Surplus to finance school deficit

By PAUL PINKHAM
Staff Writer

Faced with the prospect of cutting local teacher salary supplements or raising taxes, Pampa school trustees did neither Tuesday night.

The board ended two months of budget discussions by approving by a vote of 4-3 a $12.3 million budget that erases an $850,000 budget deficit by dipping into surplus funds.

The board had been considering proposals that included various combinations of pay and budget cuts, an increase in the district's 71.8-cent tax rate and use of some of the $2.87 million in surplus funds.

However, teachers and taxpayers may not be out of the Trustees won't cut salaries or raise taxes

woods yet as the board included a stipulation that any cuts to the district made by the special state legislative session currently meeting in Austin will be made up evenly by cutting teacher supplements and increasing taxes. The session is scheduled to wrap up in September and legislators have said they do not plan to touch education, but board president Robert Lyle, who proposed using the surplus, noted that provides no guarantee.

Lyle said Education Commissioner William Kirby advised local school boards not to set 1986-87 tax rates until the session concludes. If local funds are cut by the state, half of the amount cut will be made up out of $2,600 base teacher supplements and half will come from increased tax revenues.

Lyle warned that his proposal could mean hefty cuts in programs and salaries, large tax increases, or both, next year if oil revenues stay down as they are now. He said the key to making next year's budget work is realizing what may lie ahead.

"If all the professional employees know what they tend to lose, I think there'll be a lot more savings in our district next year," Lyle said. "A lot of y'all signed your contracts with the thought that you were going to make this much money. It makes it tough."

"If everyone just realizes what might be ahead next year — then there'll be no surprises."

Lyle also said the proposal is one positive thing the board can do for the local economy. He said if teachers and other taxpayers have more to spend, they might provide a much-needed boost to local businesses.

The 1986-87 budget includes several cuts recommended during the past two months of budget discussions but a decision made earlier to drop a scheduled 4 percent pay raise for non-professional employees was reversed Tuesday by a 5-1 vote, adding an additional $34,000 to the budget. Elementary Spanish and the personnel director's position are not cut under the proposal.

Trustees Joe VanZandt, Charles Loeffler and Jim Duggan voted against Lyle's budget package. Loeffler complained that the proposal takes too much from surplus funds and predicted a deficit of more than $1 million next year, meaning the board will probably have to cut out about 40 programs that this board has worked hard on to enrich the district."

The proposal leaves about $2 million in surplus funds. Business Manager Jerry Haralson has said the district needs about $2 million on hand to operate until taxes begin coming in in late autumn.

VanZandt noted the proposal was based on a 94 percent tax collection rate and if that figure drops, the district will "be in trouble." He agreed that the surplus should be preserved.

"I think we're going to have to lean on it a lot next year to keep from cutting into teachers' salaries."

Canadian schools hike taxes despite budget reduction

BY CATHY SPAULDING
Staff Writer

CANADIAN — The 1987 school budget is down $450,000 from last year, but taxpayers are going to have to pay about two-thirds more to support it.

A summer of budget-cutting and property-value watching came to an end Monday as Canadian trustees approved a $5.6 million budget and set the tax rate at 65 cents per $100 valuation. That's 25 cents more than last year's tax rate of 40 cents.

The tax rate is divided into two parts: 52 cents for the general fund (up from 31 cents) and 13 cents for debt service (up from nine cents). One reason for the tax increase is a decrease in property value from $1.07 billion to $859 million.

The district is expected to collect $4.8 million from this new tax rate. School officials expect $181,000 in state per-capita foundation funds (a drop from $303,337 last year), $63,691 in federal funds and $235,550 from local sources.

The rest of the budget will be made up from an anticipated $960,000 carry-over from 1986. Despite using the savings, Superintendent Jim Pollard still hopes for $833,000 at the end of the 1987 school year.

Despite the budget decrease, Canadian teachers will each be getting $600 more per year under the new budget. There's just going to be fewer of them this year. Pollard explained that 15 teachers and other staff members who left the district simply weren't replaced.

"We're cutting in all areas," Pollard said, adding that 12 percent has been cut from all non-payroll expenses.

Total payroll — including health insurance and retirement — for the district's 83 teachers will be $2.08 million. Also slashed was the allocation for capital outlay projects, which Pollard said will be minimal this year. With two months remaining in the 1987 school year, the district spent $263,084. But the total allocated for 1987 is $102,818.

It will cost the school district $567,000 to maintain their facilities; $238,000 of that goes for payroll.

The athletic budget, including coaches salaries, will be $298,532 while $100,851 will go to the band budget and $64,873 to other co-curricular activities. $72,349 was budgeted for guidance and counseling, $25,809 for health services, $140,046 for pupil transportation.

3rd execution within a week

HUNTSVILLE, Texas (AP) — Convicted rapist Chester Lee Wicker became the third Texas prison inmate to be executed within a week when he was put to death by injection early today.

Wicker made no final statement. He was sentenced to death for abducting, trying to rape and then choking and burying alive a woman on a Gulf Coast beach.

His lone personal witness, Judith Lambllion, identified as a friend and spiritual adviser from Salt Lake City, told Wicker that his mother sent her love.

"I love you," were his only words. He took a couple of deep breaths and stopped moving. He was pronounced dead at 12:20 a.m., 10 minutes after the lethal injection began.

Attorney General Jim Mattox, however, said it appeared death came within 30 seconds.

"He was very calm but obviously very nervous," said Mattox, who was present as Wicker was strapped to the death chamber gurney. "He said he was going to make the best of it. He realized it was not a pleasant thing for everyone involved and was concerned about his mother and her well-being."

Wicker had spent a relatively quiet final day visiting with his mother, grandfather and Ms. Lambllion, but flew into a rage when they departed, destroying property in his death row cell as he was about to be moved to the death house.

"He smashed his electric fan and threw his personal property on the floor and just

Carson taxes increased eight cents

BY CATHY SPAULDING
Staff Writer

PANHANDLE — Carson County taxpayers are in for a 44 percent tax increase now that commissioners have raised the tax rate eight cents to 26 cents per $100 valuation.

The tax boost is required to fund the $2.2 million budget the commissioners approved Monday at a special budget hearing, an increase of $176,000 over last year's budget. Most of the increase is due to the state-mandated indigent health care program, for which the county must set aside $113,000, or one-tenth of its general fund budget.

County auditor Agnes Bell warned commissioners that they have "very little work room" in this budget.

"The court won't be able to take care of things that might come up," she said, adding that the county probably won't get the $41,000 in Revenue Sharing funds it's anticipating.

"We know we won't get that," she said. "We're more likely to get about $12,000."

County Judge Jay Roselius told commissioners that the new budget includes some "very small" salary adjustments to bring some employees up to scale. County elected officials will continue working under the same salaries.

Bell said that there are no major capital projects included in the 1987 budget. Commissioners are hoping to be able to remodel the courthouse and install a new elevator to allow access to the handicapped. But that project would be funded by a grant by the Texas Department of Community Affairs, which will decide in September if it wants to fund it. The grant is awarded on a competitive point basis.

"If we don't get the grant, we'll modify our plans some and we'll have to use some of our reserve."

Roselius expects a reserve of $657,000.

The county would also have to pull $200,000 from its reserve if someone gets killed. Roselius explained that 100th Dist. Judge John T. Forbis has told the counties in his district that it would cost between $175,000 to $250,000 to prosecute capital murder case if the court has to appoint a defense attorney. He wants the counties to help. Because there

Soldiers search for more Cameroon victims

YAOUNDE, Cameroon (AP) — Soldiers in gas masks searched villages and the surrounding countryside for more victims of the toxic fumes that escaped from a remote volcanic lake, killing at least 1,200 people, officials said.

Paul Biya, president of this tropical nation in West Africa, told a news conference Monday that casualty figures were incomplete, and that a commission would try to establish an exact number.

He said army teams were searching the 6-square-mile disaster area in northwest Cameroon for more victims, but that at least 1,200 people had died since the poisonous fumes were released Friday, and up to 300 others had been hospitalized.

Earlier, Information Minister Georges Ngango told reporters that military reports from the scene gave a preliminary death toll estimate of at least 2,000.

Biya ordered the dead buried immediately to avert the threat of disease and said troops were trying to prevent people from entering the disaster area.

An explosion deep in Lake Nios, about 200 miles northwest of Yaounde, apparently cracked open the lake bottom and released the gases Friday night, Biya said. He did not elaborate on the nature of the explosion, which apparently was a volcano-like geological phenomenon.

"Some heard the noise but did not realize poisonous fumes were released," Biya said. Others fled, and soldiers were helping many evacuate, including the 10,000 inhabitants of the nearest town, Wum, officials said.

The Rev. John Ambe, a Roman Catholic priest working in the area, told the British Broadcasting Corp. in a radio interview that he had visited people hospitalized at Wum who told stories of gas victims being buried in mass graves.

The priest said those hospitalized had burns on their faces.

Senate ready for final horse race betting vote

AUSTIN (AP) — It's no longer a long shot that a horse race betting bill will be made it to the House this year as one way to ease Texas' financial woes, Sen. Ike Harris says.

Senators tentatively approved the Dallas Republican's pari-mutuel wagering bill 19-10 Monday, and a final vote was scheduled today.

"I think I'll get a final vote about like the one today," Harris said Monday after three hours of tough debate.

Pari-mutuel wagering has been outlawed in Texas since 1937. The Senate approved a betting bill in 1983 but it died in House debate. In 1985, a House failed again in House debate.

If the current bill is approved by this Legislature, there would be a statewide referendum on the Nov. 4. general election ballot.

If voters approve, local-option elections could be held in 251 counties on horse race betting and in three counties for greyhound wagering.

Harris and other supporters have said the measure is not an instant cure to the state's financial woes, but would provide substantial revenue in the future.

Opponents counter that wagering would be an invitation to organized crime and would lead poor people to throw away their earnings at the track.

Gov. Mark White said later he would take "a close look" at any wagering bill sent him.

"My position on that has always been there should be a statewide referendum, local option and strong protection against organized crime," White said.

The proposed legislation calls for a Texas Racing Commission to supervise horse races and wagering in about four large tracks in metropolitan areas, about 17 regional tracks with mostly weekend race programs and any number of temporary race meets at county fairs and other celebrations.

Most efforts to change Harris' bill were defeated by lop-sided votes. But one that would have set aside all state income from pari-mutuel wagering for dependent children was settled only when Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby's vote broke a 14-14 tie and defeated it.

"Without this amendment, there is nothing in this bill for little people," said Sen. Craig Washington, D-Houston, who unsuccessfully sponsored pari-mutuel bills in the 1983 and 1986 sessions.

Harris and Sen. John Traeger, D-Seguin, argued the state was in a financial crisis today partially because too much of its revenue was tied up in special funds that could be used only for a certain purpose.

Other defeated amendments would have banned racing on Sunday, required that all financing come from Texas banks, allowed the Department of Public Safety to delay any race meeting for five days to investigate organized crime, and prohibited the use of public funds for improvements used in pari-mutuel wagering.

Harris accepted an amendment that would have horse race tracks offer at least five days of "charity races" each year to raise money for benefits.

"This is a revenue bill because it would provide a positive income in the future," said Harris. "This is a matter of economic development for this state."

"Most of the income generated would go to people who would build fences, who would be traveling from place to place," said Sen. Bill Sarpalus, D-Amarillo. "The bulk of money for feed and hay would not come from within the state."

The racing commission could consist of the chairman of the Public Safety Commission, the state Comptroller and six public members appointed by the governor. The commission would elect its chairman.

