Tax break for Phillips left intact

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate, marching toward approval this week of a landmark overhaul of the federal tax code, appears ready to preserve scores of special tax breaks buried in the legislation when it was drafted by the Finance Committee.

Sen. Bob Packwood, R-Ore., the Finance Committee chairman, has given up optimistic predictions that the Senate would complete work on the measure by today and as discussion of the remaining amendments drags on, Senate leaders now are looking toward final passage by Wednesday or Thursday.

After the Senate gives what is expected to be overwhelming approval to the bill, negotiators from the House and Senate will meet to draft compromise legislation. The House passed its version of the measure late last year.

Packwood said Monday that those negotiations will not begin until after Congress returns from its Fourth of July recess.

Through seven days of consideration, the legislation remains intact except for one amendment.

Last Friday, the Senate agreed to a move by Sen. Howard Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, removing a $50 million tax break for Union Oil Co. of California — Unocal.

On Monday, however, by a 73-14 vote, the Senate rejected a Metzenbaum amendment to eliminate $106 million in tax cuts for the Oklahoma-based Phillips Petroleum Co. and use the money to give a tax benefit for farmers.

Sen. David Boren, D-Okla., defended the break, saying the company had been reeling from the costs associated with fending off two hostile takeover attempts in 1984 and 1985.

He said the hardships of the Bartlesville, Okla., company involved "real people who have real problems."

But Metzenbaum said, "The taxpayers of the country shouldn't be called upon to dig into their pockets for $106 million to subsidize takeover games."

The tax break survived. Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., acknowledged that some of the individual tax breaks the Finance Committee inserted in the bill "could stand a little ventilation."

County told that constable needed at Lake McClellan

Talk of reviving the Precinct Three constable position at Lake McClellan dominated Monday morning's Gray County Commissioners meeting after the court received a request for appointment from the lake manager.

Buddy Roland, new manager at the site, said he needs more authority with some of the visitors to the lake. He said drinking is the biggest problem.

Currently, Roland's job consists of patrolling the lake, checking and issuing permits and maintaining the area. He said he has past law enforcement experience in Hollywood, Calif., and El Paso.

Because there is not currently a Precinct Three constable, County Clerk Wanda Carter said the commissioners could appoint Roland to fill the unexpired term until November but, by law, he would have to run as a write-in candidate in the Nov. 4 general election to remain in office. The last Precinct Three constable was Robert Payne.

The commissioners agreed to check liability, training and term of office requirements before meeting with Roland again July 1.

In other action, the commissioners agreed to an increase in the charge for autopsy runs by the Lefors Volunteer Fire Department ambulance squad but tabled for further study requests for additional subsidies and renewal of the general ambulance service contract.

Autopsy runs to Amarillo will increase from $250 for the first run and $100 for subsequent runs to $300 and $150. Commissioner Ted Simmons said the jumps probably will add about $800 per year to the county's cost.

Lefors Fire Chief Eddie Joe Roberts also requested $10,000 for help in stocking a new ambulance with radios and equipment. Currently the county pays the department $4,260 per year, a figure the city of Lefors matches.

Simmons said the county could probably give the department part of the $10,000 request from this year's budget and part from next year's budget. The commissioners tabled the request, and one for $5,000 to enlarge the fire station, in order to look at the county budget.

The commissioners also: — discussed the possibility of housing Pampa Medical Services in the nurse's quarters of the old Highland General Hospital in order to cut costs for the service, thereby cutting the service's request for additional subsidies.

— agreed to ask county residents John Triplehorn, Gary Ingram, Billy Davis, Simmons and local bank officials about their willingness to serve on a veteran's land program committee, adapted by constitutional amendment in November.

— decided to pursue the idea of service recognition pins for county employees, depending on next year's budget.

— discussed the sale of two pieces of property taken by tax default in the Wilcox Addition of southeast Pampa with Gray

Golf course supporters score ace

Participation by county approved three-to-one

By PAUL PINKHAM
Staff Writer

Supporters of a public golf course in Pampa scored a hole-in-one Monday as voters approved county participation in construction of the course by a nearly three-to-one margin.

Of 5,832 votes cast, 4,280 (73.4 percent) supported using county equipment, manpower and funds to aid in construction of the course. Twenty-six percent, or 1,519 voters, opposed the idea, while 33 abstained.

Non-binding ballots were mailed out to registered voters and their families in late May after the commissioners opted to determine the will of the people before acting on a Pampa Public Golf Association request for help. The course will be located just north of Pampa off Texas Highway 70.

Supporters claim the course will provide a boost to the local economy. They note golfers currently must travel out of town to play unless they have access to the county club or Celanese golf course.

Opponents had expressed concern over the use of county tax money to build the course.

Pampa Public Golf Association President Buddy Epperson said he was elated at the vote's outcome. He said the outcome shows the majority of county voters, even those who are not golfers, feel the area needs a public golf course to make it a better place to live and help to attract industry.

Epperson said that contrary to what golf course opponents were saying, public golf courses in the Panhandle are operating in the black.

"I have no concern whatsoever that Pampa will fail in this way because there are so many people that go out of town to play golf and I feel they'll support this wholeheartedly," Epperson said.

Epperson said although the architect who drew plans for the course projected a cost of more than $1 million, he feels the course can be built for less than $500,000. Cost of dirtwork, which had been projected at almost $500,000, will be reduced tremendously by the county's help, he said.

Other costs also will be reduced, he predicted, because golf association members will plant trees, a volunteer has offered to build the clubhouse and cost of the irrigation system can be cut in half.

Currently, the association has slightly less than $100,000 on hand but Epperson said fund-raising efforts will begin immediately. He predicted fund-raising will be helped dramatically after ground-breaking at the site.

County Commissioner Gerald Wright, an early supporter of the course, said the vote "clearly represents the will of the majority."

"I'd like to see the county get the work underway as soon as possible," Wright said.

But construction probably will not begin for several months.

County Judge Carl Kennedy said the commissioners will now begin an in-depth feasibility study, which will include appointing an advisory committee and possibly touring other courses in the area. He said the commissioners have been criticized for not conducting the study before the vote, but responded that the court did not want to spend money on a study before determining whether people were interested.

"We're now ready to move ahead," Kennedy said. Despite the outcome, he cautioned that the commissioners reserve the right to turn down the proposal "if something flares up and says 'you just can't do this'."

Kennedy said he feels the court

South Africa imposes ban on live broadcasts

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — The government, further tightening the news restrictions that accompanied a nationwide general strike, said today it was banning live transmissions by foreign television crews.

Sakkie Burger, senior news director at the South African Broadcasting Corp., said he had been instructed by the Bureau for Information that facilities for transmissions out of South Africa should be provided only if material is recorded in advance.

"The reason is to determine responsibility for what is broadcast outside South Africa," he said.

Michael Hornsby of the Times of London, a vice chairman of the Foreign Correspondents Association, termed the decision "just another screw in the censorship of news media which we deplore."

According to the government, which has tightly controlled information about unrest since declaring a state of emergency last Thursday, its security clamp-down during the general strike Monday forestalled major violence.

This morning, black workers were reported to be returning to their jobs in large numbers. The Putco bus service which shut down completely in the Johannesburg area Monday reported 80 percent of its normal capacity of about 670,000 commuters.

Early Monday, as blacks across the country began the nationwide stayaway to commemorate the 10th anniversary of the Soweto riots, Commissioner of Police Johan Coetzee imposed two tough curbs on journalists, barring them from black areas and prohibiting reporting of security force operations.

The emergency regulations imposed Thursday already had set out broad restrictions on news coverage, forbidding pictures of unrest and the reporting of a broad range of "subversive" statements.

In remarks on television Monday night, government spokesman Leon Melet said there was some unrest and intimidation to prevent blacks from going to work Monday, but that "the day was relatively calm."

Golf course

can complete its study before the golf association is ready to begin construction. Bob Keller, who is donating land for the course, said it will probably take at least two months to survey roads and easements and complete the necessary legal paperwork.

Legally, the county's involvement means Keller must deed the land over to the county. Kennedy said the county would not be permitted by law to become involved unless it is a title-holder to the land. The county will take over only land for the course and not land for a planned residential area that will surround the course.

The judge said the county will retain title to the land after construction unless, years in the future, the commissioners court determines the project is no longer viable and is costing more than the commissioners are willing to spend.

"If it looks like it's going to be a loser, then we reserve the right to dispose of it because we're not going to be saddled with something that takes a lot of tax dollars," Kennedy said.

Commissioners Ted Simmons and O.L. Presley both said they have no qualms about sending extra equipment and manpower to the site, but added they do not want the county to become involved in the day-to-day operation of the course. They said they would have to pull their equipment out if it is needed in their home precincts.

Simmons said he could probably spare two maintainers, a bulldozer and several trucks at the outset of construction.

The commissioner added he hopes public commitment to the course will not wane because of the vote.

"I hope just because the county's gotten involved, it (support) doesn't back off," he said.

Epperson said the only thing the county may be asked to do upon completion of construction is maintain roads at the site.

The commissioners plan to begin discussion of the course July 1. Simmons said the court should better define its position on the course before meeting with golf association officials at a later date.

Epperson said the architect's plans, which cost the association roughly $5,000, leave room for flexibility.

"We're not exactly locked into this," he said. "If we see an improvement during the construction of the course then, certainly, we want to do what's right."

Eighteen citizens, including commissioners Simmons, Wright and Presley, Kennedy and County Clerk Wanda Carter, counted votes Monday afternoon. Counting took about 90 minutes to complete.

Poison in Excedrin capsule blamed for woman's death

AUBURN, Wash. (AP) — Extra-Strength Excedrin capsules were pulled from store shelves after authorities confirmed that a cyanide-laced capsule caused the death last week of a 40-year-old woman.

Sue Snow, a bank manager, was found collapsed in her home by a relative last Wednesday, said Officer James Monnett of the Auburn Police Department. She died later that day at a hospital.

The King County medical examiner's office confirmed Monday that Ms. Snow died of acute cyanide poisoning, and Auburn police said cyanide was found in Excedrin capsules discovered in her home.

Auburn Mayor Bob Roegner declared a public emergency Monday, and all Extra-Strength Excedrin capsules were being pulled from store shelves in the Auburn area. Authorities believe Ms. Snow, who was married and had two daughters, purchased the capsules in Auburn a couple of days before she died.

There were 56 capsules left inside the 60-capsule Excedrin bottle found near where Ms. Snow collapsed, said Christopher Rezendes, assistant director of investigations for the Seattle office of the federal Food and Drug Administration.

Several of the remaining capsules contained significant amounts of cyanide, Rezendes said.

But Monnett said that as of late Monday night, no cyanide contamination was found in any of the bottles pulled from store shelves and tested by the FDA.

Police were advising Auburn residents particularly to avoid Extra-Strength Excedrin capsules that have the lot number 5H 1 02-Aug. 88 on the package, the same lot number as the bottle that was found in Ms. Snow's home. Excedrin is made by Bristol-Myers.

The Seattle-King County Health Department notified the local FDA office of the incident Monday afternoon, Rezendes said.

At least nine deaths have been linked to drug-tampering since seven people in the Chicago area died in 1982 after taking Extra-Strength Tylenol contaminated with cyanide.

The February death of a New York woman remains under investigation, while officials ruled the April death of a woman in Pullman, Wash., was not a case of consumer-product tampering. A poisoning case in Tennessee was ruled a suicide.

Last month, a University of Texas student died of cyanide poisoning that authorities linked to a bottle of Anacin-3.

Ruling allowing busing halt could affect many schools

CASHINGTON (AP) — Elementary schools in Norfolk, Va., have received a green light from the Supreme Court to end busing in a move critics say will "re-segregate" black and white children.

The Reagan administration said the case could be a model for other communities.

By a 6-3 vote Monday, the court turned down a plea to postpone the end of busing which for 15 years has produced racial balance in the city schools.

Come September a new neighborhood schools plan approved by the city school board will return 10 of the city's 35 public elementary schools to being almost all-black.

Assistant Attorney General William Bradford Reynolds, head of the Justice Department's Civil Rights Division, said busing contributed to white flight from the schools.

The legal principles advanced in the Norfolk case could apply to "many, many other school districts around the country," he had said prior to the court's order. He declined to comment afterward.

Hundreds of school districts, including those in most major cities, operate court-ordered busing plans for racial desegregation. But only a few have persuaded courts, as Norfolk did, to declare their systems fully integrated and end court supervision.

