North 'assumed' Reagan knew

By DAVID ESPO
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — Lt. Col. Oliver North testified today that he "never personally discussed" the diversion of Iranian arms sales profits to Contra rebels with President Reagan, but said he assumed — without being told — that Reagan had approved.

But in dramatic testimony before congressional committees, North said Reagan told him in a telephone conversation on Nov. 25: "I just didn't know."

Testifying in a calm, even voice, the former National Security Council aide also candidly admitted shredding documents as the Iran-Contra affair began unraveling last October when a plane carrying American mercenary Eugene Hasenfus crashed in Nicaragua. He said the shredding continued through last November, as Justice Department officials began investigating the affair.

"I think I shredded most of that," he said in response to a question about memos on the diversion of funds. "Did I get them all? I'm not trying to be flippant. I tried to destroy all references to covert operations."

North first raised his hand and swore to tell the truth, then vowed to tell congressional investigators "the good, the bad and the ugly" about his role as point man in the Iran-Contra affair and the cover-up that followed.

North began his long-awaited testimony after his attorney made a futile last-minute effort to block the appearance.

His testimony, carried live by the major television networks, was delayed by fresh wrangling between attorney Brendan Sullivan and the House and Senate Iran-Contra investigating committees.

North, dressed in his Marine officer's uniform bedecked with six rows of ribbons, said that in all he did, he sought the approval of his superiors. He said he prepared five separate memoranda seeking formal approval for the diversion of arms sales profits to the Contras, beginning in January 1986.

But as for direct contact with the president, North said, "I never raised it with him, and he never raised it with me during my entire tenure. Throughout the conduct of my entire tenure I assumed that the president was aware of what I was doing and had, through my superiors, approved it."

North, appearing under a limited grant of immunity from prosecution, also said, however, that none of his superiors at the

Barge sinks; scores drown

HARARE, Zimbabwe (AP)—A barge carrying 470 people hit a sandbar and overturned in the crocodile-infested Luapula River dividing Zaire and Zambia, and nearly 400 people were feared dead, Zambian police said today.

Twenty-three bodies were immediately recovered after the ship tipped over Sunday on a routine crossing, said a police officer in Mansa, northern Zambia. Mansa is about 30 miles west of the river where the ship sank.

He said at least 80 passengers on the upper deck swam to the Zambian side of the river.

"It appears the Zairean coxswain was dozing and the barge hit the sandbank and overturned," the officer said. The coxswain also swam to safety, he said.

He added that the other passengers were feared dead. The ship was sailing from Mpweto village in Zaire to Kasenge village in Zambia when it sank.

Rescue teams searched the river today for bodies.

"The area is infested with crocodiles," the policeman said. "But it is remote and communications there are poor so we don't know whether the crocodiles attacked anyone or had eaten any bodies."

Group calls Glass a spy

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP)—Kidnapped American journalist Charles Glass said in a videotape released today by his captors that his "main job" was with the CIA and that he was involved in plotting the assassination of Prime Minister Rashid Karami.

"I am Charles Glass. Many of you know me as a journalist, but few know the truth," Glass, who was reading from a text, said in the videotape delivered to the west Beirut office of a Western news agency.

The tape did not show Glass' captors and it was not clear if the statement had been prepared for him.

"I used the press as a cover for my main job with the CIA," said the unshaven Glass, who choked several times while speaking. The voice quality was very poor, making it difficult to hear exactly what Glass was saying.

"I collect information for the benefit of the CIA. For that I made secret missions, they ordered me to do that," he said. "I'm actually the CIA agent in the region and the Middle East, I made many secret missions to this area."

Royd Comer of Pampa takes hard ride Monday night.

Kids show determination in pony show

By LARRY HOLLIS
News Editor

Smiles, tears, some good riding and a lot of determination were shown by young cowboys and cowgirls competing Monday night in the opening performance of the 41st annual Kid Pony Show.

As the youngsters paraded around the Top o' Texas Rodeo Arena in the grand entry at Recreation Park, announcer Frank Hobson of Pampa noted there were some "who look mighty small, but they're mighty big in heart."

To those spectators who were attending their first Kid Pony Show, Hobson said, "Brace yourselves. You're going to see some kids who do some fine, fine riding" for a "good looking bunch of cowboys and cowgirls."

Monday's performance, opening the week of activities in conjunction with the annual Top o' Texas Rodeo, featured Group I, ages

5 and under, and Group II, ages 6 and 7. The show continues at 7 p.m. today with Group III (ages 8-9) and Group IV (ages 10-11).

As the young contestants began Monday night's competition, Hobson noted that "out of these ... you're going to find a handful who will go on to become professionals," adding that the young cowpokes are "gonna surprise you tonight" with some good riding and action.

Of the more than 30 youngsters showing their skills, nine were multiple winners, taking home buckles in two or more events.

Though no awards were given to best all-around cowboy and cowgirl, Royd Comer and Sarah Maul, both of Pampa, would have been the most likely contenders to take those titles.

Royd placed in four events, including two first places, a second and a third in Group II competition for boys. Sarah gained three buckles, including two for first place and one for second place in Group II cowgirl contests.

Royd placed first in calf riding and boys golfette, second in boys flag race and third in girls barrel race. Sarah gained first in girls golfette and girls barrel race and took second in girls flag race.

Other multiple winners among the boys were Shandon Stalls of McLean, with a first and a second, plus getting one of the tags off the calves in the Gold Rush; Grayson Lewis of Pampa, two third-place finishes; Clay Pope of Frick, two first places; Cody Douglass of Pampa, a second and a third place; and Jody Mears of Miami, a first and a second.

Also winning more than one buckle in girls events were Nikki Leggett of Pampa, with a first and a second, and Jamie Mears of Miami, with a first and a third place.

While not all the young people were winners, each was given a ribbon at the conclusion.

White oilers must repay

WASHINGTON (AP)—Thirty-seven producers of white oil in the Texas Panhandle should reimburse Northern Natural Pipeline $113 million for selling so-called "old gas" at new gas prices, an administrative law judge recommended.

According to Administrative Law Judge Brenda K. Murray, the reimbursement represents the amount of money the 37 independent producers were "unjustly enriched," plus interest, by tapping into reserves owned by major producers under the guise of drilling for oil.

The Federal Energy Regulatory Commission last year charged the 37 with illegally entering gas zones leased by Dorchester Gas Co. using a technique designed to draw off gas.

The producers are accused of falsely classifying their wells as oil wells by using refrigeration units to produce gas liquids between Jan. 1, 1980 and July 31, 1985.

Under federal law, gas from wells drilled before 1978 and irrevocably committed to interstate pipelines has been subject to federal controls that could set the price as low as 50 cents per 1,000 cubic feet.

"New gas," however, could qualify for a higher price, and has brought as much as $3 per 1,000 cubic feet, according to the Energy Department.

All arguments made by the producers were rejected.

The judge's recommendation will be reviewed by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission for a final determination.

Education chief calls for school tax hike

By PAUL PINKHAM
Senior Staff Writer

Taxpayers and teachers must share the burden of making up a probable $850,000 deficit in next year's school budget, a former Texas commissioner of education said Monday night.

Raymon Bynum, who now works as a financial consultant to Texas school districts, told school trustees that balancing the budget will require compromise from everyone involved, including the school board.

Trustees paid Bynum $600 to assess the financial health of the school district. Monday's first of several budget workshops attracted about 50 citizens to the high school.

Bynum said the problem facing Pampa and school districts across Texas is increasing state mandates, coupled with declining taxable values. In Pampa, he said, effective tax rate revenue has dropped from $6.6 million in 1985-86 to $5.7 million currently, while state mandates reducing class size and increasing teacher salaries will cost the district an additional $440,000 next year.

"The problem becomes, you're not going to get any more state revenue and your tax revenue is less — and you have added costs," the ex-commissioner said.

Bynum estimated a $12.5 million dollar school budget for 1987-88, about $200,000 more than the current year's. About half a million can be made up in lunchroom revenues, and the district should receive about $5 million in state funds, he said.

However, he warned, state funding could be lower if the Texas Legislature cuts spending on education.

"It won't go up; it could go down if they cut funding," Bynum said. "But that's the most you can expect right now."

Bynum estimated the district will need to raise about $6.6 million in taxes to fund next year's budget, but revenues from the current 71.8-cent tax rate will bring in only $5.7 million.

He recommended a "trilateral effort" — involving the community, board and staff — to solve the deficit problem.

Among the recommendations Bynum offered are:

■ Dipping into the board's $2.7 million surplus by planning to use about $700,000 over the next three years. About $2 million must be left in the fund to pay for the school budget from September until taxes are collected in January.

■ Raising taxes. The board could raise taxes as much as 8 percent over the effective rate — what it would take to raise the same amount of revenue as last year — without being subject to a rollback election by taxpayers.

■ Limiting teacher salary increases. The state has ordered local districts to increase teacher salaries by $1,140 next year. Pampa offers its teachers a local salary supplement of $2,600 for a bachelor's degree and $2,800 for a master's.

Bynum said Pampa needs to keep salaries high enough to attract and retain teachers, but may have to trim the local supplement to help balance the budget. The board and staff need to work together to come up with "a reasonable Pampa salary schedule," while teachers should realize, "it's not (the board's) fault, it's not the people in Austin's fault — it's the economy."

■ Developing a three-year budget plan, ensuring quality education and fairness to

Because of erroneous information given to The Pampa News, the amount of bond for Vernon Howard Paulson, 31, 740 E. Scott, was incorrectly reported in Friday's paper. Paulson's bond is $25,000, following his indictment on a charge of aggravated sexual assault.

North

National Security Council told him that Reagan had approved the diversion.

The three national security directors for whom he worked include Adm. John Poindexter, Robert McFarlane and William Clark. North said that on Nov. 21, Poindexter told him that Reagan did not know of the diversion.

North's testimony was preceded by several minutes of legal wrangling between Sullivan and the committee. Sullivan sought unsuccessfully to postpone his client's testimony, then asked for North to be permitted to read an opening statement.

Frustrated by weeks of legal maneuvering, Sen. Daniel Inouye, D-Hawaii, chairman of the Senate investigating committee, rejected the first request outright.

As for the opening statement, he said, "Here once again the witness is asking us to bend the law and to suggest that he may be above the law." Inouye said North would be permitted to read his statement on Thursday morning, which is 48 hours after he submitted it to the committee.

Other witnesses have been required to submit their statements 48 hours in advance of reading them.

The 43-year-old North, fired from his job as a National Security Council aide for his activities, faced questioning about matters as momentous as whether Reagan knew of the diversion of Iranian arms sale proceeds to the Contra rebels and as seemingly trivial as $20 traveler's checks that he cashed in Washington-area convenience stores.

Reagan has denied any previous knowledge of the diversion, and White House aides have spread the word that they are confident that North will make no contradictory claim.

North was called to testify under a limited grant of immunity as the central witness in an incredible series of secret and possibly illegal activities.

Teen rape victim Pampa's fourth in less than month

By PAUL PINKHAM Senior Staff Writer

Pampa's fourth rape in less than three weeks was reported Thursday night by a 15-year-old girl living in northwest Pampa.

The teen-ager said a black man forced his way into her residence shortly before 10 p.m., and struck her before raping her. The girl told police that while she was being raped, she escaped from the man, who subsequently fled from the house.

Deputy Police Chief Jesse Wallace said today that the girl reported the assault later Thursday night and was taken to HCA Coronado Hospital for examination.

The incident is still under investigation, he said. Wallace said information about the rape wasn't released to the public until today because the detective on call Thursday night had not been briefed on the department's new policy regarding release of information. The department's offense report on the incident also hasn't been made available to the public.

Police Chief Robert Eberz was out of town today. Deputy Chief Wallace apologized for the delayed release of information.

The child rape is the fourth such incident since

June 16. Others are:

■ June 16 - A 37-year-old woman reported being raped in her downtown residence at about 3 a.m. by a man who climbed in an open bathroom window and threatened her with a crystal dish. Vernon Howard Paulson, 31, 740 E. Scott Ave., was arrested at home the following Saturday and was indicted Thursday on a charge of aggravated sexual assault. Paulson remains in the Gray County Jail under $25,000 bond.

■ June 17 - A 19-year-old woman reported being raped in her east Pampa home between 7 and 9 a.m. by two men who broke in and threatened her with a hatchet. Two men, James Michael Hunnicutt, 29, 1137 Varnon Drive, and Timothy Eugene Russey, 33, 632 S. Somerville St., and a woman, Valerie Rene Towles, 26, 402 Yeager St., were later arrested. Charges against Towles were later dismissed. Neither of the men has been indicted; both remain in the Gray County Jail - Russey with a $75,000 bond and Hunnicutt with a $40,000 bond.

■ June 23 - A 29-year-old woman reported being raped in her east Pampa home at about 2:30 a.m. by a black man who entered through an unlocked door. No arrests have been made.

Police maintain that none of the rapes are related.

both employees and taxpayers. A three-year plan can help the board decide how to spread out the combination of surplus fund spending, tax hikes and salary cuts, Eynum said. The state has been ordered by a judge hearing a school finance case in Austin to have a new finance system in place in three years, he added.

Bynum said the board won't be able to finance next year's entire deficit from surplus funds, like trustees did last year after about two months of discussion.

Bynum also presented the board a list of figures comparing Pampa to other Panhandle schools roughly the same size. The average tax rate of 10 other schools is 78.53 cents, about 10 percent higher than Pampa's 71.8 cents, Bynum said. He added that Hereford (69 cents) and Lamesa (68.5 cents) have lower tax rates because they receive more federal funding.

