Market rallies after panic

Wall Street crushed again in big volume

NEW YORK (AP) — Stock prices leaped in heavy trading on the New York Stock Exchange early today but then gave back all of their gain, falling below the level it dropped to in Monday's $500 billion selloff.

The Dow Jones industrial average, up as much as 200 points in early trading, was down 3 points to about 1,736 at 11:59 a.m. The London Stock Exchange also retreated from a rally attempt in late trading.

Trading was even heavier than Monday's record, when the Dow plunged 508 points in a decline that rivaled the worst of the Great Crash of 1929.

Volume as of 11:30 a.m. was 258.56 million shares. The NYSE tape that reports trades was running 67 minutes behind.

Trying to calm the markets, the New York Stock Exchange asked securities houses not to use computerized program trading, which moves huge blocks of stock and contributes to the volatility of the market.

Two banks that had raised their prime rates last week, Chemical Bank and Marine Midland, rolled back the increases to the general level of 9.25 percent. The prime rate is used as a benchmark for a variety of consumer and business loans.

The stock market also was buoyed by an announcement that the Federal Reserve would inject money as necessary to support the health of the markets and banking system.

A statement from West German authorities today eased concerns that Germany would allow its interest rates to rise, a move that might choke off economic growth in the United States by forcing interest rates higher here as well.

The dollar rose sharply in value against the West German mark and Japanese yen.

Area investors undecided

Telephone lines at Pampa and area stockbrokers' offices were busy this morning as customers called to get information on the volatile market or to make trades that added to Wall Street's record volume.

The reactions of local investors varied. Some were buying or selling today, but most seemed to be taking a "wait-and-see" attitude, brokers indicated.

Tom Byrd of Edward D. Jones & Co., with offices at 317 N. Ballard, said a lot of his customers have been using the opportunity of lowered stock prices to buy into the market.

"We did an awful lot of buying yesterday," Byrd said this morning. "And we've done some this morning." Byrd said his office has been busy the past two days.

"The intelligent buyer buys when there's a lot of value ... and there's a lot of value out there now," he contended.

The tumult on the New York Stock Exchange has created problems in the computer system at Byrd's office in obtaining group quotes. Instead, he's been having to call up quotes one at a time in many instances, slowing down the ability to get stock market quotes ready for listing in the Daily Record section of The Pampa News.

The listings today are nearly evenly split between stocks that were showing some rebound on

Jet hits hotel; guests killed

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — A jet fighter crashed a mile short of an Indianapolis International Airport runway today, plowing into a hotel where at least seven people died and others were injured as the jet exploded in a "fireball," police and witnesses said.

Up to 25 people were missing and seven were confirmed dead in the accident at the 220-room Ramada Inn Airport, which occurred just after 9 a.m., said Robert Duncan, an attorney for the Indianapolis Airport Authority.

Up to 10 people were transported to area hospitals, said Larry Curl, a spokesman for the fire department rescue units on the scene.

A temporary morgue was established at the east end of the hotel. Authorities believe 107 people were in the building at the time.

Firefighters continued to search room-to-room for more people.

The point of impact was the second floor, just above the main lobby, according to Curl.

The pilot of the plane, an A-7 Corsair jet fighter, bailed out before the crash.

Reagan: No war with Iran; ayatollah not that stupid

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan says Iran is not "stupid" enough to go to war with the United States after the Navy destroyed an Iranian military facility, but Senate Democrats are still pushing for a formal vote on Reagan's Persian Gulf policy.

The Democratic-controlled chamber was scheduled to vote today on a motion to halt a filibuster which has blocked floor action on a binding resolution which could set up a vote early next year on Reagan's gulf policy.

The Democrats, holding a 54-46 margin, need 60 votes to invoke cloture, the parliamentary device used to end a filibuster.

Reagan said Monday the Iranian facility, a former oil platform standing in two separate sections, was "a command and control tower with radar and the ability to track shipping through the gulf."

He said the platform's destruction by U.S. ships was "an appropriate and proportionate response to their missile attack on a freighter, which wounded some of our people."

His reference was to Iran's Silkworm missile attack last week on one of the 11

Kuwaiti tankers flying the U.S. flag. The attack injured 18 crewmen, including one American, the ship's captain.

U.S. commandos on Monday also boarded another Iranian platform about six miles away from the first after seeing it being abandoned, the Pentagon said.

