More snow follows season's first major storm

By The Associated Press

More snow moved into the northern Plains today after the season's first major snowstorm closed highways, stranded travelers, killed five people and left hunters out in the cold on the first weekend of deer season.

The first storm moved into Canada on Sunday, leaving frigid temperatures and up to 25 inches of snow in its wake. It was followed by a weaker storm from the Rockies that was depositing light snow today on Wyoming and the Dakotas.

A number of county roads were still blocked by drifts in North Dakota, while ice covered parts of Interstate 90 in South Dakota.

Eighteen inches of snow fell on Bismarck, N.D., a record for any November storm, while elsewhere in the state 25 inches fell in Devils Lake and drifts of up to 5 feet were reported in Minot.

"Everybody is complaining about getting their streets plowed first," Devils Lake police dispatcher Holly Duciaume said Sunday.

While winter weather is not unusual in North Dakota more than a month before the Dec. 21 official start of winter, "this is a bit much," said National Weather Service meteorologist Rich Van Ess.

"Traveling is probably the worst hazard we've had. The roads are really bad, solid ice," deer hunter Marvin Boss of Clark, S.D., said Sunday at a cafe in Faith, S.D.

But he added: "If you're going to hunt you got to be where they're (deer) at. ... We're used to that type of weather. Winter is winter."

In North Dakota, two deer hunters from Minot spent 38 hours in their pickup truck 13 miles north of Towner before the road was opened Sunday morning, said Jim Boehn, communications supervisor for state radio. The men were unhurt.

"We did a lot of cuddlin' last night," said Jeff Hardy, 24, who was stranded with Greg Tompkins, 24. "I was freezing. We almost gave up hope last night. We just kept talking to each other. ... Our legs were really numb."

Hundreds of motorists were stranded on Interstates 94 and 29 but most got rides to shelter, said Lyle Gallagher, director of state Radio Communications.

Winds gusting to 66 mph near Minneapolis and St. Paul, Minn., toppled utility poles and knocked trees onto power lines, cutting electricity to 6,700 customers. Nearly all power was restored by Sunday night.

In northern Minnesota, which got up to six inches of snow, 12 hunters were rescued over the weekend, including one man who was hospitalized today in stable condition.

One of the rescued hunters was a 15-year-old boy who was found unhurt 15 miles north of Duluth after a night in which the temperature dropped to 14 degrees, with a wind chill of 25 to 35 degrees below zero.

"Once he knew he was lost, he apparently gathered up some pine boughs and covered up and waited for the duration," said Sgt. Tom Pearson of the St. Louis County sheriff's office.

It was the first weekend of deer hunting season in Minnesota and the Dakotas.

In Michigan, foot-deep snow drifts formed Sunday one day after the state enjoyed unseasonably warm temperatures in the 60s.

Police using four-wheel drive vehicles had to rescue 50 cars that got stuck west of Minot, N.D., on Saturday, said Ward County dispatcher Dan Strandberg.

About 15 truckers and a couple families waited out the storm at the Minot Standard Truck Stop, said manager Julene Berdahl. People who didn't get motel rooms watched television and "drank coffee and told their old stories."

Bitter cold froze the North today with low temperatures breaking 75-year-old records and wind chills down to minus 50.

The bitter cold from eastern Oregon to the Great Lakes was produced by a large high-pressure system over Montana. Temperatures were below zero in most of Montana and sections of Wyoming and the Dakotas.

The nation's cold spot early today was Butte, Mont., where the mercury plunged to 25 degrees below zero. It was minus 10 to minus 20 in Helena and Bozeman, Mont. Billings' minus 6 reading was 3 degrees below the 1911 record for the day and the lowest mark this early in the season.

Temperatures were in the single digits and teens in eastern Oregon, the northern Rockies, the mid-Missouri Valley and the Great Lakes. Winds to 40 mph produced chill factors to 30 to 50 below zero in some areas.

Freeze warnings were issued in sections of Missouri, Arkansas, Indiana, Kentucky and Ohio, and a frost warning in western West Virginia.

By contrast, the Southeast enjoyed mild temperatures. Readings were in the 60s and 70s from the Carolinas to Florida, the Gulf Coast and Texas.

Temperatures around the nation at 2 a.m. EST today ranged from Butte's minus 25 to 79 degrees at Homestead Air Force Base, Fla.

City Commission to consider utility revenue bonds - again

Pampa city commissioners will again consider action on issuance of revenue bonds for the Pampa Waste Water Plant improvement projects during their regular meeting at 6 p.m. Tuesday in the City Commission Room on the third floor of City Hall.

The bond action was deferred from the Oct. 28 meeting after a bond consultant noted there were possible tax and legal problems complicating the sale of the revenue bonds.

Kenneth E. Smith, vice president of Schneider, Bernet & Hickman Inc. of Dallas, said recently passed national tax legislation had created some problems in interpretation of a phrase in the city's contract with Operations Management International Inc. (OMI) regarding operation of the waste water plant.

The interpretation by an attorney threatened to throw the bonds into a private activity bond category. Smith suggested the OMI contract could be amended to solve the matter.

Smith also reported problems in the city's bond rating with Moody's and suggested an appeal be made to get a higher rating classification.

At Tuesday's meeting the commissioners will consider authorizing the mayor to execute an amendment to the OMI contract.

In other related bond actions, the commission will consider an ordinance authorizing the issuance of the revenue bonds and a resolution approving and authorizing a paying agent-registrar agreement for the bonds.

The commissioners then will consider an agreement with CH2M Hill to furnish engineering services to the city for the rehabilitation projects of the waste water plant and related sewer system needs.

In other matters, the commission will consider acceptance of a preliminary memorandum of agreement and funding level for economic development concerns for Pampa and Gray County.

The agreement arises out of discussions in relation to the implementation of the Texas Cities for Economic Leadership (TEXCEL) program in Pampa.

Commissioners also will consider on first reading an ordinance setting a fee schedule in relation to the mechanical inspections under the Southern Standard Mechanical Code adopted earlier this year.

Other agenda items include appointment of the City Health Officer, a change order relative to the city streets improvement project and authorization of payments to Traffic Signals Inc., Wiley Hicks Jr. Inc., Kelley Engineering and Lewis Construction Co. Inc.

Common Market agrees to impose sanctions on Syria

LONDON (AP) — The Common Market today agreed to impose sanctions against Syria, including an arms embargo, in support of Britain's charge that Syria sponsored terrorism, officials said.

The officials, briefing reporters on condition of anonymity, said in an apparent reference to Greece that one of the 12 nations in the group could not associate itself with the foreign ministers' statement, but would implement the four sanctions agreed against Syria.

Apart from the arms ban, the Common Market agreed to suspend exchange visits by high-level officials and to tighten surveillance of Syrian embassies and of Syrian Arab Airlines operations.

"The essence (of the meeting) is agreement on the four points for action against Syria," said one British official briefing reporters.

Ministers of the trading bloc, known formally as the European Economic Community, gathered at the new, heavily guarded, Queen Elizabeth II conference center for the one-day meeting. Their agenda included East-West relations, the Middle East and the Syrian issue.

On Sunday, West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl and French Prime Minister Jacques Chirac said after a meeting that they expected the sanctions to be approved.

Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's government broke diplomatic relations with Damascus on Oct. 24 after an Arab was convicted of trying to smuggle a bomb aboard an Israeli jetliner.

Local man held in connection with sexual assault of girl

A 27-year-old Pampa man was in the city jail awaiting arraignment this morning on charges connected with the alleged sexual assault of a 10-year-old girl.

Troy Lee Grimes, 1013 Huff, was arrested in the 1000 block of Love on charges of aggravated kidnapping and burglary.

A 10-year-old Pampa girl told police she was raped Sunday by a black man in his vehicle at Marcus Sanders Park, in the 400 block of Harlem. Suspect Grimes was later arrested on the aggravated kidnapping charge, but police would not say this morning why sexual assault charges have not been filed or if any will be.

Police deferred all questions on the case to Assistant District Attorney David Hamilton, who was meeting with a 223rd District grand jury this morning and was unavailable for comment.

The burglary charge was later added after a subsequent search warrant was obtained for Grimes' home and yielded items reportedly taken in a previous burglary, police said.

Grimes was scheduled to be arraigned before Precinct 2 Justice of the Peace Wayne Roberts sometime today and police indicated his case could go before the grand jury as early as this afternoon.

Lebanese group says it will free some French hostages

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — An underground group believed made up of Shiite Moslem extremists loyal to Iran said today it would free some of the French hostages it holds in Lebanon within 48 hours.

The Revolutionary Justice Organization said in a statement delivered to the Beirut office of a Western news agency the imminent release of "some French hostages" was a result of Algerian and Syrian mediation.

The statement did not say how many hostages would be freed. The group has claimed responsibility for kidnapping three Frenchmen and two Americans in Moslem west Beirut.

Eight Frenchmen are being held hostage in Lebanon by various groups.

Today's promise of freedom came as the 12-nation European Economic Community met in London to consider British-sponsored sanctions against Syria in support of Britain's allegations that the Syrian government supports terrorism.

"As a result of the promises given by the French government on the demands that it very well knows and which had been previously discussed with the Algerians and currently through the constant French intervention with (Syrian) President Hafez Assad ... We announce that we shall release some of the Frenchmen within the next 48 hours," the statement said.

Otwell surrenders to authorities

FOREST HILL, Texas (AP) — The Rev. W.N. Otwell, who fled the state several weeks ago to avoid arrest for operating a boys' home without a license, surrendered to authorities today.
 Otwell, who was met at his Community Baptist Church in this Fort Worth suburb by Tarrant County Sheriff Don Carpenter, said he made the decision to give himself up Friday.
 "We just looked at some options and God gave me some peace," Otwell told a news conference. "I was very uneasy about coming back to Texas, but I was satisfied that's what God wanted."
 Carpenter said Otwell would be taken to the Tarrant County Jail and booked on contempt of court citations. The minister will be transferred to Austin to face the citations, which stem from his refusal to obtain a state license for his now-closed boys' home, Carpenter said.

 Otwell and his church also face $67,000 in court fines.
 Before the news conference, Otwell conducted a fiery, 20-minute sermon in which he condemned Texas Attorney General Jim Mattox and other state officials. About 125 church members and supporters shouted "Amen" as he spoke.
 "This is a ministry God put in my heart. We're doing what God wanted us to do and will not stop doing what God wanted us to do," Otwell said.
 Otwell said he would attempt to reopen the boys' home if God told him to.

