Conference committee deadlocked on prisons

AUSTIN (AP) — House and Senate negotiators trying to write a compromise spending cuts bill turned a deaf ear Sunday to Gov. Mark White's pleas for quick action to help the state in federal courts.

White asked the 10-member conference committee to approve $33.7 million in spending for prison buildings to show at federal court today that Texas was trying to comply with court orders.

"We need this so we can present the strongest position in the state's case," White said.

The attorney general's department was scheduled to appear before U.S. District Judge William Wayne Justice in Tyler today to prove the state was trying to ease overcrowding in prisons.

Justice issued the order for today's hearing after the state announced last week it would house some prisoners temporarily at Camp Wolters at Mineral Wells.

After almost four hours of sometimes bitter arguments on Sunday, the conference recessed until today without answering White's appeal.

After the committee recessed for the night, Sen. Grant Jones, D-Temple, was asked what the state's attorneys could tell Justice.

"They can tell the court we are working on it," Jones said, "and we are."

Sharp exchanges between Sen. Ray Farabee, D-Wichita Falls, and Rep. Bill Hollowell, D-Grand Saline, marked Sunday's session.

The Senate originally proposed letting the TDC keep $33.7 million appropriated for 1986 operations but unspent. The original House bill would have put the $33.7 million into the general revenue fund to help ease the state's deficit.

Sunday, the House conferees first proposed to replace $30 million of the $33.7 million budget reduction.

Farabee said the $30 million was a "good number" but wanted assurance written in the compromise that part of the money would be used to contract with private interests to operate some prison facilities.

"I'm afraid if you just give them (the Texas Department of Corrections) $30 million that they will just hire a bunch more people and not do anything about increasing capacity," said Farabee. "I think we should at least experiment with privatization."

Rep. James Rudd, D-Brownfield, head of the House negotiators, said the proposed House compromises would let TDC spend the money where they thought it would do most good.

"This theory of privatization is by a bunch of people with greed in their hearts," said Hollowell. "They want to make a profit. This is something that should be debated at the regular session."

Hollowell said later that he and two other conferees, a majority of the House group, would never approve privatization until it has been approved by both houses of the Legislature.

White later told reporters he also thought privatization was a subject for a regular session.

After White's appeal, Farabee offered a Senate counter-proposal, calling for restoration of the entire $33.7 million. However, the TDC would be directed to spend $24.9 million in complying with federal court orders and $8.8 million to provide space for an additional 2,100 prisoners.

The Senate proposed that the TDC be allowed to contract with public agencies for space.

"You're just trying to get in the back door," Hollowell said. "This approach would exactly what we don't want you to do."

"This whole thing has sadly become an argument over privatization," Farabee said.

"We are not going to buy a pig in a poke," Hollowell said. "We'll have to think this over."

War on drugs battle plans unveiled by Reagan today

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan today ordered all federal employees not to use illegal drugs on or off the job and directed the heads of each government agency to establish mandatory drug-testing programs for "employees in sensitive positions."

Officials said they could not estimate how many of the government's 2.8 million civilian employees would be affected, but some published reports have put the number as high as 1.1 million.

Reagan, unveiling his own plan for combatting drug use as Congress rushes to enact legislation of its own before the November elections, said he would allocate $500 million in additional spending for law enforcement and drug interdiction efforts in the Southwest border region and in the Southeast. He earmarked $100 million to help local schools eradicate drug use and a like amount in grants to the states to enhance drug abuse treatment facilities.

One day after joining his wife,

Nancy, in exhorting Americans to "rise up together in defiance against this cancer of drugs," Reagan proposed legislation and administrative steps that would add nearly $900 million in additional resources to combat drug abuse, bringing the cost of all federal anti-drug programs to $3.2 billion for the fiscal year beginning Oct. 1.

The president said that all the money would be redirected from other federal projects and that no new appropriations would be necessary.

The House has approved a $2 billion package of antidrug measures, including establishment of the death penalty for some drug-related crimes and assignment of a bigger role for the military in combatting the flow of illegal drugs into the country.

Reversing his position as announced by a spokesman last week, Reagan endorsed the provision in the House bill providing for the death penalty "for those who intentionally cause death while committing an offense" under what is known as the "drug kingpin" law.

Spokesman Larry Speakes had said Reagan favored use of the death penalty for some drug-related crimes but would not propose it in order to avoid controversy that could block adoption of his other proposals.

The bill Reagan submitted today also would increase the maximum prison term for large-scale drug trafficking to life for a second offense and broaden the scope of existing legislation to include the sale of cocaine and marijuana.

The bill contains mandatory prison terms for large-scale drug traffickers if a person dies as a result of using drugs supplied by them, and it would toughen the Controlled Substances Act to provide mandatory fines for offenders convicted of drug possession and mandatory prison terms for those convicted of second or subsequent offenses.

JOINT SPEECH — President and Mrs. Reagan sit in their White House living room before a nationally televised speed Sunday night about drug abuse. It was the second time in four years that the Reagans made a joint broadcast speech on the issue.

111 Cuban political prisoners, relatives, fly to freedom

MIAMI (AP) — A plane carrying more than 100 Cubans, including some jailed since Fidel Castro seized power 27 years ago, arrived here today on a flight to freedom that followed two years of negotiations.

The 111 people, among them the nephew of a former president, made up one of the largest single groups of Cubans to arrive in the United States in years. Many seemed on the verge of tears as they went through the Miami International Airport terminal.

"I can say I'm in my country," said Rene Gonzalez Herrera, an elderly man in a wheelchair, after getting off the chartered plane. "I feel very happy after 28 years in prison."

Domingo Suarez Espinosa, whose 28-year imprisonment in a Havana prison ended just hours before the flight left Cuba, said it was hard to express the joy of being in the United States. He recalled sending his wife and two children away after Castro took over the island.

"I preferred never seeing them again rather than seeing them subjected to such a horrible system," he said.

Immigration officials had expected 117 people, 71 former or current prisoners, and the rest relatives, to arrive.

But one unidentified prisoner died today in Havana and his wife elected to stay behind, said George Waldroup, a spokesman for the Immigration and Naturalization Service here.

Another person was kept behind because he was of military age, two people were inadvertently listed twice and one name was an erroneous entry, he said. The plane took off from Havana about an hour late and arrived at Miami at 7:00 a.m., said Waldroup.

"Glory to God, thanks to God," said Nry Tejera, whose 44-year-old brother, Samuel Tejera Milian, was among those listed as being on the flight.

The Cuban government kept Tejera Milian behind bars for 18 years before his release in May, she said. His wife and young son are accompanying him, she said.

The permission for the emigres to leave Cuba came after two years of negotiations among the Cuban government, the White House and the Roman Catholic church.

The Reagan administration had long refused to take more Cuban refugees because Castro has refused to take back criminals who immigrated to Miami during the 1980 Mariel boatlift.

But three weeks ago, President Reagan announced that all Cuban political prisoners jailed for more than 10 years could seek entrance to the United States.

There were 71 former or current prisoners on the release list, and some have been incarcerated for up to 27 years, U.S. officials said.

Among those in the group was Ramon Pedro Grau Alsina, nephew of former Cuban president Ramon Grau San Martin. As the head of a five-man committee, Grau San Martin led Cuba from 1933 to 1934 and served as the elected president from 1944 to 1948.

Most of the freed Cubans will settle in the Miami area, said George Lezcano, a spokesman for the Archdiocese of Miami.

Search to begin for school superintendent

Pampa school trustees plan to begin the process of replacing resigning Superintendent James Trusty when they meet at 5 p.m. Tuesday.

The board plans to discuss arrangements for a board meeting in San Antonio to confer with a superintendent search consultant. Board President Robert Lyle said Tuesday's discussion will be to decide whether the board wants to travel to San Antonio to meet with Texas Association of School boards representatives concerning the hiring of a new superintendent.

Trusty announced last month that he was resigning effective Jan. 1 after 30 years with the district.

Lyle called the discussion planned for Tuesday the first step in the board's superintendent search. He said no appointments have been made with the TASB, pending action Tuesday.

"We're just trying to find out what we need to do to go about finding (a new superintendent)," Lyle explained.

In other action, the board plans to:

- act on first reading of several state and local procedural policy changes.
- receive a budget report from Business Manager Jerry Haralson.
- discuss personnel (employment) in a possible executive session.

Senate begins first impeachment proceeding in 50 years

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate today begins its first impeachment trial in a half-century, with the duty of deciding whether imprisoned federal judge Harry E. Claiborne should be kicked off the bench because of his 1984 conviction for tax evasion.

A seat in the historic Senate Caucus Room was reserved for Claiborne himself, temporarily released from a federal prison in Alabama to attend, as the central figure in a nationally televised drama that will unfold before a special impeachment panel of 12 senators.

The panel's first order of business will be to rule on a Claiborne motion crucial to his defense against impeachment. That is the judge's contention that the Senate should consider his claim that he was framed by overzealous prosecutors who acted illegally.

Nine members of the House

Judiciary Committee who are serving as prosecutors argued that the Senate should limit the evidence to the details of Claiborne's conviction for falsifying his federal income tax returns for 1979 and 1980 by failing to report a total of $106,651.89 in income from legal fees.

That conviction, the House insisted, is "an independent and sufficient basis for his removal from office" and that allegations of misconduct by government prosecutors are irrelevant to the question of whether Claiborne should be impeached.

Claiborne, 69, a Democrat who was nominated by President Carter in 1978, has refused to resign as chief U.S. district judge for Nevada. He continues to draw his $78,700 annual salary while he serves a two-year sentence in a federal prison at Maxwell Air Force Base, Ala.

Under the Constitution, a federal judge, who is appointed for life, can be removed from office only if convicted at a Senate impeachment trial.

The Senate's decision cannot be appealed in any court.

The last federal official to be impeached and removed from office was U.S. District Judge Halsted L. Ritter of Miami, convicted in 1936 of judicial misconduct.

Altogether, the Senate has conducted 13 impeachment trials since 1803, but only four, all involving federal judges, resulted in convictions.

The Senate Impeachment Committee, headed by Sen. Charles McC. Mathias, R-Md., is expected to take all this week receiving evidence and hearing testimony.

It then will report its findings to the full Senate, which is scheduled to begin final floor proceedings the week of Sept. 29.

Firemen at McLean will be honored

McLEAN - Residents will honor the McLean Volunteer Fire Department with a Pot Luck Supper, 6:30 p.m. Tuesday at the parking lot of Country Corner truck stop, south of town on I-40. "The whole community is invited," said Jake Hess, one of the organizers of the event. "We just want to pat the firemen on the back and say 'thank you' for a job well done through many years of service."

"A few of us are barbecuing a beef, others are making beans and potato salad," Hess said, adding that residents are asked to bring a covered dish. Hess said that although the VFD puts on an annual picnic, the community hasn't bestowed an honor like this on them. "The men work for very little pay," he said.

Army hospital hires civilian doctors

KILLEEN, Texas (AP) - More than 2,600 deliveries last year and long waiting lists in the obstetrics and gynecology department of a Fort Hood hospital have forced officials to ease the workload, officials said.

The number of deliveries at Darnall Army Community Hospital was second only to Tripler Army Medical Center in Hawaii for military hospitals last year.

More than 1,000 patients are on waiting lists for gynecology, and more than 3,000 women are on the waiting list for pap smears, said Dr. Paul N. Smith, chief of Darnall's obstetrics-gynecology department.

Smith said the waiting lists are due to inadequate staff.

A hospital official told the Killeen Daily Herald that about 60 percent of Darnall patients are seen in either a women's or children's clinic.

The hospital hired six family practice physicians from Waco for the "Joint Health Benefits Delivery Program" to help with the overload.

Doctors' schedules were arranged to make sure that each day two of the physicians are in the Women's Health Clinic to see patients with uncomplicated pregnancies.

No military medical facility has more obstetricians-gynecologists than Darnall, which is now at its peak with 10, said Smith.

The hospital also has four nurse midwives who deliver babies and see patients throughout their prenatal care. The Waco doctors have been practicing at Darnall for about three weeks and see about 100 patients each day at their peak.

They only treat dependents of active duty military on an outpatient basis.

"As long as the program continues to be as productive as it has been so far, we plan on continuing it forever," Smith said.

WATERFIELD Dick Waterfield Day at Canadian

CANADIANS - Hemphill County Republicans are calling Sept. 20 "Dick Waterfield Day" as they host a political rally for the representative candidate at the Canadian elementary school cafeteria.

Waterfield, a Canadian rancher and school trustee, is seeking the 88th dist House of Representatives seat currently held by Buck Buchanan.

The three hour program will begin at 5:30 p.m. with a Jain & Bail fund raising rally at the school cafeteria. The Blue Grass Express of Amarillo will play at 6 p.m. and at 7:30.

A barbecue dinner, catered by Ivey's Hungry Cowboy of Spearman, will be served at 6:30 p.m. with a charge of $10 per plate.

Masters of Ceremonies Jeryl Norris and Tom Abraham will introduce the candidate at 8 p.m.

TEXAS/REGIONAL

Suspects may be moved out of town

KOUNTZE, Texas (AP) — At least three crosses have been burned since the arrest of three blacks in connection with the alleged rapes of two white teen-aged girls, and officials said that for the suspects' safety they would try to move them today out of this Southeast Texas town.

