Hispanics form lines for amnesty

By ROBERT BARR
Associated Press Writer

Today was amnesty day for an estimated 3 million illegal immigrants, the beginning of a yearlong opportunity to become a U.S. citizen, and some applicants stood in line through the night.

In Harlingen, people started lining up at midnight outside a legalization center and about 100 people were in line when the doors opened at 8 a.m.

"I've been here since midnight, because I thought there would be a lot of people," said Maria Sanchez, who is originally from Nuevo Leon, Mexico, but now lives in Mission.

Between 750,000 and 1 million aliens are expected to apply for legalization in Texas, said INS spokesman Mario Ortiz.

In Florida, the busiest office was in Hialeah, a heavily Latin, blue-collar city northwest of Miami. INS supervisor Eric McLeod said about 150 people were lined up when the doors opened at 8 a.m. and 500 applications had been handed out by 10:30 a.m.

"I love it when a plan comes together, finally," said Al Giugni, head of the Immigration and Naturalization Service's El Paso sector, which includes New Mexico. "It's been quite an experience, trying to put the pieces together."

A local shop donated a 7-foot brass Statue of Liberty for the INS legalization center. Giugni had it placed in front of the center's main doors.

"It's a symbol of what this is all about," Giugni said Monday. "We have a huge banner we'll put in front that says, 'Out of the Shadows.'"

The program offers amnesty only to those who illegally entered the country before Jan. 1, 1982, and have lived here continuously since then.

The first alien to be processed and granted temporary residency today was Daniel Pelino Roden from the Philippines, said Joe Flanders, an INS spokesman in Los Angeles. Roden submitted his application papers in Guam, a U.S. territory in the Pacific.

Because of southern Florida's large population of Haitians, Cubans and Central Americans, the INS set up five special offices in the Miami area to help with processing today. Thirteen groups, including colleges, church groups and migrant-worker associations, also are offering help.

"The INS estimate is probably in the realm of 150,000 to 250,000 (applications) statewide, but that's a pure guesstimate," said Miami District Director Perry Rivkind.

No one expects all those eligible to show up today. And the estimate of 3

Contra hearing begins

By DAVID ESPO

WASHINGTON — Congress began its long-awaited hearings today into the Iran-Contra affair, and a key lawmaker bluntly challenged White House claims that President Reagan was unaware that aides were soliciting funds for the Contra rebels at a time when government aid was banned.

"I think the president should check that statement," Sen. Daniel Inouye, D-Hawaii, said on ABC's "Good Morning America" hours before he brought down the gavel to open the most publicized congressional investigation since Watergate.

"I think he should look over the facts."

Inouye's comments underscored the political risk to

Peet declared Ward 2 chief

The City Commission today canvassed votes from Saturday's runoff election and declared Pampa High School government teacher Richard Peet duly elected as Ward 2 commissioner.

Peet defeated opponent W.A. Morgan in the race for the one-year unexpired term formerly occupied by Mayor David McDaniel.

Due to an illness in his family, Peet was not able to attend today's special called meeting to be sworn in, Mayor McDaniel said. Arrangements for Peet to take the oath of office will be made later, the mayor said.

Peet won the election with 635 votes, or 58 percent, with Morgan gaining 453 votes, or 42 percent.

Emergency dispatch on line

By LARRY HOLLIS
News Editor

A new centralized dispatch number for emergency police, fire and ambulance services is now in effect in Pampa. Mayor David McDaniel announced at a press conference Monday morning.

The new number — 669-1177 — provides a single listing for Pampa residents needing to reach emergency personnel involving one or more of the three services in the city.

"This single emergency number will place a caller in contact with all of the emergency services, therefore reducing the confusion of which service to call or what number to dial," McDaniel said.

The central dispatch system was formed by a joint effort of the city, its police and fire departments, the Office of Emergency Management and Rural-Metro Corp., the paramedic ambulance service.

"Beginning today, our citizens will be asked to make note of and use the new emergency number, 669-1177, whenever the need arises for fire, police or medical assistance," McDaniel said.

The new number will be answered at the new central dispatch center located in the Pampa Police Department at City Hall, the mayor said. The new center will be known as Pampa Emergency Services, and the dispatcher will answer the telephone call with that name.

The caller then can explain his needs, and the dispatcher will then contact the service or services required at the scene.

"Because all of the emergency services will be centrally dispatched, a faster inter-agency response can be achieved," McDaniel said.

"For instance, a motor vehicle accident may require the services of the Police Department, Fire Department and paramedics," he explained. "These agencies can now be dispatched simultaneously."

Thus, an individual shouldn't have to make three calls, nor should an officer, firefighter or paramedic arriving on the scene then have to call in for other emergency personnel assistance in most cases.

This should also prevent some of the confusion that has existed in the past when someone had to make an emergency call, the mayor said. Often, because of the emotional state of a person faced

Looper earns Canadian post

By CATHY SPAULDING
Staff Writer

CANADIAN — City Council members removed the "interim" from City Manager Dean Looper's title and permanently put him in charge of city affairs Monday.

Looper, 46, the city's director of public works, was named interim city manager after former City Manager Jody Butler resigned in January. Butler is now the city manager at Littlefield.

City officials interviewed three finalists in closed session before selecting Looper. The finalists included former Glenpool, Okla., City Manager Robert Wherry, 39, and retiring Fort Sam Houston post commander Col. Bob Moore, 52, who drove to Canadian Monday night for their interviews.

The finalists were pulled from 23 applicants including two women, a black and a man who claimed he never lived outside Mankato, Minn.

Looper

Canadian Mayor Therese Abraham said Monday that although some council members had made their choices before the interviews, the choice was not an automatic one.

Hart denies affair with beauty queen

MIAMI (AP) — The woman who visited Gary Hart over the weekend at his Capitol Hill townhouse says she traveled to the Bahamas with the Democratic presidential front-runner in March, but the two slept on separate boats.

The revelation Monday came after The Miami Herald reported Hart and Donna Rice spent Friday night and most of Saturday together at the townhouse while his wife, Lee, was in Denver.

The 50-year-old former Colorado senator, whose campaign has been dogged by rumors of womanizing, on Saturday told the Herald that the single Rice, 29, was a "friend of a friend." He de-

Dying often hurts so bad

By DEE DEE LARAMORE

Hospice philosophy recognizes that dying patients suffer from four types of pain — physical, social, emotional and spiritual. One of hospice's main objectives is to control the pain on all levels so that patients are comfortable and able to relate to the world around them as much as they are physically able.

Writhing in agony is not a dignified way to die. Each type of pain creates a vicious circle of reactions, many of which overlap with the others. Physical pain causes depression, insomnia, anxiety. Emotional pain goes hand-in-hand with anger, fear and depression. Spiritual pain is followed by concern about relationships with God, church and all people. Social pain includes fears about finances, security, and relationships with those around the dying patients.

Hospice provides painkillers

By DEE DEE LARAMORE
Special to The Pampa News

"We are committed to dealing with the whole spectrum of pain," emphasized Dr. Jerry Holman, medical director for St. Anthony's Hospice in Amarillo.

"That includes understanding the patient as a human being... being aware of his needs, being aware of his pain, and taking care of all pains."

Hospice philosophy identifies four kinds of pain experienced by dying patients — physical, psychological and social.

"The process of dying is hard work," Dr. Holman explained recently while addressing a class on hospice care from Clarendon College — Pampa Center.

"We had a gentleman come in (St. Anthony's Hospice) a couple of weeks ago who had a lot of reminiscing to do. He spent the next 10 days taking care of business. He finished it on Sunday and now he's in the active phase of dying. During that time, we had to take care of his pain so he could get his business completed."

Control of pain is one of the major purposes of hospice care. Pain-relieving drugs are given at a hospice on a regular schedule rather than waiting until patients are hurting so badly that they must ask for help. Since patients respond differently to different medications, hospice personnel try to find the most helpful combination for the individual.

The most widely used preparation for pain control in a hospice is called the "hospice cocktail," adapted for the United States from the "Brompton's cocktail" developed at St. Christopher's Hospice in London, England and used for terminal cancer pain. Brompton's is a combination of morphine sulphate (or heroin), cocaine, ethyl alcohol and flavorings such as grenadine syrup. This medication is given orally and sometimes in combination with antidepressants and tranquilizers. Each patient's dosage is adjusted so that the pain is controlled, yet the patient is not oversedated.

Heroin, cocaine and alcohol might strike the reader as pretty potent stuff to be giving someone who is dying. In fact, this practice has sometimes been criticized by other members of the medical profession. Pampa family physician Dr. Robert Philips said that some doctors are concerned that using such narcotics might cause the patients to become addicted.

LANNETA P. REAGAN

BORGER - Services for Lanneta P. Reagan, 75, of Borger, sister of Groom and McLean residents, were to be at 2 p.m. today in Minton Memorial Chapel in Borger with Leonard Forsythe, Boarder Bible Baptist Church pastor, officiating.

Burial will be in White Deer Cemetery under the direction of Minton-Chatwell Funeral Directors.

Mrs. Reagan died Saturday in Denton. Born in Woodward, Okla., she moved to Borger in 1943. She was retired after having worked in retail sales for a number of years. She was preceded in death by her husband, Otis Reagan, in 1984.

Survivors include a daughter, Mareta Sue Wright, Sanger; two brothers, Dale Gaston, Borger, and Elwood Gaston, McLean; four sisters, Irene Kotara, Groom; Lucille Wilkerson of Wyoming; Lotis Manajek, Mesquite, and Gladys Compton, Las Vegas, Nev.; three grandchildren, seven great-grandchildren and a great-great-grandchild.

MATTIE B. HEATH

Services are pending with Carmichael-Whitley Funeral Directors for Mattie B. Heath, 87, who died today.

Mrs. Heath moved to Pampa in 1923 from Fort Worth. She married J.P. Heath on July 1, 1943 at Lovington, N.M. She worked for J.C. Penney for about 35 years. She was a member of the First Baptist Church.

Survivors include her husband, J.P., of the home; a sister, Laura Peebles, Odessa; four grandchildren and four great-grandchildren. The family requests memorials be made to the First Baptist Church Building Fund.

Dispatch

with an emergency or the absence of a telephone book nearby, someone could be uncertain which service to contact or which number to call.

"Unfortunately, 911 is not currently available in Pampa, but our new central dispatch service will have many of the advantages of 911 available to our citizens," McDaniel said.

"Like 911, our new emergency number will be easy to remember," he added. "You will notice that it has '911' built into this number, 669-1177."

McDaniel said the city does not yet have the capacity for the 911 number, but "this is a good, solid alternative for now."

The mayor said there hadn't been many major problems with having the three separate emergency listings, "but this will be faster."

McDaniel said the city and the emergency services will be trying to get the new number out to Pampa residents so that "hopefully we can minimize that confusion" by making people aware of the single emergency number.

Until the new telephone book is published later this spring, Southwestern Bell Telephone has agreed to "bridge" the old emergency numbers.

"If a caller dials one of the old numbers, it will automatically be switched to the new number," McDaniel said.

The new number will also affect those citizens of White Deer and Miami that depend on Rural-Metro for paramedic service. Residents of those cities should also make note of the new number, McDaniel said.

New phone stickers displaying the new emergency number will be placed in city utility bills and also will be distributed by the emergency services. The phone stickers also will be available at some of the local businesses, McDaniel said.

Stickers also will be distributed in White Deer and Miami to remind those residents of the new number to call for ambulance services.

"Of further benefit to our citizens is a savings in their tax dollars," McDaniel said. "Conservative estimates are that the city will save $5,000 per year after the initial investment. The savings, of course, in future years should be even greater."

The mayor noted that the system was implemented with an initial investment of approximately $5,000, which will be recovered in its first year of operation.

The need for a central dispatch service was recognized about a year ago, McDaniel said. With the support of City Manager Bob Hart, a committee was established to investigate the idea. The same committee was later given the task of implementing the system.

The committee, chaired by Detective Gary Boydston of the Police Department, was a cooperative effort of all the emergency services in Pampa, McDaniel said.