 "I'd open it if I had to spend the rest of my life in jail," he said. "If God said it, I'd do it."
 Otwell said he had no idea if or when the state will follow through on its threat to padlock the buildings used for the home.
 Mattox has said he would recommend the fines against Otwell and the church be dismissed if Otwell would license the home with the state, a move that Otwell has said he would never take.

S&Ls willing to go along with scaled-down FSLIC bail-out

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The chairman of the U.S. League of Savings Institutions says the industry could support a scaled-down proposal to pump new money into the agency that insures depositors' savings.

Gerald J. Levy, head of the largest lobbying group for savings institutions, said Congress must make rescue of the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corp. "one of its highest priorities when it convenes in January."

Levy's remarks, prepared for delivery today, came at the start of the league's annual convention.

The league had been supporting a plan to raise an estimated $15 billion over three years to replenish FSLIC's badly depleted coffers.

However, Levy said it might be advisable to adopt an approach suggested by Senate banking leaders that would re-fund FSLIC for just one year with an additional $3 billion with an option of adding more money later.

He said this scaled-back approach would meet the industry's immediate need while alleviating fears that a permanent program might force regulators into hasty closings of some institutions.
 "The idea was to give the regulators enough tools to operate through the coming year, but not so much that the circuits would be overloaded," he said. "Congress would continue to monitor the conduct of the program and be able to modify it to any extent necessary."

The FSLIC insures about $800 billion in deposits at more than 3,200 S&Ls. However, the agency has warned that its reserves could fall to as low as $1 billion by the end of this year, about $29 billion short of what FSLIC may need to close or merge failed S&Ls over the next few years.

The FSLIC, which insures individual deposits up to $100,000, is so strapped for cash that regulators have had to keep technically insolvent S&Ls operating because they don't have the funds to close them.

Both the House and Senate passed versions of an FSLIC rescue bill in the closing days of the last session but were unable to resolve differences over unrelated banking issues dealt with in the measures.

In his report on the health of the industry, Levy said 1986 and 1987 both promise to be years of "strong profits and a good operating environment" as interest rates are expected to remain near current low levels.

Emergency planning to be tested

By BOB HART
 Pampa City Manager

Our Emergency Management drill scheduled for Wednesday morning is the first under our Community Awareness and Emergency Response (CAER) program whereby the emergency management plans between local industry, Gray County and the city are all combined under one steering committee.

As a result of the CAER Steering Committee, we have made changes in our responses on a day-to-day basis.

For emergency managements to be successful, it is important that the planning function be integrated into our daily operations. Many of the changes that we have made have been to integrate emergency management planning as part of our routine activities rather than a plan to be taken off the shelf when a disaster or emergency occurs.

Additionally, we are establishing a command post operation for every incident that occurs. This is done under the belief that if we can handle the small day-to-day incidents in the proper manner, then when disasters or emergencies happen, it will be an extension of our routine function.

The drill planned for Wednesday will be important because it will bring together a number of these elements.

The drill (a simulated chemical spill) will be located at the intersection of 23rd Avenue and Perryton Parkway — changed from the Hwys. 60 and 70 location — and will cause some inconvenience for about 30 to 45 minutes as emergency vehicles move into the area.

While we certainly hope an incident of this nature never occurs in Pampa, if it should occur, we want to be prepared.

We anticipate completing the striping of the traffic lanes on a portion of Hobart Street this week. This will complete the work on the signal lights at the intersections of Hobart-Francis and Hobart-Foster.

The City Commission is now meeting in its regular City Commission Room located on the third floor of City Hall. Meetings are scheduled for 6 p.m. on the second and fourth Tuesdays of each month.

While the City Hall remodeling is not entirely completed, it is sufficient for the commission to return for its meetings.

Although the work on City Hall is progressing, not having the elevator is limiting the accessibility of the building. We anticipate work to begin on the cab of the elevator on Nov. 14. It will take about two weeks to complete.

Once the elevator is completed, the rest of the work on City Hall should be completed by the middle of December.

Municipal Court is also conducting court sessions in the third floor Commission Room, as well as the various advisory boards and commissions.

Our TEXCEL meetings went well last month. The various entities involved in economic development will be meeting through November and then again jointly on Nov. 25 to hopefully agree on the direction of planning for economic development issues for Pampa.

The City Commission will discuss the extent of the city's role at the regular commission meeting Tuesday.

We completed hosting two schools in October: Introduction to Emergency Management, sponsored by the Texas Department of Public Safety and the Federal Emergency Management Administration, and a management and supervision training program, sponsored by Texas A&M University.

Both schools generated a large attendance with a number of individuals from out of town as far away as Vernon to the east and Morton to the south. These schools are not only beneficial to Pampa in training local people but also in attracting individuals who come into Pampa to spend money.

In early December we will have a week-long school on Pump and Motor Operations sponsored by Texas A&M. We will again anticipate participation from a large area.

Textbook objections

The Top O' Texas board of education had its regular session recently.

Superintendent Rick Persons, a deacon at a Baptist Church, led the board in prayer. After school secretary Sheila Johnston read the minutes of the last meeting, they met with Miss Millie Shoo-fly, the area's wealthiest spinster and guardian of the town's moral character. She had just scanned the school's reading textbooks and she was appalled at what she saw.

There, in the fourth grade reading book was one of the more popular and most dangerous writings of L. Frank Baum: The Wizard of Oz. In an eighth grade reader, the upright Miss Shoo-fly discovered the sexually explicit Diary of Anne Frank, which, she stressed in shock, was written by a non-Christian. And the senior English book promoted the occult with Macbeth.

"You must not expose our children, our future, to this type of hedonistic material," Miss Shoo-fly declared. "They will turn away from the Lord, and the Devil will take over their souls."

"What's wrong with The Wizard of Oz?" asked board president Cynthia Langtry.

"Have you read it?" Millie exclaimed. "It's nothing but an endorsement of witchcraft and such humanist qualities as courage, intelligence and love."

"What's wrong with courage, intelligence and love," trustee John Jay asked.

"The book implies that such traits are developed instead of being granted to Christians lock stock and barrel when they get baptized," Millie said. "That's not in my King James."

"That's not the message I get from the book," said trustee Karen Throckmorton, as she skimmed through her copy of the children's classic. "The climax of the story reveals that courage, intelligence and love are found within us. That's just what the Bible says about the kingdom of heaven."

"And then there's all those positive references to witches and wizards," Miss Shoo-fly added. "Not only that, but we all know that Judy Garland took drugs."

"So you want to protect little Timmy from a children's classic," trustee Buck Walters said. "All of the books you mention can actually uplift a person's faith, if they're not taken out of context. Anne Frank is one of the strongest statements against anti-Semitism ever written and Macbeth can be a warning not to mess with witches. I'm sorry if you're offended, but in a free society, there's bound to be something that offends somebody. I hear there's some kooks who think that the talking horse on Mr. Ed is saying 'worship me.'"

"That's right," Millie said. "The devil speaks through that horse. That show and The Brady Bunch."

"The Brady Bunch," the board asked in unison. "Yes. Look at the pictures of the cast in the opening credits," she said. "It preaches that wisecracking maids belong in the center, not Jesus."

"Oh, what's the use," she cried. "You're all possessed by the Prince of Darkness. But in time, the powers of righteousness will prevail."

"Need I remind you, Miss Shoo-fly, that we are all Christians, too," Langtry said, discreetly motioning to Mrs. Throckmorton to put out her cigarette.

"And need I remind you how many taxes I pay into the school district," Shoo-fly snapped. "With that in mind, the board unanimously agreed with Shoo-fly and removed all material that would offend Christian citizens."

Next on the agenda was a sudden request by principal Owen Churchill to remove his children from school.

"Why do you want to do that," Persons asked. Churchill replied: "If schools are so afraid of stepping on people's toes and offending a group's values, then I'm afraid the only way my girls will get an education would be if I teach them at home."

WIFE's gather for agriculture meeting

LUBBOCK (AP) — The new officers of the national Women Involved in Farm Economics organization will have to face some of the toughest challenges in their group's 10-year history, an agriculture official says.

Naioma Benson of Colorado was re-elected as president and Alice Parker of Washington state became first vice president Sunday at a ceremony during WIFE's annual convention.

Bob Bergland, who led the U.S. Department of Agriculture under the Carter administration and is now general manager of the National Rural Electric Co-op Association, told 200 WIFE members Saturday that their group was a constant presence in Washington over the last 10 years.

But he said WIFE faces even greater demands now because foreign nations once dependent on the United States for their food are becoming increasingly self-sufficient.

"Next year will be a wild one," Bergland said of farming's economic situation. "There definitely will be a down-sliding in American agriculture. The question is, how will we solve it?"

Bergland predicted that because Democrats gained control of the U.S. Senate in Tuesday's elections, there will be public hearings on the state of agriculture in the United States.

But he noted that one issue surely to be targeted in such hearings will be the enormous amounts of money being spent on the 1985 farm bill.

"Congress considers the farm bill a failure, and I don't know if they can change anything because they may not be able to override a veto," he noted. "It could be two years of a stalemate between Congress and the president."

"The deficits, the federal budget now will be the biggest item," he said. "It will be a political fight, a knock-down, drag-out battle royal."

WIFE was born in 1976 out of the economic hardships that have plagued the nation's Farm Belt for more than a decade.

Memorial dedicated with tears, medals, insignias

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Vietnam veterans who were moved to tears in a special dedication ceremony paid special tribute to their fallen comrades by tearing insignias and medals from their fatigues and laying them on the monument.

"This is for all the medics that never returned," one veteran said as he climbed San Antonio's Vietnam Veterans Memorial statue Sunday and placed an insignia near the fallen soldier depicted in the sculpture.

As each veteran placed his remembrance on the statue at Veterans Memorial Plaza, the crowd cheered. By late afternoon, the sculpture was covered with miniature American flags, medals, flowers, insignias and personal artifacts — including a pair of combat boots — from the war in Vietnam.

Some veterans, overcome by the memory of Vietnam, knelt at the foot of the giant sculpture and cried.

About 6,000 people — including many veterans in fatigues and active-duty military personnel — packed the plaza as military bands played and fighter planes and helicopters flew overhead.

The keynote speaker, retired Gen. William Westmoreland, said that the time has come for America to show its appreciation for Vietnam veterans.