Tensions were high over the weekend, but eased on Sunday, and Hardin County Sheriff H.R. "Mike" Holzappel said he had ended extra patrols by officers. He also lifted a ban that he had imposed Saturday on sales of liquor after 10 p.m.

However, black residents expressed concern that the Ku Klux Klan or others might cause problems, and the sheriff said he would attempt to move all three suspects today from Kountze, which is about 25 miles northwest of Beaumont.

Holzappel said he would request a hearing to revoke the probation of one of the suspects and bring charges of parole violation against a second. If successful, both would bring a prison sentence, allowing him to move the two Kountze men to Huntsville today, Holzappel said.

The sheriff said he planned to move the third suspect — a juvenile from Jasper with no previous conviction — to a jail in another county.

After the three were arrested in connection with the Sept. 7 rapes, three reports of cross burnings were investigated. Beefed-up patrols of city, county and state law officers were ordered in the town, particularly in predominantly black neighborhoods. "The whole incident pretty much defused after last night," Holzappel said Sunday. He lifted his earlier ban on liquor sales after 10 p.m. and said as long as everything stayed peaceful, he would not reinstate it.

Many blacks, however, remained on guard against violence. About 100 blacks attended a meeting Saturday night with Holzappel and Mayor W.R. Overstreet at Green Pine Baptist Church.

"We need the crosses to quit burning. When you see crosses burning, that means one thing — the Ku Klux Klan — and the Klan has made it known around the world that we are nothing to them. That's enough to arouse us as citizens," said Doris McDaniel, one of the black residents at the meeting.

She said she was concerned about the safety of children and elderly people.

"We wanted to find out what's going on about these cross burnings," said Ms. McDaniel.

Holzappel refused to comment on any cross-burnings and said minutes after the meeting that "it was just to discuss what was going on and to settle rumors. Everybody's going about their normal business, and I'm going to do my job."

Ms. McDaniel said she noticed "a change" in the city following the meeting.

The alleged rape victims told police they were assaulted repeatedly at a residence during the early morning hours of Sept. 7.

Support group's fall membership meet Thursday at St. Matthew's Day School

St. Matthew's Day School Support Group will have its fall membership meeting at 7 p.m. Thursday in the Parish Hall.

The meeting will be held in conjunction with the day school's open house, with all parents, grandparents, parishioners, alumnae and other interested people in the community invited to attend, according to Jan Morris, headmistress.

"Following a short program, everyone will have an opportunity to visit the children's classrooms and meet the day school staff," she said.

Morris said the meeting also will allow the visitors to view the new playground and playground equipment which have been made possible by the cooperative efforts of the board of trustees, the church and the Day School Support group.

Joe Curtis served as chairman of the efforts to provide the playground, with Buck Arrington serving as his assistant for the project.

Sue Fatheree, support group vice president, will outline the purpose and future plans for the group. She noted that the group is governed by by-laws, with a board of directors meeting the first Monday of each month at the Parish Hall.

There are two general membership meetings, one in the fall and one in May, when new directors are elected.

Support group annual membership dues are $5 a family. Fatheree said memberships are welcome from parents, alumnae, parishioners "or anyone in the community who thinks this school is an asset in helping to develop the 'whole child.'"

The school currently has 132 students enrolled: 47 in the two-day 3 year olds; 48 in the three-day 4 year olds; eight in the five-day 4 year olds; and 29 in kindergarten, with 12 of these staying for the extended kindergarten class which meets until 2:30 p.m.

All classes have a ratio of eight students per teacher, Morris said.

Teachers are Lois Gilbert, Brenda Lyles, Janis Williams, Starla Tracy, Anita Harp and Katie McDonald. Aides are Beverly Alexander, Belinda Elms, Zindi Richardson, Nan Osbourne and Pam Fowler.

Carolyn Price is music teacher, and Margaret White is motor development teacher. Donna Smith is in charge of the day care, which provides supervised care for children registered in school and for their siblings and former students at a cost of $1.25 an hour from 7:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. five days a week.

Morris said there are scholarships available. Anyone wishing to make a tax deductible contribution to the scholarship fund as a donation or a memorial may do so by mailing a check to St. Matthew's Day School, 727 W. Browning, Pampa, TX 79065.

More information on the donations, the school or the support group may be obtained by calling the office at 665-0701 from 8:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m.

A message for candidates

Have you ever gone to the polls and after reviewing the candidates for a particular elective office wished you could indicate on your ballot "none of the above?"

I know that many people have failed to vote for a candidate in some national, state or local race rather than vote for someone they couldn't honestly support. Some people have told me that they couldn't with a clear conscience vote for any of the candidates.

I learned recently that this problem has been given a solution — of sorts — in that state best known for gambling. In Nevada voters apparently often would rather have nobody representing them. And some of the candidates apparently don't like it.

Recently state Representative Don Mello, the man who gave Nevada the option for "none of the above" on state ballots, said, "We need to recognize that a lot of the public is so dissatisfied that they don't vote at all."

He continued, "A politician can always come up with excuses why people didn't go to the polls. They can always say it was raining or snowing. We need to have them try to come up with excuses for why none of the above did so well."

It seems that in recent Nevada elections "none of the above" finished first in a five-candidate field in the Democratic primary for state treasurer and second in the Democratic and Republican senatorial primaries.

If that wasn't enough of an indictment for candidates in these races, "no preference" votes also finished second in the five-candidate GOP gubernatorial race, second in the Democratic secretary of state primary and second in the Republican treasurer's race.

According to story by The Associated Press — I saw it in an out-of-state paper since it didn't move on the service we receive — a victim of this choice for voters was Assemblyman Jim Stone who had been given an outside chance of upsetting Patty Cafferata in the Republican gubernatorial contest. Instead he finished third with 18 percent of the vote to Mrs. Cafferata's 46 percent. He was topped by "none of the above" which received 22 percent.

Stone, contending the choice should be removed, said, "if that provision was not available people would be forced to take a closer look at the candidates in the race."

My observation is — maybe the voters took a close look and that is why they didn't vote for either candidate.

In the 1980 presidential primary, "none of the above" scored 34 percent to beat Sen. Edward Kennedy's 19 percent and narrowly lost to President Jimmy Carter, who got 37 percent.

In 1976, "none of the above" handily defeated the lone Republican candidate, W. Charles Earhart, in a congressional primary. In 1978, Earhart lost again to "none of the above" in a primary for secretary of state.

In Nevada — the only state with the provision — when "no preference" finishes first, the second-place finisher gets the nod.

Personally, I wonder how a candidate feels upon taking office after coming in second behind "none of the above."

According to The Associated Press, Mello, who introduced the provision in the mid 1970s as a tonic for Watergate-era voter apathy, said Nevada voters are clearly sending their elected officials a message.

He said a "none of the above" vote "is a slap in the face" to the candidates in a particular race and a clear signal to party officials that substantial numbers of voters are dissatisfied with the quality of candidates."

I wonder how some of the candidates in this year's state-wide races in Texas would stack up against "none of the above" if voters in this state had the same option as their counterparts in Nevada.

It probably never will happen in Texas — considering that the politicians in Austin would have to approve such a provision for the ballot — but it sure is an interesting possibility to contemplate.

Neighborhood radio watch foils burglars

BEAUMONT, Texas (AP) — When the body of Beaumont businessman and photographer Chris Owens was found, police asked a utility company official to be on the lookout for Owens' car.

Basil Jackson, security coordinator for Gulf States Utilities Co., spotted the vehicle later and made a quick call to police that authorities said led to the recovery of the car and arrest of a man in connection with the crime.

Jackson's help is typical of the help that Beaumont officials say they've received from members of the Neighborhood Radio Watch program, which helped authorities investigate 75 crimes and make four arrests in its first year.

Charter members of the group in 1985 included the Beaumont Police Department, Jefferson County, the city of Beaumont, the Jefferson County Sheriff's Department, Liberty Cable TV, Gulf States Utilities and Southwestern Bell.

The number of participating agencies and companies since then has increased to 15. The committee recently invited Signet Cable TV of Vidor and two Orange County agencies to join the program.

The program, at no cost, provides some 350 extra men and women on the streets reporting crimes, accidents, drunk drivers or suspicious events, Jackson said.

"It's probably a pretty good deterrent on crime too," Jackson says. "With all the utility trucks around, a criminal might give it a second thought before he does something illegal."

In another incident while Jackson made his meter-reading rounds, he spotted a man sneaking from house to house and peering through windows.

The worker went to his truck and, within minutes, the neighborhood swarmed with police cars. Officers took the burglary suspect into custody.

Jackson said participants report incidents as they occur, such as a drunk driver, an auto accident or debris creating a traffic hazard. They also help law enforcement officials in investigations of homicides and other serious crimes.

Jackson told the Beaumont Enterprise-Journal that participants normally only report suspicious activities to authorities.

They make the reports as part of their regular work duties.

Professor's thesis on Santa Anna published

LONGVIEW, Texas (AP) — After the Battle of San Jacinto, Mexican Gen. Santa Anna became a prisoner of the Republic of Texas only to become a liability, says a college professor's master's thesis, which was published as a book.

Kenneth Durham, a history professor at LeTourneau College, first wrote "Santa Anna — Prisoner of War In Texas" two decades ago. So when Skipper Stealy of the Wright Press in Pampa said he wanted to publish Durham's master's thesis, Durham was shocked.

"I was real surprised and delighted," said Durham.

He said the casual observer might consider Santa Anna's capture at San Jacinto a benefit for those fighting for Texas' independence, but he turned out to be more of a liability than an asset.

"He could have been killed at San Jacinto and Texas would have been better off," the author said.

Stealy said he is a history buff who has made his interest into a publishing business.

He had been doing some research at East Texas State University in Commerce when he came across a copy of Durham's 1963 thesis on Santa Anna.

Durham said his work is one of the few studies focusing solely on the time the Mexican leader spent imprisoned by the Republic of Texas.

Antonio Lopez de Santa Anna Perez de Labron, Santa Anna's full name, was the source of much debate among Texas independents, said Durham. The treaty agreed upon by Mexico and the Republic of Texas called for the prisoner to be returned to his country.

But Durham said many Texans, including a number that were armed, remembered Goliad and the Alamo and wanted to see Santa Anna shot or hanged. Others thought keeping Santa Anna alive would give Texas an edge in negotiations for the recognition of independence from Mexico, he said.

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Support for law a contradiction

What can you say about a poll suggesting that most Americans violate the 55-mph speed limit regularly, but that most Americans still want the nationwide speed limit left in place?

Eighty-five percent of adults polled in a Media General-Associated Press poll said they had exceeded 55 mph, and 56 percent said they did so at least half the time. Even so, 54 percent of the respondents opposed changing the law; and while eight of 10 who claim they seldom exceed the speed limit want the law retained, the "chronic speeders" were split evenly on the issue.

A great many Americans must be confused. Why? Has the 55-mph propaganda displaced more sophisticated analysis? Has critical thinking been discouraged by a school system in which most Americans were raised, or by the media?

Safety was cited by most of those who support retaining the law. Some evidence suggests that traffic fatalities have declined since the 55-mph limit was imposed, but the subject is loaded with variables that can't be controlled scientifically.

While the simplistic conclusion dominates in most media accounts, more sophisticated analysis, pioneered by Charles Lave of the University of California at Irvine, suggests that speed as such is not as important a factor in traffic fatalities as differences in speed. Drivers who go either much faster or significantly slower than the prevailing speed are most likely to cause accidents.

This suggests that a freeway driver who insists on going 55-mph — especially in one of the "faster" lanes — may be the most dangerous driver of all. So a law that gives such a driver a feeling of civic-minded righteousness is hardly in the interests of safety.

Laws should not be created unless some important public purpose would be served if everybody obeyed them all the time, with every infraction punished. Those who admit to going faster than 55 but still want the law on the books may have in mind not a law but a guideline, to be interpreted by the police according to common sense and traffic conditions. That may be what we have now.

Some may feel that it's important to keep the law on the books to control those other folks, but that they themselves should feel free to act according to their own judgment. It's difficult to see how a person can advocate a law unless he wishes it applied to himself in all instances. If you can see room for exceptions, you really shouldn't be advocating a law.

Such a confusion illustrates a danger of promiscuous legislating. Once a policy becomes law, that fact seems to promote a suspension of critical thinking. Some people will defend it because it's the law and for no other reason, but a law, wise or unwise, becomes difficult to change.

The federally-mandated speed limit is an example, having done no good and a great deal of harm. Its existence undermines respect for law and for the concept of the rule of law, yet about half its violators routinely want to keep it.

That's a puzzle.

The real fear isn't AIDS

Acquired immune deficiency syndrome, better known as AIDS, is one of the most deadly and baffling diseases of modern times. But nothing about it is as extraordinary as the reactions it evokes among people who by any reasonable judgment are not at risk. In many cases, the response is not prudent caution, but irrational panic.

The phenomenon is so bizarre that it probably deserves to be classified as a new mental illness. One company had its phone system sterilized after discovering that an employee had AIDS. Another firm's fears led it to fire a man — not because he had the disease or its antibody (which many people develop without ever getting the disease), but because he told a co-worker that he knew someone with AIDS.

A telephone installer who disclosed his illness was put on disability leave after co-workers, as Time magazine reported, "refused to use the truck he had driven, demanded that the bathroom he used be disinfected and threatened to kill (him) if he returned to work." A teen-ager who has assaulted an AIDS victim called the local AIDS Foundation to ask if he might get the virus from hitting the man.