There could be no horse racing in the three counties set aside for greyhound races — Nueces, Galveston and Cameron. Harris said they had been chosen by the industry because of their warm climate, locations and large tourist populations.

POLITICING — Texas Gov. Mark White moves around the House while it was in session Monday, looking for support for his tax proposals. The Governor has proposed a temporary increase in the sales tax rate, something lawmakers are resisting.

Budget stalemate talk skirted

AUSTIN (AP) — Although the House and Senate are some $300 million apart in their budget-cutting plans, Gov. Mark White says it's too soon to talk about another special session.

"There's still time for them to do their work," White said Monday.

Senate leaders say Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby, who favors a sales tax increase to help solve the $3.5 billion budget deficit, has indicated the Senate won't approve spending cuts unless the House agrees to some form of tax hike.

But House leaders say they resolve to oppose any new taxes remains firm. Under the Texas Constitution, all tax bills must start in the House.

Asked if he saw a stalemate developing, White replied, "Not at all. They're making progress on other bills that are important, too."

The full House has approved a bill cutting more than $740 million from the state budget. A Senate committee, however, has approved its own version of a budget-trimming plan that would cut only about $418 million.

"I am in hopes of being able to accomplish what we need to in the next 10 days," White said.

The current 30-day special session began on Aug. 6. It is scheduled to end Sept. 4.

House Speaker Gib Lewis, D-Fort Worth, who has been solidly opposed to any tax hike at this time, last week said he canceled his planned September vacation in case White calls another special session.

Panel approves lottery bill

AUSTIN (AP) — A proposal to create a state-run lottery has cleared its first legislative hurdle, with backers saying it would be a financial boon to Texas and opponents saying it would prey on the poor.

The legislation won 8-2 approval Monday from the Senate State Affairs Committee, and its sponsor, Sen. Hector Uribe, D-Brownsville, said he hoped it might be debated by the full Senate as soon as Wednesday.

Creation of a lottery would require a constitutional amendment. The legislation being considered would put the question before voters this November.

"The lottery is not a tax. People play lottery games only because they want to," said Lynn Nelson, past director of the Pennsylvania state lottery, testifying in favor of the bill.

"The daily numbers game ... appeals primarily to the poor and to the minority members of our society. Its appeal is based on the illusory promise and the desperate hope of a big win," countered opponent Larry Braidfoot, author of "Gamblig: A Deadly Game."

Fiscal experts estimate that a lottery, costing about $11 million to start, could raise $88 million for state government in 1987. Profit up to $689 million by 1991, estimates indicate.

Nelson said lotteries played an important part in the nation's history. A lottery helped raise funds to start the Jamestown colony in Virginia, he said, and helped finance both the Revolutionary War.

"George Washington, Thomas Jefferson and Benjamin Franklin all ran lottery games. Harvard, Princeton and the University of Pennsylvania were founded by lottery games," Nelson said.

that went hungry because they spent all their bread-and-butter money on lottery tickets," Nelson said.

He also said lotteries are a form of entertainment and that players realize it.

"The lottery player knows the odds of winning that prize are very small. People continue to play lottery tickets because they like the excitement and the fun of participating in that game," Nelson said.

His arguments, however, didn't convince the Rev. E.B. Beasley Jr., minister of United Methodist churches at Lissie and Wallace.

"I don't think the Bible would support this at this time. Morally, this is not a fair issue," Beasley said, adding that the poor shouldn't be called upon to do more than their fair share to support state government.

"The people with a lot of money don't feel the need to get rich. It's those who do not have it who feel the need. And they wind up being the ones who foot the bills of the state," he said.

Beasley also showed senators several newspaper clippings where poor families spent money on lottery tickets, only to lose.

"This is not a fair way to go," he said. "It's not good. It's not desirable. It leads to luck instead of human effort or faith in God."

What the gunman didn't do

Things like this just don't happen in a person's home town.

Last week, Pat Sherrill walked into the post office in Edmond, Okla., and murdered 14 people before taking his own life.

My heart stopped when I heard the news. 14 people. Who were they? Was it anyone I know? I waited all morning to see when Associated Press would release the names of the victims. When the wire service did release the list, I scanned it for familiar names: Brooks, Conover, Colson, Caskey, Hall, Rainey, Sims, Tassin, Boling, Sizemore, Zinck. None were listed.

Of course, a tragedy is a tragedy whether one knows the victims or not.

Still, this was my home. My friends and my friends' families still live there. This is where we used to shop, go out to eat, party or simply have a good time.

I remember when Mom would have her hair done at Estelles on Saturday mornings, I'd duck over to the Wide-A-Wake cafe to watch the funny old men drink coffee. After our Friday "youth night" during revival week at church, we'd go into town to cool our religious fervor at the Pizza Planet. Our Future Homemakers of America picnics were held in Stephens Park. In high school, my friends from Deer Creek and other schools in the area used to flood Edmond to drag Broadway, the two-mile strip that eventually leads into downtown Oklahoma City. In college, depending on what group I was with, we would watch TV at the Wesley Foundation, play pool at the Eight Ball bar, recite poetry on the city library lawn or go shopping in its blossoming downtown.

Edmond is a town of many faces. It's the home of Central State University and Oklahoma Christian College; yet, it is not a college town. It is a Christian, family-oriented community with serene sounding neighborhoods like Ramblewood, Kickingbird Estates, The Trails; yet it has a festive nightlife. It is surrounded by the massive Edmond Oil Field; yet, it is not an oil boom town. Its skyline is dominated by two grain elevators and its feed stores see a hefty business; yet, it is not a farm town. Its residents zip down I-35 or the Broadway Extension to Oklahoma City; yet it is not a suburb.

But now, thanks to one man's short-lived rampage, quiet Edmond will now be associated with mass murder. No doubt, the tabloids will have a field day with this tragedy and someone's bound to want film and book rights.

A friend in Miami once told me how thankful she was that her family no longer lives in Amarillo, where there's "so much crime." And, looking at the day-to-day statistics, there is far less crime in the small farm towns, the suburbs, the Christian communities.

But then our peace of mind is shaken by something like this. The sad truth is that the most shocking mass murders do not happen in seedy nightclubs located on the wrong side of the tracks.

They happen on quiet college campuses, like the University of Texas in the summer of 1966 when one student hid in the bell tower and shot 16 people who happened to walk by.

They happen in small-town banks, like the Geronimo Bank in 1984, when four bank tellers and customers were rounded up and executed.

They happen at scout camps, like Locust Grove, Okla. in 1977 when a person — still unknown — killed three young Girl Scout campers.

They even happen at that mecca of wholesome family life, McDonalds, like the one in San Ysidro, Calif. in 1984 when one man opened fire, killing 34 people.

Pat Sherrill, the so-called "disgruntled postal employee" who killed all those people back home, may have put Edmond on the map because of what he did.

But not even this could wipe out the memories and the love I have for my home town.

Judge promises to clean up vocabulary

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — El Paso County Judge Pat O'Rourke says he will choose his words more carefully when giving orders in the future.

After a two-hour hearing Monday, a peace justice dismissed a disorderly conduct complaint filed against O'Rourke by private security guard Johnnie Dopson. Dopson, 27, alleged O'Rourke had used profanity two months ago during a confrontation at Ascarte Park.

The guard says he didn't recognize the county judge, who was wearing shorts and sunglasses and was riding a bicycle.

After the decision by Justice of the Peace Tom Rosas, O'Rourke quickly apologized to Dopson and shook his hand.

Free marketeers taking command?

The latest public remarks by the chairman of the Federal Trade Commission (FTC), Daniel Oliver, are unmistakable cause for celebration. It is far too seldom that the highest ranking officials of one of the most pernicious of the federal government's regulatory agencies speaks out against government regulation of business as destructive of both economic well-being and political liberty.

Yet that is exactly what Oliver did in a speech before the antitrust section of the American Bar Association. Oliver told the assembled attorneys that competition is the best way to achieve maximum consumer benefit and that the main source of interference with competition in the marketplace is government.

"Government interference with competition not only reduces people's economic welfare, but also threatens our democratic political and social institutions," he told his audience. "Political freedom is inextricably entwined with economic freedom."

Yet Oliver's own agency is one of the principal tools government uses to interfere with competition. The FTC is charged with overseeing commercial advertising and shares responsibility with the Justice Department for anti-trust prosecutions. But it is impossible to regulate advertising—that is, to make and enforce the rules governing what advertisements may be run, where they may be run and what they may contain—without interfering with competition in the advertised industries.

And although the ostensible purpose of our antitrust laws is to protect competition, their actual effect is to interfere with it. As the famous cases of ALCOA and IBM make clear, one of the easiest ways to bring a federal antitrust suit down on yourself is to compete so effectively against the other firms in your business that you win most of the available customers.

Less than two weeks ago, Daniel Oliver's FTC squelched a proposed merger between Coca Cola and Dr Pepper, the nation's first and fourth largest soft drink makers on the ground that it would reduce competition in the soft drink industry. Yet in fact it was the FTC itself that was reducing competition, by dissuading two major firms from taking actions they believed would improve their competitive positions.

Could there be two Daniel Olivers—one who interferes with the operation of the free market and another who advocates its unfettered operation? Could Oliver have only recently realized the harmful consequence of the kind of regulation he engages in day after day? Or could it be that Oliver, who only assumed the chairmanship of the FTC in April, is giving us a taste of what is to come. Could it be that a free marketeers will run not only the Federal Communications Commission, now directed by the able Mark Fowler, but also the Federal Trade Commission. It is profoundly to be hoped.

Sun Belt's boom fizzles

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (NEA) —

Throughout the 1970s, the South rode the crest of an economic wave that propelled it through a period of phenomenal growth and made the booming "Sun Belt" the envy of most of the nation's other regions.

But those who expected that boom to continue indefinitely have been disappointed. Throughout the first half of the 1980s, the economy here has sustained numerous long- and short-term setbacks.

Although almost every section of the country is beleaguered by regional economic difficulties, the South—especially the rural areas—is suffering with more than its share of woes.

The scope and depth of the region's anguish was especially apparent when the Southern Governors' Association chose "Traditional Industries in the South" as the theme for its recent annual meeting.

Atop the list of troubled traditional industries is the fiber-textile-apparel complex. More than two-thirds of its 2 million employees live and work in the South.

The work force in the region's textile mills alone has shrunk from 1 million in 1980 to 700,000 today, the governors were told. Competition from imports, pressure to abandon antiquated plants and increasing automation almost certainly will lead to additional layoffs.

"Everybody knows that there aren't going to be any new jobs in the textile industry—and that even existing jobs will be lost," a senior aide to one Southern governor says privately. "What we're seeking is time to retrain our workers and refocus our states' economies."

But none of the governors can afford the political luxury of conceding that they only hope to buy time. That admission would infuriate thousands of workers who still cling to the dream of a domestic textile renaissance.

Especially devastating has been the phenomenal growth in low-cost imported textiles, from 4.9 billion square yards in 1980 to 10.8 billion square yards in 1985.

Convening here four days after Congress failed to override President Reagan's veto of legislation that would have slashed textile imports by 30 percent, the Southern governors reluctantly acknowledged that they had exhausted—temporarily if not permanently—their options for rescuing the textile industry.

Textiles, however, are not the South's only traditional—and troubled—industry. The list also includes farming, furniture, footwear, food processing, timber and petrochemicals.

The region's agricultural base has been decimated by a drought whose cost is estimated at $2 billion and growing. In a speech at the governors' meeting, the U.S. Department of Agriculture's second-ranking official, Peter C. Myers, characterized it as "an economic disaster of historic proportions."