"The Vietnam veteran is a precious and valuable national asset," Westmoreland said. "And the time has arrived for the American people to understand that in no uncertain terms."

"Sadly, in return, these men and women have been ignored and often abused by their fellow countrymen until now, and neglected by their nation until now," he said.

Westmoreland, who inspected the troops before making his remarks, said history may judge that the United States' attempt to keep South Vietnam independent and free of communism constituted one of "man's noble crusades."

Mayor Henry Cisneros said the plaza and statue would be "as sacred a place as Alamo Plaza" and likened the Vietnam veteran to the defenders of the Alamo.

"May this memorial serve as an ever-present reminder to San Antonians that hundreds who might be with us instead are not," Cisneros said. "Because they fought for principles as fundamental as the heroes of the Alamo."

Totals don't trouble prison officials

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — Escapes from the Texas Department of Corrections have reached a record number this year, but officials aren't overly concerned by the numbers.

Although 36 convicts escaped, only six remained at large more than 24 hours, records show. And the total number is small when compared to the 38,000 inmates now behind bars, says Art Mosely, TDC director of security.

Inmates have devised several methods of escape, some more creative than others. The most common escape play involves inmates simply slipping away from guards and crawling over the fence.

Some prisoners have tried to pull off more involved escapes.

Mosely said three inmates smuggled in hacksaws and sawed through a steel ventilation grate. Once through the grate, the prisoners worked their way through air ducts to the third-floor roof where they lowered themselves over the fence on a rope fashioned from bedsheets.

The inmates were later arrested in a stolen truck.

Another inmate was discovered before he was able to execute his complicated plan.

Guards searching the man's cell found a black camouflage suit made from socks and a suit of armor fashioned from tin cans that he planned to use as protection against razor ribbon wire on top of the prison fence.

Busy session set for board

AUSTIN (AP) — The State Board of Education has committed itself to a busy session on controversial school issues in January, when a new Legislature will be meeting and a new governor inaugurated.

On Saturday, the board sidestepped until January a final decision on a new University Interscholastic League rule allowing girls to play junior high school football.

Earlier, the board decided to hold a special meeting, probably in January, over possible changes in the no pass, no play rule that benches athletes for six weeks if they fail any classroom subject.

The board also put off until January a final decision on a master plan for vocational education in Texas, an issue that has been pending since the 1984 school reform act.

Chairman Jon Brumley said the board or a board committee would review the no pass, no play rule, probably at its January meeting, and set a public hearing, possibly in February.

A committee chaired by board member Jack Strong voted 4-0 Friday to allow girls on junior high football teams. Under school reform legislation, the state board must approve all UIL policy changes. The UIL rule change does not apply to a ban on girls playing high school football.

The topic came up this year after Tina Trejo of Austin went to court to challenge a UIL rule barring girls from football. Miss Trejo, who was allowed to play during court consideration of her suit, won her point.

"The law is relatively clear," Strong said. "The legal grounds are not with us."

But several members of the board said Saturday they wanted to have an executive session to talk with the board's attorneys before making a decision.

The board also adopted new rules Saturday to reduce paperwork in the classroom resulting from passage of a bill during the recent special legislative session.

Effective immediately, teacher paperwork requirements are limited to reports of student grades, textbook reports, unit or weekly lesson plans, attendance, reports required for accreditation review and other reports or paperwork required by law.

In adopting testbooks for the next school year, the board rejected by a 33-0 vote Saturday the book "Modern Health" published by Holt, Rinehart and Winston.

The committee of the whole recommended the rejection Friday, saying the book did not include "basic, factual information on the male and female human reproductive systems."

Lawmen raid large methamphetamine lab

JAMESTOWN (AP) — State and local lawmen raided one of the largest methamphetamine laboratories ever discovered in East Texas, ending an investigation that lasted about 1½ years, police say.

Undercover narcotics agents who kept an overnight vigil at the Smith County site arrested four Tyler men Sunday and charged them with aggravated possession of methamphetamine and aggravated manufacture of methamphetamine. Justice of the Peace Bill Beard said.

Chemicals being used to make methamphetamines could have produced approximately 15 to 20 pounds of the finished product, with a wholesale worth of about $14,000 per pound, Smith County Sheriff J.B. Smith said.

The drug would have a potential street value of more than $800,000, he said, adding that the net was one of the largest in East Texas.

The drugs were being manufactured in a 6-by-12-foot shed made of plywood, fiberglass and chicken wire behind a mobile home.

Smith said one of the arrested men had been under surveillance for about 1½ years, while this particular drugmaking operation had been investigated for about two to three months.

Auction may award broadcast licenses

The Federal Communications Commission is asking Congress for the authority to auction off the radio spectrum, just as the Department of the Interior auctions off mineral-rights leases. It's an idea whose time has come, and it deserves to be accepted with open arms on Capitol Hill.

Currently, licenses to use radio frequencies are awarded by the FCC in one of two ways — either by means of the so-called "comparative process," which requires the commissioners to review all applicants for a particular frequency and decide which one would "best serve the public interest," or by means of a lottery. Both methods are fraught with problems.

The problem with the comparative process is that there really are no objective grounds on which to base a judgment of which applicant will best serve the public interest. The only people who have any idea what the public's interest is, or how it should be served, are the members of the public themselves. And the only known way of checking with all of them and finding out what they want — without spending vast sums of money and many long years in the endeavor, only to discover that the answers have changed by the time they are tabulated — is to let the public express its own preferences. Those radio and television companies that win public favor are those which serve the public interest. Those which fail to satisfy the public interest prove it by going out of business.

The lottery method of awarding licenses looked appealing for a while, but as soon as it was announced as an option a few years ago, the volume of applications for licenses began increasing rapidly. In the old days, when applicants had to be prepared to spend millions of dollars on legal costs to get through the red tape that separated them from the licenses they desired, the FCC used to get about 13 applicants for each available frequency in the top 90 markets. Now that the lottery has taken the place of the comparative process for some licenses, the FCC is receiving up to 100,000 applications for a single frequency. Most of the applicants have no interest in using the licenses. They plan to sell them to the highest bidder just as soon as they win the lottery.

The question is, if people are willing to pay for these licenses, why should Uncle Sam give them away in the first place? Why not hold an auction, as the Interior Department does for oil rights on the continental shelf? Such an auction would reduce the load of paperwork the lottery concept has dumped on the FCC. It would relieve the FCC of the necessity of making a judgment only the market can make about the likelihood of any given applicant's serving the public interest. And it would provide some funds to apply to the federal deficit, without the necessity of seizing those funds from any unwilling taxpayers.

Altogether, the auction proposal sounds to us like a winner. It should be authorized by Congress without delay.

Soviets ignore their crimes

Between 1929 and 1933, the rulers of the Soviet Union fought a war fully as destructive as World War I. But this was fought against the Soviet peasantry, an all-out offensive by a government against its own people. When it was over, some 14 million people had died.

In a century distinguished for state-sponsored crimes against humanity, this may be the only one that compares in scale and ferocity to Hitler's attempt to exterminate the Jews. But it has lain in comparative obscurity, largely because of the Soviet government's refusal to provide an accounting, or even an acknowledgment, of what happened. Moscow has enforced secrecy in the hope of inducing amnesia.

Now the British historian Robert Conquest, who has spent much of his distinguished career chronicling the monstrosities of the Stalinist era, has produced a comprehensive record of what may stand as the crime of the century. "The Harvest of Sorrow" is not just a heroic work of scholarship, but an embarrassment to Mikhail Gorbachev and an antidote to wishful thinking about the nature of the Soviet Union.

The war against the peasants had its roots in communist ideology. Socialism demanded the abolition of private farms, and the Soviet urge to modernize required that the farming sector finance industrial development. Stalin set out to transform Soviet agriculture into a system of large-scale, state-owned collectives, confident that they would far outproduce the capitalist farms of the West.

But that effort ran into heavy resistance from the peasants, who had been promised and given their own land by the Bolsheviks. That resistance was portrayed by the government as a counter-revolutionary campaign by rich capitalist "kulaks," a new phase of the class struggle.

In fact, the wealthy farmers already had been expropriated, and the opposition came from all ranks of the peasantry. So the war on the "kulaks" had to attack the mass of the rural population. Because the nation's chief farming region was the Ukraine, the campaign also became a war on Ukrainian nationalism, which had bitterly opposed incorporation into the new Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

The first stage of the campaign, called "dekulakization," involved mass executions and deportation of entire families into labor camps in remote places, where they were ravaged by disease, cold and starvation. Grain production plummeted, producing a famine that, in combination with dekulakization, killed six and a half million people. No less an expert than the leading Soviet writer on the Holocaust has compared this episode to Hitler's Final Solution.

The second phase was what Conquest calls the "terrorfamine." Frustrated by the Ukraine's resistance to collectivization and determined to crush its people's hope of independence, Stalin decided to use the weapon of mass starvation. Not only were unrealistically high amounts of food requisitioned, but villages that fell short of their quotas were blockaded to prevent relief.

The suffering was almost beyond imagination. Starving peasants ate weeds, shoe leather, earthworms, even horse manure. The dead were eaten by the living. Brigadiers assigned to transport the corpses insisted on taking the dying as well as the dead, to spare extra trips. By the time this government-enforced famine had abated, another 7 million had died.

But Stalin's purpose was fulfilled. Soviet agriculture was collectivized, permanently crippling the nation's food production. Ukrainian nationalism was vanquished, providing a potent lesson for other regions and ethnic minorities. The power of the Bolshevik regime was established beyond challenge.

But why should we pay attention now? One reason is that, unlike Hitler, the government that carried out his genocide is still in power. In fact, as Conquest notes, many "older leaders were direct accomplices in the actual killing of millions of Ukrainians and others." Equally important, as one architect of the October Revolution wrote, is that for Party bureaucrats it made terror "a normal method of administration."

Not least important is that the Soviet government has relegated the events of this period to the memory hole, referring to the "so-called famine." To ignore them is to excuse them.

Until Gorbachev and his subordinates come to terms with what was done by their Stalinist forebearers, they will remain, as Conquest puts it, not only heirs to the crime but accomplices.

Lake Erie cleanup works

It was a happy vacation 15 years ago, island hopping in a chartered boat in Lake Erie. It was a fun outing and nothing I am about to say detracts from that recollection.

Some marina areas were so awash with litter as to spawn a wry jest that the lake "might catch fire."

