Local unemployment reaches record high

The unemployment rate in Pampa and Gray County jumped to what is probably an all-time high when it soared past 12.5 percent in May, according to Texas Unemployment Commission statistics.

The jobless rate in Pampa soared to 12.7 percent and Gray County's rate jumped to 12.9 percent as layoffs in oilfield-related businesses continue to have a grim effect on the local economy.

"I don't know if that's a record high or not," said Charles Vance, manager of the local TEC office. "But I've been here 28 years and it's the highest during that time." Vance said the previous high was 10.2 percent reached in June of 1983.

Reporting of local unemployment figures lags a month behind the state and national reports. Statistics for June released Thursday showed Texas reaching an all-time high of 10.5 percent, while the national jobless rate declined to 7.1 percent.

Vance said the number of job-seekers he's seen during recent days indicates that the local jobless rate for June could be even higher. Most of the job listings at the local TEC office are for temporary labor, he said.

The Pampa jobless rate jumped 3.7 percent between April and May, while the Gray County rate climbed 3.5 percent.

The only other area county with a comparable increase was Hemphill, where the rate jumped from 7.6 to 10.5 percent.

While the number of people holding jobs was not down substantially in May, a large number entered the labor force for the first time and pushed the jobless rate higher as they were added to the list of unemployed. Vance speculated earlier that the rate was adversely affected when the wives of people who had been laid off started looking for jobs and were added to the unemployed list.

"There are a lot of people who haven't had to work before who looking for jobs now," he said.

In Pampa, the number of persons holding jobs declined by only 26 between April and May, falling from 10,218 to 10,192. But the number listed as unemployed jumped from 1,016 to 1,479 and the total labor force swelled by over 400.

The same situation occurred countywide. The number holding jobs declined only from 12,560 to 12,528, but the total listed as unemployed jumped from 1,280 to 1,863.

The Hemphill Country statistics showed 74 fewer jobholders in May than in April and 69 more on the list of unemployed to push its rate higher. Hemphill had 2,110 persons holding jobs in May, compared to 2,184 the previous month.

Two of the other three counties served by the local TEC office showed a relatively stable jobs picture, while Lipscomb County's rate actually improved from 6.0 to 4.8 percent.

Robert's County's rate was up one percentage point to 8.6, even though TEC statistics showed the county actually had 37 more persons holding jobs than during the previous month.

The same thing happened in Wheeler County, where the jobless rate climbed from 6.8 to 7.5 percent, even though the number of jobholders increased from 2,655 to 2,795. The higher rate was caused by an increase in the total labor force from 2,849 to 3,021 as more people started looking for work.

The torch of Liberty is lit anew

NEW YORK (AP)—The Statue of Liberty, her newly lighted torch held high, resumed her reign as a shining beacon of hope to the world Thursday night while millions of people, two presidents and an armada of sail and sea power hailed her first hundred years.

The statue was illuminated anew in New York Harbor in a gala, patriotic ceremony highlighted by the swearing-in of hundreds of new citizens, a show-business extravaganza and a rededication of friendship between France and the United States.

President Reagan presided as the gilded torch was rekindled and fireworks exploded over the darkened harbor to the strains of "Stars and Stripes Forever" to climax the evening-long festivities for the monument's rebirth after a $66 million facelift.

"We are the keepers of the flame of liberty. We hold it high tonight for the world to see," Reagan said.

Earlier, he pressed a button that sent a laser through the night and triggered a 1.4 million-watt light show illuminating the statue and marking the rebirth of the monument after a $66 million facelift.

The laser beam bathed the base of the 151-foot statue in red light, then blue, and finally a brilliant white light from 15 6,000-watt lamps.

Reagan, who with President Francois Mitterrand of France will participate in much of the weekend pageantry, hailed the statue as "a beacon of hope for all mankind."

"God Bless America," said Pope John Paul II, in a videotaped statement shown at St. Patrick's Cathedral. He said the towering monument still served as a welcoming symbol for "the tired, poor, uprooted people of the world."

Thousands of new citizens in 47 cities were being sworn in over the weekend, including some 300 Thursday night by Chief Justice Warren Burger on Ellis Island, where 12 million immigrants were processed in the statue's shadow over the years.

The unveiling of the Statue of Liberty and relighting of her torch, after a restoration project aided by corporations and schoolchildren alike, opened four days of pomp, ceremony and a kaleidoscope of entertainment in honor of the statue and Independence Day.

The Reagans arrived on windswept Governors Island and were greeted by a uniformed honor guard.

The televised spectacular got under way with the national anthems of the United States and France, followed by remarks from Mitterrand, who wished the statue and America a happy birthday.

The audience for the ceremonies includes millions of people in the United States and 33 other countries, while 6 million to 13 million were expected in the area for festivities like street fairs, the world's biggest fireworks display, biggest marching band, open-air concerts and superstar-studded extravaganzas in New Jersey and New York.

Oil price drop gets the blame

DALLAS (AP)—The price of oil, the benchmark of prosperity during the petroleum boom, is now the reason a record number of Texans are standing in the unemployment line, officials say.

The effects of collapsing oil and gas prices drove the state unemployment rate to 10.5 percent, an increase of 0.9 percent from May and almost 3½ points above the 7.1 percent rate for June 1985, the Bureau of Labor Statistics reported.

In contrast, the national unemployment figure dropped to 7.1 percent, wiping out an increase the previous month, officials said.

The state's unemployment figure was the highest since the present method of computing the jobless rate was adopted in 1970.

Bryan Richie, regional commissioner for the bureau, said the statewide increase was the result of a huge increase in the number of Texans unable to find jobs, as well as a drop in the state's total employment.

"Clearly, the decline in business activity, especially since the first of this year has been linked to the rapid and significant reduction in oil and gas prices," he said.

For many Houston-area residents, who a few years ago were enjoying life in a boomtown, the petroleum industry's recession has meant sudden hard times.

According to federal figures, 175,200 people were unemployed in the Houston metropolitan area in May, compared with 145,500 in April.

Eugene Lisoy, 45, of Houston, operated a design firm called International Interiors. He is seeking another job until his business revives.

"Two or three months ago, four of my clients filed Chapter 11. Most everybody went bust. All quit doing business. That means we have about $100,000 out there that we can't take in for a couple of years," he said.

Bill Jones, manager at the Texas Employment Commission office in Houston, said the city is an employers' market. He said the office is placing about 300 people a month into jobs, compared to 400 to 500 a year ago.

More people are taking temporary jobs in sales and telephone soliciting, he said.

The immediate future of the West Texas oil patch also is bleak, said Charmain Carl, employment supervisor for the Texas Employment Commission in Midland.

The price of oil "is the tail that wags the dog around here," Ms. Carl said. "I bet nine of every 10 people could tell you what the daily price of oil is. That's what we live by."

Unemployment jumped sharply in May in both Midland and nearby Odessa. Midland County reported a jump from 8.8 percent in April to 11.7 percent in May. Ector County's jobless rate rose 11.7 percent to 16 percent over the same time.

County-by-county breakdowns of the June unemployment figure will be available later in the month.

Horseshoe hunt's over

The Golden Horseshoe hunt ended Thursday afternoon when young Jennifer Walker found the prize on the underside of a mechanical buggy ride in front of the Alco Store in Coronado Center.

The prize find entitles her to box seat tickets, valued at $114, for all three performances of the Top O' Texas Rodeo July 10-12, plus a ride in a convertible in the rodeo parade.

The daughter of Glenda Walker, 408 N. Christy, she found the horseshoe before the end of the fourth day of the hunt which started Monday using clues published in The Pampa News and hidden in local stores.

The first four clues had included: "My home was only a field in the 50s," and "I'm outside and under, but I'm protected and above the ground."

One of the clues was "Changing, growing, progressing, Pampa is always going forward." The Alco store had expanded into the larger building earlier this year.

The clue that would have been released today was "New construction and vast remodeling—both are nearby," referring to a major construction project underway in Coronado Center.

But tax hike still likely

Lefors trustees study cuts

By LARRY HOLLIS
Staff Writer

LEFORS - Trustees of the Lefors Independent School District considered a preliminary budget for the 1986-1987 school year approximately 2 percent less than the present budget.

During the regular board meeting Thursday night, Supt. Earl Ross presented a tentative budget for operating expenditures of $1,098,519, more than $18,700 below the present year's budgeted expenditures of $1,117,282.

Ross said the budget had been cut in every area except plant maintenance and operation, which will see some increases this year from energy conservation projects in the high school building and other projects now underway.

But despite the increased maintenance expenditures, the overall budget will have nearly a 2 percent decrease.

According to the preliminary figures, plant maintenance and operation will increase from $142,450 to $163,450, a $21,000 hike, mainly because of expenditures for the renovation projects at Lefors High School requiring matching funds for a federal grant.

The area having the biggest cut is instructional related service, dropped approximately $19,500 from the current $117,967 to $98,449.

Other areas showing decreases are instructional service, down $4,400 from $543,262 to $538,851; pupil service, down $9,340 from $117,967 to $98,449; and general administration, down $6,500 from $153,863 to $147,369. Ancillary service remains at $500.

Ross said he feels good the district can cut the budget without affecting the offered services and still "provide the maintenance projects for the high school and the installation of the TI-IN satellite computer instruction classes.

But some tax increase will still be necessary because of a decrease in assessed property values in the school district, he said.

In other matters, the trustees approved Energy Systems Engineers of Austin as engineers for the high school energy conservation projects. Engineering fees will not exceed $5,870, according to the submitted bid.

In a special called meeting June 19, the board had accepted the bid of Packard Supply and Construction, Inc., of Amarillo for installation of new doors in the high school and junior high buildings at $19,949. Ross said the doors should be ready for installation by mid-August.

Trustees approved Policy Section E local updates relating to class schedules, course availability, hours of operation, selection of course materials, maintenance of a library, grades, selection of honor roll members and honor graduates, testing and counseling matters.

Following an executive session, the board approved the employment of Barbara Jones as fourth grade teacher in the elementary school. The board also gave Lefors Elementary School Principal Bill Crockett the authority to hire a kindergarten teacher for the next school year.

Trustees accepted the resignation of third grade teacher Sandra Turner, who is moving from Lefors because of a job change for her husband.

Lefors school

In the special session last month, the board had approved employment of Brent Fountain as head football coach for high school and junior high and of Denise McKay on assignment for the elementary school.

Ross presented board members with a schedule of training institutes being conducted by the Texas Association of School Boards. Under new state regulations, school board members are required to attend training sessions to familiarize themselves with school laws, regulations, policies and operations.

Ross said the new TI-IN system, however, will have school board training sessions available along with some 2,000 hours of in-service training for teachers and staff.

In other business last night, trustees approved changing the meeting date next month to Aug. 14 and approved bills for payment.

In the special June 19 session, the board assigned Lefors High School principal Gene Gee as a classroom teacher in charge of textbooks and extracurricular activities assistant and the number two appraiser. The board named Crockett as principal of both the elementary and secondary campuses.

Trustees also changed Crockett's contract to 12 months and Gee's contract to 10 months.

Gee currently is attending a summer school session at Sul Ross University in Alpine to take school administration courses.

Local police on lookout for child

A call prompted by a missing child report on nationwide television has Pampa police scouring the area for the child and her abductor.

On April 22, NBC aired a missing child report on Jerri Sue Mayhan, of Butler County, Penn. That broadcast prompted an unidentified Pampan to call the Missing Children Center in Tampa, Fla., and report having seen the van in which the child was believed to have been abducted in the Pampa area.

Police have spent the last four days searching Pampa for the van, but with no luck, Police Lieutenant L.D. Laramore said.

The van is described as unknown make, extremely long, dark blue or green with a mountain scene mural running from its right rear bumper to its right front on the passenger side. In the scene is a two-foot tall skier standing on a snow peak and wearing a red hat and yellow pants.

Police are asking anyone seeing the van to call Lt. Laramore at the Pampa Police Department, 669-7407, or Pennsylvania State Trooper Glen Hall at 412-284-8100, extension 189.

"If anyone's seen that van please call us, because we've been looking for three days and haven't been able to find it," Lt. Laramore said.

The child, Jerri Sue Mayhan, was abducted on Feb. 22, 1985 after getting off a school bus. She is described as a white female, age 9, 50 inches tall and weighing 68 pounds, with brown hair, hazel eyes and a slender build.

tem, however, will have school board training sessions available along with some 2,000 hours of in-service training for teachers and staff.

In other business last night, trustees approved changing the meeting date next month to Aug. 14 and approved bills for payment.