The phobias go beyond the workplace. Parents have withdrawn their children from public schools rather than expose them to AIDS victims. Neighborhoods have organized to block hospices for those dying of AIDS.

The reactions fly in the face of all medical evidence about the malady. AIDS is known to be transmitted only by sexual contact, sharing of hypodermic needles and transfusions of contaminated blood. There are no recorded cases of anyone getting it from casual contact.

The federal Centers for Disease Control says the "non-sexual person-to-person contact that generally occurs among workers and clients or consumers in the workplace does not pose a risk for transmission." One study of family members who had shared bathtubs, toilets, towels, eating utensils and even toothbrushes with AIDS victims found that none got the disease.

The implications of all this are plain. If you share your hypodermic needle or your body with an AIDS victim, you're in danger; if you share an office or restroom, you're not.

Why do many people, despite the evidence, react so violently to this disease? It isn't simply the fear of dying. We all do things every day that pose a far higher risk of death than being in the same room with an AIDS victim — taking a shower, driving to work, eating fat-laden foods. Nor is it simply the normal fear of a deadly plague, which is generated largely by the random impact of most plagues.

I suspect three factors are at work. One of them is simple homophobia. AIDS is primarily a disease of homosexual men, who evoke disgust and hatred among many Americans. The reactions of some people to AIDS victims aren't much different from the reactions that homosexuality itself once evoked. For closet homophobes, fear of AIDS is a convenient tool.

And AIDS itself tends to strengthen retrograde attitudes by providing "evidence" that God or nature is punishing homosexuality.

Another is the stigma attached to AIDS because it is perceived as a gay disease. A monologue by comedian Eddie Murphy, who is fond of gay-bashing, illustrates the irrational fear gripping many heterosexuals. A sick man goes to the doctor and is told he has AIDS. "AIDS? But I'm not a homosexual." The doctor's patronizing reply: "Of course you're not a homosexual." To be dead is no fun, but to be dead and suspected of homosexuality — well, now that's really intolerable.

A third is more complicated. All of us recognize that certain activities are risky, but we accept the risks because the activities are necessary (driving) or enjoyable (eating cheeseburgers). But for many people, there's no such trade-off involved in working with an AIDS victim. They perceive, inaccurately, a risk, but they see no benefit. Only if they are personally close to the AIDS victim are they likely to accept voluntarily the supposed risk of contact.

The sources of the AIDS hysteria lie not in a rational evaluation of risks, but in deeper impulses that resist medical evidence. But employers and government shouldn't be stampeded by unfounded panic. With a little knowledge and a little sympathy, we all can learn to accommodate the unfortunate victims of AIDS. If we can't save them from a slow and gruesome death, we at least can refrain from adding unnecessarily to their burden.

Theater a medical marvel

After the assassination of President Lincoln in 1865, people protested so vehemently against any further theatrical performances in that theater that the government purchased it.

The theater was remodeled and the second floor became a repository for the books of a pack-rat surgeon of the United States Army, Dr. John Shaw Billings, who took a 29-year-old institution and turned it into the world's greatest medical library.

He wanted the latest and best medical information available in one place.

That library has since become the National Library of Medicine in Bethesda, Md., and it is celebrating its Sesquicentennial this year.

The library has been moved, of course, expanded and computerized.

Today no medical doctor can know it all; much that he learns in medical school is outdated by the time he graduates.

But now any physician anywhere — Kokomo, Waxahatchie, Kalamazoo — can communicate any question concerning any disease to this NLM and within minutes six million citations will be sifted to tell the doctor precisely what he needs to know.

A doctor could spend all his time reading and never catch up. It's all most physicians can do to peruse three periodicals a month. The National Library of Medicine subscribes to 25,000 medical publications in 75 different languages.

Information is broken down by subject and indexed.

If your Dallas doctor is mystified by certain symptoms or if he needs the present best judgment on what to do about a specific snakebite, he turns to his hospital personal computer terminal — to the NLM — and gets an immediate response.

Last year the NLM handled three million online searches for information. As many as 195 users can communicate with the system simultaneously.

That's the best part. The physician pays $20 per hour for computer time, though he usually has a response to each inquiry within minutes.

And the National Library of Medicine budget, $55 million a year, make this world clearing-house available so that even the most remote country doctor can practice the most modern medicine.

And those of us who have to write on medical subjects are more responsible custodians of that responsibility than we could ever have been before the NLM. As a taxpayer, you never got more for less.

How one man made a difference

By Don Graff

This is about Robert Macauley, who knows from experience what it can take to get a major humanitarian operation off the ground — literally.

You have to give it all you've got — and much more.

Macauley is president and founder of the AmeriCare Foundation in New Canaan, Conn. The story begins during the Vietnam War when Macauley began helping street children in Saigon.

That effort was called the "Shoeshine Boy Foundation." By the time South Vietnam collapsed in 1975, the foundation had expanded to 17 shelters housing 2,500 children.

By then, Macauley was also bringing Vietnamese children to this country for adoption. Many were on a transport that crashed on takeoff from Saigon in April 1975.

Told it would be days before a military plane would be available to move the survivors, many of whom were injured, Macauley chartered a commercial airliner for $10,000. He would need another $150,000 before the plane could take off from Saigon — money Macauley's financial adviser told him he did not have.

"I told him to shut up and write the checks," Macauley recalls. Fortunately, his bankers treated it as a loan. Thereafter, even more fortunately, he says, "my financial fortunes got better."

Macauley began to think about institutionalizing his efforts, and in 1979 coined the name "AmeriCare." It remained just a name until September 1981, when his attention was called to the shortage of medical supplies in Poland, then at the climax of the Solidarity crisis.

Macauley canvassed major pharmaceutical manufacturers for contributions and again went out on an airlift limb, chartering a plane for $69,000 with only $900 in cash on hand.

"But the floodgates opened," he relates. "There was enough to pay for the first airlift by March of 1982. The original goal was $10,000 worth of pharmaceuticals and we ended up with $2.6 million. It kept coming and coming."

AmeriCare has continued to specialize in medical assistance, and to give special attention to Poland. It airlifted two loads of medicines and powdered milk after the explosion at the Soviet nuclear reactor this spring dusted Poland with radioactive fallout. (I went along on one of the AmeriCare airlifts.)

But it responds wherever need is apparent. It has been active in Haiti since the overthrow of the Duvalier dictatorship.

Not everything goes by air. Except in genuine emergency situations, goods are shipped by sea. Cargo space, like the medical supplies, is donated.

"Goods in warehouses and money in the bank don't save lives," says Macauley. "So we don't have a lot of goods in stock and cash on hand. We get it out to the people who need it."

High priority is given to maintaining a low overhead. For most such organizations, operational expenses consume 18 to 40 percent of what is taken in. AmeriCare operates at 0.4 percent.

Admittedly, this is accomplished with some assistance. As is becoming increasingly common, much of the staff is on loan from a company and remains on the company payroll while working for the charity.

In the case of AmeriCare, the payroll is that of Virginia Fibre Corp. Macauley is its founder and president. The arrangement means that AmeriCare's paid staff numbers less than a dozen.

It also has helped that Macauley has close friends with names like George Bush, Peter Grace and William Simon.

But connections can't do it all. Determination is what made it work in the beginning, and still does.

County jails, prisons wrestle with overcrowding

DALLAS (AP) — County officials say their jails are becoming more and more crowded with parole and probation violators, many of whom were released early from the state prison system to ease overcrowding there.

Of the 243 county jails in Texas, about 20 have chronic overcrowding, including several rural or suburban county jails, officials say.

The worst crowding, according to Robert O. Viterna, director of the Texas Commission on Jail Standards, is in three of Texas' largest county jails — Tarrant (Fort Worth), Bexar (San Antonio) and Harris (Houston) counties. Each is building or planning to expand existing facilities.

The jails' situations are aggravated, in part, by the growing number of probationers and parolees, Viterna said.

"Parole is to reduce the population at TDC, so they are placing more people out on parole and therefore there are more parole violations. And these people wind up back in the county jail," said Viterna.

Texas Board of Pardons and Paroles member Ruben Torres recently said "to me, every parole is a risk. You cannot eliminate that factor."

Texas has about 38,000 convicts in 27 state prison units and 20,000 inmates in 243 county jails. In the state system, their numbers are kept under control by a revolving door balancing releases and admissions, closely watched by a federal judge.

On the county level, voters usually approve bond issues to expand or build new jails.

Nearly all Texas prison inmates are sent to the Huntsville-based Corrections Department by Texas' 254 counties, only 11 of which do not have jails. The few inmates who don't originate in county jails are parole violators or transferees from other states.

Crowding in Texas prisons is under review by U.S. District Judge William Wayne Justice, who three years ago set up population limits for the state prison system.

The prison system is trying to increase capacity with the addition of 300 temporary beds for minimum-security inmates at Fort Wolters Army Post in Mineral Wells. But inmates opposed the plan in a court document filed Friday and Justice temporarily blocked the plan and set a court hearing for Monday.

The state is asking for "emergency" authority to immediately transfer prisoners to the fort.

By May 1987, about 2,000 beds will be added in provisional "camps" for minimum security inmates. And in the fall, a new, 2,250-bed prison will be completed near Palestine, further boosting the state's inmate capacity, creating what Texas Department of Corrections Director O.L. McCotter has called "breathing room."

But if the corrections system hits the court-ordered population ceiling of almost 39,000 prisoners, the Texas system would be required to release more inmates than usual.

"We just can't continue releasing people convicted of burglary, rape and robbery (on probation or parole) without some terrible side effects," said Dallas County jail administrator Maj. Bob Knowles. "It's a vicious cycle."

Even though Texas prisons are filled to capacity, there is little danger of having to shut their doors to new admissions from Texas counties at this time, McCotter told the Dallas Morning News.

"We are not stifling the counties at all," said McCotter.

He said he believes there is no chance he would have to turn away convicted criminals sent to TDC by the state's 379 district judges. That's what happened in 1981-82 at the orders of then-Gov. Bill Clements during a fierce court battle with inmates who filed a class-action suit assailing prison conditions.

Aside from the 1981-82 shutdown of admissions, the prison system has found room for all inmates sent to Huntsville by the counties — from the state's largest jail, the 4,450-bed system in Harris County, to the smallest, a two-bed cell in Loving County.

"The county jails have limited space and they're interested in preserving that space for transients — the people who are in and out," Viterna said. What counties "try to do is get the folks who can be sent to TDC down there just as soon as possible. The larger jails are sending 100 to 120 a week to TDC," said Viterna.

In Denton County, a new jail is nearly complete and voters in Rockwall earlier this month authorized a new facility. Meanwhile, though, both counties are required to pay neighboring counties to house their prisoner overflow.

Dallas's Lew Sterrett Justice Center, with the state's second-largest inmate capacity, is close to its 3,000-inmate capacity, but Viterna said the center is the best, most efficient jail in the state.

When the Legislature takes up penal code reforms next year, one suggested change will be an amendment to sentencing laws to allow judges more leeway in choosing alternatives to prison. One possibility is the creation of a "fourth-degree" felony category that would not require prison time.

"We think the Legislature might even try to make it to where TDC doesn't have the time or space or money to hold third-degree felons," such as those convicted of theft or hot-check writing, said Presidio County Sheriff Richard Dee Thompson, immediate past president of the Texas Sheriff's Association.

Sheriffs are wrongly criticized when sentenced convicts remain in their communities as probationers and commit new crimes, he said.

Judge to consider proposal to move inmates to Mineral Wells

TYLER, Texas (AP) — To state officials, a National Guard armory in North Texas seemed ideal relief for Texas' overcrowded prisons, but inmates say the temporary housing plan violates prison reforms initiated five years ago.

U.S. District Judge William Wayne Justice of Tyler blocked the transfers Friday through a temporary order and called a hearing for 11:30 a.m. today to consider the request of the Texas Department of Corrections to move the prisoners.

Attorneys for inmates say the transfer of about 300 minimum-security prisoners to Fort Wolters National Guard Armory at Mineral Wells would violate reforms ordered in a lawsuit against the Texas prison system.

In an opinion issued Friday, Justice agreed, saying the transfer would deny prisoners "adequate medical treatment, academic and vocational education, adequate space for visiting, outdoor recreation, and arts and crafts recreation."

The proposal also has drawn criticism from Mineral Wells residents. Mineral Wells Mayor Arthur Zappe H. Arthur Zappe said many residents are unhappy about plans to put convicted criminals in barracks only five miles from the community.

Mineral Wells is 50 miles west of Fort Worth.

The Fort Wolters facility, which during the Vietnam War was the chief training site for U.S. Army helicopter crews, would be used until 10 trusty camps being built at existing prison sites are completed, TDC officials said. The camps are designed to hold up to 2,000 inmates.

The state also proposed to move 95 inmates to the TDC's hospital in Galveston.

The armory has been used before to relieve overcrowding. In 1981-82, then Gov. Bill Clements ordered almost 4,000 inmates to the armory complex for 18 months.

The Prison Management Act in Texas, which mandates the early release of prisoners to prevent overcrowding, is the result of a lawsuit filed 13 years ago by inmate David Ruiz. In settling the lawsuit, Justice ruled that prison conditions at the time violated the U.S. Constitution's protection against cruel and unusual punishment.

Group making sure all death row inmates have attorneys

HOUSTON (AP) — An effort is under way to recruit lawyers who will volunteer their services to make sure that death row inmates continue to have legal representation to the very end.

