Iraq declares 'war of cities'

Revenge vowed for deaths of Iraqi children at school

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — An Iranian gunboat raked a Liberian-registered tanker with machine-gun fire early today in Iran's second attack in three days on commercial vessels in the Persian Gulf, salvage executives said.

Iraq, meanwhile, renewed a pledge to punish Iran for a missile attack that killed more than two dozen schoolchildren and injured scores of others in the Iraqi capital.

The marine salvage executives, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the 84,631-ton Atlantic Peace was attacked off the southern gulf port of Dubai, in the same area where the Saudi Arabian tanker Petroship B was sprayed with machine-gun fire Monday.

The executives quoted the captain as saying damage to the Atlantic Peace was minor and there were no injuries.

They said both the Saudi and the Liberian tankers appear to have been attacked by an Iranian warship spotted in the area.

Today's attack occurred at 12:55 a.m. local time, according to Lloyd's Shipping Intelligence Unit in London.

The Atlantic Peace, owned by the Hong Kong-based Island Navigation Corp., was sailing from Singapore to Kuwait.

Iran has said it will attack vessels in the waterway as long as Iraq, its enemy in the 7-year-old Persian Gulf war, continues to strike Iranian oil targets.

The official Iraqi News Agency said today that eight civilians were killed and 36 wounded in Iranian shelling of Basra, Iraq's second largest city, and four other towns close to the border.

The agency, monitored in Cyprus, noted that the shelling followed Tuesday's missile attack on Baghdad and said it proved "they want it a war of cities. So it shall be."

Iraqi officials said 32 people were killed and 218 wounded by an Iranian missile that demolished a school and 16 other buildings Tuesday in a residential area of Baghdad, the capital. Twenty-nine of the dead were children, the official reports said.

"It is time to punish these blood-thirsty murderers," Iraq's government-owned Al-Thawra newspaper wrote in an editorial today.

Four long-range missiles have hit the city of 4 million people since Oct. 4, but this was the first major casualty toll reported.

In London, meanwhile, the British Defense Ministry said Tuesday that the mine hunter HMS Brecon found two mines off the United Arab Emirates coast in the Gulf of Oman, just south of the Strait of Hormuz that leads into the Persian Gulf. The area was a busy anchorage until last summer, when a U.S.-operated supertanker hit a mine.

Iran is widely accused of sowing the explosives.

The United States, Britain, Italy, France and other countries have sent navy ships to the gulf to sweep for mines and protect commercial vessels in the oil shipping lanes.

A convoy of reflagged Kuwaiti vessels was in Kuwait today to take on fuel, following a 550-mile journey through the gulf. The Reagan administration agreed last summer to reflag 11 Kuwaiti tankers and protect them against attack by Iran, which accuses Kuwait of aiding Iraq.

A Kuwaiti newspaper reported Tuesday that China had agreed to reflag Kuwaiti oil tankers and send military vessels to protect them.

The daily Al-Seyassah quoted unidentified sources as saying the agreement would be officially announced shortly.

Britain also has reflagged Kuwaiti tankers, while the Soviet Union has leased three vessels to the Arab state.

Italian Premier Giovanni Goria said Tuesday that Italy would not withdraw its warships from the gulf as demanded by pro-Iranian Kurds who said they were holding three missing Italian engineers.

Last month, Italy sent three mine sweepers, three frigates and two support ships to the gulf after an Italian container ship was attacked by what Italy said was an Iranian speedboat.

Murder trial gets under way

By PAUL PINKHAM
Senior Staff Writer

Jury selection began this morning in the murder trial of George Rodriguez, 17, charged with the March 2 stabbing death of 22-year-old Jaime Garza Barrientes of Pampa.

The trial began before 31st District Judge Grainger McIlhenny without a key witness — the fatal knife attack's lone survivor, Noe Pedraza Barajas, who authorities believe has left the country.

Rodriguez's court-appointed attorney, David Holt of Pampa, had subpoenaed Barajas, 21, to testify, but Gray County Sheriff Rufe Jordan returned the subpoena unexecuted because, he said, Barajas now lives in Mexico.

"I'd be very surprised if he testifies," Holt said Tuesday. Holt indicated in an opening statement today that his client would raise the prospect of self-defense in the fatal stabbing.

In his opening statement to prospective jurors, Assistant District Attorney Harold Comer challenged the self-defense claim.

"No aggressive move had been made toward the defendant, Rodriguez," Comer said.

Barrientes and Barajas had answered a nighttime call for help from Lavena Lockstead, who claimed she saw a peeping tom staring through her apartment's bedroom window at 412 N. Somerville St.

Barrientes lived in the small apartment complex, while Barajas lived at 1144 Neel Road.

When the two men confronted the reported peeper outside the row of apartments, he stabbed Barrientes once in the abdomen, then repeatedly stabbed Barajas, witnesses told police. The two injured men staggered a block to a friend's duplex on North Frost Street.

Barajas, believed to be the more seriously injured of the two, was taken immediately to Coronado Hospital. He survived after later undergoing emergency heart surgery at St. Anthony's Hospital in Amarillo.

Barrientes waited 20 to 30 minutes for an ambulance, and died en route to Coronado. See MURDER, Page 2

City cuts utility rates for apartment owners

By LARRY HOLLIS
News Editor

Apartment owners Tuesday night won the first round toward reductions in city garbage, sewer and water utility fees, despite objections by one citizen and a negative vote by one commissioner.

The commission passed on first readings ordinances placing apartment complexes under commercial service status for solid waste collection and for sewer and water rates.

Commissioner Clyde Carruth cast the lone against all three ordinances, expressing concerns that similar breaks should also be given to residential properties inhabited by only one or two persons.

Generally, the ordinances eliminate a per-unit charge that had been added to rates for apartment complexes under revised ordinances that went into effect earlier this year.

The amended ordinances were the result of complaints raised last month by apartment owners who said the previously revised rates were creating excessive charges for apartment complexes. They specifically objected to the per-unit charges, noting the charge had to be paid even if a unit was not occupied.

Ron Hendrick, representing a local apartment owners association, said the new rates were equitable. But he expressed reservations about the garbage collection amendment, saying he wished there were more specifics about the determination of the number of dumpsters for the complexes and related charges.

Commissioner Richard Peet said he understood the concern. But he suggested those specifics could be worked out with the city staff without having to give the specifics in an ordinance.

Objecting to the amendments was William Campaigne, who had previously urged the passing of the per-unit charge in apartment rates. Campaigne renewed his argument that apartment dwellers should be paying the same rates as residential dwellers.

"The system should be paid evenly by all using it," he stated.

But D.P. Williams argued that, according to a survey, most apartments are occupied by an average of only 1.2 persons, while residential homes have an average of 3.2 persons living in them. Yet the current ordinances are "asking us to pay the same," he said.

Williams said apartments, with fewer people living in each unit, use less water, especially when there also is less grass to water compared to most residential homes.

Campaigne agreed there is less water used for yards, but added that apartment dwellers "flush just about as much as anyone else."

Commissioner Joe Reed noted that many apartment complexes are served by only one meter, resulting in less fixed asset costs on a per-unit basis.

Carruth said he can understand the disadvantages of apartment owners not having full occupancy all the time in their complexes. But, he said, there are also many homes with only one or two occupants. He suggested they also probably could benefit from a lower rate.

"I just like to be fair to everybody," Carruth stated.

Mayor David McDaniel said the main question seems to be whether apartment complexes are in a residential or commercial situation. He said he personally feels they should be considered commercial.

In other matters, the commission awarded a $46,420 bid to Ray Electric Co. of Amarillo for electrical services in scheduled renovation work at the Waste Water Treatment Plant. Commissioner Peet voted against awarding the bid to an out-of-town company, noting that there was only about a $700 difference in a higher bid. See RATES, Page 2

White Deer budget tops $500,000

WHITE DEER — City Council members adopted a $548,844 1987-88 city budget at their regular meeting this week.

The budget is unchanged from last year, City Secretary Paulette Paul said.

The budget will be supported by a tax rate of 56 cents per $100 valuation. The tax rate, approved in July, is the same as the past rate.

Mayor R. W. Standefer estimates the city can collect $120,000 in property taxes plus $2,000 in penalties and interest.

Other chunks of revenue could come from anticipated collection of $190,000 in gas bills and $105,000 in water and sewer bills.

The city expenses are divided into five funds with the largest division being the city's general fund. Standefer figures the city will spend about $187,037 in the general fund, which will include $50,000 in office salaries, $61,837 for street work, $10,000 for legal and audit services, $12,000 for street lights, $10,000 for the volunteer fire department and $6,000 for law enforcement.

1984 Gas well	$32,189
Total —	$61,294
Total expenses —	$548,844

The city is expected to spend $138,963 for its gas fund, with $39,163 of that going to gas line and repair and $45,500 going for salaries and wages. About $108,000 will be spent for the water and sewer fund, with $30,000 of that going for maintenance and repairs and $35,000 for payroll. Another $35,050 will be spent for the trash fund, with $13,000 of that going for payroll and another $13,000 for depreciation. The city will spend $18,000 for the swimming pool with $9,000 going for maintenance and repairs and $5,000 going for payroll.

The city also has $61,294 in debt service expenses.

At the Monday meeting, Standefer presented a breakdown of the city's insurance coverage. The city has budgeted $29,400 for insurance and tax collector bonds. The actual total insurance premiums for general liability, vehicle liability, workers compensation, building and content insurance and tax bonds are $29,154.

In other city business Monday, council members met with Municipal Judge Mary Hart and city Marshal Tam Terry about setting up fees for solicitors' permits for salespeople coming to town. The council authorized the Hart and Terry to meet with City Attorney Marshall Sherwood of Panhandle to set up an ordinance.

Council members also heard reports from Standefer.

County to discuss courthouse plans

By PAUL PINKHAM
Senior Staff Writer

Secret discussions on the future of the Gray County Courthouse — or a new courthouse annex — are slated to continue Thursday when county commissioners meet at 9:30 a.m.

Gray County Judge Carl Kennedy said Tuesday that commissioners will meet in executive session to again discuss "acquisition of real property."

The Texas Open Meetings Law permits elected officials to meet in secret to discuss acquisition of land or property.

Kennedy said he doesn't know if any public announcement on the county's plans will be made following the meeting. He said such an announcement depends on whether commissioners are prepared to make a decision.

Commissioner Ted Simmons confirmed following an Oct. 1 closed-door meeting that commissioners are "looking at several sites" to expand or relocate the courthouse. Simmons said the county has been offered a Pampa building, but added that he couldn't name the location or price because commissioners currently are negotiating with the owner.

Judge Kennedy has said commissioners discussed property that may be used for a county annex. An existing courthouse annex, currently occupied by the county extension service, is on U.S. Highway 60, east of Pampa.

Kennedy has also said the county has no short-term needs for space, and it could be up to six years before an annex is purchased. He said commissioners are discussing the possibilities now because of low prices brought about by the area's depressed economy.

The county currently pays about $10,000 annually to house the district attorney's office in the Hughes Building, and in January will begin paying about $13,000 a year to rent office space across the street from the courthouse for the district adult probation department.

Concerns also have arisen about cramped quarters in the district clerk's office and the County See COUNTY, Page 2

United Way sees happier days to come

When M.K. Brown Auditorium Manager Danny Parkerson and his teen-age Top O' Texas Revue sang "Happy Days are Here Again" at the weekly United Way check-in Tuesday, fund campaigners weren't ready to sing along.

United Way Drive Chairman Duane Harp reported Tuesday that the drive has collected only 18 percent of its total.

"That's not as good as I expected," Harp said after he announced $52,217 in collections so far.

But happy days may come soon for the campaign, when larger contributors make their reports.

"With the exception of the Pampa school district, no major employer has reported yet," Harp said. "So I expect much better figures next week."

Carol Cofer and her special gifts drive took top honors this week as her division tallied $19,544 or 33 percent of its goal. Curt Beck of the professional division was honored as his division tallied $4,030 or 27 percent of its goal. Cofer and Beck received Cub Scout mugs for their efforts.

Other divisions reporting: Commercial, $11,700, or 29 percent of its goal. Public, $8,183. Major firms, $8,450, or 5 percent of its goal.

As Quivira Council Girl Scouts and Brownies served soft drinks and cookies, the Top O' Texas Revue entertained the campaigners with a short variety show. The singing, dancing and lip-synching troupe will have its next performance Sunday afternoon at Canadian Elementary School during that town's Fall Foliage Festival.

There will be a special United Way program Friday during the halftime of the Pampa Harvesters-Lubbock Dunbar football game at Harvesters Field.

Performers for next week's check-in will be the Senior Saints.

County

Jail. Commissioners eased one of those problems Oct. 1, when they approved District Clerk Vickie Walls' request to enlarge her office by moving the county law library to the fourth floor of the courthouse.

In June, commissioners voted to formally "start the ball rolling" toward either renovating the crammed courthouse or building a new one. The county currently has about $4 million in reserve funds earmarked for courthouse and jail expansion. The surplus was left over from the sale of Highland General Hospital.

In other action Thursday, commissioners plan to consider a request for county funds from the Alanreed-McLean Area Museum in McLean.

Commissioners had budgeted $4,000 for the museum in 1987 if federal revenue sharing funds were received, Kennedy said. The federal program was eliminated by Congress, meaning funds weren't received.

The county has budgeted $2,000 for the McLean museum in 1988.

Commissioners also plan to: discuss an investment policy with County Treasurer Scott Hahn, and receive Hahn's monthly treasurer's report;

consider a travel request from Commissioner Simmons; consider again returning surplus property to landowners on the Ranch to Market Road 1474 project; and pay salaries and bills and consider time deposits and transfers recommended by the county auditor.

Rodriguez has been in jail since the incident, unable to post a $15,000 bond set by McIlhany on charges of murder and aggravated assault.

Pampa police officers who investigated the case and about six other witnesses are expected to testify.

Murder

Hospital, reports said.

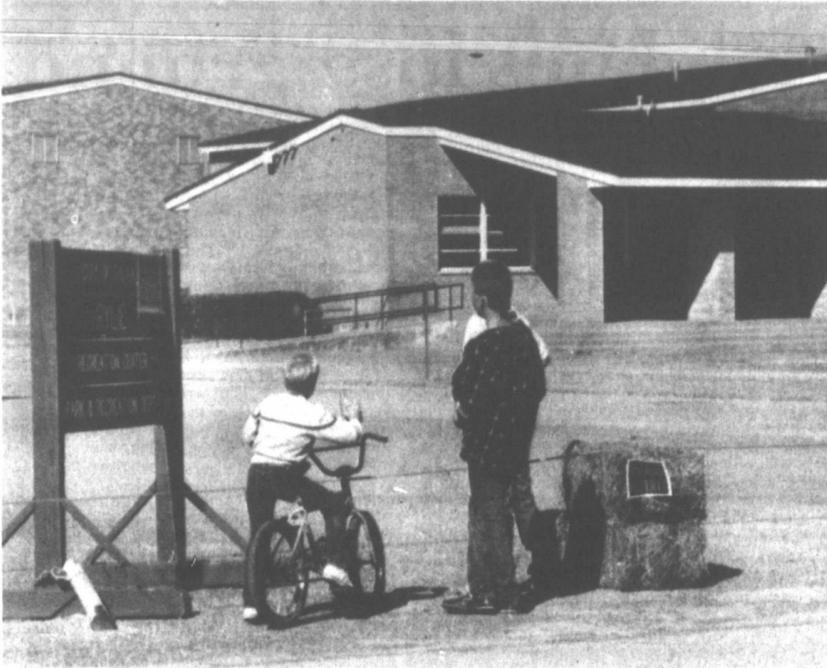

Suspect Rodriguez, who lived at 420 N. Cuyler St., was arrested a short time later at his mother's apartment in the same unit when the stabbings occurred.