At the same time, the global slump in crude oil prices has severely affected the economies of Texas, Oklahoma and Louisiana and produced a lesser adverse impact in Arkansas and Mississippi.

The region's urban areas remain relatively healthy, although severe economic problems have surfaced in cities such as Birmingham, Ala. There, the steel-producing Fairfield Works of the USX Corp. long has been a major employer but faces a grim future as the world's excess steel-making capacity stands at 200 million tons annually.

But it is in the region's rural areas that the economic reversal has been most severe. Per capita income in the South's urban areas is 99 percent of the national average, but 73 percent in the countryside.

Similarly, almost two-thirds of all adults living in urban areas have completed high school, while only half of all adults in rural areas are high school graduates.

"To put it bluntly," says former Mississippi Gov. William Winter, "we are seeing the rich areas get richer and the poor areas get poorer."

Hair today, gone tomorrow

Teresa Basiliere of Oskosh, Wis., writes about a dilemma:

"I have (as other divorced women have done) allowed my son to sleep with me. He is now 3.

"The problem is that he is addicted to my hair. He needs to feel it to go to sleep, and during the night to relax himself.

"His security lays at the top of my head. You are probably wondering how this situation is affecting my life. I say, 'What life?'

"I study until 2 a.m. I am a pre-law major. And from 2 until 6, my son constantly wraps my hair around his fingers and keeps me awake. I look like a 90-year-old woman with bags under my eyes, and my grade point is slipping, as well.

"Solutions? Ah, yes. My mother bought a wig for my son to play with at night. He didn't like that. I have tried putting scarves over my head at night.

"Not only do I look like a Muslim, but my son cries all night for my hair. I have even thought of shaving my head.

"You are probably wondering, 'What can I do to help this poor woman?' My mother read one of your books where you said you twirled your mother's hair at night, too.

"My question is, What was your mother's solution?"

"Please respond. I cannot go on much longer without a good night's rest."

This letter touched me deeply because, yes, when my mother and father separated, I was only 5 and I immediately clung even more closely to my mother and I insisted upon sleeping with her.

I went to sleep each night twirling her hair between my fingers.

I don't think adults realize just how frightening it is for a child suddenly to lose a parent.

All I knew was that my daddy was gone, and if he could go, then couldn't Mother follow?

She didn't, of course, but the thought did enter my mind. Perhaps the reason I twirled her hair at night was as long as I felt it between my fingers, I knew she was there beside me, and that was a comfort I couldn't do without.

I quit sleeping with my mother and twirling her hair when I was 9. That's because she remarried, and my new stepfather took my place in my mother's bed.

I attempted to right this awful wrong by whining and crying in my own bed each night for the first six months of my mother's new marriage.

When my stepfather said, after six months of sleeplessness, "One more word out of you and I am going to take a large stick to your hindparts," I began to quieten down a bit at night and eventually learned to sleep comfortably without my mother's hair. My stepfather could have saved himself a lot of trouble by explaining the situation to me much earlier.

As far as a solution to the Wisconsin lady's problem, I don't have one. But I think I can say this: As her son gets older, he will become more independent and he'll make friends and he'll play ball, and then he'll get interested in girls.

And before she knows it, her son will be gone off to become a man, and some cold, sleepless night, she will think to herself, "Wasn't it just yesterday my little boy was lying here next to me twirling my hair?"

And at that moment she would give anything to have him back. At least that's what a lady I love very much has told me was her experience.

The outlook for the American family

By Ben Wattenberg

This year's big topic will be the difficulties of women, children, working women and family.

ABC-TV did a big special called "After the Sexual Revolution" showing some career women exulting in their new found executive power, and some executive women crying and smearing their mascara because they hadn't married and hadn't borne children.

Phil Donahue gave us five hours of "The Human Animal" on NBC-TV. Some of it was very good and some of it approached the absurd, i.e., a concluding interview with Dr. Benjamin Spock telling us that the only way to save the family was through arms control.

In the New York Review, Andrew Hacker reviews nine books and three court decisions before presenting his own remedy: Be proud of spinsterhood.

In Commentary, Professor Michael Levin attacks day care plans on the theory that a young mother's place is in the home, and it only takes some knowledge of genetics to understand that.

Congress is acting: Legislation for unpaid maternal leave is moving through the system.

And of course there's America's grandad himself, Ronald Reagan, crowing that his new tax bill is profamily because it increases the deduction for children (of course it increases it for everyone else, too).

Whew! Why? Because America has real family problems. The divorce rate is high. The illegitimacy rate has risen sharply.

Accordingly, the rate of female-headed families has skyrocketed, and many of them live in poverty. Beyond all this, and intertwined with it, is the plight of working women who are confronted by the "supermom" model that asks some women to be wives, mothers, lovers and executive vice-presidents, not necessarily in that order.

It is facts like these that get writers, legislators and television producers to wring their hands about the erosion of the family.

Is there any good news on the family front? Yes, of three kinds.

First, American attitudes toward family and children remain extremely positive. In fact, the polls show that Americans feel that family and children are the most important aspect of their lives. A recent Roper Poll taken for Virginia Slims shows that about 90 percent of American women want a life that involves marriage and children, with 63 percent wanting a career in addition.

The second piece of good news is that people are paying attention to the bad news. Some of it is silly, as when Donahue incants the statistic that only 5 percent of Americans live in the "traditional" husband-wife, two children, husband-only-earner family. Phil, what about young people who just got married, or couples with one child or three, or couples whose children have grown up?—are they all non-traditional?

Still a blizzard of authentic bad news about the family has reached the ears of Americans and their legislators.

And that leads to the third part of the good news. Americans respond. That is the standard way American society acts: Attract attention by media gloom-mongering, raise it to agenda level and start dealing with it, publicly and personally.

This one will be difficult on the public front. Pro-choice and pro-life activists have opposite views on how to handle one aspect of the family situation, abortion.

On the other hand, bigger tax deductions for children, child allowances, expanded day care (particularly on the work site), maternal leave and flextime are some of the issues around which a fairly broad public consensus may well be formed.

On the personal side, a new generation of women is sifting out what makes sense in the women's movement and what doesn't. Maybe some women will decide not to go for executive v.p.

As these sorts of things are shaped and refined, things will begin to change for the better, publicly, privately and personally.

Milwaukee wants respect

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Milwaukee, which advertises itself as a great place on a Great Lake, was not about to take it lying down when it was left in a big lurch by a new church.

This city of 636,000 is waging a guerrilla war against Chicago for the headquarters of the new Evangelical Lutheran Church in America — a prize that was once Milwaukee's but was wrested from it by the behemoth with which it shares Lake Michigan.

So groups of Milwaukeeans have banded together this week to proclaim their city's virtues — while at the same time taking note of Chicago's vices.

Three Lutheran churches are meeting in the Midwest this week and are expected to agree to merge to create the new church, which with 5.3 million members would be the nation's fourth-largest Protestant denomination.

But the merger is the result of years of negotiations, carried on by a 70-member commission that voted in February to locate the church offices in Milwaukee — a compromise between those who wanted Chicago and those who wanted Minneapolis and Philadelphia.

The decision caused an uproar, and the commission was forced to reconsider in June. When Chicago was the choice, Milwaukee burned.

"I think there was a sense of being jilted," said the Rev. Robert Dues, leader of the effort for Milwaukee. The headlines in Milwaukee newspapers, he said, were "just slightly smaller than Pearl Harbor."

The Rev. William Lazereth of New York City, a member of the commission that made the selection, said Chicago was the logical site for the "national center of an international church." It is easier to reach by air, he said, had more seminaries and afforded more ecumenical contacts.

"In no way is this meant to be a reflection on Milwaukee," he said.

But that is just how Milwaukee — a city which is struggling to improve its image — took the decision.

"They say that the church should be in a world-class city. Milwaukee's world class. It is," insisted the Rev. William H. Truby.

By coincidence, the largest of the three churches that plan to merge — the 2.9 million-member Lutheran Church in America — is holding its annual convention in Milwaukee this week.

The others are the 2.3 million-member American Lutheran Church, meeting in Minneapolis and the 110,000-member American Evangelical Lutheran Churches, meeting in Chicago.

Truby is chairman of the committee that organized the convention for the host city, and when he welcomed the delegates Monday he was sure to give his home city a plug.

Milwaukee, he said, is a city of "cleanliness, good government ... some of the best restaurants in the United States ... good roads, a modern airport — from which, by the way, you can fly direct to almost every city in the USA."

Delegates arriving in Milwaukee this week have faced questions from taxi drivers and others who wanted to know why their city had been spurned.

They also received packet of information about Milwaukee, including allegations that a headquarters in Chicago would cost $2 million a year more than one here. Labor costs 5 percent less in Milwaukee, airport parking costs $2 a day to Chicago's $9, clerical labor costs 5 percent less, it says.

"Milwaukee is often known for beer and bratwurst," said one pamphlet. "But to limit one's perception of Milwaukee to beer and bratwurst is to limit one's perception of Chicago to crime and the Cubs..."

Administration plans counter steps against Libyan terror, sources say

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (AP) — The Reagan administration is prepared with military and economic contingency plans to be used if Libya's Moammar Gadhafi sponsors a new campaign of anti-American terrorism, officials say.

In Washington, Pentagon sources point to "clear indications" over the last few weeks that Gadhafi may be preparing "to get back into the terrorism business" — perhaps in West Germany or Greece — but insist they are not planning a preemptive strike.

White House spokesman Larry Speakes, however, refused to deny a Wall Street Journal story published Monday that said a plan to foment political and economic dissent against Gadhafi had been developed "to preempt more Libyan-sponsored terrorism."

One official seemed eager to confirm the Journal's story, calling it "very authoritative."

Speakes would not go that far Monday in a briefing for reporters who are covering President Reagan during his vacation at his ranch near here.

Speakes, however, did say: "The United States is prepared to take whatever action is necessary to prevent terrorist activity and could continue to do so."

"We have reason to believe that the Libyan state headed by Colonel Gadhafi has not forsaken the desire to create terrorist activities worldwide and the capability is still there to do so," the spokesman added.

Speakes said a ranking U.S. official was being sent to Europe to discuss with allies anti-terrorist plans and the possibility of tightening political and economic sanctions against Libya that are already in place.

On the record, officials were cautious in talking about U.S. plans, but they were more forthcoming when speaking on condition they not be identified.

Gadhafi disappeared from public view for a time following the U.S. raids on two Libyan cities last April that were conducted in retaliation for the bombing of a discotheque in West Berlin that was patronized by American soldiers.

Asked about the possibility of another military strike on Libya, one Pentagon source replied: "There's been some contingency planning, sure, but that's normal. We have no strike planned. We're not planning a preemptive strike of any kind."

But Pentagon sources said military force could be brought to bear against Libya rapidly if that became necessary.

Testimony to resume in McFadden's trial on aggravated robbery charge

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — A man who calls himself "Animal" terrified a Tyler couple when he demanded money at gunpoint and then took beer from them, one of the victims testified.

"He was talking about how he rode with the Hells Angels and how they called him 'Animal' and about how it wasn't nothing to kill somebody," Clifton Phillips said during the first day of Jerry McFadden's aggravated robbery trial.

Testimony was to resume today amid tight security at the Bexar County courtroom. The trial was moved here from Quitman in Wood County because of the publicity surrounding McFadden, 38.

Thrice convicted of rape and currently charged with capital murder, McFadden led about 200 lawmen on a two-day manhunt in East Texas after breaking out of an Upshur County Jail and taking a deputy hostage last month.