Monday's court action does not necessarily resolve the challenge by some black parents in Norfolk to the planned end to busing. The justices did not rule on that formal appeal and may not even consider it until October.

The only action the justices took was to deny a postponement in the end to busing pending further consideration.

Even if the formal appeal is granted review before the end of the current court term in July, no decision is likely until sometime in 1987.

Justices Thurgood Marshall and Harry A. Blackmun voted to postpone the dismantling of the busing plan. And Justice John Paul Stevens voted to speed up the court's study of the formal appeal while postponing any action on the emergency request until that consideration.

Lawyers for black parents challenging the end to busing said "the proposed resegregation would place several thousand black children who have always attended integrated schools in segregated schools for the first time in their lives."

They added: "A fully desegregated school system... is on the verge of deliberately re-establishing major components of the unconstitutional dual system that was eliminated only after 19 years of litigation."

Norfolk school officials, in urging the court not to postpone the September effective date, said, "All elementary students have been assigned to schools for the fall. All teachers have been notified of their fall assignments."

Busing of young children to racially balance Norfolk's elementary schools began as part of a court-ordered desegregation plan in 1971, and has continued even though the school system in 1975 was declared totally integrated.

The city school board voted in 1983 to abandon busing for racial balance, but postponed putting that decision into effect for several years.

Under the neighborhood schools plan, children will be allowed to attend the elementary school closest to their home.

State spending up again, despite reduction order

AUSTIN (AP) — Despite a gubernatorial order asking agencies to slash expenses, state spending continued to increase during May, the comptroller reports.

It was the third month in a row that agency spending exceeded the monthly average recorded during the first half of the 1986 budget year, Comptroller Bob Bullock said Monday.

Spending from all funds, including those dedicated to specific purposes, was up 80.5 percent, Bullock said.

Spending from the general revenue fund, which finances most state agency operations, increased 2.6 percent during May, Bullock said.

Bullock said the all-funds total for May was $2.36 billion, $1.05 billion above the monthly average for fiscal 1986, because of large payments to schools, refinancing of veterans land bonds and payments on the state's unemployment debt.

Without those large payments, all-funds spending would have been 23.1 percent higher, he said.

Bullock began issuing monthly spending reports in March, the first month that some 200 state agencies came under the governor's executive order to reduce spending by 13 percent over the last 18 months of the 1986-87 biennium.

Spending in March, April and now May has topped the average spent during the first six months of the 1986 fiscal year — September through February, Bullock said.

In February, White issued the order asking for spending cuts after Bullock predicted that falling oil prices would leave state government facing a $1.34 billion deficit by Aug. 31, 1987, the end of the current two-year budget cycle.

White lacks the constitutional power to require the cuts.

Bullock said last month that recent developments now indicate the deficit could reach $2 billion or more.

White, who repeatedly has insisted his spending cut plan will work, wasn't immediately available to respond to Bullock's latest report. Asked twice for comment, aides in White's press office said he was traveling in East Texas and could not be reached.

White's election opponent, former Gov. Bill Clements, said the Bullock report shows the governor's failure of leadership.

"For the third straight month ... the so-called austerity plan of Mark White is a bust," Clements said, repeating his belief that White should call a special, budget-cutting session of the Legislature.

"The Mark White austerity plan grabbed the headlines but did not affect the spending habits of state government one penny," Clements said. "Come off the campaign trail, Mr. White, stop your politicking. Get back to Austin and be a leader."

Employee pay was reduced 7.8 percent. Out-of-state travel declined 22.3 percent. Office leases were down 15.6 percent. Utility expenses were reduced 27.5 percent.

Total general revenue spending was $404.1 million for the month, $10.3 million higher than the September-to-February average, Bullock said.

The largest part of that increase was the Department of Human Services' spending on Medicaid programs, the report said.

Bullock noted that spending figures in the report reflect bills paid by the state during May, regardless of when the expenses actually occurred.

Farm Aid relief effort helps troubled farmers in 37 states

AUSTIN (AP) — Rural relief programs in 37 states are benefiting from about $4.3 million spent or committed so far by the Farm Aid project, officials say.

The project has $2.7 million remaining in its relief fund, which organizers hope will be bolstered by proceeds from a second Farm Aid concert scheduled for July 4 in Austin.

Among the programs funded to help debt-ridden farmers are food pantries, telephone hot lines, legal services, community outreach programs and scholarships, officials said.

The first concert at Champaign, Ill., which cost about $2 million to produce, and subsequent solicitations through advertisements have attracted about $9 million in donations, said Farm Aid director Carolyn Mugar.

Bill Wittliff, an Austin screenwriter who helps oversee the funds, said the total changes daily because donations continue to come in.

Funds are deposited in a Champaign bank, but donations from Farm Aid II will be kept in an Austin bank, Wittliff said.

Singer Willie Nelson, organizer of the Farm Aid project, has made all decisions on spending the funds and signed the outgoing checks, Wittliff said. Nelson has received suggestions from many sources, he added.

The 14-hour Farm Aid II concert July 4 at the University of Texas' Memorial Stadium will include more than 50 entertainers and bands. The concert will be carried live on the cable television channel VH-1. Viewers will be asked to phone in pledges.

Farm Aid is administered from the singer's studio at Briarcliff, near Lake Travis, and from a small office in Cambridge, Mass., with a staff of two full-time and two part-time employees.

Ms. Mugar, who runs the Massachusetts office, said Nelson's personal secretary, Jody Fisher, also does a considerable amount of Farm Aid work but isn't on the payroll.

Wittliff said he is helping Nelson with Farm Aid as a favor to the singer and because he developed an interest in farm problems while researching and writing the film "Country," which centered on the failure of a Midwestern family farm.

"So many of the farmers are so far gone it's not a question of them losing their land — they're going to lose the land — but how do you save them to where they can leave with a little bit of dignity?" he said.

"What Farm Aid tries to do is help farmers help themselves. Willie decided early on that money should go to where it could do the most good for the most people.

"Farm Aid is not giving money directly to farmers. It's all going through places that hopefully can help the most farmers," Wittliff said.

In addition to the other projects, Farm Aid will sponsor a national farm congress this September in Kansas City, Mo., where "farm groups and organizations get together under one umbrella and discuss the farm crisis and hopefully find some common ground to stand on," Wittliff said.

Defense witness talked to hitchhiker

KERRVILLE, Texas (AP) — A hitchhiker walked onto the grounds of a state fish hatchery and told a worker there he had been chained up and held at gunpoint at a nearby ranch, the worker testified in the trial of three men accused of kidnapping drifters and forcing them to work.

Charles Shaw, a technician for the Texas Parks and Wildlife Commission, also testified he had served on the grand jury that returned organized crime indictments against the three defendants.

Shaw was called Monday as a defense witness, but his testimony ultimately backfired on lawyers defending Walter Wesley Ellebracht Sr., 55; his son Walter Wesley Ellebracht Jr., 33; and former ranchhand Carlton Robert Caldwell, 21.

The three are charged with conspiracy to commit aggravated kidnapping and murder in the March 1984 death of Anthony Bates.

Prosecutors allege Bates and others were lured with the promise of work to the Ellebrachts' sprawling Hill Country ranch. Then he was forced to stay.

The state also claims Bates was tortured to death with an electric cattle prod, then his body burned at the ranch.

Earlier testimony indicated Bates was held under water in a natural spring during the torture sessions.

The defense called Shaw to testify about daily temperature readings he took of the water in the spring, which flowed into a canal that fed a pond at the nearby fish hatchery.

But when prosecutor Ron Sutton took over questioning, Shaw told the court he ran into a hitchhiker who said he had escaped from the Ellebracht's ranch in the fall of 1983.

Shaw said he was on the grounds of the fish hatchery when he noticed a man "dressed like a hobo."

"He appeared to be extremely nervous and scared," Shaw said. "He said he had just escaped from the Ellebracht ranch where he had been kept in chains and under the gun," Shaw said.

"He said he didn't want to talk to the police, he just wanted to get as far away from Kerr County as possible," Shaw said.

Shaw said he telephoned the sheriff's office and reported the story and when the Ellebrachts were indicted a few months later, he repeated the story to a Texas Ranger.

Then, under re-questioning by defense lawyer Richard "Racehorse" Haynes, Shaw was asked if he had been a witness to the grand jury that indicted the Ellebrachts.

"No I wasn't a witness before the grand jury. I was on the grand jury," Shaw said.

Another witness, Joe Watson, 54, of Giddings, Texas, testified he and his father hunt deer every year on a lease on the Ellebracht ranch.

During deer season in November and December 1983, Watson said he noticed between 12 and 20 workers making wood keychains at the ranch.

Take time to keep in touch

I missed Fathers' Day. I was all ready to send Dad a nice and newsy Fathers Day card but — the cat's in the cradle — I got so caught up with newspaper work and the latest ACT I production that I didn't send it to him on time. The worst part about it was that I could not for the life of me find my record book that had everyone's addresses and telephone numbers. See, I use the classic Spaulding organization system: important information is filed in the last place you left it, wherever that is.

But Monday, after a fatherless Father's Day, I got a parcel and, lo and behold, the return address was Dad's. Seems he was two months in arrears in sending me my birthday gift, a book of humorous quips and axioms which I shall not bore you with until I get desperate in a future column. He also sent me the first volumes of my Grandfather's memoirs so that I may edit them and have them published. More on that as soon as I figure out how the sam hill to go about it.

So, now that I had his return address and I was too late for Father's Day, I got Dad's number from information, called him up and read him what I wrote in the letter.

Still the optimist, he wants me to locate his old friend Frank Shaller of Canadian, whom he met when he was doing petroleum geology work out here thirty years ago. So if Mr. Shaller is within reading distance, have him give me a call and renew an old friendship.

The whole Fathers' Day affair reminded me how difficult and important it is to keep up with correspondences when you're on your own. I am two months late with a birthday thank you letter to my aunt and uncle. I still have the card that I bought for Craig's May 7 birthday — by now I may as well rewrite bits of it and use it for Scott's July 5 birthday. And no telling how many times I could have wrote or called Mom.

The lesson hit even harder late Sunday night. I was talking to some girl from Miami, who is the same age as my sister in Oklahoma City. (By the way, unidentified young person, I've got your purse, so you can come by any evening to pick it up) As she was filling me in on all the local gossip, it occurred to me that I know more about this girl's ambitions, lifestyle and opinions than I do about my own sister's. Is that right?

I think about my friends from back home, those who wrote their addresses in my yearbook and swore they'll always remember me. Yet, as the years pass, the friendships fell by the wayside because we were too busy and involved with ourselves to keep in touch. Lack of correspondence kept my best friend from junior college from sending me her wedding announcement two years ago.

Our high school graduating class is approaching its tenth anniversary and I do not know what has become of any of my classmates or whether they will know how to locate me if they plan a reunion. I wonder how my high school or college friends would react if I got their addresses and dropped them a line.

I spent Monday in a blue funk because a friend failed to return my call. I was coming up with every excuse possible to feel lonely and isolated and it was working, yet I had done little to alleviate other people's loneliness and isolation by dropping them a line.

Think of your own family members or former classmates or that nice couple you met in some remote town 30 years ago. They'd love to hear from you.

Another lesson: Do not slice red onions after you spent the afternoon crying; it does strange things to the sunuses.

Medallions ready

AUSTIN (AP) — A Houston numismatist said Monday he hopes to sell 25,000 gold and 200,000 silver versions of the Texas Sesquicentennial medallion minted by his firm.

The state's Sesquicentennial Commission will get 2 percent royalties from the sales. The medallions, which are exempt from the state sales tax, cost about $6 each for the silver version and $375 for the gold.

The gold medallions will cost slightly less for buyers who purchase 10 or more, according to Dr. George Vogt, president and chairman of Colonial Coins Inc.

of Houston.

Vogt's company had the medallions made at a Mesa, Ariz., mint. That mint has been purchased by Colonial Coins and will be moved to Houston, Vogt said. So far, about 5,000 silver and 300 gold medallions have been made.

Two Dallas firms also have been authorized by the Sesquicentennial Commission to make similar medallions.

Vogt on Monday sold the first two gold medallions to Houston state Rep. Ralph Wallace, who pushed the legislation that exempted the medallions from the state sales tax.

Advice To A Parent With Adult Children.