The constitutional right to a lawyer stops after a prisoner has exhausted an automatic appeal to the state appellate court. But a group of lawyers say death row inmates need to pursue several other legal avenues after that, and their chances may be curbed if they cannot afford an attorney.

A recent poll showed that at least one of every four condemned killers — 0 of 236 on death row — lack legal representation.

The movement is being spearheaded by appeals lawyer

Carolyn Garcia of Houston and Bill White, who directs legal services for convicts in the Texas Department of Corrections.

Will Gray, another Houston appeals attorney who represents some death row inmates, is also involved in the effort.

The non-profit corporation also may ask the Texas Legislature to provide money in some way to pay for the attorneys, she said.

White, whose office handles general prisoner matters, said he feels obligated to honor requests for help from death row. But he said his present staff can't deal with a big workload restricted to those cases.

His office in Huntsville now is representing two condemned indigents, he said.

With eight lethal injections, Texas leads the nation in executions this year.

Florida, second to Texas in the number of executions, provides a public defender agency with 10 fulltime attorneys for condemned indigents, said Larry Spalding, who directs the office. He suggested Texas should adopt the same sort of system.

"You sure need it," Spalding said. "Your state's a disaster."

He said no group in Texas knows the status of death row appeals.

Ms. Garcia said her group is trying to establish which inmates have attorneys and where their cases are in court.

Officials to show how quake aid used

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — A Mexico envoy said officials in his country will begin a penny by penny audit of earthquake relief aid from San Antonio to document where the contributions went.

Mexico's Comptroller Geral Francisco Rojas said Saturday he will present the Mexican consulate with a computerized list of how every package of earthquake relief aid was received, where it was stored, and who signed for it in receipt.

Rojas, head of a mammoth "moral renovation" campaign, was in San Antonio as the personal envoy of President Miguel De La Madrid to the Mexican Independence Day festivities this weekend.

The Israel-trained budget planner and productivity expert was chosen by De La Madrid in 1983 to rid the government of corruption.

"It is the least we can do to say 'thank you' to the generous people of San Antonio," he said. "It's so that San Antonians know that we did have crystal-clear accounting and no-nonsense management."

"It is also a way of fostering our friendship and brotherhood. We are forever neighbors," said Rojas.

Officials said South Texas and San Antonio residents donated more than $200,000 in cash plus two special trainloads of goods, tools and machinery.

Rojas, after the Fiestas Patrias parade on Saturday, presented a summary of an outside audit conducted by the Mexican College of Public Accountants into relief aid.

The summary listed the San Antonio aid among the 296 cargo flights and 99 overland shipments received from 44 nations after the quakes.

The first big quake hit Sept. 19, 1985, followed by an aftershock the following day.

Rojas said a sophisticated system of accounting devised by his cabinet-level office was in place the moment the first two flights arrived from abroad the day of the shock, the first from Colombia, the second from the Ford Motor Co.

Expressing concern about government corruption, he said the administration and the Mexican Congress undertook a complete reform of legislation dealing with public officials' responsibility.

He said to crack open a bureaucratic system that for decades had enjoyed secrecy and lack of accountability, officials created auditing agencies from within and outside the government.

"It would be Utopian to think that in only three years we could organize a legislative package to generate an entity of this nature (the inspector or comptroller general) and then make corruption disappear like magic," Rojas said.

"We have to go step by step," he said. "Corruption has always existed and probably will always exist to some degree, in my country and everywhere else."

TRAFFIC CIRCLE — A vintage Cadillac sits out front of a recently renovated cafe located on a traffic circle in Waco. The circle has come under controversy for being dangerous to drive and out-of-date. (AP Laserphoto)

Waco's debate over concrete roadway comes full circle

WACO, Texas (AP) — In the 1930s and 1940s, traffic circles were flourished in many Texas cities and were considered engineering marvels that kept traffic moving without disruption, highway officials said.

But in Waco, a concrete roadway that surrounds a 1940s renovated cafe, Mexican restaurant and hamburger stand is considered by some as obsolete and confusing.

But, fans of "the circle," as the thoroughfare near Interstate 35 is called, said it is just as much a part of Waco as the city's century-old suspension bridge or the Brazos River paddleboat.

Texas Highway Department engineers have proposed widening a road and replacing the circle with an intersection and traffic lights. City and county officials back the plan.

But the plan hasn't been met with universal acceptance. Many residents are grumbling.

"The people around Waco have sort of grown to love the old thing," said Roger Conger, a Waco author and former mayor. Critics claim the circle is obsolete and confusing, or "god-damned dangerous," according to Carol Johnson.

"I hate it. I hate that circle," she said. "Most people don't yield to it. They don't pay attention."

When you're in it, everyone gets in one big jam."

But employees in the Circle Cafe sport T-shirts emblazoned with the slogan, "I survived the circle."

Opponents to the highway department proposal, including some businesses at the circle, have launched a "Save Our Circle" campaign.

Twice since the late 1960s, highway engineers have sought to get rid of the circle. But each time, circle loyalists stirred enough public sentiment to kill the proposals, without disruption.

But traffic volume has grown, and now only about eight traffic circles remain in the state, officials said.

"They're trying to get rid of them," said Bo McCarver, state highway department spokesman. "The department is slowly phasing them out as they can. They're an interesting historical anomaly, but they are traffic safety problems. The traffic safety people, they get ulcers from them."

The circle was built in the 1930s just south of downtown for traffic converging from five country roads. Today, three highways — Loop 296, Loop 491 and U.S. Highway 77 — meet at the circle.

"It's always fun to watch someone go around it the wrong way,"

Bomb explodes at Paris police headquarters, fourth in a week

PARIS (AP) — A bomb exploded at police headquarters in Paris today, police said. It was the fourth bombing in the French capital in a week, and came after the government announced a crackdown on terrorism.

Several people were injured in the explosion, some seriously, police reported. The blast occurred in an area of the building where driver's licenses are issued. Police headquarters is located on the Ile de la Cite, not far from Notre Dame Cathedral.

On Sunday, after a bomb killed a policeman, the government announced new measures intended to ward off terrorist attacks. Included were stricter visa requirements and the use of soldiers for airport security.

Another police officer and a tavern worker were in comas as a result of the explosion Sunday in the underground parking lot of a tavern on Champs-Elysees Avenue.

There was no immediate claim of responsibility for today's bombing. In Beirut, Lebanon, a group calling itself the Partisans of Right and Freedom today claimed responsibility for planting Sunday's bomb, and said it was behind 10 explosions in Paris since December.

'The Old Scotchman' dead at 65

DALLAS (AP) — Gordon B. McLendon, who as "The Old Scotchman" captivated radio audiences with his studio recreations of live sports events, is dead at the age of 65 after a lengthy illness.

Bart McLendon said his father died at 9:15 p.m. Sunday at his ranch north of Dallas. The elder McLendon had suffered from cancer of the esophagus.

In recent years, McLendon, a multimillionaire, had spent much of his time on his ranch 25 miles north of Dallas. On Dec. 5, 1985, he was shot in the face with a .38-caliber revolver, which his son said happened when McLendon was cleaning the gun.

At McLendon's request, there will be no funeral, his son said. A memorial service is planned for Saturday at the Cielo Ranch, Lake Dallas, he said.

The family requested that in lieu of flowers, donations be made to a favorite charity or to the Girls' Club of Dallas.

Between 1947 and 1952, McLendon created and owned with his father, B.R. McLendon, the nationwide Liberty Broadcasting System, which claimed 458 radio affiliates.

Sitting in a studio, McLendon used ticker tape messages from major league baseball parks and a battery of sound effects to do simulated live, play-by-play broadcasts.

He also teamed with such celebrities as Dizzy Dean on a nationwide baseball "Game of the Day" and football "Game of the Week" carried by the network.

A native of Paris, Texas, McLendon graduated from Yale University with a major in Oriental languages.

He served in U.S. Naval Intelligence as a Japanese language officer during World War II.

Following his discharge from the Navy, he attended Harvard Law School. In 1943, he married Gay Noe, daughter of former Louisiana Gov. James A. Noe.

After an initial start in the radio industry as owner-manager of KNET, Palestine, Texas, McLendon obtained a construction permit for KLFJ, Dallas, in 1947.

In the 1950s, McLendon began using a list of the most-popular records — a technique first employed by Midwest radio entrepreneur Todd Storz — along with listener contests and colorful disc jockeys to create the "Top 40" format, which became a staple of the radio industry for nearly three decades.

His family sold the last of numerous broadcast properties in 1978 and invested the proceeds. During the late 1970s and early 1980s, McLendon became a recognized adviser on investments in precious metals and in 1981 wrote a book on the subject, "Get Really Rich in the Coming Super Metals Boom."

Philippine leader says trip to Boston will be emotional

EDITOR'S NOTE — The writer, now based in Boston, was AP bureau chief in Manila from 1973-76 and returned there last spring and interviewed Mrs. Aquino.

BOSTON (AP) — When Corazon Aquino returns to Boston for the first time since becoming Philippine president, it may be the happiest and most difficult stop on her U.S. tour, which starts today.

It was the city, she has said, that she and her husband, Benigno S. Aquino Jr., the assassinated foe of former President Ferdinand E. Marcos, "had come to love and consider our second home."

"It's really been emotionally very difficult for me to go back to Boston," Mrs. Aquino, 53, said in an interview earlier this year in her Malacanang Palace office in Manila. "It reminds me of the time I was happy."

Across from her desk, where she could see it every time she lifted her eyes, was a portrait of her husband.

From 1980 to 1983, the couple and their five children lived in a large house in suburban Newton, near the gates of Boston College.

It was the house Aquino left on Aug. 13, 1983, for the journey that brought him to Manila Airport, where he was shot dead while being led from a plane by Philippine soldiers. The killing set in motion the events that led to the ouster of Marcos last February and to Mrs. Aquino assuming the presidency.

She and her children left for the Philippines two days after the killing, but she returned to her Newton home twice before becoming president.

"I did not realize it would be so hard," she said, recalling one visit to her husband's favorite men's store. "I knew each time he would go there, it would take him so long. Then it dawned on me, 'Oh, it's so different now. It's so sad.'"

"I told my daughter, 'I think we'd better go.' It's things like that. As far as our house is concerned, I really can't stay there."

No public appearance is scheduled this trip at her former residence, although Boston College will honor Mrs. Aquino on Sunday at a Mass across the street at St. Ignatius Roman Catholic Church, which the Aquino family attended.

Mrs. Aquino was scheduled to arrive this afternoon in the United States. Her first stop was to be a brief one in San Francisco before continuing to Washington, D.C.

When she arrives in Boston on Saturday from New York City, she will receive an honorary degree from Boston University, attend a luncheon at Harvard University, where her husband spent two years as a fellow, and speak in the evening at Faneuil Hall as part of a municipal welcome.

Her Boston visit also includes a dinner and reception expected to be attended by more than 1,000 friends from the area's Philippine community.

The dinner will be held at the Westin Hotel, operated by a group that also runs the Philippine Plaza Hotel in Manila, owned by Imelda Marcos, wife of the former president.

It was at another dinner, at the Downtown Harvard Club in May 1984, that she heard for the first time the suggestion that she run for president of her country.

She was seated next to Benjamin H. Brown, retired director of the fellows program under which her husband worked at Harvard's Center for International Affairs.

He asked if she had thought about the presidency. She told him it was "something unthinkable."

Argentina could become a tougher farm export competitor, USDA says

WASHINGTON (AP) — Argentina, the American farmer's biggest export competitor, has the potential for increasing its foreign sales of grain and soybeans 40 percent by 1990, according to a new Agriculture Department report.

Since the mid-1970s, Argentina's exports of those key agricultural products have risen 50 percent, the report said. Sales could surge further if the Argentine government would eliminate taxes on agricultural exports and spend more money on the country's marketing system.

But one of the stumbling blocks could also be the low world prices of grain, caused by huge crops, rising inventories and, in part, by reduced U.S. farm supports for wheat, corn and soybeans.

"Considering both potential yield gains and expansion of area, Argentine agricultural production could grow from its current 40 million metric tons annually to 50 million tons by 1990, given favorable crop prices," the report said.

However, it added, Argentina's grain export system is already operating at full capacity. Thus, any gains in production and export will depend on future investment to enlarge and upgrade the facilities.

"Capital flight and foreign debt servicing have depleted Argentina's investment capital, so most of the required investment in the marketing infrastructure will need to come from overseas lenders, who may be reluctant to make additional loans," the report said.

Moreover, the outlook now is for a continuation of low prices on international grain markets for the next few years, reflecting the lower U.S. price supports offered American farmers.

The report, published in the September issue of Agricultural Outlook magazine, was written by Jorge Hazera of the department's Economic Research Service.

Argentina traditionally has subsidized industrial development by taxing the agricultural sector, the report said. But despite subsidies and protective tariffs, most state-run industries continue to operate at a loss, while agriculture continues expanding.

"Investments in farm production and the grain exporting infrastructure could spur exports, and increased exports could help solve the country's economic predicament," the report said.

Argentina's $50 billion foreign debt is equal to 70 percent of its gross domestic product, the sum value of the country's goods and services. Interest on the debt is equal to 50 percent of Argentina's export earnings.

"The government is making agricultural reforms," the report said. "Farm input prices (for fertilizer, energy, seed) are being reduced and prices paid for farm products increased. On the other hand, the outlook for lower world prices is already dampening ambitious government projections for production and export."

