

Hearing On Oil Industry Code Under Way

Destruction Of Cotton Starts

Farmers Of County Given Final Permit

Something new in the history of agriculture is getting under way in Howard county. Farmers are being issued permits to plow up cotton leased to the government under provisions of the acreage reduction plan.

Before they have finished a total of 29,953 acres will be plowed under and 765 farmers will receive $231,784.83 cash and option on 4,683.04 bales of government cotton in return for destroying portions of their crops.

County Agent Griffin Monday morning started issuing permits for destruction of the cotton. He asked all farmers who have signed contracts to communicate with the men who inspected their crops, that is a member of the community committee. They will give directions on procedure to be followed in completing the permits.

Permits are being issued subject to corrections in contracts where some error is found on final inspection in Washington.

Mr. Benbow has held various positions with the Southern National as well as other hotel organizations for the past ten years, which included the Stephens F. Austin, Austin; The Leland, Detroit Mich.; the Texas, Fort Worth; and The Baker, Dallas. The new assignment comes as a distinct promotion for Mr. Benbow.

San Angelo Men Go To Chicago For Presentation Of Comparative Value Of West Texas Oil With Other Fields

Road Through Oil Field Is Being Topped

H. B. Hurley, West Texas and New Mexico production superintendent of the Continental Oil company, said Monday morning residents of the oil field were elated over improvement being made on the oil field road leading eastward from highway No. 9.

Under direction of County Commissioner Pete Johnson that is being rolled on the road beginning at the new location of No. 9 near Magnolia Camp, and extending eastward. About five miles already has been surfaced with this material.

The oil field road has been the source of much trouble since the heavy traffic passing over it renders it impassable in wet weather. The road leads through the heart of the field, extending to Chalk and on northeastward via the Denman-Dodge field of eastern Howard county, connecting with Highway No. 1 a short distance east of Coahoma.

Residents elated as Chat Rolled On Important Artery

Land owners, royalty owners, independent operators and everyone engaged in the oil business is interested in removing from the accepted posted price of crude oil in the midcontinent fields the 40 per cent discount which purchasing companies have arbitrarily placed upon the oil of this section since 1928.

Some oil men think that if this discrimination is eliminated it will have a market effect upon the leasing of lands for oil development in this section and the paying of rentals on lands already leased.

Basic Questioned

An analysis of West Texas crude oil, taking the oil of the Yates pool as representative of the production of this section, fails to reveal the basis upon which the major purchasing companies have arrived at the prices they are paying for West Texas production.

The high octane, or anti-knock quality, of the average West Texas crude more than offsets the disadvantage of the sulphur content of the oil of the Permian Basin. The prolonged life of West Texas fields, through its early adoption of production, has made the amortization charges for pipe lines much less than those of the average oil producing area.

Distance from tidewater and so-called low-test gasoline, have been the two reasons advanced by the companies for paying about 60 per cent of the midcontinent price since 1928 for West Texas crude.

New 'Red Tape' Threatens To Delay Building

Architects Asked By Treasury To Revise Specifications

Efforts were being made Monday by the chamber of commerce to hasten letting of the contract for construction of the Big Spring post office building after Postmaster Nat Shick had received a copy of a letter from the acting supervising architect of the treasury department to Greene, La Roche and Dahl, Dallas, architects for the structure.

The letter informed the Dallas architects that 13 bids had been received, based on original plans and specifications, but that all had been approximately $18,000 higher than the appropriation allowed for the project. The architects were being instructed to submit to the treasury a list of items for deduction in order to bring the total of bids within the amount available.

An effort was being made from here to reduce the additional "red tape" to a minimum. The project has been delayed more than two years.

Dry Goods Conference Here Set For Thursday

Dry goods, ready-to-wear and related businesses of the city will hold a conference Thursday evening beginning at 8 o'clock to discuss codes for their lines proposed under terms of the National Industrial Recovery Act.

Mr. and Mrs. R. L. Browning of Houston are visiting their son and daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. G. L. Browning in Washington Place.