Police said that when confronted by officers, Rodriguez held a blood-stained survival knife. He dropped the knife after an officer drew his gun, police said.

Police later identified the 8-inch survival knife as the murder weapon.

Site owner barricades school, wants liability insurance bought

DALLAS (AP) — A man who was granted title to land where an elementary school sits will remove the barricades he set up to stop students if the district provides liability insurance for the site, his attorney said.

Cameron Dee Sewell, who recently was declared owner of the land by the Texas Supreme Court, piled up hay and padlocked the doors of Rylie Elementary School to keep the school district from sending students into the classrooms.

His lawyer said he posted no trespassing signs and erected the barricades to protect himself from financial liability in case children or maintenance workers are injured on the grounds.

The elementary school was used until a week ago while another school was constructed. It has been empty for about a week, but officials wanted to move students to the building next week to relieve crowding at another school, a Dallas Independent School District lawyer says.

When DISD maintenance crews showed up for work over the weekend, however, they found all the barriers, and Deputy Superintendent Otto Fridia said the action has halted plans to transfer the students.

Although the court recently granted Sewell title to the 35 acres on which the school sits, the matter of who owns the school building itself has not been resolved, officials say.

DISD spokesman Rodney Davis said Tuesday that negotiations between attorneys for the district and Sewell were continuing, but the building remained closed.

But Ted Johnson, Sewell's lawyer, said that he and DISD attorneys were close to an agreement for the school system to provide insurance coverage.

"I expect those discussions to continue. It does look good that the district will provide insurance," Johnson said. "That's been Mr. Sewell's contention all along."

He said Sewell, a corporate lawyer and heir to the original owner of the property, will take down the signs and hay bales once the district provides insurance and agrees to operate the facility on the property.

School district attorney Robert Thomas said attorneys were to present some options to school board members at their meeting this week.

DISD officials have made an offer to purchase the land from Sewell, Thomas said. If he refuses the offer, Thomas said, the district will begin the condemnation process, which allows governments to take possession of property after paying the owner fair market value.

Clements says voter support necessary for super collider

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas bid for the "super collider" could fail if voters do not approve the issuance of $500 million in bonds to help lure the project, says Gov. Bill Clements.

But he also said lawmakers approved another $500 million in bonds as a "safety net" to help protect the state's bid for the federal project that could mean billions of dollars for the Texas economy.

The Nov. 3 election ballot includes the proposal that would allow the sale of the bonds to support the Texas bid for the project.

"The important thing to realize here is that everyone must understand that if Proposition 19 fails, we probably will not get the project. The project will actually hinge on the passage of Proposition 19," Clements said at a Tuesday news conference.

Lawmakers approved the issuance of $500 million in revenue bonds in connection with the project.

With voter approval, an additional $500 million in general obligation bonds, which carry a lower interest rate, would be sold to raise money for the super collider.

No bonds would be issued if Texas does not get the project that has attracted bids from 25 states.

Clements said it is possible that the $500 million in general obligation bonds and the $500 million in revenue bonds will both be issued, if voters approve the general obligation bonds.

Peter Flawn, chairman of the site selection committee for Texas, said it might take both kinds of bonds to attract the project.

"I think with a billion dollars in bonding capacity to put on the table to work with the (U.S.) Department of Energy, we stand an excellent chance of winning this thing. With $500 million I think our chances are significantly reduced," Flawn said.

Four Texas sites — Amarillo, Hudspeth County, Midland-Odessa and Waxahachie — have been forwarded by Texas to federal officials.

The super collider would use a 52-mile underground tunnel to smash atoms.

"The super collider would not only become essential to advanced experiments but be a vital element in teaching tomorrow's scientists, educators and leaders," Clements said.

Jack Blanton, chairman of the pro-super collider fund-raising drive, said, "The only consequential opposition that we have is a lack of understanding of the constitutional amendment" on the ballot.

Meanwhile, Tuesday, the Texas Libertarian Party continued its push against Proposition 19.

"The exorbitant cost of the super collider will siphon money from the needs of higher education. It will devour the available funding for education and research, leaving little for basics like textbooks, desks, buildings and salaries," said Gary Johnson, the party's Texas secretary.

"This ... project will help, at most, a few professors and graduate students in physics," he said.

But William Cunningham, president of the University of Texas at Austin, and Frank Vandiver, president of Texas A&M, said Tuesday the project would be a great help to all phases of higher education.

Weighty law matters threaten building

HOUSTON (AP) — Justice could come crashing down if more files are crammed into a near buckling store room in the Civil Courts Building, say Harris County engineers.

Structural analysis showed the store room floors could literally break under the weight of added files where tons of paperwork from more than a half-million civil cases is now stored.

Harris County District Clerk Ray Hardy proposed last January consolidating files from five courts in the room. A county engineer said that adding more files could compromise the ability of the floors to hold, although there is no danger now.

Rooms of files fill floors, closets and cubbyholes in the six-story courthouse built in 1915.

"There are 25 courts, and for each, maybe 25 locations for files," said Hardy, who would like a centralized storage area on the courthouse first floor.

"It's a zoo trying to keep up with it," he said. "Something's got to give. I hope it's not the roof."

County Building Superintendent J.E. McCain said Hardy's desired quarters have already been designated for Court Clerk Anita Rodeheaver, whose fourth-floor files also have presented structural problems.

Hardy is asking for a motorized transport system that would move files between various courts and he also wants increased staffing to put records on microfilm.

Governor flies off to France today

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Bill Clements flies to France today to commemorate that nation's historic ties to Texas and to try to forge a new trade partnership.

"France and Texas have strong common bonds that reach back to the days of the founding of the Republic of Texas. This historical connection can now be placed in the contemporary world of economic opportunity," Clements said Tuesday.

France was the first European nation to recognize Texas as a republic. Officials from France and Texas signed a treaty in 1839. On Thursday, Clements will join French Prime Minister Jacques Chirac in a ceremony at the former site of the Texas Legation in Paris.

At a Tuesday news conference, Clements said the 10-day trip to France and The Netherlands is primarily a trade mission.

"My message will be clear and direct. Texas is open for business and trade. We are eager to expand our trade and commerce with France, a nation that is growing in its investments abroad," he said.

Pascal Maccioni, France's trade commissioner for the South Central United States, said at the news conference that Texas is ripe for French investment.

"The salaries here are very low. The buildings are open for investment. The position of Texas in the United States is certainly one of the best in terms of location. There are skilled people. There are good workers. There is a lot of potential in terms of high technology," he said.

Clements was invited to France by officials there. He said the French will pay a portion of the costs. Clements said no state money would be spent on the trip.

Clements' itinerary includes stops in Paris, Lyon and Dijon. He will meet with French elected and business leaders.

He said he would also try to get the French interested in Texas products.

Wall Street firm says worst days over in Texas' economy

DALLAS (AP) — A Wall Street brokerage firm says the worst is over in Texas and is advising investors to cash in on the state's investment opportunities.

A Salomon Brothers Inc. report says the Texas economy has "bottomed out" after two years of rising unemployment and decaying economic conditions. The firm's analysts also predict Dallas will be the state's first metropolitan area to rebound from the state's economic slump.

"We wanted to make the case that it is now time to seriously consider Texas investments," said Robert Hopkins, an analyst who worked on the report. "Everybody is asking us, 'When is Texas going to turn around?' We feel Texas has bottomed out and that's important for our clients to know."

Unless the national economy takes an unexpected downturn or oil prices tumble again, the state likely will see slow, steady economic growth over the next few years, Hopkins said.

"There is a fundamental, positive attitude that Texas is going to turn around at some point. That's what we tried to answer," Hopkins told the Dallas Morning News. "It's somewhat unique — 15 years ago when New York was in the bottoms, nobody was asking when New York was going to come back."

The report cited J.C. Penney Co.'s pending move from Manhattan to Dallas as an indication that Texas is still viewed as an affordable, attractive state for business.

"Of all the major metropolitan areas in Texas, the broadly diversified Dallas economy is now viewed as a desirable, yet inexpensive business location; thus, it seems the most poised for economic recovery. Office users seeking lower costs with a strong labor pool will find Dallas most attractive," the report said.

Texas lost 194,000 jobs in the last three years, its unemployment rate climbed to 11.1 percent, and office vacancy rates peaked at 30 percent in some urban areas, the report said. Personal income fell to about 10 percent below the national average between 1982 and 1986, it said.

But Salomon Brothers cautioned that real estate and financial areas still show signs of trouble, citing commercial construction as an area where continued declines are probable.

Texas' banking sector, which has lost 10,000 jobs since 1985, could provide further problems for the overall economy, Salomon Brothers' analysts warned.

"The major potential weakness for the state is the financial services sector. Until the portfolios of the lenders in Texas can be cleared of non-performing loans, these job losses will continue," Salomon Brothers said.

Hopkins said the report may again direct attention to the state from national investors who have previously "red-lined" the state against new funding.

"My suspicion is that people in the investment community that really don't know Texas well will say it's time to take a look at Texas again," he said.

Board reviews MHMR settlement

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas would spend $80.6 million to improve mental retardation services under a proposed settlement to a 13-year-old class action suit that state officials described as fair.

The Legislative Budget Board on Tuesday reviewed the Lelsz vs. Kavanagh lawsuit settlement, which has been agreed to by attorneys on both sides and is expected to be signed in Dallas federal court Thursday.

"I think it's a good settlement," said Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby, board chairman. "I think it's probably the best result that could have been achieved."

Gov. Bill Clements, who is not on the board, also said he "signed off" on the proposal.

"It's as fair as you're going to get," said House Speaker Gib Lewis, board vice chairman. However, Lewis said he was concerned about the cost of the proposed settlement.

The court-ordered shifting of the mentally retarded from state to community facilities when possible leaves state schools "with less population, but still with the same amount of overhead, and it's putting a very heavy financial burden on the state at a time that we don't have the money to spare for those extras," Lewis said.

The Department of Mental Health and Mental Retardation estimates that it would cost an extra $17.7 million in fiscal year 1989, $31.7 million in fiscal year 1990 and $31.2 million in fiscal 1991 to comply with the settlement agreement, said Tom Suehs, deputy commissioner for management and support.

The agreement ultimately will increase the staff-to-client ratio by 15 percent over the next three years in state schools, including doctors, nurses and physical therapists, the department said.

The negotiated agreement of the lawsuit over care of the mentally retarded is the second accord in less than two months, MHMR Board Chairman Roger Bateman said. An agreement was signed in September in the RAJ vs. Miller lawsuit over care of the mentally ill.

Total estimated cost of both settlements to the state is $26.2 million for 1988-89 and $78.4 million in 1990-91, Suehs said.

Officials said money could be shifted within the department budget initially, avoiding the need for lawmakers to meet before the 1989 regular session. An emergency appropriation will be required at the beginning of that session, they said.

The agreement on care of the mentally retarded requires the department to begin the process of complying with Accreditation Council on Developmental Disabilities standards at the Austin, Denton, Fort Worth and San Antonio state schools, the department said.

Some parts of the agreement already have been implemented.

Gas company files rate suit

AUSTIN (AP) — Facing delays in charging higher natural gas rates because of a dispute with the city, Southern Union Gas Co. has sued to be allowed to put the new rates into effect.

The suit, filed Tuesday in state district court in Williamson County, alleges that the city of Austin has failed to abide by a settlement reached between the two sides Aug. 20 over the increased rates.

The settlement, which resulted in an ordinance passed by the council, called for the company to receive a revenue increase of $1.6 million a year.

The suit asks the court to enforce the agreement and seeks to prevent the city from interfering with the company in collecting higher rates from its customers to obtain the increased revenues.

The company serves more than 120,000 homes in Central Texas.

EVER STRIVING FOR THE TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Soviet missile test threatened Hawaii

Last week the Soviets test-fired a new missile whose dummy warhead splashed into the Pacific Ocean about 500 miles north of Hawaii, closer to U.S. soil than any previous test. Another missile misfired, but was intended to strike a similar target south of Hawaii, thus "bracketing" the state.

Our State Department then gave its usual limp response. Said spokeswoman Phyllis Oakley: "We made known to the Soviets through diplomatic channels our serious concern about missile tests being conducted so close to U.S. soil." They must be trembling in Moscow about such "serious concern."

Sen. Pete Wilson of California had a more realistic assessment. He called the missile shot "a provocation of the worst kind." Wilson added: "If there had been the slightest miscalculation, then this Soviet test warhead could have landed on a population center in the Hawaiian Islands."

In that case, State probably would have announced something like: "We regret the loss of American lives and property, but detente must continue."

The Soviets could have easily shot the missiles into some less inhabited part of the Pacific Ocean. It's a pretty big drink of water, after all.

Why didn't they? The Kremlin uses an old negotiation tactic familiar to barbarians of all ages: Just before making an agreement, increase the intimidation. With Ronald Reagan and Mikhail Gorbachev about to meet and sign an arms control agreement, we should expect more such attacks.

Last month, the Soviets ambushed two members of the American military liaison mission in East Germany, wounding an Air Force master sergeant. Last week, the Kremlin scared Hawaii. What will it be this week, the 30th anniversary of the Sputnik shot? And what to celebrate the coming 70th anniversary of the 1917 Bolshevik putsch?

Of course, it's partly our fault. The United States never responds properly to such intimidation. Ronald Reagan is as much to blame as his wet-noodle State Department. A proper response would be for Reagan to go on national TV and say: "The Soviets have shown that they can't be trusted. They're just trying to intimidate us. The summit is off. Before I meet with such barbarians, they must first learn some civility. And by the way, I'm increasing testing of the Strategic Defense Initiative, so we can protect against Soviet missile tests that might go off course and kill Americans."

The Soviets missile shot near Hawaii carried multiple warheads, and likely was a successor to the giant SS-18 missile. That means the missile may have been (no one knows for sure yet) one of the new 10-warheads SS-24 missiles, designed to succeed the older SS-18s. So it's possible that the Soviets are once more thumbing their noses at SALT II — even while the Senate is trying to bring the dead thing back to life.