High export taxes are levied on agricultural products, and since prices for traded commodities are set in world markets, the tax burden falls on Argentine farmers.

Earlier this year the World Bank approved a $350 million loan for Argentina's agricultural sector, specifically to help the government shift from export taxes to a land-based tax system.

"This may spur crop production by raising Argentine crop prices and forcing idle lands and pastures into cultivation, and by increasing the use of farm inputs and capital equipment," the report said.

Almost all of Argentina's grain production is within 200 miles of export terminals, yet marketing costs are about the same as in the United States, where grain is moved as much as 1,500 to 1,700 miles to ports. It is estimated that Argentine farmers receive about 50 percent of the price of their grain delivered to Europe (Rotterdam), while U.S. farmers receive about 75 percent.

FURNITURE TO AID YOU IN "WASTED" AREAS

Many rooms have alcoves or other areas that are not used or decorated as well as they might be, and oddly enough, these wasted areas are often regarded as a nuisance—but, actually, they can be turned into an advantage, and they can provide the opportunity for wonderful use.

Here are a few ideas. You could, for example, put a table in an alcove and let it act as a server or a decorative place to hold books and other things, or you could put an easy chair and good lamp there and make it a place to read, or you could use the area to group a few chairs and make it a separate conversation place; or you could put a desk there for obvious good use; or you could add a wall unit and make it a place to show off flowers, hobbies, etc.

If you want to call attention to this area after you've given it any of the new uses, you can make it an added attraction with contrasting colors for the furniture and the wall. This will also help in creating an illusion of space.

You can thus make an alcove, or any other "wasted" area for a room, newly important. It could enhance your overall decorating scheme and provide you additional usage.

Wildlife agency wants to protect the endangered Attwater prairie chickens

VICTORIA, Texas (AP) — Federal officials have proposed the creation of a 15,000-acre refuge near Victoria and expansion of another refuge as ways to protect the endangered Attwater prairie chickens.

Only about 874 of the birds remain in Texas, down 40 percent from last year's count, according to the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service.

Agency officials blame the loss on heavy rains washing away nests during the hatching season. They contend in a federal report that two refuges are needed to ensure that storms, epidemics or other disasters "do not eliminate the Attwater prairie chicken."

The existing Attwater Prairie Chicken National Wildlife Refuge, 10 miles northeast of Eagle Lake, was established in 1972 with 3,500 acres and later expanded to 8,000 acres.

An additional 7,000 acres of leased or managed land is needed to buffer the refuge from continuing habitat destruction caused by an expanding Houston, according to a team of biological experts.

The new refuge, about 10 miles north of Victoria, would be built around 5,700 acres of grassland where 40 to 50 prairie chickens now live.

CAN YOU "OVERUSE" EYES?

Can you harm your eyes by using them too much? The answer is "No". Eyes don't wear out. You do not damage the eyes by excessive use even though there is discomfort from strain or fatigue.

There are elderly persons who have little else to do but read or watch television, but who deny themselves such pleasures in order to "save" their eyes-for fear they will "wear them out" and lose their sight. They are frightened by the symptoms of eye strain which are normal with excessive use and which cause discomfort but no physical damage.

used at all ages. With rare exceptions, you need have no qualms about using your eyes as much as you wish. As long as your eyes are open they are working. They won't deteriorate from use, no matter how much use they get. Barring accident or disease, the eyes will last a lifetime. If you do get eyestrain or fatigue, it is probably not from visual overactivity but rather that you do not have the proper corrective lenses.

Nothing is same after great quake of 1985

By CARL MANNING
Associated Press Writer

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Since those few terrifying minutes that lasted an eternity, when nature unleashed a killer earthquake that rocked and ripped this capital, nothing here has been, nor will it ever, be the same.

Those who were here can never forget where they were or what they were doing at 7:19 a.m., Sept. 19, 1985 — when the quake measuring 8.1 on the Richter scale ripped beneath the city.

From some, it was a rude awakening from sleep. For others, it meant fleeing in terror from crumbling homes and offices. For thousands, it was the day of death and destruction.

The earthquake with capricious. A building collapsed while the one next to it escaped unscathed and pockets of destruction dotted a city that resembled a war zone. How many died may never really be known.

The government now says the death toll was 6,000, but unofficial estimates are that at least 9,500 people were killed. It is not unusual to hear estimates of 20,000 or 30,000 dead.

For the first time in recent memory, a Mexican head of state publicly admitted that a situation was beyond the capacity of the government. Putting aside the national pride of self-reliance, President Miguel de la Madrid accepted all offers of international aid, which came in waves upon waves.

The story of figures is simple to tell. The government says 150,000 people were left homeless, 30,000 were injured and 3,300 buildings were damaged, another 500 destroyed and total damage was $5 billion. But the story of the human misery is anything but simple.

Despite the living hell of bodies poking between the cracks of fallen and twisted buildings, of families broken and destroyed, the quake — "el terremoto" — gave rise to one of the finest hours for Mexico.

It unleashed a charity that only can be born from a shared experience of shock, suffering, and grief. People gave when they had nothing to give, took nothing in return and when offered thanks, simply responded, "It's nothing, we're all family at this moment."

It also ripped away the facade of social success and unmasked to the world some of those things Mexicans prefer to ignore and forget, such as clothing factories with sweatshop work conditions, allegations of faulty design of buildings by what one newspaper columnist called "homicidal architects," and a general distrust of the government.

Moreover, it altered forever uncountable lives in the world's largest metropolitan area of 18 million people. Many lost everything they owned and were left to sleep in the streets with the clothes on their backs or wound up at one of the 144 refugee shelters set up in the city.

Many more moved in with family or friends, or simply left town.

Events made heroes of many, like Boy Scouts who rushed into collapsed buildings, crawling through the dark catacombs in search of survivors. During the first 24 hours, more than 4,000 people were rescued and at times in the following days, rescue work was going on at 3,600 sites.

But above all, nobody can forget that it could happen again, at any time; that in a matter of seconds all they hold important can be gone. And, they must live with the reality of never feeling secure in their homes, knowing the next time it could become their tomb.

Witness the night of April 30, when a major quake rocked the city, but caused very little damage. Those in Colonia Roma, among the hardest hit neighborhoods in September, fled their homes screaming in their nightclothes and stood in the streets for hours, working up enough courage to go back inside.

A year later, some things have changed.

No longer does the stench of rotting corpses fill the air nor do rescue crews race through the streets with red flags flapping. Nor do people look up as they walk along sidewalks to make sure some piece of a building is not about to fall on them.

There have been physical changes. What once was the Hotel Regis, which lay crumpled, broken and in flames after the quake with its marquee on the sidewalk, is now an open space that slowly is being turned into a park that will memorialize the disaster. A parking lot occupies that space where the Continental Hotel, once one of the city's landmarks, stood.

QUAKE DAMAGE — Damage from last San Antonio Abad, where sweatshops colony's devastating earthquake still is visible. Lapsed and many seamstresses were killed. In parts of Mexico City. Shown is a street in (AP Laserphoto)

Poor planning became evident with the vulnerability of the telephone system that collapsed as did the building housing all long-distance national and international communications lines. Service was not restored for days.

But some lessons were learned. The phone system has since been rebuilt and housed in separate buildings throughout the city to lessen chances of another wipeout.

And in common practice in Mexico, talk and promises in many cases have turned into forgotten rhetoric. For instance, de la Madrid used the quake as a chance to push his plan to decentralize the government, moving agencies from the crowded metropolis.

To date, however, only a few minor agencies have moved and people continue flocking to the city by thousands each day from the provinces in hopes of finding their fortune. More likely than not, they join the ranks of the poor.

A year later, many who lost their homes still are waiting for the promised compensation and assistance from a government known more for its slowness than its efficiency. The promises continue, as does the waiting.

And, there have been social changes. For instance, the discovery of the bodies of Colombian prisoners in a city jail all bearing signs of torture by police led to legislation outlawing such practices.

Despite government plans and promises to clean up and rebuild, it has been a slow process. Some buildings have been demolished in seconds with demolitions. Many more, however, are being razed by work crews resorting to back-breaking labor of pounding broken buildings into pieces with sledge hammers and pick-axes.

People no longer stop and stare and talk among themselves about what was there, and who once lived or worked there.

Mexico's economy still struggling year after great earthquake hits capital city

By SALLY JACOBSEN
Associated Press Writer

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Mexico is still struggling to recover from the economic devastation of last September's great earthquake.

Economic activity, stagnating even before the earthquake hit at 7:19 a.m., Sept. 19, was set back even more: landmark tourist hotels were destroyed or heavily damaged, small businesses and shops wiped out, thousands left homeless and in many cases jobless.

Tourism, a major income-earner, fell off sharply in the months after the earthquake, which measured 8.1 on the Richter scale of intensity, putting it in the category of a great earthquake, capable of causing tremendous damage.

A year later, well-known hotels like the Continental and Regis have been razed. High-rise office buildings, their windows broken and twisted metal hanging from ceilings, remain empty.

Shops that have reopened report fewer customers.

"Things are not yet back to normal," said Helario Escamilla Gomez, who works in a parking lot in Colonia Roma, one of the neighborhoods hardest hit.

The parking lot is bigger now because a small apartment building behind it collapsed, making more room for cars.

Just a year ago, Juventino Benito Hernandez and his wife stood in the parking lot sobbing for their three young children buried in the rubble of the building.

The destruction has since been cleared. There are no signs of the former apartment dwellers either there or next door where another apartment building collapsed, killing residents. On that site, painters are putting the finishing touches on a one-story building for a car-leasing agency.

The government says 6,000 people died in the earthquake, but unofficial estimates put the number at 9,500 or more. About 30,000 people were officially listed as injured.

According to the government, 150,000 people were left homeless, 500 buildings destroyed and 3,300 damaged. During the first 24 hours, more than 4,000 people were rescued and in the following days, rescue work was going on at 3,600 sites.

Many in the Mexico City metropolitan area of 18 million people lost everything they owned, left to sleep in the streets only with the clothes on their backs or to seek shelter in one of 144 refugee centers.

The total damage was put at $5 billion.

Reconstruction in downtown Mexico City has been slow. Little, if anything, has been done to scores of the area's damaged buildings. Broken windows are common sights; chunks of concrete still hang from steel support rods.

Metal doors close off some shops, and padlocks hang from others.

Abel Rios, sweeping the sidewalk in front of the Boutique Activ, said there are fewer offices today than a year ago. Rents have gone up, he said.

"Many people left and went to other places," said Alexia Guzman Gutierrez, who also works at the shop.

A few blocks away, Pipol's beauty shop has reopened, but employee Petra Salinas said business is down. Former customers who worked across the street in a building that was heavily damaged have gone elsewhere.

A recent report from the office of President Miguel de la Madrid estimated that the total loss to the economy from the quake was 2.7 percent of the nation's gross domestic product, the value of all goods and services produced by the economy. The GDP last year was 45.6 trillion pesos, or about $101 billion at the exchange rate in effect last December.

Jonathan Heath, senior economist at the private Mexican forecasting project of CIEMEX-Wharton in Philadelphia, said preliminary government estimates indicate the earthquake may have shaved one-half to a full percentage point off the economy's inflation-adjusted growth rate of 2.7 percent last year.

"It's a big impact (on the economy)," he said.

Even before the quake, the economy and the government's finances were strained by a foreign debt of nearly $100 billion.

Rogelio Ramirez de la O, a private economist in Mexico City, said the tragedy "depressed the expectation of improvement on the part of people."

Wage demands, he said, have been more moderate as a result.

"Everybody realized that the situation was so bad and the earthquake came like another blow."

Shortly afterward, international banks agreed to postpone $950 million in principal payments on the foreign debt. With the recent collapse in oil prices, an additional six-month postponement was granted.

Tourism, the important money-earner for the economy, was hit with capital losses estimated at $161 million.

Five hotels were destroyed and four hotels were badly damaged in Mexico City. Seventy-one others suffered less serious damage.

Frightened travelers canceled reservations, and business fell off.

Aureliano Torres Izabal, manager of the 800-room Maria Isabel Sheraton Hotel near the Pink Zone tourist district, said tourism did not bounce back until this summer.

Now, he said, "people have forgotten completely about it. You hardly see tourists asking about (the damaged areas)." Not long after the quake, some cab drivers offered tours of the devastated areas.

Seventy of the quake-damaged hotels have been operating normally since February, the government said. In the Pacific Ocean resort of Ixtapa, all but one damaged hotel have reopened.

The government report details other dramatic losses from the quake.