As our children become young adults, they face an enigma.

On the one hand, they would rather not think about death — and that's as it should be at their age. On the other hand, they are reminded of their parents' mortality as they see them getting older — and they become concerned: "How would I cope with a loss?" "What would I need to know?" "What arrangements would Mom or Dad want?"

These are some of the nagging thoughts they may have.

whether they say so or not. One of the most loving things parents can do for their children is to take care of their own final arrangements — in advance — writing down vital family information that will be needed, along with wishes and instructions, and providing the children with copies. Complete pre-arranged funeral plans are now available that can even be pre-paid, sparing your children that expense someday.

Our booklets on funeral pre-planning provide everything you need to take care of this caring, thoughtful step. Call now for your free copies — or mail this coupon.

EVER STRIVING FOR TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

One heckuva way to sell a railroad

Rep. John Dingell, D-Mich., and Transportation Secretary Elizabeth Dole are locked in political combat over the fate of the government-owned freight railroad, Conrail. It is unclear who the winner will be, but so far the loser has been the American taxpayer.

Taxpayers always seem to come out on the losing end when politics and common sense clash — which happens often since government contains much of the former and little of the latter. In the process, politicians seem to lose whatever ideals they started with.

Take the Conrail case. Carved out of the remains of six bankrupt Northeast railroads 10 years ago, Conrail took a heavy infusion of Treasury cash, bought out some overly-generous union contracts, closed down some unprofitable lines and, miracle of miracles, managed after a period of years to turn a profit.

Terrific, said Secretary Dole, who inherited the business. She set about finding a way to sell the railroad, since this administration professes to believe that government doesn't belong in the railroad business. Or any business.

The government solicited bids and two were received — one from the existing Norfolk Southern railroads and the other from a group of investors headed by the New York investment firm of Morgan Stanley, who wanted to keep Conrail as a railroad unto itself.

After lengthy consideration, Dole picked Norfolk Southern and submitted the sale to Congress, which has the final say.

The Morgan Stanley group, unhappy at the outcome, first upped its bid, then turned to lobbying. For almost a year now, Dole's proposed sale has been caught up in a clash of political wills and careers; there is no end in sight.

Lost in all this is the original reason for selling Conrail: the government has no business running a railroad. That job properly belongs to the private sector. It should not fall to taxpayers to subsidize, and continue to back, one railroad against another. That will continue, however, as long as the government owns Conrail.

Norfolk Southern is a proven entity. It runs a highly profitable railroad throughout the Southeast and there is no doubt that it would keep Conrail on a similar track. The Morgan Stanley group, which is offering slightly more moeny, believes Conrail can continue to be profitable as a separate entity. Both offers have merit, but the government cannot afford to become bogged down in indecision and political infighting.

The original purpose of the sale was to get government out of the railroad business. That goal should be foremost in the minds of both Dingell and Dole. Come to terms — Morgan Stanley or Norfolk Southern — and sell. It should have been done months ago.

Unconstitutional meddling

WASHINGTON (NEA) — "Give me six lines written by the most honorable of men," Cardinal Richelieu proclaimed in the 17th century, "and I will find an excuse to hang him."

Now, more than 300 years later, a U.S. government commission appears intent upon reaffirming the French prelate's sage observation that any human expression can be deemed antithetical to the public good if its hostile critics embrace a suitably negative attitude.

That dubious task is being undertaken by the Attorney General's Commission on Pornography, an 11-member panel dominated by men and women who apparently believe that censorship is the remedy for everything from salacious thoughts to sexual violence.

The commission, formed a year ago by Attorney General Edwin Meese, will issue its final report early next month — but enough already is known about its work to conclude that it has ill-served the public.

Among the panel's many misadventures has been the premature, unauthorized disclosure of substantial portions of its final report. The conclusions have provoked harsh criticism from dissenting commissioners, social scientists, civil libertarians and others.

The findings were preordained because a majority of the commission's members long have been shrill critics of real and imagined pornography.

The panel's chairman, for example, is Henry E. Hudson, a prosecutor in suburban Virginia who has devoted much of his career to cracking down on "massage parlors," theaters specializing in X-rated films and "adult" book stores.

There is good cause to hold such establishments in low esteem, but their products, services and activities are, in great measure, protected by the First Amendment to the Constitution.

The danger inherent in meddling with that protection has been succinctly described by critic Kenneth Tynan: "Any country that has sexual censorship will eventually have political censorship."

A landmark 1973 U.S. Supreme Court decision provides a tightly drawn definition of obscenity. It requires the presence of three elements: a "patently offensive" description or depiction of specified sexual conduct, an intentional appeal to "prurient interest" and a general lack of any "serious literary, artistic, political or scientific value."

The commission, considering itself the guardian of the public's morals, has clumsily attempted to expand and extend that definition — to the point where it has verged upon designating appropriate sexual behavior for the nation's citizenry.

The commission's apparent disregard for established legal standards is illustrated by its call for a ban on sexually explicit telephone call-in services. When the Federal Communications Commission attempted to take similar action last autumn, it was stopped by a federal court because of the constitutional issues involved.

The panel's fascination with pornography has led to the purchase of "Young Girls in Bondage" and similar publications, field trips by the commissioners to peep-shows, and file cabinets bulging with accounts of truly grotesque and bizarre sexual practices.

What the commission has not acquired, however, is any appreciation for rights protected by the Constitution. Thus, it apparently intimidated 7-Eleven stores and several regional drug store chains into halting the sale of Playboy and Penthouse magazines.

Invoking the authority of the nation's highest ranking law enforcement officer, the commission coerced those stores with letters saying it had "received testimony that your company is involved in the sale and distribution of pornography."

It's all very depressing, but there is one piece of good news: The commission will go out of business after it completes its final report in early July.

Help for husband-hunters

By now single women have heard the shocking news concerning a recent study conducted by two Yale sociologists and a Harvard economist (What a trifecta that must have been!) that indicates if a woman isn't married by the time she's 35 she can just about forget it.

The study says women who turn 35 and haven't wed have only a 5 percent chance of doing so. The rate for 40-year-olds is a mere 2.6 percent.

What's a woman to do? There's college and then the career and just about the time a girl figures out carrying a briefcase doesn't hold a candle to having somebody to keep her feet warm at night, all the eligible footwarmers are gone.

But fear not. For at least a few husband-seekers out there, I may have their answers. I happen to know a number of bachelors who would love to meet a girl and get married.

They don't care if you're over 35, or over 40, or over anything, for that matter. As long as she breathes and wears a skirt, this group is anxious.

Maybe they aren't exactly knights in shining armor, but, according to the study, it's time to resort to any port in a storm.

Here are a few examples of the sort of man I'm talking about.

—Raunch Botts. He's 42, still has a crewcut and doesn't think wrestling is fake. He drinks beer and is loads of fun at a belching contest. Profession: Gives the elephants baths at the zoo. Physical description: Is starting to take after the elephants. What he wants from a wife: "Somebody to read the funny papers to me and explain what I don't understand."

—Grover (The Animal) Levine: He's 37, carries a knife, likes to spend his spare time chasing cars with his dog, Rambo. Has likeness of Attila the Hun tattooed on his back. Bites nails. Not his own, the ones he gets at the hardware store. Profession: bounty hunter. Physical description: Did you see the movie Godzilla? What he wants from a wife: "Somebody to chase cars with me. Rambo caught one last week."

—Leroy Chastain: Leroy's 36 and lives with his three cats, Fluffy, Whitey and Sabu. Tried to turn gay twice but was turned down both times. Vegetarian, Capricorn, giggles a lot. Profession: funeral director. What he wants from a wife: "The girl-next-door-type who wouldn't mind having a sex change operation."

—Abdul Abdul: Abdul is 46 and is a religious fanatic. Is into funky clothes that don't match, including T-shirts that say, "Kiss me, I'm dynamite." Profession: terrorist and part-time convenience store clerk. What he wants from a wife: "Somebody to cover the rear entrance of the plane."

—Randall Spinks: He's 34 and lives with his mom, who calls him, "My wittle dinky doo." Suffers from asthma and various varieties of fits. Reads National Geographic after his mother has torn out all the pictures that might corrupt his wittle mind. Profession: wimp. What he wants from a wife: "Somebody to play pattycake with me. Mom's reflexes are going in a hurry."

—Arnold Flournoy: Arnold is 39 and blind in one eye. He fell while carrying a sharp stick. Lost a leg in a car accident. Broke his arm skiing. Nose broken when he was mugged. Lost his teeth in a fall. Friends call him Lucky. Profession: faith healer. What he wants from a wife: "Somebody to take care of me in case my health goes bad."

It's your move, girls.

What's next for the space program?

By William A. Rasher

Now that the president's commission to investigate the Challenger tragedy has submitted its report, the question arises: Where does America's space program go from here? It is unlikely to be cut back much, if at all, once Congress and the White House are satisfied that the errors that made the Challenger disaster possible have been identified and corrected. But new mistakes can still be made down the road — as a recent remark by Sen. Albert Gore, Jr. illustrates. The Tennessee Democrat expressed the hope that America would, in the foreseeable future, land astronauts on Mars in a joint project with the Soviet Union.

Now, as it happens I find much to commend in the idea of a manned landing on Mars. Nothing seems more obvious to me than the proposition that it is man's destiny to explore the solar system. But I cannot imagine a more stomach-turning way of going about it than to embark on it hand in hand with the Soviet Union.

In the first place, a complex project such as a manned landing on Mars is bound to be difficult enough without trying to internationalize it. Sir John Hunt, planning the expedition that made the first successful ascent of Mt. Everest in 1953, sensibly confined the climbing party to citizens of British Commonwealth countries. As he wrote afterward, "On an expedition of this exceptional nature the stresses and strains set up between individuals are bound to be considerable, and I could not afford to make even more difficult the achievement of our all-important unity by making it at the same time an experiment in international good will."

Behind this point, however, looms a far larger one. Senator Gore's suggestion reveals his total confusion on the subject of U.S. relations with the Soviet Union. Nothing about that appalling regime warrants the sort of American approbation, or at least condonation, that would be implied by such a combined operation. (Just imagine the uproar if anyone proposed embarking on it with a regime like Nazi Germany — or even today's South Africa!) The Soviet Union is the longest-lasting and most thoroughgoing despotism on the face of the earth — a despotism all the more detestable because it is based, not on one of the uglier forms of ignorance, but on the claims of a perverted "science." Alone among the world's major nations, it has a Ministry for the Promotion of Atheism.

For 40 years we Americans have been told that, because of the prospective horrors of a nuclear war between the superpowers, it is necessary to walk carefully in the matter of our relations with the Soviet Union. As a means of discouraging the use of our attitude toward Nazi Germany (which didn't have The Bomb) as a benchmark for how to treat the Soviet Union, this argument had, and still has, a certain validity. But there has never been any lack of people on this side of the Iron Curtain eager to put our relations with Moscow on a positively amiable footing, and Sen. Gore finds his place in that grand tradition.

Unfortunately his suggestion has a superficial charm that will appeal mightily to the hopelessly naive. It is easy to imagine what they will say: Perhaps out there, looking back on the receding earth from the perspective of a million miles, Joe and Ivan and Tom and Vassily will realize at last, and tell us, that we are all travelers on the same tiny planet, and that the things we have in common are far greater than the things that divide us. That might bring tears to the eyes of senators like Albert Gore, but what effect do you suppose it will have on the grim-visaged members of the Politburo?

Bits of history

In 1858, in a speech in Springfield, Ill., Senate candidate Abraham Lincoln said the slavery issue had to be resolved, declaring, "A house divided against itself cannot stand."

Feynman reports NASA troubleshooting masked problems of the shuttle engine

WASHINGTON (AP)—The space shuttle main engines, "built at the edge of, or outside of, previous engineering experience," may have a risk of failure many times greater than that estimated by NASA management, according to a report by Nobel physicist Richard Feynman.

Moreover, Feynman concluded, the NASA troubleshooting on the engines "is closely analogous to the deterioration seen in the rules" for the booster rockets whose failure caused the Challenger catastrophe.

In a 13-page personal report that focuses attention on the shuttle's most complicated component, the Rogers commission member described the problem-solving process as "a slow shift toward decreasing safety" at the National Aeronautics and Space Administration. By way of example, he noted that the hardware is 15 years out of date.