Serving on the committee were Jeanne Gould, Frieda Bezner and Lt. Roy Denman of the Police Department; Chief J.D. Ray and Assistant Chief Ray Fisher of the Fire Department; Steve Vaughn, director of the Office of Emergency Management; and Jim Howard, Gary James and Chris Black of Rural-Metro.

"Today we can show you a result of their labor," McDaniel said Monday, commending the committee members for their efforts and expressing appreciation on behalf of the city and the citizens.

After the conference, McDaniel demonstrated the number by calling the Pampa Emergency Services number from the Administrative Suite conference room over an intercom phone system that broadcast the call and response for those attending the press conference.

Those in attendance also visited the central dispatch office in the police station.

Canadian

"One of Dean's drawbacks was that he lacked formal education in city government," Abraham said, adding that Looper's experience as a city employee in Canadian and Amarillo — where he was a new construction inspector — helped.

The selection of city manager comes during a time of uncertainty in the Canadian Police Department. Looper suspended Police Chief John Bradshaw in April after hearing reports that Bradshaw told a law enforcement class that he was teaching that he knew a man sent to prison for arson was innocent. District Attorney Guy Hardin, who made the claim in a letter to Bradshaw, is now seeking a pardon for the convicted arsonist, Claude Gene Grinder.

City officials report no progress in clearing up the suspension.

Despite the inopportune timing, Abraham does not believe the council felt any pressure to keep or to get rid of Looper because of the way he handled the suspension.

"The police matter would have been taken care of before a new city manager would have taken over," Abraham said. "But I think Looper has handled the matter very well, so that certainly has helped him."

Looper, however, believes the timing of the Bradshaw suspension was more of a detriment.

"It focused on a negative situation," Looper said, adding that he feels his past experience with the city would be the more important qualification.

Looper said he's putting the police chief suspension on hold until he hears more from Hardin or Bradshaw.

Instead, the new city manager will turn his attention to preparing a budget for the 1987-88 fiscal year.

"That's the major thing I'd like to do, to bring the city a good, operable budget," Looper said, adding that the budget will be a challenge in the "vacillating economy."

"We are definitely looking at cuts, major cuts in some departments," Looper said. "We may have to restructure some departments. We may have to double up on some jobs."

When he was interim city manager, Looper had to cut down on some of his public works director duties.

As a result, he observed, some city public works projects "have been kind of put on hold."

"But it was nothing serious," he said. "I had to call all the department heads in and put the burden on them, gave them the responsibility. And they accepted it well."

Looper said he will "not immediately hire a new public works director."

"I'm working on alternatives," he explained. "I'm kind of watching the economy."

Looper joined the Canadian city staff as water superintendent in the summer of 1982. He became director of public works in October 1986. Before moving to Canadian, he was new construction inspector for the city of Amarillo from 1979 to 1982.

Peet

In other action this morning, the commission authorized the mayor to execute a contract with the Pampa Chamber of Commerce concerning economic development.

The action was deferred from last week's regular commission meeting to change requirements concerning the board of directors of the chamber.

The contract calls for the city to participate financially in the economic development program, with the chamber serving as the main agency to implement the program. Because of its financial assistance, the city wants an elected official of the city to be a voting member of the chamber board of directors, with the city manager serving as an ex officio, non-voting member.

Currently, City Manager Bob Hart is an elected member of the chamber's board.

The contract notes that the chamber's current by-laws will not permit implementation immediately of the requirement for an elected official to be on the board. However, the contract states that Hart's current membership on the chamber board "shall be deemed by the parties to fulfill this understanding" until the chamber amends its by-laws.

The chamber is expected to change its by-laws for the contract agreement to become effective with the next fiscal year.

The contract specifies that the city will provide $45,000 in funding during the city's current fiscal year for the economic development program, with the chamber agreeing to use the funds solely for such activities.

The chamber also agrees to keep proper accounting records relating to the expenditure of the city's funds, with an independent audit furnished annually to the city.

For their leadoff witness, the committees turned to retired Maj. Gen. Richard V. Secord, a man said to be deeply involved in the Iran-Contra scandal.

Secord refused to appear before earlier investigative groups, citing his constitutional right to avoid self-incrimination. But unlike other key witnesses, he will answer Congress' questions without limited immunity from prosecution.

Committee leaders have said they expect to use the hearings to lay out in great detail the secret supply network that former National Security Council aide Oliver L. North helped set up for the Contras.

Rice said Hart called two days later and asked her to join him and a friend, Broadhurst, for a day on a charter boat. "I invited my girlfriend (Armandt) and we set out and ended up on Bimini," she said.

She said the four stayed overnight, and the men slept on a separate boat from the women. The only others on the outing were five crew members.

"I guess they felt for appearance sake it was the proper thing to do," Rice said, adding that they returned to Miami early the next morning. She said she and Hart had talked on the phone "a few times" since the trip.

Mrs. Hart, who was in Denver during the weekend, canceled plans to meet her husband in New York today because of a sinus infection, said Hart campaign deputy press secretary Dawn Alexander in Denver.

Mrs. Hart believes the Herald story was "the result of the campaign having front-runner status," Alexander said.

Hearing

Reagan in the hearings, which opened before a live national television audience and are expected to run for months.

Asked about Inouye's remarks, White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater did not respond directly. "I thought Inouye was very constructive," Fitzwater said. "I have great respect for the senator."

The spokesman added, "I don't think there's any danger" to Reagan from the hearings. "We wish the committee good luck," Fitzwater said. "I'm looking forward to productive hearings."

Affair

nied she spent the night, and the Herald said Monday that its reporters did not watch the house all night.

Hart lashed out at the Herald in an interview in today's Denver Post. "I'm really angry, and it's not good to talk while you're angry," he said. "I've been victimized."

"Somebody's got to clean up your profession, my friend, or it's going to drive anyone that's got an ounce of integrity out," Hart said.

Asked about the weekend, he said his campaign manager, William Dixon, and an adviser, William Broadhurst, had told reporters all the facts Sunday night.

Rice, speaking publicly for the first time about her weekend visit to Hart's home, said Monday that it was "all very innocent."

"I don't know if he was attracted to me, but there was nothing between us," said Rice, an actress who also works as a pharmaceutical sales representative. "I'm more attracted to younger men."

Meanwhile, a telephone poll of 703 adults conducted Monday night for USA Today found 76 percent of the respondents believed the reports had hurt Hart, regardless of truth. Ten percent said they were less likely to vote for Hart.

The respondents were evenly divided on whether the media should report such details of presidential candidates' personal lives, but only 15 percent believed it was proper to stake out a candidate's home. The poll had a margin of error of plus or minus 3.6 percent, the newspaper said.

Rice said she met Hart in Aspen, Colo., at a New Year's Eve party in 1986 at the home of Don Henley, a former drummer for the rock group the Eagles. She said she and a friend, Lynn Armandt, met Hart again in March at party on a charter boat sailing near Miami.

Amnesty

million eligible people is just that — a guess. "Nobody has any real clear indication of the numbers we're talking about," said Sister Kathleen Rimar of Catholic Charities of Buffalo, N.Y. "A lot of the people may be sitting back and waiting to see what happens."

The Los Angeles Catholic Archdiocese says it already has registered 285,000 aliens who intend to seek amnesty.

"There's a high fear level and yet, an awareness that they've got to do it," said the Rev. Wayne Hawkins of the Columbia Basin Christian Ministry in Moses Lake, Wash.

"It's difficult convincing people their fears are not valid," said Hector Gonzalez, chairman of the Washington Commission on Mexican-American Affairs. "For now, we're going to trust the INS's word and the law that states the information in the applications can only be used for legalization purposes."

Russ Manchester, INS Seattle District legalization officer, said such fears are overblown. "I think there are going to be a lot of caterwaulers with egg on their faces when this thing is over," Manchester said.

Newspaper: Clements, Hobby strike budget compromise

AUSTIN (AP) — After a weekend of secret diplomacy, Gov. Bill Clements and legislative leaders have negotiated an agreement to avoid cuts in vital services by revamping the sales tax to raise additional revenue, the Dallas Times Herald reported today.

With Dallas philanthropist Peter O'Donnell and computer magnate H. Ross Perot acting as catalysts, Clements, House Speaker Gib Lewis and Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby have each made concessions to produce an intricate accord, the Times Herald said.

The newspaper said the deal calls for Hobby and Lewis to accede to Clements' demands for increased authority to control state spending in budget emergencies and agreed to create an office of inspector general for education within the governor's administration to oversee spending for public schools and colleges. Clements, who repeatedly has endorsed Comptroller Bob Bullock's plan to broaden the sales tax base as long it did not generate additional revenue, accepted a restructured sales tax that produces sufficient funds to protect education, prisons and human services, the newspaper reported.

Estimates are that $6 billion is needed to balance the proposed package. Of that, $3.1 billion would be in new sales taxes. The remaining $2.9 billion would come from continuing the temporary increases in state gasoline and sales taxes that were scheduled to expire in August.

All three pledged to push for the continuation of education reforms backed by Perot, including the appointed State Board of Education, the six-week ban on extracurricular activities for failing students, merit pay for teachers and reduced class sizes in the early elementary grades, the Times Herald said.

On Monday, the three hinted at high level developments, but refused to disclose details even as the House debated and adopted a $39.4 billion spending bill.

"We're exploring all possibilities but nothing has changed," Clements said. "Everyone is showing flexibility. We're exploring options. It's kind of like pushing a wet noodle."

Six dead in bus-truck wreck

BEAUMONT (AP) — Federal officials today began investigating the wreckage of a Trailways bus and tractor-trailer rig that collided on a rain-slicked East Texas interstate highway, leaving six people dead and 19 injured.

The bus had just left the downtown Beaumont station early Monday afternoon in a rainstorm and was heading for Houston, about 85 miles west along Interstate 10.

A moving van veered across the grass median and collided with it.

"I remember just seeing all the chairs go to the front and I climbed over and started helping everybody... telling them to calm down and trying to pull people out," said Tranae Chardon, 22, of Houston, a passenger seated in the middle of the bus.

"I had my cowboy hat on my head and the next thing I knew we were bumping something," added Matthew Sample, 18, of Lumberton, another passenger. "I saw the whole front of the bus coming toward me."

"Then I looked at the driver and he was pinned in. There was a lady pinned under him. There was a guy with a hole in the middle of his head. It looked like he was all mangled up in the motor."

The impact tore off the front half of the bus and split the right side, leaving a trail of debris and mangled bodies along the highway.

Six bodies — three men and three women — were taken to a National Guard armory that served as a temporary morgue.

David Rayburn, from the National Transportation Safety Board office in Fort Worth, said a team of investigators from Washington was joining him to probe the crash.

"We'll look at the human factor, the mechanical factor, the roadway — everything, and see what part they may have played," he said. Rayburn estimated four or five investigators would spend up to a week at the scene, but their findings would not be released until weeks later.

