Panamanian tanker hits mine, convoy still moving

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — A Panamanian supertanker struck a floating mine today in the Gulf of Oman just outside the Strait of Hormuz, shipping sources said.

There was no immediate word on the extent of damage, although sources said a preliminary assessment indicated it was not serious.

The ship was identified by sources at Fujairah, a port on the United Arab Emirates' Gulf of Oman coast, as the 247,347-ton tanker Texaco Caribbean, under charter to the U.S. petroleum company.

The ship hit the mine at about 3:15 p.m. (8:15 a.m. EDT), eight miles northeast of Fujairah and about 30 miles south of the entrance to the Strait of Hormuz, gateway to the Persian Gulf.

The tanker was loaded and "oil is leaking from a hole about a meter below the waterline," one source said. The sources spoke on condition of anonymity.

The Fujairah area is a major offshore anchorage for tankers moving to and from oil terminals in the Persian Gulf, with dozens of ships at anchor much of the time.

It also was the departure point for the Kuwaiti tankers being escorted in U.S. navy convoys into the Gulf.

Meanwhile, three Kuwaiti tankers and their U.S. warship escorts were reported anchored off the Persian Gulf's Arabian coast today after a secret overnight stop. Shipping sources said earlier the convoy was moving at slow speed.

Brent Sadler, a British television journalist aboard a chartered vessel 40 miles north of Bahrain, said the convoy apparently had not budged since it anchored in the area about dusk on Sunday.

He spoke to The Associated Press by ship-to-shore telephone at 3 p.m. today.

Iran repeatedly has threatened to attack the U.S. warships, and said on Sunday that the gulf would "remain full of mines" as long as the superpowers stay in the region.

The convoy is bound for Kuwait's main offshore loading terminal at Al Ahmadi.

Off Bahrain, a wooden dhow, a private commercial craft, hit a floating mine early today, other shipping sources said. They said no casualties were reported and the dhow apparently did not sink. The incident occurred in coastal waters, some distance from the route used by the convoy a day earlier.

The overnight anchorage was in keeping with the Navy's decision to guide the tankers through the most hazardous parts of the 550-mile voyage during daylight, when helicopters and ships can scout ahead for mines or other signs of trouble.

"They detected Iranian military activity between Farsi Island and where they were," said one source.

Mines were encountered off Bahrain on previous occasions. Two children were killed this year while examining a mine that washed up on a beach.

Farsi, a tiny island in the northern gulf, has been used in the past by Iran to launch speedboat-borne commando attacks on ships.

On July 24, one of two reflagged Kuwaiti tankers being escorted near

City Commission will hold hearing on city park plans

The Tampa City Commission will hold the first of two public hearings on a proposed master plan for developments at Recreation Park during its regular meeting at 6 p.m. Tuesday.

The proposed master plan, recommended by the Parks and Recreation Advisory Board, includes construction of a 4-plex softball complex, a campground and a hiking trail and renovation of the former City Lake.

Total estimated cost of the construction projects is approximately $1.3 million. But the cost would depend on whether the projects were undertaken at one time or spread out over a number of years.

That decision, contingent on the commission's acceptance of the plan, would be made at a later date and after more studies. Also to be decided upon is the matter of setting priorities for the various projects and determining how to pay for the developments.

Other goals listed in the master plan include prohibition of off-road vehicles from the site, clearing of unsightly brush, increasing the frequency of mowing and general grounds maintenance, improving roads and drainage, installing fresh water supply lines, providing more restroom facilities and landscaping.

Recreation Park, located east of Tampa north of Highway 60 at the area commonly referred to as "the rodeo grounds," has 134 acres, approximately 48 percent of the city's parks acreage. Less than 50 percent of the park is currently developed.

Thousands of black miners join strike

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — The black mineworkers' union said today that 280,000 miners joined a strike that could cripple gold and coal industries, the principal source of South Africa's export earnings.

The National Union of Mineworkers called the strike, South Africa's largest legal walkout ever, to demand increased wages and benefits. Strike-related violence was reported at two mines, with at least seven miners injured.

"The stoppage is all over the country," said Marcel Golding, spokesman for the union, the nation's largest. "On the mines where union support is strong the stoppage is 100 percent and where the support is weaker large numbers have also taken part in the strike."

He said "at least 60,000" of the strikers were not union members, but had joined the walkout to show support.

Union officials were instructed to begin strike balloting today at 12 other mines that produce platinum, chrome, uranium and diamonds.

Roughly 80 percent of South Africa's exports are derived from mining. Gold alone provides more than half the country's foreign currency earnings.

The union claims 261,901 paid-up members and 370,000 signed up. It says members voted overwhelmingly to strike 28 gold and 18 coal mines, most of which are in the eastern Transvaal province and the central Orange Free State. The union also called for strikes at mines where it is not recognized officially.

The Chamber of Mines, which represents the nation's top six mining houses, says the union has only 170,000 members out of a black mining work force of 600,000 men.

Anglo American Corp., which produced 39 percent of South Africa's total gold output of 638.2 tons in 1986, said today all of its mines were affected by the strike.

A company spokesman said fighting broke out between strikers and those wishing to work. Six workers were injured, said the spokesman, who did not say where the fighting took place.

Melbourne police charge military academy dropout in shooting spree

MELBOURNE, Australia (AP) — A 19-year-old former military cadet went on a half-hour shooting rampage, fatally shooting six people and wounding 18 others as he crept along a dark suburban street, police said today.

Julian Knight was charged today with murder, and Chief Magistrate John Dugan ordered him jailed until a court appearance Aug. 17. An army spokesman in Canberra said Knight had been asked in June to leave the royal military college Duntroon, Australia's equivalent of West Point.

The gunman, dressed in military garb, moved stealthily behind bushes and trees Sunday night, picking off pedestrians and motorists with deadly accuracy, witnesses said.

Police spokesman Senior Constable Wayne Wilson said Knight used a pump-action shotgun and two semi-automatic rifles. Knight was arrested by a wounded traffic police officer after the gunman ran out of ammunition.

"He was just going 'Bang! Bang! Bang!' at the cars coming towards him," said an eyewitness, who refused to give his name.

Army spokesman Col. Ian Edwardson said Knight had undergone basic weapons training during his six months at Duntroon. Knight was asked to resign from the 18-month-course in June after being deemed unsuitable as an officer candidate, said Edwardson.

The shootings began at about 10 p.m. in the Melbourne suburb of Clifton Hill, when a woman was killed as she sat in her car at a gas station.

"He hit 10 cars, killed three men and two women instantly. A fourth man died in hospital later," Wilson said.

A police helicopter hovering over the street was hit by gunfire and made an emergency landing on a nearby field, but the officers aboard weren't injured. Several cars were also hit by gunfire.

Eyewitness said the street looked like a battlefield, strewn with dead and wounded motorists and pedestrians. The body of a dead motorcyclist lay in the street entangled in his cycle.

Ambulances, police cars and a SWAT

team rushed to the scene

"One woman though she had come across a road crash," Wilson said. "She left her car and was shot as she knelt beside one of the bodies." She was listed in serious condition at a nearby hospital, he said. Earlier reports had erroneously said the woman was dead.

Nine of those treated at hospitals were later released, police said.

Tim Woolford-Smith, 35, said he and his wife Cheryl were trapped in their car for 35 minutes as the gunman stalked his victims.

David Celement, 24, said his car was flagged down by a bloodstained man who grabbed his arm and said, "You must get these people to hospital." Celement said he saw the bodies of two men and a young woman on the sidewalk.

Police spokesman Wilson said the killer was finally captured by a wounded traffic policeman after the gunman had run out of ammunition and was trying to escape along a railway line.

Wright says Guatemalan plan must prevail over Reagan's WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration's peace plan for Central America should take a back seat to an agreement signed by the leaders of that region's five countries, says House Speaker Jim Wright.

"I think it's the Guatemalan plan that has to prevail," said the Democratic leader, who helped the Reagan administration draft its plan. "We never had the impression that we possessed the almighty wisdom to dictate in precise terms what arrangements should be made in Central America."

"From the very beginning, President Reagan and I both emphasized that it must be a Central American plan," Wright said Sunday on NBC-TV's "Meet the Press."

Reagan said the United States will be "as helpful as possible" in working for peace in Central America but stopped short of endorsing the agreement reached in Guatemala last week.

"I welcome this commitment to peace and democracy by the five Central American presidents, and I hope it will lead to peace in Central America and democracy in Nicaragua," Reagan said in a statement issued Saturday by the White House.

However, he said the United States would help where it was "consistent with our interests and the interests of the Nicaraguan resistance."

Vice President George Bush, meanwhile, reiterated his support for the Contras during an interview that aired Sunday night on a Miami radio station.

"We are not going to leave the Contras twisting in the wind," Bush said on WINZ-AM.

Asked about the Central American plan, Bush said analysts shouldn't put much faith in Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega, one of the pact's signers.

The Central American peace plan, signed Friday in Guatemala City by the presidents of Nicaragua, Guatemala, Honduras, El Salvador and Costa Rica, calls for a cease-fire within 90 days in the Nicaraguan and El Salvador civil wars, steps to assure democracy throughout Central America, an end to outside aid to rebel forces and an end to the use of any country's territory by rebels trying to destabilize another country.

The administration peace plan applies only to Nicaragua and would bind the leftist Sandinista government to democratic reforms in connection with the arrangement of a cease-fire within 60 days between the Contra rebels and Managua.

The administration proposal also says the democratic reforms must occur by Sept. 30, the same day the fiscal 1987 budget year ends. The administration presumably would seek more money from Congress for military assistance to the Contras if the Sandinistas fail to meet that deadline.

Bullets miss trucker but shatter window in latest highway shooting

LOS ANGELES (AP) - A motor scooter passenger who ignored police pleas for calm on the road was in critical condition today after being stabbed in a traffic dispute, one of several weekend incidents on California highways and streets.

In other attacks, gun-toting motorists shattered windows on a big rig truck and two automobiles in separate incidents, bringing to 50 the number of violent acts on California's roadways since mid-June.

Meanwhile, in New York, a bare-chested man allegedly fired as many as 10 shots from an automatic rifle into the ground after his pickup truck was sideswiped on a city bridge early today.

He said he was on his way to California to find the highway killer, police said.

"He was saying all kinds of crazy things," said Officer Serge Ruggio, one of three who arrested Robert Edward John, 32, of Dingmans Ferry, Pa.

Four automatic weapons were recovered from the man's vehicle, police said. In the most recent attack in California, Douglas Robert Speth, 25, was injured when he got off a motor scooter after the driver of a red Corvette allegedly cut in front of him early today in Newport Beach, said police Lt. Tim Newman.

"Doug got off the scooter and said, 'Hey, what's the problem,'" said Bret Hart, 18, of Simi Valley, driver of the scooter. "He slapped the driver on the back of the head."

A fight ensued and Speth was stabbed, Newman said.

Speth, of Newport Beach, was in critical condition at Western Medical Center, the hospital said.

Law enforcement officials have been pleading with motorists to avoid such confrontations for the past few weeks, as concern mounts over a rash of highway violence that appears to be spreading from Southern California.

Since mid-June, four people have been killed and 16 injured in verified attacks on California streets and highways, most of them involving guns.

men at Anglovaal Ltd., which also does not recognize the mine workers' union, fired rubber bullets Sunday night to disperse an "unruly mob" at its Lorraine Gold Mine in the Orange Free State. The company said one miner was treated for a leg wound.

Golding said union members had been holding a meeting at Lorraine when they were attacked by mine security.