Boring candidates lose ground

WASHINGTON — Only one or two stragglers remain to be led into the starting gate and the presidential field for 1988 will be complete. If this were a real horse race, it would be run at a county fair. None of the candidates has yet shown Derby class.

Looking first at the Democratic field: Tennessee's Sen. Albert Gore is turning out to be more interesting than he had seemed at first. He is separating himself from the other candidates by taking bold positions on defense and foreign policy. No candidate who supports aid to the Contras of Nicaragua is likely to win the Democratic nomination, but such risky positions on Gore's part will win him support in the South.

None of the other Democratic prospects has done much lately. The travails of Gov. Michael Dukakis of Massachusetts will not be long remembered. It transpired that his top campaign aides had tipped off the press to the Biden affair. For some unexplained reason this was thought to be a heinous offense. I am puzzled to know why. Campaign aides have been tipping off the press to the sins of their opponents since the memory of man runneth, not the contrary. The allegations of Biden's plagiarism were true.

The tempest struck me as no big deal, but it disrupted the Dukakis campaign organization. Old Eyebrows will survive the stumble. This was one of those Beltway stories, much cherished by Washington political writers. It has no more importance than the uproar in 1984 over Walter Mondale's firing of Charles Manatt as Democratic national chairman. Does anyone remember that?

Jesse Jackson's formal announcement on Oct. 10 added nothing to his chances of winning the nomination, for his chances are nil. The more Jackson attempts to appeal to a broad white constituency, the more he risks losing the enthusiasm of his core black supporters. For presidential contenders, the second time around is often tougher than the first. The element of novelty is lost. Passions cannot be fervently sustained beyond a certain point. Jackson will win a bundle of convention delegates on Super Tuesday next March, and in Atlanta he will exert some influence on the party platform, as though that mattered, but that's the size of it.

Few observers were surprised by Rep. Pat Schroeder's announcement that she was scratching her candidacy. She is a most attractive prospect, but she fiddled around too long. While she grappled with indecision, other candidates were lining up money and staff. If the gentlewoman wants to try again in 1992, assuming that a Democratic incumbent is not seeking re-election, she would be a candidate to reckon with. Much too much was made of the tears that fell as she withdrew. She is a strong woman, and the occasion was exceptional.

The big question on the Democratic side remains: Will New York's Gov. Mario Cuomo, perceiving the manifest weakness of the Democratic field, change his mind and join the race? He would face the Schroeder problem of a belated entry, after funds and professional staffers have been spoken for, but Cuomo has the stature to overtake the others. Lately he has been traveling like a candidate and making the noises of a statesman. The field is in fact pathetically weak — a bunch of plodders running at an unimpressive pace. Cuomo still has time to meet New Hampshire's filing deadline. Don't count him out.

On the Republican side, we had the formal announcements of Pat Robertson on Oct. 1 and George Bush on Oct. 12. Sen. Bob Dole will announce Nov. 9. That wraps it up. Rep. Jack Kemp formally entered the race last April. Delaware's former Gov. Pete du Pont and former Secretary of State Al Haig are long shots whose only hope is to run no worse than third in Iowa next January.

The Robertson candidacy, like the Jesse Jackson candidacy, is going nowhere — but it is going nowhere in a great cloud of dust. Robertson will do well on Super Tuesday in the 14 Southern border states. He will surprise many observers with a strong showing in Florida, once thought to be overwhelmingly Bush country, but look: We're talking White House. Neither the Republican Party nor the Democratic Party is going to nominate a clergyman who never has held elective office to run for the highest office in the land. No way.

The Iowa caucuses are four months away. Surely we will see a little excitement then, and surely some excitement will be welcome. So far this horse race is moving along at a milk wagon walk.

Judge Bork is 'tough but fair'

These Bork hearings in Washington have so distorted public perception of the issues ...

That one survey after another now shows most Americans are turning "against" the nomination of Judge Robert Bork.

This is a decision that will affect generations. In many respects it is late in the day for our beloved republic. The only way — the only way — it might ever be morning again in the USA requires a Supreme Court willing to stop "experimenting."

Any critic of the Bork nomination appearing before the congressional committee is assured news media coverage.

Those in favor — if quoted at all — are likely to have their statements so edited as to sound innocuous.

Thomas Sowell was hardly quoted at all — yet economist Sowell, before the committee, hit the nail on the head when he said:

"When the law is undermined (by judicial activism) all groups stand to lose. Minorities especially."

He gave us an example the ghetto schools, which are awful partly due to disruptive students. Yet, if you expel more black males from some school than, say, Asian females — in the name of "equal rights" — you invite a court case with the ACLU intervening.

Paul Harvey

He also blamed decades of judicial undermining of law enforcement for a crime rate that is increasing everywhere — but it's worse in the ghettos, which have become "war zones."

Yet, such a voice of reason — with history as his witness — is drowned out by the shrill cries of those who charge that Bork would "turn back the clock." The clock's been getting ahead of itself; it needs some turning back!

As President Reagan has noted, "Nearly one-third of the Supreme Court's docket is devoted to criminal cases. As a judge on one of our nation's most important appellate courts, Judge Bork has unerringly handed down decisions which were tough but fair."

The undecided members of the Senate will be influenced by public opinion polls — however, those polls may be distorted by misled minorities.

Bob Bork does not come through on TV with the magnetic charisma of a Gregory Peck. He is a scholar, not a play actor.

And I do not agree with Judge Bork on everything. You and I do not agree with our own spouses on "everything." But on balance, over a distinguished lifetime of administering justice "by the book," his record, which none can refute, is a record of being "tough but fair."

Anybody who wants more than that does not want justice; he wants to be "teacher's pet."

Book on poverty created a vicious cycle

By Ben Wattenberg

It is just 25 years since the publication of "The Other America," Michael Harrington's seminal book on poverty in America. Looking back, one can sense both the power and the paradox of the volume. It's followed a circular path. It exaggerated a problem. Its exaggeration helped form a movement — the "war on poverty" — that set some remedies in motion. Its continued exaggeration, by author and movement, led to a boomerang bashing of its cause. And now — full circle — it's time to resuscitate the idea, responsibly, and move ahead.

Harrington's 1962 book said that about a third of Americans were poor, that little was being done for them, that they were "immune from progress," that they were "invisible" to the affluent eye.

It was overstated. The rate of poverty from 1949 to 1964 dropped from 33 percent to 18 percent. During the 1950s, social welfare expenditures climbed by 52 percent. (Actually, in an appendix, Harrington said the poverty rate was 20-25 percent, not a third.) This is not statistical nitpicking. There was plenty of poverty, but it was clearly decreasing.

Harrington's book crystallized what was in the air, a willingness to further help the poor. When Lyndon Johnson became president, "war on poverty" was declared. Soon, enormous new sums were allocated. There were "cash" programs, such as additional Social Security, Supplemental Security Income and welfare. There were "non-cash" programs such as food stamps, rent supplements, Medicaid, job training and education grants.

In some important ways, the "war on poverty" has been successful. In 1959, the poverty rate for the elderly was 35 percent. In 1986 it was 12 percent, or somewhere between 3 percent and 8 percent if you count in (properly) the "non-cash" benefits. Poverty among married-couple families has declined from 19 percent in 1959 to 7 percent in 1986, or 5 percent, counting "non-cash."

Yet, while poverty was diminishing, Harrington and the poverty warriors neither acknowledged nor saluted progress. They apparently thought poor-mouthing would keep the heat on America's conscience. The strategy boomeranged. It let Ronald Reagan and conservatives agree that poverty warfare wasn't working, highlight those parts that were legitimately flawed, and make an easy case that a war on poverty was "throwing money down a rat hole."

Well, that was then. Now is now. It's clear today that the parts of the poverty puzzle that were dealt with successfully were the easiest to handle. More cash worked for most of the elderly. Some programs and, mostly, a healthy economy worked for most of those in poverty who had a solid family.

Now, because of rising divorce and out-of-wedlock births, the biggest part of the poverty population is composed of "female-headed households." That sounds neat and statistical. It shouldn't. We're talking mostly about poor kids. It's our No. 1 social problem. More than a fifth of American kids are now in poverty! One-third of our children will be in poverty at some point before their 18th birthday!

This is crazy. The poor kids didn't create their condition. We do not serve anyone's cause by bringing up a generation of economically scarred children. Moreover, the current situation makes it less attractive for young couples to have children, yielding other problems that come with very low fertility rates.

Can we help? Sure. Start by saying that the way poor kids become non-poor kids is by getting money. By changing the tax code, this can be done in a manner pleasing to liberals, conservatives, pro-family activists, feminists and pro-natalists. Such a plan could yield one more partial victory in our ongoing, semi-successful war on poverty, one more dent in the overstated, but real, problem of the poor people who inhabit that other America.

Romanians spied on Texas Instruments, defector says

WASHINGTON (AP) — Romanian spies acting on behalf of the Soviet Union stole secrets needed to make a spacecraft alloy and later stole sophisticated U.S. computer plans from Texas Instruments, a Romanian defector says.

Former Romanian spy master Ion Mihai Pacepa made the disclosures Tuesday during his first meeting with reporters since he defected in 1978.

He said Romanian agents stole the spacecraft alloy technology in the 1960s and the material is still used in the Soviet space program. He characterized the theft as the most important espionage coup during his 27-year tenure with Romanian intelligence.

"We just stumbled onto that one in the 1960s," he said.

He also said that in 1978, Soviet leader Leonid Brezhnev and KGB chief Yuri Andropov personally asked Romanian President Nicolae Ceausescu to have his agents infiltrate Texas Instruments to obtain computer microchip secrets.

A Romanian agent eventually was able to photograph the microchip plans, which had been left on the wall of the London office of a Texas Instruments licensee, he said.

Pacepa said "surveillance was complete" on U.S. diplomats and journalists in Romania, their conversations were taped and many of their actions were videotaped.

He said Romanian agents bugged the homes of U.S. diplomats in Bucharest but did not plant microphones in the American Embassy there for fear of damaging ties with Washington.

"Planting microphones in major Western embassies was done only at the order of the head of state, throughout the Soviet bloc," he said.

The 59-year-old Pacepa has assumed a new identity and is living at an undisclosed location with his American-born wife. He wore a wig during his luncheon meeting with a small group of journalists, and refused to allow his voice to be taped.

He said he feared retribution from Ceausescu, of whom he is fiercely critical in his book, Red Horizons: Chronicles of a Communist Spy Chief, to be released this month.

Among the other disclosures from his career in DIE, the "Departamentul de Informatii Externe," which runs Romanian intelligence abroad:

- ★ Ceausescu agreed in 1975 with Yasser Arafat, chairman of the Palestine Liberation Organization, to collect intelligence that could be used to compromise Jordan's King Hussein.
- ★ Libyan leader Col. Moammar Ghaddafi funded a joint project with Ceausescu to build a mock-up of the West German Leopard tank, using technology obtained secretly from the West.

- ★ Romania, with the help of Bulgarian intelligence and French drug smugglers, exported and sold cocaine confiscated from drug traffickers. The profits were used to service Romania's foreign debt.

Pacepa said the residence of the American ambassador and the apartments of most U.S. diplomats in Bucharest were bugged with temporary devices, fed through tiny plastic pipes from adjacent houses, so that the microphones were just beneath the walls of the targeted rooms.

The U.S. Embassy office building stands in a garden, with no adjacent structures, and could not be bugged with the technology that Romanian intelligence used, he said.

Pacepa said that, as far as he knew, the Soviet KGB did not bug the embassy but that "what was impossible for Romania was possible for the Soviet Union."

Teams of U.S. technicians regularly visit Soviet bloc countries to sweep American diplomatic offices and residences for listening devices. Pacepa said their names were known, and their specialized equipment could be spotted coming into the country.

"At the first sign that someone, a group of specialists, was looking for it, it would be withdrawn," Pacepa said of the temporary bugging equipment.

Pacepa's revelations are interesting in light of U.S. charges that the Soviet KGB has so riddled the new American embassy building in Moscow with bugs that it cannot be used.

"Those aren't microphones, they are cavities" which can be used to relay data to collection points outside the embassy, he said.

Discussing the microchip case, Pacepa said Brezhnev and Andropov took Ceausescu to an underground electronics plant near Moscow in 1978 and told him, "we want to penetrate Texas Instruments."

The Romanian president had the company's plant in Dallas placed on the itinerary of his 1978 state visit to the United States.

But, said Pacepa, "Texas Instruments was really careful. ... He hardly was able to shake hands with anyone," and his path through the factory was lined with partitions which blocked his view.

Ceausescu signed an agreement to buy geologic instruments from Texas Instruments, however. And later, a Romanian agent was able to photograph the microchip plans in London. The plans were given to the KGB and used to fabricate microchips at the underground facility near Moscow, said Pacepa.

Gunmen kill 5 in auto body shop

PASCO, Wash. (AP) — Two gunmen burst into an auto body shop and opened fire, killing five men and wounding a sixth, police said.

The victims were working on an old car inside the shop on the city's east side Tuesday night when the two men entered, looked around and went back outside, said Police Chief Don Francis.

The pair returned with automatic weapons and opened fire, Francis said.

Two men were questioned and later released, police said.

Four victims died at the scene. One was taken to Our Lady of Lourdes hospital, where he died, a nursing supervisor said.

A 20-year-old local man was wounded in the side, but managed to hide under a vehicle until the gunmen fled, Francis said.

Francis said automatic weapons, including at least one rifle, were used, and casings littered the floor.

There were no signs of a struggle, he said.

Pasco is in south-central Washington, 130 miles southwest of Spokane.

Reagan: liberals will still be upset

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, sounding resigned to defeat on Robert H. Bork's nomination to the Supreme Court, vows that any new candidate he picks will upset liberal opponents "just as much."

Reagan's statement Tuesday drew quick criticism from Senate Majority Leader Robert Byrd, D-W.Va., who warned that harsh comments from the president could jeopardize his next nominee.

"It's not helpful," Byrd said of Reagan's statement. "I deplore this kind of remark, this tone coming out of the White House."

Byrd said if Reagan is going to "engage in ... innuendo and bitterness" the next nominee would be endangered.

Meanwhile, Senate Democrats and Republicans skirmished over the timing of the Bork debate, but nothing was settled.

Reagan, abandoning the low-key tone suggested by Bork himself on his nomination, derided tactics used against his nominee as "a political joke."

With the ranks of Bork's critics still growing in the Senate — reaching 54 with an anti-Bork declaration from Sen. Harry Reid, D-Nev. — Reagan planned to talk about the nomination in an address late this afternoon from the Oval Office.

Reagan, in a series of appearances in New Jersey on Tuesday, softened his rhetoric about Bork's opponents in one speech but then turned up the heat in a later address when a woman at a Republican fund-raiser shouted, "We want Bork, too."

