Trapped aliens suffocate in boxcar

By JENNIFER DIXON
Associated Press Writer

SIERRA BLANCA — Eighteen illegal aliens trapped in a locked steel-walled boxcar "started to get crazy" and fought each other in 130-degree heat as they died "little by little," the lone survivor says.

Border Patrol agents on a routine inspection of a freight train near this town 87 miles east of El Paso found the bodies — some with their tongues chewed — inside the blood-spattered boxcar.

The car had been locked from the outside, apparently by a smuggler who brought the 19 into the country, and was littered with a bag of animal crackers, six cans of corn, bags of toiletries and six empty jugs, the officers said.

The men, ranging in age from about 21 to 35, had clawed at the wood-lined door as the temperature rose as high as 130 degrees, according to Border Patrol agent Stanley Saathoff.

The aliens had boarded the train late Wednesday afternoon at El Paso, authorities said.

The only person found alive inside the car Thursday, Miguel Tostado Rodriguez, 21, of the Mexican state of Aguascalientes, survived by breathing through an opening punched in the floor of the boxcar with a railroad spike, Saathoff said.

"People started dying little by little, little by little," Tostado said.

"They started fighting with each other because they were desperate to breathe and (for) water," he said. "They didn't have any water. So they started to get crazy and fight each other. They didn't have any oxygen so they started fighting each other."

Tostado spent the night at an illegal alien detention center in El Paso, and was to undergo further questioning today, the Border Patrol said.

Tostado said that in desperation the men tried to get air by jabbing the spike into the floorboard, but that it was much too late for the rest of them. "We all took turns, but as the water ran out, the others lost strength," he said.

"With the darkness inside, I couldn't tell about the others," he said. "I thought some of them would be alive, but when the doors were opened, they were all dead."

Two of the dead apparently were part of a smuggling ring and were guiding the others to the Dallas-Fort Worth area for $400 to $500 per person, said Hudspeth County Sheriff Dick Love.

"We do know someone had to close the door and lock it, and we know it had to be a smug-

Ships dodge mines

By BRYAN BRUMLEY

WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration is postponing plans to dispatch helicopters to Kuwait while Saudi Arabia tries to marshal an Arab flotilla to handle mines apparently laid by Iran in the Persian Gulf, Pentagon sources say.

The Navy had planned to send a squadron of minesweeping M-5E Sea Dragon helicopters from Norfolk, Va., and sonar equipment from Rota, Spain, to deal with the threat, according to the sources, who spoke Thursday only on condition of anonymity.

Those plans were delayed because Saudi Arabia has four U.S.-made minesweepers and is "trying to organize a force from the other Persian Gulf states, rather than introduce a lot more U.S. or Western equipment," one Pentagon source said.

Holland also has offered the use of a minesweeper in the gulf, but those arrangements were under negotiation, as well, according to officials in the Defense and State departments.

An 18-member U.S. "Explosion Ordnance Disposal" team, operating from small craft, continued to patrol off the main Kuwaiti port of Al-Ahmedi to locate new mines and either remove or mark the 11 mines already found.

There were conflicting reports on how many mines actually had been removed, with some sources saying all or most were gone and others saying only one had been detonated and another removed by American divers.

"We don't really want the Iranians to know how we are taking them out, or how quickly," one Navy officer said. Removing mines with divers is much more dangerous than using ships or helicopters with minesweeping capabilities, the sources said.

Examination of the mines showed them to be Soviet-made Mark-08s, apparently sold to Iran by North Korea, which has been one of the major arms suppliers in the Iran-Iraq war.

The mines float just beneath the surface, moored to the bottom by tethers, and are designed to explode on collision, said one source, describing them as "rather primitive" devices. More sophisticated mines can be triggered by magnetism or pressure created by passing ships.

The Pentagon is moving ahead with plans to bolster its naval presence in the gulf.

Canadian museum takes history out to area residents

By CATHY SPAULDING
Staff Writer

CANADIAN — When their hometown passes its first century Saturday, residents here will look to their future as they remember their past.

With this dichotomy in mind, volunteers with Canadian's River Valley Pioneer Museum are working late nights this week to prepare for the museum's grand opening at 1:30 p.m. Saturday.

Museum curator and Canadian High School history teacher Pam Spencer says museum volunteers have worked past midnight studying and mounting family photographs, delicately arranging decades-old furniture and utensils in exhibits and spray painting rusty kettles and cast-iron cookstoves to restore them to their old, black glory.

The volunteers' efforts were rewarded Thursday when the museum hosted a private showing for the organizations and residents who have donated time and funding to the community museum.

Spencer hopes the new museum "will be more than just a collection of artifacts."

The curator wants to bring the area history to life through hands-on exhibits, study boxes that can be loaned to area schools, and community involvement.

One exhibit features fossils and Indian artifacts found in the county. But instead being locked in cases, these pieces, some of which date back 65 million years, are mounted on the wall to allow visitors to touch them. The fossil display is protected by a plastic coating. Spencer says the museum will keep replicas of Indian arrowheads "out where people can touch them" while keeping the real artifacts protected.

The museum's "archaeologist in residence," Horace Rivers, laid the fossils and Indian artifacts out on a three-dimensional

Willie's picnic continues July 4 tradition

CARL'S CORNER (AP) — Carl Cornelius, judge and mayor of a tiny truck-stop town, says he was thinking in terms of roasted hot dogs when singer Willie Nelson asked him if he wanted to have a picnic.

Months later, Cornelius, 47, expects to invest $1.7 million to host Willie Nelson's annual Fourth of July picnic Saturday in the city of 220 he says he built from a vision.

"I think this will be the biggest picnic ever. There's the interstate, there's traffic in the area. It's going to be wonderful," Cornelius said.

The event is expected to draw from 50,000 to 90,000 people.

A billboard with a full-body, cross-armed caricature of Nelson standing between Cornelius and his business partner, Zeke Varmon, is stationed just beyond the southbound Carl's Corner city limits sign. And if you're northbound on Interstate 35, an 18-wheeler billboard announces the boundary of the town located about 40 miles south of Dallas.

The picnic, the 12th staged by Nelson, might be just what Cornelius needs to boost his 2-square-mile town, which now includes a tire service, city hall and a jail. Situated about 15 miles north of Nelson's hometown of Abbott, the 3-year-old community's foundation is a truck stop, identifiable by giant instrument-holding frogs on its rooftop.

The frogs used to grace the roof of a Dallas nightclub that went out of business. Cornelius said he bought them to help out a friend who didn't want the frogs to leave the state.

Inside the stop, truckers can get a home-cooked meal, watch television, play some pool, buy Carl's souvenirs and even take a shower.

"I always wanted to own a town," Cornelius said. "One day I was listening to my CB and I heard these truckers saying there's no good place to eat, there's no place to take a shower."

In fact, it was the truck-stop cooking that enamored Nelson to Carl's place. "Zeke brought Willie out there one time and I was back there cooking. My cook had quit. He liked the biscuits and gravy."

A band that often plays at Carl's Corner has recorded a song about Cornelius called "Carl the Dreamer."

While he may be a dreamer, Cornelius is practical enough to have laid extra water lines for the visitors and has set up a huge medical barn. Dr. Red Duke of the University of Texas Health Science Center at Houston will direct medical personnel.

A private security firm will patrol the field while state and local law enforcement agencies will work on crowd control in the areas surrounding the picnic.

Getting to the picnic may be quite a chore for some travelers, say officials with the Department of Highways and Public Transportation.

One lane each will be available for northbound and southbound travelers along I-35E from the Dallas County line to Waxahachie. On the west leg of I-35, three bridges being repaired will slow traffic between Alvarado and Grandview.

Former Pampa Chief Ryzman slams police test

CORSICANA (AP) — The chief of Corsicana's 34-officer police force says he wants to drop a civil service test distributed by the state — the test also used by Lufkin and 258 other cities — because of problems minorities have passing the exam.

"We've only used it once since I've been here and I wasn't pleased with the minority status," Chief J.J. Ryzman said Thursday. "I'm gearing up to get more into the affirmative action mode. We really need more black officers."

Corsicana, with a population of 27,000, has two black officers, one Hispanic officer and three female officers on its police force. Lufkin, with a 57-member force, has one Hispanic officer.

The test is used by 259 other cities — including Lufkin, where only one of 13 blacks taking the exam June 8 passed.

The one black to pass, Kathi White, was a reporter for the Lufkin Daily News who took the exam as part of a news assignment. Two out of three Hispanics to take the test in Lufkin passed.

Ryzman, former Pampa police chief, said all blacks who took the Corsicana test failed.

"I'm not saying anything against (the state law enforcement commission), they're doing a good job. I'm just looking for an alternative to the test," he said. "I understand that it hasn't been updated for a number of years, and that can be a problem."

Ryzman said he will ask for formal approval from Corsicana city officials on the test change. He said the test will cost the city $15 each time it is administered. The current test is given at no cost to the city.

Statewide, blacks and Hispanics have less than a 30 percent passing rate on the civil service test provided by the Texas Commission on Law Enforcement Officers Standards and Education located in Austin.

Ryzman said he's looking at a new test designed by Stephen Wollack, a psychologist who is president of a California test-publishing firm, which also designed the law enforcement commission's test.

In an interview with the Lufkin Daily News, Wollack said the test he designed in 1975 is unfavorable to minorities and that he has been unable to convince the law enforcement commission to address the problem.

"If the new test is successful, we'll probably continue to use it. But we'll evaluate it after using it once to see if it meets our goals," Ryzman said.

He said Corsicana also needs to get more minorities interested in applying to join the force and taking the test. Ryzman said he has been talking with black leaders in the community on how to get more minorities interested in becoming officers.

"I want to get it straightened out before it becomes an issue," he said. "The (current) test has been good and is good, but it's time for Corsicana to make a change."

Museum

"map" that shows the age of each item.

Spencer also plans to bring the museum to the community through "study boxes," small collections of museum pieces that can be taken to area schools and civic groups. The museum will offer training programs so that teachers can incorporate the museum in their lessons.

When school resumes, Spencer will continue to teach high school classes in American history and American culture and crafts, a course that she says is offered only in Canadian schools. Spencer will take over her curator duties when each school day ends. Meantime, she hopes to hire senior citizens — many of whom volunteered their services to put the museum together.

Although she has a degree in history, Spencer admits the curator's job has not come easy.

"I studied museum books, visited museums and learned a lot by hard knocks," Spencer says.

The curator recalls the difficulty in putting together a ranch house exhibit.

"There was a lot of stuff in the display that I didn't know what it was," she says, adding that she depended on research books, advice from area ranchers and "people who had lived in the bunk houses" to put the display together.

Then there were such technical duties as fitting a musty old trumpet — "which stinks to high heaven" — into a shallow glass display case with other old musical instruments. When the glass lid wouldn't close, the trumpet had to be removed and mounted on the pegboard wall behind the school display.

Unlike other area museums, the Canadian museum — once a lumber company showroom — will not have permanent displays, Spencer says. There may be exhibits up for as long as a year or for as short as a holiday, she says, pointing out that the interior "walls" of the museum can be moved or taken down as exhibits change.

When it opens on Independence Day, the museum will feature the bunk house exhibit as well as displays showing pioneer homes, early schools, old photographs, a turn-of-the-century doctor's office and quilts.

One display honors Glazier, a northern Panhandle community wiped away in a 1947 tornado. The exhibit will feature a display case full of Glazier school beanies, hymnals and pictures. Dominating the display is a school backdrop featuring a river scene and advertisements dating to a time when telephone numbers used one to three digits.

Another exhibit shows the saddle shop of famed county saddle maker William Reid Arrington, who made saddles for famous cowboys and western movie stars. Spencer says the museum received items from the Arrington shop on loan from the Dick Dickenson family.

Another recent acquisition is a coal-oil chandelier that dates back more than 100 years. The lamp is owned by the Aaron Trueblood family.

The museum also features a display of cast-iron toys.

"That is probably my favorite exhibit," Spencer says. "Most of us are kids at heart."

Spencer says the museum was put together almost entirely through private donations of time and funding. The only government involvement came when Hemphill County commissioners paid for the building. A security alarm system with connections to the Hemphill County Sheriff's Department and emergency medical services has been installed.

In addition to a changing museum, Spencer sees an expanding museum. A dusty storage room adjoining the building, now used as a work room, may be used for future exhibits. A long two-story storage barn, where the huge pieces of lumber were kept, may turn into a display area for automobiles and farm equipment.

Spencer believes she is ready for Saturday's grand opening. She has yet to make one finishing touch. She wants a sign bearing a statement, which she attributes to Winston Churchill, that she believes sums up her philosophy about the museum:

The further you look back and reflect on the past, the further into the future you're likely to see.

Broadway 'genius' dies of AIDS

By DOLORES BARCLAY Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK — Broadway dimmed its bright lights for one minute in memory of Michael Bennett, the "total genius" who danced his way from the chorus line to capture seven Tony awards as a director, choreographer and producer.

Bennett, who died at age 44 on Thursday of complications from AIDS, was the wunderkind who parlayed a marathon bull session with a group of dancers into the musical "A Chorus Line," the longest-running show in Broadway history.

The theater community remembered him as the most influential director and choreographer of his generation, with hits that included "Promises, Promises," "Dreamgirls" and "Follies."

Church denies Bakker is clear

GATLINBURG, Tenn. (AP) — Former PTL evangelist Jim Bakker said in an interview broadcast today that an Assemblies of God official found no truth to charges of homosexuality against Bakker and he could return to the pulpit in six months.

But Assemblies of God officials, reacting to the interview, said Bakker's contentions were not true.