Elsewhere, shoreline weed beds thrived where nothing else would because of pollutants in the water. Algae covered the western basin like green paint. And few game fish were to be found anywhere. What fish survived were so loaded with mercury that commercial fishing was stopped and sport fishermen were warned not to eat their catch.

Ecologists were calling Lake Erie, "America's Dead Sea."

The cities of Detroit, Toledo and Cleveland had dumped chemicals and raw sewage for generations.

But then came some strict anti-pollution laws and some modern sewage-treatment plants and a recent traveler — retracing my holiday outing of 1971 — reports Lake Erie has come back to life!

Michawl Pearce reports that with the shoreline cleanup and prohibitions on gill netting, the walleye spawn of 1977 was an incredible hatch.

Biologists are now guesstimating the western Lake Erie walleye population at 33 million.

Walleye is a delicious fish — even after freezing — partly because this member of the perch family is finicky about what it eats.

Such a prize is this fish, which swims between two luscious, boneless gold-meat filets, that Lake Erie now has more than 730 charter boat operators.

The gold rush is on. Prot Clinton is booming. A regular charter of six will catch 100 to 150 walleye in a day, so everybody goes home with his limit of six.

Keepers range from 17 to 23 inches. Pearce says the fishing "may be too good." People are already starting to "take for granted" the fish that was so rare in these waters but a decade ago.

Elsewhere, also, we are not doing anything about pollution. It is safe for the first time in decades to swim in San Francisco Bay.

But Lake Erie's orchestrated evolution offers most encouragement to environmentalists and anglers that pollution is, indeed, reversible.

Lake Erie is a demonstration of what we can do to preserve, protect and enhance our nation's natural assets.

Americans, inclined to look on the "good old days" in a soft, pink light that flattered everything, need reminders like this that tomorrow can be better yet if we really want it to be.

"That's ENOUGH Max Headroom, young man. NOW EAT YOUR DINNER."

This Alpine Rambo can't be written off

By Don Graff

MUNICH, West Germany (NEA) — In the German mind these days, Bavaria is virtually synonymous with one man.

He is Franz Josef Strauss, the long-time prime minister and an even longer time power in national politics. That power comes in part from his position as leader of the Christian Social Union. The party, the smaller sister of the governing Christian Democrats, is essential to keeping the Christian Democrats in power in Bonn.

It also helps that Bavaria is the country's economic leader and new industrial heartland.

But the real source of Strauss's power is a forceful personality coupled with a shrewd — some would say ruthless — political intelligence that may have won him more enemies than friends, but that no one has been able to best.

This has earned him numerous part-satiric, part-envious appellations such as the "Substitute Monarch" and the "Alpine Rambo." Bavaria, which under the German federal system is a "Free State," is often called the "Strauss State." And there's a new Bavarian saying that "Man thinks, God guides and Franz Josef decides."

Strauss, who has been on the West German political scene since the '50s, has made a few stabs at national office. He served in Christian Democratic Cabinets on several occasions, usually stirring up political storms that had to be calmed with his resignation.

In 1980, he went for the top job but was decisively defeated by the then Social Democratic chancellor, Helmut Schmidt. The German electorate as a whole was not buying the Alpine Rambo.

Strauss withdrew to Bavaria, where he continues to sell well. Recent local elections strengthened his position in both the state parliament and Munich city politics.

The national press is overwhelmingly hostile to Strauss, charging among other things that he is served in state offices by "toadies." It was widely noted that Bavarian Broadcasting killed a planned critical report on the Soviet nuclear disaster at Chernobyl. Strauss is an energetic proponent of nuclear energy.

He is also an outspoken friend of the United States. Whenever American policies — Central America, European missile installations, Star Wars, what have you — come under attack in Germany, he can be counted upon to counterattack.

Some of his friends, however, could give pause to Washington. Signals have been coming out of Munich that Paraguayan dictator Alfredo Stroessner, who's of German descent, may be invited to the Bavarian capital since Bonn won't have him for a state visitor. Strauss also has a Chilean connection, having accepted an honorary professorship of "Chilean law" from the Pinochet regime in 1977.

All of this, and more, is of some embarrassment to Strauss's nominal colleagues in the government in Bonn. But that clearly is of no matter to him.

Since Strauss is so widely disliked outside Bavaria, this could help the Free Democrats by attracting sympathy votes and strengthening their position in a post-election coalition.

Some observers suspect this might be exactly what Strauss wants, since Free Democratic gains would be mostly at the expense of the national Christian Democrats, who would then be even more dependent upon his Bavarian affiliate.

At least that's one reading of what he's up to, as propounded by the news magazine "Der Spiegel." But one can never be sure about Franz Josef Strauss, except that whatever he does, he has a reason. And he can't be ignored.

U.S. Catholic leader calls for meeting with Pope

WASHINGTON (AP)—The head of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops, warning of "dangerous disaffection" between the Vatican and parts of the U.S. church, says face-to-face talks are needed between American bishops and Pope John Paul II before the pope's visit next summer.

Bishop James Malone of Youngstown, Ohio, president of the bishops' national organization, said today the pope is welcome in this country, despite "current tensions and controversies." However, he said, it would be wise for members of the bishops' conference to fly to Rome "to share with him information about aspects of the church which will be highlighted when he returns to this country."

He didn't say exactly what the bishops would tell the pope, but he went on to describe deep divisions within an otherwise-flourishing U.S. church.

John Paul, who is to visit the South and West for a series of speeches and Masses in outdoor stadiums next September, was cheered by millions on his visit to Eastern and Midwestern cities in October 1979.

"But no one who reads the newspapers of the past three years can be ignorant of a growing and dangerous disaffection of elements of the church in the United States from the Holy See," Malone said.

The only case he specifically mentioned was that of Seattle Archbishop Raymond Hunthausen, who was forced to share his authority with a Vatican-appointed auxiliary bishop after being judged too liberal in ministry to homosexuals and divorced

Catholics and in some liturgical matters. However, in other cases that have been widely publicized—and protested by some Catholics—in the past year alone:

—The Vatican has stripped church-theologian credentials from a prominent professor at Catholic University because of views considered too liberal on sexual issues.

—Vatican pressure led a Jesuit priest to resign from his order after he polled bishops on their views on celibacy and women's ordination.

—Another Jesuit was told he would be expelled from the order if he spoke out, as he then did, against the Vatican's recent restatement of its views on the sinfulness of homosexuality.

Malone's comments, prepared for delivery at the opening of the bishops' annual meeting, were part of his farewell speech as he neared the end of his three-year term as the group's president.

Malone said that despite divisions, the Catholic Church in the United States—by far the nation's largest denomination with 52 million members—is strong.

On what he felt was a positive note, he said the bishops will vote this week on their major pastoral letter on good and ill in the U.S. economic system. And though some have criticized the bishops' entry into the public policy arena with this letter and one on nuclear weapons, he said they would continue such ventures "with an unwavering sense of duty to both society and church."

Anti-whaling group scuttles half Iceland's whaling fleet

REYKJAVIK, Iceland (AP)—An American anti-whaling group has claimed responsibility for scuttling two Icelandic whaling boats—half the country's whaling fleet—in Reykjavik harbor.

Saboteurs opened the bottom valves on the vessels, Hvalur 6 and Hvalur 7, around 2 a.m. Sunday when no crew members were aboard, police said. No injuries were reported.

The Los Angeles-based Sea Shepherd Conservation Society said it carried out the attacks. Its leader, Paul Watson, said in interviews with Icelandic state radio and television that a team from his organization sank the 430-ton vessels because the Icelanders were hunting whales illegally.

Environmentalists accuse the Icelandic government of using scientific pretenses as a cover for commercial whaling.

"They are trying to say they are killing whales for research, but the whale meat is being sold to Japan. They are prostituting science," Watson told The Associated Press in a telephone interview from Vancouver, British Columbia.

Iceland agreed to abide by an International Whaling Commission decision to cease whaling from 1986 to 1990. Although commercial whaling stopped, the government permits the Hvalur Whaling Co. to carry out scientific whaling in cooperation with the National Oceanic Research Institute.

The company, which has two other boats, is allowed to catch 200 whales a year under a plan to document the numbers of whales.

Last August, Icelandic and U.S. officials reached a compromise providing that half the meat resulting from the whaling be consumed by Icelanders. In the past, 90 percent of the meat was sold abroad, nearly all of it to Japan.

The United States monitors foreign whaling. If it determines that efforts to conserve the whales have been undermined, the Secretary of Commerce is required by law to recommend that the president either embargo the offending country's fish products or curtail its right to fish in U.S. territorial waters.

Iceland maintains that as a fishing nation it must conduct extensive research on how whales affect fish population and that it can finance its research only through the sale of whale meat.

Watson, 36, said a Sea Shepherd team went to Iceland several days ago and patrolled the harbor, watching for an opportunity to sink the vessels.

"As we don't want to cause bodily harm we therefore prepared the act very carefully," he said. "Our team was given instructions not to cause injuries and therefore explosives were out of the question."

A guard on a nearby boat noticed the two 150-foot-vessels taking on water at about 5 a.m., but attempts by the authorities to save them proved futile.

Watson would not specify how many people took part in the operation and said the team had left Iceland.

Blacks credited with delivering four Senate seats to Democrats

WASHINGTON (AP)—High turnout among Southern black voters with intense allegiance to the Democratic Party spelled victory for four new Democratic senators and this century's first black congressman from Mississippi, observers of the midterm congressional elections say.

This high support level, boosted by GOP missteps, put Democratic Senate candidates over the top in Alabama, Georgia, Louisiana and North Carolina, and made the difference in California as well, black analysts say.

"This should demonstrate to the Democratic Party that in whatever Southern strategy they have, they should be careful not to alienate black voters," said Linda Williams, senior political analyst at the Joint Center for Political Studies, a non-profit research organization that studies policy issues of concern to blacks.

"It also says perhaps Republicans should do more to try to attract some of that black vote in order to guarantee that they don't have such a strong unified vote against them," she added.

Exit polls by newspapers and television networks showed that nationwide, 80 percent of black voters voted Democratic in last Tuesday's election. Even stronger allegiances were pivotal in California and the four closest Southern races.

For example, Alan Cranston of California, Richard Shelby of Alabama and Wyche Fowler of Georgia all won with 51 percent of the vote in their respective Senate races. Cranston received 96 percent of the black vote, Shelby got 91 percent and Fowler got 82 percent, Williams said, quoting an ABC News exit poll.