Monday, McFadden was brought to and from the courtroom in leg chains and handcuffs attached to a chain around his waist.

Phillips testified Monday that he and Denise Bailey were about to leave the park after a May 4 afternoon outing when McFadden pointed a snub-nosed .38-caliber revolver at them as they sat in their car and demanded money.

Phillips said when he told McFadden he spent his money on beer, McFadden demanded the beer. Phillips said he was so terrified that he complied.

"I didn't know what to expect. God was with me. I just more or less went along with him," Phillips said, adding that McFadden then went away without harming them.

At one point in the trial, McFadden was ordered to take off his shirt, revealing several tattoos on his upper body.

Among the winged creatures, bugs and a ghoulish figure with the word "Harley" were the words "Death before dishonor" that Phillips said he remembered seeing on the man who he said attacked him at the lake. The words were part of a tattoo that ended with "for the lonesome loser."

The capital murder charge against McFadden stems from the May 5 death of 18-year-old Suzanne Harrison, who was sexually assaulted, beaten and strangled in East Texas.

Governors overcome partisanship

HILTON HEAD ISLAND, S.C. (AP) — With little partisanship showing, the nation's governors are ending their annual conference after nearing consensus on proposals to improve education and cope with federal tax overhaul.

Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton, a Democrat, today was to take over as chairman of the National Governors' Association, succeeding Republican Lamar Alexander of Tennessee, who tried to keep the governors focused on education reforms during his one-year term.

Leadership positions are alternated between parties each year, and the 16-member Republican Governors Association was to meet today to decide who they would select as vice chairman.

New Hampshire Gov. John Sununu and Indiana Gov. John Orr were candidates in the hotly contested race.

Clinton said in an interview he was willing to accede to the wishes of other governors in staking out a position on federal tax legislation, but that he was willing to accept the compromise version agreed upon last week by House and Senate conferees.

That bill caused much agonizing by governors, since it would achieve some of their goals of tax reform, produce a revenue windfall for some states through its effects on their tax base, but also pressure their taxing systems by eliminating the federal deduction for sales taxes.

Clinton echoed Colorado Gov. Richard Lamm, chairman of the governors' tax committee, in saying it was time to accept tax reform despite deep opposition on the deduction of sales taxes.

Removal of the deduction is seen as making future state tax increases more difficult and pushing states that rely on sales taxes to an income or other tax. "We've got a lot of other battles to fight," Clinton said.

The governors' proposals to reorganize education were being bolstered by the release of a poll by the Carnegie Forum on Education and the Economy, which showed a majority of Americans back tax increases to improve education.

Virtually no dissent was heard among governors in two days of discussions about their recommendations, which included granting more authority over school decisions to local educators and increasing reporting of schools' performances.

Energy industry officials disgruntled with tax bill

DALLAS (AP) — Texas oil industry officials say the nation's new tax bill is likely to siphon off investment capital because of scaled-down deductions, but most said the tax overhaul didn't put as big a squeeze on the industry as had been feared.

The tax bill could have been worse, said Jim Hunt, chairman of Dallas-based Cenergy Corp. But he said it still will add to the problems of the industry, which was hit by a sharp decrease in oil prices at the beginning of this year.

"It's certainly not going to help (exploration)," he said. "The shame of it is they've done it all in the name of reducing taxes."

The tax changes come at a time when the Texas economy is reeling from collapsing oil prices and the accompanying high unemployment rates and low sales tax revenues. Legislators are meeting in a special session this month to make up for a predicted $3.5 billion shortfall.

"We're just in what's known as a plain old classic recession," said Tony Proffitt, spokesman for Texas Comptroller Bob Bullock.

Proffitt said the fact that much of the oil and gas industry's tax deductions were left intact will help stabilize the industry, thereby helping the state.

"In the short run, it (the tax overhaul) will kind of pinch us a little bit, like the sales tax deduction. In the long run it should be beneficial because it will mean more people will retain more of their income and can spend that income on things that will generate economic activity," he said.

The tax overhaul eliminates the deduction for sales taxes and retains the one for state income taxes — doubly painful for Texas, which has no state income tax and depends on sales taxes for much of its revenue. The bill leaves intact property tax deductions.

Proffitt said 27 percent of taxpayers itemized in 1984, taking an average $449 each in sales tax deductions. Under the new bill, taxpayers will pay a greater share of the burden because there is no state income tax here, he said. Texans traditionally have been strongly opposed to such a tax.

The final tax overhaul plan approved by a House-Senate conference committee preserved a one-year writeoff for intangible drilling costs and depletion allowances.

However, the lower tax rates and loss of investment tax credits probably will dampen the enthusiasm of investors, said Richard Adkerson of Arthur Andersen & Co. in Houston. Lower tax rates mean a deduction will be worth less to investors.

Tom Haywood of the North Texas Oil and Gas Association said investment-related portions of the tax bill make it a "nail in the coffin instead of a hammer trying to pry the lid off the coffin."

But Haywood conceded that the industry had braced for a less favorable tax bill. "There is no doubt the fear cast into the oil and gas industry over what might happen makes this look good," he said. Wichita Falls oilman Ed Spragins said the tax bill is a risky experiment because of the investment-related provisions.

"I don't know whether the nation can afford to gamble on an experiment out of Washington," he said.

McCarter Middlebrook, vice president of taxes for Dallas-based Diamond Shamrock Corp., also said changes in energy-related taxes, such as the loss of investment tax credits and lower tax rates, would hurt in the short run.

However, the lower drilling costs and the fact that exploration may be a less attractive investment may mean that only serious investors will get involved in drilling ventures, Middlebrook said.

"There is merit in getting the tax shelter aspect out of the oil business," he said. "In the long run, the industry could rebound."

New law would add millions to private pension plans

WASHINGTON (AP) — Millions of Americans will become eligible for private pension benefits at retirement, and those benefits may be higher, because of changes in the tax bill awaiting final congressional approval.

The changes mean about 68 percent — instead of 59 percent — of Americans will be covered by private pension plans between the years 2011 and 2020, according to the American Association of Retired Persons' projections.

And the lobbying group for the elderly said pensions will be about 22 percent higher than they would have been without the revisions. The Census Bureau estimates the over-65 population at 51 million in 2020.

The Employee Benefit Research Institute, a non-profit group, said a little more than half the civilian work force was covered by company pension plans in 1983, or 51.5 million out of 99 million workers. However, 79 percent of the full-time workers were covered.

A key change in the trillion-dollar private pension system is the requirement that most companies fully vest employees in a pension plan after a maximum of five years, instead of 10 years.

Sen. John Heinz, R-Pa., a principal backer of pension changes, said the 10-year vesting requirement excluded too many people in the mobile American society.

"Half of all those who are working for an employer that does have a pension plan are never going to earn, invest and be entitled to their benefits because they may leave their job before they vest," he said.

Changing the vesting limit to five years would have qualified 1.9 million Americans for retirement benefits in 1985 at a cost of between $1.4 billion and $4.7 billion, the benefit institute said.

There are several other pension changes in the tax bill, which also restricted Individual Retirement Accounts and 401 (k) retirement plans, two savings programs popular with middle- and high-income workers.

The tax bill would:

- Ensure that companies do not discriminate against lower-paid workers by requiring that pension plans cover 70 percent of workers who are not highly compensated, instead of 56 percent, in order to qualify for special tax treatment.

- Prohibit an employer from reducing a worker's retirement benefits by more than 50 percent when taking Social Security benefits into account.

- Slap a 10 percent penalty tax on early withdrawals of pension money, and shorten the 10-year averaging period to five years.

Most of the changes will not go into effect until Dec. 31, 1988, to allow companies to adjust.

Tax reform slaps charities in no-win situation

HOUSTON (AP) — Texas charities stand to lose millions of dollars under the proposed income tax reform bill because taxpayers will have to itemize to deduct money they give to the poor, worried officials said.

The United Way of Texas alone could suffer up to $25 million in contribution losses over the next five years, UWT executive vice president Bill Link said.

"It's like a slap in the face," said Beverly Schneider, comptroller of Houston Catholic Charities. "This city is one with many economic problems, and after cutting off funds, the government expects us to take up the slack helping people in need."

Because of the reform bill, many taxpayers are expected to stop itemizing because they won't be able to write off Individual Retirement Accounts, consumer interest and sales taxes, analysts say.

In turn, since they need to itemize to do it, they will probably not make as many contributions to non-profit organizations, says Steve Delphin, spokesman for UWT's parent group based in Alexandria, Va.

"Congress is giving us (charities) conflicting messages," Delphin said. "First they cut programs, like day care and food programs, saying volunteer groups can pick up the slack. And now they are taking away the incentive to give to charities."

But some officials say most people who contribute are not looking for a tax writeoff.

Only about 20 percent of American taxpayers itemize under the current tax law, said Jack Devore, Texas Sen. Lloyd Bentsen's press secretary.

"It's like President Reagan said, the individual is going to get a tax cut of about $1 billion, and they will have enough money in their pockets that they'll give for the right reasons," Devore said. Some charity organizers agree.

"The bill will have no great bearing on us," said Maj. Neil Saunders, a Salvation Army spokesman in El Paso. "People who give little items want to see people use it, and those are the people who give us the majority of our items."

At Southern Methodist University in Dallas, Colin French, director of planned giving said the impact would be "very slight." French said his office is scrambling to make use of the current tax code before it expires.

"We will see a decline in the amount given over the next two years as the tax bill is phased in, but people who are more interested in creating something other than tax deductions will continue to give," he says. "People will give just for the love of the school."

Still, others fear that donations will drop, causing a shortfall in their already strained budgets.

At the University of Texas system, administrators said fewer contributions could adversely affect growth and improvement in higher education.

Paul Youngdale, director of development, said state universities receive an equal amount of state funds to maintain their facilities. But it's the donations that make a difference between an excellent school and a good one, he said.

"It will hurt us because we are going to get fewer large gifts that we have used to endow a professor," Youngdale said. "And that's how you get and keep good people within the university."

Other charities are starting donation campaigns and hoping for the best.

"I expect we'll receive one of the biggest clothes contributions between Christmas and New Year's when people know they only have a few days left to deduct this year," said Steve Lufburrow, president of Goodwill Industries in Houston.

"But I hope people's caring will overcome their deduction concerns and they will continue to give," he said. "I think they will."

"But I'd Never Made Funeral Arrangements..."

"When the doctors explained Bob's illness to me, I knew I had to prepare. And with so little time — confused, upset — with no idea what was involved in making funeral arrangements."

"Thank goodness for my sister. She brought me a helpful booklet from the funeral director our family knew. It explained what I needed to know, the vital information and papers I would need, a checklist of decisions to be made — everything necessary to help me through that trying time.

"The loss of Bob was no less painful — but Sis, along with the helpful guidance of the funeral director, made it all a little more bearable."

Union is building non-profit homes

BOSTON (AP) — Tom McIntyre builds and sells houses at 40 percent below the going rate in Boston's costly real estate market. And he goes out of his way to make sure he doesn't make money on the deals.

Who is this man? Some kind of urban housing Robin Hood?

McIntyre is actually a 54-year-old, cigar-chomping, up-through-the-ranks union official, a vice president of the Bricklayers & Masons Union.

Four years ago, he set out to relieve the housing shortage that's pricing Boston neighborhoods beyond the reach of many who grew up in them. His solution was to build low-cost, not-for-profit townhouses.

"We thought we could build affordable homes and have an impact on the total market," McIntyre said in an interview at one of 18 completed units in the city's South Boston section.