Bakker, interviewed on ABC-TV's "Good Morning America," said he and wife, Tammy Faye, are "hurting so much" from losing the PTL ministry that he did not yet know if he would seek to regain his preacher's certificate.

"We've been hurt so bad that we're just not sure we want to go back," said Bakker, who again denied allegations he had had homosexual experiences. The interview was taped Wednesday night.

Members of the team that brought "Chorus Line" to the stage in 1975 gathered Thursday night outside the Shubert Theater for an emotional reunion. Among them were Joseph Papp, producer of the Public Theater, where the show premiered.

Later, they met the show's company, and in the theater's auditorium, they sang "One," a song from the show, in tribute to Bennett.

"The work lives forever," said Marvin Hamlisch, who wrote the music for "A Chorus Line" and stood Thursday outside the Shubert, where a memorial service was scheduled for July 27.

Broadway marquees were dimmed briefly in Bennett's memory, and the tour company of Bennett's last big hit, "Dreamgirls," dedicated the night's performance to him. The 1981 show returned to town four days before Bennett's death.

Bakker said he spoke a week ago to the superintendent of the North Carolina district of the Assemblies of God church, the Rev. Charles Cookman.

"He told me they also had researched all these accusations and found them not to be true, and he said, 'Jim, if you want to go through our rehabilitation, you have our backing and you'll be back in our pulpit in six months.'"

In Dunn, N.C., the Rev. Charles Kelly, an assistant to Cookman, said today that Bakker did talk recently to the superintendent.

But Kelly said the church had not reconsidered its decision to dismiss Bakker and had not determined that the allegations of homosexual activity were unfounded.

Aliens

gler," said Michael G. Wheat, an attorney for the Border Patrol's El Paso sector.

The boxcar was of a type "that once the door is closed, it automatically locks. You cannot open it from the inside. Whoever closed that door knew that," said Border Patrol agent M.S. Dudley.

Some of the men had been dead for several hours when the gruesome discovery was made at 7:20 a.m., six miles east of this town of 700 people, Wheat said. Tostado told investigators others were breathing up to an hour or two before, the attorney said.

"As the heat grew in the boxcar, they began to shed clothing; some went into convulsions and died. It was very messy ... and most don't have identification," Wheat said.

He said authorities are working with the Mexican consulate and other agencies to identify the victims.

Saathoff said he decided to inspect the boxcar after noticing one of the doors lacked a seal.

In addition to inspecting boxcars in Sierra Blanca, Border Patrol agents conduct similar checks at the El Paso yards, but the boxcar slipped through because the seal was intact on the side seen by agents, Wheat said.

"I could hear Miguel's pleas for help: 'Please help us. We need help,'" Saathoff said. "I opened the door and saw Miguel standing at the end of the door — he was very wet, in his underwear, crying some, visibly shook."

Disco is good for the eyes

WASHINGTON (AP) — Scientists may have some advice for people who don't want to turn into bookworms wearing glasses: go to the disco once in a while.

That tongue-in-cheek advice actually may have some basis in fact.

In an article published in today's issue of Science magazine, John Wallman, professor of biology at City College of New York, and three assistants report that the strobe lights popular in discos apparently can stimulate the outer portions of the eye and partially arrest a worsening of nearsightedness.

Michael D. Gottlieb, one of the research assistants, said in an interview Thursday that he and Wallman are now trying to determine how much exposure to strobe lights is needed. They are experimenting with baby chickens that suffer from nearsightedness — prompting Gottlieb to nickname the chicks "disco chicks."

The scientists think their research may show that some cases of nearsightedness result from long periods of reading at an early age. Reading apparently stimulates the center of the eye but deprives the outer portions, which respond better to big forms, a variety of colors and shades of light, the scientists wrote.

Nearsightedness tends to hit children of elementary school age whose eyes are still developing. The condition usually levels out as they grow to adulthood.

Wallman said the theory, if true, indicates there is not much nearsighted adults can do to correct their vision problems.

"There's blood on the floor," said Assistant Chief Patrol Agent William Harrington. "Some of their tongues are chewed. It's a gruesome sight."

The men were lured north from their Mexican homes by the promise of a better life in the United States, despite the new immigration law making it illegal to hire undocumented workers, Saathoff said. "There's nothing there, where they're from," he said.

Tostado is from the city of Povelon Artega in central Mexico. Six of the dead were also from Aguascalientes state, and six others were from the neighboring state of Zacatecas, said Beatrice Lopez Gargallo of the Mexican consulate in El Paso.

Tostado suffered no injuries, said Dr. Bill Lipsey, who examined the man. "He had apparent dehydration and oxygen deprivation, but he appeared to be largely recovered. His only complaint was that he felt weak," Lipsey said.

Last year, the Border Patrol apprehended 44,900 illegal aliens in El Paso train yards, 14 percent of the total 312,000 in the entire El Paso sector, said James Selbe, associate chief of the Border Patrol.

In April 1984, five Salvadorans were killed and six other aliens were injured near Kingsville, Texas, when a train drove through them as they marched across a railroad trestle.

During the Fourth of July weekend seven years ago, 13 people died attempting to cross the Organ Pipe Cactus National Monument in the Arizona desert. Authorities rescued 12 Salvadorans and two Mexican smugglers.

Barbie testifies

LYON, France (AP) — Former Lyon Gestapo chief Klaus Barbie, ordered into court against his will, declared today he did not deport hundreds of Jews and French Resistance fighters to Nazi death camps.

At the end of his trial on charges of crimes against humanity, Barbie also denied rounding up 44 Jewish children at a foster home in Izieu, east of Lyon. All the children were deported and later died, most at the Auschwitz extermination camp.

Barbie, head of the Nazi secret police in Lyon from 1942 to 1944, said he wished to say only a few words before the three judges and nine jurors began deliberations. A verdict was expected tonight.

House sends $5.7 billion tax bill to Senate

AUSTIN (AP)—The Texas House has reluctantly approved a $5.7 billion tax bill that is just the kind of plan that Gov. Bill Clements has vowed to veto.

After a three-day budget debate, the House late Thursday sent the Senate a bill raising the state sales tax to 6 percent from the current 5 1/2 percent and extending it to cover insurance premiums.

Unless lawmakers act, the sales tax will revert to 4 percent in September.

Also Thursday night, the House sent the Senate a bill that would keep the motor fuels tax at 15 cents per gallon instead of allowing it to roll back to 10 cents in September. Approval of the gas tax came in a 128-20 vote. The sales tax change was approved 82-66.

"What we have fashioned here is the least reprehensible, the least painful among the available bad options," said

Rep. Dan Morales, D-San Antonio and sponsor of the sales tax bill.

The new tax money would be needed to help balance the $38.4 billion 1988-89 budget approved by a 97-51 margin shortly before the tax votes. However, Speaker Gib Lewis announced after the votes that a last-minute revised estimate from Comptroller Bob Bullock showed that the tax bills actually would fall $100 million short of balancing the budget.

The final budget will be drawn by a House-Senate conference committee. The Senate approved a $39.5 billion two-year budget.

"It's a bare-bones appropriations bill that keeps Texas solvent, and at the same time it makes some wise investments for the future," Lewis, D-Fort Worth, said of the House version.

Like Morales, Lewis painted himself as a reluctant taxpayer.

"The monies have to come from somewhere," he said, reacting to insurance industry complaints about the premium tax. "There is no fair tax. I'm not for the insurance tax. I'm not for any of those taxes we padded. It was a necessary thing we had to do."

Lewis said he talked to Clements, a Republican, about the budget and tax plans and "He has not told me 'no,' and I think that is encouraging."

But a top Clements' legislative aide said no after the late-night tax votes. Jim Kaster said the governor would veto the tax bill because of the insurance provision and because the budget bill is too high.

"I think the House has demonstrated as a whole that they are incapable of making cuts on the budget. I think the governor is willing to compromise but this goes way above any compromise I think he would accede to," Kaster said.

In three days of debate, the House cut only $19 million from the appropriations bill proposed in committee. Tax opponents viewed that as missed opportunity.

"Stand up like men and women. Let's hold the line on spending. Let's not increase the sales tax where the rich will get rich and the poor will be poorer," Rep. Bill Hollowell, D-Grand Saline, said.

"The people of Texas are counting on us to protect them from higher taxes," said Rep. Sam Johnson, R-Piano.

The tax debate opened with approval of a proposed constitutional ban on a personal income tax and then grew into a floor free-for-all. For two hours, members worked on a plan to expand the sales tax to cover virtually all services except medical care.

An amendment was added to that plan to raise the sales tax to 5 1/2 percent, but the whole package went down in flames, 116-27.

Later in the debate, Ways and Means Chairman Stan Schlueter, D-Killeen, reminded the House, "There's no way we are going to get out of here unless we tax somebody."

So, despite heavy lobbying from the insurance industry — Lewis said at one point during debate he had only 61 votes for the plan — the House turned its taxing power on insurance premiums.

"We have run out of good policy options to pursue," Morales said. "The reality is staring us in the face."

Lewis, in a message to Clements and Republican lawmakers, said the reality will be harsh without a tax hike.

Davis' debts in hundreds of millions, attorney says

FORT WORTH (AP) — Industrialist T. Cullen Davis filed for bankruptcy because he is several hundred million dollars in debt, not to escape two civil lawsuits pending against him, his attorneys say.

The bankruptcy petition filed Thursday nevertheless blocks all pending civil action against Davis, who recently avoided paying millions of dollars in damages when a wrongful death suit ended in a mistrial, said Davis lawyer Steve Sumner.

Another of Davis' attorneys, Edward W. Roush Jr., filed for his client under Chapter 7 of the U.S. Bankruptcy Code, which calls for voluntary liquidation of assets.

"One thing this does is it points out the futility of the plaintiffs ever being able to recover money from Cullen," said Sumner, who represented Davis in the wrongful death suit.

"It's simply saying to creditors, we're going to sell all our assets," he said. "It's a pretty drastic move, very drastic."

The two-page bankruptcy petition gave no details about Davis' debts, but Roush said most of them stem from Davis' being listed as a personal guarantor on loans that have not been paid.

Davis was sued for a total of $16.5 million in damages by his ex-wife, Priscilla Davis, and her former husband, Jack Wilborn, for the death of their 12-year-old daughter, Andrea Wilborn.

The case ended in a mistrial last month with jurors deadlocked 8-4 in favor of Mrs. Davis and Wilborn.

Since then, both have said they would take Davis to court again in connection with the 1976 shooting spree at his mansion in which the girl was killed, along with Mrs. Davis' boyfriend, Stan Farr.

The bankruptcy filing blocks those suits, but "it's not related to these cases," Sumner said. "Some of the best evidence is the fact that two months ago we could have done the very same thing and not gone through the trial."

"At one point we really believed during the course of the trial that the creditors were going to throw him into involuntary bankruptcy," he said. "It's certainly not a ploy in any respect."

Wilborn said he would discuss the Davis bankruptcy action with his lawyer to consider his options, but "we knew that there was a possibility he would take personal bankruptcy."

The Associated Press' calls to Mrs. Davis' home went unanswered Thursday night.

Davis was acquitted of murder in the mansion shootings 10 years ago. The two survivors of the incident testified he was the gunman, disguised in a wig and wearing black.

A suit from the estate of Stan Farr is still pending against Davis.

Unless granted an extension, Davis must file a list of his creditors by Monday. Within 15 days, he is required to file a list of his liabilities and his personal worth "for all the world to see once and for all," Roush said.

The Fort Worth oil heir's financial fortunes have deteriorated with the oil and real estate industries. His personal bankruptcy papers were filed with the U.S. District Court in Fort Worth.

Chapter 7 of the federal bankruptcy code is used by individuals to liquidate their debts. It is not used for reorganization of an individual's finances.

"We could have filed under Chapter 11 to reorganize, but we're not playing any games," Roush said.

32nd and 33rd Texas bank failures of year reported

By The Associated Press

Two Texas banks whose loan policies were termed too liberal have been shut down — pushing to even higher levels the record pace of the state's bank closings in 1987.

Texas banking commissioner Kenneth W. Littlefield on Thursday closed the Bank of Brazoria in Brazoria and Citizens Bank in Bryan.

The closings were the 32nd and 33rd of the year in Texas and the 97th and 98th nationwide. Texas has more than twice as many failed banks as any other state. Oklahoma is second with 14. Texas had 26 closed banks last year.

In both cases Thursday, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. arranged for other institutions to assume the deposits of the failed banks.

The Brazoria bank will reopen Monday as a branch office of the Moulton State Bank. Depositors of the failed bank will automatically become depositors of Moulton State Bank, subject to approval by an appropriate court, FDIC spokesman Bill Olcheski said.

The deposits of the failed Citizens Bank of Bryan will be assumed by UnitedBank-College Station, Olcheski said. The existing office of Citizens Bank will close, with UnitedBank-College Station establishing a new branch in Bryan on Monday to be known as United Citizens Bank, N.A., the official said.

Citizens Bank had total assets of $39.1 million, Olcheski said. United Citizens Bank will assume about $36.3 million in 9,600 deposit accounts and will pay the FDIC a purchase premium of about $5,000, Olcheski said.

"Liberal lending practices, and a former loan officer's poor loan administration and ineffective supervision by the bank's board of directors resulted in losses exceeding the bank's capital funds," Littlefield said.

Teacher group's employees strike

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas State Teachers Association, which has sought collective bargaining rights for school teachers, now finds itself the target of a strike by some of its own staff.

Nearly four dozen TSTA employees statewide walked off the job Thursday and picketed the organization's Austin headquarters. It was the first strike by the staff against the 97,000-member TSTA in its 108-year history, they said.

Officials of the employee group, the Professional Staff Association, said it was ironic that TSTA represents teachers in disputes with school management but had wound up in a dispute with its own employees.