Labor secretary to leave cabinet

WASHINGTON (AP) — Labor Secretary William E. Brock will resign his Cabinet post to become presidential campaign manager for Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole, with whom he served in both the House and Senate, Republican sources say.

Sources who asked not to be identified said Brock would announce his decision on Thursday. The Labor Department said it could not confirm the reports Brock would resign.

"I can't give you any confirmation on it," David Demarest, an assistant Labor secretary, said late Tuesday. However, other sources close to Brock confirmed that he would step down.

Brock had been approached by several Republican presidential campaigns in recent weeks, including those of Dole, R-Kan., Vice President George Bush and Rep. Jack Kemp, R-N.Y., according to close Brock associates.

The Labor secretary has, in Brock personal conversations, expressed interest in heading the State, Defense or Treasury departments if Republicans retain control of the White House in the 1988 election.

One source, speaking on condition of anonymity, confirmed that Brock would announce his resignation soon, but would likely remain in his Cabinet job "into November."

Dole already is actively campaigning for president, but a formal announcement of his candidacy is not scheduled until Nov. 9.

Brock, a former congressman and senator from Tennessee, and chairman of the Republican National Committee from 1977 to 1981, would bring a reputation as a strong political organizer to Dole's campaign, which has run second behind Bush's in the early polls.

There was no immediate word on likely successors to Brock but early speculation centered on Constance Horner, a former director of the Office of Personnel Management, and Dennis Whitfield, the department's deputy secretary and a close aide to Brock for several years.

Nuclear plant defaults on debt

CONCORD, N.H. (AP) — The decision to default on a $37 million debt payment by the Seabrook nuclear plant's main owner could rival the Three Mile Island nuclear accident in its effects on the industry, an analyst says.

The 13-member board of directors of Public Service Co. of New Hampshire voted Tuesday to suspend scheduled interest payments on various bonds, the first of which is due Thursday, spokesman John Cavanagh said.

The default would make Public Service the first major privately owned utility to default on a bond payment since the Great Depression.

The company has 30 days to pay the bill, during which time creditors are barred from taking action, such as filing for involuntary bankruptcy reorganization, said Charles Bayless, company financial vice president.

Though company officials had predicted such action if the utility defaulted, they hope a bankruptcy judge will encourage creditors to give a $1.1 billion debt restructuring plan a chance to work.

If bankruptcy occurs, it would be the first by a privately owned utility since the Great Depression.

Dan Scotto, a utility analyst with L.F. Rothschild of New York, said the default would prompt investors to reassess investments in utilities.

"This is a real major event,"

Scotto said. "There's been a real strong belief in the analytical community that utilities don't default."

"It's going to send people back to the drawing board and look differently at utilities, the same way people looked differently at utilities after Three Mile Island," Scotto said, referring to the Pennsylvania plant that in 1979 was the site of the nation's worst commercial nuclear accident.

Public Service has been pushed to the brink of a bankruptcy filing by its $2.1 billion investment in the $5 billion Seabrook plant. Plans unveiled in 1968 called for a $1 billion plant that would go on line in 1979.

West German, Swiss team get Nobel Prize in physics

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP)—Georg Bednorz of West Germany and K. Alex Mueller of Switzerland won the Nobel Prize in physics today for their discovery of new superconducting materials.

Both are researchers at the IBM Zuerich Research Laboratory in Switzerland. The announcement by the Royal Swedish Academy of Sciences cited "their important breakthrough in the discovery of superconductivity in ceramic materials."

Last year, "Bednorz and Mueller reported finding superconductivity in an oxide material at a temperature 12 degrees Celsius higher than previously known," the announcement said.

This morning's announcement of the physics prize recipient was to be followed two hours later by the disclosure of the chemistry award winner.

American scientists have been represented overwhelmingly among the winners of the science prizes since they were first awarded in 1901. U.S. citizens have won 52 of the 129 physics awards and 31 of 86 chemistry awards.

Last year two West Germans, Ernst Ruska and Gerd Binnig, and a Swiss, Heinrich Rohrer, shared the physics prize. Ruska won for work in electron optics and the design of the first electron microscope; Binnig and Rohrer designed the scanning tunneling microscope.

Previous winners of the physics prize have included people who became famous beyond the science world, like Wilhelm Conrad Roentgen, who won in 1901 for work on X-ray technology, and Guglielmo Marconi, who received the award in 1909 and was credited with inventing the radio.

In chemistry, last year's prize was shared by Dudley R. Herschbach of the United States, Taiwan-born American Yuan T. Lee and German-born John C. Polanyi of Canada. They did research showing how basic chemical reactions take place.

Each Nobel carries a cash prize of 2,175,000 Swedish kronor, or about $340,000, which is divided if more than one laureate is named for each prize.

The news of today's prizes follows the surprise announcement Tuesday that Costa Rican President Oscar Arias Sanchez had won the Nobel Peace Prize. He received the award for developing and promoting a plan to end the guerrilla wars in Central America.

On Monday, Japanese researcher Susumu Tonegawa won the Nobel Prize in medicine for his study of how the body produces defenses to fight off a variety of viruses and bacteria.

Political prisoner given emigration from Russia

MOSCOW (AP)—A former political prisoner who spent 18 years in Soviet labor camps and psychiatric hospitals says he has received permission to emigrate.

Vladimir Titov said Tuesday he had been released Oct. 9 from a special psychiatric hospital in Orel, about 225 miles south of Moscow, and was given until Oct. 30 to leave the Soviet Union.

Titov, 49, told The Associated Press in a telephone interview that he already had all the documents he needed to fly to Israel through Vienna.

"I have everything in my hands," he said. But he said he was uncertain exactly when he would leave or where he would settle.

Titov said he was sentenced to five years in a prison camp and two years of internal exile in 1969 for anti-Soviet agitation and propaganda.

He said he was held continually thereafter, culminating in five years he was held in the psychiatric hospital in Orel for passing information about conditions for Soviet political prisoners.

Titov said he had worked for a Moscow organization involved in construction of electric power plants and traveled widely in the Soviet Union in the 1960s.

He got into trouble with authorities for critical accounts he relayed to friends of what he saw on his trips, he said.

Sweden invited him to emigrate in the late 1960s, but by then Soviet authorities told him it was too late because he was being investigated for criminal activity, Titov said.

The Soviet Union has released many prominent political prisoners and Jewish dissidents from prison this year, and has allowed some of them to emigrate.

In September, Estonian dissident Tiit Madisson was given permission to emigrate to Israel, even though he is not Jewish. He settled in Sweden.

Authorities blamed in death of Haitian opposition leader

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP)—One of Haiti's most powerful opposition leaders has blamed authorities for the slaying of a presidential candidate, but said his group would not boycott elections.

"How can they coldly gun down a lawyer right in front of police headquarters?" demanded Jean-Claude Bajeux on Tuesday, hours after Yves Volé was shot. "That is the whole world turned upside down."

Volé, 54, was the second presidential candidate killed in Haiti in three months. Witnesses said police shot him at close range. Police said Volé brought a mob to police headquarters and was shot during a melee.

Volé, an attorney and former army lieutenant, lived in exile in New York from 1963 until last year.

Bajeux, whose Front for Concerted Action organized strikes that shut down Haiti's main cities last summer, charged: "The only language the army has ever known is the language of guns."

But he added his group still plans to participate in next month's elections.

Volé, an outspoken critic of the provisional junta led by Lt. Gen. Henri Namphy, was not favored to win the elections scheduled for Nov. 29.

Serge Boursiquot, a reporter for Radio Antilles, said Volé was standing outside a police station in the capital Tuesday, demanding the release of an alleged political prisoner.

Volé

As Volé was speaking, "several armed policemen in civilian clothes came up to him, chased us (reporters) away and dragged him to the entrance of police headquarters," Boursiquot said.

Police "threw him against a car, beat him and shot him in the head" at close range, the reporter said.

The plainclothes police that attacked Volé came from the criminal research division of the Port-au-Prince police department, witnesses said.

Maj. Joseph Baguidy, head of the division, said on government-owned television, "Volé brought about 100 people in front of the police station (and) incited the mob" to violence.

Baguidy said that in the melee, "Volé received a bullet in the head." He did not say who started the shooting.

Mentally retarded get poor service in Texas

ARLINGTON (AP) — Texas has the nation's worst verifiable shortage of services for the mentally retarded, the Association for Retarded Citizens has found after a yearlong survey.

An estimated 21,900 requests for placement in state schools and other facilities have gone unanswered in the state, according to the national advocacy group, which is based in Arlington, Texas.

Researchers for the association said they based their estimate on the official waiting list for placement in state schools and a survey of other public and private facilities for the state's retarded.

The report said there are 1,900 mentally retarded people in Texas on waiting lists for residential services, such as placement in group homes, and another 20,000 who are unable to find placement in day programs, such as supervised activities.

"The service system has not been able to cope with increased numbers of people leaving institutions, a new generation exiting school special-education programs and the growing number of older families who have kept family members at home for years, but who now need services," the report said.

Experts said the long waiting lists are discouraging others in need of services from applying, and indicate that thousands of retarded adults are sitting idle at home and regressing in behavior.

Texas is required under a federal court order to reduce the population of its institutions, and private-sector institutions have been unable to pick up the slack, officials said.

The association's research director, Sharon Davis, said that many states put the same people on different waiting lists, making the numbers appear larger. But, she believes, Texas and other states also underestimate the number of retarded citizens whose names do not appear on lists.

"In some states, people are not counted as waiting for services until they have had a comprehensive evaluation," Davis said.

"This service often has a waiting list as well. Thus, people wait to wait."

Nationally, the group reports, as many as 130,000 mentally retarded people are on waiting lists for residential and day programs. Many are kept at home, but many are "warehoused," Davis said.

Several states, including Oklahoma, Rhode Island, South Dakota and Wyoming, compile almost no statistics on requests for service for the retarded, the study shows. Others, including the District of Columbia, California and North Dakota, compile no waiting lists.

Of those that do keep such lists, the report lists in order the states with the worst shortages: Texas, New York, Illinois, Ohio and North Carolina.

"There's a gap there," said Barry Waller, director of mental health services with the Dallas County Mental Health-Mental Retardation Center. "There has been no growth in our services in the past six or seven years, but the demand has increased."

Waller said about 350 people in the county are on waiting lists for residential placement. He noted a critical shortfall in programs for adults.

"After all that time spent on education between the ages of 3 and 21, a lot of them are just going home and sitting, and losing and regressing. That's a very sad and very wasteful use of resources," he said.

Compared to other states, Texas has been slow to reduce the number of mentally retarded people in institutions, according to another study. From 1977 to 1986 the numbers dropped from 10,900 to 9,400, a pace slower than in 41 other states, a 1986 study showed.

Texas also had the lowest per diem spending at state institutions housing the mentally retarded at $70.13, according to research results published earlier this year by David Braddock of the University of Illinois at Chicago. Alaska's $307.59 per day was the nation's highest outlay in fiscal 1986, according to the Braddock's report.

ary 1, 1987. Thousands of carriers across the country were recognized Saturday as part of International Newspaper Carrier Day. Not pictured, but also helping in the weekend's activities, are Roy Tollison, Ernest Fletcher and Raymond Hood.

A&M, UT reveal minority recruiting program

AUSTIN (AP) — Presidents Frank Vandiver of Texas A&M University and William Cunningham of the University of Texas at Austin announced a joint venture to prepare more black and Hispanic students for college.

The presidents of Texas' two largest universities said offices would be set up in Houston, Dallas-Fort Worth, San Antonio and McAllen to identify students with college potential as early as the 7th grade.

Each office would include a representative of A&M and UT-Austin to work with counselors at minority schools.

"This is one of the greatest days for higher education and education in general in the history of Texas — and I can say that. I'm a historian," Vandiver told a news conference.

Vandiver said his staff at A&M developed the proposal. "I thought it was a great idea. I talked to Bill (Cunningham) and he thought it was a great idea, so we are jointly doing this with joint staffs in these towns."

"We hope we get a good number (of minority students) at Texas and Texas A&M but that's not the main purpose of the program," Vandiver said. "The main purpose is to get them in the educational system, keep them there and get them in college somewhere in Texas."

Both presidents said their schools do a good job of retaining minority students once they are enrolled but have difficulty getting them in school.

Cunningham said one of the real problems is making sure students start taking college entrance-type courses in the 7th and 8th grades.

A&M's student body includes 2.3 percent blacks, 6.2 percent Hispanics, Vandiver said. UT-Austin's minority enrollment includes 3.4 percent blacks, 9.4 percent Hispanics.

Out-of-state horse racing expensive, breeders say

ABILENE (AP) — Breeders say the cost of racing their horses in other states may run them out of the business if state voters don't break a 50-year ban on pari-mutuel gambling.

"If pari-mutuel betting doesn't pass in Texas this year, I'm going to sell everything I've got," Richard Fox said from the office of his training and breeding business near Albany, about 30 miles northeast of Abilene. "You can't make any money in it."

Fox, who has about 90 horses at his Live Oaks Ranches, said he and another owner pay about $30,000 to out of state trainers to manage their animals and take them to meets. That's money that should be spent in Texas instead, he said.

Opponents complain that Texans are looking for a quick economic cure from a dying industry.

Fox and other supporters say pari-mutuel betting on horse and dog racing in Texas could pump $2 billion into the state's shaken economy.

"The people of Texas want jobs," said Ricky Knox, executive director of the Texas Horse Racing Association. "They know the economy needs to diversify away from oil and gas."

Opponents, however, think a "yes" vote on Nov. 3 will lead to widespread problems, including organized crime and animal abuse.

Churches and ministers have raised cash for Texans Who Care, the opposing group, and are leading the charge against pari-mutuel betting.

In Abilene, Dr. Bill Bruster, pastor of First Baptist Church, said ministers are being encouraged to give sermons on the evils of pari-mutuel betting from Sunday until Nov. 3.

Bruster said ministers also worked to register church members as voters before the deadline earlier this month.

He suspects the Texas Horse Racing Association has done little publicity work in Abilene because of the town's religious reputation, which makes it a tough place to sell legalized gambling.

"They are not spending a lot of money in places like this," Bruster said. "They're not going to mess with Abilene."

Pari-mutuel wagering in Texas has been outlawed since 1937. The Legislature decided in 1986 to place the referendum question on this year's ballot.

Under the plan, major horse race tracks could be located near Dallas, Fort Worth, Houston or San Antonio.

The push for and against the referendum, one of two on a ballot also packed with 25 proposed constitutional amendments, is heating up as the election nears.

Ranks of billionaires doubles, Forbes says

NEW YORK (AP) — U.S. billionaires nearly doubled in number this year to 49, including a 31-year-old computer whiz and a Campbell's soup heir, according to Forbes magazine's list of the 400 wealthiest Americans.

With an average worth of $550 million, the total value of the Forbes 400 is $220 billion, 41 percent more than last year and enough to erase the 1986 U.S. budget deficit of $205 billion, the magazine said in releasing the list.