In the special June 19 session, the board assigned Lefors High School principal Gene Gee as a classroom teacher in charge of textbooks and extracurricular activities assistant and the number two appraiser. The board named Crockett as principal of both the elementary and secondary campuses.

Trustees also changed Crockett's contract to 12 months and Gee's contract to 10 months.

Gee currently is attending a summer school session at Sul Ross University in Alpine to take school administration courses.

Routine arrest uncovers murder

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — A murder case involving five states was uncovered after police in this border city made what they thought at first was a routine arrest.

Terry Lee Brown, 36, of Swepsonville, N.C., was being held at the El Paso County jail on $75,000 bond under police charges of being a fugitive from justice for auto theft, said Jerry Tolbert, an investigator with the Texas Department of Public Safety.

Brown was arrested late Tuesday night on Interstate 10 east of El Paso on an investigation of speeding and driving while intoxicated. Later, he told the arresting officer that he stole the pickup truck he was driving and had killed its owner, said Tolbert.

"It started as just a routine traffic stop," said Tolbert. "He (Brown) just volunteered the information."

SINGER DIES—Rudy Vallee, who became the nation's first pop singing sensation 60 years crooning through a megaphone, died at his home in Los Angeles Thursday night. He was 84. Vallee's wife said he died while

Second Farm Aid concert launched at daybreak today

MANOR, Texas (AP) — Farm Aid II, Willie Nelson's personal effort to help family farmers, kicked off shortly after sunrise today with the first of 75 performers taking the stage to rock, roll and raise money for 18 hours.

"Thank you very much, and welcome to Farm Aid II," Nelson shouted to the crowd shortly after 7 a.m.

Clad in shorts, a sleeveless t-shirt and wearing his customary bandanna, Nelson roamed the stage and introduced the early acts.

"This is for the farmers today," said Jubal Clark, an Austin singer-songwriter before launching into a song he wrote for the Farm Aid concert.

"It's a sad situation for the farmers of the nation," he sang.

Since the early 1970s, Nelson has invited "a few" of his friends to Fourth of July picnic concerts, daylong celebrations of good music and good times. This year, he called them to Farm Aid II.

Nearly 40,000 spectators were expected for the concert that is scheduled to run until 1 a.m. Saturday.

Nelson also hopes that thousands more watching on television will pledge millions of dollars to help America's family farmers.

"There are people all over the world who are getting our help, but there are people right here in this country that need it today," Nelson said in an interview before the concert began.

"It's time we started looking at them and seeing how we can help."

The first Farm Aid concert, held last September at Champaign, Ill., raised about $9 million. Organizers say some $4.3 million has gone to rural relief efforts in nearly 40 states so far.

The projects include telephone hotlines for troubled farmers, legal services, food pantries. Future Farmers of America scholarships and purchases of seed for farmers who otherwise might not have been able to make a crop this spring.

Farm Aid II was being held at Manor Downs, a quarter horse racing and training track about 11 miles east of Austin.

The concert was being carried live on the cable television channel VH-1. Voice of America also was to carry excerpts to listeners overseas.

The show featured an eclectic lineup of performers — from the country lyrics of Willie, Waylon Jennings, Kris Kristofferson and Jerry Jeff Walker, to rockers like the Beach Boys, Steppenwolf and the Los Angeles band X.

The line-up also included folk singer Judy Collins, cajun fiddler Doug Kershaw, funk rocker Rick James and folk bluesman Taj Mahal.

"All of them are doing it as a personal favor to farmers," Nelson said. "We had to stop at 75 acts. But we didn't have to twist anybody's arm."

The Rev. Jesse Jackson was scheduled to make a speech Friday night, attending at the invitation of Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower.

"Every day, Farm Aid provides tangible, effective, grassroots help to thousands of farm families across Texas and the U.S. who are in the throes of a raging economic crisis," Hightower said.

"We have seen in just a few months' time the proven ability of Farm Aid to address the immediate, emergency problems facing our family farmers and ranchers," he said.

Former Texas justice pleas; faces another prison term

HOUSTON (AP) — Former Texas Supreme Court Justice Donald B. Yarbrough faces up to 10 years in prison and $500,000 in fines after he pleaded guilty in federal court to conspiracy and bribery charges stemming from a money-laundering scheme for drugs.

Yarbrough, who was elected to the state's highest court in 1976, entered his guilty pleas Thursday before U.S. District Judge Gabrielle McDonald. His pleas were in exchange for reduced charges. Under the plea bargain, two other bribery charges were dropped and the government agreed to not press further charges surrounding the case.

Sentencing is scheduled for Aug. 28.

The ex-justice is hoping to be sent to an out-of-state prison, if the judge rejects a request for probation, his court-appointed attorney Mike Brown said. He is already on parole on a previous bond jumping conviction.

U.S. Attorney Henry Oncken said he was surprised at Yarbrough's plea.

"I didn't anticipate originally that he'd plead guilty," Oncken said after Thursday's hearing.

Yarbrough, 44, agreed to plead guilty after deciding the government's videotaped evidence left him without a defense, Brown said.

He also "didn't want to submit his family to a long and embarrassing trial," Brown said.

Yarbrough spent five years as a fugitive on the island of Grenada after being convicted of a state perjury charge. In April, he was indicted by a federal grand jury along with George Neeley on charges they offered bribes to a bank president in a money-laundering scheme.

Neely, 50, a Houston used car salesman, also entered into a plea bargain by pleading guilty to one count of conspiracy. He faces up to five years in prison and $250,000 fines. His sentencing is scheduled for Aug. 29.

Neely and Yarbrough met through their dentist and Neely later sold Yarbrough a used car, said public defender Tom Berg, who represented Neely.

Yarbrough was arrested April 1 in the lobby of a downtown Houston hotel after allegedly arranging a $1 million deal with undercover agents posing as cocaine dealers.

The government's evidence included tape recordings of Yarbrough negotiating a $1 million money laundering deal with undercover agents wearing hidden microphones, Assistant U.S. Attorney John Lenoir said.

Yarbrough was convicted in state court in 1978 of lying to a grand jury investigating allegations he planned to have a South Texas banker killed to keep him from testifying in a civil lawsuit.

He was allowed to attend medical school in Grenada while free on appeal bond, but did not return for further judicial proceedings. He was arrested in 1983 on the Caribbean island of St. Vincent, returned to Texas and sentenced to seven years in prison for jumping bond.

The investigation of Yarbrough's latest troubles began in November 1984, just two weeks after he was paroled from a Texas prison, authorities said.

Yarbrough, who only spent $350 on his campaign, resigned six months after his election to the Texas Supreme Court.

LOST HERD — Abilene lost its herd of sculpted, wooden milk cows Thursday. The herd, on loan to the city by Dallas sculptor Wayne Amerine, was a victim of vandalism and theft and returned to the artist at his request.

The cows had frequently been upturned by vandals, but most recently it was discovered that several horns had been stolen and finally thieves made off with one entire cow and a theft report was filed with police.

America's a great place

Fate and the Gregorian Calendar have given me the Fourth of July column, and as should be I'm going to write about liberty, patriotism and being an American. It won't be exactly what you expected to hear.

Though some of our most prolific letters to the editor writers would probably scoff, I consider myself as patriotic an American as anyone. I love the country and the ideals it stands for, but those ideals we're celebrating are 210 years old and I think they've been twisted, mangled and often forgotten or ignored in the two-plus centuries since they were expressed.

Before anyone gets the impression that this is a negative column, I have to insist that it's not.

The liberties we have here are probably more than are available to any other nationality in the world. We should be thankful for that, but we shouldn't be deluded into thinking we're really free. The liberties we have now are a far cry from those the authors of the Constitution intended for us.

Modern Americans are now plagued by many of the same persecutions and restrictions that caused our forefathers to rebel against England in the first place, and I for one think that if they were alive in America today many might do it again.

The people who built America fled England because of high taxes, religious persecution and restrictions on personal liberty. They couldn't live their private lives without being run down by the government. They came here and started from scratch, and based their new government not on the British's, but on that of the Iroquois Indians.

Today, we have high taxes (and un-American deficits), religious persecution (albeit mostly reverse) and infinite restrictions on personal liberty.

Taxes, we all know about. Everything is taxed, and I wonder what would happen if we started dumping tea in a harbor.

Some religious groups, the Moonies and Hare Krishnas come first to mind, still must deal daily with persecution of their beliefs. Now, though, it's mostly the religious groups that are persecuting citizens. That's not far from what happened when our forefathers fled the harassment of the state-dictated Church of England.

You can practice your own religion now, but you're still gonna get harassed by the others. All of them want to impose their own differing moralities on the general population. Jerry Falwell did when he got Playboy yanked from the 7-11 stores. Tell me Pat Robertson's presidential bid isn't an attempt to force his religion's idealism on the country. Church groups band to fight liquor sales, or to get the Playboy Channel out of Borger.

Which leads us to restriction of personal liberties when it's really nobody's business. Get this:

President Reagan has been conducting a highly-publicized War on Drugs, and now is sending federal troops to the border to fight the influx of substances the government has decided to call illegal. Just like it once did with alcohol.

The fight is obviously hopeless, and the crime has no victims. Those who use drugs do it of their own free will. Marijuana is the most commonly consumed illegal drug, and in most states ranks in the top three among cash crops. A little weed that grows out of the ground, and is consumed, like other plants, with no processing whatsoever. Are any other weeds illegal in the U.S.?

Thomas Jefferson would raise all hell if he knew about this. Jefferson, along with that old rascal Benjamin Franklin, was a well-known and admitted connoisseur of marijuana. Jefferson grew it on his plantation. Some of the men we'll honor this weekend were potheads.

Franklin would've been persecuted and prosecuted a lot today. He used to sail all the way to Paris to cavort with the prostitutes, and did much cavorting on his home soil. What would he think of the new War on Pornography? Do we realize that today we struggle to keep out many of the tired and hungry masses?

Everywhere you turn: Wear Your Seatbelts! Buy Car License Tags! Get An Inspection Sticker! Drive 55! Register For The Draft! No Prostitution! No Fornication! No Giving Insider Stock Information! No Illegal Aliens! And on, and on, and on...Our lawbooks are filled with victimless crimes — infringements on our personal liberties.

In the past when I've written about considering moving to another country, that hasn't meant that's what I want to do. I love America. I'm damn proud to be an American and a Texan. But I don't love some of the things America has become. When I write about those it's with the hope that things will change.

I'm peaceful, and like the original patriots I want Life, Liberty and the Pursuit of Happiness. I have my dreams, grand dreams, and I still have the belief that I'll be able to achieve them. That's part of what America means to me.

Though there are things I can't write about here and seven words you can't say on the radio, we still have press freedom unequalled in the world. That is essential to my life.

We are a country of great ideals, many great accomplishments and a country built on hope for the best. The poor can become the rich, even still.

But a great many things have happened in the 210 years since the day we're celebrating. Hauntingly, the greatest symbol of today's America is still The Lady.

Today, our eyes are on the New York harbor where The Statue of Liberty stands proud and tall, with our help a survivor of 100 years and many more to come. She's everything America is about. But look closely at your television screen and you'll see that our greatest symbol, our beautiful beacon of hope, has chains wrapped around her feet.

Bovine statues vandalized, moved

ABILENE, Texas (AP) — A Dallas artist says the vandalism of his sculpture "Herd of Cows" is an udder disgrace and has ordered the exhibit herded up and moved out.

The eight wooden figures, painted black and white to resemble Holsteins, had been a popular sight in downtown Abilene, prompting favorable letters to the editor since they were put out to pasture in early June as part of the city's annual outdoor sculpture exhibit.

But the exhibit has also attracted less-welcome attentions, being moved, flipped over or placed in compromising positions.

The last straw came Thursday, when one of the cows was missing from the herd, and horns were missing from two cows and a bull.

The bovine burglary has prompted a newspaper campaign to commission a new exhibit and a private reward for recovery of the statue. Police are billing the theft as the Crimestoppers "Crime of the Week."

Lynn Barnett, director of the Abilene Cultural Affairs Council, sponsors of the exhibit, said the group was embarrassed and upset about the missing cow.

Wayne Amerine said he demanded his cows come home after the theft, estimated at more than $2,000.

"They are the original cows," he said from Dallas. "They mean quite a lot to me." Amerine said the exhibit was destined for a museum.

"We couldn't risk leaving them up over the July 4th weekend," Barnett said.

The Abilene Reporter-News has started a campaign to commission Amerine to create a special herd for the West Texas town.

Editor Glenn Dromgoole wrote in a black-bordered editorial: "We're gonna have to take the bull by the horns if we want to save our cows."