Reasons For Affiliation With C Of C Listed By Member Of Organization

Following are the reasons given by a member of the Big Spring Chamber of Commerce stating why he belongs to the chamber, listed in conversation at the office here:

1. Because the chamber of commerce is the only agency equipped to analyze and supply the city's needs, and I want to help in this constructive work.
2. Because the chamber of commerce is now engaged in a constructive program to the best interest of the city, both industrial and civic, and I want to do my part in this work also.
3. Because the time has come when business must take an active interest in civic growth and if this interest is to make itself felt it must be organized and representative. The chamber is the logical organization for such representation.
4. Because I believe that while

Preservation Of Prohibition Made By Pat M. Neff Before Large Crowd At Union Service Sunday Evening

Man Narrowly Escapes When Tank Explodes

Man Filling Truck Beside Large Tank Runs To Safety

Many Big Spring people were awakened early Sunday morning by a loud rumble and shaking of windows when a gasoline tank of coal oil owned by the Nolder Gasoline Co. of Sweetwater caught fire and exploded with such force it was plainly heard five miles south of Stanton.

R. B. Davidson, an agent for the Nolder Company, was filling a new Ford V8 tank truck a few minutes after seven a. m. when the truck caught fire, apparently from defective wiring underneath the chassis. The explosion occurred on the corner of Second and Benton streets.

The truck had four compartments to fill and Mr. Davidson had the fourth about half filled when he noticed flames licking from underneath the body. Davidson was the only person near the tank at the time, and he said he was sure no gas had been spilled. When the flames were first noticed he jumped from the top of the truck to a wooden platform about four feet high just north of the truck and next to the two large tanks. From there he leaped into the blazing vehicle in a frantic effort to start it and let it free in reverse, hoping to save the tanks. The starter refused to work, Davidson ran through the flames for help. He was only thirty yards away when one of the tanks filled with 3000 gallons of coal oil blew up, spraying the ground for yards around with the burning fluid.

In his hurry to leap from the burning truck, Davidson accidentally jerked the hose from the other tank containing 3500 gallons of gasoline. It did not explode, but burned slowly as it ran from the hose. However, the tank was badly damaged. The coal oil tank was blown to pieces. A blown down out-house about fifteen yards away was burned when the oil spread.

A lock on one of the tanks was melted into a ball of shapeless metal.

In spite of his close shave, Davidson explained that he was not the least bit frightened at the time. Quite a bit of difficulty was had trying to call the fire department, and the flames shot high in the air for about twenty minutes before the fire boys arrived. They fought it about forty minutes after arrival as the flames continued to leap from the holes and vents.

Although suffering the loss of a new delivery truck, two tanks, and seven thousand gallons of fuel, Mr. Davidson plans to re-build his establishment.

FDR To Bring Plea To Public This Evening

Speech Considered Supreme Endeavor For Industrial Recovery

WASHINGTON, (AP)—President Roosevelt printed himself Monday for a supreme endeavor in behalf of his recovery program, scheduled in an address to the nation tonight.

What he planned to say, there was an assuredly accurate way of telling. Persons in close contact with him said the president deems the speech of dominant nature.

Postoffice department, meanwhile, hurried arrangements for dispatching to five million employers the "partnership" agreement with the government, designed for them to raise wages and restrict working hours, thereby helping buying power and employment.

HOUSTON, (AP)—Torrential rains, aftermath of a tropical storm that swept inland around Freeport Sunday, stopped rail and highway traffic over a wide section of East Texas Monday and sent creeks and rivers on a rampage.

The hardest hit section appeared to be between Nacogdoches and Shreveport, where ten to twelve inches of rainfall marooned hundreds of motorists and stopped railway traffic. Thousands of acres of corn and cotton were under water. Live stock damage was expected to be heavy.

AGE ERRORS IN TAX LIST

QUINCY, Mass. (UP).—Typographical errors in the new list of poll taxpayers occurred in unfortunate places. In several instances the ages of women were increased by 10 to 20 years, and one woman, who claimed to be but 29, was listed as 59.