He would like to see his effort duplicated by construction unions elsewhere in the country.

"The beef is: If you are poor, you could get subsidies; if you're rich, you don't need them. These houses are for the $2 better," he said.

While trying to preserve close-knit, working-class neighborhoods, he expressed another hope — that his homes would improve the image of organized labor.

"Unions have been painted as a self-interest group," said McIntyre, who left school after the 10th grade to lay brick.

Ten years later, he became a full-time union officer. Displaying promise, he was selected 20 years ago for a union management course at the Harvard Business School.

"Our aim is to work on the grass-root neighborhood level so that people begin to understand that unionism is a force for good in their community," he said.

General construction, plumbing and electrical contractors for his projects are selected by the respective craft union and must pay union scale wages, McIntyre said. "The contractors are not hitting home runs, but they're making a profit and the homebuyer gets a house 40 percent below market rate."

Such a saving is significant. In greater Boston, the seventh-largest U.S. metropolitan area, the average home now sells for about $150,000, second highest in the nation, the National Association of Realtors says.

The savings are made on development costs, he explained. None is passed on to the buyer because the Bricklayers & Laborers Non-Profit Housing Co. has "zero overhead," he said. There are no paid employees.

McIntyre, who conducts all negotiations, juggles the paperwork and fields customer complaints, receives only his vice president's salary from the ricklayers union.

He found a local bank to lend $1.2 million without collateral. It did so in an arrangement he calls "compensating balances," in which the union pension fund placed an amount equal to the loan at the bank in certificates of deposit that earned 6.5 percent to 7 percent interest. The loan rate was then set at 8 percent, saving the housing project 3 to 4 interest rate points.

The first project got under way after Mayor Ray Flynn sold 23,000 square feet of land, the site of an old public school, to McIntyre's non-profit firm for $1.

"Construction began last September and was completed in May," said Bill Rawn, 42, a lawyer-turned-architect who designed the $69,900 houses with two bedrooms, bay windows and combination living-dining rooms with 11-foot ceilings. "And that is incredible. That's faster than what the big guys do."

In any of the projects, no house can be resold for more than the purchase price plus inflation. That's an effort to keep speculators away.

Judge seeks to block impeachment

WASHINGTON (AP) — A special judicial panel is pursuing the impeachment of a federal judge it says fabricated his successful defense against bribery conspiracy charges, the judge revealed in a lawsuit seeking to block the effort.

U.S. District Judge Alcee Hastings of Miami on Monday asked the federal court in Washington to declare unconstitutional the law that permits the judicial investigation of him that is under way.

A hearing was scheduled for this afternoon on Hastings' motion to temporarily block a report that concludes "Judge Hastings in fact engaged in the conduct upon which he had been tried and acquitted and that his defense was fabricated to avoid conviction."

Hastings' suit discloses the decision by the special five-judge panel of the 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Atlanta to pursue the charges against him. Hastings was tried and found innocent in 1983 on federal charges of conspiring with his friend, Washington lawyer William Borders Jr., to solicit a $120,000 bribe from two convicted racketeers seeking to shorten their sentences.

Following the trial, a judicial complaint was filed against Hastings, alleging he committed the crime and engaged in other improper conduct.

An Aug. 4 report from the 11th Circuit panel recommends that the Judicial Council determine that Hastings fabricated his defense.

The council will make its recommendation to the Judicial Conference, which in turn reports to the U.S. House of Representatives. The House is empowered to impeach federal judges.

Hastings' lawsuit also seeks a restraining order to prevent further action against him.

According to the lawsuit, the act — known as the Judicial Conduct and Disability Act — should be struck down because it interferes with the independence of the federal judges and "fails to provide a meaningful definition of the type of conduct that may subject a judge to discipline."

The first impeachment trial of a federal judge in 50 years is scheduled next month, when the Senate will consider the case of Harry E. Claiborne of Nevada, who remains in office despite serving a two-year sentence for tax evasion.

Flower donor remains mystery

IRVING, Texas (AP) — A sympathy note left at the grave of Patrick Henry Sherrill that was purportedly from fellow letter carriers was the work of a "sick" person, a postal union officer says.

Flowers appeared Sunday at the grave of the man who killed 14 Postal Service workers before killing himself last week in Edmond, Okla., and they bore a card that was signed "The Letter Carriers of Irving, Texas."

"From those who understood what he went through as a carrier," it read. "No one will ever know how far he was pushed to do what he did."

The note left at Sherrill's grave in Watonga, Okla., was an apparent reference to problems he had been having at work. He had met with superiors the day before over his poor work record as a part-time carrier.

"Someone has gone up there and misrepresented us. I don't like this kind of nonsense," said Charlie Swanson, president and chief steward of the 150-member Irving chapter of the National Association of Letter Carriers. "Whoever did it was sick."

He said letter carriers at the Carl Range postal station raised about $130 Saturday to send to the relatives of the victims and the union intended to raise more.

Neither the funeral home that handled Sherrill's arrangements nor the cemetery caretaker knew who sent the flowers.

Kenneth Russworm of Russworm Funeral Home, which handled Sherrill's arrangements, said no flowers were received at the funeral home for Sherrill.

The carnations were at the grave when Russworm's wife, Opal, arrived at the cemetery about 20 minutes before the burial, Russworm said.

Papers chronicle 'narcomania' fight

MOSCOW (AP) — After years of dismissing drug abuse as virtually non-existent in socialist society, the state press is now chronicling how "narcomania" affects many young Soviets' lives.

Recent newspaper articles have echoed urgent calls by law enforcement officials and sociologists to deal more openly with a problem that the Soviets once said only existed in the West.

One sociologist said abuse of illegal drugs such as hashish cuts across all social strata, and a major general in the national militia, or police, suggested addiction be treated as an illness rather than a crime.

Along with this more modern approach, the Soviet press has printed horror stories apparently designed to scare young people away from drugs.

An article in the newspaper Sovietskaya Rossiya recounted the gruesome experiences of Moscow teen-agers who made their own narcotics from stolen medicine.

Two teens died of overdoses or poisoning, the article said, describing a basement hideout where young men were injecting themselves with drugs.

"It would be an illusion to think we can deal with this problem only with the militia," the government newspaper Izvestia wrote. "The struggle should be organized everywhere — in colleges, schools, technical schools and medical organizations."

As recently as 1983, a leading Soviet drug expert was quoted as saying narcotics addiction was almost non-existent here, limited mainly to invalids and those dependent on painkillers.

But the problem was deemed serious enough to be raised at the Communist Party Congress in February and the press has followed with vigorous reports that seem to reflect official concerns that illegal drug use has gotten out of hand.

Firm has different outlook on business, environment

By LARRY WEISENBERG
Port Arthur News

PORT NECHES, Texas (AP)—Charles Cogliandro isn't much interested in trade protection barriers, nor does he have any particular sympathy for manufacturers who cry foul at regulations designed to protect the environment.

"A lot of U.S. companies talk about trade barriers. That's not the way to protect U.S. industry," says the vice president of operations at the Chemall plant in Port Neches. "As far as we're concerned, if you're inefficient you shouldn't be in business. We are going to knock the Japanese and the Taiwanese on their cans."

Strong words, and rather unusual for an American businessman these days.

Since 1980 Chemall has been a subsidiary of Calabrian Chemicals Corp., and Cogliandro is leading a $5 million expansion plan at the chemical plant.

Part of Calabrian's inheritance in the Chemall plant was an environmental problem that placed the site in the Top 10 polluters in the state. It is a label Calabrian has strenuously fought.

"The fact that we wound up on the top polluters list really upset us," Cogliandro says. "We choose to attack those problems and cooperate with state clean up, over $2 million strictly to clean up a problem we had nothing to do with."

"We treat our customers with a tremendous amount of respect. Why shouldn't there be that prevailing attitude with respect for the environment? We are going to have to live in this community—why destroy it?"

Calabrian, headquartered in Houston and New York, is a family business. Charles, along with his older brother Robert, two sisters, Helene and Jeanne Holman, immersed their youthful energy into the company more than 10 years ago to take a small import-export business into a multimillion-dollar chemical manufacturing business.

"Our father told us all to get jobs at big companies," says Helene Cogliandro, vice president of purchasing. "We all had the education. So of course we all came into the company. My father always had a hard time working for somebody else, and I guess that was ingrained in us."

The company, Calabrian, is now the largest importer of iodine to the United States, according to Charles. It pulled in revenues of $24 million in 1980, but by last year it had hit $40 million, and he confidently predicts they will reach $100 million in three years.

The Chemall purchase is the first move by the company to get into chemical manufacturing. It produces sodium thiosulfate, a product used for absorbing chlorine out of waste water and in the film developing process. Part of the expanded plant will produce phyhalocyanine blue, a dye used in ball point pen ink.

At a time when foreign companies seem to be taking U.S. technology home to begin their own production, the Cogliandros are reversing the trend.

"It was our longer-term plan, that once we had established markets for those products, to phase into our own production of the same products," Charles says. "What we did worked extremely well."

Under the supervision of plant manager Brian Davis, Chemall is on the verge of turning a profit for the first time in many years.

"I have to say this is the most exciting and enjoyable place that I have worked," said Davis, a chemical industry veteran. "It's largely because they are such a dynamic operation. In large companies you have to fight and scrap to get a decision. Here one telephone call often clears something."

One of the most refreshing ideals the Cogliandros have is their insistence that any chemicals be made without producing a waste product.

"The previous owners were not environmentally conscious, in fact, a lot of them were environmentally unconscious," Charles says. "We are choosing to make Chemall a model for the community, not an object of ridicule."

At 32, Charles Cogliandro is intense; get him started talking about the chemical business and he speaks passionately and hurriedly. He says he gets his business intuition and intensity from his family.

"We have it in our blood. We've all really got that same disease," he says. His sister, Helene, agrees.

"We're sort of born into the business. We were always exposed to a lot of international people, and I'm talking at the age of 10," she says. "My parents always had a lot of government people coming over. Even in high school, my mother used to come in and give talks about their business overseas."

Their mother was born in Germany and raised in Switzerland, and their father's parents immigrated from the Reggio di Calabria area of Italy near Sicily. They started an import-export business in 1946 and also worked in a barter system with the U.S. government. Calabrian was opened in 1970.

"He was going to keep it small, but when we came out (1975-76), and he had put ... all four kids through college ... we really owed him something," says Charles.

One trait passed on to the Cogliandro children apparently was a strong working ethic.

"I have lived with that plant, both day and night, for the last couple of years," says Charles, who beside the classes he took on his way to an MBA, has no chemical training. "I lived in that plant and learned a lot about chemistry. I love to cook, and chemistry and cooking to me are basically the same."

Charles is adamant that Calabrian's employees will hold to the same work ethics.

"They better be as interested in obtaining those goals as we are, otherwise there's no place in the company for them. People that come to work for us, either they're fanatical or they don't work long for us."

There are other expansion plans for the Chemall plant. It will begin producing sulfamic acid and Charles hopes to begin making their own sulfur dioxide, a main component of their chemicals.

Minority school districts closing gap in test scores

HOUSTON (AP)—As minority children post rapid gains in math and reading scores, heavily minority school districts are closing the gap in statewide test results, according to a recent survey.

But although the study still shows those areas score lower than other districts statewide, "we're not frustrated. We're making progress. We're seeing results," said John Sawyer III, superintendent of the predominantly black North Forest school district in Harris County.

His district posted the biggest gain in math and reading scores among Texas' 63 largest districts surveyed by the Texas Education News, a weekly industry newsletter. But it ranked near the bottom among Houston-area schools.