"We feel there is a great deal of irony in their treatment of us," said Judy Olstein of Arlington, employee group vice president. "We feel that as an employer, they should set the example."

Long series of debates under way

Off Beat

By Jimmy Patterson

It is now 17 months and 30 days before the 1988 presidential election.

Already, we have us a crowd of democratic candidates who felt it necessary to join together in Houston Wednesday night for what will no doubt be a long series of debates.

With Gary Hart being driven from the race because of certain indiscretions, there is no clear-cut front runner at this point.

The seven democratic hopefuls, who have been termed "The Seven Dwarfs," are, for the most part, a quiet group. There are, though, exceptions.

The debate, which was presented under the guise of a special episode of William F. Buckley's "Firing Line," offered the candidates a chance to lambaste President Reagan for a full two hours.

In what could have been subtitled "The Bill Buckley Comedy Show" (as the moderator, he repeatedly tried to garner laughs from both the candidates and audience), the debate otherwise offered a fine exchange of ideas.

But, lets be realistic. A presidential election is not won because of a candidate's platform. It is won because of the way a candidate looks, sounds and otherwise comes across on television.

With that in mind, I offer the following review of each candidate and how he "performed" Wednesday night:

Bruce Babbitt, former Arizona governor. Babbitt will not win the democratic nomination for two reasons: He resembles George, the handyman, on CBS's Newhart show and he also has several mannerisms that resemble former President Richard Nixon, who, of course, was a Republican.

Babbitt, strong on environmental issues, featured his family and his dog in a pre-debate film clip to introduce himself. The clip showed the five of them cavorting about through the Arizona desert. Real touching!

Michael Dukakis, governor of Massachusetts. This guy looks more like he should be interviewing a candidate rather than being one.

Dukakis, who reminds one of a television reporter, had some good ideas and almost sounded like the second coming of Mario Cuomo.

If anyone holds more hope for what has been called "the future of the Democratic party," Dukakis does.

Richard Gephardt, U.S. representative, Missouri. If any of the candidates running for the presidency embody the notion of a true politician, it is Gephardt.

This guy looks like and talks like someone who is merely trying to position himself for a bed in the White House.

An All-American kinda guy, Gephardt was another candidate who included his family in his introductory tape.

In what is so far the most memorable statement of the campaign, Gephardt, in speaking of Reagan's economic plan, said, "It's not even midnight, but it's getting even darker."

Surely there will be a beefier statement than that to come out of this campaign.

Albert Gore, U.S. senator, Tennessee. Looks like a television evangelist. Talks like one, too. Doesn't have a chance and will be the first one to drop out of the campaign.

Gore gestures with his hands too much. He is a self-proclaimed former newspaper reporter turned politician. Who would want an ex-reporter in the White House?

Jessie Jackson, reverend. The most recognizable of the candidates because of his mustache, Jackson put on his usual eloquent speech.

Jackson did come across quite well in the debate and challenged Reagan's presidential performance more so than any other candidate.

Paul Simon, U.S. senator, Illinois. Simon, unfortunately, does not have a chance at nomination because he is bespectacled and bow-tied.

Simon, though, did have some interesting ideas that would no doubt sit well with the American people. Simon also seemed to be more genuinely concerned with the working man than any other debater.

Joseph Biden, U.S. senator, Delaware. With thinning hair and a soft-spoken nature, Biden reminded viewers more of the Kennedy legacy than any other candidate.

Biden, who stressed AIDS research and nuclear disarmament, was the most likeable of the candidates.

In summation, the group of seven was not all too impressive, but it is still early.

The clear winner of the debate was moderator Buckley.

In other words, where is Walter Mondale when you really need him? Even Fritz would have appeared impressive after watching this bunch.

Even Alan Cranston. Even Earnest Hollings ...

Investigators probe threats to voters

EAGLE PASS (AP) — FBI agents and Texas Rangers are investigating claims that elderly voters were threatened with the loss of housing subsidies if they didn't vote as told.

Allegations have been made against campaign workers accused of coercing low income, primarily elderly voters with threats of taking away federal housing subsidies, Texas Ranger Capt. G. E. Powell said.

"There are allegations of irregularities by political workers who campaigned to older people living in (low income housing)," Powell said.

He said it was reported that campaign workers would confront an elderly resident and find out whether he or she was receiving a subsidy.

EVER STRIVING FOR THE TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Bill would release government renters

Except for last year's tax reform, you might not expect Democrat Richard Gephardt and Republican Jack Kemp to agree on most matters of public policy. Well, now they have found another issue on which they can team. They want families in public housing projects to be able to buy their own homes.

Problem is, Congress doesn't seem willing to play along. Last month, the House rejected a proposal backed by the two presidential candidates that would have allowed public housing tenants to purchase their dwellings at substantial discounts and with low-interest loans from the federal treasury.

As columnist Charles Van Eaton has pointed out, the key missing ingredient in the government's housing programs is pride of ownership. Self-help clearly seems more fruitful than paternalism, especially when it comes to housing.

Dubbed the "Urban Homestead Act," the proposal builds on experiments launched by Secretary of Housing and Urban Development Samuel Pierce — such as the "Public Housing Homeownership Demonstration," in which about 1,200 units are being sold to individual families. Pierce also has encouraged tenant-management corporations, in which group of tenants take responsibility for managing their own apartment complexes.

In projects such as Kenilworth Parkside in the Washington D.C., area, dramatic improvements in maintenance and repair have followed — along with reductions in crime and poverty. Having proved their worth, the Kenilworth Parkside tenants group, and others in similar projects, now want permission to buy their project and offer individual units for sale to residents as condominiums. The Kemp-Gephardt plan would let them do that.

The Urban Homestead plan was offered as an amendment to an omnibus housing bill authorizing $16.5 billion to perpetuate the government's tried-and-failing housing and community development projects. Common sense and politics don't always mix, however, and even though the Senate in March approved a housing bill containing a similar plan to allow tenants to become owners, the House rejected the idea by a substantial margin. The fate of urban homesteading now rests with a House-Senate conference committee, which will try to reconcile the two bills. At the very least, the final product should allow tenants to become homeowners, free at last from the bondage of a government landlord.

Separation protects religion

One week the Supreme Court made a decision that infuriated fundamentalist Christians; the next week it made another that heartened them, along with a variety of religious organizations. The paradox does not betray inconsistency. Instead, it shows that the court is taking seriously the command of the First Amendment that the government practice neutrality toward religion — neither helping nor hindering.

The framers of the Constitution included that clause because they knew there were plenty of people who think it should do one or the other or both. There still are. Some of them can be found in the Louisiana Legislature, which in 1982 passed a law requiring that public schools teaching the theory of evolution in science classes also teach the rival theory of "creation science."

The legislators did this with the dröll idea of promoting "academic freedom," a term normally used to describe the right of educators to resist such intrusions as this into decisions about curriculum. The supposed fear was that Louisiana school children were not being exposed to the full range of sound scientific thinking about man's origins.

This measure might be commendable if it grew out of a dissatisfaction with the quality of scientific education in the state. In fact, out of the thousands of topics that engage the interest of scientists, this was the only one deemed worthy of remedial action.

The bill actually discourages schools from imparting any scientific knowledge about this subject, because it inflicts a special burden on those who choose to do so. Its sponsor, in an ill-advised moment of candor, confessed that "my preference was that neither be taught." Ignorance has its patron.

The legislature was soliticious of creationist ideas simply because they dovetail with the beliefs of fundamentalist Christians, who take literally the biblical account of how man appeared on the Earth. Rather than give teachers a free hand to teach scientific theories that conflict with fundamentalist theology, the state insisted that they give equal time to that theology, disguised as science.

The masquerade was too implausible to be ignored. The Supreme Court said creation science is aimed purely at supporting a religious doctrine, and that state help to that effort is therefore unconstitutional.

Enemies of church-state separation regard it as merely a device for favoring non-believers over believers. But the court's second ruling illustrates how religious bodies profit from the insulation against government scrutiny. It involved a Salt Lake City health club owned and operated by the Mormon church which fired a janitor, Arthur Mayson, because he was not a practicing Mormon.

In suing the church, he argued that the 1964 Civil Rights Act granted religious bodies an unconstitutional exemption from the ban on religious-based employment decisions. By allowing churches to practice this discrimination even in enterprises that are not clearly religious in nature, the suit claimed, Congress had given them an advantage that the First Amendment establishment clause forbids.

In strictest theory, this argument has some merit. If a church wants to open a fast-food restaurant that is otherwise indistinguishable from Burger King, there is no reason it should be subject to different federal laws than Burger King. The exemption is warranted only to the extent that churches are engaged in religious activities, which after all are protected by the Constitution.

But it is folly to ask the federal government to examine every undertaking by religious bodies and decide whether they should be classified as religious. That task would not only demand heroic powers of judgment from federal regulators, but also inhibit churches from pursuing their spiritual mission wherever it leads them. Not least important, it would thoroughly entangle the government in precisely those matters that the First Amendment aims at shielding from state interference.

The Mormon church claimed, with some evidence, that the gym served a religious purpose. In the eyes of several justices, the club's non-profit status created a presumption for the church. When a church begins running a profit-making secular enterprise with employees chosen for their religious devotion, the court will probably treat it differently. Until then, it will respect a zone of freedom where churches can operate without fear.

The message of these two decisions is that the right place for government in matters of religion is out. In these cases, as the framers intended, the wall of separation fully protects both believers and non-believers.

Life span extends 120 years

The Bible mis-read, can kill us. When Scripture refers to a human life span as "three score and 10 years," that refers to the outer limit of how long most people lived in those days.

David, who wrote those verses, lived to age 70. That was his life "expectancy," and that is when he died.

And ever since, generation after generation has approached age 70 expecting soon to die.

And as surely as savages can impose a death date with voodoo dolls, humans have accepted age 70 as "the time to die."

We have imposed this time limit on ourselves. The promise of Scripture, in Genesis 6:3 is for a life span of 120 years.

There is the further promise that the day will come when anybody who lives less than 100 years will be "as one cut off early."

And sure enough, our recent understanding teaches that the human genetic code has a clock that runs well for about 120 years and then runs down all at once.

Nonetheless, most humans remain brainwashed by the "three score and 10" phrase and choose to die 50 years before they need to.

With behavioral control and nutritional science, we have now learned to add half a lifetime to the life span of a pet dog.

Again, aging research with animals has clearly demonstrated that we can add up to 50 percent to the average lifetime and, significantly, these animals continue to enjoy the behavior typical of young animals until shortly before death.

Three decades ago, when most pets were fed table scraps, an old dog survived perhaps 12 years. Today, dogs fed scientifically designed food are living 18 years.

In the fledgling science of nutrition, we are all "learners" but one of the most "learned" of us is Dr. Gary Price Todd. His book, "Nutrition, Health and Disease," is constantly being updated.

The most recent update reminds us that we humans have much more lung capacity than we need, we have much more heart muscle than we need, we have enough brain so that it can be 95 percent destroyed and we can still win academic honors.

Dr. Todd is convinced that "we grow old because we are too lazy not to." He says we have aged because our attitude about aging has allowed us to deteriorate; that with nothing more than a corrected attitude we could do for ourselves at least what we have done for our pets.

Korean students lead fight for democracy

By Chuck Stone

South Korean students have been forced to take to the streets in Seoul to get something Americans take for granted. Democracy.

President Chun Doo Hwan's attempt to tarbrush the students as violent seditionists makes as much sense as King George III calling all the American revolutionaries thugs.

When Americans celebrate their democracy on the Fourth of July, the most violent thing they do is set off firecrackers.

In South Korea, tear gas fired by Darth Vader-garbed police has replaced the firecrackers.

But passions for a two-party democracy are just as intense. And one way to get it is through revolution.

As Woodrow Wilson once said, "We have forgotten the very principle of our origin if we have forgotten how to object, how to resist, how to agitate, how to pull down and build up, even to the extent of revolutionary practices, if it is necessary to readjust matters."

Readjusting matters to strengthen South Korea's two-party system is what democracy's real allies — the students — have been trying to achieve.

French students achieved a similar readjustment last November when their riots prevented Jacques Chirac's conservative government from overhauling the university system by limiting student admissions.

American students achieved a similar readjustment when their nationwide demonstrations forced a national reassessment of America's military role in Vietnam.

The normally tyrannical President Chun has shown tentative signs of backing down from his policy of massive arrests — not because he has had a change of heart, but because continued military brutality might cause the relocation of the 1988 Olympics, which are scheduled to take place in Korea.

Meanwhile, South Koreans reveal a remarkably disciplined revolutionary zeal.

A wry New York Times headline expressed their cautious methodology concisely:

South Koreans Riot in Night, Then Go Dutifully to Work

That Spartan ability to simultaneously follow two diametrically opposed patterns of behavior without damaging the economy or the ideals of democracy is part of a unique culture that has built one of the world's most flourishing economies.

South Koreans already lead the good life. They also want a good democracy — without Chun's arrogant pretenses.

That's why middle-class, middle-aged, middle-of-the-road adults have joined the student protests with an exhilaration that has astonished even themselves.

Yet, they're baffled by the democratic United States's dogged support for South Korea's undemocratic ways.

"Why do you Americans continue to support President Chun?" middle-aged demonstrators repeatedly ask Americans.

Easy. For the same reason an anti-communist obsessed America always has bet on right-wing tyrants (and just as consistently lost), as we did in Cuba, Vietnam, Iran and the Philippines.

The students can help forestall another setback.

Eventually, democracy will come to South Korea — if not through the influence of the U.S.A., then perhaps by the power of the IOC (International Olympic Committee).