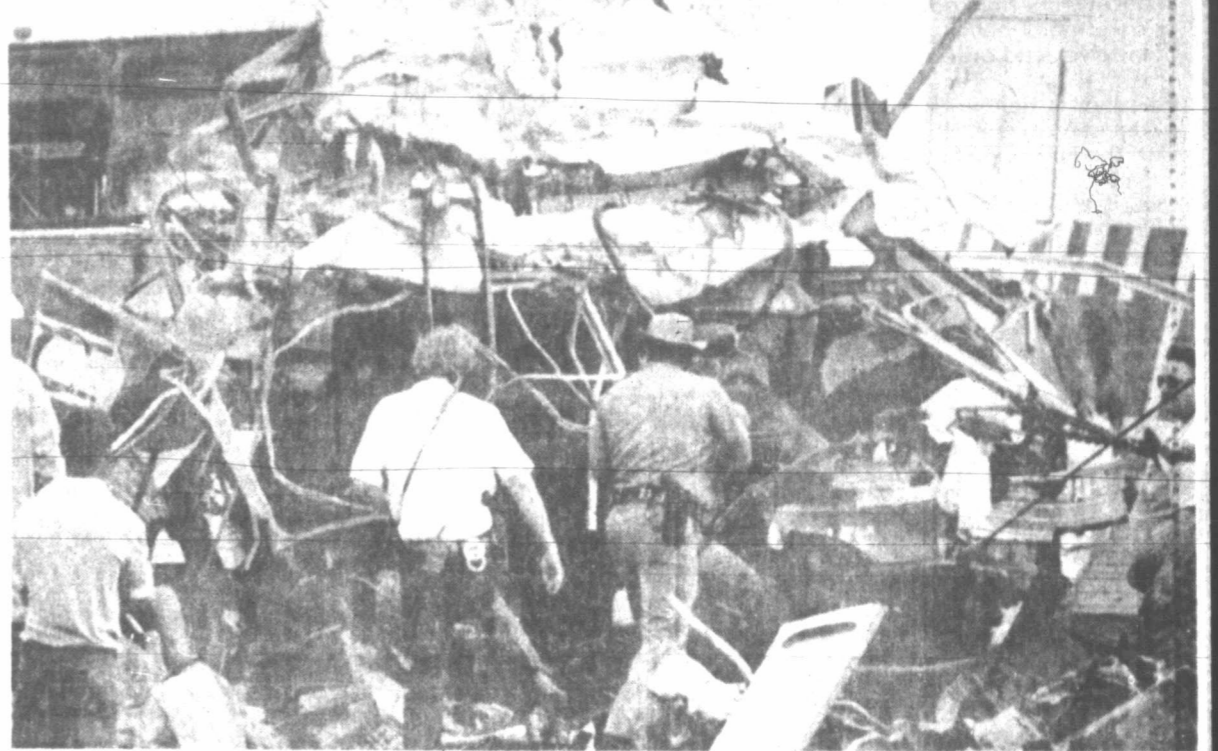

Michael Boudreaux of Thibodaux, La., said he was driving about 100 feet behind the truck and saw the accident.

"He had just gone by me... He wasn't going fast," Boudreaux said. "He was just doing a little over 55 and all of a sudden he just jackknifed."

The driver of the truck and a passenger with him were among the injured taken to three Beaumont hospitals.

The bus carried 27 passengers and the driver, who was among the dead, Trailways spokesman Tom Kissell said. The bus had left New Orleans about 7 a.m. and stopped in Lake Charles, La., before arriving in Beaumont.

"The driver has an exceptional record and has driven for 15 or 16 years," he said. "One second they were going down the freeway and the next second a moving van was on top of them."

Wedding cooling-off bill advances

AUSTIN (AP) — Texans should be engaged for at least three days before they get married, the House has decided.

In a non-record vote, the House gave tentative approval Monday to a bill that would require a three-day cooling-off period between the issuance of a marriage license and the exchange of nuptial vows.

"We're just hoping that in some small way this might place a little emphasis on people being a little more sincere. The old adage, 'Until death do us part,' doesn't mean too much any more," said sponsor Rep. Bill Arnold, D-Grand Prairie, who knew his wife for two years before they married.

The bill faces a final House vote that would send it to the Senate.

Also Monday, the House voted final approval, with no debate and no record vote, to Speaker Gib Lewis' bill that would allow state university regents to approve tuitions as much as twice as high as the minimum set by lawmakers. The bill now goes to the Senate.

The House Monday also sent the Senate a bill that would set up a basic-skills test that state college students would have to pass before advancing to junior-level courses.

Arnold told reporters that his anti-quickie marriage bill could cut the divorce rate. Under current state law, weddings can be performed immediately after issuance of a marriage license. Betrothed couples had to wait for blood test results in the past, but lawmakers abolished that provision several years ago.

"I realize it is not going to cure all the ills of society, but I've been in contact with a lot of justices of the peace and they tell me they have a lot of people who come sort of on a whimsy. They bring the license, come get married and then before the weekend is over, they'll call and say, 'Have you sent the license in yet. We're not pleased with what we've done,'" Arnold said.

About 30 states have required cooling-off periods before weddings.

The House also gave tentative approval Monday to a bill that would bar auto dealers from sticking their names on the center brake lights that are required in new cars. The bill is all that remains of Rep. Ed Watson's attempt to bar auto dealers from putting their name on a car without customer permission.

Watson, D-Deer Park, said auto dealers successfully fought the total ban.

"They've committed to me that they are going to ask the dealers not to be putting metal (name tags) on cars, and clean up their own act. If they don't, we're coming back in two years and see how they've done," he said.

Also Monday, the House voted tentative approval to a bill that would set limits on vehicle window tinting. Under the bill by Rep. Glen Repp, R-Duncanville, windshield tinting could not block more than 67 percent of light.

Jury selected in judge's trial

FORT WORTH (AP) — A jury has been seated for the federal trial of state District Judge Tom Cave, who is charged with coercing women probationers into having sex with him in exchange for leniency in court.

A panel of 10 women and two men was selected after potential jurors were screened to determine if they had been influenced by news reports about the case.

Opening arguments were scheduled for today before U.S. District Judge Mary Lou Robinson of Amarillo.

Cave was indicted in November along with attorney Ronald W. Aultman and bail bondsman Joe Dorsey Adams.

Aultman and Adams are accused of helping arrange sexual liaisons for Cave, 57, who is on a leave of absence with pay.

Wilson, left, discusses United Way stamp with Bigham and Echols. Postage stamp honors United Way

A Pampa United Way volunteer was among the first purchasers of the U.S. Postal Service's commemorative United Way postage stamp when it went on sale last week.

Public Relations Committee Chairman Reed Echols went to the local post office to purchase a sheet of the special 22 cents stamps that went on sale here Thursday. Accompanying Echols was Pampa United Way Executive Coordinator Katrina Bigham.

The Postal Service has printed the stamp to commemorate United Way's 100 years of human service. The design was unveiled in December, with its issuance last week to coincide with National Volunteer Week.

Local Postmaster Richard Wilson greeted the two local United Way members and discussed the stamp with them.

Wilson said the stamp is intended to honor the United Way concept, which was conceived 100 years ago in Denver, Colo.

Now United Way of America is the national association for 2,200 UW organizations in communities across the nation. The system brings together millions of volunteers from all walks of life and income groups to address the expanding need for health and human care services.

In conjunction with its centennial observance and in recognition of the increased demand on private sector funding, United Ways already have embarked on their collective goal of doubling community resources — volunteers and fund raising — over the next five years.

Wilson said the commemorative United Way stamp was designed by Jerry Pinkney, a resident of Croton-on-Hudson, N.Y.

Beginning at the top and extending the length of the stamp design are six horizontal bands of color approximating the shades of a rainbow and the motif of the United Way logo. Below are the overlapping profiles of six people of various ages and races, representing the diversity of people contributing to and benefiting from volunteer services.

In the upper left corner, superimposed over the color bands, is the wording "United Way" and "1887-1987" in two lines of black type. "Uniting Communities" and "USA 22" appear on a single line of black type across the base of the design.

EVER STRIVING FOR THE TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Consumers pay cost of cable TV device

The rule of thumb at federal regulatory agencies seems to be that if you eliminate or phase out a silly and expensive requirement, you have to replace it with an equally silly requirement — just to let consumers and providers of services know who's the boss. Those who provide services must not get the idea their primary job is to respond to consumer demands and preferences. The government reserves the right to intervene to tell consumers what their preferences are — or should be.

Last August the Federal Communications Commission announced it would phase out, over five years, a requirement that cable TV systems carry all local broadcast signals as part of their service. That made sense; some cable customers want such signals, and some don't.

In the process, however, the FCC required cable operators to provide A-B switches — devices that allow subscribers to switch between cable and over-the-air reception — at "no cost" to all new cable subscribers and to existing customers who request them. A National Cable Television Association study estimates this requirement will cost the cable industry nearly $1.4 billion for equipment that is not needed and may not work. The estimate may be on the high side, but anybody who doesn't understand that the costs involved will eventually be passed to cable subscribers is out of touch with reality.

There's little question some cable subscribers might like to have such switches. They are readily available in electronics and hardware stores. Those who want them can get them easily. There is no excuse to force cable companies to provide them to people who don't want or need them. And since the changeover to the new system will take five years, subscribers may find the switches have deteriorated from lack of use by the time they want to use them.

If the FCC really wants to help cable subscribers, it will look into the widespread practice of granting exclusive franchise monopolies in cities or political jurisdictions. A little competition will do more to encourage the growth of services consumers really want while keeping prices reasonable than all the Big Brother interventionism in the world.

The FCC should reconsider the silly requirement.

Crime drowns in statistics

WASHINGTON — Yes, the figures are disturbing. Three scholars, led by Professor David C. Baldus of the University of Iowa, analyzed more than 2,000 cases of murder committed in Georgia in the 1970s. They found, among other things, that defendants charged with killing white victims were 4.3 times as likely to receive a death sentence as defendants charged with killing blacks. It gives one pause.

But the U.S. Supreme Court looked at the data and said, in effect, so what? Assuming the validity of the statistics, what was their probative value in the particular case of Warren McCleskey? McCleskey, a black man, had murdered a white police officer during the armed robbery of an Atlanta furniture store.

The appeal raised no question of McCleskey's guilt. He had shot the officer in the face with a .38 revolver. Neither were there any technical questions about the trial — no questions about the admissibility of evidence, the competence of counsel, the qualifications of jurors or the instructions given by the judge. After the jury had found McCleskey guilty, the court held a separate hearing to determine the penalty. Under Georgia law, the killing of a peace officer is an "aggravating circumstance." The jury decreed that McCleskey should be put to death for his crime.

At this point the Baldus study appeared. The scholars had examined every murder case in Georgia in the 1970s in terms of 230 variable factors. Out of this mass of data certain correlations emerged. The raw numbers demonstrated that black defendants who kill white victims, such as McCleskey, statistically have the greatest likelihood of receiving the death penalty. McCleskey contended that he thus faced a risk of discrimination so palpable as to violate the Constitution's prohibition of cruel and unusual punishment. He argued in addition that blacks, so situated, are denied equal protection of the law.

Justice Lewis Powell, for the majority, correctly assessed the legal situation. In some areas of the law, legal analyses have their place. If the case involves racial discrimination in public goods or in a work place, for example, statistical data are indispensable. In times past, defendants have relied upon evidence of the systematic exclusion of blacks from juries to win new trials.

The McCleskey case presented no such evidentiary problems. Guilt is personal, not statistical. McCleskey had murdered an officer of the law. In such cases the Supreme Court specifically has upheld the power of a jury to fix a sentence of death. And as Powell observed, the sentence imposed upon McCleskey was not disproportionate to the sentences imposed in 13 other cases in Georgia involving generally similar murders. McCleskey's race provided no factor of "risk" sufficient to upset the sentence.