The commandos destroyed some radar and communications gear found at the platform, originally used for oil drilling and converted to military use, but made no effort to destroy the structure itself before leaving, officials said.

Fred Hoffman, the Pentagon's chief spokesman, disclosed the action about 6 1/2 hours after Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger announced that four U.S. Navy warships had destroyed the other Iranian sea platform.

Reagan, asked by reporters if the United States is at war with Iran, answered, "We're not going to have a war with Iran. They're not that stupid."

The pending Senate resolution provides that within 60 days after enactment, Reagan would have to send Congress a detailed report, answering a number of questions about his policy of reflagging the Kuwaiti tankers and protecting them with Navy convoys in the war-torn gulf.

Another 30 days after that, Congress would be required to act on a resolution expressing some type of view, either positive or negative, on Reagan's policy.

"I think there's a majority in the Senate for it, but whether we've got the votes for cloture, I don't know," said Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee.

Subway shooter Goetz sentenced to 6 months

NEW YORK (AP) — Bernhard Goetz says his six-month prison sentence for illegal possession of the gun he used to shoot four young men on a subway won't deter him from defending himself.

Goetz, 39, was sentenced Monday by acting state Supreme Court Justice Stephen Crane, who presided over an eight-week trial stemming from the 1984 shootings. The jury convicted Goetz on June 16 of a single charge of illegal possession of a weapon, and acquitted him of attempted murder and assault.

Goetz, who is white, said he shot the four black 19-year-olds because he believed they were about to rob him when one approached and demanded $5. They said they were panhandling money to play video-game machines.

Before sentencing, the state Probation Department had recommended Goetz receive "intensive supervision coupled with indefinite psychiatric intervention," but no jail time.

Besides the jail term, Crane fined Goetz $5,000, put him on probation for five years, ordered him to perform 280 hours of community service at New York University Medical Center, and directed him to undergo psychiatric treatment.

Sarpalius pushes collider

State Sen. Bill Sarpalius wants a raceway in the Panhandle, and he doesn't mean one for horses.

He wants a "proton raceway" — a "supercollider," a high-tech piece of economic incentive that the U.S. Department of Energy is dangling before 40 bidders across the United States.

Sarpalius, D-Canyon, and state Sen. Chet Edwards, D-Duncanville, spent Monday generating support for proposed Amendment 19, which, if passed by voters Nov. 3, would authorize the issuance of $500 million in bonds for a fund to help build the $5 billion superconducting supercollider.

The senators visited with a small group of Pampa Chamber of Commerce officials and civic leaders Monday afternoon at the Pampa Community Building.

Texas is currently competing with other states for the supercollider research project that the federal government wants to build. The Panhandle is one of 40 sites under consideration by the DOE. Two other proposed Texas sites include the Dallas-Waxahachie area and the San Angelo area.

Sarpalius said the supercollider could bring 14,500 jobs and an annual payroll of $1 billion to Texas. Plus, the senator said, the project could attract "500 to 1,000 of the leading scientists in the world" who would come to the site to do research.

The influx of brainpower would boost the science and technology programs at West Texas State University and Texas Tech University, Sarpalius said.

Sarpalius explained that by incorporating the theory of superconductivity, a supercollider could enable scientists to develop a computer chip one-fourth of its current size but with 1,000 times as much memory.

Fire report

Average Americans hurt by stock market plunge

NEW YORK (AP) — From retired steelworkers to investment bankers on Wall Street, millions of Americans could be hurt by shock waves from the stock market's cataclysmic loss.

Economists say the plunge that stripped more than $500 billion from the value of stocks could dampen consumer spending, eliminate jobs, threaten the stability of pension funds and lead to higher taxes.

Although most people don't ordinarily think about Wall Street's day-to-day gyrations, the stupefying 22.6 percent loss suffered by the Dow Jones industrial average Monday reflected a historic turning point that may have a profound effect on their lives in coming months, economists said.

"The stock market always has been a leading indicator of the economy," said John Markese, vice president of the American Association of Individual Investors in Chicago. "If the market is right and it's a precursor of a declining economy, then we all have to be worried."

The impact of the devastation, if it continues, could be particularly harmful to retired people who have relied largely on gains in the stock market's five-year-long rally for supplemental income.