Pampa's salary schedules - and total expenses - also are below average on a cost-per-student basis, Bynum explained. The 10-school average for salaries per student is about $2,700, while the total expense per student is roughly $3,600, he said.

In Pampa, $2,550 is spent on salaries per student, and $3,100 total.

Pampa schools also spend less than the average in five budget categories listed by Bynum, including instructional service, instructional-related services, pupil services, administration and facilities.

sion of the miniature rodeo. And though not all took home a buckle, most showed a strong willingness to complete their events even after falling off, breaking a pattern or meeting some required part of an event.

No award was given for determination, either. But displaying a determined spirit to complete the race and winning the loud applause of the crowd was young Nikki Salzbrenner of White Deer in the Group II girls flag race event.

Nikki dropped the blue flag she was to place in a bucket atop a barrel. The young girl at first tried to reach down to the ground to retrieve the flag. Failing in that effort, she calmly got down from her horse, picked up the flag, literally climbed back on the horse, put the flag in the bucket and completed the rest of the course.

Winning $5 each for pulling a tag off the calves in the opening Gold Rush event were Jacry Richardson of Groom, Nikki Salzbrenner of White Deer, Leslie Hendricks of Pampa and Shandon Stalls of McLean.

Texas cons escape

HUNTSVILLE (AP) - A massive manhunt was under way today for two convicted robbers who stole a prison truck and smashed to freedom through two back gates, prison officials say.

The pair escaped Monday night from the Texas Department of Corrections' Wynne Unit and were identified as Jerry Wayne Ables, 28, and Carl Lang, 44, TDC spokesman David Nunnelee said.

Early this morning, Ables reportedly broke into a Huntsville home, stole a shirt and called a taxi, in which he fled after pulling a knife on the driver, said Huntsville police spokesman Robert Reese.

After about four hours, Ables fled the taxi on foot outside the Huntsville city limits and released the driver, Reese said.

Comptroller: House tax bill not enough

AUSTIN (AP) — Besieged by lobbyists, a Senate subcommittee scheduled debate today on a proposed insurance tax that State Comptroller Bob Bullock says has all sorts of problems.

Sen. Bob Glasgow, chairman of the tax policy subcommittee, described the insurance tax Monday as a "horrible" burden on insurance companies, and Bullock said the plan won't raise enough money to balance the budget.

Bullock told lawmakers the 6 percent sales tax on insurance premiums would raise $500 million less than previously expected because of enforcement problems and proposed exemptions from the levy.

He lowered his revenue estimate for the insurance tax collections in 1988-89 from $1.8 billion to just under $1.3 billion.

That would drop the total House tax package, which was written to cover a $38.4 billion spending bill, from $5.7 billion to about $5.2 billion.

Also on Monday, the Senate refused to accept the House version of the state budget, and asked for a conference committee to adjust differences between House and Senate bills before the special legislative session ends July 21.

Committee hearings on taxing and spending were scheduled to start today.

Bullock said the insurance tax bill would, in effect, require the comptroller to collect a tax from 10 million individual policyholders through a system "very much like what would be needed to collect a personal income tax from each Texan."

He said the bill lacked sufficient enforcement and collection tools, and had exemptions — including for crop insurance, single-premium whole life policies, and policies held by the elderly.

Bullock told legislators that no state has ever successfully levied an additional sales tax on insurance premiums.

Glasgow, D-Stephenville, said the House sales tax bill has "horrible technical problems."

The House voted Thursday to raise the state sales from 5.25 percent to 6 percent and to extend it to insurance premiums on a temporary two-year basis. Another bill approved by the House would keep the motor fuels tax at 15 cents per gallon instead of allowing it to roll back to 10 cents on Sept. 1.

Glasgow was asked if he thought the insurance tax was dead in the Senate, and he responded, "My reaction is it would be impossible to pass the tax in form it came over from the House."

He said senators had asked him, "Surely Glasgow, we're not going to pass that," and he said, "Not unless we have to."

He said a lot of the opposition was the result of those lobbying against the bill. An aide to one senator said she answered 150 telephone calls Monday from persons opposing the insurance tax, and others in her office also were busy answering the phone.

Bullock listed numerous problems with the insurance tax, including whether the tax could be collected on some policies already in effect and whether a way could be found to collect the tax on companies not subject to State Board of Insurance regulation.

"I think the Senate would be more inclined to expand the base on sales tax rather than that horrible insurance load that the insurance companies have," Glasgow said.

He said he thought the Senate would approve extending the 15-cent fuels tax.

Responding to Senate criticism of the House tax proposal, Chairman Stan Schluter of the House Ways and Means Committee said senators could ruin efforts to write a balanced budget if substantial changes are made in the tax bill. But House Speaker Gib Lewis said if senators can find another way to raise money, "I'm all for them."

Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby was asked if the House tax package was enough, his estimation, to pay for necessary state services over the next two years. "No, I think not," he said.

Consumers seeking stricter disciplining of bad doctors

AUSTIN (AP) — Consumer groups are telling legislators that stricter disciplining of bad doctors — not limiting how much money victims of malpractice can win in court — is the answer to soaring malpractice insurance costs.

"The limits should not be placed on the victims of malpractice. The limits should be placed on the incompetent doctors," said Jessica Shahin, deputy director of Public Citizen.

Stephanie Thomas of the Coalition of Texans with Disabilities said damage limits hurt the innocent.

"Why should they (incompetent doctors) be protected at the expense of those they harm?" she asked. "The people who are going to be protected are the people who have been found guilty of hurting their clients."

Public Citizen released a study of malpractice in Texas on Monday, which Ms. Shahin said found that only 16.5 percent of practicing physicians were involved in malpractice claims between 1978 and 1984.

Of more than 28,000 practicing doctors, only 7.5 percent were responsible for 65 percent of the claims, the study found.

The study found that the average damage award was $28,490, which it said raises questions about the claims of "multi-million dollar awards and the actions needed to address such awards."

Texas physicians, saying the soaring costs of obtaining medical malpractice insurance are threatening health care, have asked the Legislature to place limits on damages that could be collected.

Gov. Bill Clements included the issue on the agenda before lawmakers in the special session that began June 22.

But Ms. Shahin said experience in other states indicates that insurance rates don't drop just because damage limits are imposed.

"States everywhere have enacted what has been called 'tort reform.' They put caps on damages ... and it hasn't made any difference," she said.

"Florida enacted a lot of those things and right now, its doctors have gone on a boycott saying they are not even going to offer services anymore (because of insurance costs). The answer wasn't the tort reform," Ms. Shahin said.

There is one state where malpractice insurance premiums have been lowered, Massachusetts, and that came after the state got tough on negligent doctors, she said.

"They increased doctor discipline by 74 percent in 1986, and they are anticipating a $2 million reduction in their malpractice premiums because of that," Ms. Shahin said.

"The question of a malpractice 'crisis' can be answered easily. The crisis is in the undisciplined incidence of malpractice."

Ms. Shahin said recently passed legislation to strengthen discipline of the medical profession should be given a chance to work before limits are placed on malpractice damages.

Also urging lawmakers to reject special treatment for physicians were the Consumers Union, Texas Consumer Association, American Association of Retired Persons and Gray Panthers.

New prisons being praised

ROSHARON (AP) — Barbed-wire fences, gun towers and high security are some of the traditional prison sights missing from a new trusty camp recently built near this southeast Texas town.

What remains at the camp, one of 10 satellite prisons for low-risk, non-violent inmates, are 200-bed units with 14 guards and a captain, a small kitchen and dining room, recreational and learning areas.

The camps, which cost $18 million and are the result of a federal court order, are the cheapest prisons built since tents were pitched several years ago to provide temporary relief to overcrowding.

"If you have to be locked up, this is the place to be," said Charles Wilson, 37, serving seven years for a Harris County aggravated robbery.

Wilson is one of 180 inmates living in the trusty camp adjacent to the minimum security Ramsey III Unit in Brazoria County. Two other camps are in the county, six in the Huntsville area and one in Coryell County.

Only those inmates trusted not to escape are assigned to the units.

"It would be really easy to do it," Wilson said. "But why would you want to escape? You have anything you need right here, except for a woman."

The new prisons, with a total capacity of 2,000 inmates, are not expected to make a significant dent in the system's lingering crowding problem, but they have made a difference in inmate morale.

"We have a lot more freedoms out here and even the food's better. We have more responsibilities, and we get treated like men," said William Ackors, 30, serving 10 years for a Hutchinson County involuntary manslaughter.

Capt. Robert A. Jiles, who is in charge of the Ramsey camp, compares it to a halfway house instead of a traditional prison.

"We let them be responsible for their actions. We have a set of rules, and they know what they are," Jiles said.

Since the camp opened June 5, only one inmate has been sent back to the regular prison after being caught stealing meat from the kitchen, he said.

At the Darrington Unit, inmates assigned to the trusty camp decided to celebrate their new home by smuggling in several gallons of homemade brew and throwing a party.

"We moved two or three back after that," said Michael Moore, regional director of the southern units. "We haven't had any trouble since then."

Each inmate at the Ramsey camp is assigned a small cubicle containing a bed, storage area, electrical outlets and a cable television hookup. The camp has its own satellite dish and TV antenna, but the individual cable hookups by each bed have not been activated.

Eventually, inmates will be allowed to purchase television sets through the prison commissary, by which time the cable system should be completed.

"Inmates know that this is a good place to be. If anything unusual is going on, we can keep up with it," said Arthur Velasquez, warden of the Ramsey III unit. "No one wants to ruin a good thing."

Official says boxcar survivor could have been the recruiter

EL PASO (AP) — A Mexican official who has spoken with relatives of illegal aliens who suffocated in a boxcar says some of them told him the only person to survive had asked their kin to make the clandestine trip north from Central Mexico.

But Benito Lopez Dominguez, undersecretary for the state of Zacatecas, says the relatives' accounts don't indicate whether the survivor rounded up the men for money, companionship or free passage to Dallas for himself from smugglers aboard the train.

"These facts I don't have," Lopez said Monday. "There are indications he was a human smuggler."

Eighteen men died between the time the boxcar left an El Paso freight yard Wednesday evening and when it was inspected 14 hours later 90 miles to the east by Border Patrol agents conducting a routine check.

Only 21-year-old Miguel Tostado Rodriguez was alive when agents opened the boxcar Thursday morning.

Of the 17 identifications made to date, seven of the men in the boxcar were from the state of Aguascaliente. Tostado and six of the dead were all from the town of Pabellon de Agascaliente. The others were from Zacatecas state.

Lopez, who was at the Mexican consulate in El Paso, said Monday that relatives of some of the men from Pabellon told him "Tostado was the one who invited them (their kin) to try to go to the border and go across."

William Harrington, assistant chief of the El Paso sector of the Border Patrol, said investigators are looking at all angles of the case and are not ruling out the possibility Tostado was a recruiter.

Tostado is being held as a material witness by the Border Patrol at its detention center here.

Harrington said he did not know details of investigators' questions to Tostado, and that the survivor was being held "because we don't know if he has information or testimony that we need."

Authorities said two of the men who died were smugglers, and one has been identified as Rafael Zamarron Torres of El Saucito, Zacatecas, said Heriberto Spindola of the Mexican consulate.

The other smuggler has not been identified, Spindola said.

Authorities say the 19 men were locked into the Missouri Pacific boxcar by a third smuggler known only as the Grasshopper. He is believed to have fled into Mexico.

The 18 bodies were still in El Paso this morning, as mortuary workers attempted to finish embalming them today for the trip south to Central Mexico.

Ten of the bodies were readied for crossing the border Monday and the rest could be done today, said Beatriz Lopez of the Mexican consulate's office. She said they could cross the border today or Wednesday.

"The families are very anxious to receive the bodies in their respective little towns in Mexico, to pay their last respects and have their Catholic rituals," Spindola said.

A secretary for Bishop Raymundo J. Pena of the El Paso Catholic Diocese, said some kind of memorial service could be scheduled today for the victims at St. Patrick's Cathedral.

EVER STRIVING FOR THE TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Conciliation spawns more terrorist acts

Ronald Reagan and Helmut Kohl have achieved a modest victory in the western democracies' feeble battle against terrorism. But only direct intervention by the White House averted West Germany's utter capitulation to Lebanese terrorists in the case of Mohammed Ali Hamadei.

Hamadei is the 22-year-old Lebanese culprit wanted by the United States for the 1985 hijacking of a Trans World Airlines jetliner and the murder of Navy diver Robert Stethem, a passenger aboard the plane. In most respects, Bonn's handling of Hamadei is an abject lesson in how not to combat international terror.

West German authorities arrested Hamadei at the Frankfurt airport on Jan. 13 as he tried to enter the country with several bottles of liquid explosives. As soon as police investigators learned Hamadei's fingerprints matched those found on TWA Flight 847, the Bonn government announced its intention to extradite him promptly to the United States to stand trial for murder.

The announcement itself prompted the kidnapping in Beirut of two West German businessmen, Rudolf Cordes and Alfred Schmidt, who still are being held captive. Their abductors, believed to be connected to the Hamadei family and members of an extremist Shiite faction backed by Iran, demanded the terrorist not be extradited to the United States.

The Beirut terrorists' threat to kill the West German hostages if Hamadei was turned over to American authorities paid off handsomely. Bonn, facing crucial local elections, not only suspended extradition proceedings but also began negotiations aimed at winning the captives' freedom, possibly in exchange for Hamadei's release from jail.