President to outline 'economic bill of rights'

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan is unveiling an "economic bill of rights" he hopes will light a fire under congressional budget-makers and put some bang in his campaign against tax hikes.

Reagan was to go to the Jefferson Memorial today to give a speech that a White House official said would show "there are pocketbook issues" that command people's attention.

Among the tenets of Reagan's Independence Day proclamation, this official said, are:

- The right to earn a living free of overly burdensome taxation.
- The right to be spared overregulation by the government.

tion by the government.

■ A "truth-in-spending" plan requiring Congress, as well as the executive branch, to say how much a program will cost and how it will be financed.

■ A "super majority" vote — either three-fifths or two-thirds — would be required in each chamber of the Congress for passage of tax increases, whether they are income taxes, user fees or excise taxes.

■ Stepping up efforts to turn over to private business some programs operated by the government.

The White House official, briefing reporters Thursday on condition he remain anonymous, said the address "is not confrontational. It's not a, 'Go out and whack the Congress' type of speech."

This official said he thinks Reagan's enunciation of what he sees as Americans' fundamental economic rights is "a nice dovetail" with the president's recent tough criticism of the "tax-and-spend crew" on Capitol Hill.

In recent weeks, Reagan has reiterated his longstanding call for a balanced budget amendment and line-item veto authority, and has embarked on a schedule of out-of-town trips between now and the time he goes on vacation in mid-August.

In advance of Reagan's speech,

House Democrats put forward their own "economic bill of rights" Thursday, which they said was modeled after President Franklin Delano Roosevelt's 1944 State of the Union address.

"President Reagan is fond of using FDR's words; now we would like to have the president put his policies where his cue cards are," said Rep. Charles Hayes, D-Ill.

Rep. Augustus F. Hawkins, D-Calif., chairman of the House Education and Labor Committee, said he and Hayes want "the right to useful paid employment, a decent home, a good education, protection from the economic fears of old age and adequate medical care."

House Speaker Jim Wright, D-Texas, said: "The president resorts to gimmickry when he calls for a constitutional amendment to compel future presidents to do what he has repeatedly refused to do."

"The Congress has passed a budget which will reduce next year's deficit by $37 billion," Wright said. "Instead of working with us, the president sits on the sidelines and scoffs."

The Democratic-controlled Congress late last month adopted a fiscal 1988 budget that calls for $19.3 billion in new taxes next year as part of the $37 billion deficit-reduction plan. But Reagan has steadfastly resisted the idea of any significant new taxes.

Hundreds flee Ohio floods as severe storms kill six

By The Associated Press

National Guardsmen prepared to move today into two Ohio towns, where the worst flooding in 28 years forced hundreds to evacuate, while thunderstorms that killed six roughed up Oklahoma and silenced two Wisconsin TV stations.

"There's just no warning on something like this," Police Capt. Fred Eichinger said in hard-hit Shelby, Ohio. "You don't know how high it's going and when it's going to quit."

As Ohio coped with high water from rain-swollen rivers Thursday, thunderstorms spawned tornadoes in Texas and Colorado and dumped hail as big as golfballs near Kiowa, Colo.

The National Weather Service forecast scattered showers and thunderstorms for Ohio today, and flood warnings remained in effect for the rain-swollen Scioto, Sandusky, Cuyahoga, Tuscarawas and Mahoning rivers.

Lesser flooding occurred in sections of Montana, Pennsylvania and New Jersey. A flash flood watch was in effect in south central Montana, and flood watches went up in New York's Catskill Mountains.

Storms were blamed for two deaths in Indiana and one in Oklahoma. Three people drowned on a lake in eastern Texas when wind capsized their boat.

Authorities in Ohio evacuated a trailer park early today after high water caused a trailer's butane tank to explode, burning a man and his wife, said Mount Gilead Police Chief Robert Ruhl. The man was in critical condition today.

Officials estimated flood damage in north central Ohio at more than $15 million. Four counties remained under a state of emergency today.

Gov. Richard Celeste activated 60 Guardsmen to provide security and help clean up in Shelby and Bellville.

Black Fork River flooding forced as many as 500 Shelby residents from their homes and cut the city of 9,800 in two. Fifty to 100 of Bellville's 1,700 residents were also evacuated, officials said.

Five people were injured in Shelby, where flooding damaged about 300 homes, as well as business and industrial property, said the Ohio Disaster Services Agency. The damage was expected to top $10 million.

In neighboring Crawford County, about 125 residents of Bucrus left their homes. An apartment complex was evacuated in Galion.

In Oklahoma, the storms cut power to a Lawton hospital, felled trees, closed roads, shattered a Duncan furniture store's windows, flipped a mobile home and blew the roofs off several Yukon buildings.

In Oklahoma City, lightning tore the top off an oil storage tank, sending burning crude oil and natural gas into the street. The fuel flowed into a creek and firefighters fought the blaze there, said fire department spokesman Jon Hansen.

LaRouche faces extradition if he doesn't surrender to authorities

WASHINGTON (AP) — Presidential candidate and extremist Lyndon H. LaRouche, who once vowed "I will not submit passively" to arrest, faces extradition from West Germany if he does not turn himself over to authorities next week, federal prosecutors say.

LaRouche, 64, the four-time fringe presidential candidate whose bizarre politics enraged the Democratic Party regulars with whom he tried to associate, was indicted Thursday on a charge of conspiracy to obstruct a federal grand jury.

He is accused of conspiring to block an investigation into an alleged $1 million credit card scheme by his followers as part of his 1984 presidential campaign.

LaRouche left the country shortly before the grand jury in Boston handed up the indictment. He had returned only days before from seven months in Europe to testify before the grand jury.

Assistant U.S. Attorney John Markham said in court papers filed with the indictment that LaRouche was in West Germany and that his attorney had offered assurances he would surrender voluntarily in time for an arraignment Wednesday.

Dana Scanlon, LaRouche's spokeswoman, said in a news conference across the street from the White House that LaRouche "absolutely" would return.

She quoted LaRouche as calling the case a "malicious and fraudulent concoction," triggered by "a faction inside the Reagan Department of Justice (that) has rushed to the aid of Moscow once again."

LaRouche told CBS-TV in a telephone interview that prosecutors were "cooking up something out of rumors and whispers and interpretations."

Should LaRouche not surrender, the Justice Department said in a written statement, the United States has an extradition treaty with West Germany that provides for extradition on the charge of conspiring to obstruct justice.

The indictment accuses LaRouche of participating in a conspiracy by ordering followers to flee the country, shredding documents, stalling federal agents with false statements, discussing ways to "fix" the grand jury and plotting a "vicious personal attack" on a federal prosecutor.

Some of the allegations were based on evidence revealed earlier in court proceedings to have been obtained by federal agents during a massive raid last Oct. 6 on LaRouche headquarters in Leesburg, Va. More than 400 heavily armed state and federal agents seized the offices under warrants.

Immediately following that raid LaRouche issued a statement declaring: "I have committed no crime. Any attempted arrest, or arrest, would be an attempt to kill me. I will not submit passively to such an arrest, but, in such a scenario, I will defend myself."

The conspiracy charge adds LaRouche to a case in which 13 of his aides and five of his organizations have been charged with fraud, conspiracy or related crimes.

The indictment concluded the Boston end of the investigation, but LaRouche remains the object of a tax investigation by a federal grand jury in Virginia.

In addition, Virginia and New York authorities have filed fraud and other charges against 28 LaRouche followers for allegedly bilking $30 million from people around the country in a bogus loan scheme.

LaRouche, 64, is a one-time Marxist who moved to a place seemingly on the far right of the political spectrum.

Temporary merger of Greyhound, Trailways said to benefit riders

WASHINGTON (AP) — Greyhound will begin operating financially crippled Trailways' assets, subject to reversal if the ICC decides not to make the merger permanent.

Greyhound announced June 19 it wants to purchase Trailways for $80 million. Asked about customer pricing under the new structure, Fred G. Currey, Greyhound's chief operating officer, said the company in the past 90 days had reduced prices along "thousands" of routes for which Greyhound is the sole bus provider.

"We price not against buses, but against automobiles and discount air fares, and business has been based on that policy since the day we bought Greyhound Lines," Currey said. He promised to restore service to some communities that lost public transportation in recent years and said the Trailways logo will be retained on that company's buses.

"I think the transaction is really good news for users of low-cost transportation," he added.

Trailways has about 1,200 buses, and Greyhound has 2,800.

Hot air balloonists racing across Atlantic

LONDON (AP) — Two adventurers trying to make the first Atlantic crossing by hot air balloon hurtled in their 21-story-high craft through the frigid heavens today at an average speed of 100 mph.

"They are comfortable and everything is going extremely smoothly," Fiona Miller, a press officer at the London control center, said today of balloonists Per Lindstrand and Richard Branson.

If the two keep up the pace they've maintained since their Maine lift-off Thursday, they should land this evening in Scotland.

The Swedish-born Lindstrand said in a radio message to London's Post Office Tower, the control center for the flight: "Never in my wildest dreams did I imagine completing the crossing in (under) two days."

Lindstrand and Branson, head of a British entertainment conglomerate and chairman of Virgin Atlantic Airways, had previously anticipated the flight ending Saturday or Sunday.

They took off in the Virgin Atlantic Flyer from a ski resort at Sugarloaf Mountain in western Maine at 4:10 a.m. local time.

Mrs. Miller said the balloonists had abandoned plans to descend from 27,000 feet to 24,000 feet to pick up faster winds because of fears this would sweep the craft further north, with the chance of missing Britain.

The two men reported earlier that temperatures at that altitude were about 40 below zero.

In a message received at the control center Thursday night, Branson had expressed concern about fuel. The balloon was carrying 4½ tons of propane gas before lift-off but lost ¼ of a ton as the balloon when a ground line snagged two tanks during launching.

But fueling fears appeared to have disappeared today because of the balloon's swift progress. Mrs. Miller said it had kept up an average speed of 100 mph, far faster than expected. The men had reported peak speeds of up to 140 mph.

Branson, 36, and Lindstrand, 38, who lives in Britain, covered the first 1,000 miles of their 3,400-mile journey in just over 10 hours.

They broke the distance mark for hot-air balloons at 907 miles while passing about 140 miles southeast of St. John's, Newfoundland, at 27,900 feet.

Three other Atlantic balloon crossings were accomplished with helium-filled balloons.

Cross sent back to prison

AUSTIN (AP) — James Cross Jr. was sent back to prison after being convicted a second time in the 1965 strangulation death of a University of Texas sorority sister.

State district court jurors who took just 14 minutes to convict Cross last week deliberated about 13 hours Thursday before deciding to send him to the Texas Department of Corrections for 80 years.

Officials said the date of his transfer from the Travis County jail to the TDC would be set later.

Attorneys said the verdict in effect gives Cross a sentence of 20 years because he has 60 years credit for actual time and "good time" served since his first conviction of the same crime in 1966.

Several witnesses said Susan Rigsby and her sorority sister, Shirley Stark, both of Dallas, arrived in Austin on July 18, 1965, for a summer-school session. They disappeared that night, and their bodies were found 12 days later.

Cross originally was charged with Miss Stark's slaying as well, but that charge was dropped after he went to prison for killing Miss Rigsby.

A ruling by the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals caused the retrial that ended with a guilty verdict last week. The punishment phase began four days ago.

Cross showed no emotion when the verdict was read and had nothing to say as officers rushed him out of a back door of the courthouse to the county jail.

State District Judge Mace Thurman immediately sentenced him and ordered him remanded to the Travis County sheriff for transfer to Huntsville.

"I'm very, very happy that he was sent back to prison," said Robbie Rigsby, mother of the victim, Susan Rigsby. "That's where he ought to be."

"We're very disappointed," said defense attorney David Botsford, adding that the sentence would be appealed. He said he also would ask for a new trial because the record was "replete with errors."

Botsford said Cross would not be released on bond while the appeal is made because of the length of the sentence.

20,000 students rally, discuss response to Chun's pledges

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — About 20,000 students chanted anti-government slogans today as radical leaders charged that President Chun Doo-hwan does not intend to keep his promise of sweeping democratic reform.

Top dissident Kim Dae-jung was quoted by his aides as saying he has no immediate plans to campaign for the presidential candidacy of the opposition.

The governing and opposition parties were forming plans today for implementation of Chun's promised reforms, which include press freedom, guarantees of basic rights, increased local autonomy and release of political prisoners.

Authorities said the country was quiet today. But a major opposition group announced plans for a rally next week to demand the quick release of all political prisoners.

"Down with the military dictatorship!" chanted the students from about 30 schools in the Seoul area as they listened to speeches during the rally at Yonsei University.

Speakers charged that Chun's promises of reforms were intended to deceive the people and defuse massive anti-government protests that swept the country for 18 straight days last month.

Students denounced Chun, a former army general, and sang revolutionary songs as they paraded around the campus.

The gathering was the first major political meeting since Chun announced Wednesday his acceptance of direct presidential elections and other sweeping reforms.

The governing and opposition parties were forming plans today for implementation of Chun's promised reforms, which include press freedom, guarantees of basic rights, increased local autonomy and release of political prisoners.

In the governing Democratic Justice Party, 11 task forces were at work developing plans. The party said it would draft a framework next week for a proposed constitutional amendment allowing direct presidential elections, and would finalize its draft by late this month.

The National Coalition for a Democratic Constitution, the opposition alliance that started the protests, announced it would hold a rally next week to urge the government to quickly release all political prisoners.

Minister of Culture and Information Lee Woong-hee said it might take "some time" for the government to grant amnesty to opposition leader Kim Dae-jung because of the large number of pending cases involving amnesty and restoration of civil rights.