"For those retirees who have just invested in the market, they've got a problem," said Robert W. Dell, manager of retiree relations at Sun Oil Co. in Radnor, Pa. "Psychologically, it has to be devastating."

The worst securities sell-off of modern times also wiped out billions of dollars in holdings by pension funds, which are among the most significant of the large, long-term institutional investors in the stock market.

"It goes without saying that large pension funds are going to share a 22 percent beating along with anybody else," said Malcolm Rodman, executive vice president of the International Association of Pre-retirement Planners, a group based in Rockville, Md.

Rodman and others said they saw little threat to the stability of pension funds because in most cases they are well managed and diversified portfolios that include bonds and other stable investments.

Nevertheless, experts said, many companies may have to compensate for any pension-fund losses in stocks, which could put an unexpected and severe pressure on their budgets and lead to cut-backs in other areas, including jobs.

For public-employee pension funds as well, the market debacle was severe. In California, for example, the state's Public Employees Retirement System, which provides pensions for more than 220,000 government retirees, lost up to $4 billion Monday. New York state's stock holdings lost more than $6 billion.

As with private companies, state and municipal governments might have to compensate for losses suffered by these funds, possibly by levying higher taxes, benefits experts said.

The impact of a bear market already has started to affect fortunes on Wall Street, where many young professional brokers accustomed to six-figure salaries and high-priced Manhattan condominiums are confronting the prospect of pay cuts or layoffs.

More than 1,000 people have been laid off during the past month, and several major brokerages reportedly are contemplating big restructurings on the theory that Wall Street's bull market has reversed and interest rates are starting to rise significantly.

Many economists said the sudden loss of more than $500 billion in stock value would ripple through the economy in waves, simply by making investors much more cautious or persuading them to keep it in safe, interest-bearing savings accounts.

Several banks cut their prime rates, a benchmark for a variety of consumer and business loans.

The dollar strengthened today against foreign currencies, apparently buoyed by a crisis atmosphere and a meeting between U.S. and West German officials that seemed to lessen the likelihood that the United States would allow the dollar to decline.

The dollar was quoted at 1.8020 West German marks and 143.75 Japanese yen in European trading as of 9 a.m., up from 1.7721 marks and 141.475 yen as of late Monday afternoon in New York.

The price of gold bullion on New York's Commodity Exchange was down $16.80 a troy ounce to $464.90 shortly after 9 a.m. today. Gold had jumped $15 an ounce on Monday.

with 100 times and it would not get dull," Sarpalius said. "You can make a battery the size of a flashlight battery and it can power an automobile. Let your imagination wander."

Edwards said the use of the term "atom smasher," which he said is erroneous, may bring up images of nuclear energy. That, he said, is not what superconductivity is all about.

"Think of it instead as a proton accelerator, a proton raceway, with protons going around a 52-mile track," Edwards said. "The energy caused by the two protons smashing into each other is similar to two mosquitoes colliding."

"The radioactive waste coming from a supercollider would be no more than that of a local hospital," Edwards said.

Edwards added that the Texas supercollider project has the backing of the entire Texas Congressional delegation, both Texas U.S. senators, Gov. Bill Clements and his predecessor, Mark White.

"You never saw such a diverse group support a project," Sarpalius said, adding that the only group to oppose the amendment has been the Libertarian Party. "And they want to legalize drugs and end public schools."

Sarpalius and Edwards said the proposal's worst enemy is voter apathy and ignorance. That's why they are spending the week barnstorming the Panhandle.

Edwards said people in Houston and along the Rio Grande Valley have little knowledge of the supercollider and are likely to turn it down.

"There are more blacks voting in Houston than there are voters in the Panhandle," Sarpalius said.

Another problem is the length of the ballot which voters will see at the November general election.

The supercollider is 19th out of 25 proposed amendments on the ballot. Two propositions, one concerning pari-mutuel wagering on horse and dog racing and one asking voters if they want to keep an appointed State School Board, are generating the most publicity throughout the state.

Edwards said that the proposed bonds will not be issued if the DOE does not put the project in Texas.

The senators believe that the Panhandle will benefit, even if Dallas gets the project.

"It will generate more state taxes (revenue) and help ease the state tax burden," Edwards said. "We are 50th in the country for what we get back from federal taxes."

"I think we're all in the same boat together," he added. "If you don't believe that, look at the traffic on the highways and the public airports."

Sarpalius said state colleges will also benefit from the project.