For months, the State Department waited patiently in the vain that Chancellor Kohl's government would ultimately hand over the hijacker. When it appeared that Washington might prevail, two more hostages were seized in Beirut as further insurance against Hamadei's extradition. This time the victims were the son of the Lebanese defense minister and a former American television correspondent.

Thus, Bonn's waffling on Hamadei's extradition in the face of terrorist threats is to blame for the capture of four additional hostages.

Recognizing at last that making deals with terrorists only spawns more terror, Bonn decided to try Hamadei in West Germany on charges of murder and air piracy, the same counts he would have faced in an American court. If convicted, the terrorist will face a term of life imprisonment; West Germany does not have the death penalty.

West Germany has learned the hard way that rewarding terrorism by making concessions is a risky venture prone to backfire in the form of increased terror. It is not difficult to comprehend why terrorism is so rampant. As the case of Hamadei shows, terrorism pays.

For the sake of the West's protracted struggle against terror, we must assume that, having learned his lesson, Chancellor Kohl will be as good as his word.

Victims ought to be heard

WASHINGTON — Among the oldest maxims of the law is the maxim made famous by Gilbert and Sullivan: Let the punishment fit the crime. The Supreme Court abandoned that sound Ciceronian principle on June 15 with its regrettable decision in the murder case of Booth vs. Maryland.

The case began on the night of May 18, 1983, when John Booth and Willie Reid embarked on burglary. They entered the West Baltimore home of Irvin Bronstein, 78, and his wife Rose, 75. The apparent purpose was to steal money to buy heroin. Before the night was over, Booth and Reid had bound and gagged the elderly couple and then stabbed them savagely to death. Two days later the Bronsteins' son found the bodies.

A jury convicted both assailants. The prosecution asked for the death penalty, and Booth elected to have his sentence determined by the jury instead of by the judge. (Reid's sentence was to be determined separately.) Pursuant to Maryland law, the prosecution submitted a presentence report that included a "victim impact statement." In this statement, prepared by a parole officer after interviews with the Bronstein family, the family set forth the grief and trauma that the murders had caused them. The jury sentenced Booth to death. He appealed on the grounds the victim impact statement so inflamed the jury that its use amounted to cruel and unusual punishment in violation of the Eighth Amendment. By a vote of 5-4 the Supreme Court accepted this contention.

It was a bad call. Justice Lewis Powell, writing for the majority, emphasized that a prohibition on the use of victim impact statements applies only to those cases in which a death sentence could be imposed. But the Eighth Amendment makes no such distinction that dwells in the "penumbras" of the Bill of Rights, emitting emanations that can be detected only by the most sensitive judicial nostrils.

To Powell, the admission in evidence of statements about the consequences of a crime "creates a constitutionally unacceptable risk that the jury may impose the death penalty in an arbitrary and capricious manner." The grief and anger of the Bronstein family were "irrelevant." Their statements could serve "no other purpose than to inflame the jury." Besides, Powell added, the families of some victims may be more eloquent and articulate than others. Some murder victims may have had better characters, or have lived more virtuous lives, than other victims. None of this is relevant to a jury's life or death decision.

Justice Byron White, dissenting, rejected this marble tower view of real-life crime. "The affront to humanity of a brutal murder is not limited to its impact on the victim or victims; a victim's community is also injured, and in particular the victim's family suffers shock and grief of a kind difficult even to imagine for those who have not shared a similar loss."

To White, what counts is "the degree of harm that the defendant has caused." This is the measure that determines "the corresponding degree of punishment that should be inflicted." In the case of the Bronstein family, the harm was devastating. Four years later the psychic damage remains.

White also voiced a constitutional objection: "If punishment can be enhanced in non-capital cases on the basis of the harm caused, irrespective of the offender's specific intention to cause such harm, I fail to see why the same approach is unconstitutional in death cases." Precisely so.

Justice Antonin Scalia also wrote a dissenting opinion. It is high time, Scalia thought, for sentencing juries to hear not only the mitigating evidence in a defendant's behalf, but also to learn "the full reality of human suffering the defendant has produced."

This strikes me as a sensible, realistic and altogether constitutional approach to the matter. To say that not all homicides are equal is to state a truth about society and the human condition. Perhaps we should regard a gangster's killing of another gangster as the jurisprudential equivalent of a drug addict's slaying an elderly and unoffending couple. If this is the way the law is supposed to work, the law is just as Mr. Bumble termed it: The law is a ass, a idiot.

Marvin possessed my body

The channelization business, where the spirit of somebody who has been dead for thousands of years moves into your body and starts talking out of your mouth, may be new and exciting to people like Shirley MacLaine, but not to me.

When I was 11, the spirit of a 10,000-year-old loudmouth named Marvin moved in with me. He has been a terrible pain.

He caused me to flunk ancient history in school.

"What do you know about the Punic Wars, babbling hag?" he said to the teacher, as she lectured one day.

I tried to explain. "That's Marvin talking, not me," I said. Naturally, the babbling hag didn't believe me, and not only did I flunk the course, I still don't have the slightest idea how the Punic Wars came out. Marvin would never tell me.

It was even tougher having Marvin living with me at home. He never came out with any guidance or advice for living. All he ever did was get me into trouble. "What would you like for dinner?" my mother would ask me.

Before I could answer, Marvin would would say something like, "How about fried sloth and stewed toads."

I would try to explain about Marvin again, but it wouldn't do me any good, and my mother would wind up serving me liver, which I hated.

Marvin got me beaten up by the school bully, Frankie Garfield, too. Normally, I referred to Frankie the same way as the other petrified wimps did: "Hello, Mr. Garfield, sir."

Not Marvin. "You witless Neanderthal," Marvin would say to Frankie out of my mouth, and Frankie, a quick-tempered witless Neanderthal, would commence to pummel me.

I tried everything to get Marvin's spirit out of me. I even consulted a chiropractor.

As the chiropractor massaged my spine, Marvin said, "Careful, quack."

Chiropractors are very sensitive. I spent the next six weeks in traction.

I went to see the town witch. Turned out she and Marvin were friends in another life and I had to sit and listen to them talk about old times while smelling the toads the witch was stewing in her pot.

Desperate, I sent a check for $100 to Oral Roberts to see what he could do.

He wrote back and said he didn't cast out spirits for less than $500, which I didn't have at the time.

Recently, however, Marvin moved out of my body on his own.

"This is goodbye," he said one day.

"Where are you going?" I asked.

"I got a great offer from Shirley MacLaine, the actress," Marvin said.

"I have to clam up now, but in her next life, I get to do all the talking."

I think the happy couple will do quite well together, at least until the new wears off, in a couple of thousand years.

Stitching a hole in the medical safety net

By Ben Wattenberg

The standard of American health care is probably the best in the world. Why? Because it's mostly private rather than governmental, because our doctors are well-trained and well-rewarded, because we have devoted great resources to develop new technologies, medicines and procedures.

However, our private system has one central flaw. It is not available to everyone. Because our health care is so good, it is expensive. Most Americans only feel safe because their medical bills are paid through group health insurance provided by their employer. The government steps in only when there are typically no employers: Medicare for the elderly and Medicaid for people in deep poverty.

About 85 percent of Americans are covered. But what about the rest — the 15 percent who aren't insured? That's 37 million people. If they get ill, they can be in trouble. They seek a charity ward or just forgo treatment. There is a hole in our social safety net.

Sen. Edward Kennedy has long been a champion of a broader, safer safety net. But in the past his remedy involved a greater governmental role. Opponents characterized it as "socialized medicine." He never could get it enacted into law.

Now Kennedy has come up with a new way to skin the cat, or about two-thirds of it anyway. Twenty-four million of those 37 million uninsured are in families where a member works full-time. But their employers don't provide group health coverage. Individual coverage is often prohibitively expensive. So Kennedy's new bill mandates that employers of these uninsured workers provide group insurance.

The approach goes with the flow of the new political and budgetary circumstance. It adds to the private, not the public, part of the medical system; there is no big-spending government program. Kennedy takes a non-ideological view of his shift from a public to a private plan. He says, "This can do the job. Let's get the job done."

The Kennedy proposal has other advantages: No one need stay on welfare just to get medical benefits. It takes a big step toward offering catastrophic health insurance for all. It should also have some allure for conservatives: They complain that an increase in the minimum wage ratchets up everyone else's wages in order to retain existing wage intervals. The Kennedy plan is a "benefit," not a "wage" and would not generally have that effect.

Still, most conservatives oppose it. They don't want government mandates. It could slightly increase unemployment. And they recite their mantra: "There is no free lunch." In lunch terms, they are correct. Most of the costs are borne by the businesses involved, so costs will be passed along to the consumer.

But the question at issue, central to the debate about the Safety Net State, is not whether we should provide entitlements, but which entitlements. Should we guarantee vacations overseas? Memberships in country clubs? No.

The Safety Net State offers goods and services that the society has come to see as necessities and not merely desires. Why? For reasons of humanitarianism and self interest: It is humanitarian to say we won't let people go hungry.

Health care is now crossing that desire-necessity threshold. The issue is not free lunch, but minimum lunch. There is too much that modern medicine can offer these days. Can we accept the idea that someone with curable cancer will not be able to afford the cure?

Workers walk outside the Chrysler Corporation plant in Newark, Del.

Chrysler hit with largest ever federal health, safety penalty

WASHINGTON (AP) — An allegation of fraudulent unemployment insurance claims led the Labor Department to an investigation that resulted in the government hitting Chrysler Corp. with the largest job health and safety penalty ever imposed.

The Occupational Safety and Health Administration on Monday fined Chrysler $1,576,100 for 811 alleged violations, including willfully exposing 131 auto workers at its Newark, Del., assembly plant to hazardous levels of lead and arsenic in knowing defiance of the law.

Chrysler said it will not contest the fine, but the head of its automobile manufacturing arm said most of the violations were for "relatively minor ... discrepancies."

The OSHA fine is the second time in two weeks that Chrysler has run afoul of federal laws.

On June 24, a federal grand jury in St. Louis indicted Chrysler and two of its executives on conspiracy and fraud charges, accusing them of disconnecting odometers on cars driven by company officials and later selling the vehicles as new.

Chrysler Chairman Lee Iacocca last week apologized to the buyers of those cars and promised to extend the warranties on the vehicles and replace cars that were damaged while driven in a test program and later repaired.

OSHA officials said the fines Monday grew out of a complaint by workers at the Newark plant that the company was keeping fraudulent health and safety records.

In January, Chrysler agreed to pay OSHA a fine of $284,830 — until Monday the largest ever collected by the agency — for alleged health and safety record violations at Newark and at plants in Belvidere, Ill., and Twinsburg, Ohio.

Anthony Rossie, a Labor Department spokesman, said investigators still are examining claims that Chrysler, with the alleged complicity of the United Auto Workers union, defrauded the unemployment insurance system by laying off injured workers at Newark rather than treating them as workmen's compensation cases.

Weekly unemployment insurance benefits, which are financed through premiums levied on virtually all employers, often are much larger than those paid under the workmen's compensation system for job injuries.

"That issue was raised in 1985 by some disgruntled former and current employees and is unfounded as far as we are concerned," Baron Bates, a Chrysler vice president, said late Monday. "We have explained them in detail to Delaware authorities to their satisfaction."

Frank Joyce, a UAW spokesman, said officials at the union's headquarters in Detroit were not aware of the unemployment insurance allegations.

All of the violations cited Monday, including 338 classified as "willful," were found during an OSHA inspection last January at the Delaware plant, which employs some 4,000 auto workers.

Since then, OSHA also has conducted wall-to-wall inspections at Chrysler's Belvidere auto assembly plant and at its Twinsburg stamping plant, but the results have not yet been announced.

At Newark, 225 of the willful violations were for instances in which workers in the plant and soldering shops were exposed to hazardous levels of lead or arsenic.

Penalties of $8,000 each — or a total of $1,048,000 — were levied for only 131 of those violations, based on the number of employees exposed, said OSHA spokesman Terry Mikelson.

Meese earned nearly $40,000 on $54,500 stock investment

WASHINGTON (AP) — Attorney General Edwin Meese III reaped nearly $40,000 in profits on speculative stock investments of $54,500 in just 19 months, according to newly released financial information which one Senate critic says raises as many questions as it answers.

The attorney general's profits, minus more than $5,200 in fees to his investment manager, Franklyn Chinn, were disclosed Monday as Meese's personal lawyers attempted to quell some of the controversy surrounding their client's past involvement with scandal-plagued Wedtech Corp.

None of the money which Meese handed over to Chinn was invested in Wedtech, according to Meese's lawyers.

Chinn, a San Francisco businessman, was a Wedtech consultant and sat on the board of directors of the Bronx, N.Y., defense contractor until February of this year, when he was forced to resign. He is under criminal investigation in connection with Wedtech.

Meese has acknowledged interceding on behalf of Wedtech when he was White House counselor in 1982. The company at the time was seeking a $32 million no-bid Pentagon contract and ultimately won the work.

Meese's money was invested in a variety of large and small companies in 23 trades beginning in July 1985, and in each instance, his investment manager bought and sold the stock on the same day, according to Meese attorneys Nathan Lewin and James Rocap.

When it wasn't tied up in one-day speculative ventures, Meese's money was building up what amounted to $6,000 in interest in money market and brokerage accounts at the Bear Stearns brokerage and at the Imperial Trust Co.

The most profitable of the series of speculative one-day investments came last Feb. 11, when Chinn made $12,571 for Meese on British Airways stock.

Meese has been under fire from Congress since last April to disclose where Chinn invested his money.

Meese is under criminal investigation by independent counsel James McKay, who is trying to determine whether any of the attorney general's money went to Wedtech, which might have posed a conflict of interest.