Forbes 10 Richest Americans

By rank, home state, and net worth in billions of dollars

Sam Moore, Ark.	8.5
John Warner Kluge, Va.	3.0
H. Ross Perot, Texas	2.9
David Packard, Calif.	2.87
Donald Edward Newhouse, N.Y.	2.35
Samuel Irving Newhouse Jr., N.Y.	2.35
Lester Crown, Ill.	2.1
Rupert Murdoch, N.Y.	2.1
Warren Edward Buffett, Neb.	2.1
Leslie Herbert Wexner, Ohio	2.1

Highest Concentration of Forbes 400 members

New York	78
California	62
Texas	33
Illinois	24
Florida	19

The list will appear in the magazine's Oct. 26 editions.

No. 1 for the third year is retail king Sam Walton, whose assets from his Arkansas-based Wal-Mart Stores discount chain nearly doubled to $8.5 billion.

Walton's estimated wealth is more than the gross national product of many Third World countries, and if laid end to end in dollar bills would circle the earth more than 32 times.

The list of 49 billionaires includes 23 newcomers, such as Jacqueline Mars Vogel, who Forbes said it recently determined was an heiress to the Mars confection company's family fortune and is worth $1.15 billion.

At 31, William H. Gates won the title of youngest new billionaire.

A math genius and Harvard dropout, Gates founded the Microsoft Corp. computer software company 13 years ago. His 40 percent stake in the company is worth $1.25 billion.

Also on the list for the first time is Campbell Soup heir John Dorrance at $1.3 billion; Budweiser brewmaster August Busch, $1.3 billion; and Ted Arison, an Israeli ship owner's son who built Carnival Cruise Lines and last year took it public, quadrupling his worth to $1.8 billion.

Rising stock prices and real estate values played key roles in swelling the ranks and fortunes of the wealthy, meaning that much of the wealth of the super-rich is only on paper and would be realized only by selling their holdings.

The soaring value of Wal-Mart stock particularly benefited the holdings of Walton, whom Forbes estimated to be the world's third wealthiest person after Japan's Yoshiaki Tsutsumi, worth at least $20 billion, and Taikichiro Mori, worth $15 billion.

After Walton, the Forbes top 10 include John Kluge, 73, German-born head of Metromedia Co., worth $3 billion; H. Ross Perot, 57, Texas investor, worth $2.9 billion; David Packard, 75, co-founder of Hewlett-Packard Co., $2.87 billion; publishing-empire brothers Samuel Newhouse Jr., 59, and Donald Newhouse, 58, each worth about $2.35 billion; industrialist Lester Crown, 62, $2.1 billion; publisher Rupert Murdoch, $2.1 billion; investor Warren Buffett, $2.1 billion; and retailer Leslie H. Wexner, $2.1 billion.

Some well-known members of the list include Denver oilman Marvin Davis, $1.45 billion; New York real estate developer Harry Helmsley, $1.4 billion; financier David Rockefeller, $1 billion; Los Angeles investor Kirk Kerkorian, $950 million; Maryland poultry king Frank Perdue, $500 million; designer Ralph Lauren, $350 million; and entertainer Merv Griffin, $300 million.

Some familiar names on the list lost their ranking. Gordon P. Getty, No. 2 in the inaugural 1982 Forbes list and No. 1 in 1983 and 1984, no longer controls the $3 billion family trust because of lawsuits and the Texaco-Pennzoil battle over his company. Forbes estimated his worth at $350 million.

Court says New Mexico owes Texas more water

SANTA FE, N.M. (AP) — A special master appointed by the U.S. Supreme Court to oversee a dispute with Texas over Pecos River water has rejected New Mexico's proposal for repayment of water debts New Mexico incurs in the future.

The high court ruled in June that New Mexico owes Texas 340,000 acre feet of water for the period between 1950 and 1983, which would be settled by New Mexico delivering to Texas 34,000 acre feet of water a year for 10 years.

The court also ruled New Mexico will have to increase by 10,000 acre feet the amount of water it delivers to Texas in the future.

New Mexico officials want to pay off the debt in money instead of water, but Texas officials want the nearly 111 million gallons of water, an issue that will be heard in February.

But officials already are planning for the future, and on Thursday and Friday attorneys for both sides will be in Denver to argue proposals before special master Charles Meyers.

New Mexico wants to "bank" annual shortfalls and surpluses that occur in the future and not give more water to Texas unless the shortfalls over a five-year period exceed 30 percent of the state's water obligation to Texas over the same period.

Texas wants any shortfalls delivered within a year after they occur.

Meyers, however, has issued a preliminary rejection of New Mexico's proposal.

Meyers said in a letter to attorneys he rejected New Mexico's plan "because I remain convinced that annual makeups will prevent the accumulation of large deficits."

Meyers issued a proposal recently calling for New Mexico to repay any shortages within 15 months of the year they occur.

Meyers' proposal would require New Mexico "to institute draconian and grossly inequitable measures to accrue a substantial credit to accommodate the very large accumulated shortfalls that occur," said Peter White, a special assistant attorney general for the New Mexico Interstate Stream Commission.

White said in a brief filed with Meyers that it would be "extremely detrimental to the economic welfare of the many water users in the Pecos River Basin in New Mexico, whose use would be terminated during the period of credit accrual, with little, if any, benefit to water users in Texas for the reason that their supply would remain subject to extreme annual variations."

Attorneys for New Mexico contend the river's flow varies so much from year to year that a shortfall one year could become an overdelivery the next.

White said Meyers' recommendation would have meant an overpayment to Texas of about 90,000 acre feet of water over a 14-year period already studied by the state.

Renea Hicks, an assistant attorney general in Texas, said there is no provision in the 1949 Pecos River Compact that would allow anything but an annual payment of the water debt.

"There is no reason at all for New Mexico to wait five years before sending us the water," Hicks said.

The dispute began in 1974, when Texas sought to sue New Mexico in the Supreme Court. A year later, the court agreed to hear the case even though it had not previously been aired in a lower court.

Woman drowns at South Padre Island

PORT ISABEL (AP) — A 23-year-old woman drowned while swimming off a South Padre Island beach, where a dangerous rip tide advisory was in effect Tuesday in the aftermath of Hurricane Floyd's assault on South Florida.

Rhea D. Karcher of Arkansas City, Kan., was pronounced dead Monday afternoon, after being caught in a rough undertow while swimming with a friend, police said Tuesday.

South Padre Island police said bystanders Ronald Canallas of Edinburg and Cristina Campbell of Pharr managed to bring 18-year-old Tracy Dow safely to shore, but were unable to reach Ms. Karcher.

It was the second drowning in the past week on South Padre Island. Last Tuesday, Michael Cecil of Spring drowned.

Two other drownings occurred Sept. 5.

Hurricane Floyd, which was downgraded to a tropical storm Tuesday, brought above normal amounts of water and high tides to the South Texas coast,

Chef Victor Gielisse's award-winning menu features catfish, red pepper sauce, tomatillo relish, sesame asparagus and gingered black beans.

Award-winning Dallas chef builds menu around catfish

Chef Victor Gielisse, co-owner of Actuelle Restaurant in Dallas, the winner of the first American Seafood Challenge, is a master of taste and color.

Chef Gielisse (pronounced hee-lee-say) competed against 25 other state winners for the title of "Best Seafood Chef in America," dazzling judges with a beautiful entree of farm-raised catfish, red pepper sauce, tomatillo relish, sesame asparagus and gingered black beans.

Victor Gielisse grew up in his family's hotel in the resort town of Scheveningen in the Netherlands. There he learned the basics of cooking and served an apprenticeship before moving on to prestigious restaurants in Switzerland, South Africa and the United States.

SAUTEED CATFISH ACTUELLE

Prepare black beans, tomatillo relish, red pepper cream and asparagus before cooking the catfish.

- 4 (5 ounces each) catfish fillets, skinless
- Salt and pepper
- About 1 teaspoon lemon juice
- About 1 teaspoon finely chopped shallots
- 1 clove garlic, minced
- Flour
- 1 tablespoon sesame oil
- 1 tablespoon olive oil or additional sesame oil
- Gingered Black Beans (recipe follows)
- Sesame Asparagus (recipe follows)
- Red Pepper Cream (recipe follows)
- Tomatillo Relish (recipe follows)

Rinse and pat dry catfish. Season with a little salt, pepper and lemon juice. Rub with shallots and garlic. Dust with flour and shake off excess. Heat sesame oil and olive oil in large heavy skillet. Cook catfish fillets until lightly golden on both sides, allowing about 10 minutes' cooking time per inch thickness measured at thickest part of fillet.

Place catfish over a small amount of Red Pepper Cream on individual serving plates. Serve with Gingered Black Beans, Sesame Asparagus, Red Pepper Cream and Tomatillo Relish.

GINGERED BLACK BEANS

- 1 cup dried black beans
- 1 quart water
- 2 slices hickory bacon or bacon, dried
- 2 tablespoons olive oil
- 2 tablespoons chopped shallots
- 1 1/2 teaspoons minced garlic
- 1 teaspoon finely grated fresh ginger
- 3 tablespoons diced red bell pepper
- 3 tablespoons diced yellow or green bell pepper
- 1 tablespoon minced cilantro (fresh coriander)
- Salt and pepper

Soak beans in cold water for 6 to 8 hours or overnight. Cook over low heat until beans are tender but still firm, about 1 1/2 to 2 hours. Drain and rinse beans. In large skillet or cast iron pot, cook bacon over medium high heat until crisp. Remove cooked bacon and reserve. Discard all but 1 tablespoon of bacon fat. Add olive oil, shallots, garlic and ginger. Sauté until shallots are tender but not brown. Add red and yellow peppers. Stir in cooked beans and season with cilantro, salt and pepper. Keep warm until served.

Yield: about 4 servings.
Note: Gingered Black Beans can be made a day ahead and rewarmed.

SESAME ASPARAGUS

- 1 pound fresh or thawed frozen asparagus
- 1 tablespoon olive oil
- Salt and pepper
- 1 tablespoon toasted sesame seeds

Clean and trim asparagus. Blanch in boiling, salted water for 5 minutes; plunge into ice water for 1 minute to stop the cooking. Drain thoroughly. Cut asparagus into 4- to 5-inch lengths on the bias. Just before serving, sauté asparagus in olive oil until barely tender. Season with salt and pepper and stir in sesame seeds.

TOMATILLO RELISH

- 1 tablespoon chopped shallots
- 2 cloves garlic, minced
- 1 teaspoon butter
- 3 tomatillos,* chopped
- papery husks removed
- 2 large tomatoes, peeled, seeded and diced
- 1 tablespoon chopped fresh tarragon or
- 1/4 teaspoon dried
- 1 teaspoon cognac
- Salt and pepper

Saute shallots and garlic in butter in heavy saucepan until soft but not brown. Add tomatillos and tomatoes; sauté for 5 minutes. Add tarragon, cognac and salt and pepper to taste. Simmer for 8 minutes over low heat. Serve warm or at room temperature.

Yield: about 2 cups.

*Note: If fresh tomatillos are unavailable, substitute 1/2 cup green unripe tomatoes or drained, canned tomatillos or omit them.

RED PEPPER CREAM

- 1 teaspoon minced shallots
- 1 small clove garlic
- 1 teaspoon olive oil
- 2 tablespoons white wine vinegar
- 2 tablespoons white wine
- 2 tablespoons heavy cream
- 1 cup red pepper puree (directions follow)
- Salt and pepper
- 3 tablespoons unsalted butter

Saute shallots and garlic in olive oil in heavy saucepan until soft but not brown. Add vinegar, wine and cream. Bring to a rapid boil and stir in red pepper puree. Simmer 5 minutes. Pour mixture in blender or food processor; blend 10 to 15 seconds or until mixture is smooth. Strain through a sieve into a saucepan. Season with salt and pepper. (Mixture can be made ahead up to this point and held at room temperature for 1 hour.) Bring just to boil and remove from heat. Wisk in unsalted butter until it softens rather than melts. Keep warm until served.

Yield: about 1 cup. Recipe can be doubled.
To puree fresh red peppers: Broil peppers on foil-lined baking sheet, turning frequently, about 10 minutes or until blistered and blackened. Wrap in foil and set aside. When cool enough to handle, remove skins, ribs and seeds. Puree in blender or food processor until smooth. One pound peppers (about 3 medium) yields about 1 cup puree.

Seafood dishes reflect regional roots

Every part of the country has its own seafood specialties. Most often they are combinations of the best local fish and shellfish and the fresh produce of the area.

To celebrate October as National Seafood Month, seafood recipes from different parts of the country have been chosen to demonstrate the variety of tastes and preparations for seafood.

At one time, regional specialties were difficult to reproduce outside the area. Now, with improved transportation and the increased popularity of seafood, high quality fish and shellfish can be found further from its home waters, making it possible to reproduce regional recipes in any part of the country.

But what if a type of fish called for in a recipe is out of season or otherwise unavailable?

The key to successful substitution is the grouping together of fish that look, cook and taste pretty much the same. Finfish can be divided into broad groups based on fat content and flavor intensity. Generally the higher the fat the more pronounced the flavor. Fattier, richer-flavored fish also tend to be darker in flesh color and firmer textured than lean fish.

Most recipes for New England Fish Chowder call for low-fat cod, haddock, or scrod (actually a small cod or haddock). Lingcod, pollock, lake whitefish or Pacific halibut would also be good alternatives. Choose a mild fish that looks good and fresh, or thaw frozen fish fillets.

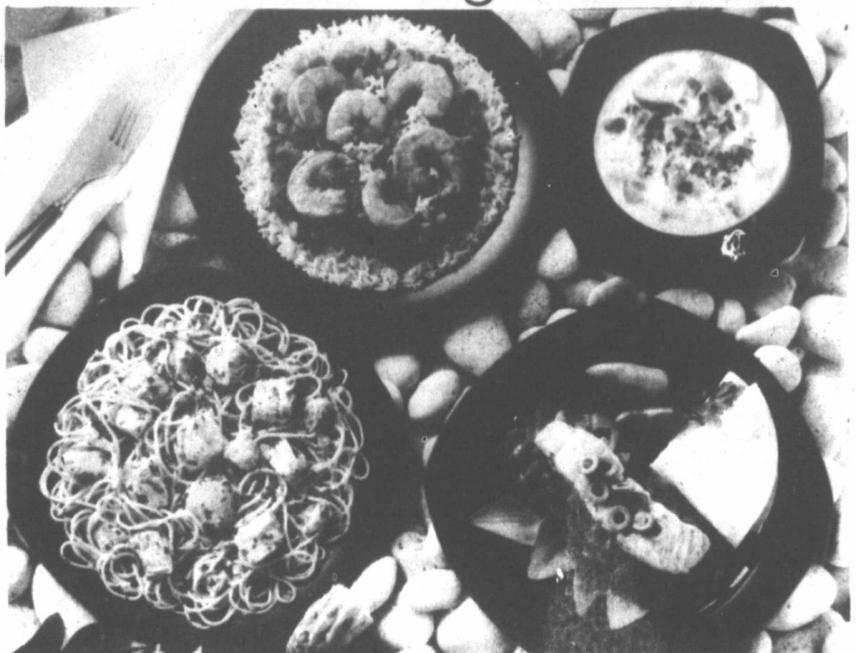

In the Southwest as well as in Mexico, where Snapper Veracruz originated, it is traditionally prepared with either red snapper, a lean, red-skinned, white fish from the South Atlantic or Gulf of Mexico, or with Pacific rockfish. Other good choices would be orange roughy, sea bass, mahi mahi or other firm-fleshed white fish. The fish fillets are simmered over a lively mixture of tomatoes, peppers, onions and garlic with a little heat from crushed red pepper-chilies.