Meese criticized for not reporting financial ties

WASHINGTON (AP) — Attorney General Edwin Meese III faces new criticism from Congress because he neglected, apparently for more than a year, to disclose his financial ties to a businessman now involved in the Wedtech scandal.

Sen. Carl Levin, D-Mich., is scheduling a congressional hearing for Thursday to look into, among other things, a May 24, 1985, memo by Meese on his own finances in which he failed to mention that on the previous day he had invested $60,000 with W. Franklyn Chinn.

Levin, chairman of the Senate subcommittee on oversight of government management, on Thursday released copies of the internal Justice Department memorandum in which Meese listed his holdings for department officials "to assist you in identifying matters from which I may be disqualified."

In testimony to the Senate Judiciary Committee during his confirmation hearings in 1985, Meese promised that in order to avoid potential conflicts of interest he would disqualify himself from Justice Department matters pertaining to companies in which he held stock.

The 1978 Ethics in Government Act says that once a public official makes such a promise to Congress, he must list in writing the holdings from which he will excuse himself.

Justice Department spokesman Patrick Korten denied Meese had failed to meet any legal requirements regarding disclosure of his financial holdings.

Meese "has not ever participated in any decision that would involve a matter in which he had a financial interest and that includes" the Chinn partnership, Korten said.

Solar energy heats one village's businesses

EDITOR'S NOTE — Over the years, the flooding on the Kickapoo River grew worse and the town of Soldiers Grove, Wis., knew something had to be done. The solution was to move the downtown businesses to higher ground. And with that plan came a novel idea to require that all of the buildings be solar heated.

By ROBERT O'MEARA
Associated Press Writer

SOLDIERS GROVE, Wis. (AP) — This southwestern Wisconsin town, where the steep hills often block the sun, touts itself as the nation's first solar village.

Soldiers Grove, population 622, mandated solar heating when downtown businesses were moved to escape the flooding on the Kickapoo River.

For the most part, nobody's sorry.

Ed Herbst, a 69-year-old tavern owner, has become a firm booster of solar energy, as have many of his neighbors. Not that he had much choice five years ago when he and his wife Marie closed their Wonder Bar in the old downtown area and rebuilt on Passive Sun Drive on the hillside. The town fathers had decreed that old businesses move away from the river and that new business structures be solar heated.

"We were flooded out seven or eight times in the old town," Herbst said. "This town had to make a decision. Would we move and rebuild, or just let the town die? We weren't about to let it die."

One of the nation's 20,000 flood-prone communities, Soldiers Grove moved its business section out of the flood plain and rebuilt about a quarter of a mile away on the hillside.

Herbst says his solar system, including a 750-gallon storage tank, cost $21,000 and is "pretty close" to paying for itself because of low heating bills.

Three buildings away, Arlen "Bud" Everson says that despite outside temperatures occasionally dropping to 20 degrees below zero, he has never had to use the gas furnace in his solar-heated Turks' IGA supermarket since he opened the store in 1980.

Soldiers Grove today is a product of too much water — and the energy crisis of the 1970s. Originally, the town was dependent on the river for logs and then for electric power.

The village began with a sawmill on the banks of the Kickapoo in 1857. A hydroelectric plant was built at the turn of the century.

Meanwhile, the river valley was losing its ability to absorb rain and melting snow as land was cleared and timber cut. Floods hit in 1907 and by the mid-1930s water was damaging buildings almost every spring.

In 1962, Congress approved construction of a dam at LaFarge 36 miles upstream as a flood control and water recreation project. Environmentalists fought the project, which was finally dropped.

Soldiers Grove hired a "relocation coordinator" in 1975 with federal money. In 1977, the village paid $82,500 for the relocation site but its business district was still in the old downtown area a year later when the Kickapoo smashed through earthen levees and swept down Main Street, leaving damaged, mud-filled businesses.

Soldiers Grove knew it had to do something quickly.

It decided to relocate all businesses, placing retail stores in an area as close as possible to the residential neighborhood and industries on the other side of U.S. 61.

Museum plans ice age exhibit

CINCINNATI (AP) — Specialists at the Cincinnati Museum of Natural History are shaping an exhibit that will allow visitors to walk through an Ice Age environment of 19,000 years ago.

The $2.8 million exhibit will cover nearly 20,000 square feet and feature a landscape filled with animals and vegetation of the late Pleistocene Epoch, the last period when glaciers covered much of North America.

The museum says the exhibit will be unique because of its size and scale. Visitors will enter an interpretive area where panels will explain the scene through viewing windows. Then, the first-hand contact begins.

"In this exhibit, you open the gate and walk in," museum director De Vere Burt says. "You're turned loose on the landscape."

Other museums have smaller, walk-through exhibits of the Ice Age — referred to as "ice fronts" — and walk-through dinosaur exhibits. The Cincinnati Museum of Natural History has a walk-through cavern that shows visitors models of underground rock, mineral formations and marine creatures.

The exhibit is scheduled to open in 1991, when the museum and the Cincinnati Historical Society move into Union Terminal. The old railroad station is being converted into a historical center, with the help of a public bond issue, after failing as a shopping mall.

Greg McDonald, a paleontologist at the museum, is working with experts on the period and artists who are crafting scale models of the exhibit animals. He is drawing on information obtained about prehistoric vertebrates from scientific literature and excavation sites, including the Big Bone Lick site in Boone County, Ky., across the Ohio River from Cincinnati.

Gravel deposits in those sites hold valuable clues left behind when the region's glaciers melted and withdrew, clearing the continent for the appearance of modern man. At the Ice Age's peak, the glaciers covered an estimated 5 million square miles of the North American continent.

The world's sea levels dropped about 300 feet because so much of the water was frozen in the glaciers. The great melt afterward raised sea levels, and the oceans covered huge portions of what had been dry land masses.

McDonald says his goal for the exhibit is to be as realistic as possible to encourage scientific interest in youngsters.

"I want to get kids turned on to science as a discovery," he says. "We hope to have so much in here that you'll think you need numerous trips to find it all."

As part of the realism, McDonald and Sandra Toombs, the museum's director of exhibits, want to show the saber-toothed tiger in a role other than that of a violent predator. They plan to display a mother of the species with young in a cave, with a freshly killed meal nearby.

"What we're trying to do is be much more realistic in our portrayal of the prehistoric era," McDonald says.

Ms. Toombs, who envisioned the exhibit and has been planning it since 1978, is planning a simulated ice cave. The landscaping will feature waterways and vegetation, along with the reptiles.

The detail will take time to create. On-site work won't begin until 1989. A diorama artist will need two years to paint realistic background scenes on 5,000 square feet of wall and ceiling that will surround the exhibit.

Artists and workmen will use vinyls, plastics and other durable materials for the re-creation, Ms. Toombs says. The exhibit is intended to withstand the probing hands of visitors, young and old.

"There will not be any rails, or barbed wire, or mine fields," McDonald says. "But in certain areas that are susceptible to damage, we'll use natural barriers such as streams."

Demo candidates will stick to issues

HOUSTON (AP) — Democratic presidential candidates will be sticking to the issues and not engaging in personal attacks, party chairman Paul Kirk says.

"The American people are sick and tired of negative campaigning," he said Thursday after a meeting with two other members of the party's Unity Task Force.

"They want to get positive alternatives. All the candidates understand things can get tense," Kirk said. "We're going to do everything we can to keep this on a positive track ... I don't think this is a lot of baloney."

The task force, formed in March, includes Sen. George Mitchell of Maine, Sen. Wyche Fowler of Georgia, Gov. Martha Layne Collins of Kentucky, former Gov. John Carlin of Kansas and Reps. Morris Udall of Arizona and Bill Gray of Pennsylvania.

The panel wants to encourage a positive tone in the campaign and keep personal squabbles out, Kirk said.

Only Collins and Carlin attended the session the day after seven of the party's presidential hopefuls also met in Houston in a nationally televised debate.

"Last night made clear, it put to rest the myth that was abroad in the land that somehow here were only seven dwarfs competing for the Democratic nomination," Kirk said.

"Each and every one of the candidates equipped themselves with maturity, seriousness of purpose and strength."

"We saw a new generation of leaders, an alternative to the incumbent party," he said.

He said he expected more personal sniping during the campaign from the Republican Party "between the establishment elite on one hand and radical right on other and who is going to control the party in the post-Reagan era. In the Democratic Party, you're going to see relative consensus on important issues."

Kirk also criticized the Republicans, who he said would begin a summer-long promotional campaign beginning this weekend.

"The Democratic Party is not going to stand still for the charade that is about to begin on the party that came in promising fiscal conservatism and now has committed what I consider fiscal felony," Kirk said.

He echoed themes from the Wednesday debate, blasting the Reagan administration's failure to propose a balanced budget and blamed the president for the rising trade deficit and national debt.

"Everyone understands the importance of staying on substantive issues," he said. "We welcome a clash of ideas and I think it's going to be stimulating and a substantive debate from which the party will learn and the ultimate nominee will benefit."

He said the Unity Task Force would be meeting on occasion with candidates and their staffs to discuss differences the party does not want aired in public.

"Things that ought not to be (public) are any kind of unwarranted, untrue defamation or distortion of fact," he said. "If we just stay on the kind of track we were on last night..."

He said if the campaign degenerated into personal attack, the task force would make a judgment depending on the level of the debate.

Alien deaths recall 1980 Arizona tragedy

AJO, Ariz. (AP) — It was seven years ago today that a band of nearly 30 middle-class Salvadorans and their smuggler escorts set out to cross 40 miles of heat-seared desert between Mexico's border and this mining community.

Thirteen died. Fourteen were rescued, their lips cracking and their minds muddled by lack of water as temperatures in the sandy soil over which they staggered soared to an estimated 150 degrees.

Stripping off clothing as they stumbled on, they had drunk aftershave and had fought over drops of urine in their attempt to find any moisture that might slake their thirst.

They had paid up to $1,200 each to "coyotes" — the smugglers who promised to sneak them into the United States as they fled their war-torn homeland.

Officials said it appeared they had little idea as to the conditions they would face when they were dropped off at the border on July 3, 1980, with their Mexican guides.

Some of the women were clad in hose and high heels and wore nailcolor on their toes and fingers. One businessman carried $4,000 to help him get a new start.

The highway at Gila Bend offering them a route westward to Los Angeles or eastward to Tucson, lay 75 miles to the north. Between sprawled the 516 square miles of the desert preserve, a virtually waterless expanse of cactus, low prickly brush, wind-whipped dirt and rolling, sun-baked hills.

They had 20 gallons of water for 30 people, Pima County Sheriff Clarence Dupnik said. Authorities estimate a person loses half a gallon of body water an hour while walking through such desert heat.

One of the survivors, Youlanda Estela Hernandez, 20, told officials that to stay alive the marchers used and fought over every drop of liquid they could find, including their own urine.

"We put it in rags and we wiped our faces with it," she said. "It was so hot and we were so thirsty."

Cactus added to their ordeal. Dr. Joseph Rustick, who treated the survivors, said "there were thorns in their feet, thorns in their backs, legs, thighs, buttocks and faces — everywhere that you can imagine."

Two of the survivors, a Mexican and a Salvadoran, were later accused of being part of the band of smugglers responsible. One of the 13 who died also was said to have been a member of that band.

Judge devotes life to law, politics and art

By ROBERT MCGLOHON
The Brazosport Facts

ANGLETON (AP) — As Judge Neil Caldwell sits in the office of his 23rd District Court, he is surrounded by mementos from a life devoted to law, politics and art.

Behind him is a shelf full of law books, to the right his law diploma from the University of Texas. Under a statue of the blind goddess of justice is a gavel from his days as a legislator. And on the far wall is an oil painting of a New Mexico Indian.

The painting is signed: Neil Caldwell. With his boots propped upon his desk, chair tilted back, Caldwell is relaxed as he discusses the most recent honor to come his way: being named state artist by the Texas Legislature.

And while the artist within him is proud of this singular honor, the lawyer shines through as he downplays his accomplishment.

"It's just an honorary type of deal," he says. "There's no emolument with it."

Emolument, a lawyerish word for salary, is what the state artist doesn't get. It's a unique honor there's only one state artist at a time but, as Caldwell puts it: "That and 50 cents will get you a cup of coffee."

And though Caldwell says he hopes to support himself painting some day whenever and if ever he gets tired of the bench, it isn't for gain that he paints.

Painting, instead, is more of a release, he says, a release he needs to wind down at the end of a day when he's held in his hands the lives and careers of the people who come before him in court.

Painting is an intimate part of his being, he says, a part he can't remember being without.

"I've drawn since before I can recall," Caldwell says. "I have vivid memories of asking my mother for pencil and paper."

In fact, he says, he first studied art at the University of Texas before deciding on a law career. And although he stopped painting, for the most part, as his legal career developed, he never gave up art altogether.

For example, when he was serving in the Texas House of Representatives in the 1960s, he made quite a name for himself by drawing cartoons of the characters inhabiting those halls then.

When Texas Monthly drew up a list of the 10 best legislators one session, it referred to Caldwell's talents in naming him to that list: "thoroughly honest, intelligent ... probably the best all-around member ... talented painter, sculptor, pianist."

But it wasn't until 1980, after he'd left the House for the district bench, that Caldwell took up painting again in earnest, he says.

Since then, he says, "It's almost become an obsession."

It's an every-night affair for Caldwell to enter his Angleton home studio for a session at the canvas.

Although he's been commissioned to do portraits and sometimes experiments with different styles of painting, Caldwell says he mostly sticks to oil and brush. His paintings are of the southwest New Mexico and Old Mexico, mainly.

He calls his style "genre" painting, meaning that he paints everyday people doing everyday things.