Military gears up to escort tankers

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. military forces geared up to escort oil tankers in the Persian Gulf with warplanes flying a practice mission south of Iran and warships patrolling a dangerous zone in the North, said sources in Washington and the Middle East.

Indications mounted that Iran may be renewing attacks on gulf shipping, as a mobile anti-ship missile launcher was spotted on the Iranian shore and five Iranian rubber boats reportedly attacked a Spanish supertanker last week.

Navy A-6 warplanes from the carrier Constellation flew what administration officials described as a practice mission in the Arabian Sea, but they stayed well south of Iranian anti-missile launch sites on the Strait of Hormuz at the mouth of the Persian Gulf.

U.S. intelligence photographed a Chinese-made Silkorm missile last Friday at Kuestak, one of two hardened bunkers the Iranians have built along the strait, said Pentagon and State Department officials who declined to be identified.

Pentagon officials describe the Silkorm as a mobile system that can be put up or taken down in about two hours.

Southland to sell most assets except 7-Eleven

DALLAS (AP) — The nation's largest convenience store company wants to sell off much of its assets to finance one of the largest leveraged buyouts in history.

Southland Corp. will focus on the flagship 7-Eleven convenience store chain and sell almost all other operations to finance a $5 billion plan to take the company private, company officials said.

"To help pay a portion of the debt associated with this transaction, Southland intends to sell virtually all non-convenience store operations except its distribution centers, food centers and its 50 percent interest in Citgo Petroleum Corp.," Southland President Jere W. Thompson said in a statement released Monday.

The sale would include Southland Dairies, one of the nation's three largest dairy processors with 28 plants, and Chief Auto Parts, a convenience retailer of auto parts with 465 stores mostly in Texas and California.

After months of takeover rumors, Southland said Sunday it would be acquired by an affiliate of the Thompson Co., a private investment firm owned by the family that co-founded Southland in 1927.

If approved by shareholders, the deal would be one of the biggest leveraged buyouts ever, ranking second to the $6.1 billion buyout of Beatrice Cos. Inc. by the investment firm of Kohlberg Kravis Roberts & Co. in April 1986.

Southland is one of the nation's largest retailers, with $8.6 billion in sales last year and 8,222 retail outlets, including more than 7,500 7-Eleven stores. Southland also owns a major stake in Citgo Petroleum Corp., one of the nation's biggest independent refiners and marketers, based in Tulsa, Okla.

The proposed buyout includes a common stock purchase totaling $3.76 billion, and debt refinancing that would boost the total value of the deal to more than $5 billion.

In a leveraged buyout, debt incurred to finance the acquisition is repaid with the target company's cash flow or sale of its assets.

Some analysts predicted Southland would have to slow growth plans in addition to selling assets to pay for the huge debt it will incur under the buyout.

The debt load incurred under the Thompson plan also is likely to alter Southland's previous integration strategy, said Ed Gagnon, an investment analyst with the Dallas investment firm Rauscher Pierce Refnes Inc.

Southland in recent years had attempted to integrate vertically, meaning it acquired subsidiaries intended to supply its main business. The 7-Eleven stores, for example, get gasoline from Citgo and milk from Southland Dairies.

Monroe Greenstein, an analyst with Bear Stearns & Co. in New York, said that failing to alleviate the heavy debt load incurred in the buyout could prompt Southland's rivals to increase competitive pressure.

Police check belonging of a Sikh bus passenger.

Sikhs commandeer bus, kill 38

CHANDIGARH, India (AP) — Sikh terrorists hijacked a bus carrying Hindu pilgrims and massacred 38 people, including three children, in the worst single attack in the history of troubled Punjab state, police reported today.

In New Delhi, security was tightened today to prevent a backlash by Hindus, the majority in India. Authorities banned public assembly, erected road blocks and sealed the border between Punjab and neighboring Haryana state, which is just north of New Delhi.

Police officials said five to seven Sikh gunmen were involved in the well-planned attack late Monday near Chandigarh, capital of the northern state where Sikh radicals are fighting for a separate homeland.

One of the terrorists died in the crossfire as the attackers fired from inside and outside the bus, police said.

The victims included 11 women and three children, the government's All India Radio reported. At least 30 others were injured.

The bus driver, Hari Singh, said he and the bus conductor were Sikhs, and all the passengers were Hindus.

He said he stopped the bus when he saw a Fiat car blocking the road, and at least five gunmen rushed onto the vehicle. Police said two more may have stayed outside.

The gunmen ordered all passengers out but an elderly man said he was too old to leave the bus on the drizzly night, Singh recounted.

"All of a sudden one of the gunmen opened fire and the old man was hit," said Singh. "There was panic and it was like a battlefield."

"The actual shooting lasted five minutes," said Singh, who added he and the Sikh conductor were held aside.

The vehicle was carrying Hindu pilgrims from Chandigarh to the holy town of Rishikesh on the Ganges River.

It was commandeered near Jalalpur village, 21 miles southeast of Chandigarh, Singh said. He said there were 73 passengers aboard the state-run bus.

The assailants opened fire with Sten guns, Nand Kishore, a survivor, told the United News of India.

Kishore said he survived because his wife fell on top of him. "I felt bodies falling over me and finally I saw I had been saved and all the bullets hit my wife. She is dead," the news agency quoted him as saying.

Police told The Associated Press by telephone that the terrorists shouted "We are the Khalistan Commando Force" before fleeing.

Trial of Chernobyl officials begins

KIEV, U.S.S.R. (AP) — Three officials faced trial today in Chernobyl on charges they allowed unsanctioned experiments that caused history's worst nuclear accident.

Chernobyl's former director, its deputy and chief engineers have been charged with criminal negligence in the huge explosion and fire on April 26, 1986, at the nuclear power plant.

If convicted, the three face up to 12 years in prison, officials in the Ukraine have said.

Radiation poured from the gutted No. 4 reactor during the accident, killing 31 people and causing more than 200 others to suffer acute radiation sickness. The cloud of radiation eventually spread around the world.

Soviet authorities did not publicize the accident for three days.

The former head of Chernobyl, Viktor P. Bryukhanov, ex-chief engineer Nikolai M. Fomin and his assistant, Anatoly S. Dyatlov, have been jailed for a year pending judicial proceedings.

Their trial, to which some foreign reporters were invited, is part of Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev's campaign to hold all officials publicly accountable for their actions.

The town of Chernobyl, 80 miles north of the Ukrainian capital of Kiev, is within the "danger zone" extending 18 miles from the plant. The staging of the trial in the evacuated town seemed intended to add extra drama.

Only two of the 114 towns in the "danger zone" have returned to normal since the accident. The government has called off decontamination work in 27 towns, judging them too dangerous for people to inhabit in the foreseeable future, according to Kiev officials. Rehabilitation work is continuing in others.

Students call for 'peoples' funeral' for slain student

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Anti-government students said today they will hold a "Democratic Peoples' Funeral" for a slain student and take the body across the nation despite political leaders' fears of new unrest.

In another development, opposition leader Kim Young-sam said in an interview that he has never denied he would be a presidential candidate. The statement was Kim's strongest statement yet on running for president.

Newspapers reported today that a shakeup was likely in the governing Democratic Justice Party and President Chun Doo-hwan's Cabinet. The changes would apparently allow the government to replace military officials with civilians before presidential elections this fall.

Student leaders at Yonsei University said they wanted to stage nationwide mourning to honor Lee Han-yul.

"The soul of Lee was sacrificed while fighting for democracy," said student organizer Kim Byong-kyoo.

Students at Yonsei battled riot police Sunday and Monday after Lee died from injuries he sustained on June 9, when he was hit by a rifle-fired tear gas canister during a clash with police outside the school.

About 2,000 students yelling "Down with the military dictatorship" marched near the school today after a rally.

Arizona group files to recall governor

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — Opponents of Gov. Evan Mecham plan to raffle off the right to sign the first petition to recall the man they say has "embarrassed Arizonans nationally" with his statements and appointments.

Mecham, a Republican, characterized his opponents as "homosexuals and a few dissident Democrats," and said he would welcome a recall vote. Organizers filed papers formally beginning the recall campaign Monday but said it would take until Friday to get the petitions printed. They need at least 216,746 voter signatures by Nov. 3 to force a recall election.

Movement founder Ed Buck said his group has spent about $80,000 and has a list of 5,000 volunteers to circulate petitions.

"This is not a situation where we have to convince people," he said. "It's been our experience that we get mobbed with crowds" whenever information tables are set up.

To raise money, Buck said the group would hold a party Friday and ask for donations of $15 a person and $25 a couple at the door. Organizers will hold a drawing from among the partygoers for the right to be the first to sign.

If the petition drive succeeds, the election probably could not be held before next spring, and the process could cost about $2 million, according to Secretary of State Rose Mofford.

The governor "has embarrassed Arizonans nationally through his insensitive and demeaning statements about women and minorities as well as his appointment of individuals who are not qualified," Buck's group said in a statement.

Mecham, who won a three-way race with about 40 percent of the vote last fall, has been at the center of controversy since his January inauguration.

His appointments have included an education lobbyist who said teachers shouldn't argue with students who believe the world is flat, a chief investigator who withdrew when his criminal convictions came to light and an insurance executive whose license had been revoked.

His decision to rescind a Martin Luther King holiday for state employees, which he said had been established illegally, prompted some musicians to cancel concerts in the state. Some organizations, most recently the National Basketball Association, decided to move their conventions elsewhere.

Mecham last month issued a proclamation declaring a King observance day on the third Sunday in January, but opponents say they want a paid weekday off for state employees.

Mecham also has said that working women cause divorce and that he saw nothing wrong with calling black children "pickaninnies."

Arizona's Democratic Party opposes the recall movement, saying it hopes Mecham's continued presence will prompt voters to elect a Democratic Legislature next year.

Buck has said he is homosexual but that most of the campaign's officials are not. He accused Mecham and Kruglick of trying to divert attention from Mecham's conduct.

In Utah, where Mecham is attending the annual meeting of the Western Governor's Association, the governor said Monday he isn't bothered by the recall drive and won't campaign against it.

"I don't think the people of Arizona are going to follow the lead of a person who is an avowed homosexual and has been arrested on drug and morals charges," Mecham said.

Buck pleaded guilty to a reduced charge after being arrested in 1983 in an adult theater for alleged morals violations. He was arrested in January on a charge of altering a prescription. The case is pending as Buck undergoes a rehabilitation program.

"The homosexuals are unhappy because I've publicly said I don't approve of their lifestyle and I said I wouldn't hire anybody who was homosexual," Mecham said. "At least a recall election I think would shut them all up."

EL PASO (AP) — A business that helps illegal aliens process their applications for legalization announced Monday it would donate $5 from every fee it receives in July to a trust fund benefiting the families of the 18 aliens who suffocated in a boxcar.

Sal Carmona of National Amnesty Consultants, an El Paso-based company with 16 offices nationwide, said it opened the Boxcar Family Trust Fund with $1,000 deposited in a local bank.

Carmona said National Amnesty processed more than 4,000 people last month.

A brief respite from the daily explosions

By JOHN CUNNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP)—A calendar change can mean a big change in economic thinking, and if you don't think so, you might consider consulting your daily newspaper.

The big calendar change of the moment is the economy's entrance into the second half of the year, accompanied by the views of all those economists and securities analysts who issued poor forecasts last January.

In the interim, many of these forecasters have been assaulting the populace with alarming commentaries about what might happen in the next day or week in the bond or stock markets, or to interest rates and prices.

Now, at midyear, their thinking suddenly becomes more long-range, and all the worries that had occupied them day by day and week by week fall back into perspective, where they belonged all the time.

No longer does it appear that the Japanese will take over America by means of economics, or that stocks will explode to 3,000 points or fall to 1,500 points on the Dow Jones industrial average. Or that bonds will collapse.

Long-range views usually call for a continuation of existing levels of activity, since change is almost impossible to see. A six-month forecast is not treated lightly because, unlike daily forecasts, it cannot be fixed quickly.

It is also impossible these days, when nobody really understands the economic world, to do anything but take the safe stance, which is to assume that all forces currently acting on the economy will remain as they are.

For a short time, therefore, the excitement might abate and you might become accustomed to stories that suggest economic stability, or at least a continuation of what serves as stability these days.

The notion that the Japanese will take over America by economic power will be debunked. Replacing it will be accounts of why Japanese investment is needed in order to maintain economic stability.

The decline of the dollar, which had caused almost daily hysteria during the first half of the year, will be assessed as having done much to strengthen the American economy and, perhaps, even the economies of Japan and Europe.

The stock market, which by the day seems to create more excitement than the baseball box-scores, will, in the perspective of six months, be seen as rather drab. For a while, all those daily upheavals that portended disaster or a new record or a fabulous fortune will be seen as squiggles that had little meaning.

Do you recall the inflation scare? Two months ago, inflation was on the mind of everyone with the least interest in the economy. Looking back, it was a mere episode. Looking forward, few forecasters expect anything big on the subject. And neither do they see a lot of action on the interest rate front.

Mexico train service improved

MONTERREY, Mexico (AP)—After decades of deteriorating passenger train service, Mexico's national railway is getting back on track, say customers who recently traveled on the upgraded lines.

"It's accessible in every way," said Lidia Benavides, a passenger on the new "Regiomontano" line that makes the 750-mile trip from the border city of Nuevo Laredo to Mexico City in about 18 hours.

"It's economical, comfortable and the service is very good," said Mrs. Benavides, who said she hadn't taken the train since the 1950s, when the service throughout Mexico was in its prime.