"Small industry suffered the loss of 1,326 establishments," it said. Eight-hundred of those firms, it added, declared a complete loss of their infrastructure, equipment, stock and production.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Give and take is required today in an important partnership arrangement. It can't be all your way, nor can it be all the other person's way. Know where to look for romance and you'll find it. The Astro-Graph Matchmaker set instantly reveals which signs are romantically perfect for you. Mail $2 to Matchmaker, c/o this newspaper, PO Box 91428, Cleveland, OH 44101-3428.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) This can be a productive day for you, provided you schedule your time wisely. If your approach is disorderly, you will accomplish little.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) You might not be as lucky as you think you are in chancy financial ventures today. Don't take foolish risks that wise advisors warn against.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) You might have to deal with someone today who lacks your ethics and principles. Be watchful at all times so that he or she doesn't take advantage of you.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Your patience and temper may be held in check only by delicate restraints today. Be careful you don't overreact to a provocation you would normally ignore.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) It's best not to spread yourself too thin today where your resources are concerned. The money you waste now you may want for something special at a later date.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Discretion is the better part of valor, so know when to back off today if you run into unreasonable opposition. Wait until the odds even out.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Be sensible at this point in time so that you do not assume more responsibilities than you can comfortably handle. Don't get boxed in.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Someone who you have assisted materially may come to you for aid again today. It's a person who has forgotten you've existed until now, when he needs you again.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) In career situations today, don't try to bowl your opponents over, because it will only serve to stiffen their resistance. Instead, be tactful and diplomatic.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) If a joint venture goes awry today, don't blame all the mistakes on your associates. Re-examine your own actions to see if you also were at fault.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) It looks as if you might spend more time and energy today sorting out the problems of others than you will on your own affairs. Know when to say "No."

Crocheter is fixture in Indiana courthouse

By JOYCE A. VENEZIA
Associated Press Writer

SULLIVAN, Ind. (AP)—In Sullivan County's courthouse, the commissioners have their meeting room, the treasurer has a desk — and Alma Ridge has a dresser full of yarn.
Six days a week as she has done for dozens of years, Mrs. Ridge settles into a worn leather library chair in one corner of the ladies' lounge, pulls out her needles and colorful yarns and starts her work.

From 8 a.m. to 2 p.m., the 83-year-old woman trims dish towels, dish rags and face towels with crocheted borders, rarely looking up from her work.

"I see the cars go by, that's about all," she says, peering over a windowsill adorned with silk flowers and a blooming geranium.

But when a woman passes through the lounge, Mrs. Ridge perks up, adjusting the heart locket on her dress and fingering her red silk corsage. Always curious, the women stop and within moments, Mrs. Ridge has driven a hard bargain for 50 cents or a dollar.

"I sell them as fast as I make them," she says. "I'm busy all the time."

Secretaries in the courthouse bring Mrs. Ridge her breakfast and lunch from a newsstand across the street.

Most of her meager profits go toward small gifts for her friends, courthouse workers say.

No one knows for sure how many years Mrs. Ridge has crocheted in her courthouse corner — not even Mrs. Ridge. Courthouse workers can vouch for Mrs. Ridge's long tenure, however.

"I've been here since 1955 and she's been here at least since then," said county treasurer Barbara Anderson. "She just feels like this is her job."

Mrs. Ridge's husband obligingly drives his wife to "her job" every day.

Mrs. Ridge has become something of a local legend. For dozens of years, she walked around the town square, selling her dainty dish towels and hand-trimmed potholders.

But when her legs started feeling the effects of old age, Mrs. Ridge retired to her corner of the courthouse and sold her wares from there. Folks in the courthouse accept her as a colleague.

Readers warned to beware catalogue sales scheme

By Bruce Williams

DEAR BRUCE — I answered an ad for a part-time job that seems pretty good. The company prints catalogs with lots of attractive gifts in them. I mail them to friends and to names out of the phone book, and people send me the money for orders. I take 50 percent of the money and send the rest to the company, which sends out the merchandise. If I can send enough catalogs out, I think I could make a pretty good buck.

I told this to my dad, and he said that it is a sucker deal. He and I had a real battle over this, but I told him that I would write to you and see what your opinion was. I really need the bread, so how about a vote of confidence! — L.T., TOPEKA, KS.

DEAR L.T. — The so-called "drop-ship catalog" idea has been around since the beginning of time. It wasn't

Smart Money

a good deal then, and it's not a good deal now.

You have failed to take into account that you will have to pay for the catalogs and postage, and that you will be mailing to people who don't know you or the company. Frequently, the same merchandise can be purchased at stores more conveniently and for less.

Given that, how many people do you think are going to send orders to you? You might ask, then, how the company is making money. Simple: their major profit is in selling people like you the catalogs. If orders develop, that's just extra cream in their coffee. (The "drop-ship" refers to the fact that they only have to send the goods out — you're the one who deals with the customers.) All you'll do is spend your hard-earned dollars, plus a good deal of effort, with no return. Sorry kid, I'm with your pop!

DEAR BRUCE — I am a teacher working with native Americans. I like what I am doing, but my pay is a lot less than it would be in a regular public school. My wife has been able to find only part-time substitute teaching.

Consequently, we are having great difficulty meeting our bills. Most of them are for private loans we used for our education. Our attorney says bankruptcy will not hurt, and that that's the way to go. Aside from the legal question, there is a moral question that I am having a problem with. It seems to me that if the lenders get burned, that's just a hazard of doing business. On the other hand, I have a hard time telling my conscience that this is the proper thing to do. Also, I know that you have said many times that bankruptcy is hurtful. Can you sum things up? — NO NAME

DEAR FRIEND — Starting at the back end of your situation, any attorney who told you that bankruptcy is not harmful was smoking the wrong kind of cigarettes that day. Bankruptcy is harmful. The residual effects stay with you well after the relief from your obligations has subsided.

It seems to me that there is another issue here. You are fully prepared to stick it to the people who made your job possible. Without funds for your education, you'd be doing something else, rather than the work you love.

You might consider leaving your current position temporarily and moving to another geographical area where: a) you could receive higher wages at your full-time job b) you could get a part-time job on the side c) your wife could work full time and d) your wife could work part time as well. In two or three years, the two of you working diligently could pull yourselves out and meet your obligations the way that an honorable man and woman should.

Then you could return to the job that you love with a clear conscience and hold your head high. You will be able to purchase a home, hold credit cards and do other things that frequently are denied to someone who has gone through personal bankruptcy.

I recognize that it is a difficult decision, but sometimes we have to make the hard choices. This is a tough one for you, but clearly there is only one way to go.

A discussion followed with each member giving her view on "What Makes Us Happy."

Next meeting is to be at the "Bunk House," 401 N. Purviance, on Sept. 23.

Vivisection not the only research choice

DEAR ABBY: I have always been a big fan of yours, but we have come to the parting of the ways on the subject of vivisection.

If operations on a dozen or so live animals might reveal the key to curing thousands of human beings who are afflicted with a fatal disease, would you save the animals and let the people die?

Closer to home, suppose it is a question of your very own adored son, condemned to die of a disease if a cure cannot be found. Medical authorities know that a certain enzyme may effect that cure and the only probable source, outside of living human donors, is in the spleens of living tortoise-shell cats. You have a tortoise-shell cat whom you love as your own flesh. What is your choice?

MRS. P.C.,
SANTA BARBARA

DEAR MRS. C.: I take it you read my column urging my readers to write to their elected representatives and ask them to support the Humane Product Testing Bill (H.R. 1877).

In response to your question: I would, of course, value the life of a human (relative or not) over that of an animal, but that's not the issue. Bill H.R. 1877 does not eliminate the use of animals for product testing. It would promote the use of non-animal alternatives to the cruel lethal-dose 50 percent test used by companies to test household products and cosmetics. That test requires that animals be force-fed products such as

Dear Abby

bleach until the lethal dose that will kill 50 percent of the group is reached! Prominent toxicologists agree that the results of this test hold no comparison to the effect of a substance on a human being. Yet companies continue to use it.

The animal rights movement is growing, and one of its prime concerns is the use of animals for cruel and inhumane testing. I share this concern for the needless suffering of millions of animals each year.

If this Bill H.R. 1877 is passed, it would pave the way for revolutionary changes in the testing methods.

DEAR ABBY: I'm sure you never had a problem like this. You have my permission to put this in the paper, but don't use my name. I am 80 years old. I had a brother (four years younger), and we loved and respected each other. He passed away last week after a long illness. His funeral happened to fall on the same day as the wedding of one of my favorite grandsons. I was torn between going to my brother's funeral and my grandson's wedding. The funeral was in town, but I had to travel to another state for my grandson's wedding, so I couldn't go to both.

Well, I chose to go to the wedding, and now my name is you-know-what with some of my relatives. They said that out of respect to my brother I should have gone to his funeral.

Please tell me if you think I did wrong by going to my grandson's wedding instead of to my brother's funeral.

ANONYMOUS

DEAR ANONYMOUS: The time to show respect for people is while they're living. Congratulations for having the courage to do what you wanted to do. I think you made the right choice.

DEAR ABBY: Some friends and I were having a discussion about what (if anything) should be said upon seeing a friend (friendly, but not close) for the first time after she obviously has had a face-lift.

"US" IN BEVERLY HILLS

DEAR US: First I'll tell you what not to say: "What have you done to yourself? I hardly recognized you! I thought you were your daughter." Or, "Who did it?"

It is, however, permissible to say, "My, you're looking marvelous." Period.

DEAR ABBY: If I hear one more person say, "Well, the bottom line is ..." I am going to hit the ceiling!

RICHARD S.
VENTURA, CALIF.

DEAR ABBY: I object to the perpetual use of the word "pretty" to qualify adjectives, e.g. "pretty good, pretty bad, pretty late, pretty early," and so on to eternity.

EDITH V. WATERS,
FRESNO, CALIF.

Tri-State Fair features competitive events, too

AMARILLO — When thinking of a fair, the first things that come to mind are the carnival midway, cotton-candy, candied apples and special stage shows and attractions.

All of these ingredients are a part of the fair, but probably the most important aspect of a fair are the events where people match their individual skills, goods and animals against each other for prizes, ribbons and other special awards.

The 1986 Amarillo Tri-State Fair, Sept. 15-20, offers more than $52,000 in prize money, plus scores of ribbons, banners and trophies to winners in competitive events. In addition to the traditional livestock judging, there will be competition between hundreds of people in art, aquarium, photography, ceramics, china painting, 4-H baked goods, vegetables, canned goods, breads, cakes, cookies and pies. Also knitting, sewing, embroidery, quilts, rugs and novelty items. All events are judged prior to the fair opening and are displayed throughout the week for fairgoers' viewing.

Loaded Dallas offense unloads on Detroit

Dorsett this week's hero; Walker, White lend hands

By HARRY ATKINS
AP Sports Writer

PONTIAC, Mich. (AP)—While NFL fans have gone ga-ga over the intramural duel between Herschel Walker and Tony Dorsett, the Dallas Cowboys have quietly become a pretty good football team.

The Cowboys handed the Detroit Lions a 31-7 thrashing Sunday with solid performances from a lot of people — including the celebrated running backs.

Dorsett, playing on a badly sprained left ankle, ran the ball 23 times for 117 yards and a touchdown.

"Dorsett is a tough, tough running back. Some of our guys go down with a sprained ankle and they come back in two or three weeks. Dorsett sprains his ankle and he's back up in seven days. He has never been given credit for how tough he is."

—Lions' Darryl Rogers

Walker ran only six times but still got 51 yards and a TD on the ground. He also caught five passes for 35 yards.

But there were plenty of other Cowboy heroes in this one-sided contest.

Quarterback Danny White completed 20 of 31 passes for 184 yards and a TD with two interceptions. He also ran 1 yard for a score.

On defense, Dallas linebacker Jessie Penn recovered both of James Jones' fumbles while tackle Jim Jeffcoat made the hit that caused Garry James' fumble and had two quarterback sacks.

"It surprised me a little bit to be able to do some of the things as well as we did," Dorsett said. "But, you know, we're not a bad football team. We're going to get better as the weeks go by."

The Lions contributed greatly to their own downfall by losing three of four fumbles and taking eight penalties for 70 yards. As a result, Dallas controlled the ball for 37:13, leaving Detroit 22:47 to get something going.

"The team we were playing wasn't anywhere near what I saw them play last week" on film, Dallas Coach Tom Landry said. "You don't expect a game like this. I'm sure the Lions thought they were ready."

The Cowboys improved to 2-0 while the Lions slipped to 1-1.

"I expect more from my team," Detroit Coach Darryl Rogers said. "We had terrible field position. As it kept going, it got worse."

"Those poor (Detroit defensive) guys weren't supposed to be on the field that long."

The Cowboys took advantage of two key Detroit mistakes for 17 points in the second quarter.

Dorsett swept around right end for a 5-yard touchdown one minute into the second quarter after the Cowboys had recovered a Jones fumble.

"Dorsett is a tough, tough running back," Rogers said. "Some of our guys go down with a sprained ankle and they come back in two or three weeks. Dorsett sprains his ankle and he's back up in seven days."

Despite a hurt ankle, Tony Dorsett gained 117 yards.

"He has never been given credit for how tough he is."

Dallas made it 14-0 with 1:01 remaining in the second quarter when White hooked up with Timmy Newsome on a 15-yard TD pass play.

"We pretty much executed the game plan," White said. "We never threw the ball deep. We were patient. We were able to maintain ball-control, which was important."

Moments later, Detroit punter Mike Black fumbled at the Lions' 9 yard line and Rafael Septien kicked a 27-yard field goal with one second remaining in the half.

"When you play that way, you can't do much about it," Landry said. "That's the way we played here last year."

Dorsett appeared to have scored on a 34-yard run with 12:41 remaining in the game, but officials ruled he was stopped inside the 1 after checking a television replay. White dove in for the score on the next play.

Walker, who was used sparingly in the contest, scored on a 7-yard run with 8:07 remaining for a 31-0 lead.

"Herschel is good," Landry said. "Herschel helps us because when Tony's not there, they still gotta worry."