Feynman's study is to be published next month by the commission as part of an appendix to last week's commission report, but Feynman provided copies at a news conference last week in California. He is traveling GREACHED Monday for elaboration.

NASA spokeswoman Shirley Green said, "We have no comments on Dr. Feynman's views, but we are aware that he is a distinguished physicist, a dedicated member of the commission who devoted a lot of time to his study."

Feynman noted that "the engine is a much more complicated structure than the solid rocket booster," and added, "Generally, the engineering seems to be of high quality and apparently considerable attention is paid to deficiencies and faults found in operation."

Nonetheless, his paper draws parallels between how both the liquid-fuel main engines and the solid-fuel booster rockets were tested and certified by NASA and how NASA has responded to problems within each.

But Feynman said engineers at Rocketdyne, manufacturer of the main engines, calculated a one in 10,000 chance of failure. He added: "Engineers at Marshall (Space Flight Center) estimate it as one in 300, while NASA management, to whom these engineers report, claims it is one in 100,000. An independent engineer consulting for NASA thought one or two per 100 a reasonable estimate."

Senator says

News report delays Supreme Court ruling

HOUSTON (AP)—A news report that the U.S. Supreme Court would issue a ruling on the Gramm-Rudman balanced budget bill kept the court from doing so, one of the authors of the bill said.

"My guess is, given the leak, the Supreme Court is unhappy and is deciding to show the leaker by holding it up," Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, told 750 people attending a Houston Chamber of Commerce luncheon on Monday.

The court had announced previously it would hand down three decisions Monday. But it announced only two, neither involving the balanced budget law.

"I've told the President and I've told the Sen. (Robert) Dole that if the Supreme Court strikes down significant provisions of Gramm-Rudman, there'll be a Gramm-Rudman II. I'm not about to let Congress off the hook on balancing the budget," he said. Dole, R-Kansas, is the Senate majority whip.

Gramm said if the high court finds problems with the bill, then "we'll go back and fix it."

ABC News reported Sunday that the court would announce in a 7-2 ruling Monday that the legislation violates the constitutional separation-of-powers doctrine.

The network had reported that the court was about to announce a decision striking down the law's provision giving important powers to the comptroller general, an officer of Congress.

The Gramm-Rudman law calls for eliminating the federal deficit gradually by 1991. If the deficit rises above yearly targets, automatic spending cuts go into effect. The comptroller general, who heads Congress' General Accounting Office, is in charge of ordering the across-the-board cuts.

Gramm, who referred to the ABC report as a rumor, said the problems with the comptroller general's role in the budget process would be easy to correct.

"To this point, the only challenge is the involvement of the comptroller," Gramm said. "If that's a problem, it's a problem with a 1921 law. We can correct that by simply repealing the offending provision."

A three-judge appellate panel said on Feb. 7 that, by calculating the precise amount of budget cuts for each federal agency and program, the comptroller general would be exercising "the sort of power normally conferred upon the executive."

Gramm said there is a fallback provision in the bill to get around using the comptroller.

Congress also could amend the Budget and Accounting Act of 1921, which gives Congress the ability to remove the comptroller. That provision in the 1921 law creates the separation-of-powers problem, Gramm said.

In 1978, ABC carried leaked reports from the Supreme Court over a period of two weeks.

One was the court's ruling on a controversial New York case involving newspaper efforts to gain entry to pretrial proceedings. The high court determined that the right to a public trial did not entitle the press and public to attend such hearings.

After the ABC leaks, an employee of the Supreme Court's print shop was transferred to another job.

The first round of Gramm-Rudman budget cuts, $11.7 million worth, went into effect March 1.

The deficit for this year is estimated at more than $200 billion. The Gramm-Rudman law requires the figure to be no higher than $144 billion for the next fiscal year, beginning Oct. 1.

The suit against the Gramm-Rudman law was brought by 12 members of Congress and unionized federal workers.

AIDS to add billions more for the nation's health bill

WASHINGTON (AP)—The people and government of the United States are likely to pay $8 billion to $16 billion or more a year to care for AIDS victims by 1991, and public health experts say they don't know where the money will come from.

At a time of rising health costs, planners in and out of government are exploring new and cheaper options for AIDS patients, such as expanded home health care for those with families and group homes for AIDS patients without families. They are also looking at an expanded role for nursing homes and hospices, or creation of hospital-affiliated out-patient care centers.

The Public Health Service, a branch of the Health and Human Services Department, offered the cost estimate last week but left open the question of financing the gigantic tab.

"We very carefully stayed away from saying who should pay for it," said Dr. Donald Ian Macdonald, acting assistant secretary for health. "But we're obviously not going to get it all done in this department." The cost would be only about 1.2 percent to 2.4 percent of the expected $650 billion total U.S. spending on personal health in 1991.

In 1980, the most recent figures available, direct medical care for heart disease and stroke cost $19.9 billion and cancer cost $10.6 billion, excluding nursing home costs.

But AIDS care is a new medical expense, and health planners are looking fearfully at the added cost.

The health insurance industry is pressing for creation of high risk insurance pools for those testing positive for the AIDS virus, as well as those with high-risk markers for other expensive diseases. It also wants the right to refuse individual policies to people carrying the AIDS virus.

"We see it as a societal problem," said Amy Biderman of the Health Insurance Association of America. "And I just don't think anyone has the answer."

The health service predicted that 145,000 people will be sick with AIDS in 1991 — 71,000 patients at the start of the year and 74,000 diagnosed with the illness during the year.

It added 29,000 cases to allow for the estimated 20 percent error rate due to some physicians' reluctance to report AIDS cases. To get the lower end estimate, it estimated the cost of treating each patient at $46,000. For the $16 billion figure, it doubled the cost.

Those figures may be low. The federal Centers for Disease Control found that the cost of treating the first 10,000 AIDS patients was $147,000 each in hospital care alone. But the first AIDS patients were medical novelties who were subject to more expensive testing and care.

A study by St. Luke's-Roosevelt Hospital Center in New York of 152 AIDS patients concluded that their care cost 38 percent more than other, comparably ill patients.

The AIDS patients required an average of 10.3 hours of nursing care each day, nearly twice that required by equally ill non-AIDS patients.

HUD secretary tells mayors to forget 'rich Uncle Sam'

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico (AP) — Samuel R. Pierce Jr., the secretary of housing and urban development, says urban America can no longer expect the federal government to be "lavish with the public purse."

"I know this is difficult to accept," Pierce said in a speech to be delivered today to the U.S. Conference of Mayors. "It's like the rich and generous uncle who suddenly cuts off his relatives."

"Well, your rich Uncle Sam no longer has the wherewithal to support his former habits of generosity," Pierce said. "In fact, as we all know he's in debt, deeply."

Pierce said that despite their dire complaints, most cities are healthy and can bear a bigger share of paying for local needs. Mayors of both parties have used the convention to criticize the Reagan administration for seeking to end big urban aid programs like general revenue sharing and to slash by half or more other domestic programs.

On Monday, the new president of the mayors' conference, Democrat Joseph Riley of Charleston, S.C., delivered a rousing condemnation of administration urban policy, which he called a "vicious attack" on the long-standing system of federal support for urban America.

"This assault is not caring, but callous," Riley said. "It is not sound; it is senseless. But the fact of the matter is that this assault has been successful."

The administration, saying there is no more revenue to share, wants to do away with the $4.6 billion a year general revenue-sharing program, which goes to virtually every local government in the United States.

But Pierce said cities have the resources to remain healthy on their own.

"For the most part, our cities are doing better," he said. "Many have budget surpluses, the result in part of the strong economic recovery, and in part of your good management. So this must be the time for the cities to bear an increasing share of the burden of meeting community needs."

The secretary said the administration recognized cities were not free of problems, and that many communities have missed out on economic growth of recent years. But he said the old approach of spending billions of federal dollars on inner-city housing and other projects has proved to be the wrong approach.

"My point is," he said, "that the Reagan administration is sensitive to the problems and needs of your cities. We are doing, and will continue to do what we can to help find solutions. But what we cannot do any longer is be lavish with the public purse."

More than 150 mayors and hundreds of other city officials are attending the annual convention.

Park gunman kills one, wounds several

MILWAUKEE (AP)—A man who wanted to show a playground audience that his semi-automatic rifle was not a toy opened fire into a crowd, slaying one person and seriously wounding several others, police say.

Police Lt. William Beasley said a 22-year-old man was taken into custody near the park shortly after the shootings Monday. He said a 13-year-old boy also was questioned.

Beasley said some witnesses thought more than 10 shots were fired. He said there were conflicting reports on how many people were struck by shots, and that the estimate ranged to five.

Witnesses' comments would be among information submitted today to the Milwaukee County district attorney's office for consideration of charges, Beasley said.

Teen-ager Darnell Johnson said he was playing basketball with companions on one of the park's courts when he heard shots and saw a wounded man.

"The guy was lying there, and the other guys started running," Johnson said.

Police said witnesses' accounts led to a neighborhood search for several young men.

Afghan rebels vow to set up own government, Reagan rejects them

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan has rejected a request by Afghan guerrillas that he break relations with the Soviet-backed Kabul regime, but rebel leaders say they will establish their own government and seek sophisticated arms to defend it.

Reagan told the Afghans on Monday that although recognition was important, it was too early to make a decision. He also said any negotiated settlement to the fighting must provide for withdrawal of all Soviet troops from Afghanistan and a method of permitting the Afghans to determine their own form of government, White House spokesman Larry Speakes said.

"Our goals are identical: the freedom of Afghanistan. The Soviets must not believe that aggression pays," Speakes quoted the president as telling the four leaders during an Oval Office meeting.

Following the meeting, the guerrilla leaders vowed to continue their fight against the government in Kabul, which is backed by an estimated 115,000 Soviet troops.

"The first thing the mojahedeen (Moslem guerrillas) intend to do is to declare a government in the liberated area, which is about 80 percent of Afghanistan," rebel official Burhanuddin Rabbani said.

Another Afghan leader, Sebghatullah Mojadedi, told reporters, "We need anti-aircraft forces, sophisticated weapons, so that we can protect this area from bombing" and from attack.

The rebel leaders set no timetable for establishing a government.

The leaders of the Itahed-I-Islami Mojahedeen, also known as the Afghanistan Resistance Alliance, met with Reagan and congressional leaders to press their campaign for more military and humanitarian aid, and for wider international recognition.

Rabbani told Reagan of "casualties and atrocities" inflicted by the Soviets, and at the end of his presentation, Speakes said, Rabbani "indicated that he would like to have official diplomatic recognition of the resistance effort."

Helms claims new extradition law would have outlawed the American revolution in 1775

By LAWRENCE L. KNUTSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Jesse Helms told the Senate Foreign Relations Committee last week that if an anti-terrorist extradition treaty with Great Britain had been in effect in 1775, the heroes of Lexington and Concord would have been extradited to England and hanged.

But some committee colleagues replied, in effect, that in the words of the revolutionary ditty, "Yankee Doodle," Helms, R-N.C., had "stuck a feather in his cap and called it macaroni."

Helms opposes the extradition treaty, which is intended to deny safe haven in the United States to members of the Irish Republican Army accused of terrorist acts in Northern Ireland. He contends it might create a harmful precedent which would be used to deny sanctuary for those trying to overturn communist regimes.

And he reached back 200 years in American history to make his case.

"Under this proposal, as I understand it, the American Revolution would have been outlawed," Helms said. "Lexington and Concord would have been considered heinous crimes."

"Under Article One, the boys who fired 'the shot heard 'round the world' would have been extradited to a British gallows," Helms said.

Continuing the theme, he remarked: "Now I think it's ironic that only two weeks away from the Fourth of July the committee is considering abolishing the principles of the Declaration of Independence."

"That's what it amounts to," he said. "We are being asked to outlaw Lexington and Concord."

"In effect, we might as well abolish the Fourth of July."

Helms' colleagues, declaring the situation was in no way so drastic, said, in effect, that the national holiday need not be repealed.

"I like to hear 'Yankee Doodle' just as much as my friend from North Carolina — and I even whistle it myself on occasion — but I don't think Lexington and Concord are good examples of how this treaty might work," said Sen. Charles Mathias, R-Md.

"Had the treaty been in effect at that time we wouldn't be dealing with a foreign sovereignty, we would have been dealing with the internal laws of the British empire," Mathias said.

"So I don't think that's an adequate exposition of the principles at work here."

