just supporting their constitutional rights."

Strake: party will unite for November

DALLAS (AP) — George Strake, who warded off a challenge from religious conservatives and kept his position as chairman of the Texas GOP, says the party can learn a lot from its new members.

"I think our net gain out of that group (religious conservatives) is going to far exceed any negative that might come out of it," he said after his victory Saturday at the annual state Republican convention.

Strake won by a wide margin over challenger Sam Hoerster, an Austin minister. Vice chairwoman Diana Denman, who had opposed Strake with the backing of the conservatives, pulled out of the race late Saturday after preliminary reports showed her running second.

After the roll call vote, which was preceded by boisterous debate over rules and procedures, Strake was still chairman of the party and Ms. Denman had narrowly won re-election as vice chairwoman on a floor nomination.

Strake said it is important that Republicans smooth over differences and concentrate on the November elections. He said the religious conservatives bring a concern about moral issues to the party.

"A lot of them are new to politics," he said. "They came in kind of like a roaring lion to try and get their message across."

Earlier Saturday, Vice President George Bush referred to the rift in the party and also said Republicans they must unite for the November campaigns.

"We can fight like cats and dogs in our primaries and we can battle in this convention for positions of leadership, but when those battles are over, we must join together and send a signal to all Texans that we are the party of inclusion," Bush said.

Bush said that in a growing party there are bound to be some internal differences but added those feuds are a healthy sign that Republicans aren't afraid to exchange ideas.

Bush, who has courted the more conservative wing of the party since he announced an interest in the 1988 presidential race, leaned on his Texas connections saying he raised his family in West Texas and has voted in Texas ever since 1948.

The vice president said Republicans are bound together by the fundamental values of family, hard work, education and patriotism.

Bush and former Gov. Bill Clements traded compliments during their appearance before the convention.

Clements, who followed Bush on the podium, blasted Democratic Gov. Mark White.

Names in News

HOLLYWOOD, Calif. (AP) — An arts supply salesman wouldn't take no for an answer and after flooding Johnny Carson with requests finally got the part he had long dreamed of: bellowing "Heeere's Johnny."

John Searing, 36, of Caldwell, N.J., introduced Carson on "The Tonight Show Starring Johnny Carson" on Thursday night.

He first wrote Carson in 1980, asking whether he could do the introduction, traditionally done by Ed McMahon. He received a photo of Carson but that was it. He renewed his efforts in November.

His subsequent attempts to win the role included sending 500 letters.

"It certainly was the highlight of my life, because I'd watched the show for so many years," Searing said Sunday.

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (AP) — Comedian Kip Adotta will be master of ceremonies at a benefit concert tonight for the families of Rick Nelson's Stone Canyon Band and crew.

Among those scheduled to perform at the $22.50-a-seat show are Mick Fleetwood & The Zoo, which features many alumni from the Stone Canyon Band.

Nelson, 45, his fiancée, 27-year-old Helen Blair, and five members of his band were killed last New Year's Eve on their way to a performance in Dallas when their smoke-filled DC-3 crashed and burned near DeKalb, Texas.

SHERIDAN, Wyo. (AP) — Reclusive rock star Prince will be here Tuesday as promised for the premiere of his movie "Under the Cherry Moon" even though buses may have to be substituted for limousines, organizers say.

Buses may be used because it has been difficult to find limousines for the yet unidentified celebrities expected to attend the premiere, said Diane Abrams, of Warner Bros. Inc.

The visit is the result of a Sheridan girl's telephone call to MTV, the music video cable television station. Lisa Barber was the 10,000th caller in a competition to serve as host for the premiere of the film and act as Prince's escort for the movie and a party.

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Hong Kong native Alec Chein dazzled the audience and judges with his light-hearted playing of Saint-Saens' Concerto No. 2 in G Minor to win the eighth Utah Symphony Gina Bachauer International Piano Competition.

Chein, 33, was selected for the grand prize by an international jury. In all, 58 pianists representing 23 countries

News in brief

WASHINGTON (AP) — Within a decade, mainland China could become the largest market for American goods, according to a two-year study by the Joint Economic Committee of Congress.

"If problems of inflation and coordination can be overcome, continued growth will provide China sufficient wealth over the next decade to invest heavily in a variety of capital goods," said committee chairman Rep. David Obey, D-Wis. "That could be very good news for American businesses and American workers."

China's current rates of economic growth suggest "we are looking at what is potentially the world's largest market for a great many American-made products," Obey said.