Golding said the union knew of nine stewards at three gold mines who had been detained by police Sunday. Mine management confirmed eight of the detentions. Mining industry officials gave no overall estimate of how many workers were on strike.

There have been several previous walkouts by black workers larger than the current miners' strike, but they have been one- or two-day protests generally sparked by political demands and not related to contract negotiations.

Blacks do nearly all the underground work at mines, except blasting, while the industry's 26,000 white miners do supervisory and special jobs.

The Chamber says many miners are happy with the 15 percent to 23.4 percent wage increases implemented July 1. The union is demanding 30 percent across-the-board increases.

The union says black miners are paid an average $172 a month, one-sixth the average white miner's wage, and blacks have an average annual leave of 14 to 18 days, compared to 35 days for whites.

Under South Africa's apartheid system, the 5 million whites control the economy and maintain separate districts, schools and health services from the 25.6 million blacks, who have no vote in national affairs.

Troops kill two rebels near capital

MANILA, Philippines (AP) - Troops killed two Communist rebels near the capital today, and police said one officer was injured during a grenade attack on a Mindanao police station.

The attacks came one day after President Corason Aquino announced measures to curb violence, such as the Aug. 2 murder of a Cabinet member.

Also today, a Manila newspaper, Middyay, said Communist rebels denied killing the Cabinet member, Local Governments Secretary Jaime Ferrer, and blamed the murder on the CIA. But sources familiar with rebel operations questioned the report's authenticity.

Lt. Col. Leandro Mendoza, constabulary commander in Bulacan province, said troops killed the two rebels during an early morning raid at a fish farm about 20 miles north of Manila.

Mendoza said the rebels were believed to be part of a guerrilla force which killed two soldiers and wounded seven others during an Aug. 1 raid.

City starts new Clean-Up Campaign

By BOB HART
City Manager

This has certainly been an unusual year in conducting the Clean-Up Campaign.

Not only have we had problems with unusually heavy rainfall early in the spring but also high winds and tornadoes during mid-summer. Consequently, we have not completed the Clean-Up Campaign.

Therefore, we are planning to begin a new Clean-Up Campaign.

We will start with Ward 4 today and will stay in Ward 4 until it is completed. Then we have to go to Ward 3 and so forth. At this time, it looks as if we will have to spend five to six weeks in Ward 4.

For those who have items out now, please be patient with us. Also, if you have items that you would like to dispose of immediately, you can haul it to the landfill at no charge.

Again, I ask that as you place your tree limbs and other items that you wish to dispose of, that you do not place them next to the dumpster or gas meter, or on top of the water meter.

Also, I would like to request that you not place grass clippings in the holes or ruts in the alley. It causes problems when the Street Department needs to repair an alley. It also makes it difficult for the maintainer to blade the alleys properly.

Please put your grass clippings in a plastic bag and place it in the dumpster. This will make it easier for the Street Department to repair the alleys properly, thereby keeping the alleys in better condition for a longer period of time.

Another good reason for not discarding your clippings in the alley is that it causes an odor and gives mosquitoes a breeding ground. Your help with this would be very much appreciated.

And, finally, we are receiving a number of questions concerning the status on the golf course feasibility study.

We are continuing to work on the analysis. We have had an architect in town looking at potential sites and are awaiting the contractor's visit.

At this point, we are attempting to have the information together so that it can be presented to the City Commission for public hearing in early October.

I know that this has been an extremely long issue and one with a lot of interest, both for and against. We would ask for your continued patience so that we can provide accurate data to help the commission, and the community as a whole, make a decision on the golf course.

the island was damaged by a mine. Pentagon sources in Washington said Iran planted the explosive that blew a hole in the hull of the supertanker Bridgeton.

Shipping sources, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the convoy, which does not need to use deepwater channels, would steer well clear of Farsi Island.

On Sunday night, the convoy turned out most of its lights as it traveled single-file through the gulf.

Preceding the convoy up the gulf Sunday was a fourth U.S. warship, the guided missile cruiser Reeves, which was "exploring" the waters, the sources said.

The convoy was the second to travel up the gulf under a U.S. agreement to re-register 11 Kuwaiti tankers to afford them military protection. On Saturday the convoy passed safely through the Strait of Hormuz, where vessels steam within range of Iranian shore-based anti-ship missiles.

Iran accuses Kuwait of supporting Iraq, its foe in the 7-year-old gulf war. Each nation has attacked ships involved in commerce with the other.

In an interview broadcast Sunday by Tehran radio, Iranian Prime Minister Hussein Musavi issued new threats against foreign intervention in the region.

"As long as the superpowers intend to be present there and as long as they intend to act against countries of the region, the Persian Gulf will remain full of mines and continue to be a dangerous region for ships," he said in the broadcast monitored in Cyprus and London.

The convoy's biggest tanker, the 81,283-ton Sea Isle City, has been leading the single-file procession, evidently as a bulwark against floating mines.

Demonstrators end four-day pilgrimage-protest

AMARILLO (AP)—About 150 people, including a religious leader, a doctor, a biologist and an atheist, joined hands to commemorate the 42nd anniversary of the atomic bombing of Nagasaki, Japan and the end of their four-day Pantex Pilgrimage.

The Sunday memorial service at Pantex, the nation's assembly plant for nuclear warheads, ended the annual protest-pilgrimage.

"We are here not to pray for the Japanese who died in Nagasaki 42 years ago — though we can do that," said Bishop L.T. Matthiesen, head of the Catholic Diocese of Amarillo. "We are here not to pray for the Americans who died in other places at other times in World War II — though we can do that, too."

"We are here above all, to pray for a world living, not in peace, but in fear," the bishop said.

Matthiesen and the other Pantex protesters remembered Nagasaki, prayed and said they hoped for future peace through nuclear disarmament. They sang songs, swaying and smiling together. They made masks and scattered balloons, and finally they joined hands and marched toward the main gate of Pantex.

This year, Peace Camp organizers decided the protesters would march only to the gate and not over the gate as some had done during past demonstrations.

Les Breeding, a local Peace Camp organizer, said the group wanted to try something new, and not get the reputation of a group always being arrested.

The arrests usually bring more attention to the protesters, but Breeding said Sunday's march was no less effective than in years when protesters were arrested. Other protests around the nation, however, did result in arrests. More than 200 demonstrators were arrested Sunday at the Nevada Test Site, and 150 protesters were jailed when they attempted to force a one-day shutdown of a nuclear weapons plant in Colorado.

This year during the Pantex protest, more time was devoted to educating the public. Lectures were conducted Saturday at the Texas Tech University Health Sciences Center.

Other speakers during the four-day pilgrimage included Dr. Robert Bowman, former head of the Air Force Space Program, and Dr. Wes Jackson, a farmer, biologist and lecturer.

Bishop Matthiesen said he thinks someone else is siding with the peace activists.

"We go forth from here to pray and to work unceasingly for an end to fear, for an end to nuclear weapons, for an end to violence," the bishop said. "We are not alone as we continue that journey. God has promised to be with us. He is with us."

Father reluctantly ends hunt for son missing in accident

COMFORT (AP)—For three weeks, John Bankston Sr. prayed as he and thousands of volunteers searched for the body of his son among the mountains of debris deposited by the rampaging Guadalupe River.

On Sunday, Bankston sobbed as he admitted there was no point in continuing the effort.

"It's time to go home. But it breaks our heart to have to leave him," he said.

John Bankston Jr., 17, was last seen helping others to safety during the river's worst flooding in 55 years. He was one of 43 people aboard two vehicles from the Seagoville Road Baptist Church in Balch Springs who were caught in the river July 17.

The bodies of nine other teen-agers were recovered and 33 people were rescued.

Bankston Sr. of Dallas hunted for his son for three weeks, enlisting the aid of the volunteers and of six bulldozers and backhoes from the state. He persisted after the official search was suspended on July 25.

"It's hard for us to stop," Bankston said. "I think if John could say, you know, tell us, I think that ... he'd say, 'Dad, you gave it your best shot.'"

Authorities had said that the water was moving so swiftly at the time of the accident that the body could be under several feet of silt and debris and anywhere along several miles of the river.

Bankston had praise for the volunteers who had endured mosquitoes, snakes and scratches to locate the body.

"I think that they felt the same way that my wife and I do that if it had been their child out there that I feel they would have done the same thing. Children are the most precious gift that God can give us."

His wife, Rose Bankston, agreed. "Something like this tears up the soul of a person," she said.

"The hardest thing for me is to come to the river. I have nightmares," she said last week. "I see all the children in the water."

At first, Mrs. Bankston thought her son might have survived the turbulent water.

But that was before she saw the river's devastation.

"You know, I thought John had a chance to make it. And then I came down here and thought, 'Oh, God, he never had a chance at all.'"

Heat causes high ozone levels

FORT WORTH (AP)—Apart from the sweltering heat that could almost cook an egg on the sidewalk, high temperatures in North Texas also are cooking car and factory exhaust into higher levels of the pollutant ozone, environmental officials say.

"Ozone season starts the last of April and early May and goes until late September," said Les Montgomery, director of technical support and regulation development for the Texas Air Control Board.

The recent heat wave has pushed air quality levels to near or below what is considered healthy.

Of the nine times ozone levels in the area have exceeded federal Environmental Protection Agency levels this year, four of them have occurred since July 22.

Ozone forms when sunlight interacts with automobile and factory exhaust. The pollutant can cause watery eyes and dryness in the mouth. Extreme levels can also cause permanent lung damage and break down the body's immune system.

Montgomery said air quality will continue to violate EPA guidelines for the next few months.

"You expect it this time of year — there is heat, dry conditions and lack of wind," said Karen Brown, an EPA spokeswoman in Dallas.

Earlier this year, Fort Worth and Dallas were slapped with sanctions for not submitting a plan to the EPA to battle ozone pollution.

Angry man sends employee to cut down City Hall trees

SAN ANTONIO (AP)—Eloy Centeno got mad first and then he tried to get even.

Centeno, a civic leader, said it was sort of an "eye for an eye" or a tree for a tree deal after the city cut down two of his tall Huisache trees.

Centeno, former chairman of San Antonio City Public Service, told the San Antonio Light that he sent a man to City Hall Sunday to saw away at two trees planted there.

Police intervened in the tree revenge plot, but not before Juan Antonio Morales, an employee of Centeno, had sawed off a large oak limb.

Morales, 42, was arrested and charged with criminal mischief after the incident occurred Sunday. He was sent to Bexar County Jail in lieu of a $2,600 bond, but Centeno said he bailed him out late Sunday.

Police said the man was using a gas-powered chain saw to cut off a large tree limb on an oak tree at City Hall.

The value of the limb was estimated at $350, police said.

Morales told police he was following Centeno's orders and Centeno said Morales was doing the job he gave him.

"My trees were planted by my father," said Centeno, owner of Centeno Super Market Inc. "They were beautiful trees, many years old."

"But they sent a city crew over and they butchered the hell out of them," Centeno said. "They were such beautiful trees."

He said a city crew of six men in two trucks stopped Friday in front of his Centeno Super Market offices and hacked away at his trees without his permission.

"I talked to the guy who sent these guys," Centeno said. "The reason made me so mad. They said their trucks go by and get scratched up."

He said that if they would have told him before they had cut at the trees, he would have done something about it.

"I don't believe the city has the right to chop up a tree without anyone's permission," he said.

"A tree is a beautiful gift of God. When they butcher a tree, that makes me mad," Centeno said.