The newspaper made the first pledge of $250 for the Save the Cows Movement, and Dromgoole said Amerine has offered to give the citizens a special rate for five or six cows and calves.

Cooperative solution needed, White says

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov Mark White says it will take a "blend" of efforts between his office and the Legislature to solve Texas' $2.3 billion deficit problem in a special legislative session.

"Let's be realistic, there's no pie in the sky, no easy solution, no quick fix. That's unrealistic," White told a news conference Thursday.

The state's dire financial status was complicated Thursday with federal figures showing the state with 10.5 percent unemployment.

"I am working on efforts that will team with their (legislators') proposals," White said. "It needs to be a team effort. There is no earthly way I can lay out a policy and have it fly in the direction they choose to do."

Earlier, White said he was ready to call a special legislative session when lawmakers offer a plan to handle the deficit.

"It's going to require bold steps — and most of all cooperation — for the people of this state and their leaders to combat these outside pressures in our economy," White said.

The governor said he was working with his budget office on plans that would blend with legislators' proposals to be presented to the House Appropriations Committee, beginning July 11.

"There is no reason for us to head in one direction and the Legislature in another," he said. "First of all we have to cut. There is no question that no one is in a position to vote for any increase in revenue until they are satisfied that every cut that can be made has been made."

White also said his office was working on spending proposals that might be delayed until the 1987 Legislature.

White predicted a "ballpark" plan for the special session should be ready as early as the end of July.

White also said he did not think a special session would be needed because Texas has had to start borrowing federal funds again to pay the increased unemployment payments.

"It is a serious problem but we have a mechanism to take care of that problem," White said.

Hitchhiker: he offered to confess to crime

KERRVILLE, Texas (AP) — No one was responsible for killing an Alabama drifter at a Hill Country ranch, a former ranch worker has testified in an organized crime trial.

Carlton Robert Caldwell, 21, also testified he never saw anyone do anything intentionally aimed at killing Anthony Bates.

Caldwell is on trial, along with ranch owner Walter Wesley Ellebracht Sr., 55, and Walter Wesley Ellebracht Jr., 33, in connection with Bates' death.

The three are accused of conspiracy to commit aggravated kidnapping and murder in Bates' death in March 1984.

The state claims Bates and other hitchhikers were lured to the Ellebracht's ranch north of Kerrville with the promise of work and forced to stay.

The prosecution also contends Bates was tortured to death with a cattle prod, then his body burned.

Caldwell, the only defendant to testify so far, told the court last week he participated in the torture sessions. But he said he did so because he was afraid he would be tortured if he did not participate.

Caldwell also testified he tried to revive Bates when he stopped breathing, but he was unsuccessful.

After he was jailed in the case, Caldwell said he wrote the Elle-bracht's a note asking them to bail him out. Caldwell said he offered to write police a confession note after he had fled to Florida.

"I'll tell them that I killed him while you were in the field," defense lawyer Richard "Racehorse" Haynes read from the note Caldwell allegedly wrote.

"Nobody killed Anthony Bates, did they?" Haynes asked.

"That's a fact," Caldwell replied.

"You never saw anybody do anything there intending to kill him, did you?" Haynes asked.

"No," Caldwell said.

Haynes, reading from the handwritten note, said, "You know me well enough to realize I'm for you and not against you."

"I could mail in a statement that I strangled Anthony Bates," Haynes read from the note.

"I could change my identity in a matter of weeks," Caldwell said, according to the note Haynes read.

Caldwell's note also said, according to Haynes, "I'm willing to do this because I'm really fond of the Ellebrachts and I believe you shouldn't be charged with anything that wasn't your fault."

In his direct testimony, Caldwell said the younger Ellebracht instigated the torture sessions and that the senior Ellebracht participated in one torture ordeal involving another worker.

Sesquicentennial is important to Texans

AUSTIN (AP) — Ironically, what Texans like most about their state is also what they like the least — the weather, according to a recent poll.

A small percentage — 2.9 — found Yankees, bugs and animals and high unemployment most objectionable.

Asked "What do you like most about living in Texas?" 25.2 percent said "weather-environment." Heat-humidity — 28.6 percent — and weather-environment — 18.8 percent — led the list of what those polled liked least about the state.

The poll was conducted for the Foundation for Education on Free Enterprise, Inc., a recently established tax-exempt organization that says its activities will include research and publication of information on how the free enterprise system relates to Texas.

Foundation spokesman Joe Wyatt, a former Texas congressman, said the poll was done by Arthur J. Finkelstein & Associates, an Irvington, N.Y., firm.

EVER STRIVING FOR TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Our opinion

We are the real threats to freedom

Somewhere today, as America appropriately celebrates the 210th anniversary of one of mankind's greatest documents, the Declaration of Independence, many speakers will remind many audiences that freedom isn't always a certainty and that "eternal vigilance is the price of liberty."

Those speakers will be right. But most will miss the target when they get around to saying what we should be vigilant against.

If the speaker is a politician, he'll probably warn against those who dare to criticize the government of the freest nation on earth.

If he's a conservative, he'll probably talk about threats to freedom emanating from Moscow, Libya or Nicaragua, ignoring the fact that foreign governments have never cost American citizens a single liberty.

If he's a liberal, he'll say that freedom won't be a reality until this government becomes compassionate enough to meet all the needs of all the people who have needs, ignoring that fact that this would require diminishing the freedom of those without needs.

Few, if any, will point toward the greatest threats to the freedom of American citizens: American citizens, themselves.

The real threats to freedom materialize in places like Washington, D.C., and Austin, Texas, and Little Rock, Ark., and Baton Rouge, La. They assume form and shape in national congresses, state legislature, county courthouses and city halls, and in bureaucratic agencies we know only by initials, such as OSHA, FCC and IRS.

But even though they materialize in these places, they are breathed into life through the efforts of citizens who claim to cherish freedom, but who call upon government to enforce their will upon others.

They come from those who think all should be forced to wear seat belts or buy airbags for their cars.

They come from educators who think parents should be forced to raise their children a certain way and teach them certain things.

They come evangelists who think everyone should be forced to pray, and from the so-called secular humanists who think everyone should be prevented from praying.

They come from the farmer who wants an assured profit through subsidies, and from the businessman who seeks to have his competition outlawed through licensing.

They come from the moralist who thinks you should be prevented from reading Playboy magazine, and from the black who thinks you should be restrained from having anything to do with South Africa.

We like to think that we're free because we live in a democracy. That's not true. Democracy and freedom are not the same thing because a democratic form of government gives the majority the power to destroy the freedom of the minority. So freedom can exist in a democracy only as long as the majority refrains from forcing its beliefs, desires and prejudices on the minority.

Freedom in a democracy cannot exist if I, and others like me, seek to confiscate your property and use it in ways we think would be beneficial to the majority.

It cannot exist if we continually seek to impose our morals on you; if we do not recognize your individual right to think differently, live differently and be different from us.

On this Fourth of July, those among us who hope to preserve freedom in this society should remember one word and repeat it over and over again.

Tolerance. Tolerance. Tolerance.

A solution for Mexico

The world debt crisis is becoming to the 1980s what the energy crisis was to the 1970s: a serious global economic problem that sometimes gets better and sometimes gets worse, but never goes away.

Like the energy crisis, it is largely the product of the policies of foreign governments which we cannot control. Like the energy crisis, it can be minimized by sound U.S. policies. But just as the Carter administration balked at acknowledging the realities of the energy problem, the Reagan administration, particularly in its negotiations over Mexico's debts, has resisted doing what needs to be done — and in fact has made things worse.

The problem has its roots in the 1970s, when commercial banks vastly expanded their lending to the Third World. That was partly because developing nations looked like good bets for economic growth. But a bigger reason was that central banks let the private banks know they would be protected against default — thus shifting the risk of bad loans from the banks to the public.

Mexico is a good example of the results. Its external debts total some $98 billion, of which about a third is owed to American banks. In exchange for the last rescheduling of its obligations, the government has taken some drastic and painful steps to reduce spending. These have reduced the average Mexican's standard of living by more than 20 percent.

But it hasn't been enough. High interest rates and the falling price of oil, which provides 43 percent of the government's income, have made repayment an excessive burden. There have been threats that Mexico may simply halt payment of even interest on its loans for a year — a prospect that horrifies American bankers.

So the Reagan administration is pushing more loans to Mexico. Under the plan being circulated in Washington, it would get $3.5 billion from governments and international lending agencies like the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund. Private banks would ante up another $2.5 billion.

But this approach merely postpones the problem of putting Mexico further in the hole. It ignores the obvious fact that, barring a sharp increase in the price of oil, Mexico simply can't repay its debts. Given that, the only sensible remedy is for the banks to negotiate a compromise that assures them of getting back some of their money, but without driving Mexico to economic disaster.

This solution is especially unpalatable to private banks. They'd prefer that Washington and the IMF rescue them from their mistakes. The Reagan administration ordinarily claims to believe in the unforgiving discipline of the free market, but it is indulging these lenders for fear that even a partial default would jeopardize the entire U.S. banking system, threatening a massive economic crash.

If that danger were real, it would warrant federal intervention. But it is mostly imaginary. Robert Z. Aliber, a University of Chicago economist who specializes in international finance, says that a realistic reduction in Mexico's debt service "is not a threat to the banking system or to any individual banks." And the Federal Reserve can soften the blow by letting the banks write down the loss over time.

It need not be a loss. The banks may simply trade debt for equity, getting part or full ownership of enterprises owned by the Mexican government as their price for reducing the debt load. This is bound to be resisted by the nationalistic Mexicans, but they may find it more attractive than making the country a pariah among Western lenders, which would be the result of a debt moratorium. The swap would have the beneficial side effect of reducing state involvement in Mexico's economy and thus facilitating growth — growth that would in turn enrich the banks.

But remedies like this aren't likely to emerge as long as the banks and the Mexicans have a more pleasant option — fobbing off some of their mutual problem on Western taxpayers. That is the approach that produced the current debt crisis, which affects not just Mexico but much of the Third World. Greater government involvement is not the answer but the problem.

Replacing the blackboard

The next generation is going to have to be smarter than we are.

Resolution of many of today's unsolvable problems is being deferred. "After us the deluge!"

The new generation must reach a higher general level of education on which continuing progress, if not survival, depends.

If we will get serious about improving education, new tools will help.

You and I were sold our first computers before they were ripe and before we were ready.

That household computer is now in a closet gathering dust.

Yet, while you and I are yet to demystify the "black box," our youngsters are learning to have fun with it.

Children love to do things that make things. This aesthetic intent now can be computerized.

Computer graphics can attract to education students who cannot be driven to it.

Unleashing fascination with new toys, new tools, youngsters between the ages of 4 and 9 can be made to "like" school.

This has been demonstrated repeatedly where elementary and secondary schools, for a demonstration of new computer and word processor techniques, draw a voluntary crowd even on Saturdays!

In technology, tomorrow never comes.

Computer software, despite worthy efforts by educators and industry, is lagging.

For every new "gee-whiz program" there is much that is mediocre, however distinguished its authors.

The process of evolution is always a race to catch up as new techniques, new strategies, prove or disprove themselves, eventuating in better things.

Dr. Jerome Wiesner, through his long tenure as educator and administrator at Massachusetts Institute of Technology, has been involved in the explosive development of several sciences — including flight, atomic and space technologies.

Yet Dr. Wiesner believes all our teaching tools to date are primitive compared to the potential of the computer.

"Here is a tool for dealing with knowledge so powerful we may be reliving the evolution of the human mind. We are at the beginning of a great intellectual adventure!"

Carnegie Mellon and others are very close to reproducing an "intelligent tutor" for one-on-one teaching at a rate increased by a factor of four.

Some teachers understandably resist and resent this classroom intrusion, consider themselves threatened by it.

This, too, shall pass as teachers learn from students to rethink the aims and means of education.

What the reaper was to agriculture, the computer will be to education. Inevitably.

It's been said that if, in 1986, the blackboard had not yet been invented it would take a while to convince educators of its value.

Selling South Africa not an easy job

By Don Graff

I feel sorry for Herbert Beukes. He comes across as an intelligent, reasonable individual. You might almost think he really believes what he's saying. As a spokesman for his government, he could scarcely be improved upon.

But reality keeps tripping him up. Beukes is South Africa's ambassador to the United States. I'm on his mailing list, the recipient of frequent reports on what's happening in his country.