Johnson Told Supply Must Match Demand

A. P. I. President, Sinclair, Roy Jones, Writ Franklin Speak

WASHINGTON (AP)—Harvey Fleming of the Oil Workers International Union Monday opposed before Hugh Johnson, Industrial Administrator, a proposal that oil industry employees work 40 hours a week for from 46 to 47 cents an hour. A substitute, Fleming proposed a flat 30-hour week of five six-hour days at a minimum wage of $4.75 daily.

WASHINGTON (AP)—Hugh Johnson, industrial administrator, Monday was told by leaders of the oil industry that unless production is balanced with demand, no governmental power will solve petroleum's problems.

Axtell J. Boyles, president of the American Petroleum Institute and chairman of executive committee of the industry's emergency national committee, said "the oil industry seeks to regain to the fullest degree management of its own business."

Byles, Harry F. Sinclair, Roy E. Jones, Writ Franklin, the latter president of the Independent Petroleum association, presented to Johnson opening arguments in the hearing on a code worked out in Chicago by a majority of oil interests under auspices of the petroleum institute.

Johnson and his aides sat down in hearing with three codes before them. One, for which Byles, Sinclair, Jones and Franklin spoke; another presented by a group of independent associations, a third proposed for the marketing division, all representing divergent views.

Each code presented different proposals for hours of labor, and pay, and also varied in plans for controlling marketing and production, under federal supervision.

The code for which Byles spoke proposed a forty-hour week with pay ranging from 46 to 47 cents an hour; the independent code asked a thirty-hour week in producing and refining divisions and a thirty-five hour week in the marketing section, with a minimum pay rate of 80 cents an hour. The marketing plan sought a forty-two hour week, with a minimum of $13 in the south and $15 weekly in the north.

"May I emphasize that unless means is found to balance production with consumer demand, no portion of the industry in a position contribute its share of new employment," Byles asserted.

Storm Sends Heavy Rains To East Texas

Ten To Twelve Inches Fall Between Shreveport And Nacogdoches

HOUSTON, (AP)—Torrential rains, aftermath of a tropical storm that swept inland around Freeport Sunday, stopped rail and highway traffic over a wide section of East Texas Monday and sent creeks and rivers on a rampage.

CHAPTER 23
THINKING over the situation for the next two days, Martin Frasier decided to carry out his first plan for going south. He needed time to think. This thing that had happened to him appalled, awed him. Either he should run away from it or decide how to cope with it. It was for a lifetime or never. He was in love. Did he want to be?

At any rate, it was a good thing for him to go away for a while. If he missed Mary, had to come back to her—well, that would decide things, wouldn't it? He was a good sportman. A flip of a coin, a draw, was a good way to decide a thing that was on the fence, half way. It might be a good thing for Mary, too. She might be doing some coin-tipping herself, he thought with amusement and a warm glow of affection.

On Saturday, shortly before noon, Frasier went to the office to see her just once more for a few minutes. He wanted another memory to carry with him. He felt a surge of renewed youth at the thought of seeing her. He wasn't old, but then—his wasn't young.

Mary greeted him with surprise, although she must have known that he would come to the office again before he left town. The fact was, she hadn't given him much thought. Her work had been unusually heavy, added to the responsibility of taking Foster's place; and any moment for personal thoughts had been devoted to Dick. She was grieved and bewildered by his manner of the previous evening.

"Oh, so you haven't gone yet," she said to Frasier. "Did you suppose I should go without seeing you again to say goodbye?" She thought there was something different about him, vaguely—his manner, his voice—what was it?

He looked at her hungrily, yet without that former greedy expression. He was seeing her in a new light—in the light of a new emotion. The realization quite astonished him. She smiled wanly at his admonition. Concerned, he thought she looked pale and tired. "You are working too hard, Mary. Don't let Foster and everyone impose on you so."

"They don't. I just do what is required because that is what I set out to do. I like my work, if it is difficult sometimes." "Well, take care of yourself until I come back, won't you? A month isn't so long—it shouldn't be, anyway. Shall you miss me?" "Frazier," she smiled. "No one comes more often than you do—except trouble," and she chuckled.