In the last two months, the Mexican National Railway Co. has improved service along three routes between Mexico City and other cities, including an overnight trip on the "Regiomontano" from this northeastern Nuevo Leon state capital.

Upgraded day service on the "Constitucionalista" line carries passengers from Mexico City to Queretaro state via Tula and San Juan del Rio, then on to Guanajuato state to Irapuato. Another line takes travelers to the popular tourist town of San Miguel de Allende.

Coaches, some made in the United States during the 1940s and 1950s, have been modernized, tracks have been improved, lines have been extended and, most surprising to regular customers, the trains are running on time.

renovation in an estimated $1 million government investment, said Gonzalo Alarcon of the railway company here.

Private sleeping rooms for one to four people, each with its own toilet and sink, have been redecorated, as have the dining and bar cars.

Monterrey ticket agents say word of the improved service has spread so quickly that tickets for certain accommodations are sold out weeks in advance.

"We can't satisfy the demand for tickets. It's gone up 100 percent," said Juanita Garza, an agent for 27 years at the Monterrey train station.

The line called "Regiomontano," the nickname for a Monterrey resident, has provided service from Monterrey to Mexico City for years. But passengers complained of poor service, shoddy accommodations and long delays.

"Frankly, there were a lot of problems," said Dorina Garza, manager of a Monterrey travel agency.

Now, service has been extended to Nuevo Laredo, just south of Laredo, Texas, making it easier for American travelers to catch the train.

Jana Hill, a 22-year-old senior at Baylor University in Waco, Texas, said she and four other students called the Nuevo Laredo train station for reservations.

"We had no idea what kind of train we'd be on. We just said we'd take what comes," she said.

"Well, everything has just been great," she said as waiters served a breakfast of pancakes or eggs in the dining car on a recent trip to Mexico City.

Ms. Hill paid 45,716 pesos, or about $36, for a one-way ticket in a "camarin," a private sleeping car for one person.

Two people can travel in a private sleeping car from Monterrey to Mexico City for $57, about the price of a single, one-way airline ticket. The ticket includes dinner and breakfast in the dining car.

Rural dwellers drinking arsenic in water

By CAM ROSSIE
Associated Press Writer

TORREON, Mexico (AP) — Thousands of poor farmers living in northern Mexico's "Lagoon Region" are drinking water contaminated with natural arsenic, and activists say people are dying from it.

Ironically, the problem has arisen because of water depletion in this area of southwestern Coahuila and eastern Durango states that was named the "Comarca Lagunera," or Lagoon Region, because of its once-abundant lakes.

"The arsenic has always been here but we never noticed it before because there was so much water. But now that we're running out of water it's become a serious problem," said Magdalena Briones, president of the region's Environmental Defense Association.

Ms. Briones produced photographs of five people with severe lesions on their faces and bodies, which she said were caused by arsenic-linked cancer.

"All these people are dead now," she said.

Dr. Luis Maeda, a Torreon cancer specialist who has spent 17 years studying the arsenic problem, says that cancer and other diseases attributed to arsenic poisoning are progressive.

It's impossible to tally the arsenic-related deaths, Maeda said, because there are so many manifestations of arsenic poisoning and because autopsies are rarely performed.

"Presently, 15,000 people are in serious condition due to drinking high levels of arsenic," said Maeda, an environmental association member.

Dr. Mario Sagaon, director of the 2-year-old arsenic program for the Coahuila state public health department, said there are dozens of symptoms of arsenic poisoning, including sores and scabs on the skin and vascular lesions that could impede blood circulation and force amputation of limbs.

"We're not going to risk ourselves by saying that arsenic causes death," Sagaon said in a telephone interview from his office in the Coahuila state capital of Saltillo.

"We're doing studies to try to find the common denominator," he said.

Nearly 1.5 million people live in the 19,000-square-mile Lagoon Region, which includes the tri-city area of Torreon in Coahuila state and Gomez Palacio and Lerdo in Durango, and dozens of small "ejidos" or communal farms, which use vast quantities of water for irrigating the cotton and alfalfa grown here.

Sagaon said the cancer rate in the Lagoon Region is the same as in other parts of Mexico.

But, he said, "We're finding skin cancer (in the ejido area) and that is not common in other rural areas."

Additionally, Sagaon said, in a 1982 study of 29 people with symptoms of arsenic poisoning, 15 had to have limbs amputated.

The 300,000 people living on ejidos north and east of the major cities are most severely affected by high arsenic levels, said Horacio Rubio, the federal Agriculture Department's regional manager for water system control.

The World Health Organization considers .05 parts per million the maximum tolerable level for human consumption of arsenic, Rubio said in an interview at his office in Gomez Palacio.

Test show that the northern ejido area has arsenic contents of

.1 ppm and higher, or 20 times higher than the limit, he said.

In Ejido Sophia, about 40 miles north of Torreon, citizens blame arsenic for several deaths over the past few years and a variety of ailments.

"The problem is very serious," said Nicolo Barbosa Gomez, ejido commissioner. "The government said it would analyze those people most affected but it's been a year now and nothing has been done."

The government is perforating dozens of new wells in the region to try to find cleaner water, Rubio said.

Sagaon said a method to filter out the arsenic is being tested in Mexico City.

Water demands for a growing population, especially over the past 40 years, have severely depleted the region's underground aquifers that provide the area's drinking water.

But this region sits on volcanic rock, which both government analysts and citizens' groups agree is the source of the arsenic.

"The arsenic forms a part of the heart of the rock that is millions of years old," said Rubio.

"As a result of the overuse of the water supply, the arsenic is concentrated in the few reserves that remain," said Maeda.

Davis models second-hand watches.

Booming business in pawned Rolexes

HOUSTON (AP) — Pawnbroker Jean Davis twirled a diamond-fringed, 18-karat gold men's Rolex watch in his fingers, one of dozens left at his store by the oil-patch's newly poor.

"They hate to see that Rolex go," he said, describing his downwardly mobile clientele. "But the last thing to go is the wife's Rolex, because that could cost a divorce."

Once a status symbol of high-flying, money-making good times in the petroleum fast lane, Rolex watches have become a common sight in Houston pawnshops, some of which hang special signs offering to buy or pawn the status timepieces.

Most pawnshop owners say the boom in second-hand watches began about 18 months to two years ago, and shows few signs of letting up as Houston's economy lingers in the doldrums.

"This was a guy in the oil business," said Davis, waving the newly acquired, top-of-the-line, diamond-decorated "President's" watch that sold new for nearly $15,000. Another watch belonged to a stockbroker, yet another to a real estate agent, he said. Each one had a tale of financial downfall behind it, Davis said. "Nobody wants to come in and just borrow money, they want to come in and tell you how they got poor," he said.

Anthony Petkas, who runs A&P Pawn & Jewelry near Davis' Diamond Liquidators, agrees.

"They all come in with a story, and if I don't hear the story, they won't sell the watch," Petkas said. "If they would just come in and not give me any stories, I'd give them more money."

Most pawnshop operators agree Rolex watches are among a family's last expensive items to be pawned, thereby providing a unique index of Houstonians' financial misfortune, a kind of losing economic indicator.

"First you saw the executives, then you saw their bosses," Davis said. "We're now seeing a lot of real estate people come in, since the oil people have already gone bad."

"If it wasn't for the Rolex watches, I'd be broke," said Petkas. Four of the watches sat in a nearby display case in his store, one still in its original box.

Berie Landow, who opened his pawnshop about a year ago, says his Rolex business has been strong.

"The day I opened they started coming in with them" Landow said. "Usually it's the same story — oil industry."

"I think people are going back to the real life," said Gary Morgan, owner of Morgan Pawn Shop. "Right now, there is no flash, no cash, no work."

Nonetheless, Petkas and others tell stories about customers who drive up in expensive foreign cars to pawn their watches.

"To them it is like losing a kid, or a wife or something," Petkas said. "I get certain people who would wear a Rolex and starve."

Morgan, a 15-year veteran of the Houston pawn business, said he's noticed a huge increase in the number of pawnshops that have sprung up to service the business in the past two years.

Most Houston pawnshop owners limit loans on Rolex watches to $300, instead offering to buy them.

Pawnshops usually offer sellers about 30 to 40 percent of the watches' original value. The shops then resell them for about 50 percent of their original value, depending on condition, shop owners say.

Dallas unusual place for royalty to buy polo gear

DALLAS (AP) — Deep in the heart of cowboy country, outfitter Vincent Meyer is a breed apart, selling polo equipment to a select clientele that includes the Prince of Wales.

Enveloped in the smell of rich leather, the accoutrements of polo — mallets, helmets, jerseys and saddles — are stacked neatly in his store, a converted brewery in the revitalized West End of downtown Dallas.

In the back room stands a special machine, the only one of its kind, he boasts, that is used to knit special leg bandages for the polo ponies.

"Nobody makes saddle blankets and leg wraps like we do," Meyer says confidently.

A framed letter, thanking Meyer for the gift of a set of horse leg wraps in 1982, expresses gratitude for the "very smart set of bandages," and is signed simply, "Yours sincerely, Charles."

For Meyer, the letter is a crowning achievement for the business that has grown from a small operation in the West Texas town of Brownwood to making saddle blankets and leg wraps for the Windsor Park team on which HRH Prince Charles plays.

Meyer, 48, who was born in St. Louis, moved to Brownwood, where his mother was born, to start a lawn and garden business in 1965.

"After about two weeks I got bored," he said. "I said, 'Shoot, here I am in West Texas, I guess I ought to start messing around with horses.'"

Meyer took polo lessons from a rancher who had played during the 1930s and then began playing with some friends in Dallas. Brownwood, not a likely spot for the sport of kings, actually has had five polo fields over the years, he said.

Meyer speculates that second and third sons of the British aristocracy came to West Texas to try their hand at cattle, bringing polo with them.

After he and a partner developed a better molded plastic polo ball, Meyer began marketing the product under the Texas Polo name. Later, he moved the operation to Dallas.

He began looking into ways of making bandages after a British company disappeared, leaving a dearth of good-quality wraps, he said.

Dealing with the titled rich can be tricky for an American, Meyer admitted.

He said he once took an order for a George Milford Haven, thinking only that it was an unusual name. Later, he learned he was dealing with the Marquis of Milford Haven, a Welsh coastal town.

Meyer declined to give his revenues last year.

"I'm not rich, nor famous," he said.

Surprisingly, his elite clientele don't spend lavishly, he said. "There's still a lot of competition. There's a lot of price competition."

"Even a lot of the ones with money won't pay you." Polo was brought to the United States in the 1870s, after British officers adapted the game from tribal horsemen in Punjab, India. Although the game isn't widely played, it has retained a loyal following, Meyer said.

Practicing the princely sport of polo in West Texas, where rodeo is king, did give Meyer some qualms.

He said a veterinarian talked him into riding in the grand entry of an annual rodeo.

Animated films making a comeback

EDITOR'S NOTE — A half-century after Walt Disney made animated films an art from with "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," cartoon features appear to be making a comeback. For one thing, film critics say, there is a growing network of theaters showing animated features.

By BOB THOMAS
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Animated films from 32 countries go on display here this week amid indications that one of motion pictures' oldest and often neglected art forms is enjoying a renaissance.

The second biennial Los Angeles International Animation Celebration is being held as Walt Disney Pictures prepares for the 50th anniversary release in 60 countries of the studio's first animated feature, "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs."

The July 10-17 celebration will feature the latest works of the world's animators, including myriad short films, a Hanna-Barbera feature "Rock Odyssey," the Japanese fantasy "Laputa" and a Cuban thriller-comedy "Vampires in Havana."

Also scheduled are tributes to Walter Lantz ("Woody Woodpecker"), Canada's Norman McLaren, Italy's Bruno Bozetto, Ralph Bakshi ("Fritz the Cat") and Milt Kahl, one of the famed Nine Old Men who animated Disney classics.

The animated film dates to the beginning of the century, when nickelodeon audiences were amused by primitive drawings that moved on the screen. Emil Cohl's 1908 "Fantasmagorie" and Winsor McKay's 1909 "Gertie the Dinosaur" were among the first story cartoons.

Max Fleischer, Walt Disney and other producers poured out short comedies in the 1920s and 1930s, and most of the major studios maintained cartoon departments into the 1950s.

On Dec. 21, 1937, Disney elevated the cartoon to the status of art with the premiere of "Snow White," which has sold $330 million worth of theater tickets in its many releases.

With Happy, Sleepy, Dopey, et al., once again delighting movie audiences, the question arises: Has animation really progressed in the half-century since "Snow White?"

"There has been technical progress in the past 50 years," says Charles Salomon, who reports on animation for the Los Angeles Times and is author of the forthcoming Knopf volume "Enchanted Drawings."

"The problem is that animation people are not given enough time to work on the story. Writing for animation has become something of a lost art. Walt Disney himself was the best story man in the business, and he would work on the story and characters until he was certain they were right."

"Snow White" took five years to make, and he was willing to scrap six months of work if it didn't seem right. He'd say, "This is not good enough. Today's producers can't afford to do that."

"Entertainment Tonight" critic Leonard Martin, author of a book on the Disney films, says animation is gaining wider access.

"I've been going to animation festivals for the past 10-15 years, and I've seen some wonderful stuff. But the films never had access to the public ... Now there seems to be a network of theaters willing to play animation."

Terry Thoren, chairman of the Los Angeles animation festival, is president of Expanded Entertainment, which promotes animated films. Two years ago the company packaged 22 short films from nine countries in a feature "19th Annual Tournee of Animation." The release was a success and it was followed by a compilation of the best films from the 1985 Animation Celebration.