The Canyon senator added that he does not believe the Panhandle's chances of getting the supercollider hinge on whether or not a DOE nuclear waste dump is located in Deaf Smith County.

Sarpalius said he feels that of the three proposed sites for the controversial dump, Nevada is most likely to get it.

"There's no way the two (the dump and the collider) can even be considered with each other," Sarpalius said.

After the meeting, Sarpalius discussed other amendments and propositions facing voters in November.

He said he supports proposed Amendment 4, which allows the legislature to create programs and make loans for economic development and diversification, reducing unemployment and stimulating agricultural innovation.

Sarpalius said he helped push the legislation calling for Amendment 6, which would authorize the issuance of $125 million in general obligation bonds to finance small businesses, new products and agricultural processing and marketing.

Sarpalius said he opposes pari-mutuel wagering.

Panic

In London, the stock exchange's key index was down 14 percent about halfway through the trading session but rebounded late in the day as Wall Street was rallying. The Financial Times-Stock Exchange 100-share index was up 171.00 at 1,881.3 near the end of trading following Monday's record plunge of 249.6 points, or 10.8 percent. Stocks also showed signs of rallying in Frankfurt.

Monday's rout in stocks spread from New York to the Tokyo and London stock exchanges, as both markets reported record declines in their key indicators. Prices plunged on other markets from Israel to Argentina.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks fell 508 points Monday, a bigger one-day percentage decline than on the eve of the Great Depression, as $503 billion worth of stock value was wiped out. More than $1 trillion in stocks was erased worldwide in a 24-hour period.

Traders around the world focused on the possibility — however remote — that the devastation in stock markets would cause another 1930s-style depression by wiping out people's investments and causing a crisis in confidence.

In another bearish sign, stock index futures remained at a steep discount to stocks. As long as that situation held, investors could lock in a profit by selling stocks and buying the index futures.

Prices of U.S. Treasury bonds soared as investors sought a safe haven in government securities offering fixed incomes. That meant the yield on the bonds fell, a measure of lower

Bankers: Market plunge won't push up interest rates

DALLAS (AP) — The stock market's collapse may have left many in the financial world badly shaken, but it has brightened the outlook on interest rates, banking officials say.

"The Fed is not going to tighten (credit policies) in this environment," Thomas G. Labrecque, president of Chase Manhattan Corp., the nation's second-largest bank holding company, told a news conference during the American Bankers Association's annual convention here.

"The bias, if anything, may be the other way," he said.

By raising interest rates, the Federal Reserve can signal its desire to rein in economic growth. However, if the stock market continues to fall as it did during Monday's record drop, that ultimately could dampen the economy, bankers and economists say.

Lower interest rates may also aid the stock market because yields on bonds, a competing investment, would become less attractive and could prompt some investors to buy stocks again, some analysts said in separate interviews.

The stock market suffered its biggest one-day loss ever Monday, with the Dow Jones Average of 30 industrial stocks plunging about 508 points in record-high trading.

Already, interest rates have eased somewhat in the credit markets, as investors yanked their money out of stocks in favor of bonds, whose yields have been rising steadily in recent weeks.

Yields on the Treasury's bellwether 30-year bond tumbled to 9.94 percent Monday from 10.17 late Friday. Short-term rates also fell. The yield on the three-month Treasury bill, for instance, plunged 62 basis points to around 6.50 percent. A basis point is one-hundredth of a percentage point.

William E. Gibson, chairman of the ABA's economic advisory council and executive vice president at Continental Illinois Corp., said economic growth "is certainly not going to change in a matter of hours no matter what's happening with the Dow."

But he said, "The next issue to be thinking about is what psychological impact this might have on spending behavior."

"When the stock market was running high, people felt good about the economy and were spending money. Now, we hope there won't be a reversal," he said.

While most bankers remained generally optimistic about the state of the economy, with many predicting modest growth and inflation and low unemployment, some said they were concerned that the stock market's drop could shake consumer confidence.

That, in turn, could impact consumer spending and ultimately send the economy into a recession. Banks would be indirectly affected by this trend because it could change the way companies and individuals save or borrow money, they said.

Interest rates would have to come down to restart the economy, Jay Goldinger, an investment banker for the Beverly Hills, Calif., firm Cantor, Fitzgerald & Co., said in a telephone interview.

He predicted that as long as the dollar remained stable, interest rates would pursue a downward trend.