Salmon with Pasta and Parsley Sauce features chunks of salmon in a fragrant sauce of fresh leeks, parsley and dry white wine. The Northwest offers five kinds of salmon: King (Chinook), Red (Sockeye), Silver (Coho), Pink and Chum. Imported Norwegian salmon could also be used in this delicious dish. Other fish firm enough for this recipe are albacore tuna, monkfish, lake trout, striped bass and Atlantic salmon.

Shrimp Jambalaya is one of those versatile dishes that can be personalized with a little more of this or a little less of that. A nice variation is to simmer the cooked rice with the shrimp-tomato mixture to allow the flavors to blend. Other types of shellfish, crayfish, crab and shucked oysters will give equally good results.

NEW ENGLAND FISH CHOWDER

- 2 ounces diced salt pork or 2 slices bacon, diced
- 1 large onion, diced
- 1 bay leaf
- 2 cups fish stock OR 1 cup clam juice and 1 cup water
- 1 pound unpeeled red potatoes, diced
- 1 pound cod or haddock,

Regional seafood specialties include, clockwise from top left, Southern Shrimp Jambalaya, New England Fish Chowder, Southwest Snapper Veracruz and Northwest Salmon with Pasta and Parsley Sauce.

- skin and bones removed, cut into 1-inch pieces
- 1 1/2 cups milk
- 1 cup half-and-half or light cream
- Freshly ground black pepper and salt
- Finely chopped fresh parsley

Cook salt pork in Dutch oven until fat is rendered. Add onion and bay leaf; sauté until onion is soft, but not brown. Stir in fish stock and potatoes, reduce heat and simmer until potatoes are tender, about 15 minutes. Add fish, milk and half-and-half and simmer gently 3 to 5 minutes or until fish is opaque and just flakes when tested with a fork. Remove and discard bay leaf. Season to taste with pepper and salt. Ladle into soup plates and sprinkle each with chopped parsley. Serve with whole wheat rolls or oyster crackers.

Yield: 6 to 8 servings.
Variations: Substitute shucked or canned clams and/or oysters for part or all of the fish. Other fish, such as lingcod, pollock or halibut, can be used.

SOUTHWEST SNAPPER VERACRUZ

- 1 to 1 1/2 pounds red snapper or rockfish fillets (steaks or cross sections can be used)
- 2 teaspoons lime juice
- 2 tablespoons olive oil
- 1 onion, chopped
- 1 green bell pepper, seeded and cut into 1x1/4-inch strips
- 2 cloves garlic, minced
- 2 cans (14 to 16 ounces each) whole peeled tomatoes
- 1/4 teaspoon crushed red chilies or hot red pepper flakes
- 1/4 cup sliced green, pimiento-stuffed olives

- Marinated artichoke hearts or artichoke leaves can be used as garnish (optional)
- Sprinkle fish with lime juice and allow to stand at room temperature while preparing sauce. Heat olive oil in large skillet over medium high heat. Add onion, green pepper and garlic; sauté until tender. Add tomatoes and their liquid and crushed chilies and continue to cook 5 minutes or until part of the liquid has evaporated. Arrange fish fillets over sauce; sprinkle with sliced olives. Reduce heat and cook, covered, allowing 10 minutes' cooking time per inch of thickness of the fish measured at its thickest part. Place serving of fish on sauce, ladle additional sauce on top. Garnish with sliced olives and artichokes if desired. Serve with warm flour tortillas and/or rice.

Yield: 5 to 6 servings.
Variations: Other firm-fleshed white fish fillets can be substituted.

NORTHWEST SALMON WITH PASTA AND PARSLEY SAUCE

- 3/4 to 1 pound salmon, skin and bones removed and cut into 1-inch cubes
- Salt and pepper
- 2 tablespoons butter or margarine
- 2 tablespoons olive oil
- 1 1/4 cups thinly sliced leeks or green onions
- 1 cup firmly packed, chopped fresh parsley, divided
- 1/4 cup dry white wine
- 8 ounces spaghetti, cooked according to package directions and drained
- Freshly grated Parmesan cheese

Season salmon lightly with salt and pepper. Heat butter and olive oil in heavy skillet. Sauté leeks and 1/2 cup parsley 5 minutes or until leeks are softened but not browned. Add wine and continue to cook 2 minutes. Add salmon, reduce heat and simmer, covered, 4 to 5 minutes or until salmon is opaque and just flakes when tested with a fork. Stir in remaining parsley and season to taste with salt and pepper. Pour over hot spaghetti and gently toss. Serve with Parmesan cheese and sourdough bread if desired.

Makes 4 to 6 servings.
Variations: Any firm-fleshed fish, scallops, shrimp or clams can be substituted.

SOUTHERN SHRIMP JAMBALAYA

- 2 slices bacon, chopped
- 1 tablespoon flour
- 1 onion, chopped
- 1/2 green pepper, chopped
- 1 can (14 to 16 ounces) stewed tomatoes; keep juice
- 1/2 teaspoon Worcestershire sauce
- 1/4 teaspoon cayenne pepper or to taste
- 1/4 teaspoon dried thyme
- 1 pound medium shrimp, peeled and deveined
- Hot rice for serving

Cook bacon in large skillet for 3 minutes or until partially cooked. Remove bacon and add flour; cook and stir 2 to 3 minutes to make a rich, brown roux. Add onion and pepper and cook over medium heat 5 minutes or until onion is transparent. Stir in tomatoes with juice, bacon, Worcestershire sauce, cayenne pepper and thyme. Bring to a boil; reduce heat and simmer 5 minutes. Add shrimp and simmer until bright pink and meat is firm and opaque, 3 to 5 minutes. Season to taste with salt and pepper. Serve over hot rice.

Yield: 4 servings.

Abandoned puppy grows up to save his rescuer's life

DEAR ABBY: Re the flap about the "compassionate" farmer who promptly shot the mother beagle and her pup to put them out of their misery when they appeared at his door, hungry and half-dead from thirst and hunger.

Many years ago, my aunt trudged through the wind and snow one morning to her rural mailbox. Upon opening it, she found a little black and white mongrel pup — sick and nearly frozen stiff. She took the little guy into her home, named him Tony, and nursed him back to health. Everyone thought she was crazy.

Twenty years later, on another cold, snowy winter night, old Tony, arthritic and hard of hearing, roused my aunt from a second-story bedroom and guided her to safety while her house burned down around them.

When the firemen finally arrived, all that remained was the fireplace with its two-story chimney, Tony and my aunt!

How's that for gratitude?

back to health as opposed to putting them out of their misery with a shotgun.

DEAR ABBY: "Sorry, Sorry, Sorry," who described tattoo removal as painful and expensive, should have obtained a second opinion before embarking on the removal of her 6-inch dragon tattoo. As a dermatologic surgeon who specializes in tattoo removal and other skin surgery techniques, may I point out that although her information on methods of tattoo removal was not incorrect, it was incomplete.

Skin grafting is a drastic procedure and should not be undertaken without careful consideration. There are less aggressive options in removing a tattoo, such as dermabrasion, caustic chemical removal or simple excision — one of the most common procedures used by dermatologic surgeons. These three procedures are less costly and not nearly as painful as laser surgery.

Any dermatologic surgeon can offer an opinion on the most appropriate procedure for removal of a tattoo. For a list of dermatologic surgeons in their area, readers can contact the American Society for Dermatologic Surgery, 1567 Maple Ave., Evanston, Ill. 60201.

ber at large; Larry Covalt, vice president; Susan Dwight, treasurer; Rick Welch, coaches' commission; Donetta Welch, member at large; Greg Evans, Cabot employee; Sherry Johnson, secretary; and Marvin Slaymaker of Cabot.

Soccer group gets benches

Pampa Soccer Association recently received a little help from Cabot Transmission Corporation when Cabot employees built and helped install benches at Pampa soccer fields.

Cabot's Kingsmill, Gray County and Carson County Gas Processing Plants donated $2,700 worth of pipe, angle iron, wood planks and welding labor to build the benches for players and spectators.

"Cabot has numerous employees working in the Pampa Soccer Association," said Marvin Slaymaker, Northern Area Manager for Cabot Transmission Corporation. "We have mothers and fathers coaching, brothers and sisters helping with field work, and parents and grandparents working in the concession stands. Cabot likes to help with activities where our employees are involved."

Cabot employees, Pampa Soccer Association Board of Directors and other volunteers met at the soccer fields to assemble the benches, and again later to dedicate them.

Pampa Soccer Association was formed in 1980 for the purpose of advancing the cause of soccer within Pampa and the surrounding area. In the last three years, several Pampa teams have gone on to compete in Amarillo's Winter Indoor League.

There are now 28 teams, with children 4 to 16 years old participating in the sport. Over 375 boys and girls from Pampa, White Deer, Skellytown and Lefors are on teams, with the largest group being from Pampa.

Due to the efforts of the Soccer Association, Pampa High School will have their first soccer team this year, which will compete with other area high school teams.

"The Association has a very large following," Slaymaker said. "Any Saturday during the season, you'll find a large crowd of parents, friends, grandparents and spectators at the soccer field, and every year the crowd gets bigger."

Pampa driller to give program Thursday at American Petroleum Institute meeting

Jerry Steed of Steed Oil and Gas, Pampa, will be guest speaker for the local chapter of American Petroleum Institute at its meeting on Thursday, Oct. 15, in Coronado Inn's Starlight Room.

The social hour will begin at 6:30 p.m., followed by dinner and the program. All API members are encouraged to bring a prospective member. The chapter's goal is to end the 1987-88 year with 500 memberships.

Steed will speak on "How Solid is Rock." He is a geologist and is currently evaluating and drilling prospects covering an area from the Texas Panhandle to Tennessee.

API membership is open to anyone in the petroleum or allied industries or to anyone with an interest in the industry. The chapter meets monthly, with a program related to the petroleum industry presented at each meeting.

Memberships are available at the door for $7 per year.

API is a non-profit organization and sponsors a scholarship program for qualified sons and daughters of API members.

The Pampa chapter sponsors various activities each year, including a golf tournament and a shrimp boil.

Rehearsals begin for holiday program

Pampa Chamber of Commerce and Pampa Fine Arts Association will jointly sponsor a performance of Messiah, by George Frederick Handel, with rehearsals beginning at 7 p.m. Thursday, Oct. 15 in the Heritage Room of M.K. Brown Auditorium. Rehearsals will continue each Thursday evening, except Thanksgiving Day, through Dec. 10.

The presentation will be at 8 p.m. Thursday, Dec. 17, at M.K. Brown Auditorium, under the direction of Zan Walker, minister of music at Central Baptist Church. The performance will include orchestra members from the Amarillo Symphony and area.

There will be no auditions; everyone is invited to sing, Walker said. Singers are encouraged to bring their own Schirmer edition of Messiah and to borrow copies from their respective churches. Copies will be available at the first rehearsal.

John and Leigh Blizard will be guest soloists, flown in for the performance.

"This talented young couple are two of the most sought-after voices in the Fort Worth-Dallas Metroplex area. Their addition to the performance will enhance the musical climate of the most ambitious Christmas music of the season," Walker said.

The Pampa performance of Messiah will include the entire Part I, which is traditionally known as "The Christmas Section," and the familiar "Hallelujah" chorus, which ends Part II.

"We are trying to get 100 members for the chorus," Walker said.

Scientists reveal genetic map

BOSTON (AP) — Scientists say they've drawn a map of the body's genes that will take some of the "hit and miss" out of the search for the cause of many common inherited ailments and the role of heredity in cancer and heart disease.

The map is a guide to many of the variations on the body's 23 pairs of chromosomes, which are made up of 100,000 or so strung-together genes, repositories of hereditary information.

The variations usually don't do anything important except serve as markers or signposts. That is, they are likely to lie close to, and thus be linked to, genes that play crucial roles in diseases.

Researchers say their map shows precisely where on the chromosomes the markers sit and how far apart they are — something scientists were not sure of before.

"I think it's a great achievement," said one of the nation's most distinguished geneticists, Dr. Victor McKusick of Johns Hopkins University.

The map was described by researchers from

Collaborative Research, a biotechnology firm in Bedford, and the Whitehead Institute for Biomedical Research and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, both in Cambridge.

Another map has been developed independently by Ray White of the University of Utah. Some details of both maps were described to scientists in September at a genetics workshop in Paris.

Experts say the maps should make it possible to identify the genetic components of many common diseases, including those such as heart disease and cancer that may result from two or more genes — something that so far has never been done.

The map also is expected to aid the search for prenatal tests for serious inherited disorders.

The work by Collaborative Research was outlined Wednesday by Dr. Phillip Green at a meeting of the American Society of Human Genetics in San Diego. It will be published Oct. 23 in the journal Cell.

Arthritis seminar planned for Saturday in Amarillo

Panhandle Arthritis Information Center and the local Scleroderma Support Group will host an arthritis seminar from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. Saturday, Oct. 17 at Texas Tech Health Sciences Center, 1400 Wallace Blvd., Amarillo.

The seminar will be in the center's auditorium, and is free to the public. Corporate sponsor for the seminar is SYNTAX Pharmaceuticals.

Scheduled throughout the day is a series of lectures by area professionals who will speak and answer questions regarding various topics which include rheumatoid arthritis, osteoarthritis, gout, scleroderma, lupus, joint replacement, gold therapy, juvenile arthritis, physical therapy, quackery, and diet in conjunction with arthritis.

Speakers scheduled for the seminar include Robert McNitt, M.D., rheumatologist; Thomas

W. Hale, Ph.D., pharmacologist-assistant professor, Texas Tech Health Sciences Center; Kenneth Johnston, M.D., orthopedic surgeon; and Jim Keister, physical therapist.

The Panhandle Arthritis Information Center was established in 1984 to give free services to Panhandle area victims of arthritis. It is a non-profit organization and is supported solely by donations. Officers for 1987-88 are Melody L. Malouf, president; Norma Young, vice president; Alda Lois Feferman, secretary; and Barbara Rando, treasurer.

Arthritis is one of the nation's most common chronic diseases and if left untreated, can be serious. It affects people of all ages, from infants to adults in the prime of life, as well as older persons.