He has a way of making that sound very encouraging. His government is committed to change, he says, and the pace is quickening. Apartheid is on the way out. Significant racial reforms are being introduced. Democracy — real democracy for everybody in South Africa, not just the white minority — is right around the corner, if only his government's critics will be understanding and a little patient.

For example, the pass laws, which for 70 years have restricted where blacks could live and work, are to be scrapped. The government promises blacks eventual citizenship and even a share of political power.

It does indeed sound promising as Ambassador Beukes tells it. He does not, however, tell enough, as the carnage we are now witnessing in his country demonstrates.

Take those pass laws again. They require every black older than 16 to carry an identification document specifying birthplace and tribal origin. Official permission to live and work outside tribal homelands must be noted in an individual's pass book. Being caught unauthorized in white areas — even the huge black residential townships around major cities — means prison.

The pass laws have been central to apartheid and, among blacks, its most hated manifestation. Abrogation would indeed be significant.

But blacks still would not be free to live and work where they chose. Their freedom would remain restricted to designated black areas. There are no plans to desegregate housing. Education and health services would remain separate and unequal.

And blacks still would be subject to the brutal emergency powers which the government has now resorted to in the effort to curb an incipient revolution, but which in actuality are only hastening it.

The rule of law, in effect, has been suspended. The army and police are empowered to use force as deemed necessary, arrest without charge and search without warrant. They may close down businesses, appropriate essential services, forbid use of cars and travel by the public, ban press coverage and censor communications.

This is change? This is fertile ground for the flowering of freedom and democracy?

The black townships are in a state of simultaneous open rebellion against the white authorities and civil war among rival black factions. Government forces have effectively lost control except when making heavily armed sweeps through the areas, adding to the mounting death toll.

Under the circumstances, what claim moderate black leaders have on the allegiance of their people is fast eroding. With the government's own behavior destroying its credibility as an agent of meaningful change, black militancy is being encouraged.

"WE LOVE YOU, LADY!"

The nation takes a holiday

By The Associated Press

Whatever it takes to party, America had it ready today — watermelons, musicians, cannons, bells, parades, races and fireworks both safe and insane.

So much to seek, so much to do: a 12,000-pound rubber tire at the "Go 4th" celebration in Topeka, Kan., a 50-foot tall plywood Statue of Liberty in Zionville, Ind., or a 60-pound tallow sculpture of the Statue of Liberty in the St. Francis Hotel in San Francisco, which also featured a tallow and white chocolate sculpture of the battleship USS Missouri.

If you could stand to wait until Saturday, a selection of Calvin Coolidge look-alikes were promised at a purposely dull picnic in Parma, N.Y. And for something completely different, there was the dedication of a new 50-foot Christmas tree in Plant, Tenn.

With the Statue of Liberty officially rededicated, lighted, serenaded and saluted with fireworks the night before, the national attention was free today to wander to the customary diversions of a long summer weekend.

Inevitably, there were some problems.

Philadelphia will have no concert with its fireworks tonight, Mayor W. Wilson Goode said, because striking city workers had threatened musicians. As the strike by 15,000 workers entered its fourth day, trash cluttered the streets and sidewalks.

Managing Director James White asked Philadelphians to bring their own litter bags to holiday events.

In Williamsville, N.Y., 17-year-old Jonathon Ross was killed Thursday when a pipe bomb he was assembling in his basement exploded. "It was a Fourth of July-type thing and not terrorist related," said Amherst Police Lt. Richard Langenfeld.

In Spanaway, Wash., 17-year-old Edward Zenker was in serious condition after being shot in the head Thursday by a homeowner whose mailbox had been blown up by a firecracker, police said. A 36-year-old suspect was arrested.

In Anaheim, Calif., fireworks were blamed for a fire which destroyed 40 units of an apartment complex early Thursday. Two hundred people were evacuated without injury.

For America's newest citizens, who took their oaths in naturalization ceremonies on Thursday, it was a special holiday.

"It's hard to describe how I feel," said Rosana Corpas, a native of Spain who was naturalized in Omaha, Neb. "I want to hang a sign on my house saying, 'I'm an American.' I want everybody to know."

More new citizens were being sworn in today, including a ceremony at Monticello, Thomas Jefferson's Virginia home.

There was an old-fashioned cast to events in Massachusetts, which included a firemen's muster in Franklin, a bonfire in Rockport, a road race in Princeton, a military pageant in Deerfield, a chicken barbecue in Monson and a recitation of the Declaration of Independence at Old Sturbridge Village.

Boston made do without the Boston Pops, which canceled its traditional July 4 date on the riverside to perform at the Statue of Liberty ceremonies. The orchestra will return Saturday and the city laid on an extra night of fireworks.

A flotilla of seasoned small craft waited to join the USS Constitution, "Old Ironsides," for its annual trip around Boston Harbor this morning and the firing of a 21-gun salute as the bells peal in Old North Church.

In Nashville, a flotilla of red, white and blue sailboats and paddleboats invaded the Cumberland River as part of Middle Tennessee Homecoming '86.

Texas, naturally, was doing it big and doing it Western-style, with wailin' Willies — Willie Nelson and Boxcar Willie at the Farm Aid II concert — near Austin and a wagon train which reached Fort Worth after creaking 3,000 miles around the state.

NEW CITIZENS SWORN IN — An unidentified candidate for U.S. citizenship waves flags Thursday night at a mass swearing in of citizens at Miami's Orange Bowl. Officials said 14,200 were sworn in via satellite hookup by Chief Justice Warren Burger. The ceremony broke the U.S. record for induction of citizens. (AP Laserphoto)

U.S., hoping a for summit, drafting reply to Gorbachev

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. officials, hoping to clear the way for a Ronald Reagan-Mikhail S. Gorbachev summit, are drafting a reply to the Soviet leader's call for progress in reducing strategic nuclear arsenals.

The Soviets want a response to their proposal to reduce U.S. and Soviet weapons before agreeing to a pre-summit meeting between Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze and Secretary of State George P. Shultz, American officials have said.

President Reagan received a letter from Gorbachev last week in which the Soviet leader called for progress in all phases of arms control negotiations and on ending the testing of nuclear weapons, according to the officials, who spoke only on condition of anonymity.

State Department and other U.S. officials are drafting a reply for Reagan. However, Larry Speakes, the White House spokesman, said Thursday "it will be a while" before the president replies to Gorbachev.

There has been recent progress toward a Reagan-Gorbachev summit, with it appearing increasingly likely that Shultz and Shevardnadze will meet here, probably in September, to map an agenda for the two leaders.

The Shultz-Shevardnadze meeting initially was scheduled for mid-May, but the Soviets canceled it to protest the U.S. bombing of Libya in mid-April. In the meantime, the Soviets offered in Geneva a proposal to reduce U.S. and Soviet long-range bombers, intercontinental ballistic missile and nuclear-bearing submarines.

Reagan called it a serious proposal, worthy of U.S. consideration, but the talks recessed last month without a U.S. response.

In an interview published Thursday in USA Today, Reagan said Gorbachev's message made him "optimistic that we're not only going to have a summit, but that we're going to have a summit where we can reach agreement on some of the goals that we share."

He also told the newspaper: "We have said from the very beginning that we would like a reduction of nuclear weapons leading to the ultimate elimination of such weapons. Well, now they have said the same thing. And, if we both want the same thing, we ought to be able to find a way to reach that goal."

Reagan and Gorbachev agreed at their "fireside" summit last November in Geneva to hold back-to-back meetings this year in Washington and in 1987 in Moscow. But preparations stalled as superpower relations declined. One of the main obstacles, U.S. officials said, is that the Soviets want to be sure the next summit produces agreements to curb nuclear weapons.

Yuri Dubinin, the new Soviet ambassador, said in a separate interview that dates will be set for the summit meeting as soon as Reagan replies "positively" to the latest series of Soviet arms control proposals.

"We hope the American administration will answer positively to our suggestions," Dubinin told Hearst News and Features Service. "That would make the new summit meeting possible."

Dubinin did not define what Moscow would regard as a positive response.

Crowd cheers end of a long and hard trip

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — The grist that powered a marathon journey into Texas history comes apart piece by piece today as riders aboard the Sesquicentennial Wagon Train sell their equipment and pack up to go home.

"Yeah, it's sad that it's all over," wagoneer James Simmons of New Boston, Texas, said Thursday as the train rolled into this city's historic stockyards on the last leg of a six-month, 3,000-mile odyssey. "But I think we're all ready to go home now."

A few of the 150 wagons and 1,000 horses that formed a four-mile-long chain as it snaked through the city will go on to Saginaw Saturday, but for most, this was the end of the line.

"I'm glad to be going home," said Bessie Williams of Donaldson, Ark., who like Simmons made the entire trip. "It was a great experience, especially the people, but the Texas heat can be hard to bear."

As part of today's Independence Day-Sesquicentennial festivities, a wagon-train auction is scheduled to help participants sell off the animals and hardware they don't want to take home.

Heavy rains grudgingly yielded to sunshine Thursday as the wagon train rolled into Fort Worth, and weary but exuberant riders were greeted by thousands of spectators who waved Sesquicentennial flags and yelled cheers.

"We are proud of you," one said. "Welcome home!" "How did you do it?" wondered another.

"This is what Texas is all about," Fort Worth Mayor Bob Bolen crowed at the procession's end.

Near Billy Bob's Texas — which claims to be the world's largest country-western honky-tonk — the last official act of the wagon train that began Jan. 2 in Sulphur Springs came when Billy Bob Barnett's horse was shod with a golden horseshoe and silver nails.

For many of the participants in the caravan, which included representatives from 29 states, today is a day of parting from friends they made aboard the train.

"But it was a step into history, and we were a part of it," said Vera Burg of Euless. "I was used to seeing Texas at 55 mph on a highway, but this time I got to see the history in each town."

The trip was also educational for the children who turned out by the thousands to line parade routes from Longview to El Paso, Simmons said.

"I really enjoyed seeing kids all along the route, some crying, some waving, some laughing. And after all," he added as his homemade wagon rolled along a city street, "this whole thing is for them so they'll remember and have a part of Texas history."

They also will have a part of Texas memorabilia — volunteers handed out thousands of tiny flags to beaming children and adults who weren't any better at concealing their smiles.

"Gracious, I've never seen so many smiling faces at one time," said Simmons' wife, Merle.

But the jubilation of Thursday's parade was countered by some tough times, riders said. "It sleeted on us in Amarillo and we were nearly dusted to death out near El Paso," Simmons said.

The train also had its tragedies: A traffic accident killed one woman near San Antonio and a heart attack killed another. But the husband and children of the woman who died in the accident rode her wagon Thursday, determined to see the trip through.

It was that brand of doggedness that kept the train going through times when the number of wagons dropped to 30 from the 80 that started out on the meandering route through the state.

"I never doubted that we'd finish," said Simmons, 63. "But I tell you, I'm ready to go home. The first thing I'll do is take a bath."

Texas immigrants naturalized

DALLAS (AP) — Surrounded by a flurry of bunting and flags, and set against a backdrop of a recreated prairie town street, about 300 immigrants were welcomed to Texas Thursday and urged to wield their new-found clout as citizens.

"I never had the chance to take an oath like that," U.S. District Judge Jerry Buchmeyer told the group.

Join Us In Worship IN THE CHURCH OF YOUR CHOICE

A life, like a boat, can be steered in an infinite number of directions, but all ways are not equally good. The wise person wants to know what life is all about, which way leads to genuine fulfillment and which ways lead to the shoals of destruction.

The Church is God's appointed agency to give us guidance for life. The primary nature of that guidance is to assure us of God's good will toward us. The secondary step is to call us to love of our fellowman as God has first loved him. The two directions for fulfillment in life are trust in God and responsible love for one's fellowman. Let the Church help you direct your life in the right direction.

EVERYONE IN THE CHURCH
THE CHURCH IN EVERYONE

Is something wrong with your life — an inner restlessness, dissatisfaction? The answer to every human problem comes only from God out and reassurance. Through the church God has committed the provision and proclamation of His forgiveness and redemption to us. Without a church to God, everyone should be in the church, and the church should be in everyone.

HIS TOUCH

By Charlotte Barbaree

Scripture: Sing to the Lord a new song; sing to the Lord, all the earth. (Psalm 96:1 NIV)

The roof overhang of our front porch is supported by wooden posts which are attached to each other with a decorative wooden rail.

Nothing is special about the rail except for its attraction to children. Through the 17 years we've lived here, the rail has served our children and their neighborhood friends as pretend forts, houses, hurdles and diving boards. It has even served as an adequate, if not too private, courting place for our teenagers.