"You can plot it on a map," said Klein Superintendent Donald Collins, who heads a more affluent district. "You take a poorer district that is heavily minority — they just won't do as well, but they may be doing a supremely better job teaching."

Nevertheless, the survey showed dramatic improvements: Only 13 percent of black fifth-graders statewide could distinguish between fact and opinion in reading tests in 1980. Today, 85 percent can.

"We need to increase our expectations for minority kids," said Joe Pitts, superintendent of the Port Arthur district, which is 70 percent minority.

State officials say minority scores have shown the most improvement because the test helped instructors focus on rudimentary skills.

Other school districts with more than 50 percent minority enrollment have taken more novel approaches.

Wet summer stymies New Mexico wildfires

By MATT MYGATT
Associated Press Writer

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — New Mexico's high country was blessed with an abundance of rain, spurring verdant trees and grasses moist enough to foil fires that could have erupted in forests that were dry in the spring.

"We're running about 30 percent above our normal statewide average of rainfall," said Ken Kunkel, state climatologist with the New Mexico Department of Agriculture.

"Most of the rain has fallen in May, June and July," he said. "That's a good time to get it, at least for forest fires and ranchers."

Wet weather came in the nick of time for southern New Mexico forests, many of which were dry in the spring because of sparse winter snowfall and strong wind.

Kunkel said New Mexico normally has westerly winds through May and June which cause generally dry weather. Then in early July, the wind pattern shifts, bringing in moisture from the Gulf of Mexico and the tropics.

"That shift occurred quite a bit earlier than normal, in mid-June," Kunkel said. "It stayed that way into July, and we started the rainy season earlier."

In addition, he said the June rains were very heavy.

"The favorable conditions in New Mexico's forests enabled the state to send nearly all of its 1,500 firefighters to fight wilderness wildfires in the Northwest."

The situation did not look that good earlier this year.

The Lincoln National Forest in the spring was expecting one of the most severe fire seasons with in the last decade because of the dry conditions.

"It was starting out to be pretty dry and serious, then we had good moisture and since about the first of June it really started raining, so since that time there has been a minimal fire threat on the Lincoln," said James Abbott, U.S. Forest Service supervisor for the Lincoln National Forest.

The forest had 30 or 40 mostly minor fires that were easily controlled, he said.

"It's been an excellent year," Abbott said. "Moisture has been steady and good for growing grass and trees." The forest has had dry days this summer, but "I'm convinced people are a little more aware of the fire prevention measures they might take ... and credit is due there," he said.

Harry Phillips, assistant forest dispatcher for the Gila National Forest, said the summer has been fairly moist, "a lot more so than usual."

"We had an early onset of the monsoon-type moisture and that really curtailed the fire season," he said. "Right now, the fire danger is moderate. We're still receiving moderate amounts of precipitation."

The Gila has had about 150 fires this summer, Phillips said.

"Based on an average during this time, in years past we have had over 400 fires, so we're significantly down," he said. "In the last 10 years, I think this is the least activity we've had."

Most of the fires were less than one acre, although one that was allowed to burn reached 700 acres, Phillips said.

"It was allowed to burn to clean up the underbrush and the wildlife habitat," he said. "We try to let it play a natural role, but we do monitor it."

Phillips said fire conditions in the Gila will stay moderate to normal if the forest continues receiving moderate precipitation.

Allen Quintana, public information officer for the Santa Fe National Forest, said the forest experienced one of the lowest fire seasons on record.

"I don't have the total number of fires, but none exceeded but a few acres in size," he said. "Most were lightning-caused. They were extremely small in numbers and small in acreages.

The forest received a lot of moisture during its critical period between mid-May through July Fourth when temperatures were high, Quintana said.

Alipio Mondragon, assistant fire management officer for the Carson National Forest, said rain fell steadily throughout the summer.

"Our fire season has been pretty much moderate," he said. "The moisture, I think, is above normal because even the streams that usually get real low this time of year are still fairly high."

"It's so green out there — it's just like a park."

Terri Zubchenok, public information officer for the state Forestry Division in Santa Fe, said there has not been a major wild fire on state forest land all year.

"We've had some smaller fires, but nothing that's real busy," she said. "It's a lot more moisture than we expected, especially since the month of June, which historically is one of the busiest fire months in New Mexico."

But there are a lot of people camping, and Ms. Zubchenok warned them to still be careful with campfires and cigarettes.

"We do like people to be aware all the time, even though the weather has been on our side," she said.

Dick Ghoslin, fire dispatcher for the Cibola National Forest, said the forest "had a few fires, but nothing to really brag about from a fireman's point of view."

There were 214 acres that burned in the Cibola as of the end of July, he said.

"We got the early rains and they just kept going," Ghoslin said.

But the forest officials say New Mexico still could have a fall fire season.

Ghoslin said rain has stopped falling in the Cibola in the last couple of weeks.

"A lot of vegetation is starting to dry out," he said. "We'll see what happens when that dries out."

Abbott said that although the Lincoln still is receiving frequent rainfall, he "wouldn't be surprised if burning conditions pick up a little bit in September."

"I wouldn't anticipate any serious problem," he said. "The days get shorter and the humidity comes up at night. It can burn good for a while, but if there are no high winds, we can catch up with it."

Texas is moving toward interstate, branch banking

By KIT FRIEDEN
AP Business Writer

DALLAS (AP)—Texas, the nation's largest state to ban interstate banking of any kind, is on the verge of opening its doors to outside banks for the first time in its 150-year history.

"It was just something whose time has come," said Texas Banking Commissioner James Sexton, who first proposed the change in a meeting with Gov. Mark White last month.

New laws adopted by 35 other states and the toppling price of oil, which threatens the health of many Texas banks, helped prompt a sudden change of heart by banking groups that previously opposed interstate banking.

"People are finally starting to realize that you can't bank in 1986 with laws written in 1904," said Frank Anderson, a banking analyst with Weber, Hall, Sale & Associates in Dallas.

The state Senate last week quickly approved proposed legislation allowing interstate banking, and political observers expect the House to follow suit this week.

With 15 bank closings in Texas this year — a record for any state — bankers are anxious to attract out-of-state money and suitors for institutions in trouble.

"The weakening financial condition and funding of several large banks and the rapid deterioration of the economy forces Texas to seek diversification, and to do that, you need new capital," said banking lobbyist F. Hagen McMahon Jr.

McMahon's Independent Bankers Association of Texas had long opposed such changes in the law, as well as branch banking, which is common in most states across the country.

Moving through the Legislature hand-in-hand with the interstate banking proposal, and also winning Senate approval, is a bill allowing countywide branch banking.

The impetus for branch banking stems mainly from Attorney General Jim Mattox's ruling last spring that a law allowing drive-in banks located up to 20,000 feet from the main institution violated the state constitution.

"This is the only state in the nation with a constitution stating a bank can't do business in more than one place," said Sam Kimberlin Jr. of the Texas Bankers Association, which represents both large and small banks.

If the branch banking measure passes the House, the state's voters would have to approve it in November before it could go into effect.

Texas' law against branch banking often is a surprise to new residents of the state.

"If you have an account at one bank and you're across town and want to cash a check at a (subsidiary) bank there, you can't do it," said Sandra Flannigan, an analyst with Paine, Webber in Houston. "Just about every state has branch banking."

She and other analysts say consumers stand only to gain from both the branch banking and interstate banking proposals.

"Consumers are going to benefit from both measures," Ms. Flannigan said. "Either way you look — if we are talking about banks acquiring Texas banks, this could offer more services to consumers."

But not everyone thinks interstate banking is a good thing.

Chuck Doyle, a Texas City banker who is president of the Independent Bankers of America, said the proposals are "too far-reaching. It's more than necessary."

"What they're doing ... is opening our marketplace at the most vulnerable time. We're selling for far less than book value. When you're in that kind of position, it's going to result in ownership of major banks outside the state," Doyle said.

Anderson, the Dallas analyst, said many bankers were hoping Texas would enter the interstate banking arena after working out some of the state's problems "so they could acquire rather than be acquired. Things have gotten much worse than anyone anticipated."

Added Georgia Head, an analyst with Rauscher Pierce Refsnes in Dallas: "I think they just wanted to have their own banks, their own structure — a very provincial-type attitude. There's nothing wrong with that, but we're to the point the rest of the country is changing. I think Texas is realizing they're just behind the times."

Ms. Head said she sees National Bancshares Corp. of Texas in San Antonio and Texas American Bancshares of Fort Worth as likely acquisition targets.

"Both are small enough, even with the problems they have, that someone could take over at a reasonable price and still have a (good) stock price," she said.

Ms. Flannigan mentioned MCorp of Dallas, the state's second-largest bank holding company, and Texas Commerce Bancshares of Houston as attractive candidates.

"I don't think you could preclude almost any bank becoming a takeover target," she said.

Instead of just having one major objective in the year ahead, you are likely to have two. You will tackle them simultaneously and achieve both.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) A goal important to you can be achieved today, provided your tactics are flexible and can be altered to suit existing conditions. Career advantages and problems are discussed in your Virgo Astro-Graph predictions for the year ahead. Get yours by mailing $1 to Astro-Graph c/o this newspaper, PO Box 91428, Cleveland, OH 44101-3428. Be sure to state your zodiac sign.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) If you feel you've lagged in acquiring new knowledge that is important to your career, this is a good day to open the books and start catching up.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) You can derive personal benefits today from using your know-how to help someone else do something he or she has been unable to figure out.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) There's more than one good solution regarding a decision you may be forced to make today. Carefully evaluate each alternative.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) You can arrive at improved production methods today through a meeting of minds with co-workers. Everyone's ideas will blend effectively.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) There's a chance you will find a fresh social interest today. It's apt to be temporary, yet it will prove stimulating and a welcome change of pace.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Usually the media is your best source of interesting news. Today, however, the most fascinating bulletins may be revealed at the dinner table.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) A friend from whom you've been anxious to hear may get in touch with you either by phone or in person. You both have lots to catch up on.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Try to allocate some time today to putting your papers and records in order. Also, re-examine your budget to see where you can cut.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) This is the type of day where you need a busy schedule in order to feel content and productive. Assign yourself a long list of things to do.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Your subtle sense of humor is your most effective instrument today. It will help you get your points across without ruffling any feathers.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) A misunderstanding you've had with a close pal can be smoothed over today. Your friend has been eagerly waiting to talk to you.

KELLY STEVENS, right, visits with one of the handicapped children she helped this summer while working as a counselor teaching horseback riding at the Texas Lions Camp for Handicapped Children near Kerrville.

White Deer Girl serves as counselor for camp

WHITE DEER - Kelly Stevens of White Deer worked as a counselor teaching horseback riding at a camp for physically handicapped children this summer. According to camp personnel, the counselors at the Texas Lions Camp for Handicapped Children are special people with big hearts who spend their summers helping children who may not be eligible for other camps. They work long hours for little pay, but the rewards are unforgettable. Stevens began her service at the camp with a training program which taught the counselors sign language, techniques in lifting children from wheelchairs and how to adapt the activities to include every handicapped camper. During the camp, the counselors become parent, teacher and friend for approximately 1,300 children during the summer. Stevens and the other counselors planned and assisted the children in all activities on the 500-acre camp located near Kerrville.

Some of the activities included swimming, horseback riding, canoeing, shooting sports, fishing, studying nature, field sports and overnight camps. The "I can" philosophy is emphasized, and the campers are encouraged to try new activities. The counselors provide safe ways for every child to do things he or she may have only dreamed of doing before. One camper's parent wrote to the camp, "I was so impressed with the overall camp. The counselors were so energetic and everything seemed to be so organized."