In 1983, after he'd been back in the swing for about three years, Caldwell's artistic career took a decisive turn. He met George Campbell, an Angleton artist to whom Caldwell credits the maturity of his style.

Freeport man building twin deck inland paddlewheeler

By JOHN MITCHELL
The Brazosport Facts

FREEPORT (AP) — Andy DeSham crouches down on the rusting metal deck of the Velasco Princess, a proud riverboat captain carefully examining each of the weldmarks running along its 60-foot frame.

"I've been saving up for this for quite a while," he says, standing up to grip one of the steel poles, then unconsciously pulling on a chain attached to his belt. His voice echoes through the hollow hull underneath as he checks the starboard view.

For the 66-year-old DeSham, the maiden voyage of the Princess won't be for another season or two. The vessel, under construction since 1985 and anchored behind his North Avenue C home, is a nearly-exact replica of an old-time inland paddlewheeler, and a long-time fantasy come true for its designer.

So for now he's happy stepping out the back door of the house to board his creation, and riding the river of thick, choppy weeds dotting the lawn, keeping the bow pointed full-speed ahead and just to the east of the motor home parked in the front driveway.

DeSham, a former Dixieland banjo picker and long-time private investigator, has always designed boats as a hobby, though he's not sure why.

"I just love to build things," says the 10-year Freeport resident of a hobby that has slowly become a future plan for him and his wife Lettie.

"I don't lay around, I stay busy." He began small, constructing rowboats, fishing boats and dories. In 1981, DeSham was persuaded to build a wooden, 20-foot paddleboat. The two-year effort won him non-commercial trophies in the city's Blessing of the Fleet parade for three years running.

Called Li'l Sister, the boat was powered by a five-horsepower gas engine, which ran a hydraulic pump that turned the paddlewheel. Ten people fit comfortably inside the paneled craft, as its 53-inch paddle turned 16 times per minute in the water.

The Li'l Sister now rests on a trailer in the shadow of DeSham's crowning glory, its sides in the beginning stages of dry rot.

Across a pile of sheet metal, the Velasco Princess sits, an artwork of beams, supports and metal sheeting which will eventually become a 40-ton vessel. It rests on a collection of railroad ties, about nine wooden stands, and a couple of thick poles in concrete bases.

"I've thought about this for several years," DeSham says. "This is my last big project."

To design his paddleboat, DeSham first took about four months to build a hand-held miniature out of balsa wood and white pine. Based on the red, white and blue mock-up, DeSham sees his finished vessel with a moveable gangplank, two functioning chimneys, two 19-foot-wide decks and a 10-foot wheel, among other extras.

The propulsion system will work the same way as Li'l Sister's did.

To make it even more authentic, a friend plans to donate a traditional riverboat steering wheel with handles, and DeSham will make a three-toned steam whistle.

"I've never seen a boat quite like this," he says. "This is my own design." The design has already been approved by the Coast Guard.

Plans for the completed vessel?

"I'd like to make it a business, and I don't intend to compete with anybody," DeSham says. Offering scenic, full-day cruises up and down area rivers, complete with refreshments and possibly a bit of Dixieland music for top deck dancing, fits into his style.

"I don't care for deep-water traveling," he says. "I'm just at the age now where I just want a nice, smooth ride."

Eventually, he and Lettie will live on the boat.

DeSham holds model of riverboat he is constructing.

FREEDOM

Inscription for the Statue of Liberty

BY EMMA LAZARUS

Give me your tired, your poor,

Your huddled masses yearning to breathe free,

The wretched refuse of your teeming shore,

Send these, the homeless, tempest-tossed, to me:

I lift my lamp beside the golden door.

This truly reflects the attitude of a nation living close to God. The concern and love for others grows through Christian fellowship. Attend Church Regularly.

The Church is God's appointed agency in this world for spreading the knowledge of His love for man and of His demand for man to respond to that love by loving his neighbor. Without this grounding in the love of God, no government or society or way of life will long persevere and the freedoms which we hold so dear will inevitably perish. Therefore, even from a selfish point of view, one should support the Church for the sake of the welfare of himself and his family. Beyond that, however, every person should uphold and participate in the Church because it tells the truth about man's life, death and destiny; the truth which alone will set him free to live as a child of God.

His Touch

By Charlotte Barbaree

Scripture: Every good and perfect gift is from above, coming down from the Father of the heavenly lights, who does not change like shifting shadows. (James 1:17 NIV)

When my youngest daughter was 2-years-old, I picked her up one day from Sunday school. In one hand she carried a paper with a bird sticker; printed on the paper was "God made the birds." In her other hand, she carried a chocolate chip cookie. Seeing the paper she held out to show me, I lifted her up into my arms and asked, "Do you remember your Bible verse for today?"

She looked at both items in her hands and recited without hesitation, "God made cookies."

Recently I took a day off from writing because I was weary, blue and suffering from a persistent case of writer's block. Fighting the urge to go to bed and escape into the oblivion of sleep, I embarked on a half-hearted attempt to reverse a down day. I spent some time in my Sunday school classroom preparing for Sunday morning. I shopped for a wedding gift for a young woman I have watched grow up. I visited briefly with a friend of my oldest daughter and got a cheery report on a mutual friend who is expecting her first baby. I dug weeds in my yard and communed with earthworms, ladybugs and fat toads. I exchanged friendly, teasing jibes with my neighbor. I sipped a glass of iced tea and admired the glorious cascade of blooms on our wisteria arbor and breathed its sweet fragrance. I fussed over sick pansies.

I listened to the delighted giggles of the neighbor's little girls as they played. I laughed at our fat, old grandpa cat as he played in the grass like a kitten. I enjoyed the happy banter of my teen-aged daughters as they discussed school annuals and a boyfriend's softball game. I rewebbed a chaise lounge and chuckled as I wondered which of my daughters had fallen through the rotted webbing. I read the evening newspaper over my husband's shoulder.

And what did I get for my effort? I got sunburned feet, grass rash, sore muscles and a whole new attitude! I was reminded that God does make cookies. He gifts us with all the little everyday happenings which embroider our lives with golden threads of joy.

Religion Roundup

LOS ANGELES (AP)—The Institute of Gay Spirituality and Theology has been established here to foster "national dialogue between gay and mainline religious communities" on Christian teachings and morals.

Its director, the Rev. Malcolm Boyd, a homosexual Episcopal priest and author of numerous books, including the popular, "Are you Running with Me, Jesus?," said the institute would act as liaison among scholars and sponsor conferences.

He said New York's Episcopal Bishop Paul Moore Jr. is co-chairing an advisory committee in formation, including the Rev. John C. Bennett, president emeritus of New York's Union Theological Seminary, and Rev. John B. Cobb Jr., a noted process theologian at California's Claremont School of Theology.

NEW YORK (AP)—A Catholic peace organization, PAX Christi USA, has announced its 1987 "Teacher of Peace" award to Seattle Archbishop Raymond G. Hunthausen, whose Vatican-curtailed authority recently was restored.

Christian film makers are shooting for a higher profit

By KEVIN B. BLACKSTONE
Dallas Morning News

DALLAS (AP) — When Frank and Darryl Kuntz, two Dallas film makers, release their first-ever theatrical feature film, it undoubtedly will receive a G rating — for general audience, guts and God.

Kuntz Bros. Inc. is in the midst of becoming the first company in the small but recently profitable Christian film industry to make an offering to the giant billion-dollar major motion picture market.

"It's always been in the back of our minds to do a feature film," said youngest brother Darryl, 41, explaining the company's unprecedented decision to produce the $1.1 million "Dakota in Texas" for the secular movie market. "And with the industry the way it is right now — with video and foreign markets — there's a good possibility it can be real profitable."

Kuntz Bros. recently completed principal shooting near Roanoke on the film, made in Texas with an all-Texas cast and crew and scheduled for release next year.

Not everyone, of course, in this heretofore hidden niche in the film industry is as optimistic about the Kuntz Bros.' experiment.

"I'm skeptical about them doing that, especially if they keep to their Christian values," said Harry Bristow, owner of Christian Cinema Inc. in Ambler, Pa., and one of the pioneers of the evangelical film industry. "The commercial field has never been acceptable to this kind of thing."

The Christian movie industry, however, has experienced a popularity boom of sorts that has translated into profits. And Kuntz Bros., which has been a part of that, is gambling that the time is ripe to take its wholesome, family-oriented dramas into the general motion picture market.

Kuntz Bros., a family-owned company that includes Darryl's wife, Lynn, as script writer and Frank's wife, Sandy, as publicist and business manager, is among more than 80 evangelical film production companies in the United States, according to the loosely organized Christian Film Distributors Association, based in Oak Park, Ill.

Bristow, who co-founded the association in 1973, said Christian film producers make between 30 and 40 films annually, including about a dozen short feature films.

The films are distributed through a network of more than 80 domestic and 30 foreign evangelical film libraries that have access to more than 3,000 titles. The libraries rent the films to churches and other religious groups for anywhere from $35 to $150, according to the association.

"It's not a very large market," said Michael Korpi, a Baylor University professor of telecommunications who is studying the Christian film industry. "It's maybe $20 million a year in rentals. And probably the top five titles account for 40 to 50 percent of the market."

The association reported that many of the producers, like Kuntz Bros., are based in Texas, including the largest, Waco-based Word Inc.

In 1980, Word Inc., a subsidiary of media conglomerate Capital Cities-ABC Inc., produced a series of films featuring lectures by a popular California evangelist, the Rev. James Dobson. Korpi estimated the series has grossed about $20 million.

The Kuntz brothers, who started their company in 1980, also have realized success in what has become a highly competitive industry. They entered the fray after producing Channel 39's "The Good Time Gang," a 30-minute children's show, between 1976 and 1980.

"We saw there was a crying need for good children's films," said Frank Kuntz, 49. "And we felt the TV situation was about to dry up on the local level, but we wanted to continue what we were doing. So producing that show evolved into making films."

Like many start-up small businesses or independent film companies, Kuntz Bros. did not have the capital to support its venture. But the brothers' background as a music and comedy duo gave them an idea of how to raise financing.

"We invited some businessmen down to the Chaparral Club and gave them a show," Frank said. "We got 12 investors out of it."

Kuntz Bros. created its limited partnership, and the investors committed $150,000 for the first production, "The Penelope Gang," a 35-minute film released in early 1982. The film, which rented for $45, struck a lease rate of 300 per month, which the association stated is a very healthy rate in the industry.

"It wasn't enough by itself to support us, but it did bring in some revenue, and we were able to make a second film," Darryl explained. "And as the films rented, they brought in royalties for us."

During the next 4½ years, Kuntz Bros. produced four more films at a cost of no more than $210,000 each. They included two more children's films, "The Big Money Mixup" and "The Tunnel," and two youth movies, "Angel Alley" and "Harley."

Jim Tuell, president of Educational Evangelism Inc. in Euless, a distribution and production house, said Kuntz Bros. films rank in the 95th percentile of all Christian film rentals.

"Angel Alley" won the 1984 USA Film Festival award as the best youth film in the entertainment short film category, and "Harley" was cited in 1985 as one of the country's four best youth films by Group Magazine, a leading Christian film magazine.

Both youth films featured Texas actor Lou Diamond Phillips, who plays the lead role in "Dakota" and is starring in a new Columbia Pictures movie, "La Bamba," scheduled for release in Dallas July 24.

"I hope that the same thing that happened with 'Teen Wolf' happens with 'Dakota,'" said Greg Vaughn, president of Evangelical Films in Dallas. "Michael J. Fox was in that before he was a star, and he made that movie quite a bit of money. We look and pray with great anticipation for them."

Make slippers from scraps

By BETH COTTEN

I have always loved the story of Douglas "Wrong Way" Corrigan, the unemployed airline mechanic who in July 1938 took off from New York in a monoplane, headed for Los Angeles.

Over 28 hours later he landed in Ireland, claiming he followed the wrong end of his compass needle. On his return he commented, "I can't get over the number of girls who think because I flew the Atlantic I would make a perfect husband."

Women who would reason that way probably also believe that when a nylon stocking or pair of pantyhose gets snagged or develops a run, it's no longer useful.

I have made so many toys, dolls, ornaments, decorator items and other things from no-longer-wearable hose that my husband calls me the Pantyhose Princess.

I could probably finance the air fare to Ireland with the money I've saved on these projects. One very popular item is the animal slippers that I make for children.

They are a real breeze to assemble, to fit any feet, and they make terrific gifts for birthdays, Christmas or other occasions. Kids love 'em and so do their parents.

If you'd like step-by-step instructions, you may order our plans. They include all the information you'll need to make the slippers plus two additional projects: a whimsical footstool that features a pair of old sneakers as the base, and three adorable stuffed animals to make from tube socks in any size.

To help keep the kids busy, we also have a craft booklet featuring complete instructions for 12 fun projects kids can make with just a little adult supervision.

To order plans for the animal slippers, footstool and sock animals, specify Project No. 1305; or for the craft booklet, specify No. 200. Send $4.95 for either item, or save a dollar and receive both for only $3.90.

Mail to: Makin' Things, Dept. 79065, P.O. Box 1000, Bixby, Okla. 74008-1000. Add $2.95 for a catalog, featuring $16 worth of coupons.

To make the slippers, I used a pair of winter-weight pantyhose, a piece of buckram (any stiffener will do), some heavy felt and miscellaneous other supplies.

The best way to make a pattern is to have the child stand on a piece of paper and trace around the feet. Use the paper pattern to cut eight sole pieces: four from felt, two from heavy cardboard and two from buckram.

Sandwich a buckram sole between two felt soles and topstitch 1/4 inch from the edge, all the way around. Assemble a second sole in the same manner.