Terry Sanford of North Carolina and John Breaux of Louisiana had slightly higher victory margins of 52 percent and 53 percent, respectively. Sanford got 94 percent of the black vote and Breaux got 91 percent, the ABC poll found.

They all "owe their elections to the margin of victory that blacks gave them," D.C. Del. Walter Fauntroy, a non-voting House delegate who headed the black vote drive, said at a briefing last week.

Black turnout in the South was 47 percent—10 points higher than the national level and 5 points better than Southern black turnout in 1982.

The prime movers behind this year's successful registration and turnout drives were the 80-member National Coalition for Black Voter Participation, which sponsored "Operation Big Vote" in 29 states, and the National Black Leadership Roundtable, an arm of the all-Democratic Congressional Black Caucus.

When New York Stock Exchange Chairman John J. Phelan Jr. had trouble getting his earphone to stay in place, an aide quickly moved in to help. People's Bank of China Governor Chen Muhua, right, kept hers in place with a free hand. The earphones were used for simultaneous translation. Phelan and Ms. Chen were major participants Monday in the first China-United States Symposium on Financial Markets in Peking.

TENSION HEADACHE

If you're bothered by headache that seems to have its origin at the base of your skull, you may be suffering from tension headache.

Tension headaches can be caused by an irritation of the nerves in the area of the spine immediately under the skull. These are called the suboccipital nerves. They pass through small openings in the spinal column to muscles in the surrounding area. Any abnormal pressure or dysfunction of neck and muscles can irritate the nerves, causing tension.

The tension doesn't cause the headache. To treat this form of headache, attention should be paid to the bone and muscle structures. They should be returned to normal balance so they can function properly again.

Medication is not the answer to tension headaches. Aspirin and other painkillers may give you temporary relief—but they won't solve the problem. Once the source of the problem is found and treated, THEN you can get the relief you need.

SOME ADVICE FROM THE EXPERTS

Regular care will keep your upholstered furniture looking its best, and as a service to you this week, we present some tips from the experts.

Vacuum upholstered furniture at least once a week. Be sure to clean armrests, chair or sofa backs and crevices. A soft, bristled brush may also be used.

Turn cushions periodically. Changing cushions around allows the undersides to breathe and the fabric to wear evenly.

Treat spills quickly. Even if your furniture is protected with a fabric protector, it's a good idea to get at those spills as quickly as possible. Water and oil based stains will bleed up so you can easily "wick" them away with a clean cloth. If your furniture is not protected, and the spill becomes a stain, consult a standard stain removal chart.

Keep upholstery away from direct sunlight. Avoid exposure to the sun. It can cause fabric to fade and deteriorate.

Once a year or so, shampoo upholstery with an upholstery cleaner.

And when you need new furniture of any kind, stop in here. We can show you great furniture selection and value.

Firewood can spread oak disease

By JOE VANZANDT
County Extension Agent

Homeowners need to be cautious as to where they get their firewood for the coming winter season, particularly if you have any oak trees.

Firewood infected with oak wilt can spread to oak trees in your yard.

For Horticulture

Joe VanZandt

Oak wilt disease is common in many areas of Texas, and the fungus which causes it can be transported in firewood. Wood-boring insects may also be present that later emerge and carry disease-causing spores to nearby trees.

While it's best to get firewood from areas not having oak wilt, it's not always possible to know the source. I recommend stacking firewood away from oak trees and covering the stack with clear plastics sealed around the edges. This will prevent emergence of wood-boring insects which can spread the disease.

It is also suggested to use all firewood during the current winter season. Holding firewood over through a warm season allows the emergence of insects that carry the disease-causing spores.

INSECTS IN FIREWOOD

With the cold winter months upon us, homeowners begin to supplement heating costs by using their fireplaces and wood burning stoves. Wood burned in these fireplaces and stoves serves as an excellent harborage site for insects. Insects may be found inside the wood and emerge once wood is brought inside the home or they may take refuge in firewood stacked too close to the home and move inside later.

There are a large number of wood infesting insects that can attack while trees are standing as well as after they are cut and wood is stacked and stored. Infested wood that is stored inside the home is often the source of wood boring beetles and other insects that are found by homeowners. The insect's life cycle is accelerated by temperatures found inside the home. The insects develop rapidly and when adults emerge from the wood, they cause great concern to the homeowner.

The majority of insects found in firewood are harmless to structural timbers, furniture, and other wooden structures found inside the home. Homeowners can consider most firewood dwelling insects as merely nuisance pests. Powder post beetles (lyctids and anobids) emerging from firewood stored inside the home will not attack seasoned wood or woods that have been painted, varnished, or sealed. Cockroaches, psocids, spiders, earwigs, and scorpions may also inhabit firewood, but will seldom damage home structures.

Avoid insect problems in firewood by the following prevention methods:

- (1) Store firewood away from the house to eliminate a convenient harborage site for pests.
- (2) Keep firewood off the ground. Wood in contact with the ground provides an attractive harborage area.
- (3) Stack firewood to accelerate the drying out process. Wood should be stacked so that air can flow through and around the wood. Stacking wood in alternate rows also permits easy access by predators and parasites to many of the inhabitants of stored firewood.
- (4) Do not store large quantities of firewood inside the home. Bring wood inside the home in quantities that will be burned in a short period of time.
- (5) Purchase wood that has been out during the fall or winter. This wood will be dry enough by spring to discourage infestation by many of the wood infesting insects.

Do not treat firewood with insecticides. Treating firewood with insecticides is not a safe practice and will not result in any measureable control. Most insects inhabiting firewood live in the wood or between the wood-bark interface. An insecticidal spray will seldom, if ever, reach these insects.

It may be necessary to occasionally treat the soil under and around firewood stacks to prevent insects from inhabiting the area. Many insecticides with long residual are available for this purpose. Read the label and follow directions on application rates.

CHECK CHIMNEY BEFORE USING FIREPLACE

Preventive measures can help reduce dangerous creosote and tar buildup in your fireplace chimney and flue. Both flue and chimney units should be cleaned before the first fireplace fire of the season. It also may require cleaning again during the winter, especially if you burn wood that has not been air-dried or seasoned. A fourth-inch accumulation of creosote indicates the flue needs cleaning. I suggest checking the fireplace by hanging a flashlight from the top of the flue to a third of the way down the flue. Then, look up the lighted flue from the fireplace with a mirror to get an estimate of the buildup.

Letters are music to woman's ears

DEAR ABBY: Thank you for printing all those letters from people who keep hearing music in their heads. I am one. I am now 76, and never told others because I was afraid of what they might think. I have been a nurse for more than 50 years and had never heard of this condition; I feared that maybe I was experiencing senility. I was truly relieved after reading in your column that many others had the same experience.

During my waking hours I hear hymns and waltzes. All the waltzes I loved to dance to are drifting through my mind. Now I can tell my doctor about it and not be afraid that he will look at me, shake his head and think, "Poor soul. She is really failing!"

EMILIE IN BUCKS COUNTY

DEAR EMILIE: You would not believe the number of letters from readers who had also been hearing things and doubted their sanity. One man said he nearly went crazy because he heard bees buzzing continually in one ear — night and day. Another said he heard constant crackling sounds, like bacon frying. A woman heard "chirping" of crickets. Still another said it sounded like a freight train was roaring through her head. All thought they were going mad.

The constant sounds are due to a condition called "tinnitus," but the musical hallucinations are yet another matter. Read on:

seeing all the letters sent to you by people with musical hallucinations. The two cases I describe in my book, "The Man Who Mistook His Wife for a Hat," were rather rare and special—examples of musical epilepsy associated with damage to the brain. But musical hallucinations are relatively common, especially in older people, and though they should be checked out, nearly always turn out to be benign — a nuisance, but not necessarily a sign of neurological disease.

Readers should be assured about this. Yours sincerely,

DEAR ABBY: I wrote to my son who lives in Alaska and told him that I appreciated his thoughtfulness in sending me flowers twice a year (on Mother's Day and my birthday) for the last 25 years, but I would prefer instead subscriptions to magazines dealing with science and psychology.

When he called last week to wish me a "Happy 70th birthday," I said, "I hope you were not offended by my request."

His reply: "Write to Dear Abby." Was I out of line with my request? If so, is there a tactful way to make things right again? Your column runs in The Anchorage Times, and he appears to be a fan, so maybe you can put in a good word for me. HIS MOTHER IN NEW JERSEY

DEAR MOTHER: You were not out of line for stating your preference. Your son is too big (and far away) for you to spank, but I think he owes you thanks (not criticism) for your honesty. Write again and let me know if this helps. And if I've made matters worse, I'll try to patch things up in person when I go to Anchorage next spring.

Artist uses scissors, paper to capture subjects' likeness

CLEVELAND (AP) — With a slender pair of scissors and an abundance of talent, silhouette artist Wallie Spatz transforms squares of black paper into family heirlooms.

She deftly snakes scissors across paper, and within minutes presents a completed profile portrait from an admiring audience.

The "Silhouette Lady," as she is often called, has practiced her craft for more years than she cares to reveal. For a few weeks at a time, she sets up shop at department stores to cut portraits of her eager customers.

Wedge into a corner of a store display, she works amid the noise and clutter, with a waiting line of patient parents and squirming children.

Mrs. Spatz sits opposite her subject, one foot perched on a brass footstool. She grasps a folded piece of gummed black paper in one hand, and the scissors attached to a pink ribbon around her neck in the other.

Penn State wants Miami for bowl foe

By HERSCHEL NISSENON
AP Football Writer

The top-ranked Miami Hurricanes apparently will determine the site of any national championship shootout with runner-up Penn State.

Informed sources have quoted one of the top people in Penn State's athletic department as saying, "The ball is in Miami's court. Wherever they go, we go."

That will have to be either the Fiesta Bowl in Tempe, Ariz.; the Florida Citrus Bowl in Orlando, Fla.; or the Gator Bowl in Jacksonville, Fla. Because of conference tie-ups, a Miami-Penn State showdown cannot take place in the Cotton, Orange, Sugar or Rose Bowls.

The Fiesta, Florida Citrus and Gator Bowls all say they will be able to offer the same money as the Cotton, Orange or Sugar — i.e., $2.5 million-2.6 million.

But only the Fiesta has the money in the bank thanks to a recent agreement with Sunkist, its corporate sponsor. The package would include travel and hotel costs.