"I feel lucky and blessed that my son was able to attend the Texas Lions Camp. You have an excellent program with so many loving, caring people. Thank you for giving my child and other children the opportunities you offer." The camp is sponsored by the Texas Lions League. Persons wanting information on the camp may call 1-512-896-8500.

Legend and lore surround colorful sapphire gemstone

DALLAS (AP) — Most people recognize a sapphire as a brilliant blue gemstone, yet few know that the September birthstone can also be any color, except red, notes the American Gem Trade Association (AGTA) based in Dallas. "Natural sapphire is found in almost every color of the rainbow — orange, blue, pink, yellow, green, lavender and purple — as well as colorless," says Ray Zajicek, president of AGTA, a non-profit organization representing suppliers of gemstones throughout the United States. "The rarest sapphire is Padparadscha, which is a fiery orange-pink stone," he adds. "Its name means 'lotus blossom' in Singhalese." Another rare and valuable sapphire is the star sapphire. "Star sapphire gets its name from the six-rayed star formed by the tiny needles of its crystal structure," explains Roland Naftule, president of the International Colored Stone Association (ICA), an organization of gemstone suppliers representing 29 gem-producing countries. "Perhaps the best known sapphire is the royal blue gemstone that England's Prince Charles gave to Princess Diana on their engagement. Prince Charles' choice was most appropriate, as legend holds that the gemstone protects royalty. Naftule points out. Found in Burma, Cambodia, Sri Lanka, Thailand, India, Africa and Australia, sapphire is one of the most durable gemstones, making it a good choice for both men's and women's fine jewelry creations, Naftule says. "The lovely gemstone lends itself to many beautifully faceted cuts including oval, cushion, marquise (boat shape) and pear, as well as cabochon, a rounded stone shape especially popular with men," he says. "The sapphire is one of the oldest-known gemstones," he notes. "In fact, ancient writers claimed the Ten Commandments were written on sapphire. Ancient Persians believed the blue sky was a reflection of a magnificent sapphire upon which the earth rested. Other lore surrounding the sapphire claims it acts as an antidote against poison, cleanses the soul and helps its owner to interpret oracles and foresee the future. The rare orange Padparadscha is said to help cure restlessness and insomnia. According to legend, the sapphire has the power to induce attachment and fidelity when given as a token of love."

Dear Abby

Good nursing homes result of caring staffs

By Abigail Van Buren
© 1986 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: I read Kirk Douglas' letter about the horrors of nursing homes with a strange kind of wonderment. On one hand, as the son of aging parents, I felt a sense of dread that one day my parents might be forced to live in a nursing home, which, judging from Mr. Douglas' "research," would be a fate worse than death. On the other hand, as one who has chosen a career dedicated to caring for the elderly, I was outraged that such irresponsible generalizations could be presented as gospel truths. As a nursing home administrator, I can tell you that they are not! I cannot imagine a family tolerating their loved one's being subjected to "bedsores, rapes and broken bones." I certainly would not. Nor would I tolerate in my facility any thievery, neglect or abuse. I pray that any nursing home that permits such abuses be closed immediately and their operators be prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law. Mr. Douglas' letter, which I assume was well-intentioned, served only to reinforce old stereotypes and further confuse and frighten those of us who may be faced with some frightening decisions.

ADMINISTRATOR, FOX RUN

nursing home. Yes, I am paid to do my job, although I would be paid more had I gone into another field of nursing. But there isn't enough money in the world to "pay" me to hold an old woman whose children never find the time to visit her. Nor is there enough money in the world to pay for the love that I give freely to our oldest, sickest citizens. Their love is returned to me in amounts too vast to calculate.

I am not alone. I am only one of thousands of nurses who struggle against red tape and budget cuts, and worst of all, the apathy of families and animosity of the press.

We provide food, shelter, around-the-clock nursing care, laundry, rehabilitative therapy and social services for $44 a day — less than a second-rate motel charges for a bed!

Of course, more money would help. It would pay for more equipment and increased staffing, but it would never replace the greatest need our patients have — visits from families and friends.

CONSTANCE E. STANLEY,
R.N., SANTA ANA, CALIF.

DEAR ABBY: Kirk Douglas notes that his mother spent her last seven years in a nursing home where she was well cared for. Then he cites horror stories, giving the impression that good nursing homes are the exception, when, in fact, they are the rule. Thousands of families will attest to this. We have a file of letters thanking us for the excellent care we have rendered to loved ones. I invite Mr. Douglas to come to Vermont and see our facility, and speak personally to our residents.

DAVID L. SILVER,
ADMINISTRATOR, NEWPORT
HEALTH CARE CENTER,
NEWPORT, VT.

DEAR ABBY: I could write a book about my mother's experiences in a nursing home. Her diamond ring was stolen from her hand, and her antique family Bible disappeared from her nightstand. Once I visited her to find her wearing dentures far too big for her mouth. (They'd lost hers!) Another time I caught an orderly "bathing" her. He had seated her on slats, and turned the overhead shower on full force — no soap.

One Sunday she was physically well and mentally alert. In eight days she was dead. They said, "Pneumonia." How? Why? You may use my name.

Gabon art works on view

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Forty works of African art selected from the Barbier-Mueller Museum, Geneva, Switzerland, will be on view at the Los Angeles County Museum of Art. Aug. 28, 1986, through March 22, 1987. "Ancestral Art of Gabon" includes statues, masks, reliquary figures, jewelry and weapons. The museum says, "The diverse sculptural arts of the West African nation of Gabon reveal an intense connection with the invisible world of the spirits and vary in style from two-dimensional, highly stylized works to three-dimensional, relatively naturalistic ones."

Ruben Sierra is congratulated by Ranger teammates after his game-winning homer.

Sierra's homer lifts Rangers past Red Sox

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP)—After coming from behind to beat Boston and deny Roger Clemens his 20th victory of the season, the Texas Rangers will be "real fired up" for the rest of the series, Texas relief pitcher Dale Mohoric says.

Monday night's 4-2 triumph, behind dramatic late-inning two-run homers by Ruben Sierra and Geno Petralli, enabled Texas to remain three games behind California in the American League West.

"We beat their two best pitchers tonight. We pitched a great game," said Mohoric, 2-1, who held the Red Sox scoreless after coming on in the eighth inning for Texas starter Bobby Witt.

"We matched Clemens pitch for pitch, and then we let Geno and Ruben takeover," Mohoric said.

Witt struck out six and walked five in seven innings, his only trouble coming in the fourthinning when he surrendered three of his walks.

Mike Greenwell led off the fourth with a walk, scored on Rich Gedman's double, and Gedman later scored on Bill Buckner's bases-loaded, smash off Witt's glove.

Despite the loss, Boston kept its six-game lead atop the AL East.

Clemens was sailing along with a two-hit shutout in the eighth inning, but Sierra hit a one-out single and pinch-hitter Petralli drove Clemens' first pitch into the rightfield bleachers.

Boston manager John McNamara brought on Calvin Schiraldi to face the Rangers in the ninth.

Schiraldi had five saves and a win in his last six appearances and struck out the first two batters he faced in the ninth. But then he walked Larry Parrish, who had struck out three times against Clemens, and gave up the game-ending homer to Sierra.

"Schiraldi was bound to give up one sooner or later. And that wasn't a cheap hit, either," McNamara said.

Clemens, who went 7 2-3 innings May 25 before losing a no-hitter, walked three and allowed only four hits. He also struck out 10 batters for the sixth time this season.

"I was throwing the ball well and I still felt strong going into the eighth. I didn't know anything about Petralli when he came up to bat. I figured he was just a slap hitter. I guess I just hit his bat."

Petralli, a reserve catcher, hit only the second homer of his major league career.

"I'm not a home run hitter," Petralli said. "He's a great pitcher, but I got around on it and hit it well. I knew when I hit it that it had a chance."

Ranger manager Bobby Valentine said, "That was some game. That game may best characterize this team this year. They just don't quit."

The victory was Texas' fifth in a row at home and was the 10th time that Texas won at home in the bottom of the ninth or later.

Top-ranked teams to face tough September

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP)—Gone for the most part are the days when a big-time college football team would roar off to a fast start by opening the season against the Little Sisters of the Poor, followed by Bo Diddley Tech.

Of the top 10 teams in the Associated Press preseason poll, nine have what easily could turn out to be a rugged opening month. Only sixth-ranked Penn State, with a September lineup of Temple, Boston College and East Carolina, appears safe.

Before September bows out, top-ranked Oklahoma will have played No. 3 Miami and No. 4 UCLA. Runnerup Michigan plays Notre Dame under the Golden Dome in Lou Holtz's debut as coach of the Fighting Irish, and also plays No. 11 Florida State. Miami plays No. 13 Florida in addition to Oklahoma, and Florida also is on tap for No. 5 Alabama. Seventh-ranked Texas A&M opens at No. 15 LSU and o. 8 Nebraska gets under way against

FOOTBALL

Florida State. Ninth-ranked Ohio State has a date with No. 16 Washington and No. 10 Tennessee visits No. 14 Auburn.

The fun begins Wednesday night when Alabama tangles with Ohio State in the fourth annual Kickoff Classic. The loser stands an excellent chance of losing its Top Ten rating.

"You don't have to be an intelligent person to know that starting out with a win is better than starting out with a loss," Ohio State Coach Earle Bruce said Monday. "Everybody knows that."

"I'm looking forward to playing Alabama. Why? Because they're Alabama. That's competition and, by God, I like competition. I think it's a heck of a challenge. If we can't take challenges then we shouldn't be in athletics. It's important to play somebody like that." r Alabama's Ray Perkins mind a challenge.

"I think it depends on what kind of team you have," he said about playing a tough opener. "Our first thought when we accepted this game was that we were going to have a pretty good team. I think we've got the kind of team that accepts challenges."

Navratilova ready to regain title as Open begins today

NEW YORK (AP) — After an emotional return to her native Czechoslovakia last month, Martina Navratilova says she is ready to regain the women's singles title at the U.S. Open tennis championships.

"I'm as excited about this as I've ever been," Navratilova, the No. 1 seed who begins play tonight when she takes on Andrea Holikova of Czechoslovakia, said. "I'm ready to charge out of the gate."

Martina Navratilova excited about Open

This year's U.S. Open celebrates the 100th anniversary of the women's singles championship, and Navratilova would like nothing better than to cap the event with her third title in the Grand Slam tournament.

The 13-day tournament began today with defending women's champion Hana Mandlikova of Czechoslovakia facing Marie-Cristine Calleja of France. Other first-day matches sent ninth-seeded John McEnroe against fellow New Yorker Paul Annacone and defending men's champion Ivan Lendl of Czechoslovakia against Glenn Layendecker.

Last year, Navratilova lost her bid for a third consecutive U.S. Open title when Mandlikova beat her in the final. This year, Navratilova lost to Chris Evert Lloyd in the finals of the French Open before capturing the women's crown at Wimbledon for the seventh time and the fifth straight year.

Then came her emotion-filled trip to Prague, Czechoslovakia, the first time she had returned to her native land since she defected 11 years ago. She became an American citizen in 1981.

With the crowd in Prague cheering her on, Navratilova performed brilliantly, winning all of her singles matches and teaming with Pam Shriver to capture the doubles and lead the United States to the Federation Cup title.

"The whole experience has been beyond my wildest dreams," Navratilova said after she defeated Mandlikova in the clinching match in the final.

In a week that saw huge crowds gathering every time she stepped onto a court, even if just to practice, Navratilova was overwhelmed.