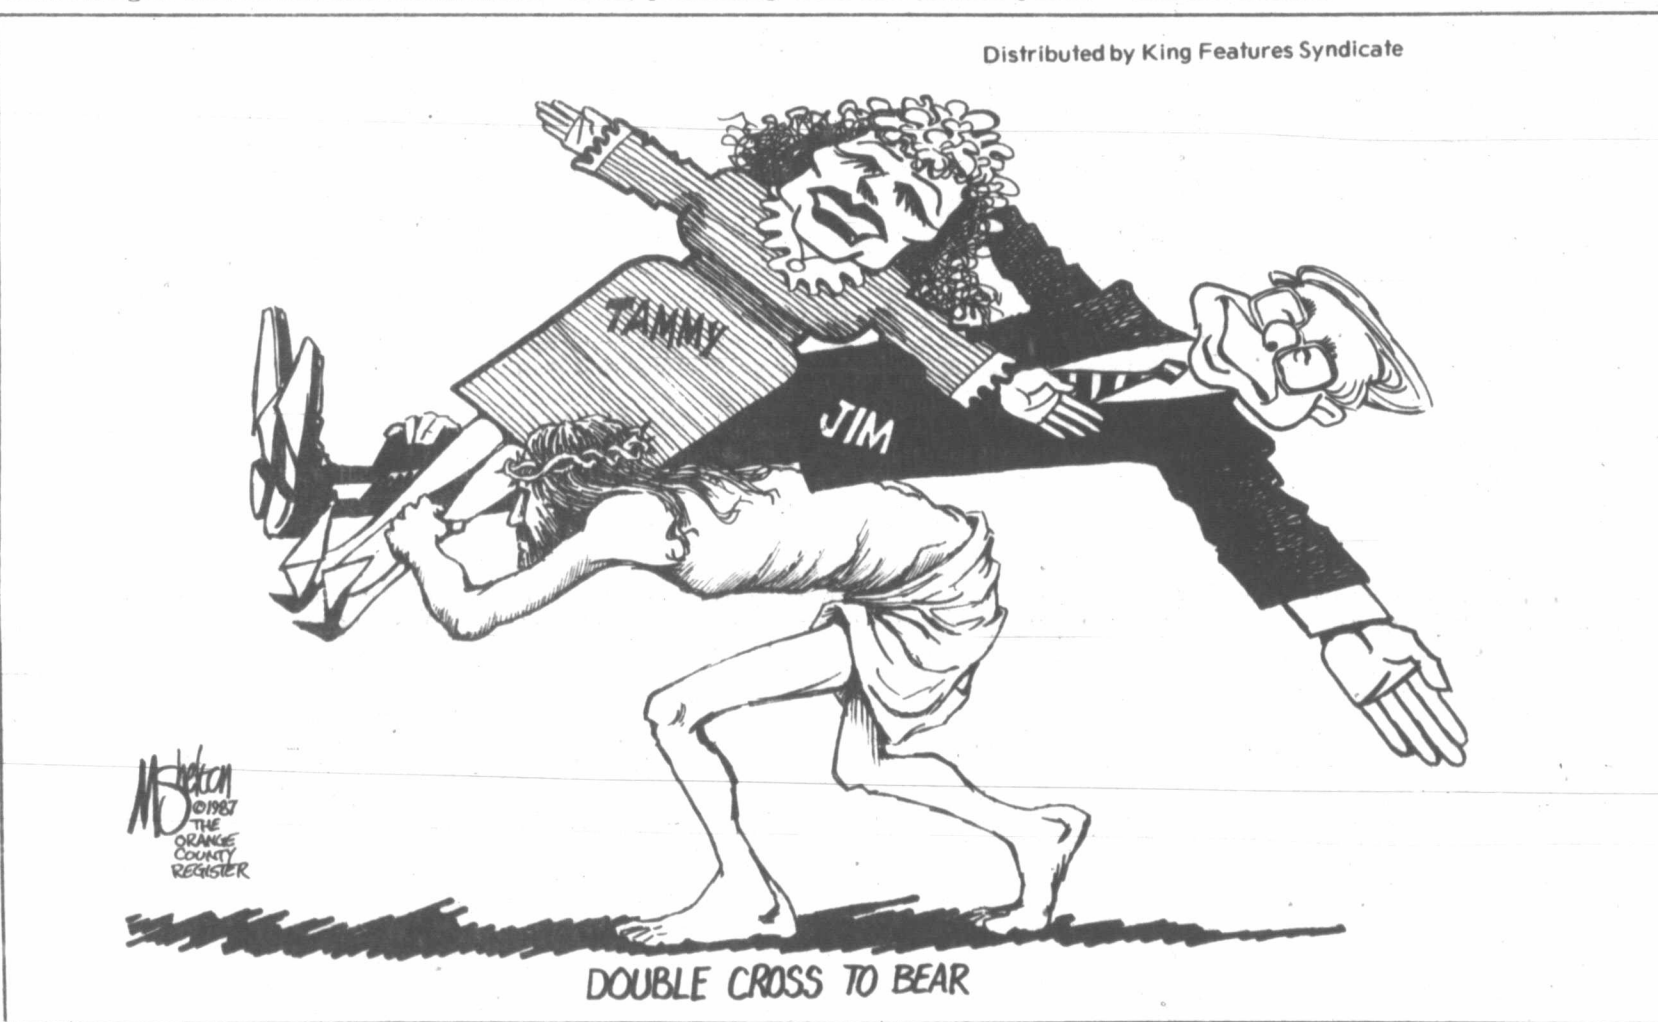

Taken to its logical conclusion, Powell said, McCleskey's claim "throws into serious question the principles that underlie our entire criminal justice system." The Eighth Amendment, prohibiting cruel and unusual punishment, is not limited to capital cases. It applies across the board. Similar statistical claims could be advanced on behalf of other defendants in other cases. Through a process of regression analysis, disparities doubtless could be shown in the sentencing of women, Chinese, Filipinos, Japanese, Koreans, Vietnamese Hispanics and American Indians. Correlations could be demonstrated between defendants and particular defense attorneys or judges. In such an effort to establish a violation of due process, the basic issue of guilt or innocence would drown in a sea of statistics.

Powell made one more point: "McCleskey's arguments are best presented to legislative bodies." It is neither the right nor the responsibility of the high court to determine appropriate punishments for particular crimes. More than two-thirds of the states have made capital punishment permissible for certain crimes. Such punishments, subject to certain safeguards and limitations, clearly are constitutional. Beyond determining on a case-by-case basis whether these conditions have been met, appellate courts have no constitutional power to intervene.

Justice William Brennan spoke for the four dissenters in an emotional review of racial discrimination in Georgia in the past. Trouble was, he never could establish the relevance of this history to the case at bar. Warren McCleskey killed a cop in cold blood. My liberal friends, before they leap on Lewis Powell, should keep that fact in mind.

Telling white lies at funeral

A minister in England got into trouble recently for preaching a funeral and saying the departed was mean, never did any good, and "won't be missed."

Most ministers wouldn't say anything like that at a funeral for a mass murderer.

The tradition at funerals is to go soft on the guest of honor although he or she might have been a terrible scoundrel in life.

But why is that? Why should we pretend a person who has just died was not the rascal he or she was if that happens to be the case?

I remember when Loot Starkins died back home. He was a miserable old tightwad who beat his dogs, growled at small children, wouldn't go to church because he despised people, and, on top of all that, he was a Republican.

Struggling to find a few kind words to say about Loot at his funeral, the minister offered, "We should all remember we can find some good in everybody."

A man stood up in the back of the church and replied, "Loot Starkins didn't have a good bone in his body. He owed me a hundred bucks and I know damn well the old fool died just to get out of paying me."

There also is the matter of the minister comforting the family by saying the loved one has gone on to a better life in heaven.

The preacher back home used that technique for Virgil Crabtree's funeral, but everybody knew Virgil Crabtree couldn't have gone to heaven.

He made and ran bad moonshine, got into a fight every Saturday night at the Moose Club, cursed on Sunday and refused to bathe regularly.

The preacher might as well have been honest about it and told the family what they already knew anyway, that Virgil couldn't have gotten through the Pearly Gates with a gold American Express card and written recommendations from three of the original disciples.

There's an old story that allegedly is true, and it also tells us that honesty is the best policy at a funeral.

Some years ago, the radio announcer for the Chattanooga Lookouts, a minor league baseball team, had some time to kill before broadcasting a game in Memphis so he rented a car and began driving around the countryside.

He came upon a white-frame church where a funeral was in progress. The announcer, fortified with a few beers, went into the church and took a seat in the first pew.

Several of the deceased's friends were called to the pulpit to say a few words of remembrance. The preacher, figuring anybody in the front row obviously was close to the casket, called the announcer forward.

"I must be truthful," the announcer began, "I didn't know the gentleman you are remembering here today, but judging from what I've heard so far, he must have been a well-respected and loved individual."

"Obviously," he went on, "I can add nothing to what already has been said, but as long as I'm up here I'd like to say a few words on behalf of the Chattanooga Lookouts."

Tell it all, brother. Tell it all.

PACs hedge bets in both political camps

By Robert Walters

WASHINGTON (NEA) — The $1,000-per-person ticket price didn't discourage many potential attendees when newly elected Sen. Brock Adams, D-Wash., held a fund-raising party earlier this year at a posh Capitol Hill hotel.

For example, the political action committees operated by General Dynamics, Lockheed and Westinghouse each bought a ticket to help Adams retire the debt of more than $110,000 from his 1986 campaign against Republican Sen. Slade Gorton.

Those ticket purchases were especially noteworthy, the Seattle Post-Intelligencer reported, because the same three corporate PACs had earlier contributed a total of more than $5,000 to Gorton's campaign.

Similarly, Union Pacific's PAC paid $1,000 for a ticket to Adams' party after donating $5,000 to Gorton. (Adams encouraged such donations by organizing two post-election fund-raising parties — one here and another in Seattle.)

That pattern is hardly unique. When Common Cause recently examined the financing of the seven Senate races in which Democratic challengers defeated Republican incumbents last year, it found 150 cases in which PACs backed the loser during the campaign, then supported the winner after the election.

Perhaps no other practice so convincingly establishes the fraudulence of claims that PACs are merely a means to coordinate contributions from well-intentioned citizens.

"Citizens, however, don't vote for both candidates — once before the election and a second time after the winner has been chosen," notes Common Cause President Fred Wertheimer.

The post-election contributions, cynically known among Washington insiders as "get-smart-late money," are only one manifestation of a system of financing elections for the House and Senate that is fundamentally corrupt.

There is no more abusive element of that system than the pervasive influence of PACs operated to advance the political agendas of special interest groups.

Last year alone, PACs poured more than $110 million into congressional campaigns — and anybody who believes that much of that money was devoted to the cause of "good government" is hopelessly naive.

"A large part of the American public thinks this Congress is the best money can buy," says Sen. Lawton Chiles, D-Fla. "When a candidate can get himself into a position to get obligated (to PACs) that's taking the election away from the people," adds Sen. John Stennis, D-Miss.

In North Dakota, the American Bankers Association gave $10,000 to incumbent Republican Mark Andrews before the election and $10,000 more to Democrat Kent Conrad after he won the contest.

"These PACs obviously weren't contributing because of the candidates' philosophy, ideology or political party," adds Wertheimer. "They wanted, first and foremost, to ensure that they had bought influence with a U.S. senator."

Dying

Nona Kotara of Pampa suffered intense pain when she was dying of cancer that had spread throughout her body. Jane Gattis, her friend and a volunteer for the American Cancer Society, remembered well the pain Kotara faced as she struggled with the disease invading her body.

"I was always amazed at her courage," Gattis recalled. "She never really talked about her own pain much. She was always concerned about someone else. But I knew it was there. Sometimes when I spent the night with her (at St. Anthony's Hospice) she would wake up at 2 in the morning and crochet. Sometimes we'd talk and try to get her mind off the pain."

"When the pain would get unbearable were the only times I ever saw her cross with someone," she added. Gattis said Kotara was in far less pain at the hospice than she was in any other hospital she had been in. "Hospice does not let them suffer too much," she explained, adding, however, that Kotara's cancer had progressed to the point that no pain relievers seemed to be able to completely rid her of the pain.

"I remember visiting her at one hospital, and she'd dig her nails into my hand when (the nurses) said it wasn't time for any more pain medication."

Once Kotara told her, "There are times when I'd think I couldn't stand it anymore, but God always gives me the strength to take some more."

Gattis remembers taking her friend into her arms and saying, "Nona, I'd take just part of the pain if I could," and Kotara would reply, "I know you would, but you can't."

Sometimes the two friends would make jokes or eat Chinese food in the middle of the night to take Kotara's mind off the pain, but mostly they crocheted and talked.