This year Expanded Entertainment is releasing other films based on the popular Claymation figures of Will Vinton and the Puppets of George Pal.

"Our job has been to raise the consciousness of the public to recognize that there's a lot of good stuff out there," Thoren says.

Quality animation is coming not only from New York and Hollywood, but Chicago, Seattle, Dallas, Portland and other cities. The best foreign work, he says, is emanating from the United Kingdom.

Production of animation features appears to be booming. Hanna-Barbera, Don Bluth (now of Ireland), Toronto's Nelvana ("Care Bears"), Ralph Bakshi and other producers have announced forthcoming features.

Disney says the studio is working on an adaptation of Charles Dickens' "Oliver" and another feature, "The Little Mermaid."

Service finds home for pets

ALLENTOWN, Pa. (AP) — She had heard of the idea before but Linda Rathbun credits a stray dog with her single most compelling source of inspiration.

She was driving in the Pocono last October when she noticed the stray in her rear-view mirror. It followed her for two, maybe three blocks, and that gave Rathbun time to think.

She had four dogs at home at the time, and really no desire to add a fifth, but the dog looked pathetic in a way only stray dogs can. Lost, homeless and unloved, it was right out of Central Casting. Rathbun even nicknamed it "Little Orphan Annie."

With winter fast approaching, Rathbun decided to find Annie a home. She found out it was not simple.

"I didn't want to keep the dog, but I knew it was roaming around and I knew it didn't have an owner," Rathbun said recently outside the tidy colonial farmhouse near the Peter's Store section of Lehigh County that serves as a base for her service, the Lehigh Valley's first privately operated adoption service for pets.

It is strictly a registry service, Rathbun says, meaning she serves as a contact for people who wish to either find good homes for pets they can no longer keep, or, increasingly, as a referral service for people who wish to adopt a specific kind of dog or cat.

Rathbun does not board the pets until a new home is found. Rathbun, long involved with showing and handling show dogs, first asked about space at the area's Animals In Distress shelter, an animal protection organization that does not end the stray's life after a certain time.

Because of Rathbun's feelings toward euthanasia, the AID shelter seemed the best way to go. But at the time, the shelter had a major drawback: a three-month waiting list.

As a second option, Rathbun took the stray to the Lehigh County Humane Society. The society was able to find Rathbun's stray a home, but the process left her thinking there must be a better way.

"I started thinking about the fact that we really need an agency or some kind of service in the community where we could contact that person looking to find a new pet and connect them with other people who are going through some traumatic experience like a death or a divorce — and have to give their pet away. The only option we really have is to go to the Humane Society."

Rathbun charges a $25, one-time fee for her adoption services.

There is a lot of time involved in finding a dog a new home, Rathbun says, and most of it is spent on the telephone.

One of the advantages of using Rathbun's service, she says, is that the former owner gets to meet the new owner, or vice versa.

Rathbun has had her own traumatic experience with pets. She found herself with 14 show-quality Afghan dogs a few years ago as she was going through a divorce. She eventually got rid of most of them, but kept four.

Since Rathbun started the service last fall, she has handled about 10 adoptions a week.

Hardest to find new homes for are dogs over 5 years old, Rathbun has found. Pairs of animals, whether of dogs — Rathbun usually works with dog owners in finding new homes — or cats are particularly hard to place.

New products sought from desert shrub

SANTAN, Ariz. (AP) — Identifying marketable byproducts of guayule, such as industrial resins, will be the key to making the desert shrub a practical source of rubber, guayule experts said at the recent groundbreaking of a prototype rubber-making facility.

Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. has an $8.3 million federal contract to build and operate the plant that is to produce at least 56 tons of rubber. Construction is to be completed near the end of the year.

Most of the guayule will come from 400 acres of the crop being grown on the Gila River Indian Reservation. The processing plant, which will employ about 25 people, also will be on the reservation.

Dana Norris, former governor of the Gila River Indian Community, noted that the ancestors of the Pima Indians in the community were making rubber balls for games from guayule centuries ago.

Guayule was the source of about half of U.S. rubber products from 1900 to 1920, and the subject of intensive research in the 1940s.

The prototype plant here will run for only about 10 months to fulfill the federal contract, said Richard Zavala of Dravo Engineering Cos., which designed it for a capacity of 165 tons per year.

Guayule yields rubber virtually identical to rubber-tree rubber, and requires little irrigation as a crop. However, the costs of growing it and producing rubber from it total $1 to $2 per pound, said Alan G. Altenau, Firestone director of technology. Rubber-tree rubber sells for about 46 cents per pound but has been close to 80 cents in this decade.

Two ways to make guayule rubber more economical are to lower the cost of growing the crop per pound of rubber yield and to find and develop other marketable products from the crop.

Success is likely on both counts, said Paul O'Connell, overseer of guayule research contracts for the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

Altenau said developing useful byproducts and cutting agronomic costs in half should get the cost to 50 to 60 cents per pound for guayule rubber.

Likely byproducts with value include resins that are useful as texturizers in rubber products and as preservatives for wood products, he said. The plant material left after extraction of rubber and resins can be burned for energy or converted to livestock feed. Also, a chemical used in the plastics industry can be produced from guayule.

The federal government is investing about $5 million per year in guayule research in order to break the nation's dependence on foreign sources of natural rubber. Natural rubber is considered a strategic material because synthetic rubber is unsuitable for several important applications, including aircraft tires and surgical supplies.

Starlight ... star bright

By M.R. KROPKO
Associated Press Writer

CLEVELAND (AP) — In the universe of astronomy, Nicholas Sanduleak could hang a star on his door if he were so inclined.

The 53-year-old senior research associate at Case Western Reserve University considers cataclysmic events just part of the job, even when one of his stellar discoveries is the rage of galaxy.

His star in the Large Magellanic Cloud, a satellite galaxy of the Milky Way, has become the first supernova clearly visible from Earth since 1604.

"It's always nice to get your name linked to something that gets this kind of attention. It gives us a bit of a plug for the type of work we do. You get a kick out of it. I guess it's part of science to derive some joy out of something you do," he says.

Data from the international Explorer satellite monitored at the Goddard Space Flight Center in Greenbelt, Md., confirm that a star first identified in 1969 and named SK-69.202 is the one that burst last February, becoming visible in the Southern Hemisphere of this world, Sanduleak says.

The star became supernova SN1987a, thrilling astronomers with its brilliance and its oddity. It was not considered to be a candidate for supernova when it exploded.

The SK in the star's name is an abbreviation for Sanduleak. The numbers describe its location.

Sanduleak considers himself a census taker of the stars and has literally identified many thousands of stars not visible to the naked eye.

SK-69.202 was far too weak a star to be seen from earth, until it became a supernova.

Sanduleak located the star while he worked in Chile in 1969 surveying the Large Magellanic Cloud. It was one of about 1,700 stars he put in a star catalog.

"It was just one of the stars in the listing, a highly luminous blue star," Sanduleak says. "That's pretty much all we knew about it. Some years later, European astronomers classified this as a B3 super giant, but there was no reason to study that star in any great detail."

"That's the way it stood until last Feb. 23 when the supernova went off, and it seemed to correspond to my star. It seemed to be the likely candidate of the star that blew up."

He says that for about a month there was "a lot of churning going on" in astronomy about just what exploded. "We now realize that SK-69.202 is indeed the candidate of choice."

"There's no question about it being a key event in modern astronomy. It says a lot about the theory of evolution of stars, because it wasn't an obvious candidate. Theories would suggest a later type of star, maybe a red super giant. But this was a blue super giant. Now theoreticians have to provide a new model for this to have happened."

Two Pampans compete for Miss Texas title

KAMBRA WINNINGHAM
MISS LAKE MEREDITH

SHAUNA GRAVES
MISS PAMPA

Two Pampans are among the 60 contestants competing for the Miss Texas crown July 8-11 at Tarrant County Convention Center Theater in Fort Worth.

Shauna Graves, daughter of Ron and Madeline Graves, is Miss Pampa 1987. She is a 21-year-old senior at Oklahoma City University, where she is majoring in psychology.

Her entry in the talent competition will be a lyric ballet performed to "I've Heard It All Before." She is sponsored by the Miss Pampa Scholarship Pageant.

This is Graves' second year to compete in the Miss Texas Pageant. She competed last year under the title of Miss Lake Meredith.

Kambra Winningham, Miss Lake Meredith, was valedictorian of the Pampa High School graduating class of 1987. The 17-year-old daughter of Billy and Carolyn Winningham plans to begin pre-law studies at the University of Texas at Austin in the fall.

She will perform a ballet solo to the "Comedian's Gallop" during talent competition. She is sponsored by the Miss Lake Meredith Scholarship Pageant of Borger.

Jill McLain, 18, daughter of Don and Gwen McLain of Spearman, will compete under the title of Miss Wheatheart of the Nation, sponsored by the Perryton-Ochiltree County Chamber of Commerce. She will major in pre-law at Texas Tech University beginning this fall. She will tapdance to "Tiger Rag" in the talent portion of the pageant.

Theme of this year's pageant is "Just Go To a Movie," honoring Hollywood's 100th year. Included in the production cast are the reigning Miss Texas, Stephany Samone, who was also in the Top 10 at the Miss America Pageant last September; and former Miss Texas title-holders Tamara Hext, Miss Texas 1984; Dana Rogers, Miss Texas 1983; and Gloria Gilbert-Barron, Miss Texas 1982, who will be Mistress of Ceremonies.

The pageant is offering in excess of $525,000 in scholarships and prizes. Each contestant will have at least one college scholarship available to them.

Preliminary competition begins Wednesday and will run through Friday. The contestants will compete in a different category each night, including talent, judges' interview, swimsuit and evening gown. Talent comprises 50 percent of the judges' consideration.

The final competition with the top 10 contestants, selected by judges on the basis of the preliminaries, will be aired live at 8 p.m. Saturday on KAMR-TV Channel 4.

The winner of the Miss Texas title will represent the state in the Miss America Pageant in September at Atlantic City, N.J.

Man tries to light fire in old long-distance flame

DEAR ABBY: I've been in love with "George" for six years. He's 29 and I'm 27. Ours was a long-distance romance. (I live in Los Angeles and George lives in San Diego.) We got together almost every weekend, taking turns making the drive. We were making serious plans to marry, when last Christmas he told me he was marrying a young woman co-worker he had said was "just a friend." I was heartbroken because I had no other man in my life since I met George, and I cared deeply for him and thought it was mutual.

He phoned me a few days ago to say he "missed" me, and could tell his wife he had to be out of town "on business," so if I wanted to drive to San Diego, we could hole up in a motel for a couple of days.

Abby, I am ashamed to admit that I really want to see him again because I still love him, but I don't want to be a party to adultery. Should I go to San Diego? The thought of not being with him is tearing me apart.

STILL IN LOVE WITH GEORGE
DEAR STILL: The kind of "love" you feel for George needs to be explored to help you find out why you still love a man who deceived you, used you, rejected you and now wants to use you again. Give him a firm, unqualified NO. Then get into therapy to discover why you are tempted to pursue such clearly self-destructive behavior. You deserve better. Be good to yourself, or nobody else will.

***

DEAR ABBY: About five months ago, I ran into a relative of mine at the supermarket. She told me that her son was getting married — she gave me the date, and told me to mark it on my calendar. I did, and was eagerly looking forward to attending this wedding.

Well, the wedding is two weeks away, and I have not as yet received an invitation. Others in my family have received theirs, so I am wondering now if mine got lost in the mail, or perhaps I was never sent one.

I considered phoning this relative to remind her that she had asked me to mark the date of her son's wedding on my calendar, but no invitation was received. Then I thought it would only embarrass her, so why should I rain on her parade?

What do you think I should do?
BAFFLED IN BALTIMORE

DEAR BAFFLED: There would be no harm in calling this relative to remind her that she asked you to save the date, and as yet you've received no invitation. But if you would feel uncomfortable doing so, why not ask a mutual relative to call and ask her?

***

DEAR ABBY: I just read the letter from "W.F. in Palmyra, Neb.," who wrote about the alcoholic lady who was drunk when he went to pick her up to drive her to a retirement home in Texas. The lady had told him that she had no family and he was concerned about her because she passed out and he didn't know whom to notify about her condition.

Dear Abby
Abigail Van Buren

Abby, I am a recovering alcoholic woman and I've been sober in A.A. for four years. Please tell "W.F." to waste no time putting that woman in contact with Alcoholics Anonymous. He'll find Alcoholics Anonymous listed in the Yellow Pages of the telephone directory.

Abby, if this woman has no family as she says, she will find a loving, understanding "family" with these people. A.A. saved my life and I pray that this woman will have a second chance as I did.

SOBER, GRATEFUL AND HAPPY

DEAR SOBER: Many wrote to suggest that Alcoholics Anonymous could be the answer to this woman's prayers. Thanks to all of you.

***

DEAR ABBY: A while back you answered a woman's query about the comparison of a man's eating habits to his lovemaking. She was in love with a man who ate fast and she was concerned that his quick satisfaction of his physical need for food might prophesy a similar quick satisfaction of his physical need for sex.

You advised her not to be concerned — if she loved him, she should marry him.

At the time, I wasn't sure of your advice. Now I am, Abby, you were right on the nose. I now know what great sex is, and it's with this man who eats like he hasn't eaten in six weeks. Please print this as validation of your advice to others, who, like me, put your advice on hold.

Sign me ...
YUM
P.S. On what did you base your conclusion?

DEAR YUM: Just common sense and good manners. A gentleman never keeps a lady waiting.