Cut off one leg of hose at the panty line. Temporarily insert a cardboard sole inside the foot. Stuff newspapers inside to create a foot form, over which you will make the slipper.

Glue a 1-inch-thick layer of fiberfill over the outside of the form, on what will be the top and heel portions. Pull the top of the hose leg back down around the foot form, so that the top opening of the hose is at the toe of the slipper.

Neatly fold the excess hose to the bottom of the slipper, trimming some off if necessary, and whipstitch securely in place.

To create the animal effect, add button eyes, fabric ears and a pompom nose. For the eyes, pinch up a ridge down the center front of the slipper top. Sew a button to each side of the ridge, near the foot opening, stitching back and forth under the ridge.

Cut two ears from felt and stitch them to the slipper top, just above the eyes. Tie a small ribbon bow and tack in place over one ear. Tack a pompom nose to the toe of the slipper.

Pin an assembled sole to the bottom of the slipper, manipulating the fiberfill stuffing to fit. Backstitch around the sole to attach it, using heavy-duty thread and stitching through all layers of the sole and slipper bottom.

Remove the cardboard and newspaper, and that's all there is to it! An inexpensive, easy project to fit any child.

Now is a good time to join patriotic group

Independence Day, the day observed in commemoration of the adoption of the Declaration of Independence in 1776, often encourages us to join one of the patriotic societies. Membership requirements include an application that has documentation to prove descent from a person that has military service.

The largest of these societies is the National Society of Daughters of the American Revolution, 1776 D Street N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006. The National Society of Sons of the American Revolution, 1000 South Fourth Street, Louisville, Ky. 40203 for male descendants of the Revolutionary War is a goal for many genealogists.

Although these two organizations are the best known, there are many other societies that you might want to consider. I urge membership in some type of lineage society if only to have a record of your lineage in a published source.

An excellent reference for names and addresses of various organizations is the book by Ariene Eakle and John Cerny, "The SOURCE, A Guidebook of American Genealogy," published in 1984 by Ancestry Publishing Company.

Descendants of people that established residence in Texas prior to the state's annexation on Feb. 19, 1846 may want to consider membership in Daughters of the Republic of Texas, The Alamo, San Antonio, 78205. Male lineal descendants should write to Sons of the Republic of Texas, 2426 Watts Road, Houston, 77025.

Some of the organizations are very active, with regular meetings and special events, while others seem to be a membership roster only. Find the one that suits you.

Uncle Sam sells government vehicles to highest bidders

FORT WORTH — Consumers in the market for a good used car or truck might consider buying from an unusual source: Uncle Sam.

Last year the U.S. General Services Administration (GSA), the federal government's multi-billion dollar business manager, sold 36,973 used vehicles — including sedans, station wagons, trucks, vans, buses and motorcycles — to the general public.

Some 500 sales in more than 100 cities nationwide brought proceeds of $56,895,000 to government coffers, most of which is used to buy replacement vehicles for the federal fleet.

In GSA's five-state Region 7, headquartered in Fort Worth, the agency sold 8,199 vehicles for $9,175,000 last year at 88 sales in 24 cities, including Little Rock, Ark.; New Orleans; Baton Rouge, La.; Albuquerque, N.M.; Oklahoma City; Tulsa and Stillwater, Okla.; Fort Worth; Houston; and Laredo, Texas.

GSA sells used government vehicles to the general public by competitive bid, using one of three methods. At the traditional auction, an experienced GSA auctioneer takes voice bids as each vehicle is offered for sale. At "spot bid" sales, written bids are accepted as each vehicle is presented for sale. In "sealed bid" sales, offers usually are made by mail.

No preference is given to individuals, dealers or groups, including veterans and religious organizations, and GSA employees and their immediate families are prohibited from bidding.

Successful bidders cannot drive vehicles away until full payment is made — in cash, or by any guaranteed form of payment.

Most vehicles offered for sale come from the federal fleet. Others have been seized or confiscated by federal law enforcement agencies.

Many sedans and station wagons are sold after three years of government use, regardless of mileage. Pickup trucks are sold after six years of use or 50,000 miles, and four-wheel drive vehicles after six years or 40,000 miles.

The vehicles — in a wide range of popular interior and exterior color combinations — usually are equipped with automatic transmission, power steering, power brakes, radial tires, tinted glass and AM radio. Most also have air conditioning.

Prejudice disrupts friendship

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I are 29 years old. We are friendly with a married couple whose company we enjoy, but there is one problem: They are very prejudiced against black people. This hateful attitude seems to come up in conversation at least once every time we're together.

I was raised not to judge people by the color of their skin, and consequently this racist attitude of theirs is very upsetting to me. I am not the type of person to argue my point, as this would be rude, and may jeopardize our friendship.

Should I continue to ignore their comments, or should I tell them how I feel?

OKLAHOMA READER

DEAR READER: Silence implies agreement, so speak up and let them know that their bigotry exposes their ignorance, then try to encourage them to adopt a more enlightened attitude. Of course, it may jeopardize your friendship, but perhaps you should ask yourselves if these are the kind of people you really want for friends. Speaking up in defiance of prejudice and bigotry is not rude; it's the right thing to do. Those who choose silence are guilty of the sin of omission.

DEAR ABBY: My ex-fiance and I

Dear Abby

were madly in love. He asked me to marry him, I said yes and he gave me a ring. Then his mother told him she would disown him if he married me. We saw each other behind his mother's back, then he left for Japan (he's a U.S. Marine). Before he left, he said he loved me but he doesn't feel right going against his mother's wishes, and I should forget him.

Well, it's been six months and I haven't heard from him. His close friend, who is a friend of mine, told me that "Neil" is trying to forget me. I've tried to forget Neil, too, but I can't.

I'd like to know who was wrong — Neil, or his mother, who caused my broken engagement, canceled wedding, broken heart and endless tears?

STILL IN LOVE

DEAR STILL: You're hurt, which is understandable. You'd probably feel less hurt if you could blame Neil's mother, but look at it this way: How would you like to be married to a fellow who was old enough to be a Marine but had to date the girl he loves behind his mother's back? Rejoice! And try harder to forget him. He's not a man — he's just a mama's boy in a man's uniform.

DEAR VIDEO: I was glad to see that letter from a minister who objected to screaming kids at church weddings. The kids are not at fault; they're tired, bored and cranky, and shouldn't be expected to sit still and be quiet during a long wedding service.

We had our lovely wedding videotaped. One screamer ruined the video because his voice could be heard during the entire service — even above the voice of the minister. Please print this to forewarn others. It's too late for us, but not for them.

VIDEO RUINED

DEAR VIDEO: A couple in Ashland, Ore., sent me the card they enclosed with their wedding invitations: "Because the ceremony will be videotaped, a sitter will be provided for children under 6 years of age in the church nursery. Children are welcome at the reception."

DEAR ABBY: I'd like for you to settle an argument between my husband and me. We will abide by your decision. I am a housewife with three children. My husband is a judge.

Monday: He took a class (for enjoyment mostly) and was gone from breakfast until bedtime.

Tuesday: I played volleyball for one hour.

Wednesday: He went to a college basketball game. Again he was gone from breakfast until bedtime.

Thursday: We both stayed home.

Friday: He went to a professional basketball game with our 4-year-old son. (I could have gone, but was home ill.)

Saturday: His high school friends called and wanted him to play poker.

This is when the argument occurred. I felt that he had been away from his family too much during the week and I said so. Awaiting your decision...

COUNTRY HOUSEWIFE

DEAR HOUSEWIFE: I'll do what the judge does — base my decision on the evidence. If the week you cite is a typical week, I vote in favor of the plaintiff (you).

Navratilova, Graf advance to Wimbledon finals

By ANDREW WARSHAW
AP Sports Writer

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — It was a Wimbledon semifinal between the two queens of tennis. And a real princess was there to see it.

Martina Navratilova and Chris Evert, rivals who have graced the Centre Court at Wimbledon for 14 years, came back for their 73rd career meeting Thursday and served up a tennis feast.

For just over two hours, they held a captive crowd, which included Britain's Princess Diana, spellbound.

At the end, both agreed they had produced something special.

"It might have been the best match we have ever played," Navratilova said after her 6-2, 6-7, 6-4 victory that sent her into Saturday's championship match against Steffi Graf, her heir apparent.

"It was certainly the best match the two of us have ever played on grass," Evert said.

The men's semifinals were to take center stage today, featuring two players who have been there many times and two relative newcomers to final four of the Grand Slam event.

Ivan Lendl, the world's No. 1 player but still searching for a Wimbledon title, was to go against Stefan Edberg of Sweden. They were to be followed by Pat Cash of Australia and American Jimmy Connors, gunning for his third Wimbledon title just two months short of his 35th birthday.

Lendl, winner of two U.S. Opens and three French Opens, was making his fourth Wimbledon semifinal appearance in five years. Edberg, a two-time Australian Open titlist, was in his first.

Connors, who came back from the brink of elimination in the fourth round and then breezed past Slobodan Zivojinovic in the quarterfinals, was playing in the semifinals for the 11th time. Cash, who lost just one set in his first five matches, has been there once before, in 1984.

The winners meet for the title on Sunday.

The way Graf reached the final could not have been in sharper contrast as she took just 51 minutes to thrash Pam Shriver 6-0, 6-2. At 18, Graf will displace Navratilova as No. 1 in the world if the West German wins on Saturday. "Everyone wants to be No. 1 and I want it too," Graf said. "But I'm going to be in tennis a long time."

Navratilova, who has not won a tournament this year, said she could not remember the last time she played so well. "I'm flying now," she said after beating Evert. "On a sustained level, this was the best I've played for a long time because I never let up."

The 30-year-old Czech-born American, going for a record sixth consecutive Wimbledon title, said she felt "as athletic as I was in a long time, quick and agile and eager."

She had to be, because Evert threw everything into the match.

"I can't play any better," the 32-year-old American said. "This is her best surface. I feel proud of myself. Today, I played really, really well and I can't ask more of myself."

Bengals' Wilson suspended

CINCINNATI (AP) — Cincinnati Bengals full-back Stanley Wilson, who underwent four drug rehabilitation programs during an 18-month suspension for cocaine addiction, may have finally reached the end of a short, promising career.

Wilson was suspended for a second time by National Football League Commissioner Pete Rozelle on Thursday after drug tests showed that Wilson had renewed cocaine use.

Wilson may be eligible for reinstatement after June 1, 1988, but Bengals assistant general manager Mike Brown told The Cincinnati Enquirer that Wilson might not bounce back a second time.

Wilson, reached Thursday at his home in Carson, Calif., said he did not want to talk about the suspension.

"I have no comment," Wilson said. Wilson overcame long odds to make a comeback with the Bengals last season after being suspended from October 1984 to May 1985 for violating the league's drug policy.

During training camp last season, Brown said he was impressed by Wilson's recovery.

"Stanley Wilson has made a tremendous comeback," Brown said last season. "He demands to be tested, to have urine samples taken every week."

Wilson spoke freely about his addiction last season, and said he pitied those who were abusers of drugs or alcohol.

"I feel sorry for the people who are drinking, or whatever, because I've been there. I know where they're going and it's a nowhere road," Wilson said.

Wilson had spoken before support groups for cocaine and alcohol abusers.

One of Wilson's friends, Cincinnati Bengals' cornerback Louis Breeden, said he was stunned by the news that Wilson had been suspended for renewed cocaine abuse.

"I never suspected anything," Breeden said. Brown would not say whether the Bengals would accept Wilson if he is reinstated. The league said a decision on whether to reinstate Wilson will be based on several factors, including avoidance of drugs and Wilson's general conduct.

Brown termed Wilson's relapse "unfortunate." "I feel badly about it," Brown said. "I grew to like Stanley personally. This is a sad day for those of us who know him... but this is probably the best thing that could be done for Stanley Wilson."

Palmer taking a well-deserved rest before next meet

ALSO NOTED: Three District 1-4A players made the All-State baseball team, indicative of how good some of our district programs are. Named were catcher Trey Dewey of Canyon, infielder Kyle Streun of Hereford, outfielder Edwin Walker of Lubbock Estacado.

Four schools came off the NCAA probation since classes ended in May. Loyola of Maryland, Southern Illinois, Idaho State and Alabama A&M all cleared one to two year probationary periods, while South Florida becomes a Oklahoma State, which will have some golfers here for the Top O' Texas Tournament, captured its sixth NCAA golf title last month, tying the school with Harvard and Stanford. Princeton has won 12, Houston 16, and Yale 21, indicating golf is for Ivy League types.

With all NCAA titles settled, most successful this past year was a private school, Stanford of the Pac 10, which took five team crowns (baseball, tennis, water polo, swimming and diving) while UCLA grabbed three. In men's sports the SWC got two, both by Arkansas (cross country and indoor track), while SWC women were more successful, winning three (cross country, swimming and diving), Texas A&M (softball). Incidentally, a national survey of college presidents two years ago named Stanford as the best place to receive an undergraduate education, proving the private sector can do an excellent job of mixing academics and athletics.

Mets shut out Reds 5-0

CINCINNATI (AP) — Move over Tom Seaver, Jerry Koosman and Dwight Gooden. Make room for the New York Mets' latest record-setting pitcher — journeyman Terry Leach.

Leach, a 33-year-old right-hander, pitched a two-hitter Thursday night to beat the Cincinnati Reds 5-0 and improve his record to 7-0, matching Roger McDowell's club record for most wins without a loss at the start of a season.

"I'm just happy to be where I am right now," said Leach, who has bounced around the minors for most of his 12-year professional career. "Things couldn't be better. I didn't think it (the winning streak) would last as long as this."