He noted that City Public Service "gives you the courtesy" of signing a form before crews cut property owners' trees.

"I believe in an eye for an eye," he said. "Even though this might cost me."

Creationists say tooth found near dinosaur tracks is human

GLEN ROSE (AP)—A new controversy has opened concerning findings in the layers of limestone along the Paluxy River.

Creationists seeking to prove that men coexisted with dinosaurs say they have found a human tooth among fossilized tracks of the giant reptiles.

Scientists say they doubt the tooth is human, but the Rev. Carl Baugh, a Baptist minister from Dublin, asserts that "implications of this discovery are far-reaching."

"Being found in scientific context with dinosaur tracks, it essentially disrupts the evolutionary geologic column and reconstructs our concepts of life origins in favor of creationism," Baugh said.

Tracks said to be human first found in the area in the 1920s have been used to substantiate the theory that man and dinosaurs roamed the earth together before the great flood, described in the Bible.

A study by two scientists, however, challenged the human track theory, saying the imprints were actually made by dinosaurs walking with an unusual gait.

Ronnie J. Hastings, chairman of the science department at Waxahachie High School, and Glen Kuban, a computer programmer and amateur paleontologist from Cleveland, said they discredited Baugh's findings.

In response, John Morris, a leading creationist, admitted that some of the prints were mistakenly identified as human.

Baugh did not concede defeat. He took his latest find, made in June, to a lab associated with the University of Texas at Austin.

"I took the tooth along with other teeth to the laboratory for identification, and basically they were stumped about what the tooth was, and they could not rule out that it could be human," he said.

Melissa Winans, collection manager and research associate at the laboratory, said the tooth is probably that of a Mesozoic bony fish related to modern gars and bowfins.

Hastings praised Baugh for taking the tooth to a lab.

First house erected by volunteers in Saragosa

SARAGOSA (AP)—In the continuing efforts to rebuild the town ravaged by a tornado in May, the Texas Baptist Men expect about 400 carpenters, electricians, plumbers and others to build more houses to complement one recently completed that stands alone on the flat land.

Led by a Waco builder, the volunteers will build one-, two- and three-bedroom houses with designs similar to the yellow boxlike house that was the first to be completed with donated material and volunteer labor.

That dwelling will be inhabited by Sofia Gomez, her daughter and granddaughter.

"I'm so content and grateful," Mrs. Gomez said while sitting on a stack of carpet padding, as her two new ceiling fans stirred the cool stream from a wall air conditioner. "We lost everything, everything ... but this is beautiful."

Like many of her neighbors, Mrs. Gomez is buying furniture, a refrigerator and stove with a grant from the Federal Emergency Management Agency. She said she received $4,000.

Officials: Woman slain after argument

AUSTIN (AP)—The search for additional remains of the pregnant 19-year-old Killeen woman who was allegedly stabbed to death and dismembered following an argument with her husband has failed to turn up anything, authorities say.

Authorities said Sunday they had searched landfills at Killeen and Ford Hood for additional body parts.

Bell County officials said Sunday that after the death of Lisa Marie Chappelle, her husband, accused in the murder, apparently disposed of her remains in several garbage bins as he drove south along Interstate 35 from Killeen to San Antonio.

Pfc. Ernest Jack Chappelle Jr., remained in the Bell County Jail Sunday under $1 million bond on a murder charge. Chappelle, 22, is a medic stationed at Fort Hood. He was arraigned in the slaying Saturday.

The only portions of Lisa Chappelle's body that have been recovered are her head and arms, which were discovered Aug. 1 by two transients rummaging through a trash bin near the University of Texas.

The joint investigation by Austin and Killeen police into the killing of Lisa Chappelle, who was seven months' pregnant when she died, is continuing, spokesmen at both agencies said.

Killeen police say the woman died the evening of July 31 at the mobile home she shared with her husband in Killeen.

Lisa and Ernest Chappelle argued in their mobile home, and Lisa Chappelle was killed, officers said. Her body was dismembered and disposed of at several locations by her husband, who left the couple's home en route to his parents' residence in San Antonio.

Authorities in Killeen said they believe the body was disposed of in trash bins in Fort Hood, Killeen and Austin. An autopsy has indicated the body was dismembered by a knife with a 3-inch long blade.

Authorities did not say why the couple argued.

Authorities said the mother of the dead woman drove to Killeen from San Antonio on Thursday to file a missing person report on her daughter, who she had not seen since July 27.

Authorities said it was then that Killeen police noticed the similarity in the description of Lisa Chappelle and the remains found in the Austin trash bin.

Austin police say Chappelle has a red and white station wagon similar to the car seen near the trash bin the night Lisa Chappelle's head and arms were discovered.

Texans contribute heavily to campaigns

HOUSTON (AP)—Texans who contributed to political campaigns in the past may not be able to give as much now because of the hard economic times, but they are still giving.

Republican and Democratic presidential hopefuls received $2.3 million from Texans during the first six months of the year, according to Federal Election Commission records. That amount was about 7 percent of contributions nationwide.

According to figures compiled by The Houston Post from reports filed by candidates with the FEC in Washington, about half of the money came from the Houston area.

"Houston used to be mecca for fund-raising," said Jim Edmonds, a fund-raiser and head of the Greater Houston Association Political Action Committee. "It's not that anymore, but there's still an awful lot of money being raised in Houston and around the state."

Nathan Landow, a leading figure on the Democratic National Committee, said, "Some of the $1,000 hitters in Houston may now be $500 hitters, but the interest in giving is still there."

The bulk of the Houston dollars has gone to hometown presidential hopeful George Bush. The vice president has collected about $1.7 million from Texas, close to 20 percent of his total campaign receipts of $9.37 million.

"Times are tough, obviously," said Margaret Alexander, a Bush supporter.

EVER STRIVING FOR THE TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Space flight slowed by NASA monopoly

According to Reginald Turnill, editor of Jane's Spaceflight Directory, the U.S. National Aeronautics and Space Administration "has lost the will to fly men in space" in the wake of the January 1987 Challenger disaster. NASA disputes the claim, promising, in the words of spokesman David Garrett, that "the United States space program is coming back, stronger, safer, and better than ever before."

Turnill has the better of this dispute, but like most NASA critics he concentrates on superficialities. NASA's problem has less to do with nerve or will than with the fact that it is a government monopoly, able to squeeze out or outlaw competition. So long as this is true, it will act like a monopoly no matter who is in charge.

America didn't always do things this way. According to space experts James Bennett and Phillip Salin, in a report prepared last March for the Reason Foundation, NASA's predecessor, the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics (NACA), focused on technology, research and development rather than trying to dominate the entire emerging field of commercial aircraft design and development. Partially because we had fiercely competitive private aircraft companies, the U.S. in the 1920s and 1930s established a leadership position that has only recently been challenged.

But, as Bennett and Salin put it: "Since 1958 the primary focus of American governmental involvement in space transportation vehicles has been on government development, ownership, and operation of transportation vehicles rather than on the purchase of launch services from commercial operators. This is the fundamental error in space transportation policy from which all other difficulties have followed."

Two major problems (and scores of minor ones) result from government ownership and operation of space vehicles. First, the U.S. has never developed a cheap, effective, reliable, easy-to-manufacture way to get into space on a consistent basis. As a government agency, NASA has never had a strong commercial incentive to develop the space-age equivalent of the DC-3. Second, the kind of innovation and mutual teaching and learning that result from economic competition have been absent in space transportation.

Would IBM have built a personal computer so soon — or ever? — without an Apple to nudge it? Would Apple have adapted PCs to business uses so quickly without competition from IBM and others? Similar examples could be extracted from scores of fields. Especially in cutting-edge technology, only competition promotes efficient diversity in development efforts.

Low cost, reliable transportation into space would not only open up untold economic opportunities, but will be increasingly important to the defense of the United States. The way to achieve it is through privatization.

Specifically, the government should begin to purchase launch services from private operators, remove numerous barriers to private space-launch businesses, and gradually phase NASA out of operational activities.

Atomic bomb replaced napalm

The anniversary of the atomic bombing of Hiroshima, which occurred 42 years ago, is an opportunity to reflect on the horror of war and the danger of nuclear weapons, an exercise that is fully justified. It is also the regular occasion for an attack of national conscience, which is not.

Viewed apart from what went before, the use of the atomic bomb against Hiroshima and Nagasaki stands out as unique: The only time since they were created that nuclear weapons have been unleashed. The attacks did represent, in one sense, the dawn of a new age. But, in another, they were remarkable only for their concentrated impact. The American use of the bomb is just one chapter in the chronicle of unparalleled destruction that was World War II.

A generation of Americans has grown up thinking of the Vietnam War as the height of wasteful carnage. Some 1.4 million people, including 56,000 Americans, died in that war. World War II killed perhaps as many as 60 million, nearly 300,000 of them American servicemen. It recognized no protection for civilians, who accounted for roughly 40 percent of all deaths. Though its territory was largely shielded from attack, the United States paid a dreadful price for a war it didn't start.

Nowhere was the experience more hellish for the American fighting man than in the Pacific. After the battle of Midway, the Japanese had little prospect of victory, but they were grimly resolved to inflict the highest possible number of casualties on the enemy.

Typical of the war of attrition was the battle for Iwo Jima, an outcropping of volcanic rock occupying just eight square miles, with no strategic significance except an airstrip. The island was supposed to be secured in a few days. It took the Marines six weeks and 7,000 lives to wipe out a force of 21,000 men dug into caves, pillboxes and seven miles of underground tunnels. American advances came only with excruciating slowness and devastating losses. Some divisions lost 75 percent of their men.

Stephen Chapman

That was the Pacific war: Island after island which had to be pried away from ferocious defenders who would fight to the last man. After Guadalcanal, where wounded Japanese greeted American medics by blowing themselves up, prisoners were rarely taken by either side. Nor were the Japanese fastidious about noncombatants. Their record of atrocities in the places they conquered pales only next to Hitler's.

Over 3 1/2 years, this bitter war had schooled Americans in a deep hatred of the Japanese. It also had given a taste of what the United States would face invading Japan, where the enemy would be stronger. Most Americans placed the greatest importance on winning the war at the least cost in American lives. The fate of the enemy population was no more than a secondary consideration. Only a nation of saints would have been more charitable.

The predictions heard of a million American dead and wounded were inflated, but occupying Japan by force would have been bloody. Says Ronald Spector, author of a distinguished history of the war, "It's hard to imagine fewer than 100,000 American casualties." The number of Japanese casualties, military and civilian, would have been far higher. The last major battle, Okinawa, had killed not only 12,000 Americans and 70,000 Japanese but 80,000 islanders, most of them civilians.

The appeal of the atomic bomb was that it would force a prompt capitulation by Tokyo, which still refused "unconditional surrender."

Even after Germany's defeat, the military chiefs who controlled Japan's government resisted the logical course. Some thought that if the Americans met spirited resistance to an invasion, they would accept terms more favorable to Japan. Some simply preferred a suicidal war against the invader to a humiliating surrender.

An invasion might have been avoided even without the bomb. After the war, the U.S. commission concluded that Japan would have surrendered anyway by the end of 1945. But that wasn't clear at the time, and this option was no more humane. It assumed the continuation of the napalm bombing that had devastated dozens of Japanese cities and killed hundreds of thousands of civilians.

The difference between a firebombing and an atomic explosion, says one historian, "was largely academic." In military terms, the bomb was not absolutely necessary. In moral terms, it was irrelevant.