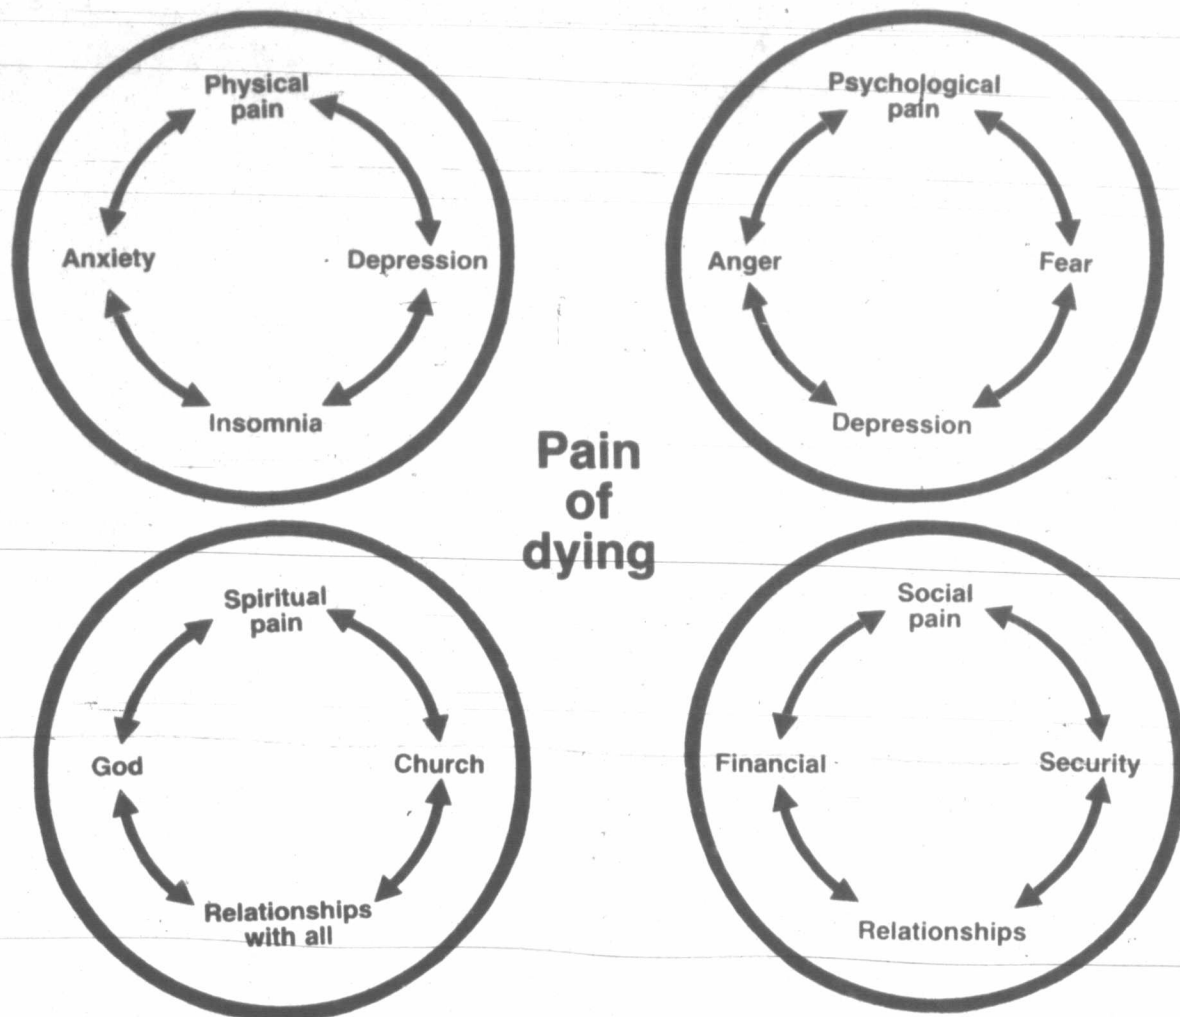

Physical pain is a very real part of dying, especially if the person is dying of certain forms of cancer. Traditionally, American physicians have prescribed pain relievers "as needed," leaving it up to the nurses in attendance to give medicine when they saw that the patient was hurting.

"For the most part, American physicians do not give enough pain medication or the right kind that a dying person needs," said Hazel Barthel, director of Hospice of the Plains in Plainview.

Hospice's goal is not only to "wipe out" pain, Barthel said, but also to "wipe out" the memory of pain. Dame Cecily Saunders, founder of the hospice movement in Great Britain, is also a pioneer in pain control for the dying. She says that the first thing addressed when a patient enters the hospice is physical pain. "Notice I did not say the most important thing," Barthel said.

She explained that it is not until the body is comfortable that a dying patient is able to get on with the other parts of the dying process. Hospice care includes a maintaining a constant level of painkil-lers in the patient's blood so the patient will not feel pain and will not anticipate pain after the medicine wears off.

"Sometimes you'll see patients after a maintenance dose of painkiller sleep for two days and then wake up," Barthel said. "Sometimes this frightens the family, who are worried that the patient is being over-medicated. This usually is the first time the patient has been truly free from pain enough to sleep in months. The body will soon adjust to the medication, and the patients will be able to respond to their surroundings in a normal way, she added.

Psychological pain takes many forms for dying patients. A primary fear, Barthel said, is fear of the unknown. "I don't know where I'm going," is a common expression. Another is "I don't know what's going to happen to me." They also fear becoming dependent on their families.

"This is a big fear for Americans," Barthel said. "And it's especially typical of Panhandle of Texas people. I've had parents say to me, 'No matter what happens, I don't want to be dependent on my children!' Yet they, themselves, cared for their own parents. I usually say to them, 'Did you take care of your parents?' and they'll answer, 'Yes,' and I'll say, 'Are you glad that you did?' and they'll usually say, 'Yes.' Then I tell them to allow their children to have that satisfaction, too."

Victor Frankel, a German psychiatrist and Nazi concentration camp survivor, said that he has found psychosis to be typical of the age, such as Sigmund Freud's sexual inhibitions of the Victorian era. Frankel says the psychosis of this age appears to be finding meaning in life.

Many dying patients fear that they have led a meaningless life, so in order to discover the meaning of their lives they will begin a process called "life review," or reminiscing over the events of their past.

"This can be a precious gift to the listener," Barthel said. "All you have to do is sit quietly and listen. Give them every chance to talk. Ask questions if it will help them along. And help them identify their feelings if it is needed."

Patients also fear that they will die before they can complete the things they intended to do during their life. Hospice helps them get their unfinished business completed whenever possible. This may include making funeral arrangements and a will, providing for the care of children, or straightening out tangled relationships.

Other fears include the fear of immortality which also crosses over into spiritual pain and the fear of losing control over their bodies and their lives.

Often the unfinished business may not be with God, but with the church. Even agnostics and atheists suffer spiritual pain, Barthel said. Though the spiritual may have been ignored, it is always there on some level, especially when death approaches.

"Spiritual pain and spirituality are something no one can define for another," Barthel said. Many people have similar views about religion on a surface level because of living in the same culture, she said, adding that "on a deeper level, life experiences cause people to have a unique perspective on spirituality."

"Working in hospice is very spiritual work, and I do not mean religious," she said. "I hope you can differentiate between that."

Barthel defined "religious" as having close contact with a religion or a religious group, while "spiritual" is close contact between "you and your source," whatever that might be.

"Hospice encompasses all religions and belief systems," she added, "not because of government guidelines, but out of respect for the individual."

Social pain is the fourth of the pains experienced by the dying. This pain is generally associated with the patient's concern about the finances involved, which are usually quite high after a long, serious illness. They are also concerned about their relationships with the people around them, from friends to volunteers, to nurses to their closest family members.

Family relations sometimes have been allowed to deteriorate over the years. However, having a family member dying brings these problems into focus. Dying people want to make amends to those they feel they have not treated fairly. They may be feeling remorse over things they felt should have been handled differently.

Pain sometimes is caused by a feeling of isolation resulting from their illness. They may feel they are ugly and unlovable because of the ravages left on their bodies by disease, radiation or chemotherapy.

"What the hell," he said. "They're going to die anyway."

Hospice physicians argue that tolerance of or dependence on narcotics is not likely when the drugs are properly used. Anne Munley, author of The Hospice Alternative, says, "Studies at St. Christopher's report no significant development of tolerance among patients on 'Brompton's cocktail': in fact, dosage may be decreased for some patients as their pain is controlled. Experience with hospice patients also indicates that when a patient in chronic pain is given medication for relief on a preventative schedule and not for its euphoric effect, addiction is not a problem."

Hospice has a three-part goal towards pain control: to keep the patient free of present pain, to erase the memory of past pain and to eliminate the anticipation of pain, while still allowing the patient to be as active and alert as physically possible.

"We do not believe in intramuscular pain control," Dr. Holman said. Hospice care includes the use of oral medication so that pain will not be inflicted in the act of trying to relieve it.

Dr. Holman told of a woman who had suffered a heart attack and had been brought in to the hospice on a weekend. "We had controlled her pain within four hours," he said. "She spent Sunday with her grandchild who played in her bed."

"She spent a quiet, restful day today. She asked for communion and during communion, she died."

Volunteers, although not responsible for giving pain medication, still take an active part in relieving a patient's pain. One important way this is done is by reminding patients that no matter what turn their illness takes, they will not be forgotten, abandoned or left to suffer alone.

Volunteers are also able to provide helpful distractions for the patients by talking to them, taking them outside for fresh air, doing crossword puzzles with them, playing music or anything else that might help the patients think of something besides their suffering.

"Guided imagery" is another way to help dying patients tolerate pain. Hazel Barthel, director of Hospice of the Plains in Plainview, explained that guided imagery, a kind of hypnosis, allows the patients to "leave" their pain behind as they imagine themselves in pleasant situations such as lying on a warm rock beside a gurgling stream in the mountains. "This is sometimes safer for those in pain who are having trouble breathing," she explained.

Pain control, in the ways mentioned, helps improve the quality of life for the dying, and for this reason is considered essential in hospice philosophy.

Rotary decision could affect other organizations

WASHINGTON (AP)—Private organizations engaged in public activities are likely to find it more difficult to exclude women members following the Supreme Court's decision in a case involving Rotary clubs.

In a 7-0 ruling that is being hailed as a breakthrough for sexual equality, the justices said Monday that states may force Rotary International to admit women as members.

Other major men-only and women-only groups will be affected by the ruling, say both women's rights advocates and representatives of organizations that limit membership by gender.

"There may be some men's golf clubs that could get some comfort out of this. But anyone who does something in the public eye should be scared to death," said William P. Sutter, a lawyer for Rotary International.

Mary Ray Oaken, president of the National Federation of Business and Professional Women, said the ruling recognizes the importance of breaking down barriers to women in social organizations.

"One of the reasons women have been denied access to boardrooms is that women have been denied access to the old-boy network," she said, adding that she intends to apply immediately for membership in a Rotary club in her hometown of Cadiz, Ky.

The ruling, while applying only to Rotary clubs, provides guidelines suggesting that many private organizations may have to comply with state laws requiring equal access to "public accommodations."

The justices upheld a California law that bars Rotary International from ousting local chapters that have women members.

In widening the impact of a 1984 ruling that states may force the Jaycees to admit women as full members, the court said Rotary clubs are public accommodations because of their size, high turnover rate, many public activities and participation by non-members.

Justice Lewis F. Powell, in his opinion for the court, added that it is significant that Rotary clubs seek news media coverage of many of their central activities.

"In sum, Rotary Clubs, rather than carrying on their activities in an atmosphere of privacy, seek to keep their windows and doors open to the whole world," Powell said.

Rotary International President

M.A.T. Caparas said in a statement that the ruling was a surprise but that "Rotary will, of course, abide by the decision of the court. We will continue to follow all admission requirements for members other than the male-only provision in those places where this provision is determined to be contrary to the law."

Among the groups — representing millions of members — that sided with Rotary International in challenging the California law were Kiwanis International, Lions clubs, the Elks, Moose clubs, the U.S. Improved Order of Red Men and the Boy Scouts.

But some said they are prepared to admit women.

Rotary International has approximately 1 million members in some 20,000 clubs worldwide. It was founded 82 years ago by four Chicago men and took its name from their practice of rotating meeting sites at each other's place of business.