The side-winding Leach has been primarily a reliever throughout his unspectacular career, compiling a 6-6 record with four saves in 70 major-league appearances before this year.

He won three games in 18 relief appearances this season, and has won four of his five starts since moving into the Mets' injury-depleted rotation. His earned run average has dropped to 2.13, trailing only Gooden's 2.12 on the staff.

His sinker has helped raise the Mets' pennant hopes while sinking Cincinnati's momentum.

The victory Thursday improved New York's record to 42-35. The Mets have won 10 of their last 14 games to secure second place in the National League East, trailing St. Louis by five games.

Leach allowed just a third-inning single to Ron Oester and an eighth-inning single to Bo Diaz. He walked two and struck out three.

Astros snap losing streak

PHILADELPHIA (AP)—Houston's Glenn Davis tried to be unemotional about his two-out, ninth-inning home run that snapped reliever Steve Bedrosian's major-league record save streak.

"I'm a power hitter, and he's a power pitcher," Davis said Thursday night after his three-run blow rallied the Astros to a 7-6 victory over Bedrosian and the Philadelphia Phillies.

"He just got one right over the plate," Davis said.

Bedrosian, too, took the cool approach. "Those things happen," said the reliever, who was one out away from his 14th save in as many consecutive appearances.

"It was a fastball right down the middle," Bedrosian lamented. "I would like to have had it a little more outside."

"I'll just have to bounce back tomorrow (Friday), keep battling."

Davis came up in the top of the ninth, two runners on and the Astros trailing the Phillies 6-4.

Bedrosian threw one pitch and Davis hit it for his 15th home run of the season and a Houston victory.

The Astros' comeback snapped a three-game losing streak and ended Philadelphia's five-game winning string. Davis was asked what he was thinking as he stepped in against the streaking Bedrosian.

"I was trying not to think," the Houston first baseman said. "He throws hard. His fastball moves and he has a good breaking ball. He's been pitching well, doing something right."

Bedrosian last Monday broke the major-league record of 11 consecutive saves in as many appearances, set in 1973 by Sparky Lyle of the New York Yankees. Bedrosian followed that with his 13th.

Denny Walling started the Astros' ninth with a single. After Terry Puhl popped out, Bill Doran singled and Walling stopped at second. Kevin Bass flew out.

Davis then hit that first pitch over the left field fence for three runs and a 7-6 lead. The blow gave the Astros home runs in seven straight games, a club record.

Larry Andersen, 6-4, pitched the eighth to earn the victory. Reliever Dave Smith retired the Phillies in order in the ninth for his 15th save. Bedrosian, 3-2, with an NL-tying 20 saves, suffered the loss.

It was Bedrosian's first loss since April 14 against the New York Mets. Davis' homer was the first given up by the right-hander since Alan Ashby hit one May 11 at Houston.

Houston Manager Hal Lanier scratched his head and commented, "There are not too many times that you're going to do that with Steve out there...."

"The odds were not too good in our favor the way Steve has been throwing. It's just one of those things that happen. With a lead in the ninth he'll usually close it down."

"This time our hitter won out." From May 8 until Thursday, Bedrosian was 1-0 with 19 saves and a 0.91 ERA.

The Phillies knocked out Houston starter Bob Knepper in the fifth and took a 6-4 lead.

With one out, Milt Thompson beat out an infield single, reached second on an infield out and scored on Mike Schmidt's two-out double, tying the score 4-4.

Lance Parrish then singled home Schmidt, sending the Phillies ahead. Parrish, who advanced to second when left fielder Dave Lopes bobbled the ball for an error, scored on Chris James' double. The hit, which knocked out Knepper, extended James' hitting streak to eight games.

The Astros took a 1-0 lead in the first on a triple by Kevin Bass and Glenn Davis' RBI single.

Phillies' Rick Schu has a safe landing at home.

Pampa draws bye in district 15 tournament

The Pampa 15-year-old All-Star Squad has drawn a first-round bye in the district tournament later this month in Dumas.

Pampa meets the Dumas-Randall County winner at 7:30 p.m. Sunday, July 12. Dumas and Randall County play July 11.

The district 15 champion advances to the state tournament July 28 in Lamesa. The winner there goes onto the regionals.

Pampa's Optimist Park will host the District 13-year-old Babe Ruth Tournament and the State 16-18 year-old Babe Ruth Tournament this year. The district 13 tournament is scheduled to start July 14. Derrick Eldridge will manage the Pampa 13-year-olds.

The state 16-18 tournament is set to begin July 18. Pampa drew an automatic bye in the district 16-18 tournament since they are the host city for the state meet. Other area teams will play for the district championship in Groom.

Pampa plays a round-robin format with other area teams in the 16-18 district and must play a minimum of 10 games to qualify for post-season competition. The top eight teams advance into district play.

Taloga, Okla. downed Pampa 12-3 in a 16-18 year-old baseball game Wednesday night at Optimist Park.

Taloga is an American Legion team comprised of players from several Oklahoma towns.

Pampa managed three hits, but one was a two-run homer by Bret Mitchell in the second inning. Kyle Clark's single scored John Monthey for Pampa's third run.

Grant Gampin took the mound loss for Pampa.

Taylor takes first-round lead in Farr Toledo Golf Classic

TOLEDO, Ohio (AP)—Nancy Taylor liked the way things added up after the first round of the Jamie Farr LPGA Toledo Classic.

Taylor, a rookie on the women's tour, shot a 4-under-par 68 Thursday for a one-stroke lead over Cindy Hill and Heather Farr.

"I feel I have a good chance (to win)," said Taylor, a 26-year-old native Californian. "I'll take it one day at a time and one shot at a time and then add it up at the end."

Playing early in the day, she made the turn at one under, then birdied three consecutive holes down the stretch to post the lowest score of her professional career.

She rolled in a 30-foot birdie putt on her 15th hole, then made birdie putts of 10 and seven feet.

A more unlikely leader might not have been possible among the 112 players who completed the first round on the 6,220-yard, par-72 Glengarry Country Club layout.

Taylor made the cut in four of 16 tournaments she has entered so far this year, with her best finish a tie for 37th two weeks ago at the Lady Keystone Open. She ranks 129th on the money-earnings list with $5,205.

"I started out slow," Taylor said of her rocky beginning on the LPGA Tour. "It came down to getting myself adjusted, learning how to function out here. You have to pace yourself.... The main thing is taking it one day at a time and knowing what you want to do."

Syphilis up 23 percent this year; biggest jump in decades

ATLANTA (AP) — The largest increase in syphilis cases in the United States in two decades has researchers fearing more illness in newborn babies and possibly more cases of AIDS.

The national Centers for Disease Control reported Thursday that 8,274 syphilis cases were reported in the United States in the first three months of this year, up 23 percent over the 6,725 cases in the comparable period a year earlier.

An increase of such magnitude has not been reported since 1960, researchers for the Atlanta-based agency said.

Syphilis, a sexually transmitted disease, had been on the decline in the United States since 1982. Researchers estimate that about 90,000 cases actually occurred last year, including those that went unreported.

The CDC, in its weekly report, cited two "major concerns" about the syphilis increase: "The trend could have a severe adverse effect on efforts to control congenital syphilis" — the debilitating presence of syphilis in newborns, the CDC said.

"A history of sexually transmitted disease is associated with a higher risk of acquired immune deficiency syndrome. Studies have shown that genital ulcers, a symptom of syphilis, are associated with a higher risk of infection with the AIDS virus, which is transmitted through blood and bodily fluids, most often during sex.

Information on syphilis patients' sexual preference is not routinely collected nationwide, but was garnered in California, New York and Florida for Thursday's report.

In two areas reporting syphilis increases of more than 40 percent, California and New York City, the increases "occurred exclusively among heterosexuals," the CDC said. Syphilis among homosexual or bisexual men in those areas decreased 47 percent in California and 51 percent in New York City.

Data in Florida showed a different trend from that in California and New York; syphilis was up 50 percent in heterosexual males, and 108 percent in homosexual or bisexual men.

California, Florida and New York reported increases of more than 400 cases over the first quarter of 1986. Seven other states — Georgia, Pennsylvania, Mississippi, Maryland, Arizona, Oregon and Nevada — reported increases of at least 20 cases for the first three months of 1987.

Researchers have "a couple of theories, but no real clues" why the disease is again on the rise, said CDC researcher Peter Crippen, a specialist in sexually transmitted diseases.

It is possible, he said, that "with an explosion of interest and work with AIDS... and other sexually transmitted diseases, perhaps less attention has been paid to syphilis" and its prevention.

Charges filed against another former Marine embassy guard

WASHINGTON (AP) — Another Marine who once was a security guard at the U.S. Embassy in Moscow is facing charges, this time for allegedly failing to report contacts with Soviets, copying classified documents and dealing on the black market.

Kenneth J. Kelliher, 32, of Hinsdale, Ill., was not charged with espionage, the Pentagon said Thursday.

But he faces a hearing Monday at the Marine Security Guard Battalion at Quantico, Va., to review the charges against him stemming from his tour of duty at the U.S. embassies in Moscow and Bern, Switzerland, the Pentagon said.

The investigation against Kelliher continues, it said, and he is "not confined or on restriction."

While Kelliher is not technically under arrest, said Marine spokeswoman Maj. Kathy Robbes, the hearing against him is the military equivalent of a grand jury and could lead to a court-martial.

Kelliher's Moscow assignment overlapped with those of three other Marines who have been under investigation: Staff Sgt. Robert S. Stufflebeam, Sgt. Clayton Lonetree and Cpl. Arnold Bracy.

Kelliher was assigned to the Moscow embassy from September 1984 to March 1986, and to the Bern, Switzerland, embassy from March 1986 to March 1987. He went to Quantico on a routine reassignment in April, the Pentagon said.

Lonetree, 25, who faces espionage charges, was in Moscow from Sept. 27, 1984 until March 10, 1986. Bracy, 21, against whom all charges have been dropped, was in Moscow from July 26, 1985 until Sept. 18, 1986.

Stufflebeam, 25, has been charged with failing to

'Suspicious' fires destroy old fire hall, Texas' oldest school

CLARKSVILLE (AP) — Two "suspicious" fires early today almost a mile apart destroyed historic Clarksville High School in the west part of town and an abandoned downtown fire station, officials said.

"The fires are suspicious with the extreme possibility of arson," Clarksville Fire Chief Jim Nichols said.

The high school, built in 1918, was said to be the oldest high school in Texas still in service. Clarksville is a town of about 9,000 people in Red River County, about 125 miles northeast of Dallas.

The old fire station, south of the courthouse square in downtown Clarksville, was connected to an abandoned theater and in the same block with a number of businesses.

"It could have been a major disaster," Nichols said. "We could have lost not only the school but our entire business district."

The fire at the high school was reported at 12:43 a.m., and as some firefighters left the school to get more equipment they saw the old fire station, built in 1903 and vacant for the past 15 years, engulfed in flames, Nichols said.

More than 20 area fire departments responded to the alarms, and Clarksville was fortunate in that 26 firefighters from Fort Worth were in town undergoing two weeks of training, Nichols said.

Today was the last day of their two weeks of training. With the aid of the Fort Worth firefigh-

Names in the news

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A woman charged in a lawsuit against rock star David Lee Roth that one of his concerts damaged her hearing.

Linda Duke, who filed the suit Thursday, said she suffers from muffled hearing and cracking, ringing and popping in her ears.

"I can't function like a normal person," said Ms. Duke, 24. "I have to wear ear muffs to protect my ears."

Ms. Duke said she attended Roth's concert at the Forum in suburban Inglewood on Dec. 20 at the invitation of a friend. It was her first rock concert, she said.

The Forum also was named in the suit, which seeks unspecified damages.

Roth's attorney, Howard Weitzman, did not return calls for comment. Warner Bros., Roth's record company, closed early Thursday for the holiday weekend.

NEW YORK (AP) — Top model Iman has accused her ex-husband, former basketball star Spencer Haywood, of taking their daughter from her home without permission.

But lawyers for both sides said Thursday that they are working to resolve the dispute without going to court.

Haywood took his 8-year-old daughter Zulekha to lunch and a doctor's appointment June 10 and did not bring her home that day, Iman said.

Iman's lawyer, David Aronson, said he filed papers June 25 ordering Haywood to appear in court Wednesday with the girl, but the former New York Knicks player sent her home a day or two later, and the court date was called off.

"What we have is a dispute about some aspects of visitation rights," Aronson said.

Iman, who married Haywood in 1978, was awarded custody of Zulekha following the couple's divorce in February.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Eleven-year-old John Kevin Hill, who this week became the youngest known pilot to fly cross country, was congratulated by President Reagan at the White House, and the two talked about rattlesnakes.

John Kevin, who enjoys hunting rattlesnakes, said he gave the president a rattlesnake cane Thursday and Reagan responded by telling him about an encounter with a rattlesnake on his ranch near Santa Barbara, Calif.

"He couldn't find a rock big enough to kill it, so he stepped on it with his heel," the boy told reporters. "He didn't know he had his tennis shoes on."

John Kevin flew with his instructor cross-country from Los Angeles in a single-engine plane, landing Wednesday in Washington.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The daughter of Dean Reed, the American-born pop singer who became a star in the Eastern bloc, has sued the government of East Germany in connection with her father's drowning.

The $2.5 million wrongful death suit filed Thursday in federal court charges that suspicious circumstances indicate East German officials killed Reed to keep him from returning to the United States, then covered up the slaying by labeling it suicide.

"I just want to know how my father died," said Ramona Reed, 19. "There were so many things that weren't right. It was so contradictory, I just don't know."

Reed, 47, a Colorado native who had been living in East Germany since 1972, drowned in 1986, according to the East German state-run news agency ADN.