Sen. Thomas Eagleton, D-Mo., growled that it was out of line to compare "mad dog" IRA bombers to the founding fathers.

"To compare a parcel bomber to the founding fathers and the Declaration of Independence, there's not a person in this room, who believes it, and I think it's a disgrace," Eagleton grumbled.

He said there is a "distinct difference" between a revolution in a colony such as India or the 13 American colonies and violence in Northern Ireland, which he said is British territory.

In any case, Mathias said, dryly, the point is long moot.

"If Yorktown had turned out differently, we wouldn't be talking about it," he said.

City secretary charged with felony theft

GONZALES, Texas (AP) — Douglas W. Leist, 35, the city secretary and municipal clerk of this South Texas community, has been accused of stealing at least $20,000 in city funds.

Leist was arrested Sunday night and charged with felony theft, Gonzales County assistant district attorney Dwight Peschel said. Leist was in county jail

Monday night in lieu of $100,000 bond, officials said.

Auditors told city officials they discovered during the annual city audit that cash had been taken from city deposits on two or three days during the past year, City Manager Calvin Spacek said.

Leist has been a city employee for 16 years, most of it as city secretary, Spacek added.

Texas parents await word on visit to their daughter in Moscow hospital

DALLAS (AP) — The parents of a teen-aged girl who was visiting the Soviet Union when she became ill were "on the phone more than 24 hours" trying to learn her condition or find a way to get visas into the country.

Finally, by late Monday night they learned from the U.S. embassy their daughter, 17-year-old Lisa Riggs of Irving, was in the critical care unit of a Moscow hospital, but no doctors were available to give the embassy details of her condition.

The girl's mother, Cheryl Riggs, said she was told her daughter probably would require intensive care for a week after suffering an asthma attack on Sunday.

"Our information is they will find out today whether she is stable enough to be transported out," Ms. Riggs said early today. "If we can transport her out to a more accessible country, then we wouldn't need visas (to visit her)."

She said Germany was mentioned as a possible site for the transfer.

The teen-ager and several other students from suburban Irving were on a tour of several eastern European countries.

While in Moscow, "they went to a circus and were seated at the very top. (Lisa) has asthma. When they got to the top of the stairs, she collapsed and quit breathing," Ms. Riggs said.

Medics administered cardiopulmonary resuscitation, but a teacher who traveled with the teen-ager in an ambulance said she was still being given CPR when he last saw her.

The girl's mother said she learned of her daughter's asthma attack at 4 p.m. CDT Sunday when a teacher, Betty Salter, called her from the American embassy in Moscow, she said.

"Since then we've been on the phone more than 24 hours trying to get into Russia or to get people here to help us get information," said Ms. Riggs, who added that she had contacted members of Congress and the State Department.

Gramm spokesman Larry Neal said issuing a visa to the Soviet Union is a difficult process, but because Gramm's office dealt with a similar situation recently they have been able to help the couple. He predicted the girls' father, Gordon Riggs, would be able to secure a visa by Tuesday.

Ms. Riggs, a nurse, said she was particularly concerned because, "I know all the things that can go wrong." She said her daughter had never been so ill with an asthma attack before.

The trip by students from Irving's MacArthur High School originally was scheduled for a stop in Kiev, but was rescheduled after the Chernobyl nuclear accident.

"I could see she was real excited about going and was proud of the fact she had paid for it on her own. I didn't really have any qualms about her going," Ms. Riggs said.

Practice keeping astronauts' skills sharp

By PAUL RECER
AP Aerospace Writer

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — On the third floor of NASA's mission control, simulated space shuttles are taking off, time after time, day after day, guided by the electronic imagination of a bank of computers. Crews of astronauts, working in a pretend shuttle cockpit nearby, spend hours daily "flying" into orbit, while engineers monitor the progress of the make-believe mission. The astronauts and several hundred flight controllers in Mission Control are keeping skills sharp in an act of faith that a reorganized National Aeronautics and Space Administration will recover from the trauma of history's worst space accident — the explosion of Challenger and the death of seven crew members.

A presidential commission that investigated the Jan. 28 accident provided a blueprint for recovery in a report issued last Monday. President Reagan on Friday issued the marching orders to NASA administrator James Fletcher.

"The procedural and organizational changes suggested in the report," said Reagan, "will be essential to resuming effective and efficient space transportation system operations and will be crucial in restoring U.S. space launch activities to full operational status."

Reagan gave Fletcher and NASA 30 days to determine how and when the commission's recommendations will be implemented.

The job is enormous and complex. It will touch almost every element of the far-flung NASA establishment. And the organizational and budgetary considerations are almost as intricate as the engineering demands.

NASA's top priority is to correct the faulty solid rocket booster joint design that the presidential commission blamed for the Challenger accident.

A new team of engineers from NASA, the National Research Council and from industry spent the week at the Marshall Space Flight Center in Alabama studying rocket redesign proposals that number in the dozens.

James Wood, a Johnson Space Center engineer, said the engineers must consider not only the actual changes in the rocket joint, but how those changes will affect the routine rocket assembly once the shuttle starts flying again.

A major and costly decision that NASA must make is how to prove the safety of the redesigned rockets. The old rocket engine design was tested in scale model and with the full-scale rockets on a horizontal stand. The presidential commission recommended that the new design be proven with vertical firings over a range of temperatures in tests "which duplicate the actual launch configuration as closely as possible."

Wood said to meet this recommendation, NASA actually may have to fire rocket engines from a launch pad at the Kennedy Space Center. The unmanned engines, guided by a computer, could be blasted from a pad, parachuted into the Atlantic Ocean and recovered for examination.

Fletcher said vertical tests of the rocket redesign are not included in the $650 million budgeted for recovery from the Challenger accident. He declined to say how such tests would affect plans to resume shuttle flights by July, 1987, but some engineers say privately that vertical tests would slip the shuttle's first flight well into 1988.

The presidential commission also demanded that NASA search for a way to put a crew escape system into the shuttle orbiter, although the commissioners admitted that such a system would not have saved the Challenger crew. Engineers say a crew escape system would involve a major redesign of the shuttle cockpit and some senior astronauts, such as Robert Crippen, don't believe an escape system is practical.

But a group of Johnson Space Center engineers are studying options and are scheduled to give a final report on June 27.

NASA also was ordered to improve the brake, tire and nose wheel steering systems used by the shuttle on its runway landings. Years of work had already been done on these systems, and JSC engineer Robert Bobola said last week a new braking system, almost four times as strong as the one used before, already has been perfected. A new nose wheel steering system has already been tested on one shuttle flight and had been installed in the Challenger. Studies continue on the tires, said Bobola.

NASA also was ordered to conduct a thorough hazard analysis of the safety-critical parts of the shuttle.

Richard Truly, the NASA associate administrator of space flight, ordered that each of more than 900 shuttle parts considered vital to its safety be reevaluated in detail. An audit panel of National Research Council is to verify the studies and report to Fletcher. The commission report was a triumph for the astronaut corps. The commissioners, which included astronaut Sally Ride, insisted that flight crews have a stronger voice in the design and safe operation of the shuttle. JSC director Jesse Moore said a plan is being formulated to involve the astronauts at virtually every level of decision-making, meaning that the voices of men and women who fly the shuttle will be heard at management levels where in the recent past they were silent.

"This would effectively put the astronaut office operating at the level it did during the Apollo days," said an astronaut who asked not to be named.

Crippen has been authorized to develop a plan that will plug astronauts into the management system. A change almost as complex as the hardware redesigns is a reshuffling of NASA's organization chart. Many of the management officials who held prominent jobs prior to the Challenger accident are now gone, reassigned, retired or replaced. New officials will now operate in a different way.

Perhaps the most fundamental change in how the new NASA must operate is that the space agency now will have more critical Congress and White House monitoring its every move.

Some congressmen admitted last week that in years past they were romanced by the success of NASA and were lax in their oversight of the agency. The shock of the Challenger accident and revelations from the commission investigation changed that.

Doctors ask AMA to lead fight on tobacco

CHICAGO (AP) — The American Medical Association, criticized by one member as a "Johnny-come-lately" on the issue, is being asked to lead the fight for a tough crackdown on smoking including tighter curbs on tobacco sales.

"The surgeon general years ago took the lead. We should have been the organization taking the lead," St. Louis physician Dr. George M. Bohigian told an AMA public health committee Monday at the organization's annual meeting.

"I think it's kind of a shame that the AMA has been Johnny-come-lately on this issue," he said.

The committee heard a spate of reports and resolutions aimed at tobacco use and was making recommendations on them today to the AMA's 386-member House of Delegates, the policy making body of the 271,000-member organization.

AMA delegates voted last year to support legislation to ban tobacco advertising across-the-board. AMA trustee Ronald M. Davis reported at Monday's committee meeting that such legislation was introduced in Congress last week.

In Washington, D.C., a spokesman for the Tobacco Institute countered by saying a recent poll commissioned by his organization among 1,030 Americans found cigarette advertising was viewed as the least important of six issues organized medicine might address.

"The public was much more interested in seeing the AMA address the high costs of medical care, increasing the quality of care for the poor and elderly, reducing the costs of medical equipment, increasing the availability of physicians and decreasing waiting time in doctors' offices," said institute spokesman Scott Stapf.

The strongest anti-tobacco resolution, which says 314,000 deaths and $3.4 billion in Medicare costs are blamed on smoking annually, calls for:

- Developing model legislation to bar smoking on all commercial airline flights in the continental United States.
- Supporting legislation to control smoking in public places, to prohibit vending-machine sales of tobacco and to outlaw sales of tobacco to people under age 21.
- Favoring legislation to prohibit sales of tobacco in health-care institutions.
- Pushing for a higher federal excise tax on cigarettes, with the revenue earmarked for the Medicare program.

Says drop in farmland values slowing

WASHINGTON (AP) — The slide in farmland values is slowing but probably will continue at least through the remainder of this year and in the early part of 1987, an Agriculture Department official says.

Ewen H. Wilson, deputy assistant secretary for economics in USDA, said Monday that "no one can predict a turnaround in land prices" at this time.

"What we're going to have to see is some response to the export market," Wilson said in an interview.

Job prospects for the over-50 group better, some experts say

NEW YORK (AP) — The employment outlook has improved for out-of-work, over-50, white-collar executives, some experts say.

They say the older executives are benefiting from a growing realization that their experience is a valuable asset and from the decline in job loyalty of younger workers. Others say older workers are finding jobs because they are lowering their expectations.

However, some experts aren't optimistic at all.

James Challenger, president of Challenger, Gray & Christmas Inc., a Chicago-based outplacement firm, is in the upbeat camp, saying there has been a dramatic increase in the hiring of older people. He says his belief is based on the success of his older clients in finding jobs at the same rate as younger ones.

Moderately positive is Madeleine Swain, president of Swain & Swain, an outplacement firm in New York, who said: "We think it has been improving and continues to improve."

However, Ms. Swain added, "Frankly, it has been our experience that Fortune 500 companies are not out searching for older workers. We have not seen any kind of trend or commitments."

"Realistically, a 55-, 58-year-old person coming out of a big corporation is probably not going to find another opportunity at a big corporation. Those who realize that they have good things to offer ... may have to offer it to a different audience."

Smaller and medium-size companies are thrilled to hire older people, she said.

Wesley Poriotis, chairman and chief executive officer of Wesley Brown & Bartle Co., a New York-based executive recruitment company, is among the pessimists.

"I would love to say that the situation is better because people are more knowledgeable about agism," he said. "But when it comes down to the actual hiring, I don't think there is much change.

The laws are there. The spirit is not. Therefore hopes look dismal."

The unemployment rate among Americans between the ages of 45 and 54 and in the managerial and professional occupations was 2.4 percent in the first quarter of this year, the Labor Department says. That compared with a 7.5 percent civilian unemployment rate in the same time period.

"There are not that many people in that group who are unemployed, but once they are unemployed they have a very hard time finding another job," said Philip Rones, an economist at the Bureau of Labor Statistics in Washington.

The number of older Americans has been growing dramatically.

The U.S. Census Bureau says 21.3 percent of the population was 55 older in 1984. From 1974 to 1984, the number of Americans aged 65 and older grew by 27.1 percent, while the total population rose by 10.7 percent, it says.

Older Americans are protected by the Age Discrimination in Employment Act, passed by Congress in 1967. That act was amended in 1978 to remove any mandatory retirement age for

Gramm joins the Clements campaign

AUSTIN (AP) — Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, has joined the "brain trust" of former Gov. Bill Clements' gubernatorial campaign, it was announced Monday.