But what it has become most often through the magic of imagination is a stage. Some of the great performances of all times have taken place on that beat up, old wooden rail.

One of our neighbor children is a Down's syndrome child.

Jenny was very young and small when she moved next door, but our porch rail held the same fascination for her as it did for her brother and all the other neighborhood children.

Because of her small size, Jenny had to struggle to learn to get up on top of the rail like the other kids. After much frustration and several cracks of her head on the concrete porch, she finally mastered the climb.

Early one summer morning, I was cleaning house. The morning air was cool and my front door was open. Suddenly, I heard Jenny singing. I peeked out to find her standing on the old porch rail.

One arm was wrapped around one of the supporting posts; her other hand held an imaginary microphone. The tune she sang was obviously invented. She was still too young to talk well; therefore, her words were garbled. The only word she sang that I understood was "Jesus."

I've been blessed by the beautiful harmony of church choirs. I've had goose bumps from the thrill of hearing soloists of finest quality. I've enjoyed Christian music recorded by excellent professional singers.

But I've never heard more touchingly beautiful praise than the pure, sweet sound of Jenny's song.

Religion roundup

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Based on Lutheran-Reformed theological dialogues, the council of the American Lutheran Church is recommending full communion with the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and the Reformed Church in America.

The step would involve mutual recognition of validity of each other's ministers and celebrations of the Lord's Supper, allowing sharing in worship and ministers.

The proposal goes before the 2.3 million-member denomination's convention in August, with a similar proposal before the 111,000-member Association of Evangelical Lutheran Churches.

Both also are to decide on a merger plan with the larger 2.9 million-member Lutheran Church in America, before which more limited terms of relationship with the Presbyterian and Reformed bodies are being proposed.

MORRISTOWN, N.J. (AP) — The head of the National Religious Broadcasters Association has issued a plea for a halt to persistent, false rumors and protests about a non-existent petition by atheist Madalyn Murray O'Hair.

Rev. Ben Armstrong, executive director of the Morristown-based association, says that contrary to the rumors, the Federal Communications Commission is not considering any proposal by O'Hair, or anyone else, to restrict religious broadcasting.

The FCC has been flooded with more than 16 million letters protesting the supposed O'Hair petition since false word of it began circulating in 1975.

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — The head of the American Lutheran Church says that while he supports the planned merger of three Lutheran denominations into a single church, he fears the move will result in lost members and less evangelizing efforts.

"It is possible to do less evangelism by joining churches together. We must make certain that we do more," Presiding Bishop David W. Preus told the council of the denomination, which is scheduled to vote in August on merger with two other Lutheran bodies.

31-year aide follows boss into retirement

By COPE MOYERS
Dallas Times Herald

DALLAS (AP)—District Attorney Henry Wade is taking a lot of history with him when he leaves office at the end of this year. About 36 years worth.

But overshadowed by the chief's departure is that of C.C. "Bud" Adkins, who has decided to retire to his horse ranch in Seagoville when Wade, the only man he's called boss in 31 years, leaves Dec. 31.

Adkins, 70, will leave behind a law enforcement career that spans six decades in Dallas. He began as a part-time Dallas police officer in 1938, patrolling Fair Park during the State Fair of Texas. He'll retire as one of Wade's top investigators.

"The Texas District Attorneys Association said that I have been with Mr. Wade longer than any investigator has been with any district attorney anywhere in the state of Texas," said Adkins. "I'd thought I'd make a record — if I lived long enough."

And live he has. "I've done a little bit of everything," said Adkins, who still feels comfortable wearing Western suits, a silver belt buckle, boots and a cowboy hat in the Dallas County Courthouse, where tasseled loafers, pin-striped suits and leather briefcases are the standard uniform. "I've been a police officer, roped calves, rodeoed, whatever."

Adkins also wedged a stint in the Navy during World War II between jobs driving a streetcar on the old Dallas Interurban line.

But he doesn't hesitate to admit the years he's spent in Wade's office have been the best of his experiences. Since he went to work for Wade in 1955 after five years as Dallas deputy constable, he's done just about as much as anybody in law enforcement can expect to do.

"It was the best gun-toting job there was," said Adkins, whose soft-spoken style contrasts sharply with the .357-caliber pistol he discreetly carries. "I must have found the right man to work for, or I wouldn't have been here for 31 years."

Because he's been around so long, Adkins said, a lot of cases he's worked kind of run together in his memory. But while he doesn't have a "favorite" case, he does remember some more than others.

The double murders of a Dallas couple at Mountain Creek Lake in the early 1960s sticks out, Adkins said, because of the suspect, Kenneth Bruce Martin.

"I believe he was the coldest-looking man I ever looked at," said Adkins, adding that Martin was sentenced to death for the crimes but later had his sentence reduced to life in prison. "He was plain old bad."

While he doesn't look his age, a heart attack 10 years ago and years of chasing criminals and finding witnesses have slowed him a bit. Adkins no longer cruises the city investigating cases like he did for many years. Now he reviews all the cases before they are sent to the grand jury and testifies before the grand jury in cases requiring the formality of a reindictment.

"Bud Adkins has been a loyal, faithful and competent investigator since I hired him in 1955," Wade said. "I wish him well."

Adkins has no regrets about his life at the courthouse. "Really, I feel like I've done a little something good for the community," Adkins said. "I've seen, heard or read just about everything that could happen in crime. If (this) hadn't been a good job, I wouldn't still be here."

EPA issues strictest-ever permit for Gulf discharges

DALLAS (AP)—New, stricter Environmental Protection Agency discharge regulations for the Gulf of Mexico are already drawing criticism in the oil and gas industry.

For the first time, the EPA has issued enforceable toxicity limits for all drilling fluid discharges in the Gulf, including mixtures of water, clays, minerals, oil and special chemicals.

About 2,000 sites in the Gulf — spanning an area beginning three miles from the shoreline and extending up to 200 miles offshore — are covered by the new general permit that went into effect Wednesday, EPA spokesman Roger Meacham said.

"We can see some problems already, and we haven't even finished digesting it," said Bobby Hall, oil production director for the American Petroleum Institute. "We're not sure exactly what some of the limits mean."

Phillip Clark, vice president of the Washington-based National Ocean Industries Association, echoed Hall's sentiments.

"We have a lot of problems with it," he said. "The companies we represent are very upset with it. And although our assessments are still ongoing, at least one company has indicated it will seek judicial relief."

Technically, all companies operating in the Gulf now comply with the permit, Meacham said. But they all must file a notice of intent within 45 days to be completely in compliance.

"This allows operators currently discharging under an expired permit an opportunity either to gear up within 45 days to meet the limitations of this permit or to initiate discharging under the permit immediately," Meacham said.

Companies violating the permit could face civil penalties of up to $10,000 per day per violation. Criminal violations, which the EPA would have to prove intentional disregard of the law, could bring up to $25,000 per day per violation.

Meacham said he didn't know how many companies are affected by the permit, which he said protects biologically sensitive areas such as coral reefs by limiting discharge rates within about one-third of a mile of those areas.

The EPA hasn't yet issued final guidelines for those discharges, so the permit's limits are based on the EPA's "best professional judgment of what constitutes best available technology."

It requires companies to use the best conventional technology to control discharges of such pollutants as oil, grease and various oils. It also controls discharges of wastewater and sanitary wastes.

But Clark said the cost of complying with the permit could doom marginal oil leases in the Gulf.

"With the falling price of oil, more and more leases are already becoming marginal," he said. "It doesn't take much more to make a marginal well a no-go proposition."

He said that "we thought we had this resolved a couple of weeks ago ... but now it will require further negotiations. We're not toying with the public's health — we're far too knowledgeable."

Troubles in the oil patch are draining university faculty

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP)—Louisiana State University, its funding threatened by the depression in the oil industry, has become a rich field for universities from wealthier states.

Almost 100 faculty and staff members have been hired away from the Baton Rouge campus in the past year as falling oil prices have forced unprecedented budget cuts to education, said Chancellor James Wharton.

"Of course, these tend to be our very best faculty members — those with the best scholarly reputations and considerable support for their scholarship from the private sector and public foundations," he said.

LSU officials say another two to three-dozen faculty members are looking for jobs elsewhere as frustration mounts over state employees having been denied pay raises for the past five years.

"Morale in general is very low," Wharton said.

The departing instructors and researchers took $3.5 million in grants and contracts with them.

Wharton said Harvard, the University of California and the University of Georgia are among the schools which have raided LSU. Their quality is a compliment to the 109-year-old institution, he said.

"Our faculty are going to very prestigious universities," he said. "These are good people, and they're going to first-rate schools."

LSU's money problems are directly related to the oil industry which made its school of petroleum geology one of the nation's best.

Analysts say every dollar in the price of a barrel of oil works out to $50 million in Louisiana's treasury. As the price of oil plummeted from more than $30 to less than $15, Louisiana's budget fell with it.

Again, legislators have offered no pay raises for the new fiscal year. Instead, they proposed budget cuts of $81 million to higher education — $16 million of which would fall on LSU.

Meanwhile, the university is preparing to receive one of the largest freshmen classes in its history, nearly 5,000 students. Those students are being told they may have to pay a tuition increase of up to $250 a semester to offset some of the lost state funds.

That comes on top of increases which had more than doubled tuition and fees for state residents attending full time, from $522 a year in 1980 to $1,262 for students enrolling last fall.

"Up until last fall, there was a very strong rate of improvement in the institution," Wharton said. "The budget cuts last summer, though, were so severe we could not sustain the development and improvement of the university. That in turn was what led to the faculty and staff beginning to leave the university."

And since Louisiana's money troubles are national news, it's hard to find new people, noted Mason Carter, the new dean of the school of agriculture.

"Everyone knows that we have this problem. So we're handicapped in trying to find replacements for those who do leave."

Wharton said Louisiana residents should demand as much of the university's academic departments as its athletic teams.

Records reveal true origin of flag

By GENA WALLS

INDEPENDENCE DAY. Are you flying the Stars and Stripes? The American flag is an excellent example of tradition versus documented facts. Many of us were taught that Betsy Ross helped design and stitch the first flag that included both stars and stripes; however, known facts tend to prove this false.

William J. Canby, a grandson of Mrs. John Ross, claimed in 1870 at a meeting of the Historical Society of Pennsylvania that she was the maker and partial designer of the first flag. He said he remembered her telling stories of embroidering shirt ruffles for George Washington. Supposedly, in June 1776, knowing her skill with a needle, he approached her with a "sketch" provided by a committee of Congress, requesting that she stitch a flag. Using her suggestions, Washington is said to have altered the sketch prior to the sewing.

On June 14, 1777, Congress passed a resolution: "that the flag of the 13 United States be 13 stripes alternate red and white, that the union be 13 stars, white in a blue field representing a new constellation." There is no record of a "flag" committee nor of any special discussions.

Correspondence between George Washington and Richard Peters of the War Board in September 1779, indicates that the board had not solved the question of a design for "the standard flag of the United States." If Washington worked with Betsy Ross on a design, he made no mention of it.

In 1780, FRANCIS HOPKINSON submitted a bill to Congress for his labors in designing "the flag of the United States of America and other designs that appeared on the Great Seal of the United States and various ships papers and bills of exchange." The use of stars is thought to have been included in the design stemming from the bookplates of Hopkinson that carried his coat of arms with three six-pointed stars and the family motto, "Semper Paratus," or "Always Ready."

The journals of the Continental Congress clearly show that he designed the flag but the claim was rejected because the Board of Treasury felt that the public was entitled to extra services from men who drew high salaries and Hopkinson was "well paid as the Congressional delegate from New Jersey." Also, the board knew that "he was not the only person consulted" on the matter of design and could not rightly claim the entire amount.

Did Betsy Ross make a flag? Yes. The minutes of the State Navy Board for May 29, 1777, show that ELIZABETH ROSS made ship's colors from the Pennsylvania state ships and that she was paid 14 pounds, 12 shillings, and two pence. Perhaps this was the flag she told of making and during the course of time and "family traditions" the events were changed.

Whichever version is true, the flag is a symbol of our heritage and freedom. A booklet on the proper way to display, fly, fold and store the flag can be obtained from the Library of Congress.

Dear Abby

Roll call of lung cancer is list of shameful waste

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1986 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: I never thought I'd be writing to you, but all those letters about smoking and lung cancer have forced me to write. You probably won't use this, but just ask yourself: How many smokers do you know? How many people do you know right now who have lung cancer? Have you ever personally known anybody who died from lung cancer?

I am willing to bet that you know many smokers, but cannot name one person who has lung cancer now, and have never personally known anyone who died from it. So, if it's true that smoking causes lung cancer, isn't it strange that so few people can come up with a single name?