"I think the stock market is responding to the high interest rate levels," said Robert H. Dugger, the ABA's chief economist. "It's a technical adjustment to what's happening in the credit markets."

The recent runup in the credit market rates also was largely responsible for the rise in banks' prime lending rates because it pushed up banks' cost of borrowing money and paying interest on deposit accounts.

On Oct. 8, banks raised their prime lending rates a half percentage point to 9.25 percent. However, most banks failed to follow Chemical Bank's decision to raise its key lending rate another half percentage point to 9.75 percent last week, the highest level in more than two years.

Banking officials at the ABA convention said they had preferred to wait for upward pressure on rates before boosting them.

As the stock market began its free-fall early Monday, most bankers took the situation in stride. They also predicted little change in commercial banks' strong push to enter the volatile securities industry despite Monday's major selloff.

"The end is not here. Chin up," said L. William Seidman, head of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., which insures deposits in federally chartered financial institutions.

Walter V. Shipley, chairman of Chemical New York Corp., said Monday's drop was not the start of another 1929 stock market crash that helped set off the Depression of the 1930s.

"The fundamentals don't call for it," Labrecque said of Monday's market plunge.

Prison board hopes to select all prison sites on Nov. 9

AUSTIN (AP) — The state prison board, which has chosen two contractors to build and run Texas' first proposed private prisons, hopes to name the final sites for planned private and state-run prisons on Nov. 9.

The board will finalize the four private prison sites at the November meeting if the private contractors can schedule public hearings before then at the sites, Chairman Al Hughes said Monday.

A public hearing on two proposed 2,250-inmate minimum, medium and maximum security state-run prisons and four proposed 1,000-inmate state-run pre-release centers will be scheduled immediately before the Nov. 9 meeting, he said.

The private contractors — Corrections Corp. of America of Nashville, Tenn., and a partnership formed by Becon Construction Co. of Houston and Wackenhut Services Inc. of Florida — have proposed a total of eight prison sites, which will be narrowed to four by prison board staff this week, Hughes said.

Each company would get two of the four proposed private 500-inmate pre-release centers, which will house inmates who are preparing to leave prison.

Corrections Corp. has proposed one site each near Dallas and San Antonio and two in Houston, while Becon-Wackenhut has proposed locations in Hays, Jefferson, Liberty and Parker counties.

The board staff also has chosen 10 finalists in the 33-community competition for the two, 2,250-inmate prisons and the four state-run pre-release centers, Hughes said.

The finalists, some of which are in West Texas, may be announced Tuesday, he said. Three of the finalists have bid on the large prisons, he said, and seven have bid on the pre-release centers.

Prison officials earlier mentioned only one proposed 2,250-inmate prison, but Hughes said the 1985 Legislature authorized two such facilities and the 1987

Legislature authorized one.

One of the large prisons already has been built, he said. The third will not be built until after prison officials have met with the governor, lieutenant governor and House speaker, he said.

The prison board site subcommittee plans to visit the finalist sites for the state-built prisons next Tuesday and Wednesday, Hughes said.

Corrections Corp. and Becon-Wackenhut were among six private prison finalists to make a presentation to the board Monday.

The board approved a partnership formed by Prisor Inc. of Nashville, Tenn., and Century Development Corp. of Houston as an alternate choice, in case the two companies chosen cannot successfully negotiate with board staff.

The Prisor partnership has proposed sites in Bridgeport, Cleveland, Liberty County and Fort Bend County.

Under the law, private contractors must be at least 10 percent below the state cost of running the pre-release centers. The state cost is estimated at $41.67 per inmate, per day, the first year; $42.53 the second year, and $42.95 the third year of the three-year contract.

Corrections Corp., whose presentation to the board was led by attorney and former Texas Secretary of State David Dean, gave a $37.05 per inmate-per day estimate for the first year. Corporation officials said the cost would go up less than 3 percent a year.

Becon-Wackenhut gave a $36.38 to $36.64 first-year estimate, $37.35 to $37.73 second-year estimate and $38.18 to $39.19 third-year estimate.

The staff is expected to negotiate on the cost estimates.

Services to be provided at the pre-release centers include education, job training, restitution programs, counseling for alcohol, drug and sexual abuse, the teaching of family values and, potentially, prison industry.

Pistor chats with a few convention goers.