Gramm will join 10 others as part of the GOP candidate's executive committee, said Reggie Bashur, Clements' press secretary, in a phone interview from Clements' Dallas headquarters.

"Sen. Gramm is a man of principle, integrity and intelligence," Clements said. "Sen. Gramm is a leader in Texas as well as across the nation. He will have a major role in my campaign. I will rely on his wise counsel."

most federal government employees and pushed the protection ceiling from 65 up to 70 for all individuals.

The number of age discrimination complaints filed by the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission has grown. Ninety-six were filed in the government's fiscal year that ended Sept. 30, vs. 67 in fiscal 1984 and 33 in 1983.

Still, that is not a large number considering how many Americans likely face prejudice against their age.

But Challenger maintains the situation is brighter, even though there are not any firm statistics.

"Companies may be coming to realize that possessing a team of fresh-faced MBAs is not a cure-all, that a stable of 'whiz kids' is no guarantee of expanded profits," he said. "Those who have tried investing in the young may conclude that what is needed is sheer wisdom rather than sheer energy."

Air Force sergeant finds change from duty in dancing

By BILL WHITAKER
Abilene Reporter-News

ABILENE, Texas (AP)—When Sgt. Darron Kenley, a native South Carolinian, was stationed in dusty old West Texas, he didn't let it get to him.

In fact, he started dancing. It was, he says, an impulsive thing.

What's more, he occupied the spotlight in Dance Ltd.'s "The Wizard of Oz," recently at the Abilene Civic Center, playing a particularly animated scarecrow.

For the last four years, dance has been an emotional release for Kenley, not just from the pressures of maintenance of such big birds as the B-1B but, in the beginning, from the seemingly dismal prospect of being stationed in Abilene.

"I really did it out of boredom," says the 25-year-old airman, who was born and reared in South Carolina. "I was very depressed, being away for the first time from South Carolina.

"I had been there 20 years, and then I came to Texas."

Today, Kenley no longer needs dance as an escape from living in Abilene—in fact, he's quite happy with his adopted hometown—but dancing does remain a joy in his life.

The bachelor even has performed with Tops in Blue and toured overseas as a dancer.

And that's not bad for a man who, before trying out in a Dyess Air Force Base talent competition, never had danced seriously.

"I had always been interested in dance and that style of dance—jazz—so I tried it, and I've been doing it ever since."

Kenley always has been moved by a muse or two. Growing up in South Carolina, he yearned to be a clarinet player. "I wanted to be Benny Goodman," he says.

In high school, he also participated in the Air Force ROTC but told his mother "I would never join the military."

However, after two years in college at South Carolina State University and with money running out, he thought again about joining the military.

"I finally decided to just go for it," he says. "It was one of those impulsive things."

Stationed almost immediately at Dyess, Kenley began to rue the day he ever had thought about signing up.

"It was a culture shock," says Kenley, recalling his move to Abilene. "I was pretty used to a fast-paced lifestyle, and things here were slow."

All that's changed now.

When his work training mechanics in maintenance of the B-1B isn't keeping him busy, he's occupied in dance, often with Cindy Mundschenk and her troupe at Dance Ltd. "I'm always late to class," he admits.

Of course, Kenley has been ribbed by his fellow airmen for his dance abilities and his tours as a performer with Tops in Blue.

"They'd say, 'You just joined the military to dance.' But that's just teasing from the guys, and it's calmed down some."

He says he's even considering getting into dance professionally once he leaves the military.

"Now dancing is at the top of the list," he says. "I just hope I'm not growing too old too fast."

Of course, he points out, he also just re-enlisted.

Lake Jackson man preserves his Indian heritage with flint

By JILL WENDHOLT
The Brazosport Facts

LAKE JACKSON, Texas (AP)—Ray Olachia shapes a slab of smoke-brown flint, striking it with a worn river cobble. The blank crumbles at oblique angles as flakes shower with each blow. Several minutes later, he has whittled the crude outlines of an arrowhead.

A Mescalero Apache Indian raised in Baytown, Olachia played games with bows and arrow as a child. As soon as Indian children could walk, they learned to use a bow and arrow, he says.

"They were an extension of their arm. They were their toys," the 43-year-old Olachia says. "I was 18 before I got out of the woods and started living in the real world."

He notches the arrowhead and pressure flakes the edges with a piece of deer antler, then holds it up for inspection.

"Feel how sharp that can be," he says. The serrated edges are as sharp as a knife.

Using a knife point of glossy black obsidian a natural glass formed by the cooling of molten lava he cuts a length of sinew, rubs the strands between the palm of his hands and deftly wraps the cord around the base of the arrowhead, joining it to an arrow wood shaft.

Placing an arrow between his teeth, he poises one in his bow and a third in his hand, and pulls the taut bow string. He fires all three bows into a foam rubber cylinder target a few feet away. The arrows pierce the foam and lodge in the center.

In his back yard, he hurls an atlatl, a spear catapult. He can throw the atlatl 100 yards and hit a target at 35 yards.

"A little practice and it was a very effective weapon in the hands of the right people," he says.

Two tanned deerskin hides on the floor of his screened porch display examples his work arrowheads, spear points, axes and awls made of bone.

His materials are from nature and normally he works by a fire in the back yard of his home. The edge of his yard is bordered by the railroad tracks that run parallel to Old Angleton Road.

A clump of straight-stalked arrow wood grows at the bottom of the railroad embankment. He makes his arrowheads out of stones that he finds by the San Bernard River and ties turkey feathers to the butt of the bow.

The art of making stone points is called flint knapping, an art he learned as a child from his grandfather. He talks wistfully of his grandfather, a man who lived many years on a reservation and knew many of the dying Indian ways.

Olachia says when he was a child, he thought he didn't have time to listen and learn more from his grandfather.

"I should have listened. He had a lot to say," he says.

Today, as Indians leave the reservations, very few people are learning the necessary skills from their elders to keep native Indian arts alive, Olachia says.

He says his craft is a part of who he is.

"It's a part of me. It's not a hobby. Painting pictures or working with wood that can be considered a hobby."

Scouting also is a big part of Olachia's life that coordinates well with his knowledge and skills.

"I'm a (Cub Scout) den mother and will probably be one for another 100 years," he says. Olachia and his wife Carol Ann have six children at home; one is adopted, one is their own, and the others are from their previous marriages.

"Scouting runs in the family. It's part of the family. It is a built-in part of raising the kids and it's something we don't take lightly."

Olachia is a maintenance supervisor for Dow Chemical Co. When he's not working or spending time with his family, he talks to scout groups, school classes and civic organizations about Indian culture and lifestyle.

Olachia says many people misunderstand Indians and their way of life.

"I want to let as many people who are willing to listen to know about these things," he says.

Through the years, Olachia has been experimenting with creating points he sees in books and museums and researching Indian culture. His wife says he has worn out some of the family history books.

He makes artifacts native to many different Indian tribes. The styles and shapes of the points tell where they came from, but it can be more difficult to determine if a finely honed point is five or 5,000 years old, he says.

He now is working on facsimiles of artifacts of the Karankawa Indians, a coastal tribe that lived in Brazosport until the 1840s. The artifacts and a videotape of an excavation of Karankawa artifacts from the Stratton Ridge site near Dow's Plant B will be included in a traveling trunk for the Brazosport Independent School District.

The Karankawa Indians often are misunderstood and were believed to have been cannibals. He tells schoolchildren that when reading history, they must consider the source.

"The worst thing that ever happened to the Indian was when John Wayne came along," Olachia says. Wayne portrayed Indian as "bloodthirsty," "savage red skins."

"If someone wanted your land, you'd be bloodthirsty, too. But when you really get down and study, they're (Indians are) human beings just like us that are trying to live. Unfortunately, they got in the way of civilization."

"As I learn more, I see their side of it and learn what a tragedy," he says. "If you're the conquered, you can do whatever you please with the conquered."

River Valley Folk Festival promises family fun

There will be fun, entertainment, food and crafts exhibitions of interest to the entire family at the River Valley Folk Festival Saturday June 21, in Canadian. The Festival is being sponsored by the River Valley Pioneer Museum and proceeds will go to the Museum Building Fund.

All events, most of them indoors, will be at the Hemphill Exhibition Building south of Canadian. The gate fee, good for all day, will be $1.50 for adults and $1 for students. Pre-school children will be admitted free of charge.

The Festival will begin at 9 in the morning and continue until 9 in the evening.

A special feature of the morning program will be a performance at 11 o'clock by the Kwahadi Indian Dancers of Amarillo. This troop of Scouts presents authentic Indian dance es in a colorful and exciting performance with appeal for all ages.

Scheduled to arrive at 11 is Bill Waddell, the "Big Texan" of Amarillo's Big Texan Steak Ranch, who will entertain with fiddle music and singing. On his stilt, The Big Texan towers a full 8'3", an impressive sight for youngsters and adults.

"Big Bird" and "Cookie Monster" will also make appearances. Also scheduled to perform are the Adobe Walls Indian dancers from Borger; Rick Fiel, of Wheeler, a ventriloquist; the Lone Star Shootists of Amarillo; students of Sang Ju Cho's School of Martial Arts; Trev Tevis, a marimba player from Perryton; winners of the Our Little Miss Pageant with a talent show, and performers of Living History.

Demonstrations of crafts, including a potter, spinner, quilter, painters, a horseshoer, tatter, denim crafter and others will be at the Festival.

In addition, a number of other craftspeople will be showing and selling their work.

Several tables will be set up for domino players.

Jim Knox of Perryton will set up a tepee and tell visitors about it. Antique cars will be on exhibit.

There will be several food booths. Coffee and doughnuts will be served in the morning. At noon and at night barbecued beef plates will be available. Pies, ice cream, soft drinks, snow cones and cotton candy will also be for sale.

The entrance to the County Exhibition Building is marked on Highway 60-83 a short distance south of Canadian.

Class of '76 plans its 10-year reunion

The Pampa High School Class of 1976 will be holding its 10-year reunion Saturday.

The schedule for the day includes:

- 9 to 11 a.m. Registration with coffee and doughnuts at the PHS Band Hall.

- 12 Noon to 3 p.m. Catered picnic for class members and their families at Central Park.

- 8:30 p.m. to 1 a.m. Dance at M. K. Brown Heritage Room.

All preregistered class members are urged to attend the registration in order to pick up reunion packets.

Those who have not registered yet may do so on reunion day at the Band Hall (9-11 a.m.) or call Brenda Parrish Morrison at 665-3228.

Parents and friends of class members are invited to join the festivities at the registration and dance.

Dear Abby

These drugs and the pill can be a risky combination

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1986 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: I was very interested to read your column wherein a reader described the suppressing action of certain antibiotics on oral contraceptives.

As a member of the dental profession who considers himself well-read and who prescribes antibiotics routinely, I must confess that I was not aware of these facts.

A quick survey of my colleagues suggests that it has yet to reach the dental profession in significant numbers.

You would be performing a well-appreciated public service by noting those specific antibiotics in your column. Thank you.

DONALD A. JOHNSON, D.D.S., RICHFIELD, MINN.

DEAR DR. JOHNSON: I called my trusty pharmacist, David Powells, who was kind enough to share this information published by pharmaceutical companies for physicians and health-care professionals.

"Oral contraceptives may be rendered less effective and increased incidence of breakthrough bleeding may occur by virtue of drug interaction with rifampin, isoniazid, ampicillin, neomycin, penicillin V, tetracycline, chloramphenicol, sulfonamides, nitrofurantoin, griseofulvin, barbiturates, phenytoin, primidone, phenylbutazone, analgesics, tranquilizers (e.g. diazepam), and anti-migraine preparations. Oral contraceptives may alter the effectiveness of other types of drugs, such as oral anti-coagulants, anti-convulsants, tricyclic anti-depressants, anti-hypertensive agents (e.g. guanethidine), theophylline, vitamins, hypoglycemic agents, clofibrate, glucocorticoids and acetaminophen."

Further, women who use oral contraceptives "should not smoke. The combination of cigarette smoking, especially heavy cigarette smoking, and oral contraceptive use greatly increases the risk of heart attack."

DEAR ABBY: You need a short course on the subject of retirement.