Jones scored on a 1-yard dive for Detroit with 3:00 left in the game. The Lions started with Eric Hipple at quarterback and switched to Joe Ferguson at the start of the second half, but neither could solve the tough Dallas defense.

Hipple hit 10 of 16 for 91 yards while Ferguson was 4 of 12 for 23.

"I felt we were able to get up and down the field," Hipple said. "It was just us making mistakes. We did it to ourselves."

Rogers said Hipple would remain the No. 1 quarterback.

Despite their advantage in possession time, the Cowboy's longest scoring drive was only seven plays. That was late in the second quarter when White hit second-down passes of 11, 9 and 11 yards to Hill, Newsome and Doug Cosbie, respectively, before finding Newsome open and alone in the right flat for the score that made it 14-0.

Walker had a 34-yard run in the five-play drive that ended with his touchdown run.

Houston's Larry Moriarty dives for yardage.

Oil-most Browns' late rally beats Houston, 23-20

By MICHAEL A. LUTZ
AP Sports Writer

HOUSTON (AP)—The Cleveland Browns finally discovered an answer to the question of what to do about the Houston Oilers blitz.

It took them until the fourth quarter, but there still was time for Bernie Kosar to complete a 55-yard touchdown bomb to Reggie Langhorne with 2:10 left to rally the Browns to a 23-20 victory Sunday.

"We tried to get the big play all day and they stopped us," Kosar said. "It wasn't until the fourth quarter that we got the job done. We showed a lot of character out there by coming back in the fourth quarter."

The Oilers remained in the game despite five turnovers and took a 13-9 lead on Larry Moriarty's 8-yard run and field goals of 35 and 36 yards by Tony Zendejas.

But after Langhorne's touchdown catch, Houston's Willie Drewery fumbled the kickoff and D.D. Hoggard recovered at the 20 to set up Earnest Byner's 1-yard dive with 1:30 to play.

"They took a lot of chances on defense with all their blitzing," Byner said. "They held us until the end. On that touchdown pass, I was to pick up one of the blitzing linebackers and give Bernie time to throw. If he's got time, he'll get you."

Houston's Warren Moon, who suffered three interceptions, hit Butch Woolfolk with a 20-yard touchdown pass with six seconds to play for the final score.

But it was too little too late for the Oilers, who now have lost five straight games to their AFC Central Division rival and seven of their last eight. The Browns and Oilers have 1-1 records.

"We couldn't overcome our errors," Oiler guard Mike Munchak said. "It's tough to be able to come to life after almost three quarters of being inactive and then lose at the end."

Langhorne's touchdown catch was a play that wasn't originally in the Browns' game plan.

"It was a play we've been using all year, but we didn't have it in the script for this game," Kosar said of the winning touchdown.

"We put it in at halftime. It's designed to beat the blitz. Reggie has the option of hooking or going deep. He made a nice move to the outside then he had the whole field to work with. I just laid it up and he ran to it. I knew he'd catch it if anyone could."

Cleveland cornerback Hanford Dixon, who recovered a fumble and intercepted a pass, said the Oilers' offense was predictable.

"We knew on first and 10 that they'd run a lot," Dixon said. "If we stopped them on second down, they would pass. That's the type of coach they have. He's a blue collar, grind it out guy."

Fans were booing the Oilers' play-calling in the fourth quarter.

"That's our philosophy, and it's won six games," quarterback Warren Moon said. "You just have to pass more if you don't complete the pass on first down. I think we'll look back next week and see some good things on film."

"They have a great offense, but we had time to overcome it," Munchak said.

"When you're down by three it's okay, but when you're down by 10, it's too late."

Montana faces back surgery

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP)— Joe Montana and the San Francisco 49ers face an uncertain future today.

Receiver Dwight Clark says at first, he didn't believe Montana when the 49ers' quarterback told him how bad he injured his back in last week's season opener against Tampa Bay.

"At first I thought he was kidding, but he said, 'This is serious,'" said Clark, favorite target of the man who's led the 49ers to two Super Bowl victories and one of the most impressive records in recent NFL history.

The 49ers players were told Sunday, right after their 16-13 loss to the Los Angeles Rams at Anaheim Stadium, that Montana would require disc surgery on his lower back and may be out for the rest of the season.

There was also some question whether Montana, who joined the 49ers in 1979 and has been selected to the last five Pro Bowls, would ever be able to play football again.

Montana, 30, wrenched his back while running left but throwing to his right in the 49ers' 31-7 victory against the Buccaneers in which he completed 32 of 46 passes for 356 yards.

Surgery was scheduled for today, but the names of the surgeon and San Francisco-area hospital involved were kept confidential Sunday.

"Although the results (of the surgery) are fairly predictable, nothing is assured," said Dr. Michael Dillingham, the team's orthopedic specialist. "He probably should be able to play in the future, but there's no guarantee."

Dr. Robert Gamburd, a 49er back specialist, said Montana would not be able to play without the operation.

"He might have been able to lie around for three months and get comfortable, but he wouldn't have been able to play," he said.

Gamburd said the surgery will involve "taking a bone off" to get to the ruptured disc, which will be removed. He said the disc is pressing on the nerve, and there is some urgency in operating now so Montana doesn't suffer lasting nerve damage.

See Jeffrey run: Davis saw ex-TCU mate's biggest day

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP)— Former Texas Christian All-American Kenneth Davis was watching Saturday when Tony Jeffery rewrote his Horned Frog rushing records in the Superdome at New Orleans.

"I made a promise to myself I'd break Kenneth Davis' records," said Jeffery, who rushed for an SWC record 343 yards. "He told me 'Go for it.'"

Jeffery and Davis were teammates at TCU before Davis was kicked off the team last year for accepting payments from alumni. Jeffery had a poor sophomore season, gaining only 695 yards. He got almost half that much in one game on Saturday.

"I guess I just missed Davis," Jeffery said.

On Saturday, Davis' presence seemed to spark Jeffery.

Davis had three games at TCU in which he rushed for over 200 yards but never reached the 300s.

Jeffery, a junior from Gladewater, Texas, scored on touchdown runs of 11, 38, 32, 81, and 67 yards in a 48-31 victory over Tulane.

"I didn't know how many yards I had," said Jeffery who was just 13 short of the national record. "I was really surprised when I found out. It was just a dream day."

Davis said he was happy to see Jeffery's big day.

"TJ has the ability and potential to have any kind of game he wants," Davis said. "I think people may have already forgotten about me. But if they haven't, T.J. really buried me today."

The five touchdowns by Jeffery was a school record.

Davis was in New Orleans as a member of the Green Bay Packers who play the Saints on Sunday.

"I'm glad I was here when it happened," Davis said.

Rams nip Niners; Buddy nearly nags Bears

By BARRY WILNER

Jeff Kemp almost pulled off the understudy's dream. Now, he has to think about being the leading man for a while.

Kemp, for five years a quarterback with the Los Angeles Rams, was traded to San Francisco in the offseason. His role, until Sunday, was as a backup to Joe Montana.

But Montana has a back injury which requires disc surgery and, suddenly, Kemp is No. 1 in San Francisco, something he rarely managed with the Rams. And he performed his chores well in a losing effort Sunday as Los Angeles edged the 49ers 16-13 on Mike Lansford's 18-yard field goal with two seconds remaining in the game.

Montana, who will be out the rest of the season, wrenched his lower back last Sunday while running left but throwing to his right in the 49ers' 31-7 season-opening win over the Tampa Bay Buccaneers.

Kemp was 19-for-24 for 252 yards, including a 66-yard TD pass to Jerry Rice.

In a pair of overtime games Sunday, it was Chicago 13, Philadelphia 10 and Cincinnati 36, Buffalo 33. Also, Washington beat the Los Angeles Raiders 10-6; Atlanta ripped St. Louis 33-13; Cleveland downed Houston 23-20; Dallas routed Detroit 31-7; New Orleans beat Green Bay 24-10; the New York Giants took San Diego 20-7; Minnesota defeated Tampa Bay 23-10; Miami belted Indianapolis 30-10 and Seattle beat Kansas City 23-17.

On Thursday, it was New England 20, the New York Jets 6. Tonight's game has Denver at Pittsburgh.

Rams 16, 49ers 13
Kemp impressed the man who traded him.

"I thought Jeff did a good job," Rams Coach John Robinson said. "He's like an old friend to us; all of us with the Rams respect him."

The man who replaced Kemp, veteran Steve Bartkowski, struggled most of the game, then came alive in the final moments. He took the Rams on a 92-yard drive by going 4-for-4 for 60 yards in the air. Bartkowski was only 9-for-20 for 54 yards prior to the winning drive.

Bartkowski hit Bobby Duckworth on a 35-yard pass to the 4 with 1:11 left. On that pass, the officials initially ruled that Duckworth, who rolled into the end zone, had scored, then by use of TV replay reversed the decision.

Bears 13, Eagles 10, OT
The return to Chicago of Buddy Ryan featured, appropriately, a tight defensive game. Ryan, who designed the Bears' 46 defense which helped them to an NFL championship last year, left to become the Eagles' head coach last January.

His former players went out of their way to greet and chat with Ryan, a far different greeting than he got from Bears Coach Mike Ditka. Ditka and Ryan ignored each other.

Ditka admitted he couldn't concentrate and coached a bad game. Ryan, following an impromptu meeting outside the locker room with Bears linebacker Mike Singletary, called off his first news conference to compose himself.

Kevin Butler, who missed four of five field goal tries in regulation time, kicked a 23-yarder 5:56 into the extra period after Charles Crawford fumbled the kickoff to begin the overtime.

Walter Payton ran 34 times for 177 yards and went over 15,000 yards in his career and scored his 100th career TD.

Bengals 36, Bills 33, OT
Jim Breech's 20-yard field goal early in overtime ended the wild game in which both teams staged comebacks. Buffalo has lost 18 straight road games.

The Bills, behind Jim Kelly, scored 24 points in the second half for a 33-23 lead. Kelly connected on a bomb with Chris Burkett covering 84 yards for a touchdown.

But Boomer Esiason led a 74-yard run in less than two minutes and ran into the end zone from the 2 with 22 seconds to go to force overtime.

Kelly threw a pass right to linebacker Carl Zander on the first play of overtime, giving Cincinnati the ball on Buffalo's 17-yard line. Two plays later, Breech won it.

Redskins 10, Raiders 6
Two high-powered attacks were ineffective against tough defenses in a game decided by one big play in the fourth quarter. A 59-yard pass from quarterback Jay Schroeder to Clint Didier brought the Redskins to the Raiders' 9. Two plays later, George Rogers scored from the 3 with 7:27 left.

Didier slipped behind Raiders safety Stacey Toran and caught the ball in stride along the left sideline. It was the longest pass completion of Schroeder's career and Didier's biggest gain ever.

Washington, 2-0, had five sacks and Los Angeles, which is 0-2, had four.

Falcons 33, Cardinals 13
Gerald Riggs and William Andrews shared the spotlight with David Archer Sunday for 2-0 Atlanta. Riggs had 111 yards on 29 carries, while Andrews, back after missing more than two seasons with a knee injury, scored his first touchdown of the year. Archer connected with Charlie Brown on a 17-yard score and clinched the victory with a 22-yarder to Anthony Allen with 5:59 left in the game.

The Cardinals, who fell to 0-2, were blanked in the second half.

Saints 24, Packers 10
New Orleans stole five passes by Randy Wright and two by Vince Ferragamo to stymie the Packers. Dave Waymer had two of the seven interceptions.

Wide receiver Eric Martin accounted for 156 yards and a touchdown on his first two catches, going 72 yards for a TD 92 seconds into the game. His second reception from Bobby Hebert was an 84-yard pass play on which he beat Ken Stills on a 16-yard crossing pattern, and added 68 yards with some open field running before being hauled down at the 7. Four plays later, Morten Andersen booted a 20-yard field goal.

Giants 20, Chargers 7
San Diego went from scoring 50 points last week to only a touchdown this time out as the Giants defense was overwhelming, forcing seven turnovers. The Chargers lost the ball on each of their last six possessions.

Joe Morris scored on a 1-yard run and Phil Simms tossed a 12-yard TD pass to Lionel Manuel for the Giants. Kenny Hill and Terry Kinard each had two interceptions.

The Chargers lost cornerback Danny Walters with a ruptured Achilles tendon.

Vikings 23, Bucs 10
Turnovers also killed the Bucs, who are 0-2 this season and have lost 40 of their last 50 games. Linebacker Chris Doelman returned an interception of a Steve DeBerg pass 59 yards for a touchdown, Tommy Kramer passed 10 yards to Mike Mularkey for another TD and a James Wilder fumble set up Chuck Nelson's 31-yard field goal 70 seconds after Mularkey's score.

Dolphins 30, Colts 10
Lorenzo Hampton scored on runs of five and 21 yards, Dan Marino passed for 254 yards and a TD and rookie James Pruitt returned one punt for a 71-yard touchdown and went 35 yards with another to set up a field goal for Miami. The Dolphins, who had allowed 224 yards rushing to San Diego in a 50-28 opening-day loss, held Indianapolis to 75 yards on the ground.

Seahawks 23, Chiefs 17
Safety Ken Easley took charge for Seattle, 2-0. He intercepted a Todd Blackledge pass on the Kansas City 29 and ran it to the 5 to set up Curt Warner's 1-yard TD run in the third quarter. Norm Johnson kicked field goals of 53, 35 and 34 and Dave Krieg connected on a 6-yard touchdown toss to Daryl Turner.