Compared with an invasion or several more months of merciless air raids, the atomic bomb may have been the least destructive option. In any case, it was merely the culmination of an established policy in fighting the Axis powers — one that could have been avoided only by deliberately sacrificing huge numbers of American servicemen, most of whom were no more willing participants in the war than the people of Hiroshima and Nagasaki. That is not the kind of exchange any nation would voluntarily make. It is not one the U.S. should have made.

Foreigners learn credit fraud

Ed Weimer is a friend, golfing companion and an executive of the American Hospital Association.

Hospital administrators have been having a dreadfully difficult time recently — what with malpractice claims and insurance costs, nurses in short supply and occupancy rates averaging 64 percent.

And there are Diagnostic Related Groups (DRGs) and Health Maintenance Organizations (HMOs) and the Peer Review Organizations (PROs) pinching all hospitals and closing some.

So when the American Hospital Association arranged a trip to the Soviet Union for 44 hospital administrators, it offered an opportunity for learning and a chance to escape for a while the day-to-day tedium of administration.

They were as far as Helsinki, Finland, when they returned from an evening out to discover that Mr. Weimer's hotel room had been robbed. Missing were 44 visas!

You can imagine the disappointment suffered by all concerned and the sheer anguish suffered by conscientious Ed Weimer.

He sought through all channels diplomatic and other, East and West, substitute documents. But the Soviets said, "Nyet!" The most agonizing experience of Ed's life was when he had to announce to the happy holiday-makers: "This is as far as we go."

Paul Harvey

I was reminded of the unhappy AHA experience the other day when the Wall Street Journal captioned a column with these words: "Don't Leave Home With It."

In this instance, the country was Thailand, where credit card theft and fraud flourish.

The American Express Co. says it's no longer an amateur business. The swindlers take advantage of obsolete laws, written before there were such things as credit cards. Thus, even those who get caught are rarely punished.

One frequent scam involves the manner in which travelers will use a town such as Chiang Mai for a base and make weeklong treks into surrounding mountains, leaving their valuables with their guest houses for safekeeping.

While they are away, unscrupulous guest-house owners help themselves to the credit cards, running up bills that are rarely noticed before the traveler returns home. There are enough crooked transactions just in Thailand to add some 7 percent to the overhead of the credit card companies.

While overseas travel is increasingly unsafe in many parts of the world because of terrorists, it is becoming less fun most everywhere because of thievery.

Experienced travelers to many Latin American nations are careful to take nothing of value and not to leave even extra garments in their hotel rooms.

Our homeland is fast becoming unsafe enough when we are advised to "shred" the carbon paper in our credit-card receipts — but the world beyond isn't fun at all anymore.

Moving uncovers worthless piles of junk

By Sarah Overstreet

They say moving three times is worth one fire. I wouldn't want to go through a fire for all the money Ollie North will get from book rights, but I'm beginning to see the attraction of a well-placed match and a glance in the other direction.

OK, I admit I'm bitter. I've moved twice in the past year. My back aches from picking up boxes and carrying them to the my brother's truck and my friend's stock trailer, and even more from the boxes I tossed toward the dumpster.

My mind reels from both the possessions I saved and those I pitched toward eternity. (A discussion overheard between my brother and my friend, the subject being the top of my beloved antique wardrobe, perched atop my couch: "Naaaah, I don't think we need to tie her down. We'll be goin' pretty slow.")

What on earth does a person need with all this stuff? Oh, it doesn't seem so overwhelming just sitting around in closets and cupboards, but just try to move it in one afternoon when new owners are waiting to move in all the stuff they can't live without. I have my china, my mother's china, my grandmother's china. I have second-hand furniture my mother begged my father to replace for 41 years, when my heart's dearest desire is for one square empty foot to walk around it all and some Chinet plates on which to serve microwaved frozen entrees.

I have little dishes to serve canapes, little silver spoons to ladle up jellies, fancy wine glasses. Once in a while at Christmas I'll get 'em all out — for friends who take too many trips to the wassail bowl. They'd be just as happy if I handed out chips, put the food in a trough and yelled "Go!"

Then there are the clothes. I think my growth was arrested by parents who kept the Depression in their hearts and by a mother who made my outfits out of her own college dresses. "There's still some good left in those!" I hear her shriek as I throw a wool midi and 15-year-old harness boots toward the dumpster box. I throw them back in the "save" pile. Maybe if the Depression comes again, I can use them for barter.

My greatest crisis came with the books. Among my crowd — folks who consider themselves the intelligentsia — throwing away a book is tantamount to burning the flag. Books saved are supposed to represent years of knowledge stored in the cerebral shelves, badges of honor at having survived Early American Lit and Political Science 101. "Often," those rows of books stacked conspicuously on your bookshelves say, "this learned person takes down Plato's Republic and refreshes her memory for an impromptu discussion over lunch." Well, hogwash. I'm never going to touch "The Last of the Mohicans" again, much less read one word of it. And while we're on the subject, I regret the time I spent on it 15 years ago. To the dumpster, James Fenimore.

Ditto for the books I used to teach seventh grade nine years ago. In keeping with my ethnic heritage, I've kept them all for the day I might have to "fall back" on teaching. If they're still teaching "The Song of Hiawatha" when I resume my position by the blackboard, I'll eat my new copy.

I have a colleague who has the right idea. A television reporter, he's moved more times in the last five years than PTL has creditors. Anything you can't pack in the back of a car is a millstone about the neck, he says. He doesn't have his mother's good china and little canape dishes to pass on to offspring, but neither did he spend the last two weeks carrying things to the dumpster.

To my friends in the business world, I say don't worry. Conspicuous consumption isn't going the way of the dodo just because I'm on a temporary hiatus. Someday I'll reach out for the plastic containers I threw away and be unable to rest until I've bought a new set.

Ditto, I'm sure, for the rest of the pile. Rest easy, discount centers of America. I'm coming.

Popularity should not affect prosecution, Walsh says

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Independent counsel Lawrence E. Walsh says the popularity of Lt. Col. Oliver North or anyone else in the Iran-Contra affair will have no effect on his criminal investigation.

"The popularity of persons involved is no more appropriate as a consideration than would be their unpopularity," he said Sunday in a breakfast speech at an American Bar Association convention.

"High office, well-intended policies or popular policies do not place anyone above the law," he said.

Walsh did not mention North by name, but said at a news conference later that he is aware that North's testimony before the congressional committees investigating the affair impressed many Americans, and he repeated his vow not to let public opinion affect his inquiry.

Attorney General Edwin Meese, in a speech to another gathering at the convention, asserted that Walsh's investigation is constitutional. That is being challenged by North, a former National Security Council aide, and others.

Meese said he is "looking for cooperation with Congress to eliminate potential challenges to the constitutionality" of the law that created the independent counsel.

Walsh said he will seek indictments if his investigation establishes probable cause to believe that crimes have been committed.

"Only in this way can the rule of law be upheld. Otherwise it is frustrated."

Walsh said. "I can assure you that the investigation will be pursued vigorously but fairly."

Walsh said that the congressional Iran-Contra hearings posed "the most serious external threat to the outcome of our investigation" because key figures were granted limited immunity from prosecution.

North and former national security adviser John Poindexter, who also said he is a target of Walsh's investigation, received limited immunity.

Testimony from the hearings, or leads developed from the testimony, may not be used to prosecute those granted such immunity. Walsh and all but a few members of his staff are shunning newspapers and television to assure that their evidence is obtained independently. "We keep a wall between those who are exposed (to the testimony) and those who are not," he said.

He said that a lawyer who watched the hearings is stationed in Richmond, Va., and that when Walsh or his staff confer with that lawyer, "he listens, he doesn't talk."

Walsh said he is confident "the rigorous insulation procedures employed in this case will be upheld by the courts."

He said his investigators have interviewed more than 1,000 witnesses and reviewed hundreds of thousands of documents, while the grand jury handling the case has met two or three days a week since Jan. 28.

In his speech, Walsh quoted from the Bible, the Constitution and U.S. historical figures in a stern lecture on the importance of truth in government.

"To the extent that the facts are withheld or distorted, our system of democracy cannot work," he said. "To the extent that concealment and deception play any part in the relationship between the three branches of government, the rule of law and our constitutional structure of government are alike subverted."

Walsh reportedly is considering seeking indictments on charges the United States was defrauded by the misappropriation of profits from the Iranian arms sales to support the Nicaraguan Contras.

Other possible charges include lying to Congress, obstructing justice and destroying government property, experts have said.

Blacks, Hispanics demand more say in the fight against AIDS

ATLANTA (AP) — The head of the national Centers for Disease Control pledges that his agency will look for ways to give blacks, Hispanics and other minorities more of a say in the government's battle against AIDS.

Caucuses of blacks, Hispanics, Asians and native Americans attending a weekend CDC conference on acquired immune deficiency syndrome accused the government of mishandling the battle against AIDS among minorities.

The black caucus requested Sunday that the CDC set up an advisory panel made up mostly of minorities to review applications for CDC funding for AIDS education among minorities.

"I think it's a good idea," said CDC Director James O. Mason. "We'll look at that and see where we can increase minority input."

Hispanic caucus spokeswoman Ruth Rodriguez, decrying the CDC's "disregard and insensitivity" toward Latin Americans with AIDS, made a similar request, demanding creation of an advisory board including Hispanic AIDS victims.

A particular source of controversy at the two-day conference was $7 million in new federal funding approved by Congress last month and targeted for minority AIDS education.

The money has been appropriated "without significant input from the black community, excluding minorities from the resources — and the power — to control our lives," said black caucus spokeswoman Brandy Moore of the California AIDS Advisory Committee.

The black caucus asked the CDC to extend the mid-August deadline for applications for shares of the $7 million.

Mason said his agency will extend that deadline if possible, but added that CDC may be powerless to do so. He also said Congress directed that the money be awarded to state agencies, not directly to minority organizations.

Next fiscal year, he noted, CDC will award a new $3 million directly to minority organizations for AIDS education, in addition to the $7 million allocated through the states.

More than 1,000 health officials, educators and minority activists attended the conference, which focused on the incidence of AIDS among minorities.

Blacks and Hispanics, 19 percent of the U.S. population, comprise 38 percent of all reported AIDS cases, and 80 percent of children with AIDS are black or Hispanic, health officials said.

Asians attending the conference asked federal officials to begin keeping detailed information about AIDS in the Asian and native American communities, as is done for blacks and Hispanics.

Lumping them in an "other" classification is "slightly racist, to say the least," said caucus spokeswoman Suki Ports of New York's Minority Task Force on AIDS.

As the conference concluded Sunday, Mason acknowledged one widely heard criticism — that the session was short on specifics.

Agent ready to expose Cuban world intelligence network

WASHINGTON (AP) — A decorated Cuban intelligence agent who defected is expected to give U.S. officials the names of Cuban operatives around the world, the second major intelligence setback for President Fidel Castro in recent months, Radio Marti officials say.

Florentino Azpillaga, 40, crossed into Austria from Czechoslovakia in June but his defection was kept quiet until Friday night when Radio Marti, the U.S. government broadcast station for Cuba, carried an interview with him.

"Castro's egomania has ruined the country," Azpillaga said, adding, that he and other disillusioned intelligence officers had talked about the defection for three years.

He said he and his co-conspirators believed that the Cuban government was spending a disproportionate amount on intelligence activities at a time when an austerity program was forcing ordinary Cubans to tighten their belts.

Azpillaga's whereabouts were not disclosed but defectors usually are brought to the Washington area for extensive debriefings by CIA officials.

The State Department had no comment on the defection Sunday.