How to ask for cash

NEW YORK (AP) — Everyone has tough letters to write during his lifetime — apologies, thank you's and condolences. But the hardest by far is the letter asking for money.

To do so can be a very difficult experience because it compromises the asker's pride, according to Family Circle magazine. And, believe it or not, it is almost as painful to be asked.

Here are some rules for a good loan-request letter that can ease the pain at both ends:

- Even though it's personal, make it business like.
- Include a plan for repayment.
- Offer to pay interest.
- Pick your prospect carefully.

"Mountains are the palaces of nature." Lord Byron

It's not wonderful for everyone. After the retiree has traveled, gone fishing, painted the house, played with the grandchildren and sat around the house doing nothing, terminal boredom sets in.

As the wife of a husband who has been retired for two years, I would like to state that he is retired, I am not. I still have the groceries to buy, the food to prepare, the dishes to do, the laundry, cleaning, etc. My husband is from the school that all of the above is woman's work — and at 66 he isn't about to change nor does he want to.

When do I retire?

ANGRY IN ATLANTA
DEAR ABBY: Never, if you honestly believe that your husband can't change. At 66, he's just a kid. Men fall in love, sire children and just begin to live at that age.

They can also learn how to cook, shop for groceries, do the laundry, the dishes and clean the house. Think positive, and direct your displeasure to your husband, not me. If you expect nothing, you'll get less.

***

DEAR ABBY: My father was a wonderful man. No girl ever had a better dad. Everyone who knew him loved him. His name was Robert E. Kreiger. He played football for the Philadelphia Eagles and piloted 30 missions over occupied Europe during World War II.

Dad smoked three packs of cigarettes a day. Just two months after he was diagnosed as having lung cancer, he died. He had just turned 60.

Please, dads, don't smoke.

"If the Shakers made a car, I'd buy it," says June Sprigg, guest curator of the current exhibition of Shaker design at the Whitney Museum of American Art in New York.

Unfortunately, that's impossible. The religious sect that flourished in 19th century America today has only a small remnant of survivors. Though the Shakers have largely disappeared, admiration for their furniture and other objects has been on the upswing for at least the last 10 years, according to Sprigg.

She became acquainted with several Shakers while a college student in 1971 when she got a summer job as a tour guide at the Shaker settlement in Canterbury, N.H. After earning a master's degree in decorative arts, she served as curator of collections at Hancock Shaker Village, a restored community near Pittsfield, Mass.

The exhibition which she organized remains at the Whitney through Aug. 31, after which it will open Sept. 27, at the Corcoran Gallery of Art in Washington.

A period from 1820 to 1850 marked the height of Shaker design, though the movement was active from the 1790s through the end of the 19th century, according to Sprigg. During that time, they produced built-in storage units, dual freestanding spiral staircases and a classic round stone barn. Their original simple yet beautiful wooden boxes, chairs, beds, tables and tools are today collector's items. The furniture has inspired designers of contemporary furniture.

Sprigg says the Shaker's willingness to be responsible for what they made and their integrity suggest that any car they made would be functional, durable and beautiful.

The furniture, household objects and tools for which they are famous, 100 of which are on view in the exhibition, are of the highest esthetic and physical quality. "One cannot say with certainty why the Shakers made beautiful things," she notes in "Shaker Design," the book she wrote to accompany the exhibition. Yet she does offer some enlightenment. The community's values, as taught by Mother Ann Lee, the sect's founder, stressed that outward appearances revealed the inner spirit. Mother Lee urged members to "clean your room well, for good spirits will not live where there is dirt."

The Shaker's kept their designs pure because they withdrew from the world, evolving their own furniture, tools and homes in which men and women lived together in the same building, but separately.

Sprigg says the men and women who became Shakers were ordinary people, but the circumstances in which they chose to live produced an extraordinary opportunity for creativity.

"To a degree that can scarcely be imagined, (they) were free of distractions. They stayed at home, worked quietly and gave a part of each each day to meditation. Communal life provided uniform clothing, meals, a daily routine and job assignments. It also freed them from financial worries."

No one had to rely solely on their own work for survival and they didn't make cheap second-rate goods to get by. Shaker artisans could concentrate on their work.

Perhaps most important, Shaker life freed its members from the conformity to style. They withdrew from the world and didn't care what was considered fashionable.

As a result, their 19th century contemporaries considered their furnishings old fashioned and lacking in style, says Sprigg.

Since the originals are so expensive and rare, the few woodworkers making Shaker furnishings find there is great demand for their work. David Lamb, a young craftsman in Canterbury, for example, who makes Shaker-like furniture is three years behind in orders, according to Sprigg.

GRIM LOSER — A grim Texas Rangers' pitcher Charlie Hough leaves the mound Monday night after losing a no-hitter and the game. Hough held the California Angels hitless for eight innings, but ended up losing a 2-1 decision. (AP Laserphoto)

Hough fails in no-hit bid as Rangers lose to Angels

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP) — Wally Joyner made sure his 24th birthday was a happy one. While he did so, he added knuckleballer Charlie Hough to the long line of pitchers he's made miserable this season. Because Hough's knuckleball was so difficult to hit, the 38-year-old right-hander entered the ninth inning of Monday night's game against the California Angels with a no-hitter. Because his knuckleball is so tough to catch, Hough and the Texas Rangers wound up dropping a bizarre 2-1 decision to the Angels. It was Joyner, the Angels' rookie sensation, who broke up Hough's no-hit bid with a one-out single to center which drove in Jack Howell from third base to tie the game at 1-1. Howell had reached third on a three-base error by Texas left fielder George Wright. Shortly later, Joyner, who leads the majors in home runs with 19, raced home from second base with the winning run when Texas catcher Orlando Mercado couldn't hold a Hough knuckleball on a swinging third strike by George Hendrick. Hendrick had swung and missed on a 3-2 pitch with two outs. Joyner at second and Reggie Jackson at first were running with the pitch, which glanced off Mercado's glove. Hough didn't cover home on the play. Joyner, who turned 24 Monday, never broke stride rounding third and scored standing up, reaching the plate a few steps ahead of Mercado. "It was just a mental lapse on Charlie's part, not to cover home," Joyner said. "But he'd been out there for nine innings. He was tired and relieved to strike out Hendrick and just forgot (to cover home). "I was going the whole way. I was going just in case George got to first. I see the ball go by the catcher, my job is to go home." After Hough fluttered a called third strike past pinch-hitter Ruppert Jones leading off the bottom of the ninth, Howell, pinch hitting for Gary Pettis, hit a high fly ball down the left-field line. Wright, who replaced Gary Ward in left for defensive purposes at the beginning of the inning, was playing in left-center against the left-handed hitting Howell. After a long run, Wright over-ran the ball slightly. He reached back, but he couldn't hold the ball, which dropped just fair. "I got there, the ball came back on me," Wright said. "You're expected to make those plays. I just didn't make it. The ball came back, I just over-ran it." Joyner followed with his liner to center on a 2-2 knuckler from Hough. Joyner went to second when Mercado couldn't catch a knuckler to Doug DeCinces, who then struck out. Jackson was walked intentionally, setting the stage for the bizarre finish. "The strangest, you talk to guys in this room in the game for 20 years, they'll tell you it's the strangest game they've seen," winning pitcher Kirk McCaskill said. "It was great to be involved in it. It's unbelievable."

Weiss good judge of talent

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — If the San Antonio Spurs have an ace up their sleeve in the NBA draft, it has to be new coach Bob Weiss. Weiss came to San Antonio from an assistant's position with the Dallas Mavericks, where he helped mastermind several key draft picks. "I feel I'm a pretty good judge of talent," Weiss said. Weiss, who replaced fired Spurs coach Cotton Fitzsimmons, was a scout behind the Mavericks' selection of Mark Aguirre, Rolando Blackman, Sam Perkins and Detlef Schrempf. Weiss and other Spurs officials were tossing around several names as possible choices for the team's No. 10 draft slot. General Manager Bob Bass said guards Johnny Dawkins, 6-2, of Duke; Ron Harper, 6-6½, of Miami of Ohio; or Dell Curry, 6-5, of Virginia Tech would be considered if they were still available.

He also named as possibilities 6-8 forward Kenny Walker of Kentucky, 6-9 forward John Williams of Louisiana State University, 6-10 forward Roy Tarpley of Michigan and 6-11 forward Brad Sellers of Ohio State. A deal to move up in draft position appears unlikely, Bass said. "They want an arm and a leg to move up," he said. "This draft's really too hard to predict," Bass said. "There are too many variables right now" to say what kind of players the Spurs hope to come away with after the draft, he said. Those variables, he said, include the team's five free agents and the questionable status of point guard Johnny Moore. The 6-3 Moore was sidelined for the season last December after contracting a rare form of meningitis. Moore is still questionable as a starter for next year, although Bass pointed out "he's doing better at this time."

Nevertheless, Bass said if a guard appears to be the best choice when the Spurs' draft slot comes up, they'll take one. "We've got to go ahead and take the best player," he said. "If there's an overlap, we'll just have to deal with that." The general manager said the team wants to sign free agents Artis Gilmore, Steve Johnson, Jon Sundvold, Jeff Lamp and Wes Matthews. Gilmore, a 7-2 center, will be 37 by the time the season starts. But Bass said he still thinks Gilmore, who was hampered with injuries last year, is "a viable player in the league." Bass said negotiations with Gilmore are not under way, but hopefully they will be before long. The Spurs looked promising last year until Moore became ill. They closed the season losing 21 of their last 26 games and allowing the Los Angeles Lakers to make a clean sweep of the first three games of the NBA playoffs.

Williams cleared of charges in point-shaving scandal

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — A six-member jury cleared John "Hot Rod" Williams of point shaving charges and the former Tulane University forward made plans for a professional basketball career that has been in limbo for a year. Williams was acquitted Monday of five counts of conspiracy and bribery, charges that could have cost him 17 years in prison and $35,000 in fines. Tulane abandoned its men's basketball program in the wake of the point shaving scandal and allegations of numerous NCAA violations disclosed at the same time. Williams was arrested on March 26, 1985, inidid two days later and tried for the first time in August. Williams' verdict came on the sixth day of his second trial. "It's been rough on me, but now I can get on with my life," Williams, 24, said after being found innocent. The Cleveland Cavaliers gambled a second-round choice on Williams in last year's draft, picking 000ball Association warning that he could not play in the league as long as the legal cloud hung over him. Cavs owners George and Gordon Gund have paid Williams' legal expenses, although they had to withdraw their contract during the preseason. Williams' first trial failed to clear up his legal status. Normally, a player unsigned for a year becomes a free agent, but NBA general counsel Gary Bettman said Monday Williams is a special case, and the Cavs retain his rights. At an impromptu news conference on the courthouse steps after the verdict, Williams avoided saying he would be playing for the Cavs, even when asked specifically. "I'll be somewhere, and I'll make the team," he said. Williams' reluctance to answer was on the advice of his lawyers, an apparent ploy to use the threat of free agency as a bargaining wedge in contract talks. Williams, at 6-foot-11, is an inch taller and substantially bulkier in the upper body than he was when he left Tulane. He played center at Tulane and was used at power forward when he made the all-star team last year in the United States Basketball League. Keith Lee, whose name figured prominently in Williams' trial, played both power forward and small forward for the Cavs last season. The other game that prosecutors say was fixed was at Tulane against Southern Mississippi. Red Raider Club to meet Thursday The Top of Texas Red Raider Club will meet Thursday at the Berger Country Club. Sign-in will be at 1 p.m. at the pro shop, followed by a Florida Scramble (shotgun start) a half-hour later. Texas Tech coaches will present at program at 6:30 p.m. Entry deadline is Wednesday. For more information, call Dean Morrison at 806-274-7161 or Huber golf course pro Andy Anderson at 806-273-2231.

Argentina eliminates Uruguay in World Cup soccer semis Monday

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Though the South American champion is gone, that continent is far from out of contention in the World Cup. Uruguay, which beat Brazil to win the most recent South American title, was eliminated from the world soccer championship Monday in a 1-0 loss to arch-rival Argentina. The Brazilians, who have yet to be scored on in four victories in this tournament, eliminated Poland 4-0. Both winners appear to be as strong as ever. Today, defending World Cup champion Italy was to play France in Olympic Stadium here and surprising Morocco was to take on West Germany in Monterrey. The other South American team remaining, Paraguay, plays England on Wednesday, when Denmark opposes Spain in the last two second-round games. Argentina had not played its neighbor from across the Rio Plate in a World Cup game since 1930, the tournament's first year. Uruguay won that game 4-2 to take the title. This time, it was all Argentina, even though the score was a mere 1-0. Uruguay, playing without suspended Coach Omar Borrás, showed virtually no offense until the final moments, when it desperately pressed for a tie.