***

DEAR ABBY: How right you are to point out that constant tickling of a person is cruelty and should not be tolerated. My Irish mother told me at least 50 years ago of a situation that took place near her hometown in Ireland.

A neighbor had at least two wives pass away before anyone paid much attention to it. Then another neighbor reported hearing hysterical laughter coming from that house. Well, it was later learned that the man had been tying his wives to the bedpost, and tickling the soles of their bare feet with a feather! He continued until the hysteria died them in. In truth, they were tickled to death.

High costs change traditional nurses' roles

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — High costs of technology and health care are changing the role of the traditional nurse, according to Shelia Ryan, dean of the University of Rochester School of Nursing. Health care professionals are looking for alternatives to expensive hospital stays and are emphasizing good health habits and coping strategies, she said.

Ryan says that as medical researchers learn more about how eating, drinking and smoking affect health, it will be the job of nurses to help people make choices for the style of life.

Plano firm invents motorcycle helmet to beat the heat

By STEPHANIE STROM
Plano Star-Courier

PLANO (AP) — Summertime with its balmy evenings and bright days inspires communion with the out-of-doors, and what better way to enjoy the summer elements than astride a motorcycle?

One of the drawbacks to Texas bikers has been the heat, especially while wearing the safety helmets required by law.

While manufacturers have reduced the weight and bulk of most motorcycle helmets, until recently they have not managed to combat the heat.

But a Plano company, Cool-Power, is offering riders some relief — an air-conditioned motorcycle helmet.

"Motorcycle helmets have at least an inch of Styrofoam insulation, and an inch of Styrofoam is also what they use in refrigerators to keep the heat they generate inside," said Richard Buist, president of Cool-Power.

Using a thermoelectric cooling system, Cool-Power helmets maintain an interior temperature that is almost 30 degrees lower than whatever inferno is sweltering outside.

The Cool-Power helmet operates on the principal that most blood at one time or another flows through the head to the brain. The headgear cools that blood, which then flows on to other parts of the body, eliminating all but the most delicate of perspiration.

"I think the greatest thing about it is that it does work," said Buist, a physicist who has been a pioneer in the development of thermoelectrics.

The key elements of the Cool-Power system are two 1.2-inch square ceramic plates that sandwich semiconductor material — made from "dust off a bat's wing, the eye of a newt and stirred in the light of a full moon," Buist said, joking.

Two electrical leads attached to a 12-volt battery convert the module into a heat pump that directs heat from one ceramic surface to the other. The helmet plugs into the motorcycle's power source through a coiled cord hooked up to an electrical attachment.

A finned aluminum strip straddling the top of the helmet exhausts the heat collected in one plate of the module.

And while heat is drawn to one surface, the other ceramic plate becomes cool. A copper coating melded to the cool plate transmits cooling to a copper braid suspended in a "bladder" filled with fluid. The braid cools the fluid, which in turn cools the wearer's head.

"Thermoelectric modules have been used for a long time by the military and NASA, but it's only recently that they've been applied to consumer goods," Buist said. He said a similar cooling system is used in small, portable picnic coolers and that French technicians have experimented with thermoelectric power to cool railway cars, although such a large application is not yet feasible.

An entourage of about 15 Cool-Power employees assemble the cooling system in the back rooms at company headquarters in Plano. The package is shipped to a helmet manufacturer in Idaho, who installs the cooling system along with a typical plastic foam and terry cloth lining.

Because Cool-Power has farmed its business out to a manufacturer that uses a special technique to construct its helmets, each helmet exceeds U.S. Department of Transportation regulations by almost 50 percent, company officials say. And the cooling unit adds only four ounces to the total weight of a helmet.

"Within eight months, this will be the wave of the future," said Buist.

Cool-Power started marketing its helmet in April, and already the company boasts a backlog of almost 60 units. A motorcycle shop in Arlington sells the helmets, and Buist said Plano Honda is among many distributors that have requested a Cool-Power helmet to test.

"Most people have been positive about the project," he said. "They usually get this look on their face and then say, 'Well, I once thought of something like that,' or 'I was wondering when somebody was going to come up with a way to do that.'"

The primary drawback to the helmet is cost. Each one retails for about $500, but Buist said he hopes to reduce production costs to $350 in the near future. Top quality helmets sell for between $250 and $1,000, depending on the labels they bear.

Buist said the Cool-Power helmet is manufactured by the same company that produces Best helmets, some of which sell for $1,000. Best markets a helmet that has a system of vents to circulate air within the headgear, but Cool-Power, which Buist said holds exclusive world-wide patents on its product, is the only company to sell a helmet that actually is air-conditioned.

When Mississippi inventor Jerry McCall first approached Buist in 1983 with the idea for a refrigerated motorcycle helmet, Buist was a senior vice president for technology at Marlow Industries in Dallas and a skeptic.

"We thought he was just another crackpot," Buist said of McCall. "It just seemed like another wild idea, but when I really started thinking about it, I also knew the application was small enough to be practical."

Marlow Industries worked with McCall to devise a prototype. However, Marlow became concerned with the potential liability of such a product and abandoned the project.

Only one other company in the United States manufactures thermoelectric modules, and after approaching that manufacturer and other potential producers, McCall returned to Buist's office to try again. This time, he offered Buist exclusive rights to the patent to start a company that would produce air-conditioned motorcycle helmets.

"I can see when it is worth it to break out and try something new," Buist said.

Cool-Power made a prototype in April 1986.

"It looked pretty crummy but it worked, and if it worked, that was all the assurance we needed that we had a great product," Buist said.

The company opened its offices in September 1986 and began selling the refrigerated helmet in April. Based on a manufacturer's projections, Buist predicted sales of more than 40,000 Cool-Power helmets next year.

Rotary upsets Dyers in Bambino City tourney

O.C.A.W., Dean's also notch wins

The final four. No, it's not the NCAA basketball championship. It's the Pampa City Bambino Tournament, and it's just as exciting, if not as glamorous, as college basketball's biggest event. After Monday night's action, only four teams remain in the battle for the championship trophy.

Dean's Pharmacy eliminated Cabot 11-10 on a two-run double by Jason Westbrook with two outs in the bottom of the sixth inning. Cabot was leading 10-8 going into the bottom of the sixth.

Dean's had to make an earlier comeback after Cabot led 2-0 in the first inning on Tarin Peet's two-run homer.

Cabot was ahead 7-3 when Dean's rallied to take an 8-7 lead after four innings. Both teams went scoreless the fifth inning, but then Cabot went on top in the sixth by scoring three runs.

John Donnelly had two singles to lead Dean's hitting attack. Donnelly was also the winning pitcher after relieving starter Jason Downs.

Others with base hits for Dean's were Jeremiah Downs, Justin Morris, Jason Westbrooks and Michael Hunt.

Tarin Peet had a home run, triple and double for Cabot while Kurt West had two singles. Andy Sutton had a double while Tracy Peet, Matt Edgar, Gary Frazier and Chad Parks all had singles.

Dean's, the second-ranked team in the National League going into the tournament, meets O.C.A.W. at 7 p.m. tonight.

O.C.A.W. blasted Celanese 19-1 in a game that was called after four innings due to the 10-run rule. O.C.A.W. more than made up for two previous losses to Celanese during the regular season with a barrage of home runs.

Mike Foote and Will Winborne hit two round-trippers each for the winners while Bret Queen had a homer, single and double.

Gregg Moore and Chris Gilbert each added a double for O.C.A.W. Celanese had five hits, including a double and single by Clay Buchanan. Ivan Langley, Jason Johnson and Bryan Sims each had a single.

Winborne and Moore pitched two innings apiece for O.C.A.W.

O.C.A.W. was the third-ranked team in the National League going into the tournament.

Rotary took advantage of errors to hand Dyer's Barbeque their first loss of the tournament 8-7.

Winning pitcher was Jason Brantley, who also had a double and single at the plate. Brantley turned his base hit into an inside-the-park homer due to Dyer's errors.

Garrett Scribner had two singles for Rotary while Joey Mendoza, Cameron Black and Dave Davis each had singles.

Scotty Johnson had three hits to lead Dyer's while Duane Nickleberry had a double and single, Clarence Reed, a double and single; Ross Johnson and Shawn Hays, one double each, and Micah Brooks, a single.

Matthew Clark was the losing pitcher.

Dyer's plays the winner of the O.C.A.W.-Dean's game at 7 p.m. Wednesday night.

The championship finals are scheduled for 7 p.m. Friday night.

District 13 tourney to be held in Pampa

Pampa will host the District 13-year-old baseball tournament this year, beginning July 14 at Optimist Park. The championship game will be played at 6 p.m. July 18 and a second game, if needed, will be played the same night.

Pampa coaches are Derrick Eldridge, Joe Mechelay and Nelson Medley.

Players named to the Pampa all-star team were Larry Reed, Brandon Wells, Erwin Frye, Zach Thomas, Jessie Hernandez, Ryan Erwin, Joe Yurich, Phillip Sexton, Donnie Medley, Monty Waters, Brent Skaggs, Jade Brown and Chuck Falls.

Pampa's first tournament is July 14, starting at 8:30 p.m. They play Top Of Texas. The first game of the tournament is between Randall County and Dalhart, starting at 6:30 p.m. July 14.

The winner advances to the regional tournament.

USFL founder plans to form new league

By RICK WARNER
AP Sports Writer

NEW YORK (AP)—The founder of the United States Football League is trying to start a new spring football league that would permit the drafting of high school seniors.

David Dixon, who left the USFL shortly after it began play in 1983, said each team in the American Football Federation would be allowed to sign a limited number of high school players each year.

"If you ask any coach or trainer or doctor when a player reaches his physical peak, they'll say about 20 years old," Dixon said Monday. "He may be smarter at 25, but he's not better physically."

Dixon said the league would hire special tutors to help the young players continue their education while playing professional football.

"They'll take real courses, too, not basket weaving and theory of volleyball and those other junk courses that so many athletes take in college," he said.

To be eligible for the National Football League draft, a player must either graduate from college or wait for his college class to graduate. Major league baseball and the National Basketball Association both permit the drafting of high school seniors.

Dixon said the AFF hopes to start play with 10 teams in 1988, but must obtain a television contract first.

"We have the owners and we have the cities," Dixon said in a telephone interview from New Orleans, where he is an art and antiques dealer. "It's really just a question of television."

Dixon said he has submitted a proposal to the Fox Broadcasting Co. under which the network would pay $10 million to televise 20 regular-season games in prime time from late February through June.

"We feel Fox is our natural ally," he said. "They need programming and we need a network."

Brad Turell, a Fox spokesman in Los Angeles, said the company had no comment on the matter.

Fox, a fledgling network owned by communications magnate Rupert Murdoch, tried last winter to obtain the rights to a special package of NFL games.

Dozier signs contract with Minnesota Vikings

By DAVE GOLDBERG
AP Football Writer

Despite the signing of D.J. Dozier by the Minnesota Vikings, it's unlikely that many more top NFL draft choices will reach agreement until training camps open later this month.

Dozier, the Penn State running back who signed Sunday night, was just the second of 28 first-round picks to reach agreement. That led Minnesota General Manager Mike Lynn to predict: "I think you'll see a lot of picks signing in the next week to 10 days."

But Lynn's opinion is the exception among the participants in the three-way negotiations game involving teams, agents and the NFL Players Association. Minnesota is seen as traditionally falling outside what has been a relatively orderly game of falling dominoes, in which the signing of the sixth pick leads to the signing of the seventh and so on.

"The Vikings are traditionally the lowest-paying team for rookies in the NFL," Leigh Steinberg, who represents three first-rounders, said. "Mike Lynn may think this breaks the logjam, but their log has traditionally grown alone, separated from the NFL forest."

"What Mike Lynn does isn't necessarily what other teams do," George Young, general manager of the New York Giants, said. "The Vikings have usually gone their own way."

One reason for the delay in signings is that negotiations are now a form of collective bargaining with continual consultation between agents and the NFLPA. Because the union is too short-staffed to handle all the negotiations, one agent has been designated for each of the 28 teams to clear offers from that team to the players.

"We're negotiating as a league now," Young says. "We're not negotiating individually with a player. The players don't understand that's what going on for them depends on everybody else."

The result is that with two weeks until the opening of training camps, NFLPA figures show just 19 of the 335 drafted players are signed.

Five of those are 12th rounders and just four were picked in the first five rounds.

New players give Giants a lift

NL roundup

By The Associated Press

Trading places has done wonders for Dave Dravecky, Craig Lefferts and Kevin Mitchell.

Dravecky won his first start with San Francisco as the Giants beat Pittsburgh 7-5 in the first game of a two-night doubleheader Monday. The Giants completed the sweep with a 7-4 victory in the nightcap with Lefferts picking up the save.

Dravecky was considered by Giants Manager Roger Craig the key player in Saturday night's seven-player trade with San Diego.

In an unusual intradivision deal, the Giants sent former All-Star third baseman Chris Brown to the Padres along with pitchers Mark Davis, Keith Comstock and Mark Grant.

Mitchell hit two homers Sunday to help the Giants beat Chicago 7-5 and Monday night Dravecky and Lefferts did their part. Instead of being with a team in last place and 17½ games out, the trade has Dravecky, Lefferts and Mitchell on a third-place team, four games out in the National League West.

"Those are the guys we wanted," Craig said. "We got one of the best pitchers in baseball in Dravecky and a guy who can pitch every day. Mitchell is very versatile. He can play third, the outfield and shortstop. He played 24 games at shortstop for the World Champions (New York Mets) last year."