Azpillaga's duties were said to have included deciphering the communications of foreign enemies and learning the locations of clandestine radio operations used by anti-communist rebel groups abroad.

He reportedly was awarded 13 medals for his service to the revolution.

Radio Marti officials, insisting on anonymity, said Azpillaga is prepared to identify 350 Cuban agents in a number of countries. This would render them useless as intelligence agents.

Since many of these agents are Azpillaga's friends, he is said to be withholding their identities for the time being to allow them the opportunity to return safely to Cuba.

He believes the lives of these agents could be endangered if their true identities were exposed while they are still at their overseas posts, the officials said.

For Cuba, the defection could mean that much of the country's intelligence network would have to be rebuilt from scratch.

Azpillaga bolted just nine days after Brig. Gen. Rafael del Pino Diaz, a ranking member of the Cuban Armed Forces Ministry, defected to the United States in a Cessna 402 with his wife and children. He has provided U.S. interrogators with information about Cuba's military activities, particularly in Angola.

Radio Marti has had extensive interviews with del Pino and is expected to do the same with Azpillaga.

A Radio Marti official said Azpillaga's defection apparently prompted the Cuban government last month to expose 10 agents who claimed to have posed as CIA operatives for years.

The agents said they had evidence that their true identities had been detected although they provided no elaboration.

University station returns to air after protests, scuffle, lawsuits

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — Some volunteers at KUNM-FM say the station's new format is boring. The dispute over the switch has been anything but.

The feud at the listener-supported National Public Radio affiliate has included lawsuits, protests and a fight in the control room that was heard over the air. It also prompted a two-week shutdown last month.

The station is back on the air, but two lawsuits are pending in state court against station and university officials over KUNM's switch on Aug. 1 to a format featuring jazz and classical music.

One lawsuit, filed by the listener group Friends of Free-Form Radio, alleges KUNM committed fraud during fund-raisers by saying it would continue a daytime format that allowed volunteer announcers to play a variety of music.

In another suit, 20 volunteers contend that

KUNM management and university officials breached an employment agreement, violated the volunteers' rights by suspending a grievance procedure and violated their right of free speech by retaliating against them for publicly opposing the format change.

Volunteers and listeners staged protests against the new format, and radio staff members and disc jockeys say they have received harassing phone calls and letters.

The control room scuffle occurred May 14 when an announcer denounced the format change on the air and called for the program director's resignation.

Program director Patrick Conley said he ordered the volunteer announcer, Andres Mares-Muro, to leave the control room and turn off the microphone. He said the volunteer's refusal resulted in a shoving match.

Guide Kenny Mesker points to an Indian pictograph painted on a rocky bluff at Paint Rock. (AP Laserphoto)

Hundreds of years of Indian history depicted on bluff

PAINT ROCK (AP) — Spanish explorers were the first Europeans to cast their eyes on hundreds of years of Indian history depicted on the rocky bluff that gave this town its name.

Much of what they saw remains today.

One pictograph shows a large sun, a giant grasshopper and a wilted stalk of corn indicating a severe drought.

Another shows a warpath symbol, two scalps and a hoop-skirted figure drawn horizontally to represent a captive.

Pioneer settlers at odds with the Indians vandalized the paintings, which told tales of hunting parties and warpath raids, great councils and gods.

In 1877, D.E. Sims claimed the property and cared for the pictographs. His great-grandson, Scott Campbell, has started a company to give tours.

"One of the nice things about this is you walk up and see the bluff just as the Indians saw it coming up from the river," said Campbell's mother, Kay.

The bluff is about a quarter-mile long. Brush has been cleared from the bank to the bluff except for a few mesquite trees that provide a little shade for chairs placed underneath.

Cactus, mesquite, weeds and rattlesnakes guard the foot of the bluff, discouraging visitors from climbing to the paintings 50 feet above and possibly hurting themselves or damaging the paintings.

"There are so many markings on the rocks that we don't try to point all of them out," Mrs. Campbell said. There are more than 1,500 pictographs.

The oldest date back 1,000 years, while others were painted as late as 1865. Viewing the pictographs from the different Indians is like looking at paintings of Rembrandt next to those by Picasso, said Mrs. Campbell.

The Indians were students of nature so their drawings of animals were realistic, while they drew stick figures for humans.

"Anything you can read was done by early settlers," Mrs. Campbell says.

The hatred between the two cultures led settlers to deface some of the paintings. The earliest date written among the rocks is 1866.

High school students guide the tours, pointing out about 20 of the more interesting paintings.

The tour begins at the Paint Rock Excursion's office in Paint Rock, about 70 miles south of Abilene on U.S. Highway 83 in West Texas. There, visitors are shown how Indians mixed hematite and animal fat to make paint.

Then it's on to the dock just north of town and aboard the Concho Clipper. At one point in a recent 15-minute trip, passengers are urged to move to the front of the boat to balance it as the river gets shallow. Sheep graze in front of the Campbell house and a blue heron flies away as the boat passes.

The tour comes to an end with a climb up the rocks and a close up look at some pictographs. The boat then takes tourists back to their cars.

Tours are conducted daily during the summer and will be given on weekends once school starts.

Prison inmate in critical condition after being stabbed several times

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — A state prison inmate stabbed several times was in critical condition after undergoing surgery for his wounds, a spokesman says.

Eugene Sheets, a 30-year-old inmate serving 48 years for felony escape and aggravated rape in Dallas County, underwent surgery Sunday morning at the Texas Department of Corrections hospital in Galveston, spokesman Charles Brown said.

The stabbing occurred about 8:20 p.m. Saturday at the Wynne Unit. Sheets was stabbed several times in the chest and abdomen.

TranStar parks planes after last flights

HOUSTON (AP) — Financially-strapped TranStar Airlines Corp. is parking its planes at Hobby Airport, leaving its 1,300 employees searching for new jobs and one city's airport with no commercial airline.

Sunday marked the final day of flights for the small regional carrier, which is based at Hobby. TranStar officials, citing stiff competition in the industry, announced late last month it was going to cease operations.

For the city of Brownsville, the shutdown means the South Texas city no longer has commercial air service at its airport.

Now that TranStar has ended its two daily flights from Brownsville, residents will have to fly out of the Harlingen airport, about 25 miles away, said airport manager Ernest C. Villarreal.

Villarreal said TranStar's pullout means a loss of about $100,000 annually in airport revenues, car rental commissions and other business that the airline service generated for the city. The city is trying to market the airport to another commercial carrier, he added.

While most of TranStar's vendors say they won't be severely hurt because the carrier intends to honor its contractual commitments, others say they will probably have to cut back since the carrier was a major customer.

Dobbs International Inc., a Memphis-based catering company that supplies passenger meals to airlines, will be one of the companies most adversely affected by TranStar's shutdown.

Dobbs took over TranStar's account June 1 and built a new kitchen at Hobby Airport to accommodate the increased business. TranStar was its major customer at Hobby, said Chris Kientzel, Dobbs assistant general manager.

The company has 40 employees at Hobby, and "we probably will be letting people go," Kientzel said. "It will hurt us financially."

TranStar spokesman Ted Standfest said the airline plans to review all its contracts and "everybody will be paid." Standfest said the company decided to liquidate now so it would be able to pay off its creditors.

TranStar had suffered losses of about $18 million to $20 million since September 1986, said Herbert D. Kelleher, chairman and president of Dallas-based Southwest Airlines.

Tickets for TranStar, a wholly owned but independently operated subsidiary of Southwest Airlines, will be honored by Southwest and Continental Airlines, officials have said.

51 senators list $1 million in PAC donations

NEW YORK (AP) — A flurry of giving in the past two years raised to 51 the number of senators who have received more than $1 million from political action committees over their congressional careers, a newspaper reported today.

The New York Times said that financial reports filed with the Federal Election Commission show that, by the end of 1984, only 17 senators had received more than $1 million from the special interest groups.

By June of this year, the number had reached 51, more than half of the Senate. Fifteen of the 51 are in their first Senate terms.

Direct, individual contributions make up most of the financing for congressional campaigns, but PACs have played a greater role recently.

Opponents of PACs say the groups exert undue influence on elected officials.

Proponents say PACs, which can under law give $5,000 to a candidate in both the primary and general election, reflect the legitimate interests of those who contribute to them.

In all, the sitting 100 senators have received $109 million from PACs since 1982, when the FEC began tracking the contributions, the paper said. That includes contributions to Senate campaigns and to any earlier campaigns for the House.

1900s designer furniture considered stylish again

By RALPH and TERRY KOVEL

Furniture by the name designers of the past 80 years has become the subject of several new books and museum exhibitions. Prices are rising. The designs have found new favor with many collectors and decorators.

Some of the designs have been made continuously for the past 80 years. Some had lost favor but are now being reproduced to be enjoyed by a new generation. Eileen Gray, Herman Miller, Mies van der Rohe, Josef Hoffman and Otto Wagner pieces are typical of these designers.

Many pieces were made of cleverly bent metal or wood. Wagner, a Viennese architect, designed bentwood furniture made by Kohn and Thonet about 1904. The chairs were made with low backs and perforated seats.

One unusual piece was an etagere, which many now call a plant stand. A vase of flowers was placed on one shelf and a bust or figurine on the other.

Q. I collect perfume bottles. Information about glass manufacturers has been easy to find, but I know very little about atomizers. Did the glass companies make them? Were there some special companies making these metal and fabric tops?

A. The technology and equipment needed to make atomizers is very different from that of glass. The first perfume atomizers were developed from the earlier nose and throat spray atomizers.

T.J. Holmes Co. of Massachusetts started making sprayers in 1870 and by 1876 had registered a trademark for perfume atomizers.

In the 1880s, Dr. Allen DeVilbiss worked on a throat atomizer in Toledo, Ohio. He perfected the device and opened a factory by the 1890s.

In 1907, Thomas DeVilbiss, a son of the owner working for the company, persuaded them to redesign the atomizer so it could be used for perfume. Those tops were put on glass salt shakers and sold for cologne.

The company began buying art glass, adding the atomizers and selling the complete bottle. Millions of DeVilbiss atomizers have been sold.

Q. My pottery vase is green with a silver mermaid on the front. It came from Sweden years ago and is marked "Gustavsberg Argenta." What can you tell me about it?

A. Gustavsberg is a Swedish factory established in 1827. The firm made many types of china including majolica and bone china.

William Kage was a designer who worked at Gustavsberg after 1917. He created a number of new designs in the 1920s.

Argenta, the pottery with a dark green background and a silver pattern, was first exhibited in 1930. It was sold in many countries. The company is still working.

Q. I have been collecting fountain pens. How old is the first one? Any clues to dating them?

A. Fountain pens have been in use since the 1700s. Most of them were impractical because they would leak or skip letters.

Lewis E. Waterman invented a new type of ink feed for a pen in 1884. He had just lost a business deal because his pen leaked all over the contract before it was signed.

The Waterman pen worked. About 1900 someone discovered a way to make a self-filling pen. That made the fountain pen more convenient than it had been when it was filled with an eyedropper.

This stand held two vases or bric-a-brac. It was designed by Otto Wagner for the Thonet Brothers furniture manufacturing company about 1904.

Q. When was wooden type used for printing?

A. The machinery needed to make wooden type was first made about 1827. Before that, type was carved by hand. Machine-made type was easily purchased by 1834, and all sizes were made, from small to 30-inch letters. Wooden type is still being made.

TIP: Be very careful when handling old bottles or medical equipment. The remains of old drugs, even toxic materials, may still cling to the surface. A broken bit of glass or a sliver could let such toxic material reach your bloodstream.