Pistor to head nation's bankers

DALLAS (AP) — The chairman of First Republic Bank in Dallas says he will work for banking deregulation as president of the American Bankers Association.

Charles Pistor is scheduled to be installed today during the ABA's annual convention in Dallas.

"There is an implicit suggestion that until we (lawmakers) can produce comprehensive banking legislation, then you should extend the moratorium. Wrong. We have to get that removed," Pistor told The Dallas Morning News.

In his new position, Pistor will head a fight to repeal action by Congress, which earlier this year placed a moratorium on any new powers extended by regulators until March 1.

To fight the legislation, ABA leaders such as Pistor are encouraging bank chief executives to require their senior officers to write their senators and representatives demanding that the moratorium be lifted.

Rallying behind the fight, bankers at the Dallas Convention Center have pinned buttons on their suits with bright red stop signs and white letters: "Kill the moratorium!"

"We have 14,000 banks," Pistor said. "But in those banks, we have a million employees."

Despite the display of energy behind the movement to kill the moratorium, Pistor takes the helm of the ABA at a difficult time for the organization.

Both large and small banks are under tremendous profitability pressures and are seeing an increasing amount of their business go to Wall Street brokerages, finance companies and other non-bank financial services providers.

Mattox says grand jury possible

AUSTIN (AP) — A decision should be made by mid-November whether to go to a grand jury in the investigation of Southern Methodist University's pay-for-play football scandal, Attorney General Jim Mattox says.

Mattox said his office's investigators were continuing to review written material and to interview witnesses.

"There's a strong likelihood that we are not going to be able to get all the information we'd like to have without a grand jury or some other kind of court of inquiry-type hearing, where a person can be in effect subpoenaed in and put under oath," Mattox told a news conference.

"That's what we're trying to determine right now — whether or not there's sufficient information to warrant that kind of action," he said.

Mattox said he hoped a decision would be reached by Nov. 15. If the case is taken to a grand jury, Mattox said, it probably would be in Dallas County.

SMU received a form of the "death penalty" earlier this year from the National Collegiate Athletic Association, which banned it from playing intercollegiate football in 1987. The school then canceled its 1988 season.

In March, Texas Gov. Bill Clements said that, while chairman of the SMU board of governors, he and other officials authorized continued illegal cash payments to players after the school was placed on NCAA probation in 1985.

Mattox's office began its investigation under the state laws regulating charitable trusts.

The attorney general has said he is particularly interested in $863,000 in payments SMU agreed to make to three ex-athletic officials, including former athletic director Bob Hitch and former football coach Bobby Collins.

Mattox said Monday that his office had asked SMU not to make a final decision "concerning the termination of the contracts on the athletic director and coaches until we have had a chance to complete our review of the matter."

Doctors: Some improvement in Jessica McClure's foot

MIDLAND (AP) — Doctors trying to save toddler Jessica McClure's injured right foot say her youth may be their biggest asset.

"Children, babies like Jessica have great recuperative powers," vascular surgeon Shelton Viney said Monday at a news conference at Midland Memorial Hospital.

"Doctors have to learn to slow down and let the baby heal herself."

The 18-month-old's right foot was severely injured during her 58-hour entombment in an abandoned water well. The foot was wedged between her body and the well, cutting off much of the blood circulation.

Orthopedic surgeon Charles Younger said after inspecting the girl's foot Monday that he would not cite odds on her being able to keep the foot, "but I think we're all on the optimistic side."

During Monday's procedure, doctors looked at the swollen foot, cut away a little dead skin and tested the blood circulation by injecting dye and using a device called a Doppler laser.

Blood flow in the big toe and the edges of the foot was poor, Younger said. But he added that child of Jessica's age can compensate easily by growing new blood vessels.

"You can look at the foot for five minutes and it'll look pink for two minutes and it'll look blue for two minutes, and you wonder whether your eyes are playing tricks on you."

The doctors said the foot has improved in the last few days. She remained in serious but stable condition.

Doctors plan to test the foot's blood circulation Wednesday.

"I don't think we're totally out of the woods. I think we feel a little better today," Younger said.

Jessica also has a silver-dollar-size pressure wound, similar to a bedsore, on her forehead.

Plastic surgeon Terry Tubb said he had been ready to implant two silicone "bubbles" in the girl's forehead to stretch the skin and stitch it over the area of dead skin. But he decided to wait because her forehead was still bruised and swollen.