More than 36 million Americans, or one in seven people, have a form of arthritis. This averages one victim of arthritis in every three families. One million people each year are diagnosed with a form of arthritis.

If left untreated, persons with certain forms of arthritis will live with constant threat of harm to their body. However, most problems can be avoided with proper evaluation and treatment.

Although there is no known cure for most forms of arthritis, many advances in research have led to information which allows victims of arthritis to control pain and keep their joints and limbs moving freely and thus able to enjoy a normal life.

For more information about arthritis and the seminar, contact Panhandle Arthritis Information Center, P.O. Box 950, Amarillo, 79176-0001 or call 379-7039.

Wheeler Chamber's second annual Fall Festival to be held Saturday

Cards force final showdown with 1-0 win

By PAUL LeBAR
AP Sports Writer

ST. LOUIS (AP)— Those ready to write off the St. Louis Cardinals just because they lost two straight National League playoff games must have forgotten John Tudor's grit.

"He pitched with both his heart and his head," catcher Tony Pena said after Tudor held off the San Francisco Giants for 7 1/3 innings of St. Louis' tension-packed, 1-0 victory Tuesday night. "I've never seen him pitch any better. Everything he threw he was keeping low."

Tudor, while advancing St. Louis to tonight's decisive game in a playoff series tied at three games each, escaped several San Francisco threats.

"I changed speeds and moved the ball around," said Tudor, who threw 118 pitches. "Tonight's performance really wasn't any better for me than Game 2 (a 5-0 defeat) except for 800 feet in home runs I gave up then."

The lone run Tudor needed to prevail against a power-laden Giants' lineup came gift-wrapped in the second inning.

Pena, behind on a 1-2 count against loser Dave Dravecky, hit a leadoff line drive to shallow right field that for seconds appeared ready to be caught. But San Francisco right fielder Candy Maldonado, after first losing the ball in the lights, also lost his feet and Pena ended up with a triple as the ball bounced to the wall.

"I thought I hit the ball hard, but I thought he (Maldonado) was going to catch it," Pena said.

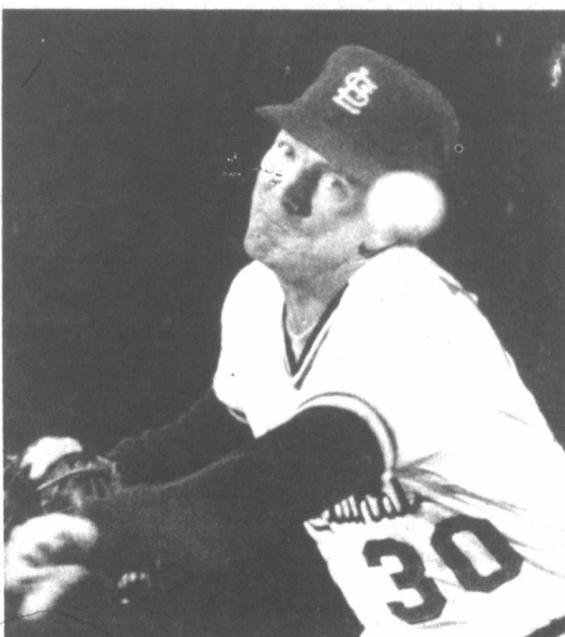

"Somebody up there must be looking out for us, because it was like a stroke of good fortune, that's for sure," he said. "I hope He is looking out for us again in Game 7. We need all the help we can get."

Once Pena was perched at third base, the Cardinals got the run home on Jose Oquendo's short sacrifice fly to right after Willie McGee grounded out to third base.

"With him (Tudor) coming up, you've got to do that," St. Louis Manager Whitey Herzog said of third-base coach Nick Leyva's decision to send Pena, who slid around catcher Bob Melvin's attempted tag at home plate. "I (always) send him in that situation. I don't care if he's out by 10 feet."

A raucous, towel-waving Busch Stadium crowd that cheered Pena's run had moments before watched McGee put an end to a serious San Francisco threat.

"I knew I was going to catch it. I feel in this ballpark, I should catch everything," McGee said of a two-on, one-out low shot off

John Tudor hurls Cards to win.

Jose Uribe's bat he speared with a running catch. "I got a good jump on it. That was the key."

The catch allowed Tudor to breathe easier, but not for long. After Pena gunned down Robby Thompson on an attempted steal following Thompson's walk to start the San Francisco's third.

The Giants went down in order in the fourth, but trouble arose again in the fifth. This time, Melvin and Uribe singled to put runners at first and second with none out.

Cardinals third baseman Terry Pendleton eased the pressure by picking up Dravecky's attempted sacrifice bunt and throwing to shortstop Ozzie Smith, who was covering the third base, for a forceout.

"It's Tony Pena's call," Tudor said of the close play, which was hotly disputed by San Francisco third base coach Don Zimmer. "Terry decided to go third, and I'm glad he did."

Jeffrey Leonard started the Giants' sixth with a single but was forced at second on Maldonado's grounder and Tudor retired the next two batters.

Tudor yielded the final six hits, each a single, to Melvin to start the seventh. But neither Bob Brenly in a pinch-hit role nor Thompson could drive pinch runner Eddie Milner home after Uribe sacrificed.

Tudor left after walking Leonard on four pitches with one out in the eighth, setting up an unusual finish that had Cardinals relief pitcher Todd Worrell in right field.

"That's the fourth time I've done it. I did it twice last year and twice this year," said Worrell, who moved to the outfield as Ken Dayley notched the final two outs. "You just get kind of used to it."

Pitchers in Game 7 tonight will Danny Cox, coming back on three days rest after losing Game 4, for St. Louis, against Atlee Ham-maker, who had no decision as San Francisco's starter in Game 3.

Lady Harvesters rally past Dumas

Pampa remains only unbeaten team in District 1-4A race

By L.D. STRATE
Sports Editor

Pampa's Lady Harvesters survived a slapstick first game to turn back a determined Dumas squad 9-15, 15-11, 15-8, Tuesday night in McNeely Fieldhouse.

Pampa Coach Mike Lopez said the pressure of a perfect 8-0 District 1-4A record may have contributed to the Lady Harvesters' ragged start in the opener.

"We came out flat that first game, but I think it was due to our unbeaten record. As you keep winning, the pressure keeps building, but we came back like a championship team," Lopez said.

Dumas jumped out quickly to an 8-0 lead and held off a Pampa surge before scoring the final three points for the win. Few things went right for the Lady Harvesters early in the first game as several of their dig attempts sailed into the net and three serves went out of bounds. Lob shots by Dumas fell untouched while Dumas' frontline of April Garrett, Christa Perry and Sherry Garbler turned back numerous Pampa spikes.

Then, almost as soon as the first game was history, the Lady Harvesters started conducting a school of their own on proper volleyball techniques.

Led by the hitting of Tanya Lidy and Yolanda Brown, the Lady Harvesters regained their old form and trailed only once the next two games. Dumas, however, never quit and made several strong runs at Pampa before Lidy put the Demonettes on ice with three straight points the third game.

Lidy and Brown gave Dumas fits with a combination of spikes and dinks while Lisa Lindsey served four winning points in the match. Both Lidy and Brown had three spikes each along with a number of perfectly-timed blocks. Keitha Clark and Jeane Macon turned in solid performances at the net.

Pampa is now 9-0 in district play and 14-8 overall. Dumas drops to 6-2 and 14-12.

With five matches remaining and a three-game lead in the 1-4A standings, the Lady Harvesters travel to Lubbock Saturday to play Dunbar.

"Another victory means we're a step closer to clinching district," Lopez said. "We just have to keep punching away."

Dumas won the junior varsity match 15-9, 15-11.

Patriots sign Flutie

FOXBORO, Mass. (AP)— Doug Flutie wanted to come home. Raymond Berry wanted to win. So the quarterback and the coach got together.

Berry, New England's coach, plans to start Flutie against the Houston Oilers on Sunday, just five days after the Patriots obtained the former Boston College star from the Chicago Bears.

Barring an end to the NFL players' strike, Sunday's games will mark the third week of action with replacement players. Dissatisfaction with quarterbacks Bob Bleier and Todd Whitten prompted Tuesday's trade of an undisclosed draft choice for Flutie.

"These games count and we have two very young, inexperienced quarterbacks," Berry said. "The strike seems like it's going to be a long one and we can't sit around on our rear ends. We got to get something done."

Syracuse 5-0 for first time since 1960

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
AP Football Writer

Syracuse University is 5-0 for the first time since 1960.

If Syracuse goes 6-0, there will be some comparisons with the 1959 team because the Orangemen not only won their first six games that year, but went on to win the national championship, as well.

For Syracuse to go 6-0, the Orangemen will have to beat Penn State on Saturday in the Carrier Dome.

"We're playing the defending national champions and the top team perennially in the East," Coach Dick MacPherson says. "From that, we'll be able to see just what kind of team we are."

Syracuse traditionally has been a solid defensive team, but MacPherson calls this year's unit, led by 260-pound senior nose guard Ted Gregory, "the best defense we've ever had. We're 5-0 because of the way our defense has come on. I never thought we'd be this good this soon."

Syracuse leads the nation in rushing defense, is tied for sixth in scoring defense and ranks eighth in total defense. Penn State's offense is averaging 31.3 points and 434.3 yards a game and tailback Blair Thomas is the nation's seventh-leading rusher at 125.3 yards a game and fifth in all-purpose rushing at 173.17.

It's the game of the year in the East and MacPherson, like Penn State's Joe Paterno, believes that "the East is on the rise. Only one conference is better — the Southeastern Conference."

MacPherson also doesn't want to sneak up on anybody. He wouldn't mind seeing the Orangemen in the Top Twenty every week.

"I'm different from some other coaches; I just love the rankings," he says. "I really don't care where we're ranked, as long as we're in them. When you're in the rankings, you get all the publicity and recognition that a Top Twenty team gets."

Television helped create National Football League strike

IT'S AMUSING, AND YET DISGUSTING, to hear the TV network broadcast crews criticizing the quality of the talent performing with such enthusiasm during the current strike. But it is the normal thing to not accept blame.

The majority of the House of Representatives blame the president for budget deficits, knowing full-well only the House can appropriate and spend taxpayers' dollars.

The network hirings blame the team owners for the strike, knowing full-well the argument is over the almost immoral amounts of money television makes available for broadcast rights. Strikes of athletes were unheard of prior to arrival of the big eye, only an occasional hold-out who didn't want to participate in pre-season practice creating any stir.

So, when you get right down to the bottom line, television is wallowing around in a bit of programming they perceive as a mess, but a mess they themselves created, no one else. They sit around and openly criticize the quality of the game and the level of performance while expressing boredom.

Most fans think it is exciting to see athletes again performing with enthusiasm and spirit. One has to wonder why television doesn't have a critique immediately following every network sitcom or docu-drama. Was it good? Was it boring? Could the camera people and film editors have done a better job? Should the network have paid more money, hired better people, and provided a more entertaining program? What a lovely glass house TV lives in, one which casts bricks in self-protection, like the U.S. Congress.

THE PEOPLE WHO COULD wind up hurting the most when the strike ends, if it does, are the bookmakers. Since the owners are unrelenting, as they should be, in stating the games by the replacement teams will count toward the championships, how would you like to be a bookie who gave 100-1 odds on a Green Bay or a Houston or a New Orleans before the season started. And the very fact that the players union wants these games not to count in the standings, poses a question about whether some players might have placed a few shuffles on the final standings, too.

AS PART OF THE FOOTBALL hype, we hear about the players with 4.3 and 4.2 speed over 40 yards. Forget that hogwash. When the world's fastest human being, Canadian Ben Johnson, set his 9.83 record in the 100-meter last month, technology was able to break his time down for 10 meter splits. For the first 40 meters, translated into yards, his time was 4.33. So if those times the NFL scouts attribute to some hot prospect were for real, they would be able to beat Johnson! And they generally time them with some playing equipment on, too. Just some slow thumbs on a stopwatch... Or wishful imaginations. THE GOOD NEWS IS that high school girls are participating in sports in greater number, practicing harder and getting more support than a decade ago according to a national poll sponsored by the Wilson Sporting Goods Company.

The bad news is, according to 43 percent of the coaches who responded, alcohol use among the girls is becoming a more serious problem and 51 percent said the girls are harder to coach today than 10 years ago, generally because of lack of discipline. The mail survey covered coaches from schools of all sizes, both urban and rural.

Other findings revealed that health and fitness played little part in the girls' participating, only three percent with that concern. But sixty-five percent played for fun and enjoyment. Team sports are most popular; student support is "somewhat" or "much" weaker say 40 percent, while 38 percent claim it is stronger; fifty-five percent say drug use is a serious problem, but only 18 percent say it is becoming worse, with suburban coaches more concerned than those in city or rural schools.

AND SATURDAY HAS BEEN designated as National Officials Day by the National Federation of High Schools. Which leads to this piece of anonymously authored poetry, with apologies to Joyce Kilmer, a little piece titled: "The Referee."

I think that I shall never see
A satisfactory referee,
About whose head a halo
shines,
Whose merits rate reporters' lines.
One who calls them as they are
And not as I should wish, by far.
A gent who leans not either way
But lets the kids decide the play.
A guy who'll sting the coach who yaps
From Siwash High or Old Mil-saps.
Poems are made by men like me,
But only God could referee!

NFL owners reject latest offer to end strike

By DAVID GINSBURG
AP Sports Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—Their hopes for a quick settlement dashed, the NFL Players Association must now cope with yet another day in which the union's solidarity will be severely tested.

The NFLPA's offer to return to work under certain conditions, including binding arbitration on unsolved issues, was rejected Tuesday by the Management Council. The union rejected management's counterproposal, so now the league's striking players face another deadline—return to work today by 1 p.m. or forfeit another week's pay.

"It doesn't matter how many times we try, they just refuse us at every turn," union chief Gene Upshaw said. "What we have is a threat to see if the players will break rank. They're bent on busting the union."

Several players, including Washington Redskins defensive end Dexter Manley, New York Giants linebacker Lawrence Taylor and New England Patriots quarterback Doug Flutie, were expected to cross picket lines today. The number of defections rose to 138 Tuesday when five more players, three Pittsburgh Steelers and two Los Angeles Raiders, joined their teams.

That meant about 9 percent of the 1,585 players under union jurisdiction have crossed picket lines since the strike began Sept. 22.

But two teams, the Washington Redskins and the Kansas City Chiefs, who have yet to have any players cross picket lines, voted Tuesday to honor the strike for at least another week.

Tuesday's action on the negotiating front featured volleys between Upshaw and management head Jack Donlan, but no agreement and no new date for the talks to resume. Upshaw said he expected to stay in contact with Donlan by telephone, but left the next move to the Management Council.