Fight garden pests, diseases

by JOE VANZANDT
County Extension Agent

The Grand Opening of the Top O' Texas Farmers Market was a big success. Even though a few vegetable producers were still there at noon time, most folks had sold out by 9:30 to 10 a.m.

Consumers wanting to get a good selection of produce need to come by the market between 8 and 11 a.m. each Saturday and Wednesday at the north-east corner of M.K. Brown Auditorium parking lot. Also, the temperature is still fairly cool that early in the day. Vegetable supplies and variety of different produce should improve as the season progresses.

LANDSCAPE — GARDEN PROBLEMS

Rust seems to be invading blackeyed peas at an alarming rate during the last few days. Use a fungicide, but read the label for number of days between application and harvest. Sulfur is a good control for rust, with no limits on application and harvest.

Spider mites are also a problem on lots of plants in the garden and landscape. Generally, they are found on the underside of leaves. Dusting sulfur is also a good miticide. Malathion also is recommended for mites, but it will take about three applications every five to seven days.

Powdery mildew is also showing up on a lot of different plants. Several fungicides are available that will control powdery mildew. There are some restrictions on using some of these products, so be sure and read the label for clearances and precautions.

Bagworms are still a problem on a lot of different trees and shrubs. Don't think they just feed on cedar trees. Check all of your trees and shrubs every week for bagworms, particularly if you have had some in the past.

For Horticulture

Water your trees and shrubs extra during this hot, dry weather. I suggest laying a hose down close to them and letting it run slowly for several hours or even all day so that water has a chance to soak downward toward the tree's root zone.

VEGETABLE GARDEN QUESTIONS-ANSWERS

Q. What causes a tomato to crack? Is there anything I can do to prevent it?

A. Crack is a physiological disorder caused by soil moisture fluctuations. When the tomato reaches the mature green stage and the water supply to the plant is reduced or cut off, the tomato will begin to ripen. At this time a cellophane-like wrapper around the outer surface of the tomato becomes thicker and more rigid to protect the tomato during and after harvest.

If the water supply is restored after ripening begins, the plant will resume translocation of nutrients and moisture into the fruit. This will cause the fruit to enlarge; which in turn splits the wrapper around the fruit and results in cracking.

The single best control for cracking is a constant and regular water supply. Apply a layer of organic mulch to the base of the plant. This serves as a buffer and prevents soil moisture fluctuation.

Water plants thoroughly every week. This is especially important when the fruits are maturing. Some varieties are resistant to cracking, but their yield and quality are less than other varieties.

Q. My squash leaves are covered with a white, powdery substance. The plants die rapidly.

A. This is powdery mildew. It is a fungal disease that attacks squash, killing the plants. Some varieties tolerate this disease better than others.

Powdery mildew is more of a problem in the fall than in the spring. The material benomyl, or Benlate®, is the most effective fungicide for the control of powdery mildew.

Mildew occurs most often on old foliage of declining plants. Succession plantings of squash will provide vigorous, productive plants and allow removal of older, more susceptible plants.

Q. What causes my cucumbers to often be misshapen and gourdy-looking?

A. Probably poor pollination. Improper pollination caused by lack of insects or pollen killed by hot temperatures can cause misshapen fruit.

Moisture stress during development can also misshape fruit. Pollination did occur or the fruit would not be present.

Q. What causes my cucumbers to become bitter tasting?

A. Any stress on a cucumber plant such as high temperature, low moisture, low fertility or foliage disease can contribute to bitterness. Bitterness is usually associated with fruit harvested late in the season from unhealthy, poor-yielding plants.

Once a plant produces bitter fruit, remove it from the garden because all subsequent fruit will be affected in a similar manner.

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

Man's wife, girlfriend both become pregnant

By Abigail Van Buren
© 1987 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: "Doug" and I are very much in love. He's 38, I'm 29, and four months pregnant. Doug would marry me in a minute, but he's already married to "Jan." They've been talking about a divorce for over a year, but haven't filed yet. Doug and Jan have two kids. They still live together because it's cheaper and more convenient. Meanwhile, Jan is dating up a storm.

Yesterday, she told Doug that she is pregnant and he's the father. Doug says there is no way in God's world that the baby is his because he hasn't laid a hand on her in a year. He says he's willing to take any kind of test to prove that he is not the baby's father, but in order to find out who the baby's father is, they will have to test half the men in San Diego.

I need to know if Doug is going to get stuck with a kid that isn't his. It's not fair. But how can he get out of it? Jan will lie in court if she has to.

IN A MESS
IN SAN DIEGO

DEAR IN: You and Doug are overdue for a long talk — or better yet, a three-way conversation including Jan. (Does Doug really want to leave her? Or is he content with an open marriage in this frightening age of AIDS?)

A woman's husband is presumed to be the legal father of her child, but if Doug has any doubts about it (in Jan's case) he should see a lawyer. As I see it, unless Doug stands by his moral obligation to you, you are in a bigger mess than his wife. Good luck. You will need it.

DEAR ABBY: Forgive me if I do a little nit-picking. Enclosed is a clipping from your column in which you wrote: "I think he is a troubled man and his behavior should be reported to whomever is his superior."

Abby, "whomever" is not the object of the preposition "to"; the whole clause is. Thus, the sentence should read: "I think he is a troubled man and his behavior should be reported to whoever is his superior," "whoever" being the subject of the verb "is."

I usually don't find myself perturbed enough to write letters about misuse of English appearing in the newspapers. However, I'm sure many readers would say, "If Dear Abby wrote it that way, it must be correct."

CMS, PORT ORANGE, FLA.
P.S. This clip is from the Daytona Beach News-Journal. Maybe the typesetter took it upon him/herself to do a little editing?

DEAR CMS: I cannot blame the typesetter. (Typesetters do not edit.) So ingrained in my mind is the "to whom," I automatically trusted my ear and used the "to" with "whomever," ignoring the fact that the whole clause was the object of the preposition "to." So, mea culpa to all you English language purists whom I offended.

(For Abby's booklet, "What Every Teen-Ager Ought to Know," send a check or money order for $2.50 and a long, stamped (39 cents), self-addressed envelope to: Dear Abby, Teen Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61064.)

New supplements have more flavor

STILLWATER, Okla. (AP) — Some concentrated nutritional supplements for special diets are more medicinal than flavorful.

The College of Home Economics at Oklahoma State University is developing tastier, more palatable, protein-enriched products in an effort to bridge this "taste gap."

The new foods include a tomato juice-based drink and a chocolate-flavored drink, pudding or frozen dessert. All are made from dry mixes containing Provecteen dried yeast.

VA outpatient clinic to move

AMARILLO — The Veterans Administration Medical Center Outpatient Clinic, 6010 Amarillo Blvd., West, will begin moving to the adjacent new clinical addition on Thursday, Aug. 13.

The new clinic is connected to the old one by a breezeway, and the old clinic will be refurbished, a clinic spokesman said.

All appointments for Aug. 13 and 14, except Mental Health Clinics, have been cancelled.

During the move, the new clinic will handle emergencies only.

Patients who had appointments for Thursday or Friday have been sent letters to reschedule their appointments.

The emergency entrance is on the north side of the new building. All clinics will be in full operation beginning Monday, Aug. 17. Parking is available in front of the new building.

For questions concerning appointments or more information, call 355-9703, ext. 7250 or 7240.

TENSION HEADACHE

If you're bothered by headache that seems to have its origin at the base of your skull, you may be suffering from tension headache.

Tension headaches can be caused by an irritation of the nerves in the area of the spine immediately under the skull. These are called the suboccipital nerves. They pass through small openings in the spinal column to muscles in the surrounding area. Any abnormal pressure or dysfunction of neck and muscles can irritate the nerves, causing tension.

The tension doesn't cause the headache. To treat this form of headache, attention should be paid to the bone and muscle structures. They should be returned to normal balance so they can function properly again.

Medication is not the answer to tension headaches. Aspirin and other painkillers may give you temporary relief - but they won't solve the problem. Once the source of the problem is found and treated, THEN you can get the relief you need.

Nelson wins PGA in sudden death

By ED SHEARER
AP Sports Writer

PALM BEACH GARDENS, Fla. (AP)—Larry Nelson desperately wanted one more major championship before he ended a late-starting golf career.

He also wanted to silence the critics who claimed two major crowns weren't enough to earn him a spot among the game's elite.

The quiet little man from Georgia solved both problems Sunday, knocking in a six-foot par putt on the first hole of a sudden-death playoff with Lanny Wadkins to win the 69th PGA Championship.

Both players finished at 1-under-par 287 on the 7,002-yard Champions course of the PGA National Golf Club. Nelson closed with a 72, Wadkins with a 73.

"This is the most important one," he said. "You never know when your last victory will be."

Nelson, who will be 40 next month, won his first major in the 1981 PGA and came back two years later to capture the U.S. Open.

He said he began thinking about doing other things at that time, got into several businesses and saw his golf game deteriorate.

"This year I wanted to come back and play golf. I was going to play until I won again," he said.

Although his goal was attained in the sweltering, record-setting 97-degree weather Sunday, Nelson said he was ready to play some more.

He earned a five-year exemption to the Masters and a 10-year exemption on the PGA Tour.

"I'm not going to quit," he said. "If I don't win in the next four or five years, I can quit being happy that this was my last victory."

It was Nelson's eighth victory on the PGA Tour, but his first since the 1984 Walt Disney.

It also earned him $150,000 and an automatic spot on the U.S. Ryder Cup team that will face a European team next month.

"Larry is very unassuming, but when he gets in the hunt, he's awfully hard to shake," Wadkins said. "It was kind of a test of survival today."

Walker injured

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. (AP)—Dallas Cowboys running back Herschel Walker will miss the team's first three exhibition games because of a sprained ligament in his right knee, team doctors say.

"I would like to get back into the swing of things," Walker said Sunday after the doctors determined he would miss the three games. "But I really feel like I overworked myself in the off-season. So this might be a blessing in disguise."

Walker suffered the injury last Wednesday during a goal-line scrimmage and was originally diagnosed as a bruised tendon by coach Tom Landry. The team reported he had suffered a sprained knee, but Sunday team doctors revealed a more serious injury.

Doctors detected a sprained medial collateral, one of the two outside ligaments that support the knee. Doctors said the injury will not require surgery.

After missing exhibitions against the San Diego Chargers, the San Francisco 49ers and the Los Angeles Raiders, Walker is expected to be available for the team's final exhibition game Sept. 5 against the Houston Oilers at Texas Stadium.

"I really feel like I'm making progress with it," Walker said. "But it needs the rest. I've still got the whole season to look forward to. That is where everything counts."

The injury to Walker means that the team's "dream backfield" of Walker and Tony Dorsett won't get much playing time during the exhibition season. Dorsett, who had off-season surgery on both knees to remove deposits, is expected to be on the bench for most of the exhibition season.

Texas loses with two out in ninth

BALTIMORE (AP)—It was a fitting climax to a tumultuous week for the Baltimore Orioles.

Alan Wiggins, as a pinch runner in his first appearance since his three-day club suspension was lifted, scored the winning run in Sunday's 5-4 victory over the Texas Rangers.

The game-winning pinch single, with two outs in the ninth inning, was delivered by Ray Knight—the teammate who publicly criticized Wiggins following the suspension.

Knight, who met privately with Wiggins on Saturday to clear the air about his comments, hugged Wiggins during the victory celebration. Wiggins stood motionless, his arms at his side.