STILL SMOKING

DEAR SMOKING: You cannot be serious. According to the American Cancer Society, here's a partial list of some famous people who have died of lung cancer: Edward R. Murrow, Damon Runyon, John Wayne, Humphrey Bogart, Lillian Hellman and Yul Brynner (who made a television commercial shortly before his death begging people not to smoke). Add Arthur Godfrey, Selma Diamond, Robert Taylor, Francho Tene, Betty Grable, King George VI, Buster Keaton, Sen. Robert Taft, Nat King Cole, Boris Pasternak and, more recently, Alan Jay Lerner.

And I have had some close personal friends and a beloved relative who have also paid a terrible price for the "pleasure" of smoking.

DEAR ABBY: I'm writing to you because I am at my wit's end with my sister-in-law. She calls me collect just to see how we are. I wouldn't mind paying for a collect call in an emergency, but she calls just to chat.

I'm not a cheapskate, but she is just as able to pay for the phone calls as we are. I write to her, but she's too lazy to write, so she picks up the phone and calls me collect! She's my husband's sister and I don't want to get her mad at me, but she never talks less than 20 to 30 minutes, and we live 2,000 miles apart, which runs into money.

Don't get me wrong; I love her to pieces, and wouldn't hurt her feelings for the world, but I just had to get this off my chest.

TIRED OF COLLECT CALLS

DEAR TIRED: Getting this off your chest may reduce your blood pressure, but it won't reduce your telephone bill. Nothing will change unless you tell her (person-to-person) how you feel about those collect calls. Suggest that one time you pay, and the next time she pays.

DEAR ABBY: Every morning my dad reads the newspaper. When he reads your column, he will not listen or talk to anyone.

Will you please tell him I want a yellow checkered shirt like my brother's? Thanks.

MICHAEL THIESE (AGE 10), MACON, GA.

DEAR MICHAEL: Consider him told. I hope this helps.

Patio set is worth stealing

By STEVIE BALDWIN

You know times are tough when robbers break into your yard and steal the patio furniture.

I could understand them taking the TV, stereo or anything of reasonable value... but broken down, aluminum patio furniture? All they had to do was ask and I would've given it to them.

Oh well, we needed some new patio furniture anyway. What better place to start than with this great patio dinette set, featuring a 4-foot square table and four comfortable chairs.

Built from PVC pipe, the chairs and table are a snap to put together. The table top and chair seat supports are plywood. Standard cushions will fit the chairs, and the table is drilled to accept a purchased patio umbrella.

The table top is made from ¾-inch plywood. If you plan to use an umbrella, you should purchase it before constructing the table so you can drill the center hole to the right size.

The chair consists of two identical rectangular side sections with four vertical ¾-inch bars equally spaced across each side.

To make one chair, you'll need 20 feet of 1½-inch pipe, 14 feet of ¾-inch pipe, eight T-joints, 10 90-degree elbow joints and a 2x4-foot piece of ½-inch plywood.

Construct the vertical front leg in the following order: an elbow joint at the top, a 5-inch pipe, a T-joint, an 11-inch pipe and another elbow at the bottom. The vertical back leg is identical, but use a T-joint instead of an elbow at the top.

The lower horizontal assembly consists of two 7-inch pipes joined by a T-joint. Drill four equally spaced holes across the pipes, for the vertical bars.

The upper horizontal section consists of a single 17-inch pipe, drilled to match the holes in the lower pipes. Insert the four vertical side bars, and then join the vertical legs to the ends of the horizontal assemblies.

Extend the upper end of each back leg by adding a 5-inch pipe, an elbow with the open end pointing backward, a 1½-inch pipe and another elbow pointing toward the center of the chair.

Assemble an identical side section; then join the two sides by inserting 21-inch pipes into the open ends of the T-joints and elbows. When you have a good fit, secure the joints using PVC cement or self-tapping screws.

Cut a seat and seat back from plywood. Attach them to the frame using molly bolts or wood screws. Add a purchased cushion. Now if thieves make off with your patio furniture, they'll be stealing something that's worth it!

You can treat your patio to this attractive new dinette in a couple of afternoons, using our fully illustrated plans. They include a complete materials list, step-by-step instructions, detailed cutting and assembly diagrams and tips and techniques.

To order the plans, specify Project No. 1932-5 and send $4.95. Include $2.95 for a copy of our newest catalog.

Polly's Pointers: fat out of spareribs

DEAR POLLY—When baking spareribs, add one cup water to the roasting pan during the first 30 minutes of baking. Then, before adding any sauce, skim most of this liquid off, leaving only about ¼ cup liquid. This is the key to greaseless spareribs and works for either beef or pork ribs. —MARY

DEAR MARY—Baking the ribs in the water for the first part of the roasting time does help the ribs to release more of their fat without the mess of an extra pan used to parboil the ribs on top of the stove. If an even leaner sauce is desired, you may drain off all the liquid before basting with the desired barbecue sauce.

Make everyday meal preparation faster, easier and problem-free with the magical tips in Polly's newsletter, "Kitchen Tricks." Send $1.00 for each copy to POLLY'S POINTERS, in care of this newspaper, P.O. Box 1216, Cincinnati, OH 45201. Be sure to include the title.

SPORTS SCENE

Sports Forum and Agin 'Um WARREN HASSE

IT HAS BEEN CALLED to our attention that this year, today specifically, marks the 100th birthday of "The Lady." And might I also point out that this year also marks the 100th birthday of "the bible," The Sporting News, the weekly publication known and respected for the major portion of that decade as "the bible of baseball." Whatever you wanted to know about the nation's favorite pastime was available through the St. Louis-based publication, owned and operated by the Spink family for most of those years.

But like the famous lady in New York Harbor, there has been a face-lifting job done on TSN, too.

It had been coming on for a couple of decades, and finally the operation was completed when "The First Newsweekly in Sports" was purchased by the Times Mirror Company in 1981. From its founding by Alfred and Charles Spink on March 17, 1886, through nearly a half-century of leadership by J.G. Taylor Spink, feisty and spunky son of Charles, and another two decades of direction from J.G.'s son, C.C. Johnson Spink, the great sports paper had never missed a weekly beat and had served baseball and its fandom extraordinarily.

The advent of television, which forced baseball to start sharing the sports pages with other professional sports...football, basketball, hockey...also made TSN adjust its pages and coverage. To maintain its honor as a complete sports weekly, and protect itself from the potential sports market competition of other specialized sports weeklies, pages began to be devoted to other sports, writers hired to handle the specific coverage, and baseball had to share its space. But the sport that had been the backbone of the family paper all those decades was never slighted.

It was possibly that fact, the incursion of other sports, that led to the sale of the paper. For 95 years, baseball had been No. 1, and just the thought that it could no longer be that way was a deplorable one for the Spinks. An example of what I mean is best exemplified by a letter from the aforementioned J.G. Taylor Spink, who had headed the operation from 1914 to 1962, the greatest and the toughest days of the sport. I had developed an acquaintanceship with the Old Man, as he was lovingly called. And noting the change in the paper from all-baseball to a diversified sports publication, I mentioned it to him one day in a letter. It struck a nerve, and only JGTS could respond:

Chiles sells Rangers

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — Hard times in the oil industry made his pockets too shallow to support a major league baseball team, Texas Rangers majority owner Eddie Chiles says.

Thursday, he announced an agreement in principle to sell his two-thirds share in the American League franchise to the Dallas-based company that televises Rangers games. He refused to disclose any terms or financial details of the agreement with Gaylord Broadcasting Co.

"It takes somebody with more financial strength than I have to operate a baseball team," Chiles said. "I had reasonably deep pockets, but that was before the energy collapse."

Chiles has watched helplessly as the flooded petroleum market pulled the value of stock in his Western Co. of North America, an oil drilling business, from a high of $35 per share to as low as $1.

"I could have gone farther (with the team) if the energy industry hadn't collapsed and hurt many people," he said. "You need a strong financial company to keep the money flowing. I could do that at first, but the collapse robbed me of any opportunity to continue that. So I gave the Rangers to a company that can."

Gaylord acquired about one-third of Rangers stock — limited partners hold less than 10 percent, and Chiles had the rest — as well as the team's broadcasting rights in February 1985. It also had first refusal to buy Chiles' share if he decided to sell.

The sale is contingent on approval of baseball commissioner Peter Ueberroth and the 26 major league owners. The re-

...and so far as what you had to say about The Sporting News carrying football, please go away and leave me alone. I have instructed my office to forward any further correspondence from you to me.

"The Sporting News is devoted entirely to baseball today, which is in a helluva condition, and I know damn well we couldn't look for any financial aid that we might need from you." That letter was dictated from Phoenix in November 1961. In another three-pager, also dictated from Phoenix, he said:

"There is no reason why I should take the entire part of this Sunday, when I am trying to catch up with my work and put out a good paper and, incidentally, it has the greatest circulation right now in its history. I not only remained at the office most of the day, when I should be out looking at the Giants and Cardinals playing."

Those few excerpts supported the feisty character of Taylor Spink, an attitude well known by his longtime employees and associates. I had told a friend at TSN about the correspondence, and he passed the info along to Spink's son, C.C. Johnson. He wrote for copies in 1975.

"That fabulous letter that you got from my father in 1961 was just like a ray of sunshine. I can just hear him dictating on a hot Sunday afternoon."

A month later, C.C. wrote again: "I must admit I blushed when I saw the letter my father wrote you on Nov. 7, 1961. As you may recall, my father was in Phoenix at the time because he was suffering from emphysema. We didn't realize it but he had only 13 months to live. Even so, he had the old fire burning in the boiler."

"We went to press on Dec. 7, 1962 and at 11 a.m. that morning he was on the phone with the foreman of the pressroom checking to see how things were doing. At 11:15 he passed away."

The son requested permission to read the letters at a luncheon honoring 25-year employees. And after the affair, he told me of the banquet.

"The letters really laid them in the aisle. Thanks again for allowing us to share these letters with these people who knew my father so well."

How important and magical are words, especially those that can stand the tests of time. "Give me your tired, your poor..."

Or in the case of the century-old The Sporting News, well...J.G. Taylor Spink's letters told it all.

Simpson leads Hartford Golf Open

CROMWELL, Conn. (AP) — Tim Simpson battled out of a two-month slump Thursday with a 7-under-par 64 — one stroke off the course record — to take a one-stroke lead after the first round of the $700,000 Canon-Sammy Davis Jr. Greater Hartford Open on the 6,786-yard, par-35-71 Tournament Players Club of Connecticut course.

Tom Watson, in quest of his first victory since 1984, Denis Watson and Dan Forsman each shot a 65 to tie for second behind Simpson, who had seven birdies and no bogies on the par-71, 6,786-yard Tournament Players Club of Connecticut course.

Chip Beck, Roger Maltbie and Ken Knox each shot a 66 to remain two strokes back. John Mahaffey, John McComish, Mike McCullough, Mark McCumber and Paul Azinger each had 67s.

Bob Murphy, who won the Canadian Open last week, fired a 69.

Simpson, who had been struggling since a third-place finish in the Tournament Players Championship in March, credited a one-week layoff for his rejuvenation.

"It was probably the most solid round I've shot all year," said Simpson, who missed the cut in the U.S. Open three weeks ago. "If I wasn't rested I'd have probably shot a 74 like I had been doing."

His 64 was one stroke shy of the course record established by Peter Jacobsen and Mark O'Meara in 1984, the first year the tournament was played at the TPC course, and matched by David Lundstrom in 1985.

Tom Watson, who fell from his status as the game's dominant player last year when he failed to win a tournament, said he regained his putting stroke as he posted eight birdies and just two bogies.

"I made the putts you have to make to shoot a 65," Watson said. "Today's score would probably have been a 67 or 68 the way I was putting before. Today I made the putts a la Tom Watson."

It was Tom Watson's first appearance at the GHO since 1974 and his first competitive round in the tournament since it was moved to the TPC course three years ago.

Denis Watson, who was disqualified due to a scoring error at the Canadian Open, played even par on the back nine going out and finished with a 6-under-par 30 coming back on the front side.

"It was real nice after being disqualified last week," he said. "I played nice and steady. I was rolling along waiting for something to happen."

A driving rainstorm forced a 65-minute delay at midday.

The rain served to slow down the greens considerably, especially on the newer back nine at the TPC.

Vance Heafner shot a hole-in-one on the par-3, 218-yard fifth hole to win a car.