The Citrus Bowl reportedly is asking permission from television advertisers to up the rate for a 30-second spot from $40,000 to $75,000 while the Gator Bowl's package is said to include 80 free hotel rooms for each team for a week but is dependent on Mazda buying additional TV spots during the game. Mazda had been rumored as the Gator Bowl's corporate sponsor.

Miami would prefer to play in the state of Florida for the home-field advantage. Penn State's preference apparently is the Fiesta Bowl.

Both teams are 9-0 after Miami downed Pitt 37-10 Saturday while Penn State edged Maryland 17-15. Miami has home games with Tulsa, 7-3, on Nov. 15 and East Carolina, 1-8, on Nov. 27. Penn State visits Notre Dame, 4-4, next Saturday and plays Pitt, 4-4-1, at home on Nov. 22, the official bowl selection date.

"If all things were equal, we definitely would like to play in the Orange Bowl," Miami Athletic Director Sam Jankovich told The Associated Press.

"That's our community, that's where our fans would be and it would be a very good thing for our program."

However, the Orange Bowl host team is the Big Eight champion, which kills any chance of a Miami-Penn State game there.

Don Meyers, chairman of the Fiesta Bowl's selection committee, said Penn State "has expressed a preference to play on a neutral field outside of Florida, and the only one that's really available to them is the Fiesta Bowl."

Since the AP adopted a post-bowl poll in 1968, only twice has the national champion not come out of the Cotton, Orange, Rose or Sugar Bowls — in 1974, when Oklahoma was on probation and couldn't play in a bowl, and 1984, when Brigham Young completed a 13-0 season in the Holiday Bowl as Western Athletic Conference champs.

The Fiesta Bowl paid about $1.18 million apiece to Michigan and Nebraska last year and this year's payoff would have been around $1.25 million per team.

But Meyers said the Fiesta recently contracted with Sunkist, its corporate sponsor, and NBC-TV "which provides us with a package that in the event we are able to match up a national championship game, we have the availability of additional funds to pay the teams whatever they would receive from another New Year's Day Bowl."

However, the Orange Bowl is said to have a clause in its contract with NBC-TV that it will pay more than any game except the Rose Bowl, which is the only game to date with a definite participant — Arizona State which clinched the Pac-10 title Saturday night.

Bowl outlook favors Fiesta, Gator, Citrus

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

They have begun to surface again, slapping backs and laughing loudly. College football's bowl scouts are dropping in on campuses like autumn leaves, checking up on the prospect.

The official date for extended invitations is Nov. 22 but no bowl worth its corporate sponsorship or television contract waits that long to line up pairings. You wouldn't want to get caught in the last-minute shopping rush.

So the posturing and preening has started early. They are almost like kids at their first dance, lined up across the ballroom floor from each other, sneaking peeks, hoping the one they like will like them, too.

Pick me! Please, pick me!

There is a unique situation this year that puts the four major bowls — Cotton, Orange, Sugar and Rose — in a peculiar position. Because of either geography or other, entirely sensible considerations — like old-fashioned, cold, hard cash — each of the big bowls is tied to a conference for at least part of its pairing. That's usually a good condition for the people throwing these parties.

Why wouldn't the Orange Bowl want the Big Eight champion, guaranteed? The Southwest Conference champion guaranteed to the Cotton Bowl makes nothing but good sense. The Southeastern Conference and the Sugar Bowl is a natural marriage, just as the Rose Bowl and the champions of the Pac-10 and Big 10.

The kicker is that this year, the No. 1 and No. 2 teams in the country are independents. Miami and Penn State, tied to no conferences, are free to roam anywhere they want for their post-season games.

If those two schools are inclined to arrange a national championship bowl showdown, it will have to be in game outside of the traditional quartet, one that is unencumbered by conference contracts and therefore free to invite two independents, and one that can pay big money. The estimated $2.5 million payoff is made all the more attractive because independents don't have to share the wealth with conference partners.

The bowl that wins this little lottery also must almost certainly have corporate backing to finance the show. That's no problem in today's economically sensitive college football community, where businesses with open checkbooks are encouraged to add their imprimatur to the bowls and might even be convinced to add a little extra to the bounty for a game with national championship implications.

This auction will likely involve three bidders. The Fiesta Bowl in Tempe, Ariz. has Sunkist's sponsorship and is a place where Penn State has played and prospered before. The Gator Bowl in Jacksonville, Fla., soon to be fortified by Mazda's money, offers at least the home state, if not home field advantage to Miami. The same situation exists for the Florida Citrus Bowl in Orlando, which used to be the Tangerine Bowl.

Gentlemen, make your bids.

What makes a team pick one bowl over another? Money, of course, is a major factor, especially when a bowl is after a hot team that may have other options.

Then there is the inducement of travel, a glamour trip to an attractive city is a nice way to reward the team for a successful season. The determination of Miami's players to enjoy all the hospitality that New Orleans could offer may have been a factor in the whipping the Hurricanes absorbed against Tennessee in last year's Sugar Bowl.

And then there are the souvenirs.

A couple of years ago, when Doug Flutie made Boston College a hot item, the Cotton Bowl corralled BC for its New Year's Day show. When the deal was done, the bowl representatives celebrated their good fortune by distributing 10-gallon cowboy hats to all the BC players.

That particular piece of haberdashery looked a little out of place on the Massachusetts Turnpike. But then, it's bowl time.

Plunkett passes thump Cowboys

By DENNE H. FREEMAN
AP Sports Writer

IRVING (AP) — Jim Plunkett doesn't care if he's 38 years old and has been around the NFL 16 years. He still thinks he should be the starting quarterback for the Los Angeles Raiders.

Plunkett proved his point Sunday in a relief role by throwing two touchdown passes in the second half of the Raiders' 17-13 victory over the Dallas Cowboys.

Asked if he should start in place of Marc Wilson, Plunkett replied "Yes, I proved it all year. It's no fun on the bench."

Plunkett said his age should be no barrier.

"They (the Raiders' coaches) may think I'm 38, but I don't think of it that way," he said.

But Los Angeles Coach Tom Flores said he didn't want a quarterback controversy. "I don't want to get into that right now," Flores said.

Wilson suffered three interceptions in the first half and the Cowboys led 10-3 after Tony Dorsett ran 13 yards for a score. It was then that Flores decided to go to his bullpen.

Plunkett threw touchdown passes of 20 and 40 yards to Dokie Williams as the Raiders' victimized young Steve Pelluer, who was starting in place of the injured Danny White.

The Raiders intercepted him five times and sacked him six times. The five interceptions tied a Dallas club record held by White and Eddie LeBaron.

Flores said Plunkett, who led the Raiders to two Super Bowl championships, still amazes him in his twilight NFL years.

"Jim is a remarkable guy," Flores said. "He has the experience and confidence to come in during tough situations. That's one of his strong points. He's able to come in and do the job."

Dorsett, who passed O.J. Simpson for fifth place on the NFL all-time rushing list, said, "We just played Santa Claus out there. It's been that way the last two weeks."

Dorsett gained 101 yards on 22 carries for a total of 11,282 yards — 56 more than Simpson.

"I never dreamed when I left college I'd do that," Dorsett said. "I have a lot of respect for O.J. Simpson."

Plunkett, meanwhile, heaped his praise on Williams.

"Dokie made two tremendous catches," Plunkett said. "The last one could have very easily been intercepted, but he just outjumped the Cowboys. Good receivers make a quarterback look good."

Williams said the game-winning touchdown pass early in the fourth period was just like basketball.

"It was a jump ball situation and I just happened to get it," he said.

The game was more than Dallas Coach Tom Landry could stomach.

The Cowboys had two touchdowns called back by penalties and Herschel Walker fumbled the ball away another time on the Raiders' 1-yard line.

"We beat ourselves," Landry said. "We had two touchdowns called back by penalty. It's simple."

But Landry defended Pelluer, saying, "I don't think he lost his poise. He just had some passes he wished he had back. I think any young quarterback will have games like this. He's an excellent prospect and will overcome this game."

Both the Raiders and Cowboys have 6-4 records and trail the leaders in their respective divisions by two games. Los Angeles is two games behind Denver in the AFC West while Dallas trails Washington and the New York Giants by two games in the NFC East.

"We're just trying to say alive and be in the post-season playoffs," Flores said. "I'm just glad to get out of here (Texas Stadium) alive."

Landry said the Cowboys aren't dead yet.

"We can't lose any more and win the East," Landry said. "All you have to do is win six straight games. The last two weeks have hurt us. But we still have a chance."

Moon protected; Oilers end loss streak

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston quarterback Warren Moon has proved what he's been saying for eight straight weeks of losses: He can complete passes if he gets protection.

Moon was sacked only once and he responded by completing 25 of 44 passes for 310 yards and one touchdown Sunday to lead the Oilers to a 32-28 victory over Cincinnati, snapping an eight-game losing streak.

"We did a great job of protecting early and that was the key to the game," said Moon, who has been sacked 29 times this season. "I think from here we can salvage the season and get some respectability."

Tony Zendejas kicked four field goals, including two in the tense second half, and rookie Ray Wallace scored on two 1-yard runs.

Moon hit his first seven passes of the game and the Oilers were ahead 19-0 at the half.

Houston went ahead 26-0 on Wallace's second touchdown early in the third quarter, but had to hold off a Cincinnati rally led by Boomer Esiason, who was benched at the start of the third quarter but returned to throw three touchdown passes.

"I reminded our players at halftime that we are a quick-striking ball club and we went out and played an up-tempo game in the second half," Cincinnati Coach Sam Wyche said.

Ken Anderson replaced Esiason to start the third quarter and hit Larry Kinnebrew with a 29-yard touchdown pass before leaving the game with a shoulder bruise.

Esiason returned and completed touchdown passes of 39 and 8 yards to James Brooks and 5 yards to Anthony Munoz on a tackle eligible play.

Esiason threw a 39-yard touchdown pass to Brooks on the first play after Anderson was injured. Esiason then returned to the sidelines and slammed his helmet to the ground.

"He didn't like coming out," Wyche said. "But the team needed something. The obvious place to make a move is quarterback. It's the most dramatic position on the field to make a move."

Zendejas kicked field goals of 42 and 25 yards in the first half and his kicks of 30 and 46 yards in the second half provided the winning margin.

Oilers offensive tackle Bruce Matthews was happy with the new mix of passing and running plays.