"It was definitely spontaneous, that's the way I am," said the generally effusive Knight.

"I'm glad I could make a contribution," Wiggins said, and then added a deadpan comment about the onfield embrace: "It wasn't like my wife hugged me."

Running for Larry Sheets, who singled off loser Charlie Hough, 11-8, Wiggins advanced to second when reliever Mitch Wiggins yielded a single to Terry Kennedy.

Before he made a pitch, bullpen ace Dale Mohoric's wild pickoff throw enabled Wiggins to reach third.

The Rangers seemed to get a break when Kennedy was thrown out trying to advance on the play. But Knight hit Mohoric's first delivery through the left side.

"He didn't hit it good, but the ball found a hole," said Mohoric. "I only made one pitch, so I can't say if I threw the ball good or bad."

The Rangers came from behind three times, tying the score on Larry Parrish's 24th homer in the second, Mike Stanley's fifth homer in the fourth, and No. 23 by Pete Incaviglia in the sixth.

Before the sixth ended, Texas took a 4-3 lead on a pinch RBI single by Tom O'Malley, the first batter faced by reliever John Habyan after he replaced starter Eric Bell.

But Habyan, 4-3, retired the next 10 batters in a row to continue a stretch of exceptional relief work that negated a possible demotion to the minors.

Over his last five appearances, spanning 21 innings, the rookie has gone 3-0 while allowing five hits and one run, striking out 13.

The Orioles tied it 4-4 in the bottom of the sixth, Cal Ripken Jr. scoring on a shallow fly by Sheets when shortstop Scott Fletcher collided with leftfielder Incaviglia after making the catch.

The Orioles scored another tainted run in the first when Ripken's sacrifice fly followed a passed ball by Don Slaught which allowed Ken Gerhart to reach third.

"That was a big run," Valentine said. "Slaught did a great job catching, except for that pitch."

First-year Lefors head coach Johnny Crim helps a Pirate with leg lifts during day one of fall high school workouts Monday. All area teams began workouts today in preparation for the 1987 football season. Pampa will be on

Astros fall to Padres

SAN DIEGO (AP)—The Houston Astros, still in the hunt for a second straight National League West crown, are getting no help from the schedule, Astros pitcher Bob Knepper says.

"If we're going to make a move, we have to beat San Diego," a subdued Knepper said after he and the Astros were beaten 4-3 Sunday by the last-place Padres.

The Padres won their fifth straight game, including the past three against Houston, for their first series sweep of the season. In a scheduling quirk, the Astros did not meet the Padres until June 8. San Diego bottomed out at 12-42 on June 4. Since then, the Padres have gone 32-25, the best record in the NL West during that span.

"San Diego has a tough ball club. The one disadvantage we had, we didn't play them early in the year, when they were down," Knepper said.

The Astros have six games remaining against the Padres.

Today the Astros open a four-game series in San Francisco against the Giants. San Francisco closed to within a game of division-leading Cincinnati by beating the Reds four straight, including both ends of a doubleheader Sunday.

Despite Sunday's loss, the Astros, 54-56, gained a half game on the Reds, closing to within three of the leader.

"In a lot of respects, this is the biggest road trip of the year for us," said Knepper, 4-13. "The Giants are playing well. If we go to San Francisco and play like we have here, we're in trouble."

While acknowledging the Padres are a hot team, Houston Manager Hal Lanier blamed the Astros' losses on a lack of production. Houston scored only seven runs in the three games against San Diego.

"San Francisco can't be any hotter than these guys, that's for sure. Not to take anything away from (the Padres), but we're not swinging the bat the way we should," Lanier said.

San Diego starter Eric Show, 6-13, pitched three-hit ball through six innings.

Traded

Phil Niekro, shown here in a 1984 photo, was traded Sunday from the last-place Cleveland Indians to the first-place Toronto Blue Jays for a minor league outfielder. The 48-year-old Niekro, who has 318 career victories and is nearing the end of his career, has never pitched in a World Series.

Broncos busted in London

By LARRY SIDONS
AP Sports Writer

WEMBLEY, England (AP)—In the last four years, Steve Dils says, football has come of age in Britain.

Dils quarterbacked Minnesota in 1983 when the Vikings beat the St. Louis Cardinals before less than 30,000 curious spectators in 80,000-seat Wembley Stadium.

On Sunday, Dils was back at Wembley, this time playing for the Los Angeles Rams against the Denver Broncos before a near-capacity crowd of 72,000 screaming gridiron fanatics.

"The big difference between 1983 and tonight is that the people now are very knowledgeable," Dils said after directing three second-half touchdown drives as the Rams rallied to edge the Broncos 28-27. "They seemed to enjoy the game and they seemed to cheer at the right time."

They had plenty to cheer about and lots to appreciate. There were six lead changes over the final 30 minutes and the outcome wasn't settled until Charles White's four-yard scoring run with 28 seconds to play.

Both teams used their starters for much of the first half.

Eric Dickerson, the NFL's single-season rushing record-holder, scored the game's first touchdown on a four-yard sweep late in the opening quarter to give Los Angeles a 7-0 lead.

Quarterback John Elway sparked Denver to a 13-7 lead at the start of the second half, directing an 11-play, 72-yard drive capped by Gene Lang's six-yard touchdown run.

By then, coaches John Robinson of the Rams and Dan Reeves of the Broncos were substituting freely, making the most of their first chance to see rookies and other hopefuls in action.

But for the fans, the fun was just beginning, and a former college star with a checkered pro career was to provide the biggest boost of all.

White, a Heisman Trophy winner at Southern California nine years ago, accounted for 49 yards of a 57-yard drive, capping it with a nine-yard run on the first play of the fourth quarter to give the Rams a 14-13 lead.

Three touchdowns and 14:28 later, White scored again from four yards out after a holding penalty against Denver, and Mike Lansford kicked the extra point for the margin of victory.

White's winning score came 1:25 after Gary Kubiak, Elway's replacement, threaded a 32-yard touchdown pass to rookie wide receiver Ricky Nattiel to put the Broncos on top 27-21.

In between White's first touchdown and the Kubiak-to-Nattiel TD pass, the lead changed on a 13-yard scoring strike from Kubiak to Mark Jackson and a one-yard TD run by the Rams' Tim Tyrrell.

"I think the fans are seeing things they couldn't appreciate in 1983," said Dils, who wound up with seven completions in 14 attempts for 105 yards.

Mennonite peace advocate wraps up mission in Texas

By JIM BRADY
Dallas Times Herald

DALLAS (AP) — Nuclear missiles remain poised on the brink, and handguns still are household utensils in Texas, but John Longhurst leaves his two-year peace mission in the Lone Star State with a wistful sigh just the same.

"My goal is not to bring peace to the world," Longhurst, a thin, now slightly less pale 30-year-old Mennonite, said recently as he packed his car for the trip home to Canada. "That's not going to happen. The first thing that can happen is to change one's heart."

Texas has provided a unique episode for Longhurst, who arrived two years ago as a volunteer and recently ended his humble reign as director of the Dallas Peace Center, a church-supported, non-profit operation with aims that range from helping families find food to promoting nuclear disarmament.

While Longhurst arrived as just another anonymous outsider doing a stint in Big D, his is a rare breed in a city built on the harsh frontier of hard-boiled business. And as he left the peace center's ivy-hung interior, Longhurst said he would like to think he helped change a few hearts.

Along the way, an idealist whose only knowledge of Dallas was Larry Hagman's J. R., Cowboys football and JFK's assassination has expanded to include chiggers, mesquite cooking and another way of thinking.

"I wanted to have an experience," Longhurst said. "I've had it."

Longhurst was simply looking for something "meaningful" to do when he and his 28-year-old wife, Christine, moved to Dallas so she could earn her master's degree in sacred music at Southern Methodist University's Perkins School of Music.

In Winnipeg, Longhurst virtually was lost in a city where peace marches and anti-nuclear demonstrations are as common as boat shows and rodeos are here. But here, he said, a newcomer calling to volunteer in the close-knit, church-based peace community is likely to rise quickly.

At a speakers' forum, he mentioned he had some journalism experience on newspapers in Canada. Members of the peace center suggested he could try his hand with publicizing local activities.

"Up until then, we had done just this little 8-by-10 newsletter," said Sam Nance, chairman of the center's board of directors. "We were expecting maybe two 8-by-10 pages. Now it's a full-blown newspaper. It's wonderful."

Instantly, Longhurst was the volunteer editor of The Dallas Peace Times, paid only $350 a month in living expenses through the Mennonite Voluntary Service. The newspaper reports 10 times a year about the activities of groups promoting human rights, nuclear disarmament, conflict resolution and racial harmony.

Back then, the paper's one-man staff also was pressed into front-line service. That's when Longhurst discovered demonstrations were different in Texas.

At anti-contra demonstrations in Miami, Longhurst said, opposition crowds heaved bottles and rocks. At a North Dallas picket he attended, he said, the only thing passers-by cast were curious glances.

"This is a very career-oriented city," he said. "I don't find it disagreeable. It's just a city where everybody has a lot to do. Maybe it's not possible to arouse the passions in Dallas."

And downright disillusionments occurred as well. The peace center was conscientiously set up in a dilapidated former warehouse on South Harvard Street.

"We wanted to symbolically illustrate that peacemaking is an attempt to pursue better relationships wherever you are," Longhurst said. "It was a lousy choice."

Within six months, the peace center was broken into twice, and thieves carried off the center's meager tools against violence and oppression: a pair of donated typewriters and some office furniture.

Nevertheless, the center was relocated in October to a converted upstairs office above a food bank and day-care center in back of the Mount Olive Lutheran Church, at 3100 Martin Luther King Jr. Blvd. And the work continued.

Tangible progress is difficult to measure, say the center's supporters. The peace center's concern for converting the local weapons industry to non-violent pursuits has influenced the Dallas Human Relations Commission to create an Economic Diversification Committee. Peace center members helped bring about the Young Offenders program in the Dallas Juvenile Department, bringing offenders and victims face-to-face to work out restitution and reconciliation.

Longhurst said the newspaper has raised the level of consciousness about peace issues and helped a network grow: His referral list of organizations has grown from 26 to 40, he said.

But others admire the paper itself.

"It's not just a newsletter — it's a well-put-together newspaper," said David Marquis, a playwright and author active in the local peace community. "People around the country are bowled over to see that we have that kind of thing in Dallas."

A recent issue had stories about Dallas women traveling to the Soviet Union, a profile about the volunteer lawyer for Proyecto Adelante, an aid center for Central American refugees and the usual mix of editorials, calendar listings and tidbits from other news publications about contras, violent toys, consumer rights and the Constitution.

Sherion Stevens, a graduate student at University of Texas at Dallas, went from intern to editor this summer to take Longhurst's place. Except for volunteer mailers, she is the staff.

"I didn't even know this place existed in November," she said.

Longhurst likes to say that while his wife moved to Dallas for a formal education, he got an informal one. His experience has included some poignant moments, such as the time he stood at a bus stop next to a Hispanic man. A police officer approached and demanded to see the other man's citizenship credentials. To Longhurst, he offered a friendly nod.

"The irony was not lost on me," he said. "I was an alien, whereas the Hispanic man in this policeman's eyes looked like an alien. But, in fact, he was the American."

Soon the Longhursts will be storing away their cottons and pulling out the woollens for a cold Canadian winter. But he said the noble experiment in Dallas will live on, and a friend will be shipping him the salsa that once scorched his northern palate.