Mandlikova reaches Wimbledon finals

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — Hana Mandlikova has rewritten the Wimbledon script and is now the only player who can stop Martina Navratilova from winning her record fifth straight Wimbledon title.

While shedding a tear for the absent 10-time finalist Chris Evert Lloyd, Wimbledon can look forward to a women's final between two explosive, all-court players at the top of their game.

Mandlikova, the reigning U.S. Open champion who usually plays tennis on a mental tight-rope, held her game together to post a 7-6, 7-5 victory over Lloyd to reach her second Wimbledon final.

Navratilova, who can win her seventh singles title at the All England Club, brushed aside the challenge of the youngest semifinalist in this century, 16-year-old Gabriela Sabatini, beating the 10th-seeded Argentine 6-2, 6-2.

In today's men's semifinals, Boris Becker, who last year became the youngest-ever champion, was to meet Frenchman Henri Leconte and No. 1 seed Ivan Lendl, seeking his first appearance in a Wimbledon final, was to face unseeded Slobodan Zivojinovic of Yugoslavia.

British bookies have made Lendl, who has beaten the Yugoslav in their only previous meeting, a 5-4 favorite to win the grass-court title.

Becker, the No. 4 seed who beat Leconte on the way to his historic triumph last year in their only previous meeting, is a 13-8 second favorite with the Frenchman, seeded No. 7, rated at 4-1 and Zivojinovic a 12-1 outsider.

Mandlikova, the No. 3 seed, hopes for a repeat of last year's U.S. Open, when she beat Lloyd in the semifinal and then Navratilova in the final.

She predicted a final with plenty of action at the net.

"I will have to come in to the net all the time and I think Martina will do the same thing," Man-dlikova said.

Lloyd dismissed all suggestions of imminent retirement. "I always say I'll see how I feel at the end of the year," she said.

Despite Mandlikova's brilliant form, Lloyd still felt Navratilova was the choice to win the title.

"For all Hana's great shots, and flashy shots, she's still making a couple more errors than Martina," said Lloyd, who beat Navratilova for the French Open title last month.

"Martina is more consistent right now."

Loeffler ties for sixth

Brian Loeffler of Pampa finished in a three-way tie for sixth in a 36-hole qualifying round for the USGA Junior Amateur Golf Championship.

Loeffler shot a 164 to tie with Rodney Riley of Liberal and Drue Pounds of Brownwood in Thursday's round at the Amarillo County Club. Twenty-one high school golfers were in the field, but only the top two advance to the national tournament July 21-26 at Muirfield Village Golf Club in Dublin, Ohio.

Jeff Beal of Andrews shot a 151 and Kyle Jerome of Liberty finished with a 155 to qualify for the nationals.

Sabatini, playing Navratilova for the first time, testified to the consistency and power of the defending champion.

"I tried to fight for every point but she just played very well," the teen-ager said. "My passing shots are good but they didn't work against her."

Navratilova, buoyant after going through six matches without losing a set, was especially delighted with her serve.

"I've lost my serve four times in six matches here — that's pretty good," she said.

Giants sign 42-year-old Carlton

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The San Francisco Giants, unlikely pennant contenders fashioned around youth and hustle, have summoned 42-year-old Steve Carlton in hopes that the 10-time All-Star pitcher's "last gasp" can put them over the top.

Carlton was scheduled to fly to San Francisco today from St. Louis and affix his left-handed signature to a contract making him a Giant for the rest of the 1986 season.

Club president Al Rosen said he would be worked into the starting rotation "as soon as possible," and Manager Roger Craig said that means Sunday against the St. Louis Cardinals — the team with which Carlton began his career — if Carlton feels up to it.

The arrival of the four-time National League Cy Young award-winner comes with the Giants unexpectedly atop the NL Western Division by a half-game over Houston — a remarkable turnaround for a team that lost 100 games last season and has finished last for two straight seasons.

"I've seen this kind of thing happen so many times in my career in baseball," said Rosen at a Thursday night press conference announcing the acquisition. "Clubs that are in pennant fights go out and pick up veteran players and they get that last gasp for a year or two.

"Maybe a Steve Carlton on our ballclub, which has so many young players on it, might be a stabilizing influence because he has done everything there is to do in baseball," Rosen added. "He's been in pennant fights, he's been on world championship teams and he knows what it is all about."

Carlton was just 4-8 with a 6.18 earned run average and 62 strikeouts in 16 starts when the Philadelphia Phillies gave him his unconditional release June 26. He was 1-8 in 1985 and missed most of the season after going on the disabled list in June with a strained rotator cuff in his left shoulder.

But Rosen said he had made some inquiries about Carlton's health after being phoned by Carlton's agent on Thursday, and was satisfied that the signing was worth the gamble. Terms of the contract were not disclosed.

Carlton, in his 22nd major league season, spent 14 years with the Phillies. He is second in career strikeouts with 3,982, trailing only Nolan Ryan of the Astros, and resisted the Phillies' efforts to get him to retire.

Carlton has a career record of 318 victories and 223 defeats in 689 games. He won the Cy Young award in 1972, 1977, 1980 and 1982 — the only pitcher to win the honor four times. He has been named to 10 NL All-Star teams and appeared in five league championship series and four World Series.

Games suffer setback

By BERT ROSENTHAL
AP Track Writer

MOSCOW (AP)—The Goodwill Games, the first multisport competition between the United States and the Soviet Union in a decade, suffered a setback the day before they were to begin when the Defense Department barred military personnel from participating on the U.S. boxing team Thursday.

In Washington, a Pentagon official who asked not to be identified said Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger made the decision Wednesday to bar 10 active-duty servicemen and one Defense Department civilian employee from making the trip.

"The secretary believed he couldn't approve participation in the Games because of serious questions and uncertainties that he had," said the official.

"Among those concerns were the manner in which the event was organized, who was going to participate, events surrounding the games and the way they would be presented. There was also a concern that Department of Defense personnel as participants might be subject to exploitation for political purposes."

Col. Marvin Braman, a Pentagon spokesman, said Defense Department regulations governing international sporting events are quite specific, authorizing military personnel to participate in only the Olympics and Pan Am Games. All other contests require special review and approval, Braman said.

The Pentagon source denied that Weinberger's decision had been delayed until the last minute, saying the "majority" of the requests by the 11 servicemen were not received until the last week of June.

The source refused to respond when asked how the decision squared with efforts to improve relations with the Soviet Union through more cultural and athletic exchanges.

The 11, including nine soldiers and a Marine and one civilian naval employee, were part of 36-man contingent that was scheduled to leave Saturday for Moscow, said Leslie King, a spokeswoman for the United States Amateur Boxing Federation.

At least one other member of the U.S. contingent, pentathlete Captain Mike Burley, is a serviceman. A defense department spokesman said as far as he knew "no other request" to go Moscow was made.

"If he requests to go, he will be affected just like anyone else," said Capt. Jay Farrar.

Ted Turner, owner of Turner Broadcasting Systems, who is sponsoring the Games with the Soviets, has said the easing of East-West tensions was the main idea of the Games.

The two superpowers did not compete against each other in the 1980 Moscow Games because of a U.S. boycott and the Soviets then boycotted the 1984 Los Angeles Olympics. Their last multisport meeting was at the 1976 Montreal Olympics.

"For world peace, it's going to take a whole lot of people, not just one," Turner said Thursday in his $7 million television studio equipped by the Soviets especially for the Games.

"To measure the impact of the Games, we're going to have to wait and see," said Turner, who also owns baseball's Atlanta Braves and the NBA's Atlanta Hawks. "It may take a month or two, before we get its perspective in history."

The 47-year-old Turner expects to lose about $10 million on the Games. But he hopes to recoup in 1990, when the competition will be held in Seattle.

"If this leads — and this is a dream — to better relations of the countries and to peace, along with the abandonment of nuclear weapons, this will be a big step forward," he said.

The Americans will be here in full force, their total of about 400 athletes representing the largest visiting delegation among the total of approximately 3,500 athletes, including Soviets. More than 50 nations are scheduled to participate.

The Games open Friday night with finals in 10 swimming events, including men's and women's races in the 50-meter freestyle, 200-meter breaststroke, 800-meter freestyle, 400-meter individual medley and 400-meter freestyle relay.

It was uncertain whether Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev would be at the opening ceremonies.

Overall, there will be competition in 18 sports, with a total of 175 gold medals before the closing ceremonies July 20.

Sports for men and women will be cycling, diving, figure skating, gymnastics (artistic and rhythmic), modern pentathlon, rowing, swimming, team handball, tennis, volleyball, yachting and track and field, the blue ribbon event of the games.

NATIONAL LEAGUE PRINCESS Meredith Horton, daughter of J. B. and Kerrick Horton of Pampa, receives her rose, hat and savings bond for being named National League Princess. She is escorted by Jeff Lamb. Other princess candidates were Raylina Thomas and Deana Roise.

Benz leads Mazda Championship

SUGAR LAND, Texas (AP)—Amy Benz has never won an LPGA tournament and she's never finished higher than a tie for fifth in four seasons on the tour. But Benz had a two-stroke lead after Thursday's opening round of the $300,000 Mazda Hall of Fame Championship at Sweetwater Country Club.

"I can't say I'm surprised, it's more like it's about time," Benz said after her 5-under-par 67 gave her the lead in a tournament for just the second time in her professional career.

"I've always had a lot of confidence in my ability," she said. Benz, who birdied the last two holes, and the rest of the 144-player field had to battle 94-degree temperatures and 58 percent humidity.

The heat forced Bonnie Lauer to withdraw after eight holes and tournament officials said she suffered from dehydration.

Benz's late surge gave her the two-stroke advantage over Judy Dickinson and Lauren Howe.

Pokes excited about new training facility

IRVING (AP)—Ed "Too Tall" Jones talks like a man whose contract has just been extended, and Dr. Bob Ward acts like a kid with a new toy, all because of one thing: the Dallas Cowboys' new training facility at Valley Ranch. "I just walk on Cloud Nine," said Ward the Cowboys' conditioning coach. "There's no doubt in my mind that we'll set the pace (with this facility), not only in the country — in the NFL — but in the world."

What excites Ward is a facility that features some of the most sophisticated equipment, surrounding the area's two (soon to be three) football fields. There is a 10,000 square foot outdoor weight area housing Universal weights of all shapes and sizes designed to exercise every part of the body, plus rowing machines, exercycles and a martial arts area.

There are machines designed to make players run faster than they would normally be capable of and machines that increase their strength.

There's a jungle gym and exercise stations, and a sand pit for running and jumping in. There's a sprint track, jogging track and an incline-decline track all made of an elastic-type material that decreases the shock on legs.

Jones said he still is trying to figure out all of the equipment and its capabilities. But he does know it's all designed to turn the Cowboys into the fittest athletes they can be.

Highlights of the facility include:

—The Sprint Master, a towing machine based on the idea that if you can force an athlete to run faster than normally possible, his muscles will remember the action and repeat it while running unassisted. The Sprint Master forces the athlete to increase his stride length and frequency, translating into faster times.

After a few weeks of training on the Sprint Master, most athletes can reduce their 40-yard dash times as much as four-tenths of a second, one fitness authority said. In football, that is a significant improvement.

—The Diagnostic Power Trainer, which operates on the opposite principle of the Sprint Master. The athlete wears a heavy leather belt, which is connected by a line to a machine with gears, similar to those found on a bicycle. Once hooked up, the player must overcome a heavy force, and apply some force of his own, to go forward.

The machine also plots a graph that shows when the athlete is putting out any force and when he is "taking a vacation," as the machine's inventor, Larry Brown, would say.

The purpose is to reduce errors in the athlete's form and increase his muscular and cardiovascular development while working under a load. The exercise is especially useful because it can be adjusted to suit the individual athlete and his needs.

—The 285-yard incline-decline track, part of the half-mile track circling the complex, which not only puts a little variety into the jogging workout, but is another form of overspeed training. It has two hills and four changes in elevation and is the only track of its kind, Ward said.

After tackling the incline-decline track, joggers can either continue along the jogging path or challenge themselves in the 50-yard sand pit. They can also stop off at the circuit exercise station.

Japanese railroad station the busiest in the world

EDITOR'S NOTE — The flood of humanity begins in the early morning hours — multitudes of workers heading for their jobs, dawn revelers and midnight drunks, young runaways heading nowhere in particular. Some 1.3 million passengers a day pass through Tokyo's Shinjuku Station. That's more than twice the number handled by any other railroad station outside Japan.

By JIM ABRAMS
Associated Press Writer

TOKYO (AP) — They once hired college students to help shove commuters into the packed cars at Tokyo's Shinjuku Station, easily the world's busiest passenger train hub. Now regular employees do the cramming.