Chicago's Jim McMahon gives ex-coach Buddy Ryan a little ribbing.

Upsets ripple Top 20 ranks

By The Associated Press

The second-ranked Miami Hurricanes, headed for a Sept. 27 college football showdown with No. 1 Oklahoma, rang up some big numbers against Texas Tech. So did Texas Christian's Tony Jeffrey.

The first full Saturday of the season also featured losses for four of the nation's Top Twenty teams — No. 7 Texas A&M, No. 8 Tennessee, No. 10 Ohio State and No. 20 Michigan State — and a ray of hope for Notre Dame fans.

College Roundup

Miami quarterback Vinny Testaverde made a believer out of Texas Tech Coach David McWilliams, whose Red Raiders were blown away 61-11 Saturday night at the Orange Bowl.

Texas Tech was nation's No. 2 defensive team against the pass last year, but this is another year. Testaverde completed his first six passes for 138 yards and two touchdowns en route to a 330-yard performance that included four touchdowns.

"His arm is tremendous. He throws extremely well off balance and under pressure. Plus, he can scramble," McWilliams said.

The victory boosted Miami's record to 3-0. Oklahoma, 1-0, was idle Saturday and the Hurricanes won't play again until the Sooners come to the Orange Bowl in two weeks.

Sauers ends PGA winless jinx

SUTTON, Mass. (AP) — Gene Sauers was forced into a playoff, but he finally conquered his weekend jinx for his first victory on the PGA Tour.

Winless on the tour for three years since leaving Georgia Southern, Sauers ended the drought by making a 15-foot birdie putt on the third extra hole Sunday to defeat Texan Blaine McCallister in a playoff for the championship of the $450,000 Bank of Boston Classic.

With a check for $81,000, pushing his PGA career earnings to $255,000, Sauers wasn't sure how he would celebrate his victory at Pleasant Valley Country Club.

Sauers, who had complained that erratic play in the third and fourth rounds of tournaments has cost him victories, ended the hex with a 7-under par 64 for a one-stroke lead on Saturday.

After coming within one stroke of the course record, he appeared headed for a regulation victory with three birdies and 14 pars in the final round.

On the 72nd hole, though, going into the last round on Sunday.

So she just kept on going, firing a 67 to win by four strokes. Dickinson finished with a 274 total, 14-under-par for 72 holes on the 6,222-yard Meridian Valley Country Club course. She beat Hollis Stacy, whose 69 gave her a 278 return.

Jan Stephenson, who started the final round tied for the lead with Dickinson; birdied the final hole for a 73 to take third place at 280.

The 36-year-old Dickinson gained her third tour victory and second this year, on the 59th birthday of her husband, PGA Senior tour player Gardner Dickinson.

Her $30,000 first-place check boosted her LPGA tour earnings to $182,597.

Robert Banks said, "The point is that the fight is back at Notre Dame."

Holtz is picking up the pieces at Notre Dame after Gerry Faust, whose 30-26-1 record made him the losingest coach in Notre Dame history.

Alabama 31, So. Miss 17
At Birmingham, Ala., Alabama's Mike Shula and Greg Richardson combined on touchdown passes of 6 and 31 yards as the Crimson Tide improved to 3-0.

Van Tiffin of Alabama kicked four extra points, giving him 105 in a row and snapping the Southeastern Conference record of 101 set in 1980 by Rex Robinson of Georgia.

Mississippi St. 27, Tennessee 23
At Knoxville, Tenn., Ron Smith's 62-yard run in the final quarter gave Mississippi State its victory over the defending SEC champion and made new Bulldog Coach Rocky Felker 2-0.

BYU 31, New Mexico 30
At Provo, Utah, Steve Lindsley led two late scoring drives to rally BYU from a 30-17 deficit in the Western Athletic Conference game.

Baylor 38, Louisiana Tech 7
At Waco, Texas, Matt Clark, a starting split end who quarterbacks Baylor's short-yardage offense, scored twice and passed for another touchdown in the non-conference matchup.

It was the first time Clark had run or passed for touchdowns in his college career.

LSU 35, Texas A&M 17
Louisiana State intercepted five passes and freshman quarterback Tommy Hodson threw two touchdown passes at Baton Rouge, La. The Tigers attracted 79,713 people, the second-largest home crowd in history.

Washington 40, Ohio St. 7
At Seattle, quarterback Chris Chandler passed for 204 yards and two touchdowns and Washington rushed for another 204 to deal Ohio State its worst loss in 19 years. The Buckeyes are 0-2 for their worst start since 1894. It was the Huskies' opener.

Arkansas 21, Mississippi 0
At Little Rock, quarterback Greg Thomas hit his first six passes and tossed a touchdown pass as Arkansas scored all its points in the first half.

Georgia 31, Duke 7
James Jackson paced four second-half touchdown drives in Georgia's season opener at Athens, Ga. He hit 16 of 22 passes for 193 yards, including an 8-yard scoring toss to Troy Sadowksy, as Duke fell to 1-1.

Arizona St. 20, Michigan St. 17
Darren Willis blocked Chris Caudell's field goal try with 12 seconds left to preserve Arizona State's victory.

The Sun Devils bounced back from a 17-14 halftime deficit as Kent Bostrom kicked two second-half field goals, including a 34-yarder with 9:15 left.

Ambucs' charity golf tourney set

The First Annual Pampa Ambucs Charity Golf Tournament has been scheduled for 8:30 a.m. Saturday, Sept. 27 at the Pampa Country Club.

The tournament will be an 18-hole best ball scramble with two-person teams competing in men's and women's divisions. There is a 40-team limit with the first 40 paid entries to be accepted into the tournament. Entry fee is $100 per team, and deadline for entries is 6 p.m. Wednesday, Sept. 24.

Proceeds from the event will be used to aid the mentally retarded and handicapped citizens of Pampa, with most of it going to the Hughey Home. Entries are tax deductible.

First place finishers will receive $200, with $100 going to second and $75 to third. Gift certificates will be given to the top three teams of each flight, also.

Additional prizes will be given for closest to the hole and longest drive.

All entries will be provided with golf carts and free beverages, in addition to a free meal at the country club.

For more information contact Loyd Waters at 665-6466 after 6:30 p.m.

After 20 years bridge proves critics wrong

ASTORIA, Ore. (AP) — Critics dubbed it "the bridge to nowhere," a $24 million, 4.1-mile boondoggle that would drain the pocketbooks of Oregon and Washington taxpayers for decades.

Twenty years later, however, more than a million vehicles annually traverse the Astoria Bridge over the Columbia River to reach somewhere, and the toll span is well on its way to paying for itself.

The bridge on U.S. 101 is regarded today as an important economic asset to this recession-plagued town at the mouth of the Columbia, and to the smaller towns to the north that dot the Long Beach peninsula in southwest Washington.

"It has proven to be much more successful than they expected," says Jean Hallaux, who retired recently as a city planner for Astoria.

"It's hard to criticize now."

The bridge, which filled the last gap in the scenic coastal highway between Mexico and Canada, replaced two ferries that slowly carried traffic between Astoria and Point Ellice, Wash.

"The ferries were colorful, delightful to ride," recalls Ted Bugas, assistant manager for the Port of Astoria. "I miss 'em. But they absolutely choked the flow of traffic on 101. There used to be a two-to-three-hour wait for that colorful ferry ride."

The bottleneck led many tourists to bypass Astoria for a quicker route into Washington.

"We were in a cul-de-sac," Bugas says.

The span was called the bridge to nowhere because it didn't connect Astoria to any like-size town on the north side of the river. The nearest town as big as Astoria, population 9,800, is Aberdeen, Wash., about 60 miles north.

The moniker didn't sit well with most Astorians or residents of the Long Beach peninsula, many of whom saw their quiet coastal towns as unrealized tourist destinations.

Today, tourism has surpassed timber, fishing and shipping as the leading industry in Astoria during the summer, thanks in large part to the bridge, Bugas maintains. Harry Steinbock, a retired Astoria pharmacist who served as mayor for 16 years, agrees.

"We get far more traffic. They had ferries going all the time, but the largest ferries only held 44 cars," Steinbock says.

Hallaux, who was manager of the Astoria Chamber of Commerce when the bridge was opened, contends the bridge benefited shipping more than it did Astoria's tourism industry. He cites as proof the trucks bringing logs from southwest Washington forests for shipment out of the Port of Astoria.

"There's a lot of things that can go across the bridge that couldn't go across on the ferries," he says.

Although the bridge has proven to be more useful than its critics predicted, it also has proven to be less than the economic panacea its boosters had envisioned.

After the 37-year struggle to get the bridge built, Astoria's city fathers predicted on Aug. 27, 1966, the day of its dedication, that the span would usher in an industrial boom.

The optimism spread as far as Portland, 95 miles east, where The Oregonian newspaper gushed that Astoria was "turning into the cosmopolitan Cinderella City of the West Coast," and claimed the bridge would "help create the beginnings of a Portland-Vancouver metro complex at the mouth of the Columbia."

While the bridge certainly helped the local economy, nobody foresaw the devastation the national economy would wreak on Oregon's timber, fishing and shipping industries in the 1970s. Astoria's industrial boom never materialized.

"I don't see that it has brought any actual industry," Bugas says. "Business, yes, but not industry."

"We didn't get the industrial boom," says Bugas, who was president of the chamber of commerce and an active supporter of the project. "We wish the town would've grown more. But it isn't the fault of the bridge."

The bridge has been "a tremendous econo-

ASHURA — Shiite Moslem young men beat themselves in a rhythmical self-flagellation as they bleed over their white shrouds in the South Lebanese market town of Nabatieh Sunday, calling out to the Shiite Imam, Al-Hussein, whose death 13 centuries ago is mourned in Ashura. (AP Laserphoto)

Peres seeks Reagan support for international peace conference

WASHINGTON (AP) — Prime Minister Shimon Peres, opening a two-day visit today, is seeking U.S. support for the international conference the Israeli leader and Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak have agreed is the best next step in the search for a Middle East peace.

But Peres, who will switch jobs with hard-line Foreign Minister Yitzhak Shamir next month, lacks support of the Israeli coalition Cabinet.

"What do we need this trouble for?" Shamir said Sunday after Peres reported to the Cabinet on last week's summit meeting with Mubarak that produced the idea of working toward an international peace conference.

The Reagan administration, in principle, wants to provide Jordan's King Hussein with the broad international reassurance he demands as a back-drop for one-on-one peace talks Israel.

But U.S. officials are lukewarm about according the Soviet Union a prominent and potentially meddlesome role. Also, the United States will bar participation by the Palestine Liberation Organization unless it accepts the Jewish state's right to exist.

"Our policy has not changed," Charles E. Redman, a State Department spokesman, said last week, while echoing the reservations of other officials toward the Soviet Union.

"We do not see a helpful Soviet role in a peace conference unless their policies and attitudes change," said another official, who demanded anonymity in briefing reporters Friday at the White House of the Peres visit.

"We do not see any breakthroughs on the horizon," the official said.

Before seeing President Reagan today, Peres was to call on Secretary of State George P. Shultz. He also was due to confer with Vice President George Bush, who made a recent trip to the Middle East, and to meet on Tuesday with Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger and members of the House Foreign Affairs and the Senate Foreign Relations committees.

Peres' summit meeting with Mubarak in Alexandria appeared to bring the two countries closer than at any time since they signed a peace treaty in 1979.

But when Peres vowed at the Cabinet meeting to pursue an international peace conference, Shamir objected.

Rebels pull out of Salvador peace talks

PANAMA CITY, Panama (AP) — Salvadoran leftist rebels on Sunday pulled out of peace talks scheduled this week aimed at ending their country's nearly 7-year-old civil war.

Salvadoran President Jose Napoleon Duarte said he and his delegation would keep the Friday date at Sesori, 95 miles northeast of the Salvadoran capital of San Salvador. The two sides had agreed to the time and place of the talks at a Aug. 20-22 meeting in Mexico City.

Ana Guadalupe Martinez, spokeswoman for the rebels, announced the pullout following three days of discussions in Panama City between the two sides to arrange an agenda and security measures for the talks.

The rebels have demanded that the U.S.-backed government withdraw its troops from the site of the talks and that both sides cease military operations.

Get tough with Soviet Union until Daniloff comes home, Senators say

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two Senators are calling for tough measures against the Soviet Union unless American journalist Nicholas Daniloff is allowed to return home, including a halt in discussions of a superpower summit, a cutoff of subsidized grain sales and expulsion of Soviet spies.

Sen. Richard Lugar, calling for "retaliatory action" against the Soviets, said Sunday the Reagan administration should refuse to discuss anything but the Daniloff case at a pre-summit planning meeting with the Soviets this week unless Moscow frees Daniloff.

Lugar, R-Ind., speaking on ABC-TV's "This Week With David Brinkley," did not specify what he meant by retaliation other than refusing further discussions with Moscow about a summit.

But Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan, D-N.Y., appearing with Lugar on the same show, said it should include curtailing subsidized grain sales to and cultural exchanges with the Soviets and arrests of more Soviet spies in the United States.

"We expect Daniloff to come out," Lugar said. "That would be the purpose of our taking retaliatory action, of our saying before (Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard) Shevardnadze arrives here, if he does arrive this week, that we anticipate the situation is going to be cleared up or the agenda for the meeting would be Daniloff alone."