In other court action Monday, the Supreme Court:

- Ruled 6-3 that juries should not use local standards in deciding whether allegedly obscene material is entitled to free-speech protection because it has redeeming value. The decision in an Illinois case could make it more difficult to convict the sellers of sexually explicit materials.
- Ruled 5-4, in a case from Arizona, that police did not violate the rights of a man accused of murder when they tape recorded his stationhouse conversation with his wife and used it to show he was sane.

Sen. Daniel Inouye, D-Hawaii, left, chairman of the Senate committee investigating the Iran-Contra affair, and Sen. Warren Rudman, R-N.H., behind, tour the Senate Caucus Room Monday.

Inside the Senate Caucus room, where gavels will fly

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Senate Caucus Room, the marble-walled political theater in which the nation plays out its investigative dramas, is ready for a new performance: The Iran-Contra Affair.

A stage has been built to accommodate the joint appearance of separate Senate and House investigating committees and to shape the scene for television.

For two weeks, workmen have swarmed over the 54-by-74-foot rectangle, installing a two-tiered dais occupying nearly a third of the room and commodious enough to seat the 11 senators and 15 House members.

Electric saws screamed under the 35-foot coffered ceiling. Sawdust powdered the dark red carpeting and the 12 marble pillars.

Instead of senators wielding gavels, carpenters drove nails under the four massive chandeliers. An industrial sewing machine pieced together yards of pleated red velvet to swath the dais and camouflage camera platforms.

The cost: $18,000, not including labor.

Since the sinking of the Titanic 75 years ago, the Caucus Room has served as a national arena for dissecting scandal, probing corruption and crime and finding out why things went wrong.

Investigating lawmakers renewing the process always are acutely aware that they are following a Caucus Room tradition set by such high-drama spectacles as Teapot Dome in the 1920s, the Pearl Harbor investigation in 1946, the Kefauver Organized Crime hearings in 1950-51, the Army-

McCarthy hearings in 1954, the Teamsters racketeering hearings in 1957 and the Watergate investigation in 1973.

The sinking of the British liner Titanic in 1912 with a loss of 1,500 lives prompted the first such use of the room, the convening a week later of a special Senate investigatory subcommittee.

The first televised investigation came in 1951 when Sen. Estes Kefauver, D-Tenn., led a probe of organized crime. Many of the witnesses invoked their Fifth Amendment right against self incrimination and refused to testify. Others refused to let their faces be shown. Some appeared in black hoods.

In 35 days of televised hearings in 1954, the Caucus Room and the nation witnessed the dramatic clash between Sen. Joseph R. McCarthy, R-Wisc., and the U.S. Army.

And it saw the tide of public opinion turn against the senator and his anti-communist drive when he accused an assistant to Army counsel Joseph Welch of suspect political affiliations and Welch angrily replied, "Have you no decency, sir?"

Later that decade, Teamsters leader Jimmy Hoffa was seated at the Caucus Room witness table as the Senate Permanent Investigations subcommittee probed racketeering in labor unions. The investigation brought to public attention subcommittee member John F. Kennedy, D-Mass., and his aggressively persistent brother, Robert Kennedy, the panel's chief counsel.

Both John and Robert Kennedy later used the Caucus Room to declare their presidential candidacies.

Presidential commission will study, battle AIDS

WASHINGTON (AP)—A presidential commission will study the threat of AIDS, and President Reagan says it will use "every possible public health measure" to halt the spread of the virus.

"AIDS is clearly one of the most serious health problems facing the world community, and our health care establishment is working overtime to find a cure," Reagan said in a one-paragraph statement announcing the commission late Monday.

The president decided such a panel was needed during a meeting of his Domestic Policy Council at which an array of issues related to the AIDS problem was discussed, said presidential spokesman Marlin Fitzwater.

In his statement, Reagan said "the commission will help us to ensure that we are using every possible public health measure to contain the spread of the virus."

While no target date was set for Reagan's appointment of commission members, Fitzwater said he expected them to be named within the next few weeks.

The establishment of the commission comes as a debate has raged among members of the Reagan administration over how to battle the sex-related disease, such as whether to conduct mandatory testing or to include information on AIDS in sex education in the nation's schools.

Reagan has sought to stay out of such arguments, but he has stressed that any instruction on the subject should stress moral values, and that children should be taught the advantages of abstinence.

Surgeon General C. Everett Koop wants youngsters to be counseled that while abstinence is the surest protection against AIDS, people engaging in sexual acts should use condoms. Koop has come out against mandatory testing, arguing it would be expensive and ineffective, driving victims of the disease into hiding or subjecting them to discrimination.

Secretary of Education William Bennett has taken a far more conservative stance, suggesting mandatory testing for a wide range of individuals such as immigrants, persons who want to marry, hospital patients and prisoners.

Fitzwater said the exact membership of the commission hasn't been decided, but he said, "I think it would be fair to say the president will be looking for members who have medical and technical expertise," who can provide advice on a continuing basis.

He said Reagan ordered the staff of his Domestic Policy Council to work with various government agencies, such as the Department of Health and Human Services and the Public Health Service, to develop a charter for the commission.

The chief victims of AIDS have been homosexual men and intravenous drug users.

Postage rate hike underway

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Postal Service took the first step today toward raising the price of a first-class stamp to 25 cents.

But the request by the postal Board of Governors, which must be approved by the independent Postal Rate Commission, would not take effect for a year or more. The first-class rate has been 22 cents since Feb. 17, 1985.

Postal Board Chairman John N. Griesemer said postage rates will rise an average of 16 percent for all classes of mail. "Some of the percentages will be higher than that, others lower," he said.

For the average American, the rate increase would amount to less than $10 per year, Griesemer said.

The board had considered asking for a rate hike last month, but decided to study the matter further before voting.

The rate commission will now hold hearings on the board's request and either approve or disapprove it.

Although the Postal Service finished last year $304 million in the black, it faces some $2 billion in added costs over the next two years because of a change in the federal retirement system, Deputy Postmaster General Michael S. Coughlin has reported.

In order to increase postage prices, the Postal Service must propose the new rates to the independent Postal Rate Commission, which then holds hearings and either approves or denies the new charges.

While the price of a first-class stamp is the most common reference for the public, postal rates are actually lengthy and complex, covering various charges for newspapers and magazines, advertising bulk mail, parcels and books.

These complicated rates draw attention from the companies, charities and other major mailers, who testify at length before the rate commission on how they will be affected by any changes.

If the rate commission finally approves the new charges, they can then take effect. If denied, the Postal Service can still impose the new rates if its board of governors votes to do so unanimously. Otherwise, it can either accept alternate rates suggested by the commission or resubmit new rates and go through the hearing process again.

The Postal Service reported a surplus of $304.6 million in fiscal year 1986, a substantial gain over the $251 million loss the agency suffered in 1985, when first-class postage went from 20 cents to 22 cents.

The $2 billion in added costs is a result of the enactment by Congress last year of the Federal Employee Retirement System. If employees choose to transfer from the old Civil Service Retirement System to the new system, the Postal Service must contribute more matching money. Workers must make the switch between July 1 and Dec. 31 this year.

More farmers are declaring bankruptcy

WASHINGTON (AP)—More farmers with loans from the Farmers Home Administration are declaring bankruptcy, just as the agency is intensifying efforts to collect overdue loans.

A spokesman said the rise in bankruptcies is partly due to the protection offered by the new Chapter 12 of the U.S. Bankruptcy Code, which took effect last November.

Bankruptcy filings among agency borrowers rose 50.8 percent to 3,713 from Oct. 1 through March 31 from 2,461 a year earlier. Those included 883 filed in March, compared with 591 in March 1986.

In addition, 650 farmers quit as the result of bankruptcy action from Oct. 1 through March 31.

The rise in bankruptcies reflects "a pretty substantial rush" to the new Chapter 12 federal bankruptcy protection, Ence said.

Indicted for train wreck

Ricky Gates, left, the engineer of the Conrail locomotive involved in January's Amtrak crash, attends a news conference Monday in Towson, Md., called by his attorney, public defender Thomas Saunders, right, to respond to charges brought Monday against Gates. The engineer was indicted on 16 counts of manslaughter for allegedly operating a unit of three Conrail engines in a grossly negligent way. Sixteen people were killed and 175 injured in the collision.

News executives debate merits of staking out Hart's home

By The Associated Press

Newspaper executives say a presidential candidate's personal life is news, but they differ on where to draw the line in finding out how a candidate spends his free time.

Reacting to The Miami Herald's report that Democratic frontrunner Gary Hart had a young woman as an overnight guest in his Washington home, some editors said they thought the story was appropriate and some found it distasteful.

Several felt there were holes in the Herald's account because it did not keep a back door under continuous watch. Hart and the young woman both have denied that she stayed overnight.

"I think there are two questions," said Tim McGuire, managing editor of the Minneapolis Star and Tribune. "One, was the reporting solid enough to say what the Herald did and secondly, is the candidate's extra-marital sex life fair game for page one?"

"I think our uneasiness over both questions played a role in our decision to play it on page 16a."

Robert Kaiser, Washington Post assistant managing editor for national news, said his newspaper contacted the Herald before running the story.

"Our reporters were persuaded that they had done this in a serious and professional way. Certainly they felt they had a legitimate story," he said.

He said the Post's front-page story tried to give both sides an opportunity to explain.

Wesley Pruden, managing editor of The Washington Times said: "I don't have any quarrels with what the Herald did."

Several editors noted that Hart, responding in an interview with The New York Times Magazine to rumors about his personal life, had challenged doubters to follow him around.

"In the absence of such an invitation, you might have to toss a coin to determine whether the story is valid," said John Robert Starr, managing editor of the Arkansas Democrat. "Given such an invitation, any newspaper worth its salt would have done it."

"From all I've read, it looked like a hell of a story that they had, but didn't nail down," said Pete Selkow, editor of The Southern Illinoisan in Carbondale, Ill. "It's a legitimate subject, a legitimate inquiry, but it doesn't look like they did the job they had to do before going to press. For that reason, I don't think I liked it at all."

Thomas F. Mulvoy Jr., managing editor, The Boston Globe: "I think it is our business to do that kind of reporting on somebody who wants to be president."

Probe launched in alleged van fire hazards

WASHINGTON (AP) — Ford Motor Co. says instances of gasoline and flames bursting from gas tanks in its Econoline vans are caused by operator misuse and not a design flaw.

The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration said Monday it is investigating the allegations at the request of the Center for Auto Safety, a private watchdog group that cited reports of "fuel boiling in the gas tanks and spurting out of the filler neck, often after the gas cap is removed."

The center alleged the defect may be present on 324,000 1984-86 Ford E-150, E-250 and E-350 Econoline vans with dual gas tanks. NHTSA placed the number of vehicles involved in the investigation at 145,000.

"We know of no pattern of incidents that have not involved substantially modified vehicles, overfilling of fuel tanks, especially with highly volatile fuel, or abusive operating modes," Ford spokesman James Maxwell said.

There have been 72 reports of overpressurized fuel in Econoline vans unmodified for ambulance use, including 14 fires and five injuries, the Center for Auto Safety said.

Award winners

Members of Desk and Derrick Club of Pampa brought home a second place award from the 1987 Region V meeting held recently in Roswell, N.M. The award was presented to the six members of the Communications Training Committee who participated in a skit entitled "ABCs of D&D" which was an

Promoting drug awareness

Junior Service League of Pampa will present puppet shows on drug abuse, May 6-27, in Pampa public elementary schools as a community service project. Shown with some of the puppets are Karen Hall, left, and Jane Cree. Parents are welcome to attend the shows, and may call the school principal for exact times. The puppets were donated to the League by Joye Cree and Jewel Hale. The puppet stage was built and donated by James Bradley.

Frustrated 14-year-old says a good boy is hard to find

DEAR ABBY: I don't know if you would really call this a problem, but I think I'm crazy. And so does everyone else.

I am 14 and I haven't had a boyfriend since January. I don't really want a romantic boyfriend, if you know what I mean. I just want a boyfriend who will be a friend to me so we could do things together as friends. I had three guys ask me since school started, but I turned them all down because I want friendship only and they wanted more.