Navratilova cried when the United States won the title, just as she had done on opening day when, after the parade of nations, the Czechoslovak anthem was played.

"This is my homeland," she said then, "but America is my home."

She also has been at home on the hard courts at the National Tennis Center in Flushing Meadow, reaching the final four times, including the last three years. In 1981, she lost to Tracy Austin, then burst into tears when the packed crowd at Louis Armstrong Stadium gave her a standing ovation.

But she's not looking at the past this week nor next.

"It's a short season this year, and this might sew it up," she said, referring to the year's No. 1 ranking. "If Chris wins, she would have a strong claim to being No. 1."

Because the Australian Open is being moved from the end of the year to January, the U.S. Open again will wind up the year's Grand Slam events.

The other Grand Slam tournaments are the French Open and Wimbledon.

Albeck may coach at Bradley

PEORIA, Ill. (AP) — Former Chicago Bulls Coach Stan Albeck, a 1955 graduate of Bradley University, says he and his alma mater are negotiating a multi-year coaching contract.

"We're down to dotting the i's and crossing the t's" on a multi-year contract, Albeck, fired by the Bulls after a quick elimination from the NBA playoffs last spring, said Monday from his San Antonio, Texas, home. "There's no finality to it."

A month ago, Bradley University began casting for a new coach for its NCAA-penalized basketball team, and "Stan's The Man" buttons sprouted around town.

Bradley, without identifying anyone, said it would introduce its next head coach at a campus news conference today.

Albeck, 55, who coached three National Basketball Association teams in six years before his most recent 11-month stint with the Bulls, declined to say he would be the one introduced. But, he said, there was no reason to expect anyone else.

Moore still suffering

DALLAS (AP) — San Antonio Spurs guard Johnny Moore says he still suffers from headaches caused by a rare form of meningitis that forced him to sit out last season.

But Moore, in Dallas over the weekend to play in the NBA Pro-Am Summer Texas Shootout, says he now knows when they are coming and how long they will last.

"The day I get my medication, I get the headaches again and it puts me out for about a day and a half," Moore said. "But it is caused by the medication. They have to inject it through this tube up here."

He has been running three miles a day and lifting weights three times a week.

Angels won't re-sign Jackson

NEW YORK (AP) — If Reggie Jackson plays baseball next season, it will not be for the California Angels.

Jackson, sixth on the all-time home run list, says he was told recently by Angels General Manager Mike Port that the team will not re-sign him for 1987.

"I know I still can play," Jackson said Monday night, prior to the Angels' 5-3 victory over the New York Yankees. "I'd like to play here in California, but it's not going to happen."

Jackson, 40, signed a one-year contract for 1986 worth an estimated $900,000. This season, the designated hitter has 11 homers with 40 runs batted in, and a current 3-for-25 slump has dropped his average to .252.

Jackson said Port told him during spring training that a decision on his status would be made by August.

"August came and they told me," Jackson said. "It's a blow. When someone tells you that you're not wanted, it's not something you enjoy hearing."

Yet asked if he was surprised at the Angels' position, he merely shrugged.

Port, at Monday night's game, would neither confirm nor deny that Jackson would not be back with the Angels.

"I won't talk about anything on an individual basis," he said. "I won't get into that."

Jackson joined the Angels in 1982 as a free agent and helped them to the American League

West title that year, hitting 39 home runs with 101 RBI and a .275 average.

He slumped to .194 with 14 home runs and 49 RBI in 1983, but came back to lead the team with 25 homers in 1984 and 27 last season.

He tops all active players with 541 career home runs.

Tascosa defeats Lady Harvesters in non-district volleyball match

Pampa lost to Tascosa, 4-15, 13-15, in girls' volleyball action Monday night in Amarillo. Several mistakes cost Pampa the first game before bouncing back to almost win the second game. "I was pleased with the girls' performance, but we're still having mental lapses which caused that first game to get away from us," said Pampa Coach Phil Hall and said. "We came back with a lot of emotion and intensity to give Tascosa a good second game." Errant serves cost Pampa a second-game victory, Hall said. Andrea Hopkins, Melinda Jackson and Jackie Osby were the outstanding players for Pampa, Hall said. "Andrea played fine defense and did an excellent job at the net. Melinda also had a fine performance at the net," Hall said. "Jackie is continuing her hot hand in serving. One out of every three serves has been an ace for her." Pampa is now 2-3 for the season and will host Amarillo Caprock tonight in McNeely Fieldhouse. The junior varsity match begins at 6:30 p.m., followed by the varsity.

Cowboys to cut Thurman?

DALLAS (AP) — Dennis Thurman, the leading active interceptor in the National Football Conference, said Dallas Cowboys coach Tom Landry informed him Monday he would be included in the 10 players to be cut from the squad today, according to published reports. "Coach Landry just said he wanted to go with younger players. He said he tried everything he could do to keep me, but felt at this time that this was the direction he needed to go," Thurman said Monday night. "He said his pass situation defense may not be as good, but this was the chance he had to take," Thurman told the Dallas Morning News. "This is part of the game and I have to accept it." Cowboys officials were scheduled to announce their 10 cuts by 3 p.m. today to get the team down to the required 50. The team then must be down to its final roster of 45 players by next week.

Thurman said Landry told him he wanted to tell him early out of respect for what he accomplished in his eight years with the team. The 30-year-old Thurman said he was called into Landry's office on Monday after practice for a 10-minute meeting and given the news he had feared throughout training camp. "This is terrible," cornerback Everson Walls told the newspaper. "This will really take away from our defense. He knows the defense better than the coaches." "Let's just say he helps the coaches out on the blitzes that sometimes they forget to cover," said Walls. "Dennis will come up with a single adjustment that will be the remedy." Thurman was moved from starting right cornerback to backup free safety in 1984, but remained a key member of the Cowboys' 4-0 pass defense — a scheme with seven defensive backs that was used about 40 percent of the time the past two seasons. After the Cowboys intercepted in Washington six times in the 1985 season opener, quarterback Danny White dubbed the secondary, "Thurman's Thieves." "I did all I could for the organization," said Thurman. "Whatever they asked of me, I tried to do. Coach Landry told me for a guy my size and speed, I was one of the better players he'd seen in a long time. He tried to pacify me as much as he could. If he had any emotion about it, he didn't show it." The Cowboys, by waiving Thurman, an 11th-round pick in 1978, will keep a fourth cornerback or an extra safety among seven defensive backs. Thurman said he wants to continue playing although many feel he has a coaching career if he chooses it. "I still think I can play in this league," he said. "I don't think I will be out of the league altogether. If I have played my last game, I would be surprised. I think something positive will happen." However, he added "I wish they had done this earlier, because with everybody cutting down, it's hard to get picked up. I just think this is something they knew all along."

Holmes may turn promoter

BY ED SCHUYLER JR. AP Boxing Writer

Larry Holmes, who feels he can still put up a fight, plans to put on fights. Holmes, his associate, Dick Lovell, and his attorney, Charles Spaziani, have requested a promoter's license in Pennsylvania under the name Sport-scor. But Holmes is not planning to invade the promotional world of such bigtime boxing brokers as Bob Arum or Don King. Some day maybe, but for now Holmes wants to be one of the promotional participants in any big fights he is involved in. At his age and asking price, that might not be easy. "We're not trying to get rich," Holmes said of the promotional venture. "We'll be happy to break even." Holmes plans to promote shows in such places as his hometown of Easton; Scranton, where he began his professional boxing career in 1973, and Bethlehem, where he has planned his first show for Sept. 19. He wants to put on two more cards in 1986. Holmes, the promoter, plans to showcase his brother Mark, a middleweight, whose successful career, at least on paper, was put on hold last year when he was knocked out by John Collins. But Holmes said his brother's career is not his sole purpose for promoting. "I want to give young fighters a chance," he said. As a fighter, Holmes finds himself in a position at the age of 36 of being on the fringe of a division he once dominated, of being in the position of becoming an opponent for a young fighter looking to put a famous name on his record. "I'm definitely going to fight," said Holmes, who won his first 48 fights before losing and failing to regain the International Boxing Federation title in two fights against Michael Spinks. "I'm going to fight sometime in November," Holmes, who will be 37 on Nov. 3, said. Two possible opponents he mentioned are Tyrell Biggs, the 1984 Olympic super-heavyweight champion, who recently returned to action after breaking his collarbone, and Canadian Willie deWit. Holmes, of course, has the experience to beat either man, but whether he has the legs and the jab to handle the 6-foot-5, power-jabbing Biggs is a legitimate question. A fight against deWit would be an attractive match in Canada. However, a bout against Biggs shapes up as the match in which Holmes more likely would get a purse in the neighborhood of $1 million, a neighborhood he still feels he belongs in, even for a 10-round bout.

Bias' agent to testify today

UPPER MARLBORO, Md. (AP)—A sports agent who represented both Maryland basketball All-American Len Bias and Coach Lefty Driesell was expected to testify today in the grand jury investigation of Bias' death and his school's athletic program. The grand jury was to reconvene after a six-day recess. County homicide detective Michael G. Ferriter, the chief detective in the Bias case, had earlier confirmed that the grand jury would look into business deals involving Lee Fentress, Bias and Driesell. Ferriter was quoted as saying the focus of the probe had more to do with ethical than legal matters. Fentress is a partner in the Advantage International company of Washington, D.C., which represented both Bias and Driesell in deals with the Reebok shoe company.

The grand jury also may be asked by State's Attorney Arthur A. Marshall Jr. to consider whether Fentress, a lawyer, had part in the alleged cleanup of the dormitory room before police arrived, according to sources. The state medical examiner was also expected to appear today before the panel. Dr. John E. Smialek, who had ruled that Bias died of cocaine intoxication in his campus dormitory, was not available to appear before the Prince George's County panel earlier because he was on vacation. The grand jury earlier has indicted three friends of Bias on drug charges, including former student Brian Tribble and two of Bias' teammates last season, Terry Long and David Gregg. Long and Gregg have been suspended from next season's basketball team at Maryland, pending the outcome of a November trial. A published report Sunday said the university is considering a similar scenario for Driesell should he be indicted. But John B. Slaughter, chancellor of the university's main College Park campus, denied any knowledge of such a plan on Monday. "As far as I know, it's not worthy of comment," Slaughter said. "I don't deal with hypothesis when it concerns personnel matters."

Former Redskin has AIDS

WASHINGTON (AP)—Former Washington Redskin Jerry Smith, believed to be the first professional athlete to publicly disclose he is suffering from AIDS, says he is making the disclosure in the hope that something good will result, a published report says. "I want people to know what I've been through and how terrible this disease is," the former All-Pro tight end and 13-year NFL veteran told the Washington Post in its Tuesday edition. "Maybe it will help people understand. Maybe it will help with development in research. Maybe something positive will come out of this." Smith's playing weight during his football career was 210 pounds. Now his weight is about 150 pounds and he grows weaker each day. When asked how he contracted the disease, Smith told the Post, "it just happened. It just happened." "It's a shame something like this has to make you appreciate what life is all about," he said. Smith played 13 years with the Redskins. AIDS, or acquired immune deficiency syndrome, is said to afflict mostly homosexual men. About 24,000 Americans suffer from the disease. Smith, although willing to discuss his struggle with the disease, would not elaborate on his lifestyle in his interview with the newspaper. During the past eight months, he has been in and out of Holy Cross Hospital in Silver Spring, Md., and George Washington University Hospital in Washington D.C. several times. He has lost weight steadily and, according to his mother, "hasn't eaten since June."