In his farewell to readers, Longhurst reprinted words to a Peter, Paul and Mary song he said shows the "beaming promise — the promise of a better world":

"Light one candle for the wisdom to know; When a peacemaker's time is at hand."
In parting, Longhurst added: "Don't let the light go out. Shalom."

Beatrice Food unit being sold to investment firm

NEW YORK (AP) — Beatrice International Food Co. will become the nation's largest black-owned business if a sale of the consumer products giant to a New York investment firm goes through.

The TLC Group said Sunday it has agreed to buy a controlling interest in the Chicago-based company for $985 million.

The seller is BCI Holdings, the parent of Beatrice, which reported $2.5 billion in sales last year and makes Tropicana fruit juices, Peter Pan peanut butter, Orville Redenbacher's popcorn and other products.

TLC said it will own 55 percent of the business, making it the nation's largest black-owned company in terms of annual revenue, surpassing the Johnson Publishing Co. of Chicago, which had revenue last year of $173.5 million.

Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc., which is providing financing, will own most of the balance of the company. The deal is a leveraged buyout, in which company assets are used to repay debt incurred in making the purchase.

Beatrice is engaged in wholesale and retail distribution of food, groceries and household products in 31 countries, and last year reported operating income of $147 million.

The TLC Group, under chairman Reginald F. Lewis, impressed Drexel by purchasing McCall Pattern Co. for $1 million in 1984 and selling it last month for $90 million to the John Crowther Group, a British textile conglomerate, said Dean C. Kehler, a managing director at Drexel.

TLC Group said it had agreed to sell off the company's Beatrice Foods Canada Ltd. for about $230 million, in a leveraged buyout by the Onex Corp. of Canada and the management of Beatrice Canada. TLC will keep a 20 percent interest.

The transactions are subject to approval by the Justice Department, the Federal Trade Commission and the governments of some countries in which the company operates.

Catholics riot in Belfast

LONDONDERRY, Northern Ireland (AP) — Two bombs exploded in a Protestant district of Londonderry, injuring three boys, and a man was found dead after rioting in Roman Catholic areas of Belfast, police said today.

In Londonderry, Northern Ireland's second-largest city, a bomb exploded Sunday night behind a railway station in the predominantly Protestant Waterside district, police said. No injuries were reported and damage to the building was minor.

A second bomb went off 15 minutes later in the median in nearby Duke Street, and three teen-age boys were treated for shock and cuts at a local hospital. No one immediately claimed responsibility for the blasts.

In Belfast, Irish Republican Army supporters lit bonfires, and youths attacked police stations and patrol cars with stones, gasoline bombs and homemade grenades in pre-dawn rioting Sunday.

A Scottish man was found dead, and at least six people were injured and 14 arrested, police said.

Police said the badly beaten body of William Cockburn, 35, of Ayr, Scotland, was found on the "peace line" dividing the Catholic Falls Road from the Protestant Shankill district in west Belfast.

He had traveled to Londonderry for Saturday's Apprentice Boys' parade, in which Protestants annually commemorate the lifting of a 15-week siege of the city by the invading Catholic army of King James II of England in 1689.

There were no reports of violence during the rally. There were no details on how Cockburn died.

The riots marked the 16th anniversary of the introduction of internment of suspected terrorists without trial in the British province.

The practice was abandoned by Britain in 1975. IRA supporters still mark the anniversary each year, however, with anti-British rallies.

On Sunday afternoon, a parade marking the interment anniversary moved peacefully through West Belfast. Sinn Fein, the IRA's political wing, and witnesses said there were as many as 5,000 marchers.

Defense expert testifies evidence had been altered

JERUSALEM (AP) — An American documents expert testified today that someone had altered an SS identity card purporting to show that John Demjanjuk, accused of being "Ivan the Terrible," had trained at a Nazi guard center.

"I have reached the conclusion that the document is an altered document, and it is not authentic," Edna Robertson of Panama City, Fla., told the court in her second day of testimony.

She said she based her conclusion on evidence that a photograph on the card that allegedly portrays Demjanjuk had been attached in place of the original photograph.

The SS identity card states Demjanjuk was trained as a Nazi guard at Trawniki, a Nazi training center in Poland. Demjanjuk says the Trawniki card is a forgery put together by the Soviets, who provided the document to Israel in 1986.

The Ukrainian-born Demjanjuk, 67, a former autoworker from the Cleveland area, is accused of being a brutal guard who operated the gas chambers in which 850,000 Jews died at the Treblinka death camp in Nazi-occupied Poland in 1942-43.

Although the card does not mention Treblinka, the prosecution introduced it as corroboration of survivors' testimony that Demjanjuk was a guard at the camp.

Demjanjuk has denied he was Ivan or that he was even at Treblinka. He claims he was a Soviet Red Army soldier who was imprisoned in Nazi prisoner-of-war camps before being recruited into an anti-Soviet Nazi army unit.

Mrs. Robertson, who has a master's degree in handwriting and ink analysis from the University of West Florida in Pensacola, said she discovered evidence that a number on the uniform shown in the photograph had also been changed.

Mrs. Robertson, who also testified in Demjanjuk's behalf at U.S. court proceedings that resulted in the retired autoworker losing his American citizenship, said she discovered evidence that the SS card contained errors indicating it was set in type by a non-German speaker.

She said her conclusions about the document's authenticity were also based on the fact that the signature on the document did not correspond to 17 samples of Demjanjuk's signature in both Cyrillic and Latin letters taken over a wide period.

In cross-examination, Prosecutor Michael Shaked questioned Mrs. Robertson's competence. He challenged her ability to give an opinion on the authenticity of the card in a 1984 U.S. court hearing.

Libya bombs area retaken by Chad

PARIS (AP) — Libyan jets launched "intense and incessant" bombing raids in the Aouzou region a day after Chad seized the strip and drove Libyan troops from its territory, Chad's ambassador in Paris said.

Ambassador Ahmad Allam-mi gave no details of Sunday's bombing. But Chadian government radio, monitored in Abidjan, Ivory Coast, said the Libyan planes dropped napalm on the town of Aouzou and nearby villages.

Chad radio reported Saturday night that its troops retook Aouzou, ending 14 years of Libyan occupation, and drove the last Libyan troops from the North African country.

Haggar using fashion to help pick up slack

DALLAS (AP) — Haggar Apparel Co., once known as a conservative maker of men's polyester stretch pants, has tailored a new image using contemporary lines and technological innovations.

"I can't say enough good things about Haggar," said Mark Quick, Foley's divisional vice president for men's clothing.

"They are in the forefront in technological advances in the industry," said Jane Stanton, director of the Southwest Apparel Manufacturers Association.

As one of the nation's largest privately owned apparel manufacturers, Haggar is admired by industry officials as innovative and practical.

President Joseph Haggar Jr. — whose father, 94-year-old J.M. Haggar Sr., founded the company in 1926 — demonstrates the company's forward-looking approach.

On a recent plane flight, the junior Haggar was ribbed by some conservative friends when he showed up in yellow, elasticized drawstring pants with light-colored roll-up cuffs.

His companions questioned whether the trendy slacks could have been made by Haggar.

"I sometimes am without my wife. I'm many times without money, but I'm never without Haggar products," Haggar said. "I told them they were still in a fashion wilderness. That's the whole trend today: casual."

Haggar Apparel started out in downtown Dallas' Santa Fe building where the elder Haggar set up a few old sewing machines, hired four employees and revolutionized the industry by mass-producing men's slacks and selling them for one price.

The company was the first to advertise slacks nationally in print, taking out ads in several magazines in 1942. It introduced wash-and-wear slacks in 1954 and machine-washable suits in 1961. In 1985, Haggar led an industrywide movement to adopt a uniform product code, or bar code symbols, on finished goods tickets.

However, in the last decade, two challenges were the explosion of imported apparel and the addition of new retail distribution methods with more mass merchandisers, Haggar said.

"We had to figure out how to address those two things," he said. "What do we do as a company to compete in that kind of arena."

To address the changing retail environment without creating conflicts by selling the same product to department stores and mass merchandisers, Haggar created new lines. It also formed a new division, Reed St. James, to market different Haggar products to the mass merchandisers.

To compete with the overseas production, Haggar brought in state-of-the-art equipment and moved some of its facilities outside U.S. borders. However, the company still does most of its sewing within the United States.

Technology magnates taking place of oilmen gone broke

By MICHELLE LOCKE
Associated Press Writer

DALLAS (AP) — The traditional image of the Texas rich has taken a beating as fortunes buckle under the oil and real estate slump, but economists point to new empires being crafted by technology-oriented entrepreneurs.

Ten days ago, three-time former Gov. John Connally filed personal and business bankruptcy papers, blaming the collapsing real estate market for losses suffered by the Barnes-Connally Partnership, which he ran with former Lt. Gov. Ben Barnes.

Three days later, a reorganization plan was filed for debt-ridden Placid Oil Co., owned by the personal trusts of the billionaire Hunt brothers — William Herbert, Lamar and Nelson Bunker Hunt of Dallas. The plan proposes a means of repaying 18 creditor banks more than $850 million.

Businessmen such as Connally and the Hunts were thought to represent the establishment Texan — big, bold and rich — but that's a misperception, said Dr. Harold Gross, associate director of the Center for Enterprising at Southern Methodist University's Cox School of Business.

"Texas doesn't really have an establishment. Their rise and fall was very, very rapid," he said last week. "They started out as men of relatively modest means, rose to dizzying heights and then fell."

Declining crude oil prices battered the Texas image of millionaire wildcatters, but new entrepreneurs, mainly in high-tech fields, have sprung up in their place, Gross said.

Others who fell on hard times were Fort Worth millionaire Cullen Davis and the late Clint Murchison Jr., who once owned the Dallas Cowboys football team. Murchison's 25-acre estate was sold to help settle his bankruptcy problems.

"Nobody could have anticipated what happened in Houston and Dallas and Austin. They had all been pretty recession-proof over the years. The whole state was on a tremendous roll. None of us were smart enough to see this incredible downturn," Connally said last Saturday, a day after he filed for Chapter 11 protection for himself and Chapter 7 liquidation for Barnes-Connally Partnership.

The Hunt brothers, who saw their empire begin to crumble as commodity prices fell, placed Placid Oil Co. into Chapter 11 protection last summer.

Davis — who with his brother Kenneth was once listed among the 400 wealthiest Americans by Forbes magazine — filed for personal bankruptcy in July, and his lawyer said Davis was being pursued by creditors for about $200 million.

The string of prominent businessmen felled by a downturn isn't unusual in a commodity-based economy, Gross said.

"There are lot of instances where a group of wealthy, well-known people thought to embody the establishment have gone under," Gross said.

Not all of the big names in real estate and oil have crashed, but they have had to retrench, Gross said.

"Anybody who's a part of the old Texas economy, however scrupulous and careful they may have been, is going through a belt-tightening," he said. The new business success stories have been in electronics and technological fields, Gross said, pointing to Dallas billionaire H. Ross Perot who founded Electronic Data Systems, now a subsidiary of General Motors Corp.

"Clearly there is some diversity in the Texas economy and that diversity has helped the energy- and real estate-induced slump be not quite as bad as it could be. It certainly is part of the life of the future," said John Roach, president of Fort Worth-based Tandy Corp., parent of Radio Shack.

Roach predicted that oil would eventually rebound. He looked to retail and technology as growth areas of the future.

"While Texas' problem has been very serious, it's my sense that these situations have a way of turning themselves around faster than most people believe possible. With the spirit and entrepreneurship of Texans I've got all the confidence in the world that we will have a very viable future," Roach said.