Dravecky, 4-7, allowed two hits in five innings, but was lifted in the sixth after failing to retire any of the five batters he faced.

"Naturally, I wanted to pitch well," Dravecky said. "I usually have butterflies when I pitch, but these were even bigger butterflies tonight. I think I'm improved 12 games in the standings coming over here... and I'm happy I was traded to a team that has a chance to win it."

Elsewhere, Chicago blanked San Diego 7-0; Philadelphia outlasted Cincinnati 9-6 and Houston beat Montreal 9-3. New York at Atlanta and Los Angeles at St. Louis were postponed because of rain.

After Mike Diaz hit a three-run homer, Jeff Robinson bailed Dravecky out of a two-on, none-out jam. Scott Garrelts came on for the final 1 1-3 innings and earned his 11th save. The game was delayed by rain for 45 minutes after 8½ innings.

"He (Dravecky) wanted to make a big first impression and he did," Craig said. "I liked what I saw. So far, it's been a heck of a deal for us. Lefferts has pitched in all three games and gotten everybody out and (third baseman) Kevin Mitchell is hitting the ball well."

In the second game, Eddie Milner doubled to start the Giants' fourth and scored when starter Doug Drabek, 1-8, threw the ball into left-center field attempting a pickoff at second base.

Pitcher Mike LaCoss walked and Milner singled in the sixth before Mike Aldrete hit his second homer of the season for a 4-0 lead.

LaCoss, 7-5, added a two-run single and Milner had an RBI single during the Giants' three-run seventh.

Astros 9, Expos 3

Danny Darwin pitched five-hit ball for eight innings and Alan Ashby hit a two-run homer as Houston knocked Montreal starter Dennis Martinez out after 21-3 innings.

Martinez, who entered the game at 3-0 with a 2.86 earned run average, allowed six runs on seven hits.

With the score tied 2-2, Ashby led off the second with a single, moved to second on Billy Hatcher's single and scored on Bill Dorar's double.

Houston made it 6-2 in the third on an RBI double by Jose Cruz and Ashby's eighth homer of the season.

Thon's vision problems may end promising career

HOUSTON (AP)—A little more than three years ago, Houston Astros shortstop Dickie Thon seemed destined for All-Star appearances, baseball honors and the adulation of many fans.

But vision problems dogged him after he suffered a beaming accident in April 1984 and have finally forced Thon to leave the team he cared for so much.

"I feel sad because I wish I could have done more for the team," Thon said Monday at a news conference at the Astrodome. "I feel a lot for this team. I feel I'll always be one of them."

Thon left the team Friday in Philadelphia and returned to Houston because of his recurring vision problems. On Monday, he said he was not ready to say he was retiring but added he doubted he would ever play for the Astros again.

Thon said he wanted to continue his vision therapy program and hoped it would one day improve his vision enough so he could return to the major leagues.

He said he thinks he has the ability to play — a belief supported by his past record.

Thon took over as the Astros regular shortstop in 1982 and put together the third longest hitting streak in the club's history — 21 games — from July 24 to Aug. 14. In 1983, he batted .286 with 20 homers, 79 RBI and 34 stolen bases.

He was considered one of the top, young shortstops in the major leagues before he was hit by a pitch from the Mets Mike Torrez in 1984.

Thon said he has thought about that day many times. Since then, he said he has had trouble seeing the ball and has faced the possibility of getting hurt again.

"I realize I have a threat playing that way. That's why I'm stepping out right now," he said.

Since his injury, Thon has left the team several times including earlier this year during spring training. In 32 games this year, Thon was hitting .212 with one homer and three RBIs.

Although he doesn't know what is going to happen to his baseball career, the 29-year-old Thon added, "I don't want to say I'm going to retire."

Thon, whose contract expires at the end of the season, was placed on the disqualified list and the Astros recalled Bert Pena from Tucson, Ariz., to take his place.

He said he talked to Astros General Manager Dick Wagner on Monday about his decision to leave the team, but team spokesman Chuck Pool said he did not have a statement from Wagner about the meeting.

When asked if he thought he would return to the Astros, Thon replied, "I don't think so. The way (Wagner) has been dealing with my situation, I won't be around here anymore."

Field at home as a coach

By JIM LEXA
Amarillo Globe-News

AMARILLO, Texas (AP) — Twenty-three seasons ago, Bobby Field was riddling Texas high school secondaries as a quarterback for the Farwell Steers.

Eighteen seasons ago, Bobby Field was befuddling college quarterbacks as a starter in the defensive backfield at the University of Arkansas.

Now, Bob Field is preparing for his ninth season as an assistant coach at UCLA. After beginning at UCLA as the outside linebackers coach, Field also wears the title of co-defensive coordinator.

Field, a three-year regular at Arkansas from 1968-70, intercepted eight passes in his career as the Razorbacks went 28-5, including a 16-2 Sugar Bowl win over Georgia following the 1968 season.

Field has appeared in 12 bowl games as a player or coach, including last season's Freedom Bowl win over Brigham Young.

But one of the games he probably will never forget was a 15-14 loss to the University of Texas on Dec. 6, 1969 — popularly known as the Big Shootout, which President Nixon called the national championship game.

"That game probably sticks out in my mind more than any other game because we were playing for the national championship," said the 38-year-old Field, who is married and has three sons.

"At that time, one of the polls named the national champion at the end of the regular season and one of them waited until the bowl games were over, as I remember. We knew immediately following the game that Texas or Arkansas would be named the national champion by at least one of the polls."

Both teams entered the game unbeaten after nine games, with Texas ranked No. 1 and Arkansas No. 2. Field felt sure that when Arkansas led 14-0 after three quarters, the Razorbacks had shot down Texas and the Longhorns' 18-game winning streak.

But UT's James Street pulled out some fourth-quarter heroics — a 42-yard touchdown run and a pivotal fourth-and-three, 44-yard pass completion to set up the winning touchdown.

"That was probably the thing that made it so hard," Field said. "In fact, going into the fourth quarter we were leading 14-0 and had really played an outstanding game. And to lose it the way we did — it was obviously very disappointing. But there's more to life than the game of football."

Field, who stood 5-11 and weighed 175 in college, said that if he played under the present-day restrictions on scholarships, he might never have made the Arkansas team. In the 1960s, the NCAA had not yet imposed the limit of 95 scholarships per team.

Farwell is a small town on the Texas-New Mexico border, about 100 miles southwest of Amarillo.

"My freshman year, they (Razorbacks) signed six or seven quarterbacks," Field said. "At that time Arkansas, and probably a lot of other schools, tended to sign a lot more quarterbacks than they obviously were going to need. It was the thought of moving them to other positions. Of all of the quarterbacks they signed that year, we all moved to other positions except for Bill Montgomery (a Carrollton Turner prep star who would become a three-year Arkansas starter).

"Maybe for a week or so, they let us all throw a few passes so we wouldn't go into shock. It was pretty well determined before I went there that I would play defensive back. And quite honestly, once I got there and saw how many players there were and the quality of the athletes, I figured I'd better jump at any opportunity they gave me at any position."

Royals' win streak ends

AL roundup

By BILL BARNARD
AP Sports Writer

The Cleveland Indians, outscored 117-42 while losing 12 of their previous 14 games, needed a poor performance by an opposing pitcher to give them a chance to win.

They got it from an unlikely source — Bret Saberhagen.

The Kansas City right-hander took a 14-2 record and a 2.22 earned run average into Monday night's game against the Indians. But he allowed 10 hits and seven runs in seven innings as Cleveland snapped the Royals' six-game winning streak with a 9-7 victory.

"Cleveland's not going that well. Fortunately they were playing against a lousy pitcher," Saberhagen said. "With anybody else pitching adequately we win that ball game hands down. I was lousy."

With Kansas City leading 6-5, Saberhagen allowed two hits to open the eighth inning and was replaced by Steve Farr. A stolen base and an intentional walk loaded the bases for Cory Snyder, who earlier in the game hit a two-run homer.

Snyder connected again, for his 16th homer and second grand slam of the season, giving the Indians a 9-6 lead.

In other American League games, it was Baltimore 4, Chicago 1; Toronto 6, Texas 4; Minnesota 2, New York 0; Oakland 5, Detroit 3; Seattle 3, Milwaukee 2; and California 10, Boston 7 in 12 innings.

Twins 2, Yankees 0

Minnesota moved back into first place in the West when Tom Brunansky and Kent Hrbek homered and Frank Viola pitched a five-hitter.

Loser Ron Guidry, 1-4, gave up Brunansky's 17th home run in the first and Hrbek's 23rd homer in the seventh and finished with a three-hitter and the Yankees' first complete game since May 10. Hrbek has 20 homers in his last 44 games.

Viola, 7-6, pitched his first shutout of the season and fourth complete game.

The Twins' fourth straight victory, combined with Kansas City's loss, moved Minnesota into first place by one game.

Blue Jays 6, Rangers 4

Toronto snapped an eight-game losing streak as George Bell and Ernie Whitt hit consecutive homers in the third inning and Jimmy Key pitched a six-hitter for seven innings.

Key, 9-5, gave up Pete Incaviglia's 17th homer, in the second, but the left-hander gave up only two other hits until the eighth, when Texas scored three runs to narrow a 6-1 deficit.

Toronto scored four runs off Charlie Hough, 9-4, in the second when Fred McGriff, Garth Iorg and Tony Fernandez had RBI singles and Kelly Gruber had a sacrifice fly. Bell's 28th homer and Whitt's sixth made it 6-1 in the third.

Orioles 4, White Sox 1

Baltimore, which had lost 30 of 35 games and seven straight, got seven strong innings from Mike Griffin, who got his first major-league victory since 1981.

Griffin, 1-2, allowed five hits while making his third start for the Orioles after four years in the minors. Mark Williamson pitched the final two innings for his third save.

Eddie Murray hit his second homer in two games and Alan Wiggins drove in the go-ahead run. Wiggins' hit was one of only three off loser Jose DeLeon, 5-8, in 6 1-3 innings as Baltimore ended Chicago's three-game winning streak.

Angels 10, Red Sox 7

California, trailing 7-0 after six innings, scored four runs in the seventh and three in the eighth before Jack Howell finally won it with a three-run homer in the 12th.

Brian Downing led off the 12th with a double off Wes Gardner, 0-4, the ninth consecutive time he reached base in the last two games. With one out, Wally Joyner was walked intentionally, and upended shortstop Ed Romero to break up a potential inning-ending double play grounder by Doug DeCinces, setting the stage for Howell's 13th homer.

Doug DeCinces and Mark Ryal hit two-run homers to highlight the Angels' surge in the seventh and eighth.

Jim Rice hit a three-run homer and Dwight Evans added a pair of solo homers to help Boston's Roger Clemens to a 7-0 lead after six innings. Clemens led the New York Yankees 9-0 on June 26 before the Red Sox lost that game 12-11 in 10 innings.

Athletics 5, Tigers 3

Oakland rallied from a 3-0 deficit with Tony Phillips' two-out, two-run double breaking a 3-3 tie in the eighth inning.

Detroit reliever Eric King, 3-7, retired the first two batters in the eighth, but singles to Terry Steinbach and Carney Lansford set up Phillips' game-winner.

The Athletics scored three runs in the seventh to tie the score, climaxed by Mike Davis' two-run homer.

Mariners 3, Brewers 2

Seattle won when it found an unlikely power source in Rey Quinones.

Quinones had a two-run homer in the second inning off Bill Wegman, 7-8. It was the eighth homer for Quinones, who hit only two in 98 games last season.

The Brewers tied the score 2-2 in the fifth on RBI singles by Ernest Riles and Robin Yount and the Mariners scored the go-ahead run on a bloop RBI single by Mike Kingery.

Seattle's Mike Morgan, 7-9, worked six innings for the victory.

Astros' Hatcher Major League standings doubtful starter

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston Astros center fielder Billy Hatcher, the club's leading hitter, is probable for today's game against the Montreal Expos after he sprained his right ankle.

Hatcher suffered the injury in Monday's 9-3 Astros victory while running the bases in the second inning.

Hatcher pulled up between second and third bases after second baseman Bill Doran hit a double. After trainer Dave LaBossiere checked out Hatcher, the center fielder stayed on third. He had walked his first time at bat and scored on first baseman Glenn Davis' sacrifice fly to center.

Chuck Jackson replaced Hatcher at center when the third inning started.

"We'll have to wait and see if it swells up overnight," Astros Manager Hal Lanier said. Hatcher left the dressing room on crutches.

IS IT FAIR TO TAX YOUR INSURANCE POLICIES?

The Texas Legislature is now debating a 6% sales tax on your personal and business insurance. An attempt is being made to pass this law overnight before you can act.

$1.8 billion sales tax on insurance policies

A sales tax bill currently under consideration in the special legislative session in Austin would raise your insurance costs by 6%. This would include insurance policies on your home, your car, your property, your business, your life and health insurance and more.

HERE ARE THE FACTS:

1. Texas would be the only state in the nation with a SALES TAX on insurance policies to be paid by YOU.

2. Insurance premiums are already taxed and a sales tax would be DOUBLE TAXATION.

3. This will be a MANDATORY TAX (most of us have to pay car insurance, liability, homeowner insurance, health and workers compensation insurance).

If you feel this PERSONAL, MANDATORY TAX is UNFAIR then call your state senator, then call Governor Clements. Do it now.

They are debating this very minute in Austin! It is not too late. You can stop this DOUBLE TAXATION. You can stop state government from unfairly taxing you for protecting your family and property.

Can you afford not to call?

CALL YOUR STATE SENATOR TODAY!

Governor Bill Clements 512/463/2000