How come boys start out being a friend, then they end up with only one thing on their minds? When I tell them I am not ready for that kind of stuff, they hate my guts and there goes the friendship. Abby, what should I do? I want boys as friends, but I don't want to get pregnant at 14. Am I crazy? I need your help.

CAN'T SIGN, SMALL TOWN

DEAR CAN'T SIGN: Crazy? Absolutely not — you're smart. Most guys will try to see how far they can get with a girl, but that doesn't mean they are prepared to pursue it. They could be experimenting and testing your (and their own) limits. It's part of growing up. Keep your standards high. Trust your instincts. Keep saying no, no, no, until you are absolutely certain you can handle a yes.

***

DEAR ABBY: What an ironic coincidence that I read in your column in the Los Angeles Times a letter that said there are no hotel schools in the state of Texas! Only last week I was at the University of Houston to break ground for a new addition to the Conrad N. Hilton College of Hotel and Restaurant Management.

Dear Abby

The Hilton College was formed in 1969 with a gift from my father, and the Hilton Foundation has been very involved over the years in an effort to make the Hilton College the top hotel school in the country. More than a thousand alumni of the school, who now occupy key executive positions in hotels around the world, are testimony to our successful efforts.

BARRON HILTON,
CHAIRMAN AND PRESIDENT,
HILTON HOTEL CORP.

DEAR MR. HILTON: I plead ignorance concerning hotel schools, but it would have done your heart good to have seen the many letters I received in praise of the Hilton College of Hotel and Restaurant Management. (P.S. Readers: This is not a paid advertisement.)

***

DEAR ABBY: I just read about "Vanessa," who fell in love with a Marine when they started to correspond through your column. I know the feeling.

Last July, I read about Operation Dear Abby, so I wrote a letter that ended up with James Keith Rainey, a machinist engineer on the U.S.S. Biddle. We wrote back and forth nearly every day and fell in love through the mail!

We met for the first time on Aug. 23, 1986, and confirmed our love. On Oct. 17, Keith slipped a diamond on my finger and asked me to marry him. So, thank you, Abby, for bringing Keith into my life. He's the best thing that ever happened to me.

Vanessa and her Marine exchanged pictures, but I didn't have any idea how handsome Keith was until the day we met. It didn't matter. He could have looked like Godzilla and I'd still love him. He's a good man.

REGINA-ANNE CLARK,
BAPTISTOWN, N.J.

***

DEAR ABBY: What a laugh I had reading that letter from "Hurt," the lady whose lover asked her (right in the middle of making love) how much her gas bill ran her.

I would have asked him, "Why? Are you running out?"

LYNNE IN IRVINE, CALIF.

Landscaping can conserve energy

Texans spend millions of dollars every year beautifying their homes with trees, shrubs, vines and flowers. With proper planning, many of those dollars can be recovered through reduced utility bills.

Studies have shown that shading walls from direct sunlight in the summer can reduce wall surface temperatures by as much as 29 degrees. This can make a big difference in the cost of air conditioning the home.

And while it may take many years for trees and hedges to mature, certain vines planted now may be trained on trellises to provide relief from the heat, and from high utility bills, this summer.

When planting trees, homeowners should also consider the potential for saving on heating bills in the winter. For the east west, and especially the south side of the house, choose trees that will lose their leaves in the fall, allowing the sun to strike walls and windows. The sun is often ignored as a source of free light and heat on cold days.

Hudson raises record

By MARIO FOX
AP Sports Writer

CHICAGO (AP) — New York Yankees Manager Lou Piniella says he isn't surprised by the turnaround of pitcher Charles Hudson.

"We knew he had a great arm," Piniella said Monday night after Hudson raised his record to 4-0 with a route-going 6-1 victory over the Chicago White Sox. "He's getting his breaking ball over... and is locating his fastball well. Maybe the change of scenery helped."

That would be hard to dispute, considering the unbeaten start and an earned run average of 2.09. The right-hander posted a 32-42 record with a 3.98 ERA in four seasons with the Philadelphia Phillies.

"I'm making good pitches and hitting the spots when I need to. My intensity level is much better," said Hudson, acquired last winter for outfielder Mike Easler.

Unbothered by a 49-degree temperature and 15-mph winds at Comiskey Park, Hudson gave up eight hits and walked two while striking out one. He has allowed 30 hits in 43 innings.

The game was the only one played Monday night in the American League. Kansas City at Toronto was rained out.

Catcher Joel Skinner, a former White Sox player, said he's not worried that Hudson isn't striking out more batters.

"He's making people hit the ball and he's getting them out," Skinner said.

Piniella was given a lift by the victory.

"We needed that," he said, hoping his Yankees had broken out of a slump. They had lost six of their last eight games following a 10-game winning streak.

The key, Piniella said, was the gift of five walks and an error in a four-run eighth inning in which the Yankees scored three times on an infield single and an error on same the play.

"Sometimes it takes something like this to get us going," Piniella said.

With New York leading 2-1, loser Richard Dotson, 1-3, loaded the bases in the eighth with one out on walks to Willie Randolph and Wayne Tolleson around a single by Skinner.

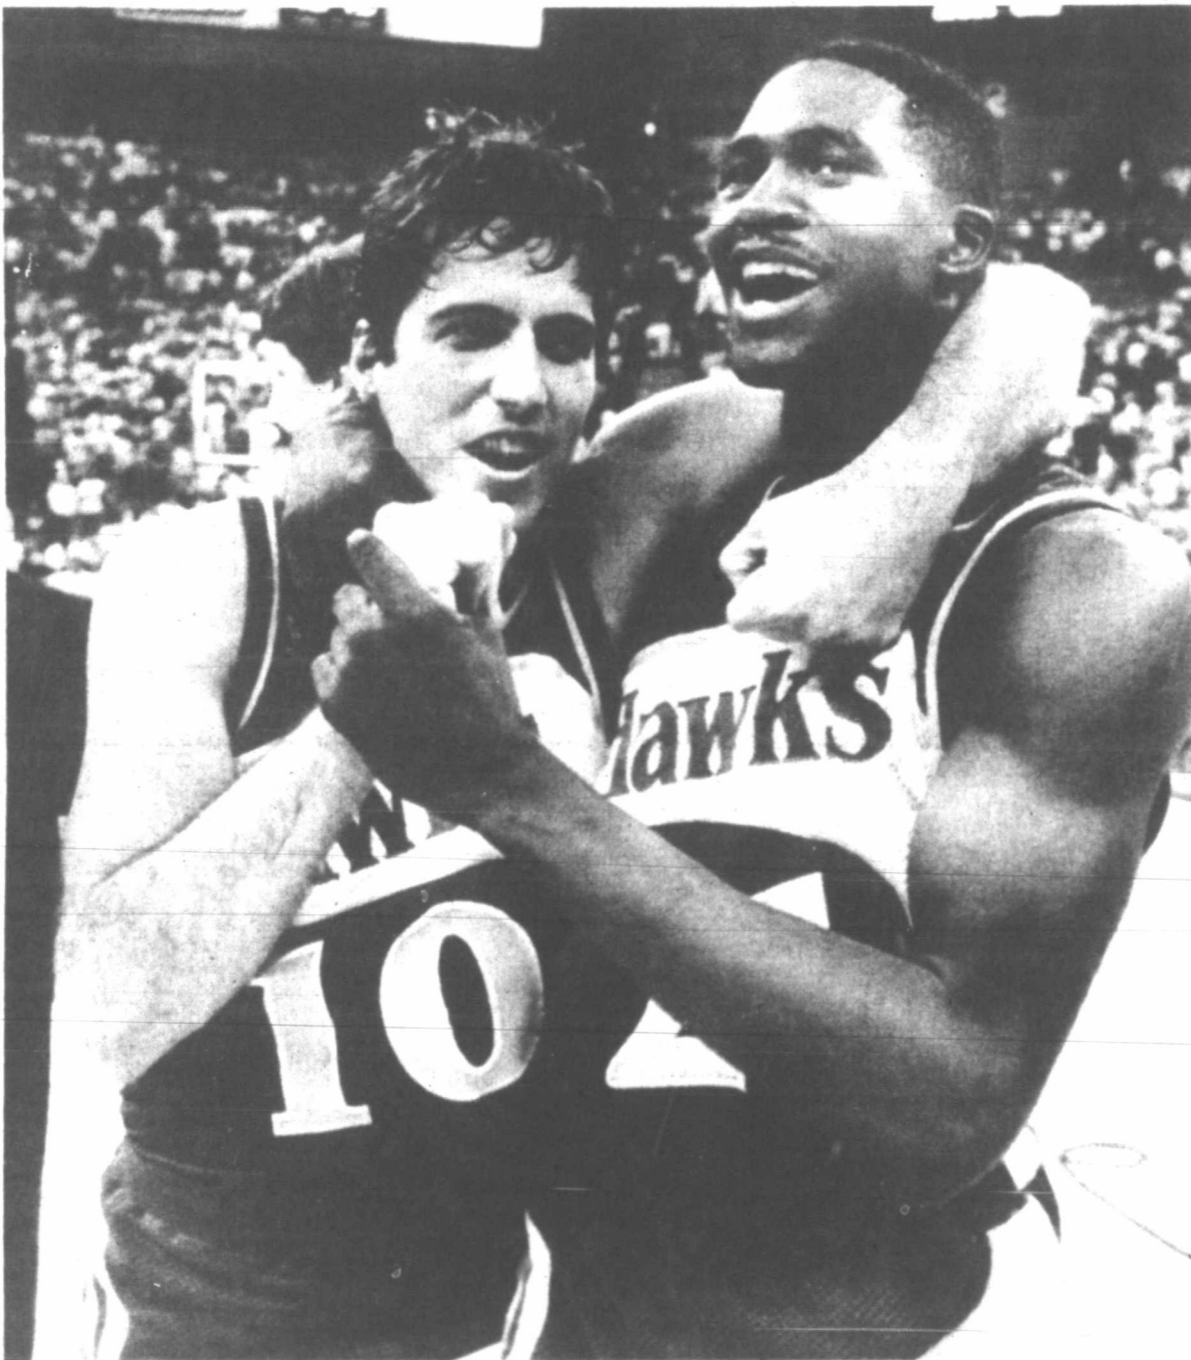

Jim Winn relieved Dotson and struck out Rickey Henderson for the second out. But with the runners moving on a 3-2 pitch, Claudell Washington hit a high chopper to first baseman Greg Walker and beat Winn to the bag.

"I fell off the mound on the right side, Claudell runs pretty good, and I just didn't get over there in time," Winn said.

Both Randolph and Skinner scored and Tolleson also came home when Winn threw wildly to the plate.

Tom Chambers and the Sonics have been downright unfriendly to Texans.

Hawks' Wittman (left) and Wilkins hope the celebration continues.

Dawson, Sandberg spark Cubs to 5-4 victory over Dodgers

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
AP Sports Writer

The "Friendly Confines," as Chicago's cozy Wrigley Field is often described, has become just that again now that Ryne Sandberg and Andre Dawson are getting to know each other.

"I know when Ryne Sandberg is up I'm going to have a chance to bat," Dawson said after going 2-for-4 Monday, including a ninth-inning single that followed Sandberg's two-out double and gave Cincinnati.

The Cardinals, who led 7-1 after five innings, blew a late lead for the second game in a row.

"We never say die," Dawson said. "Everybody went up there and concentrated and before you know it — boom! — we were behind by one, then tied, then ahead by three."

San Francisco third baseman Chris Brown suffered a broken left jaw when he was hit in the face by a pitch from starter Danny Cox, in the seventh inning.

NL roundup

the Cubs a 5-4 victory over the Los Angeles Dodgers.

"I know when Andre Dawson is batting behind me I don't have to pull everything," said Sandberg, who also had a single and a two-run homer that ignited the Cubs' comeback from a 4-1 deficit against Dodgers ace Fernando Valenzuela.

As a result of their fourth consecutive triumph after losing seven of their first eight home games, and coupled with San Francisco's 10-7 come-from-behind victory over St. Louis, the Cubs climbed past the Cardinals into first place in the National League East by a half-game.