"We mixed it up well and didn't have any long yardage situations," Matthews said. "It's still not as good as it should have been. It's not relief. It's just wondering why we didn't do this all along."

Moon completed 10 passes for 185 yards to Drew Hill, one of only two healthy Oilers receivers.

"I told the guys on the line 'you block and I'll catch,'" Hill said. "I guess the coaches cringed everytime Mike (Akiu) and I got hit."

Cincinnati, 6-4, missed its last chance in the final minutes.

Trailing 29-28 late in the game, Wyche elected to try for a first down at Houston's 27 rather than attempt a go-ahead field goal. Esiason was tackled for no gain and Houston took over for the closing seconds.

"It was a case of the crowd being a factor," Wyche said. "We had a long count. When the ball was snapped, there was a lot of movement (in the line). The rest of the team didn't move. The crowd came to the front. It was fortunate for Houston."

Wyche said the Oilers didn't beat his team with tricks.

"It wasn't anything different," he said. "They just executed the throw better."

Montana's return too much for Cards

Joe Montana's return to the San Francisco 49ers was right out of a storybook. After seeing his season nearly ended by a back injury, the quarterback returned to the NFL battlefield with a near-perfect day.

"It was just the fact that we had him," veteran guard Randy Cross said after Montana returned from career-threatening back surgery and led the 49ers to a 43-17 NFL victory over the St. Louis Cardinals Sunday. "Armies work hard for Lancelot but they work even harder for King Arthur."

Despite advice from doctors that 55 days after surgery was too soon to return, Montana completed 13 of 19 passes for 270 yards, including touchdown passes of 45, 40 and 44 yards to wide receiver Jerry Rice.

In other games, it was Chicago 23, Tampa Bay 3; New Orleans 6, Los Angeles Rams 0; Minnesota 24, Detroit 10; New England 30, Indianapolis 21; New York Jets 28, Atlanta 14; Buffalo 16, Pittsburgh 12; Kansas City 27, Seattle 7; Washington 16, Green Bay 7; San Diego 9, Denver 3; and New York Giants 17, Philadelphia 14.

Tonight, Miami is at Cleveland. Chargers 9, Broncos 3
San Diego, with the 25th-ranked defense in the league, used three field goals by Rolf Benirschke and two key interceptions of John Elway to upset Denver.

The victory snapped an eight-game losing streak for the Chargers.

Saints 6, Rams 0

Two field goals by Morten Andersen and a swarming defense provided New Orleans with the shutout over Los Angeles and a 5-5 record.

Andersen's field goals covered 20 yards in the third quarter and 22 yards in the fourth.

Jets 28, Falcons 14

Ken O'Brien continued his pinpoint passing as New York jumped to a 21-0 halftime lead over Atlanta en route to its eighth straight victory.

The Jets, 9-1, lead second-place New England by two games in the AFC East. O'Brien, who finished with 322 yards passing, hit on a club-record 17 consecutive passes during one stretch, and was 13 for 13 for 195 yards in the second quarter.

"It's unbelievable what he can do," Wesley Walker, who caught two of O'Brien's three second-quarter touchdown passes, said.

O'Brien's 17 consecutive completions led to the fifth-best string in NFL history, breaking the Jets' record of 15 set over a two-game span by Joe Namath. It was only three shy of the all-time record set by Kenny Anderson of the Cincinnati Bengals against Houston on Jan. 2, 1983.

Giants 17, Eagles 14

The combination of running back Joe Morris and a stingy defense worked again for New York in its victory over Philadelphia, giving the Giants their best start since 1983.

Morris scored two touchdowns and recorded his fourth consecutive 100-yard-plus game while the defense collected seven sacks, three by linebacker Lawrence Taylor.

Redskins 16, Packers 7

Jay Schroeder threw two touchdown passes and Max Zendejas kicked a 30-yard field goal as Washington sent Green Bay to its ninth loss in 10 games.

Former United States Football League quarterback Chuck Fusina started the second half for the Packers, substituting for injured starter Randy Wright. Fusina completed 12 of 16 for 99 yards.

Patriots 30, Colts 21

New England spotted Indianapolis a 14-3 lead before quarterback Tony Eason warmed up and threw two third-quarter touchdowns.

The loss dropped the Colts to 0-10, the only winless team in the NFL.

The Patriots have won their last seven meetings with the Colts.

Bears 23, Bucs 3

Chicago, the defending Super Bowl champions, rebounded from Monday's defeat as Mike Tomczak took over at quarterback, passing for one touchdown and running for another to beat Tampa Bay.

Walter Payton, playing with a dislocated toe, ran for 139 yards.

Tomczak, who was relieved by former USFL quarterback Doug Flutie late in the fourth quarter, completed 11 of 24 passes for 265 yards. Two of the four scoring drives he directed covered 92 and 91 yards.

"I was not smooth, but good enough," said Flutie, who entered the game with just over four minutes to play and threw one incomplete pass.

The Bears lead the overall series 13-4.

Vikings 24, Lions 10

Minnesota stayed in the playoff chase in the NFC as Tommy Kramer threw for 284 yards and a touchdown to defeat

Detroit.

The victory improved Minnesota's record to 6-4 while the Lions, whose losing streak reached four games, fell to 3-7.

Bills 16, Steelers 12

Robb Riddick rushed for 108 yards and a touchdown to key Buffalo's victory over Pittsburgh and make Marv Levy's coaching debut a success.

"A person comes into a situation very apprehensive about what might happen the first time out there and his team does not have a good record," Levy, who replaced the fired Hank Bullough as Bills head coach on Monday, said.

The Bills also scored on a 3-yard pass from Jim Kelly to Andre Reed, and a 29-yard field goal by Scott Norwood.

Chiefs 27, Seahawks 7

Bill Kenney, who replaced Todd Blackledge in Kansas City's seventh game, threw three touchdowns as Seattle fell victim to the pass for the second straight week.

Last Sunday the Seahawks were routed 38-7 by the Jets and now have lost four straight to drop to 5-5.

The Chiefs improved to 7-3, their best record since a 7-2-1 start in 1971 resulted in their last playoff appearance.

Aggies nearing lock on Cotton

By DENNE H. FREEMAN
AP Sports Writer

The 1987 Cotton Bowl is beginning to take on a maroon-and-white hue.

The defending champion Texas A&M Aggies have a two-game lead with three to play, including a 2:30 p.m. regionally televised (ABC) meeting with the deflated Arkansas Razorbacks on Saturday in Little Rock.

Thanks to Baylor's 29-14 victory over the 10th-ranked Arkansas Razorbacks on Saturday, the Aggies are sitting pretty.

"There's no way in the world anybody can catch the Aggies now," said Baylor Coach Grant Teaff.

A&M has games remaining against Arkansas, Texas Christian and Texas on Thanksgiving night.

"I guess you could say there is still a mathematical chance, but that's about it," Teaff said. "The Aggies are back again."

While A&M rested, they watched Baylor's come-from-behind victory on television. Arkansas Coach Ken Hatfield said it was one of the toughest losses he's had.

"We're hurt as bad as we've ever been hurt before," Hatfield said. "It was a tough loss emotionally for our team and all of Arkansas. We didn't accomplish our mission of coming down here and winning to give us a chance to get to the Cotton Bowl."

"Now, everyone in the league has at least two defeats except Texas A&M. They still have three league games left to play, but they are playing very well. It will be difficult for us to still have a chance for the Cotton Bowl but it isn't impossible yet."

Texas A&M is 5-0 in SWC play. Other teams with two league losses include Texas Tech, Texas and Southern Methodist. SMU isn't eligible for title consideration.

In other SWC games on Saturday, Texas downed Houston 30-10 and Texas Tech whipped Texas Christian 36-14 to keep alive its bowl hopes.

Southern Methodist was humiliated on the non-conference front, falling 61-29 to Notre Dame in South Bend, Ind. It was SMU's worst whipping in 70 years.

The SWC finished the year 15-11 against outside competition.

Baylor was all but assured a bowl bid, and the Bluebonnet, Independence, Freedom and Sun Bowls are courting the team.

Mrs. Aquino says 'people power' would thwart coup

TOKYO (AP) — Philippine President Corazon Aquino, in Japan in search of financial aid and investment, warned those said to be plotting against her that she will call the populace into the streets to counter any coup attempt.

Mrs. Aquino, who arrived in Tokyo today on a four-day trip intended to bolster her country's struggling economy, left the armed forces on full alert and repeated her order to Chief of Staff Gen. Fidel V. Ramos "to repel any attacks" during her absence.

The 53-year-old leader acknowledged that the coup rumors complicated her visit here.

She flew in to Haneda airport on a special flight and immediately boarded a helicopter that took her to the government guest house where she was to attend a welcoming ceremony and later meet with Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone.

Before leaving Manila, Mrs. Aquino, in a speech Sunday to a dentists' convention, warned "self-appointed messiahs" that she would "call people out into the streets if necessary" to defend her administration.

Reports in Manila, the Philippine capital, have said officers loyal to Defense Minister Juan Ponce Enrile were planning to move against the 9-month-old government, ostensibly to remove ministers and other officials considered leftist or "inept."

Enrile has been critical of Mrs. Aquino's peace overtures to Communist rebels and has also suggested she call new presidential elections to validate her mandate.

Mrs. Aquino has refused to call a new presidential election, saying she won the February ballot. Ferdinand Marcos claimed victory in that election, which observers said was marred by fraud.

Reports of the plot said the rebel officers hoped to keep Mrs. Aquino on as a figurehead president.

Enrile was a leader of the military rebellion that triggered the "people power" revolution that ousted Marcos and brought Mrs. Aquino to power in February. Enrile was among the officials who saw Mrs. Aquino off at Manila International Airport.

The Japan visit was Mrs. Aquino's third trip abroad since she took office and was in response to an invitation that originally had been issued to Marcos, now living in exile in Hawaii.

Mrs. Aquino was expected to ask the Japanese for massive new government aid and infusions of private investment to help revive the Philippines economy, struggling under a $26 billion debt inherited from Marcos' 20-year regime.

Japan already is the second largest donor of aid to the Philippines after the United States, and officials have been described in press reports as cool toward any major new aid grants to Manila.

New faces in House come from diverse backgrounds

WASHINGTON (AP) — When the 100th Congress assembles in January, its House ranks will include a Cheyenne Indian, a millionaire glass magnate, a sharecropper's son, a Shakespearean professor and the heir to the Kennedy political legacy.