"It's in his court now," Upshaw said. The day started when the owners considered, then rejected, the players' demand for mediation and then binding arbitration. The owners also insisted that returning players be bound by the 1982 agreement for as long as it would take to put a new agreement in place.

Upshaw countered by saying he would accept mediation on the key issue of free agency. But he demanded arbitration on the other issues and said there would have to be a time limit on how long the players would operate under the 1982 agreement.

"I'm trying to get the players back to work, but under some conditions in which we can all live under," he said. "We're willing to work under the old agreement for some period of time, but at some point there has to be a cutoff."

Rouse, Morris garner SWC honors

By HARRY KING
AP Sports Writer

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP)—James Rouse's classification as a junior should have an asterisk.

It might jog some memories. "Since he's listed as a junior, people tend to forget he's not halfway through his second year yet," Arkansas Coach Ken Hatfield said. "If he were a sophomore, people would be calling him a phenom."

Two years ago, Rouse gained 550 yards as a freshman, averaged 5.6 yards per try and was named Southwest Conference Offensive Newcomer of the Year.

He gained 105 yards before he suffered a broken bone in the second game of 1986 and did not play again until a month ago. Rouse still has a redshirt year available and can apply for the extra year of eligibility at any time.

On Saturday night in Lubbock, he had the second best game of his college career—111 yards on 16 carries in a 31-0 victory over Texas Tech. For his performance, Rouse was named The Associated Press Offensive Player of the Week in the SWC.

The Defensive Player of the Week is Alex Morris of Texas A&M. A cornerback, Morris lined up as a linebacker much of the time against Houston and came up with 11 unassisted tackles, two assists and five sacks. A&M, upset the previous week by Tech, beat Houston 22-17.

"I think James Rouse is as good as any back in the Southwest Conference," Hatfield said. "I thought that when he was a freshman. He's playing much better now than when he was a freshman."

"He's improved tremendously as a blocker. He's averaged 5.2 yards per carry and scored six touchdowns and has become extra valuable on kickoff returns. He has the innate ability to make the first guy miss him. Five tacklers missed him on his long run against Texas Tech. He just kept going."

Larry Brinson, who coaches the Arkansas running backs, saw the run which netted 28 yards and set up the Razorbacks' second field goal.

"I was standing right there on the sideline," Brinson said. "I think I took every step with him."

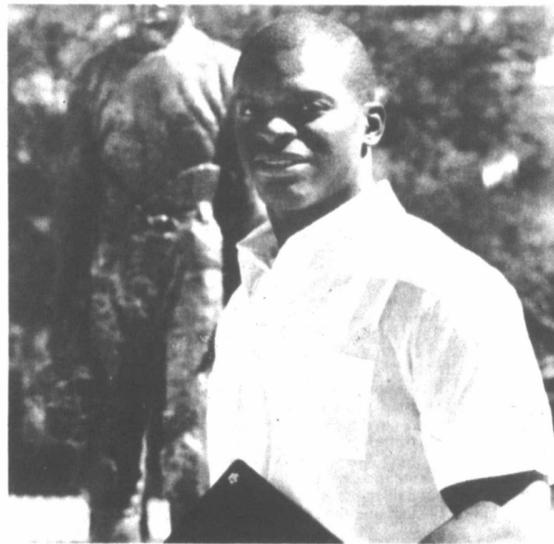

It was almost like a busted play, Brinson said, because halfback Joe Johnson missed his block on Tech's defensive end. Rouse made the defensive end miss him.

"James just tightroped down the sideline. A couple of guys went to grabbing on him and he pulled away from them. The safety jumped on him and he drug him about 6 yards. He really played with that intensity we had been looking for."

"You lose some of that intensity when you don't play," Brinson said. "When you're around 220 and can generate 4.4 speed, you can run over some people. He really came into his own last week. We expect him to have games like that every week."

Rouse made a first down on 10 of his 16 carries.

Golf report almost ready

By L.D. STRATE
Sports Editor

City Commissioners are moving a par 3, tee shot closer to announcing a public hearing date on the Pampa Public Golf Course issue.

City Manager Bob Hart and his staff have been working on a 25-page analysis report on the golf course and he hopes to have it finished and ready to present to the Commissioners next week.

"It looks like a pretty good draft," Hart said. "I'll be ready to finalize it after double-checking all the figures."

Hart said the report contains market budget projects, construction costs and other facts and figures on the two proposed sites for the course.

One of the sites for the planned course is located south of Pampa on city-owned property while the other is situated in the Rolling Hills Addition north of Pampa.

Although site selection is important, Hart said the main issue concerning the Commissioners is the operational cost of a public course on an annual basis.

"What we've heard mostly from the people is about expenses and revenue on the course from year-to-year," Hart said. "So that area is what we're spending most of our time on."

Last April, voters approved construction of a public course in a county-wide election. City Commissioners, however, chose to study the issue further since the south site is owned by the City. Bob Keller, who owns the property at the north site, agreed to donate his land to the city if a public course is constructed there.

Hart plans to release the analysis report to the public if the Commissioners approve it.

"We want the community to have the facts and figures ahead of time so we can have a legitimate public hearing on the pros and cons of the issue," Hart said.

One public hearing is planned and others may follow if the Commissioners feel it is necessary, Hart said.

"A lot depends on what the Commissioners hear at the first public hearing before making a decision on having any more," he added.

Commissioners have spent several weeks studying the golf course issue and discussing various alternatives of funding the project.

"It's a large undertaking," said Commissioner Ray Hupp. "We're taking a very close look at it."

In the April election, the referendum called on Gray County to donate manpower, equipment and $300,000 to the project while the Pampa Public Golf Association pledged to kick in over $100,000 in previous donations and manpower. County funding will come from the $2.9 million sale of Highland General Hospital.

Greenspan: trade deficit 'bottoming out'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal Reserve Board Chairman Alan Greenspan says the nation's massive trade deficit is "bottoming out" with U.S. industries selling more abroad and American consumers beginning to shift their buying habits.

But even though imported goods cost more with the weaker U.S. dollar, Greenspan said Tuesday that he does not see a major rekindling of 1970s-style inflation.

He suggested in remarks to the Northeast-Midwest congressional leadership council that recent increases in long-term interest rates reflect inflationary concerns in financial markets that are not borne out by statistics. Greenspan said he is encouraged by recent increases in the volume of U.S. exports — increases not entirely borne out by government trade figures which focus on dollar amounts rather than on trade volumes.

In July, the U.S. trade deficit swelled to $16.5 billion, a one-month record. The Commerce Department today said the deficit was down to $15.7 billion in August. The improvement was paced by a 4.2 percent drop in imports to $35.9 billion. Exports showed a 3.7 percent decline, falling to $20.2 billion, their lowest level since last February.

"We're beginning now to see people shifting their buying patterns from foreign sourcing to domestic sourcing," Greenspan said.

The dollar has declined more than 40 percent against the Japanese yen, the West German mark and other major currencies since mid-1985. A weaker dollar makes imported goods more expensive at home and U.S. products cheaper abroad.

Greenspan also said a recent increase in overall domestic capital investment "looks to be a fairly significant and sustainable trend."

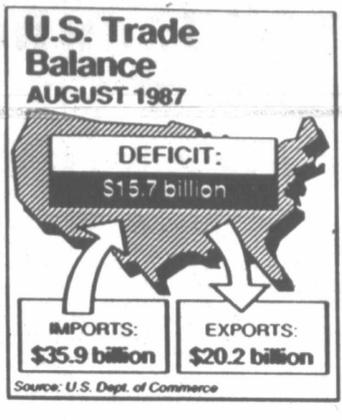

The central bank chief hailed recent increases in U.S. manufacturing productivity as "a sort of silent revolution which has major implications."

He cited recent sharp price increases in steel scrap prices as a sign not of renewed inflation but of increased competitiveness of the nation's heavy industry.

"We don't yet see any semblances of raw shortages or tightness in markets.... We are not yet approaching full capacity of the system," he said.

Greenspan said fears in financial markets that inflation may return to the high levels of the late 1970s and early 1980s are "lacking in specific underlying statistical support."

Critics challenge Tip's memoir memories

By CHRISTOPHER CALLAHAN Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — House Republican Leader Robert Michel, columnist William Safire and Kennedy confidante David Powers say that Tip got it all wrong.

They, along with Sen. Barbara Mikulski and columnists Rowland Evans and Robert Novak, are among the figures who are challenging the accuracy of former House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill's published memoirs.

As Mikulski, D-Md., puts it, "Tip got his memoir mixed up."

Tip, busy on the road selling his book, could not be reached for comment. He's been promoting it in Cleveland, Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Washington and Chicago.

But his memory — and memoirs — are defended by his son and the columnist who helped O'Neill write Man of the House: The Life and Political Memoirs of Speaker Tip O'Neill.

Right or wrong, the book is selling faster than the publisher can print copies, even as critics question the accuracy of some of Tip's tales.

Some of the criticism comes from predictable corners. Conservative columnists Rowland Evans and Robert Novak called "an outrageous, wretched libel" O'Neill's claim that the pair offered to give him "great press notices" in exchange for information.

Michel argues that O'Neill's account of the Grenada invasion conflicts with his public statements at the time.

Powers, an aide to the late President Kennedy, denies O'Neill's story that Kennedy O'Donnell, another JFK aide, told the former speaker that he heard other shots fired during the Kennedy assassination but did not tell the Warren Commission.

Mikulski's denial is in response to O'Neill's assertion that she and two other congresswomen were angry at him for endorsing Geraldine Ferraro over them for the 1984 vice presidential nomination.

Not so, she says.

Historians say discrepancies are not uncommon in political memoirs. They say they don't assume that books based largely on authors' recollections are entirely accurate.

"No decent historian is going to rest comfortably just on the basis of what Tip O'Neill (or anyone else) says about anything," said Carl Brauer, a historian at the John F. Kennedy School of Government at Harvard University.

"You get a good picture of the person himself, whether it is (Harry) Truman or O'Neill, the way he sees things today, the way he remembers things... but you ought to be very careful about specifics," adds Alonzo L. Hamby, an Ohio University historian.

Some critics blame the method used to write the book. The former speaker told his recollections to author William Novak, who wrote the book.

Safire, columnist for The New York Times, criticizes that method in questioning the accuracy of O'Neill's statement that China's leader, Deng Xiaoping, once told him that China was constantly at odds with Taiwan simply because "it's something our people love to hear about."

Ghostwriter Novak said the alleged inaccuracies would be in the book even if O'Neill wrote it himself.

House bill bans dumping of plastics at sea

WASHINGTON (AP) — Operators of commercial and recreational vessels, and eventually Navy ships, would face fines of up to $25,000 for dumping plastic garbage at sea under legislation approved by the House.

The bill was passed Tuesday 386-14 as lawmakers warned that the commonly used disposal method is killing marine life and damaging seaside tourism.

Rep. Gerry E. Studds, D-Mass., chief sponsor of the bill, said his legislation "proposes to enact into law what should be common sense."

Texas Land Commissioner Garry Mauro, an active supporter of the legislation, called the House vote a big step forward.

"It kicks all the pressure on the Senate," he said, from his office in Austin.

"If the legislation passed by the House passes the Senate we will have taken a gigantic step toward solving the beach litter problem," he added.

Rep. James J. Howard, D-N.J., said the plastic pollution problem has reached crisis proportions.

"There is simply too much plastic in the ocean and it's time to do something about it," Howard said.

"If we don't take action, we'll be asking future generations to live with this problem for 450 years," the estimated time it takes some plastics to break down, Howard explained.

The proposal would create the necessary law to enforce in U.S. waters an international plastic-dumping treaty.

The treaty, sent to the Senate for ratification by President Reagan in February, has been approved by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and is expected to be ratified easily by the full Senate.

The Studds bill would bar the disposal of plastic trash by commercial and recreational vessels and dumping by foreign vessels within 200 miles of the U.S. coast and within inland waters like the Great Lakes.

The measure also would expand the current three-mile dumping ban on other garbage to 12 miles for everything except finely ground trash.

Navy and other government vessels, which are blamed in large part for the plastic pollution problem, have five years to comply with the law or ask for an extension.

The Navy originally opposed that amendment, but went along grudgingly after it was approved at the subcommittee level.

Marine scientists warn that six-pack rings, plastic bags, synthetic ropes and other plastic junk tossed overboard float on the ocean surface, becoming lethal objects for sea birds and marine mammals that mistake the objects for food and choke or become entangled in them.

Tons of floating plastics are blamed for the deaths of 1 million sea birds and 100,000 sea turtles and other marine mammals annually, says a House Merchant Marine and Fisheries subcommittee report.

And lawmakers representing sea-coast areas that rely on tourism say the plastics that eventually wash ashore are an eyesore and a deterrent to visitors.

"Many of my constituents who normally spend August at the beach returned early because they simply did not want to see the coast in such a filthy condition," said Rep. Curt Weldon, R-Pa.

No one spoke against the measure, but Weldon said he was worried the Coast Guard has not been given additional resources to enforce the ban.

Researchers find 'master control' of blood pressure

By PAUL RAEBURN AP Science Editor

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Researchers have identified a pea-sized cluster of brain cells that serves as the master control for blood pressure, a finding they say may lead to new treatments for hypertension.

The identification of the control area also should speed research into the underlying causes of high blood pressure, Dr. Donald Reis of Cornell University Medical Center in New York City said Tuesday.

An estimated 58 million Americans suffer from high blood pressure, which can lead to heart attacks and strokes, according to the American Heart Association.

In 90 percent of those cases, the cause of the hypertension is unknown.

Reis said that increasing evidence suggests that only adrenalin-producing brain cells in the master control region govern high blood pressure. Abnormalities in those cells could be the cause of the large number of unexplained cases of hypertension, he said.

He noted, however, that the abnormality may lie not with the production of adrenalin but with the production of other yet-to-be-identified substances by those cells.

Other researchers have helped to identify the tiny region, called the rostral ventrolateral medulla, but Reis said he and his colleagues were the first to suggest that the adrenalin-producing cells are the critically important ones.

Reis described his findings at the American Heart Association's annual high blood pressure meeting.

The area lies in the lower brain stem, near where the brain connects to the spinal cord, Reis said. Nearby regions control breathing and other automatic functions, he said.

Dr. Edward Frohlich, chairman of the heart association meeting, said that blood pressure is controlled by many factors, but "this is one important mechanism that has been worked out."

Reis' most recent experiments suggest that the widely prescribed anti-hypertension drug clonidine exerts its effect at least in part by acting on these brain cells.

Doctors had thought that it affected only blood vessels, not the brain.

The drug attaches to certain chemicals called receptors on the outside of the cells, thus altering their function.

The existence of the receptors led Reis and his colleagues to search for their natural function, in the absence of clonidine. The researchers subsequently found a clonidine-like substance that is produced naturally in the brain.

"We find there is this material in the brain that may act to regulate blood pressure," he said.

The isolation and study of this natural substance could lead to the development of new anti-hypertension drugs, Reis said.