"We have five rush hours every day," says Masahiro Kato of the Shinjuku Stationmaster's Office.

Traffic is so heavy, Kato says, the metal hand punches used to punch tickets wear out and must be replaced every three days. Railway workers must clean up some 300,000 cigarette butts every day.

And the bustling complex in the high-rise, low-life environs of Shinjuku is getting busier, with new rail lines linking the suburbs and the city government planning to abandon its buildings near the Imperial Palace for a new home near the station.

Every day, according to officials, an average of 1.3 million people are disgorged from or swept into the 1,800 commuter, subway and long-distance trains passing through this business and entertainment center in western Tokyo.

That is more than twice as many as any other rail station outside Japan. By comparison, 500,000 people a day pass through New York's two main stations, Penn and Grand Central, a similar number at Moscow's Yaroslavl station, and 420,000 at Paris' St. Lazare station. (The latter figure does not include subway riders.)

In fact, Shinjuku's nearest rival is Ueno Station, the northern gateway to this city of 12 million, which handles about 870,000 travelers per day.

The first rush hour begins around 4:30 a.m., when the station opens and red-eyed carousers who missed the last night train begin making their way home or back to the office. Shinjuku has thousands of drinking and eating establishments. It is home to an infamous red-light district of massage parlors, peep shows and love hotels, and is a principal center for Tokyo's gay nightlife.

About 8 a.m., the sea of commuters descends on Shinjuku, some headed for the cluster of 50-story office skyscrapers just west of the station, others changing to subways or the 29-stop Yamanote line, a surface railroad that makes a loop around the city.

Kato says Shinjuku station, which is operated by Japan National Railways, used to hire college students part time to pack people into rush-hour trains. But the morning chaos has eased some in recent years because of new lines and now Shinjuku's 413 employees do the pushing, Kato says.

Between 10 and 11 a.m. comes the next wave — housewives and young people heading for the department stores, boutiques and discount electronics shops that surround the station.

The reverse flows come at 6-7 p.m., the big homebound rush, and 12-1 a.m. when barhoppers dash for the last trains home.

Crime and vandalism are rare on Japanese trains, but Ichiro Watanabe, assistant chief of station security, says his office handled 704 cases of picked pockets last year, making 76 arrests.

More time is spent looking after the thousands of drunks who fall asleep or forget where they live.

"We let them dry out for an hour or call their wives to come pick them up," Watanabe says. Traditional tolerance toward drinking makes Japan "heaven for drunks," he adds.

Last year, Tokyo Governor Shuichi Suzuki pushed through legislation to move Tokyo's government from Marunouchi, near the fashionable Ginza and the moated Imperial Palace, to the same area.

The plan calls for two 50-story government office buildings to be completed by 1990 at a cost of $1.7 billion in west Shinjuku, about 3 1/2 miles from the city center.

The station added a new national rail line suburban line in March, and Shinjuku will get another subway line in the 1990s. But Kato says that with the influx of government workers, "things can only get more crowded."

Crime victims band together for support

By PETER S. HAWES
Associated Press Writer

BRIDGEPORT, Conn. (AP) — A gunman killed her brother and she was twice a crime victim herself, but Robin Shevlin blames the criminal justice system for ruining her life.

Her brother's killer received a suspended jail term for carrying a gun without a permit, and the people who mugged her and broke into her home never were caught.

"I can deal with what happened," Mrs. Shevlin said about the killing of her brother. "I can't deal with what the system did. The system destroyed my life. Once I get over what the system did to me I'll be OK."

According to victim advocates and officials in Connecticut's judicial system, Mrs. Shevlin is one of many crime victims who feel cheated by the courts and who cry for a greater voice in punishing criminals.

In the years following her brother's death, Mrs. Shevlin sought counseling, became depressed and lost her job. But what five years of therapy failed to achieve has been wrought in three weeks, Mrs. Shevlin said, by attending meetings of a victims' support group spawned by the very judicial system she had grown to despise.

Victims Understanding Victims, as the group is known, began in January. Modeled after Alcoholics Anonymous and other self-help organizations, it holds meetings every other Sunday at a senior citizens' center in Stratford. There, victims gather to share stories and feelings with those who have had similar experiences. They often cry, hug and most leave "emotionally drained," Mrs. Shevlin said.

"This group has put my life back together. I'm not as hateful," said Mrs. Shevlin. Her relationship with her 11-year-old son has improved since she joined the group. Soon she will begin a new job and she is applying to become a police officer.

While not funded by or affiliated with the state's criminal justice system, it was created within it.

It began with Ed Classy, a probation officer whose job for 15 years included interviewing victims for presentencing reports used by judges in deciding penalties for convicted criminals.

"After 15 years," he said, "it got to the point where I was just eaten away. All at once, there was a large amount of victims who had some serious emotional situations. I was talking to five or 10 people a week who had had tragedies. These people had no resources."

Classy approached Roseanne Aylesworth, a coordinator in Bridgeport for the State Office of Adult Probation, who in January assembled a group of volunteers — most of them crime victims themselves — to bring other victims together for support.

As many as 25 people have attended the sessions.

"These people aren't sitting there with minor cases," Ms. Aylesworth said. "Their kids have been murdered."

Anger at the legal system is what brings many to Victims Understanding Victims, but the group isn't designed to encourage criticism or invite changing the system. Rather, Ms. Aylesworth said, its goal is to help people deal with emotions and problems — confusion, anger, stress, isolation.

Already, some members of the group are accompanying others on trips to court and some have even made dinner dates, Ms. Aylesworth said.

"It's a sad way to do it, but they're making new friends," she said.

Since its founding, support for Victims Understanding Victims has snowballed. Not only is there evidence that similar groups are about to form in other towns, but a number of state judges back the program.

"Victims often are overlooked by the system," said Aaron Ment, the state's chief court administrator. "For many years, they didn't have a spokesman. Every other actor in the system had someone who would look after their interests."

Ment said the importance of groups such as Victims Understanding Victims is that they give victims the chance to learn how to better use the criminal justice system, change the system and lend support to each other.

"Most victims need to be helped through very frustrating and difficult emotional times, first from the occurrence of the crime and later from the delays in court," Ment said.

ST. GEORGE'S, Grenada (AP) — Nobel laureate Mother Teresa has arrived on this Caribbean island to visit the Missionaries of Charity community she founded here a year ago.

A spokesman for Bishop Sydney Charles said Wednesday the 76-year-old nun, from Calcutta, India, would spend two days in Grenada before heading to Puerto Rico for a visit to the Missionaries of Charity community in the south-coast city of Ponce and to receive an honorary doctorate from Catholic University.

The degree was awarded to Mother Teresa in 1981, but she was unable to go to receive it. She was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize in 1979 for her work with the poor.

LANAI CITY, Hawaii (AP) — Singer Kenny Rogers' appearance before residents had nothing to do with singing — he was arguing as "a concerned potential citizen" on behalf of developing two resorts on the island.

"I'm not here as a singer tonight," Rogers told about 140 residents of Lanai Island during a public hearing Tuesday night. He said he supported resort plans and would pay to set up a junior tennis program for island youngsters.

"I care about you," Rogers said, shaking hands and signing autographs.

The island, known as "Pineapple Island," is owned by the Dole Co.

CARMEL, Calif. (AP) — Clint Eastwood says people who want him to change the name of his upcoming movie, "Heartbreak Ridge," are "shooting from the hip" when they complain because the hero's a Marine, not from the Army.

"It's not a war story," Eastwood, the mayor, said Tuesday night during a break in a City Council meeting. "It's a character story."

A Pentagon official responding to requests from Korean War veterans called Tuesday for a change in the movie's name, saying it wrongly credits the Marines for one of the Army's bloodiest battles of the war.

Eastwood said that the character he portrays is that of a modern-day gunner sergeant going through the heartbreak of losing a woman in his life as he hears the end of his career with the Marines.

"It's not a period picture. It's today," Eastwood said. "The Marines were there, too... He just happened to be in the area. There's a dual meaning in the Heartbreak thing: his life as opposed to the battle."

Of those criticizing the title, he said, "They don't even know the plot line. It's a good story."

Maids began Crossroads victims' relief effort

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — The Crossroads relief effort began with a handful of black maids collecting old clothes and blankets for the thousands of refugees made homeless by fiery clashes in the shantytown near Cape Town.

Since then the project has mushroomed into a relief effort by all races across the vast Transvaal province, aimed at collecting 4.5 tons of donations for 70,000 victims of the fighting at Crossroads, 1,000 miles away.

Dozens of bags of canned food, corn meal and cast-off clothes formed the backdrop Thursday for a news conference in Johannesburg, center of the Transvaal, that highlighted the appeal.

Despite the aid, one squatter leader left homeless by the May and June battles said South Africa's winter rains had increased the refugees' hardships.

Hilda Ndude said her four-room house went up in flames during the fighting June 2 between conservative black vigilantes and militant black anti-apartheid groups, which devastated vast tracts of the settlement and left at least 100 dead. She now lives in a church.

"On rainy Sundays, people have to take their blankets and belongings out of the churches for the services, and stay outside all day," she said.

The suffering has prompted donations from the United States,

Britain and Japan, as well as residents of Cape Town and, now, the Transvaal.

The Rev. Geoff Quinlan, who runs an Anglican parish in the white Cape Town suburb of Plumstead, said he hoped aid from Transvaal and elsewhere would ease the suffering of the Crossroads refugees. He said that despite an outpouring of aid from Cape Town, relief supplies were beginning to dwindle.

Maids who attend a weekly education center at St. Peter's Anglican Church in Auckland Park, a Johannesburg suburb, began collecting clothes from their employers last month for the Crossroads victims.

The center's volunteer staff began asking other churches to help, and the campaign expanded rapidly across the province.

The first load came from blacks in the ghetto township of Alexandra in northern Johannesburg. Others came from white Afrikaner schoolchildren and businessmen, churches in mixed-race areas and Indian shopkeepers.

South African Airways, the government-owned carrier, offered to transport 4.5 tons of goods from Johannesburg to Cape Town for the squatters, and state television publicized the appeal.

Quinlan said several thousand blacks are packed in about 40 refugee centers in white and black areas near Crossroads.

He said he is refusing a police order to evict about 50 squatter families living in his church hall, and thus illegally staying in a white area. At least three other white churches serving as refugee centers have received similar summonses, he said.

Pope begins tour of Colombia's west, troubled by violence, poverty

CALI, Colombia (AP) — Pope John Paul II arrived in poverty-stricken western Colombia after telling laborers and slum dwellers in Bogota to reject Marxist-inspired violence.

The pontiff, arriving Thursday night in Cali, a tropical city of 1 million people 180 miles southwest of the capital, planned a visit this morning to the Pacific coast fishing town of Tumaco.

Ninety percent of Tumaco's 45,000 inhabitants are descendants of African slaves brought by Spanish colonizers to dredge the sweltering area's muddy rivers for gold.

John Paul II was to celebrate Mass and deliver a homily at a Catholic mission.

After Tumaco, the pope planned to visit Popayan, a city of 157,000 people devastated by an earthquake three years ago.

He arrived in Cali on the Colombian presidential airliner, a Fokker 28, landing at a military airfield amid the tight security evident since his arrival in the country on Tuesday. He heads for Rome on Monday.

From the airport he traveled standing in the back of a pick-up truck in a compartment of bullet-proof glass. En route to a seminary where he spent the night, he passed through the city's central Parque de la Cana, or Sugar Cane Park, packed with white-smocked schoolchildren who waved and cheered in the rain. Temperatures were in the 80s.

His quarters at the seminary were spartan: a small white-washed room with an austere wood-framed bed, a wooden table and a lamp.

The outskirts of Cali, in a prosperous farming valley, were the site earlier this year of guerrilla fighting. The area has seen some of the fiercest battling in three years of leftist insurgency.

In his final public appearance in Bogota, the pontiff spoke at el Tunal park, on the edge of a huge slum where about one-sixth of the city's 6 million inhabitants live.

The rally in the park was preceded by a march of slum dwellers whose children presented the pope with a letter that described their life: mounds of trash, scarce drinking water, epidemics and precarious fire-trap tarpaper shacks.

The pope made no public response to the letter. In his address he said that he sympathizes with the country's poor, but urged patience.

"I speak of those who suffer the pain of seeing their children without enough to eat, to dress and to be educated," he said. "You live in the confinement of one humble room, without elementary utilities, your work is badly remunerated and uncertain. You are anguished by the insecurity of the future."