"Oh, I say—" then he laughed, regarded her closely. Prettier than he had thought. She had a certain charm that was elusive and alluring at the same time. "How about lunch with me before you start home?"

"I'm not going home until late. Mr. Foster is out of the city and I'm swamped with work. I'm having a bite sent up from the Savarin."

He was keenly disappointed. The impulse of asking her to lunch had been a sudden idea. He was loathe to leave her, now that he was there with her.

"Next month, then. Don't forget, dear, that we are going to have some happy times when I come back."

"We'll see—if you do come back." She honestly thought that she was being as sincere as he was. She didn't think for a moment that she would be going out with him when he returned; but neither did she think he was very serious in his plans for coming back. Why should he? He had no obligations in New York. Telegraph and cable provided almost instantaneous connection with his broker. Why should he leave the balmy, golden comfort of the trophies to return to New York at the beginning of the long winter? It would be spring probably, before he again strolled into her office.

Somehow—she could not tell why—she felt just a little sorry for him when he left her. He held her hand for a long moment, then bent down and kissed her—not the back of it, but the palm. As if he wanted her to hold and treasure it. He had so much, and yet seemed to love so little, she thought. So alone. But then, he would have scorned her if she had not been so sure of his love. He had chosen to get it. Why pity him? Which would have surprised Frasier not a little—that he could have anything he wanted if he chose to get it. He was not at all sure of that when he left her.

He said quietly, "This is not good-bye, ma chere. I won't say it. Only farewell."

"Bon voyage, and a nice vacation," she wished him. "But you are always on vacation." "And yet never a vacation," he said with strange and sudden wisdom. "How can one have a vacation if he never works?" And Mary with her weary rushing to and fro and her heavy responsibilities, almost pitied him.

So he was gone, leaving the kiss in her upturned palm; and she thought, whimsically, that she did not know what to do with it. She stood for a moment, looking at her hand—then she lifted it to her lips and blew upon it lightly, as if she blew a feather out into space. Then, with a deprecating gesture of her arm, she returned to work. For her, the incident was closed. Sunday was a repetition of the former occasion of Dick's dining with the family. Bonnie entertained him while Mary worked with her mother in the kitchen. He had greeted her warmly enough upon his arrival. Mary thought with re-had. The old sparkle and admiration were in his eyes, and he held her hand in his for longer than a casual greeting.

"You're looking better," he told her with sincere relief. "You weren't yourself the other night, were you?"

"So that was it! It had been her mood that upset him. He resolved that never again would she allow her manner to reflect her personal feelings. Her breast was light with a sense of renewed freedom as she returned to her task of salad making. Mrs. Vaughn noted her sudden buoyancy of spirit and was grateful that whatever had been wrong for Mary, was now righted.

"I'm not so sure I like to have Bonnie going to the city with you two," Mom confided. "Of course, Dick's friends are all right. It's not that. But—why should she, anyway? Those people are all much too old for Bonnie."

"I know it," Mary agreed. "It was Dick's idea, I suppose. And she's crazy to go. Let her go this once, and I'll take care of her."

"You'll bring her home, right with you?" "Of course," Mary promised, thinking that there would be no sweet hour of driving home with him alone, resting in the embracing curve of his arm. It seemed a long time since she had done that. This was the first time in her whole life that she resented sharing anything she had with Bonnie, or even giving it to her, outright. At times she thought she felt guilty and ashamed. Then came reassurance in the thought that there were some things in life that you could share with no one, however generous you were willing to be. One of those things was the man you loved.

Bonnie was showing snapshots to Dick, sitting close beside him on the couch, her face almost touching his as they bent to look closely at the same picture. She had some very ravishing recent ones of herself that a professional finisher had made for her for advertising use. And there were some rather old ones of Mary that the twins had made with a dollar kodak they had won as a prize for selling magazine subscriptions.