Among the 50 new members who will take their seats, most have followed the tried-and-true route to political prominence: election to local office, then to statehouses through organization and careful local spadework.

But among the House freshman class of 27 Democrats and 23 Republicans — two of whom are making return appearances — several stand out because of their uniqueness, their heritage or their accomplishments.

The most recognizable name will be that of Joseph P. Kennedy II, who as the oldest male in his generation of Kennedys wears the family political mantle. Kennedy easily won the Boston seat of retiring House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr. and will automatically be more visible than most House newcomers.

Kennedy already will have a valuable connection on Capitol Hill in the form of his uncle, Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., but also may have something to prove, since he has no previous experience in elective office.

Connie Morella is a Republican lawmaker elected from a Maryland suburb of Washington. Aides describe her as a driven overachiever who campaigns with gusto and is happiest with a full agenda.

Morella and her husband reared nine children — three of her own and six of her sister, who died of cancer. She is a Shakespearean scholar on leave from Montgomery College, where she taught at the same time she served in the Maryland Legislature.

Two days after being elected, Morella was out at subway stations shaking the hands of commuters and thanking them for their votes. "Someone has to pull her off the street and get her back to the office," said Sohrab Sobhani, a campaign volunteer.

Ben Nighthorse Campbell, whose father was a Northern Cheyenne Indian, spent several years in a California orphanage as a child when his mother, a Portuguese immigrant, was hospitalized. He was captain of the U.S. judo team in the 1964 Olympics, a sport he took up after being bested in a fight with a Japanese-American acquaintance as a child.

Campbell, a Democrat from Colorado, will be only the second American Indian to serve in the House, according to the American Indian Historical Society.

Amory Houghton Jr., 60, is a newcomer to elective office but has a long business and political bloodline in western New York. His grandfather founded Corning Glass Works, where he has been chief executive, and his father was U.S. ambassador to France.

Dallas man faces trial, judgments in farm deals

DALLAS (AP) — A Dallas man is at the center of a complex investigation involving farm properties in several states and is accused of contributing to the failure of a bank in Rexford, Kan.

Nasib Ed Kalliel, a native of North Dakota, faces millions of dollars in court judgments, including $4.1 million in debts to Houston's Texas Commerce Bank.

The criminal charges pending against Kalliel grew out of the failure of the Rexford State Bank in 1984. A federal judge has ordered Kalliel to repay the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. $8.7 million in damages in that case.

In Texas, two bank holding companies claim that they both have the same collateral on loans involving Kalliel and that the collateral, 158,000 pounds of rice, has disappeared.

Kalliel, who is free on $25,000 bond while awaiting trial, will plead innocent, said his attorney, William Bunch. Kalliel was not available for comment. Directory assistance did not have a telephone listing for him.

Investigators say Kalliel's success in persuading farmers and bankers to deal with him stems in part from an illusion of wealth and connections he fostered.

Kalliel presented what investigators say was a false financial statement claiming business assets of $184 million and a personal wealth of $81 million. He claimed to own 312 farms in 19 states, the franchise for bus transportation to and from the Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport and resort developments on Mustang Island and Padre Islands, authorities allege.

Investigators also said that he claimed he was an official trade representative for Jordan, Mexico and Saudi Arabia.

Chuck Rutenbeck, an investigator for the Iowa attorney general, said Kalliel sought out farmers who were near bankruptcy and promised to arrange loans and take over their debts if they would give him controlling interest in their farms.

In return, Kalliel said he would allow the farmers to continue living on the land, receive an annual salary and share in profits, according to Rutenbeck.

The farmers had to pay Kalliel substantial advance fees for arranging loans that would bail them out, Rutenbeck said.

"I've been in this office for 12 years with most of my work in fraud, and his has been the most beautiful — if I can use that word — con I've ever seen perpetrated," Rutenbeck said. "One can only step back and admire the intricacy of it."

One of the people who was involved with Kalliel is George Landreth, a San Antonio businessman. He owned a 12,000-acre rice farm in Minnesota and had a debt of $6 million.

Kalliel was supposed to assume the debt, but it was soon in default, Landreth said. Court documents allege that Kalliel sold nearly $750,000 in harvested rice and equipment that had been pledged as collateral to what was then the Mercantile Bank in Dallas.

Group walks for pregnant women

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — A group of anti-abortion activists has begun a 55-mile walk to raise money for a center where women can live while completing their term of pregnancy, officials say.

The Rev. Keith Galbraith, chairman of El Pasoans for Life, said Sunday that eight walkers have pledged to complete the trek from El Paso's east side that will end Tuesday with a rally in Las Cruces, N.M.

"A lot of women are literally being dragged and pushed into abortion clinics against their will by lovers and family members," he said. "They are being coerced into having abortions."

Galbraith said about $5,000 already had been raised toward the purchase of a six-bedroom home in El Paso that will provide a supportive environment for women who wish to have their babies there.

The eight walkers, five from El Paso and three from Las Cruces, expect to be joined by other abortion opponents along the way.

Names in the News

RANCHO MIRAGE, Calif. (AP) — Entertainer Frank Sinatra could be hospitalized for up to 10 days after successful surgery for diverticulitis, a painful intestinal inflammation, a hospital spokesman said.

The two-hour emergency operation for Sinatra, 70, was Sunday, said Cliff Brown, spokesman for Eisenhower Medical Center.

Sinatra had been appearing in Atlantic City, N.J., at the Golden Nugget Hotel, but canceled further shows when the ailment struck, his spokesman, Lee Solters, said Sunday in Los Angeles. Sinatra flew home in great pain to Palm Springs, where he was admitted Saturday night to the medical center.

Dr. Alan Altman, Sinatra's physician, said in Palm Springs that the entertainer had acute diverticulitis and would probably wear a colostomy bag to collect waste for about eight weeks after the surgery until his intestines heal and can be restored to normal.

"He should be fine," Altman said before the surgery to remove the inflamed part of the intestine.

He said Sinatra would not be allowed visitors for the next several days and no telephone calls for 48 hours.

Solters said Sinatra, who was born in New Jersey, had been due to conclude his Atlantic City performances Sunday and "tried to make an attempt to continue, but the pain was too severe."

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — The dance band Nu Shooz capped a 77-city U.S. and European tour with a homecoming trip to show off its first gold record.

"We'd like to dedicate this song to all the fans who've kept us alive for the last seven years," lead singer Valerie Day, whose husband John Smith is the band's leader, told the enthusiastic nightclub crowd Friday night.

The band's debut album on Atlantic Records, "Poolside," went gold last month when a half-million copies were sold.

U.S. higher education policy risks 'national suicide,' new report says

WASHINGTON (AP) — A national commission headed by former Secretary of Education Terrel H. Bell says the United States is risking "national suicide" unless it sharply increases spending on its schools and colleges.

The academic and civic leaders, in a report commissioned by a state college group, rebuked President Reagan and others who have sought to cut aid for college students.

The report, released Sunday, called for a domestic Marshall Plan to nearly double the number of college-educated adults by the turn of the century.

"Public officials who propose budget reductions in education at a time when the republic is handicapped by the burden of an undereducated populace are unthinkingly abetting an act of national suicide," the Bell commission said. "Their priorities are wrong."

The 56-page report, "To Secure the Blessings of Liberty," was prepared for the American Association of State Colleges and Universities, which is holding its annual meeting in Phoenix. Bell was addressing the group today on the recommendations.

The 22-member panel included Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton and former Mississippi Gov. William Winter, as well as a half-dozen college presidents, the heads of both national teacher unions and the chancellor of New York City's schools.

The association represents 372 four-year campuses that enroll 2.5 million students and award a third of all bachelor degrees.

It urged states to keep college tuitions as low as possible, in part to help recruit more minority students and stop the growth of "an American underclass." It also urged the state colleges to take the lead in producing the 1 million new teachers needed by public schools in the next decade, and to help cut the dropout rate in half.

Committee member resigns, criticizes conservative slant

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Southern Baptist seminary education will suffer if conservatives continue to win out in a decade-long struggle with moderates in the divided denomination, said a member who resigned from a peace committee.

The Rev. Cecil Sherman, an outspoken moderate from Fort Worth, Texas, resigned after the committee accepted a message by six Southern Baptists seminary presidents affirming the inerrancy of the Bible and the goal of balanced teaching in the schools.

"The seminaries have taken a long step toward answering their critics," Sherman said. "What they have done will satisfy for a season, but fundamentalists will ask for more concessions from our educators. In the end, serious theological education will wither."

Some moderates say they feel the panel is leaning toward the conservative, or fundamentalist views of the controversy among members of the 14.5-million-member denomination.

"It shows the fundamentalists have the power to put pressure on the seminaries," said the Rev. David George of Nashville's Immanuel Baptist Church. "I think the seminary presidents made the statement in order to head off a more extreme resolution of the situation at the national convention next year in St. Louis."

The statement by the seminary presidents, made public during a retreat at Glorieta, N.M., was hailed by some peace committee members as a breakthrough for peace within the church body.

"The meeting produced the most far-reaching potential of any we have had in the year and a half we have been in existence," said the Rev. Charles Fuller of Roanoke, Va., the panel's chairman. "We saw more reason for hope than at any time in the life of the committee."

Conservatives believe in the doctrine of inerrancy, which affirms that the biblical text contains no errors, including in historical or scientific matters. The conservatives have accused moderates of tolerating and sometimes advancing liberal attitudes about scripture in Southern Baptist agencies, especially the seminaries.

The Rev. Jerry Sutton, conservative pastor of Nashville's Two Rivers Baptist Church, said he is comfortable with the seminary presidents' statement.

INSIGHT INTO EYESIGHT

Dr. Fred H. Simmons

USING ANOTHER'S GLASSES

People who use glasses for reading can borrow someone else's reading glasses and suffer no harmful effects. In most cases, the "borrowed" glasses will simply not work too well. After all, everyone's vision problems are somewhat unique. Your degree of nearsightedness or farsightedness will never be EXACTLY the same as someone else's. That is why glasses have to be prescribed for your eyes—in order to give them the exact correction which is called for.

When you have an eye examination, the doctor gives you a prescription for corrective lenses if they are needed. That prescription represents a precise measurement of your vision problems. The lenses will be ground in a specific way, according to the needs of your eyes. That means BOTH eyes, because no two eyes are exactly the same either.

In a pinch, a pair of borrowed glasses may help, but not for long. In fact, overuse of the wrong glasses can cause eyestrain and headaches.