Dawson has nine homers and 25 runs batted in. In the last 12 games, he has had 23 hits in 49 at-bats, including six doubles, a triple, seven homers and 19 RBI.

In the only other NL games, Atlanta outslugged Montreal 10-7 and San Diego beat Pittsburgh 9-5. Giants 10, Cardinals 7

Candy Maldonado hit for the cycle, Chili Davis drove in five runs and Jose Uribe's pinch single put San Francisco ahead in a five-run eighth inning. The Giants had 21 hits off five St. Louis pitchers and pulled within a half-game of NL West leader

Warriors confident against Los Angeles

By The Associated Press

The Golden State Warriors hadn't been in an NBA playoff series in a decade. When they got into one, they turned a trick no team had done in more than 30 years.

Tonight, the Warriors take on another big challenge — the Los Angeles Lakers.

Golden State rallied from a 2-0 deficit to beat the Utah Jazz in their five-game Western Conference matchup. The last team to do that was the 1956 Fort Wayne Pistons.

The Lakers, however, are not the Jazz. Not even close. Los Angeles had the NBA's best record this season, 65-17, 21 more victories than Utah and 23 more than the Warriors.

Are the Golden State players shuddering about that?

"We're going to be ready," forward Purvis Short said. "We've played the Lakers tough all year and we really feel confident going in. I think the layoff has to hurt them. They can't think that they'll come in against us and it'll be a cakewalk."

"It won't be that easy." Lakers Coach Pat Riley agrees. Los Angeles swept Denver in the first round and hasn't played since last Wednesday.

One other series begins tonight as defending champion Boston hosts Milwaukee.

Seattle, which leads the Rockies 1-0, is at Houston, and Detroit, ahead of the Hawks 1-0, is at Atlanta in tonight's other games.

Bucks-Celtics

Boston lost only two games at home all season, but could be without All-Star forward Kevin McHale, who has a foot injury.

Like the Lakers, the Celtics swept the first round — they've been off a week.

If the 6-foot-10 McHale is sidelined and Milwaukee uses centers Jack Sikma and Randy Breuer at the same time, Boston could have starting center Robert Parish and backup Bill Walton in the lineup together. Walton has played in all three Boston playoff games after appearing in just 10 regular-season contests.

Sonics-Rockets

Seattle conquered one bunch of Texans, the Dallas Mavericks, in the opening round, and they got the jump on Houston with a 111-106 decision on Sunday as Dale Ellis continued his hot streak with 34 points.

Ellis and teammate Kevin Williams were arrested early Sunday morning following an incident at a Houston night club. Williams was charged with resisting arrest and Ellis with interfering with an arrest.

Ellis knows he'll hear it from the Houston fans.

"I do anticipate that, but I can't let it bother me," Ellis said. "If anything at all it's going to inspire me to play harder."

Pistons-Hawks

Detroit's star, guard Isiah Thomas, outplayed Atlanta's top player, forward Dominique Wilkins, in the series opener, a 112-111 Pistons victory. Thomas had 30 points and ran the Detroit offense, while Wilkins scored an unspectacular 21 and missed a shot to win the game in the final seconds. Wilkins had only two baskets in the second half.

Sonics' Ellis arrested

HOUSTON (AP) — Reporters were told at the end of the Seattle SuperSonics' closed practice that team members would not answer questions about a scuffle early Sunday at a night club that resulted in the arrests of reserve guard Kevin Williams and leading scorer Dale Ellis.

The reporters had questions Monday, but Williams — in particular — wasn't eager to oblige.

Meanwhile, the manager of the Houston nightclub where Ellis and Williams were arrested has been named in a $750,000 lawsuit stemming from an incident at another club he managed several years ago.

On Monday, Williams shoved a television camerawoman at the arena where the Sonics were preparing for tonight's second game in their second-round NBA series with the Houston Rockets.

Williams refused to talk and told another television camera crew to get out of his way.

Ellis and other players were amiable, but declined to discuss the incident.

"I'd like to tell you all just what happened, but at this time I've been advised not to do so," said Ellis, a starting guard who was named last week as the league's most improved player over the past year.

Ellis said he anticipates some heckling from fans tonight, but said "I can't let it bother me. It's just something that happened. It's not even a big deal. It's already been blown out of proportion."

Williams was charged with resisting arrest and Ellis with hindering arrest, both misdemeanors. The two are scheduled to appear in court Friday.

Scott Shelton, assistant manager of the Ocean Club, said Williams punched him and then struggled with two off-duty uniformed police officers who tried to take the basketball player into custody.

The assistant manager said that, after a waitress complained, he asked Williams early Sunday morning to move out of an area that allows waitresses access to the bar.

"He looked around and told me, 'Don't tell me what to (expletive) do,'" Shelton said. "He said, 'If you want me to move, you'll have to move me.' Then he pushed me in the face, like shoved me away."

Williams and Ellis were arrested about 12:45 a.m. Sunday by the two off-duty officers and spent a few hours in jail before being released when Sonics Coach Bernie Bickerstaff posted $500 bond each.

The arrests came only hours after Seattle defeated Houston in overtime to take a 1-0 lead in the NBA best-of-seven series.

Meanwhile, Jeff Meineke, Ocean Club manager, said the lawsuit against him and the Diamond Back Saloon has no connection with the Sonics arrests.

Joyner breaks slump

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP) — Last year, his hitting heroics turned Anaheim Stadium into "Wally World."

But as the 1987 season unfolded, young Wally Joyner's batting slump had California Angels fans asking, "What's wrong with Wally?"

Nothing much, as it turns out. Joyner, who seemed to be falling victim to the "sophomore jinx" after a sensational rookie season in 1986, is hitting again.

Twelve games into the season, the California first baseman was batting .192 with no home runs and only five runs batted in.

"Sometimes you have to hit rock-bottom before things start looking up for you again," said Angels Manager Gene Mauch, who all along expressed confidence that Joyner's slump would be short-lived.

Joyner seemed to hit bottom on April 19 when he ended California's 6-5 loss to Minnesota by stranding the tying run on third after his throwing error in the ninth opened the door for a pair of Twins runs.

After that particularly frustrating loss, Joyner remained in the clubhouse training room for an hour and a half in order to avoid reporters.

Since that Sunday afternoon at Anaheim Stadium, the 24-year-old Joyner has been on a hitting tear. He has hit seven homers and driven in 18 runs in the last 14 games while raising his batting average to .307.

Joyner said he thinks that fact that he skipped winter ball for the first time contributed to the slow start.

"I think it was just a matter of an off-season being new to me," he said. "Then I tried to get it all back (swing and timing) sooner than it was ready to happen and it put added pressure on me."

Father-son chat

Veteran race driver Mario Andretti (right) chats with his son, Michael, during Monday's practice session at the Indianapolis Motor Speedway. The elder Andretti is a veteran of 21 Indianapolis 500 races and won the race in 1969. The Indianapolis 500 is scheduled May 24.

Lord Byron was once sick of golf

IRVING, Texas (AP) — As a young touring pro, Byron Nelson turned down a steady country club job at a time when first-place checks sometimes required no commas before the zeros.

Nelson gave up full-time professional competition in 1946, at age 34, a year after winning 18 tournaments, including a record 11 in a row. He was, he said, "sick and fed up" with the tour grind.

He was once asked if he would build a golf course at his 630-acre cattle ranch north of Fort Worth. "Listen, anyone who even mentions golf around the farm for awhile could get shot," he said.

Forty-one years later, it is safe to mention golf around the farm, an estate known as Fairway Acres that is home to the only PGA veteran with a tournament bearing his name.

The $600,000 Byron Nelson Golf Classic begins Thursday at the Las Colinas Sports Club. The winner's share is $108,000, more than twice the amount the golfer dubbed "Lord Byron" earned in 1945. But Nelson is too busy as one of the game's greatest good-will ambassadors to give much thought to purse disparities.

At 75, he has been going at a 90 mph pace heading into this week's tournament, a Dallas-area fixture since 1968.

"I don't think I've ever been as busy in my life," Nelson said last week after returning from a fundraiser in California.

Signups scheduled

Registration for the Senior Babe Ruth Baseball League (16-18 year olds) will be held today, Wednesday and Thursday at the Optimist Club, 601 East Craven.

Registration times will be from 5:30 p.m. to 7 p.m. each day. Players must have turned 16 after July 31 and they can't be 19 before Aug. 1.

Registration fee is $20 and must be paid before the first game.

"I really can't believe how people treat me. I can't believe the attention," he said, sampling a specially mixed drink of apple and cranberry juice from the Sports Club bar.

Surveying the tents, skyboxes, scoreboard and course being prepared for the tournament, he reminisced about his record-setting season.

On March 8, 1945, Nelson teed up in the Miami Four-Ball at the Miami Springs Course. He won that tournament and the next 10 as well, a streak that ran through the Canadian Open in August.

"The way the streak started after Miami was when Sam (Snead) and I tied at Charlotte," Nelson recalled. "I didn't think anything about it. Everything was an 18-hole playoff back in those days and I remember how we tied."

"The last hole at Myers Park was a long par-3. Sam was leading me by a stroke and hit a 1-iron just onto the front of the green with the pin way up on the back. The green was terraced and I remember thinking he'd be fortunate to get it down in two."

Nelson lifted a 3-wood to within 15 feet and got his par. Snead three-putted for bogey.

"I won the playoff by four strokes," Nelson said. "I remember that gave me an attitude of confidence."

He added: "Snead was not exactly a hacker."

Celebrity announcers making Cubs a big hit

By JOE MOOSHIL
AP Sports Writer

CHICAGO (AP) — Holy cow! The Cubbies are a television hit even with Harry Caray on the sidelines.

"It is a classic case of making a plus out of a minus," said Jack Rosenberg, sports editor of WGN-TV and coordinator of the unique concept that has filled the considerable void created by Caray's absence.

With Caray punctuating big plays with his trademark "Holy cow!" and leading the singing of "Take Me Out To The Ball Game," Chicago Cubs baseball has become an afternoon mainstay for millions of cable viewers around the country. So when the 70-year-old Caray suffered what was termed "a mild stroke" in February, WGN was faced with the prospect of replacing not just an announcer, but a 40-year institution — and on short notice.

Jim Dowdle, president of Tribune Broadcasting Co., had a brainstorm — replace the Cubs' resident celebrity with guest celebrities. Each would work a game alongside Steve Stone, the color man for Caray's broadcasts. Stone would take over play-by-play duties.

WGN, unsure whether the idea would succeed, put out feelers — and unleashed an avalanche. Celebrities clamored for a seat in the booth, and viewers loved it.

"The feedback has been phenomenal," Rosenberg said. "The people await each personality to compare their styles, voices and looks. It gets to be a game to see who does what."

The leadoff man was CBS broadcaster Brent Musburger, whose career began in Chicago. Others from the broadcasting profession included NBC's Bob Costas, Pat Summerall and Gary Bender of CBS, Detroit Tigers announcer Ernie Harwell and Jack Buck, voice of the St. Louis Cardinals.

Print journalism was represented by columnists Mike Royko of Chicago and George Will of Washington, the latter a Cubs fan since his youth in Illinois.

Comedian Bill Murray and actor Tom Bosley — Mr. Cunningham on TV's "Happy Days" — also worked games. Still to come are such names as Dick Emberg of NBC, entertainers Tom Dreesen and Jim Belushi, former Cubs great Ernie Banks and ex-Braves Manager Joe Torre.

"They're not doing it for money," Rosenberg said. "We give everyone the AFTRA scale, which is $420. We give them tapes and video tapes and each one gets a Cub jacket. And they all have a ball."

Murray, a former "Saturday Night Live" star whose movie credits include "Ghostbusters," "Caddyshack," and "Stripes," is a diehard Cubs fan. He named his son Homer Banks Murray in honor of the Cubs' Hall of Fame shortstop.

"I've never had so much fun in my life," Murray said. "It was like a boyhood dream coming true."