Pedro Pasculli got the only goal three minutes before halftime on a brilliant three-way passing play. He put in a pass from Jorge Valdano, who had received the ball from Jorge Burruchaga. But the star of the game was Diego Maradona, Argentina's super striker, whose playmaking was brilliant. "Maradona was a great example. He showed how to play a real team game," Argentine Coach Carlos Bilardo said. Bilardo admitted his players were nervous, though it looked like they were toying with the Uruguayans for most of the game.

Just another day on the mound for Roger Clemens

NEW YORK (AP) — Just another game of catch for Roger Clemens. Just another victory for the Boston Red Sox. Clemens raised his record to 12-0 with a four-hitter Monday night, and the Red Sox scored early and often in routing the New York Yankees 10-1. "It's a lot easier pitching with a big lead," Clemens said. "With a cushion, I could just throw fastballs." The Red Sox rapped 16 hits and gave Clemens all the runs he needed by scoring three times in the first inning. Jim Rice had a two-run single in the opening inning and added RBI singles in the third and fourth. "After that, I could go out and play pitch-and-catch with Richie (catcher Gedman)," Clemens said. Clemens' start is the best in the major leagues since Ron Guidry opened the 1978 season with 13 straight victories. Guidry was the loser Monday night, getting pounded for five runs in less than three innings. It was the sixth straight loss for Guidry, 4-7, the longest skid of his career. "I wish I could've faced him tonight with the same stuff I had eight years ago," Guidry said. "I'm sure he feels the same way I did in 1978." "He can almost tell the guys what's coming and get them out," he said. "He's not afraid — just like I was." Clemens lowered his American League-leading earned run average to 2.17. He struck out four and raised his total to 108, also best in the league. Clemens did not walk a batter.

Clemens became the first Red Sox pitcher to open a season with 12 straight victories. The major-league record is 19 set by Rube Marquard in 1912 while the AL mark is 15, by Cleveland's Johnny Allen in 1937 and Baltimore's Dave McNally in 1969.

Court-mired state baseball tourney rescheduled for Friday and Saturday

AUSTIN (AP) — The court-mired Class 4A state high school baseball tournament has been tentatively rescheduled for Friday and Saturday nights in Austin, assuming several Texas courts can process several pending lawsuits by then.

If one or more court orders prohibit play by then, the 4A state tournament may be canceled for this year, University Interscholastic League director Bailey Marshall announced Monday.

He noted that the current school year has already ended across the state and "many of the players have obligations that will prohibit them from playing later in the summer."

The new tentative schedule calls for semifinal games at Disch-Falk Field on the University of Texas campus at 6:30 p.m. and 8:30 p.m. Friday, with the championship game at 7 p.m. Saturday, Marshall said.

"This schedule is being set on the assumption that all litigation is settled or dropped and that the court settlements allow the games to be played on these dates, times and location," Marshall said.

"We regret that these court actions have delayed the tournament and, for the sake of the players, we hope the tournament can be resumed and completed," Marshall said in a statement.

Snyder, Brenham, Mercedes and Austin Westlake earned spots in the state tournament, but Westlake advanced after rain washed out the last two games of a scheduled best 2-of-3 series with Waco Richfield, which then went to court seeking completion of the series.

Several other court suits then followed, and injunctions kept the UIL from having 4A semifinals last weekend, when the championships for 1A, 2A, 3A and 5A were decided.

If litigation prohibits play by Friday, Marshall said, the UIL will "give serious consideration to cancellation of this year's Conference 4A tournament."

At least seven motions have been filed in four different courts over the disputed quarterfinal series between Austin Westlake and Waco Richfield.

In Waco Monday, State District Judge Bill Logue issued a temporary injunction barring the Eanes Independent School District and the UIL from proceeding with a hearing set for today in Austin.

Margaret Cooper, an Austin attorney representing the UIL, said the UIL would have no choice but to be represented at the hearing in Austin Tuesday.

State District Judge Juan Gallardo "has told us to be present (in Austin). Anything we do to obey one judge is going to be in violation of another judge," Ms. Cooper said.

The legal battle started after Westlake beat Richfield in the first game June 5 and rain prevented play in games 2 and 3. Pressed for time, the University Interscholastic League invoked a 27-year-old rule and decided that Westlake should advance to the state tournament.

Not happy with the rule, Richfield supporters filed suit.

Gallardo in Austin then ruled that the tournament could not proceed unless Westlake was one of the teams.

Later Wednesday, State District Judge Homer Salinas in Edinburg issued a restraining order on behalf of Mercedes, which would have faced Westlake, saying the tournament couldn't be played on artificial turf.

Grant edges Hardware in Babe Ruth action

Grant Supply edged Pampa Hardware, 4-3, in a Babe Ruth 13-15 League game played Monday.

Grant's Jason Becker and Hardware's Mark Wood had quite a pitching duel. Becker struck out six and walked eight in pitching a five-hitter. Wood allowed just four hits while striking out seven and walking four.

Becker had a triple to lead Grant's while Chris Roden and David Doucette each had a single.

Terry Rodgers had two base hits to lead Hardware hitters. Wood and Brian Dunn each had a single.

In a National Little League game, Glo-Valve Service overcame a 12-run third-inning outburst to outlast Cabot Corporation, 14-12, in National Little League action Friday. Glo-Valve, 4-1 in the second half, plays Celanese Corporation at 6 p.m. today.

Nacho Vargas had not allowed a hit and was coasting with a 9-0 lead when Cabot Corporation erupted for nine of their eleven hits and scored 12 runs in the third inning.

Ryan Irwin capped the rally with a two-run homer. Keith O'Dell with three hits, including a double, Tarrin Peet with two doubles, and Irwin with a double and a home run led Cabot's hitting.

Mitch Spence relieved Vargas in the fourth and shut out Cabot in the last three innings with only two hits to pick up his fourth victory of the year against one loss. Matt Edgar was charged with the loss.

Vargas had three hits for Glo-Valve while Chad Dunning had two hits, including a double and three runs batted in. Gavin Porter and Spence also had two hits for the winners.

Regular season play ends Friday.

Wheelchair athlete latest Wheaties champ

CHERRY HILL, N.J. (AP) — After winning a contest that put his smiling face on 3 million boxes of Wheaties, what could Doug Heir do for an encore?

Well, America's most visible wheelchair athlete didn't waste any time — he finished law school, wrote a book and starred in a rock music video.

Heir posed for his "Breakfast of Champions" photos more than a year ago, but the cereal boxes are just now making their way onto supermarket shelves.

Heir was one of six lesser known athletes selected to appear on Wheaties boxes in 1985. The selection committee included perennial Wheaties cover-boy Bob Richards, baseball Hall of Famer Hank Aaron and running back Walter Payton of the Chicago Bears.

This 26-year-old lawyer, however, is just too busy for breakfast.

Heir set a record in the javelin with a heave of 63.2 feet during the 1984 World Wheelchair Games in Aylesbury, England. During the games he also won gold medals in the shot put and discus and finished second in the pentathlon, which included his record javelin throw.

Since becoming a champion, Heir has been besieged with letters, calls and requests for lectures about his mental and, to some extent, physical recovery from a devastating 1978 spinal cord injury.

Unable to answer all the queries, Heir decided to put his winning philosophy on paper. His book will be titled "It's Your Choice."

"If you really have a desire to be a champion, the world is yours. It's your choice," Heir said recently, making it all sound easy.

But it isn't, and he knows that better than anybody.

Heir, who played football at Alfred University in upstate New York, has just passed another "anniversary" of Father's Day 1978, the day he broke his neck diving into a swimming pool after a child crying for help.

It turned out the youngster was only kidding, but Heir dove in and hit the bottom of the concrete pool in Fairfield. He woke up in a hospital to learn he was paralyzed. "Dreams I had growing up, the dreams my parents had for me — they were gone in a second," he said.

He was despondent, even suicidal, and his doctors' expectations for his future were disappointing.

But Heir continued his schooling, became involved in wheelchair athletics and started to conquer his handicap with the help of his parents and siblings.

"My brother, Brian, designed an exercise program and I started lifting one-pound weights," Heir said. Although he's not supposed to have use of his chest muscles, they have returned through a patterned use of muscle groups.

Heir now lifts 410 pounds on a bench press — 60 pounds more than he could lift before the accident.

Heir's adopted sister, Maryann, is retarded, but gave him courage and advice that helped him make the transition to life in a wheelchair.

He was embarrassed by curious looks from others, "and she told me, 'Doug, don't worry about people staring. You have to like yourself,'" he said.

Since graduating from Rutgers Law School in Camden, Heir has joined a law firm and specializes in personal injury cases.

And he's the only lawyer around town to have starred in a rock video.

In it, Heir plays a high school coach who drives through the countryside meeting all types of people before arriving at the high school where he's greeted by hundreds of students.

J-Bobs captures Umpires tourney

J-Bobs Two won the seventh annual Pampa Umpires Tournament championship held last week.

J-Bobs went unbeaten in the tournament and defeated Krause of Liberal, Kans., 17-5, in the semi-finals and 8-5 in the finals. King's Court of Amarillo took third and Heritage Ford of Pampa was fourth.

NBC giving Justice officials Abbas tape

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Videotapes of interviews with terrorist Abul Abbas have been shown to the Justice Department, which is investigating the Palestinian accused of plotting the Achille Lauro hijacking, says the head of NBC News.

In the NBC interview, Abbas said his group would begin launching attacks inside the United States. The day after the May 5 broadcast, the State Department accused NBC of encouraging terrorism.

But Lawrence K. Grossman, the news president, speaking Monday, defended the interview with Abbas as newsworthy and said his department was not a law-enforcement agency.

Parts of the interview were broadcast May 5 on "NBC Nightly News," and more is to be broadcast today on NBC's documentary "The Achille Lauro: A Study in Terror."

Abbas, leader of the Palestine Liberation Front, will be tried in absentia in a hijacking trial of four men beginning Wednesday in Genoa, Italy, where the luxury liner set sail on its October cruise of the Mediterranean.

Abbas was aboard the Egyptian airliner that American fighter jets forced to land at Sigonella air base in Sicily after the hijacking. On board with him were the four alleged hijackers, who were detained by Italian authorities.

But Italy, saying it had no evidence then to hold Abbas, let him go and he left for Yugoslavia. Later, Italy issued an international arrest warrant for him, but by then he had disappeared.

A U.S. citizen, Leon Klinghoffer, was slain in the cruise-ship hijacking.

The Justice Department, which is conducting a criminal investigation of Abbas, was interested in a statement on the May 5 broadcast by correspondent Henry Champ that said Abbas "freely admits responsibility for the hijacking of the Italian cruise ship, the Achille Lauro."

However, no videotape was shown of any such remark by Abbas and federal criminal lawyers would like to know if it exists.

In an interview in this week's edition of L'Espresso, an Italian magazine, Abbas is quoted as saying that it was his intervention that led to the hostages' freedom and that Klinghoffer was not slain by the hijackers.

Justice Department officials had hoped to persuade NBC to provide the material without having to issue a subpoena, thus avoiding a furor over the case.

Texas briefs

AUSTIN (AP) — Experts in a University of Texas laboratory are working to halt the deterioration time has caused to two of the state's most significant historic documents.

The documents are the Texas Declaration of Independence from Mexico, adopted at Washington-on-the-Brazos on March 2, 1836, and the letter written by Alamo commander William B. Travis in which he declared, "I shall never surrender or retreat."

Work on the two documents is being conducted by the conservation laboratory of UT's Harry Ransom Humanities Research Center.

Don Etherington, assistant director of the center, said Monday that the work should be completed in time for the documents to be exhibited at the state fair, scheduled for Sept. 26 to Oct. 26.

Among steps being taken are an analysis of the paper and ink, raising the alkaline content of the papers, reinforcing weakened edges, mending fractures in the paper, encapsulating the documents in clear polyester holders that keep out air, and fitting them into frames which contain a special material to retard ultraviolet light.

As of this date June 13, 1986, Ron Love will no longer be responsible for any debts other than those incurred by me.