The boys had insisted upon taking Mary's picture first and she had run out into the back yard on a Sunday morning, wearing an old house frock. One of them was so blurred from the moving of the kodak that her features were doubtless and yet undiscernable, another was made with the camera tipped so that she looked smaller from her feet up. Altogether they were pretty terrible, and Mary had kept them only because they were the twins' first attempts at photography; and Mary was sentimental about things and people she loved.

Dick and Bonnie were convulsed with laughter over them when Mary Mary went in to announce dinner.

"Oh, Bonnie! those terrible pictures," she cried with sudden reproach, stung with hurt pride. She also saw the pictures of Bonnie that provided such an unfavorable contrast.

Dick looked at her quickly, puzzled at her critical tones. "Why, they're just funny," he said. "No one would even know they were yours, really."

Bonnie added, "They're good as a comedy, I think. I always get a laugh out of them." But she wouldn't have been so amused at anyone laughing over her pictures.

The incident passed, but Mary somehow felt reprimanded. She had laughed over the amateurish photographs many times, herself, and with others. It wasn't that she had a wholesome sense of humor that never failed her. But this was different.

Midland Woman Accuses Husband Of Burning Home

MIDLAND—Her husband was so determined to get rid of her he promised if she didn't leave him he would "burn the house over her," Mrs. V. D. Stephens testified in justice court Friday.

At a result, the husband was bound over to the grand jury on a charge of arson brought by the wife, who charged Stephens with having been responsible for the fire which Thursday night burned their home at 707 S. Fort Worth street.

Charges and counter charges were aired as the trial advanced. Testimony sketched a tangled, marital alliance that terminated when the wife left Stanton, where Stephens had been working as an employee of the highway department, and came here. The husband said the wife checked out all the money he had in the bank and pointed out he had not authorized the bank to honor her signature of his name.

Mrs. Stephens charged that she went to Stanton last week and returned here Friday morning to find that the home and all her belongings had burned. She entered a complaint against her husband, charging him with arson. The husband said he had spent the night at "Daddy Ward's" place in the Llano hotel building. Mrs. Stephens said the house was insured for $250 and that her husband had filed notice with the company.

Officers here said Mrs. Stephens has entered suit for divorce at Stanton and that she seeks division of community property.

Mrs. Billie Gill Frost arrived Monday from Oklahoma City to be with her son, Winter Frost, who recently underwent a major operation at Hivings and Barcus hospital and who is convalescing at the Roy Davis ranch. She said her daughter, Dorothy, was in New York City as a member of Catherine Duffy's dancing troupe. Miss Frost has been attending the Duffy school in Oklahoma City.

Condition of W. J. (Bill) Riggs, who has been critically ill several weeks, was reported unchanged Monday by the attending physician.

Mollison's Going To New York In Borrowed Plane

BRIDGEPORT, Conn. (AP)—Captain James Mollison announced Monday he and his wife will fly to New York Monday night in a borrowed amphibian plane.

Dr. Isaac I. Harnsberger, who attended the Mollisons Saturday night, Monday reported the patients in "fine condition."

The doctor said thirty stitches were necessary to close two wounds on Mollison's face and head. His wife's right hand was lacerated.

They crashed Saturday night at the airport here, only 60 miles short of New York, their goal on a non-stop flight from Wales.

Mr. and Mrs. Marvin K. House spent the week-end at Camp Fawcett, near Barkdale, with the scouts of Buffalo Trail Area. Their son, Marvin, Jr., is there. They returned Sunday night.

Yours truly

ALL the world despises an anonymous letter—and its writer. We have no respect for, or confidence in the man who side-steps responsibility by refusing to sign his name to what he writes.

But did you ever think that unknown merchandise is anonymous? No body to vouch for it. No name signed.

Notice the advertisements in this paper. There in bold print are the names of those who stake their reputations—who stake your good-will towards them—on the truth of what they have put in type.

The maker of advertised goods realizes that he might fool you once—but never the second time. He knows his success is dependent upon your continued confidence in what he says in the advertisements.

Read the advertisements with confidence. They tell truths that you should know.