"I'm going to slow down, take my time, let Mother Nature take its course," Tubb said. "I want the best condition possible."

Building inspector charged with taking bribes

ARLINGTON (AP) — A city building inspector allegedly accepted up to $30,000 in bribes in exchange for approving work by two plumbing subcontractors on new homes, officials said.

Alden Johnson, 44, was arraigned Monday one of two bribery counts, with bond set at $50,000, said Arlington police spokesman Dee Anderson.

A judge later ordered Johnson released from the Arlington City Jail. The suspect was scheduled to be arraigned on the second bribery charge today.

Johnson's supervisors call the case an "isolated incident."

"This is the first instance we've ever had of something like this," said Pat Potter, a supervisor of inspectors.

Johnson was fired last Thursday after officials learned police planned to arrest him on the bribery counts, according to Potter.

The two plumbing companies claimed they were forced to pay bribes.

EVER STRIVING FOR THE TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

AIDS guide says behavior key issue

After listening to the gay lobby and other critics, one would think Education Secretary Bill Bennett is challenging them to a fight with his department's booklet AIDS and the Education of our Children: A Guide for Parents and Teachers.

Actually, the 28-page publication now being distributed to schools, school boards and parent groups across the country is eminently reasonable.

It emphasizes that most cases of AIDS result from behavior that can and should be avoided. Specifically, it says "the safest and smartest way to prevent infection with the deadly AIDS virus is to avoid premarital sex and illegal drugs."

This refreshingly frank, idealistic approach reflects Bennett's exasperation with those who shrink from advocating strong moral values in the classroom. How, he asks, can adults expect impressionable students to abstain from sex and drugs when they are receiving mixed signals from role models and authoritative figures who recommend the use of condoms and clean needles? Then, again, the militant education secretary has never been one to mince words.

Mind you, there is nothing strident about this slender booklet. It simply presents unvarnished facts: Only 17,775 of the 41,825 victims of AIDS were still alive as of last month; 89 percent of persons known to have AIDS are homosexuals or intravenous drug abusers. It also criticizes sex-education programs that assume a neutral stance on moral matters. And, finally, this significant little handbook warns students that condoms are by no means foolproof in preventing the spread of AIDS or other sexually transmitted diseases.

Who could possibly object to such a common-sense approach to AIDS instruction? Rep. Ted Weiss for one. Although the New York Democrat concedes that abstinence makes sense, he complains the booklet doesn't give condoms their due. And the Department of Health and Human Resources is miffed because the entire handbook wasn't cleared by the federal coordinating committee on AIDS.

Such nitpicking pales before Bennett's salient point that parents and teachers should not shy away from associating moral values with behavior. Such a point is rapidly becoming nothing less than a matter of life and death.

Berry's World

"...so much for contra-mania and Persian Gulf-mania — now for Bork-mania..."

Bork lost on privacy standard

A president who has been elected twice by huge margins obviously knows something about reading public opinion. But in his bitterness at the "lynch mob" that has derailed the nomination of Robert Bork to the Supreme Court, Ronald Reagan overlooks how badly he misinterpreted what the people want.

The views Bork would bring to the Supreme Court would endanger or weaken some of its most important rulings of the past 40 years, which have given overdue meaning to basic constitutional guarantees. But there's no doubt that he has been maliciously misrepresented by Reagan's enemies, whose opposition to Bork has more to do with advancing their political agenda than with protecting the Constitution. It was his misfortune to be in the wrong place at the wrong time.

The Reagan administration's allies saw Bork as a symbol of the popular revulsion with judicial activism, which the Right blames for codding criminals, hamstringing presidential power, chasing God out of the public schools and subverting traditional values. Instead he was demonized as an enemy of minorities and women, an accomplice in Richard Nixon's crimes, a stooge of big business, a closet extremist. He is none of these. When so much mud is thrown, though, some is bound to stick.

But Bork is not simply the victim of a skilled smear campaign. He was damaged by his enemies but also by his friends — and, perhaps decisively, by his own record as a scholar and a judge. The conservative reaction against the Supreme Court may have commanded broad support 20 years ago, but that support has dissipated. When the Right talks about rolling back the legacy of judicial activism, it is more likely to evoke fear than agreement. Americans no longer automatically equate the Miranda warning with growing lawlessness. They no longer trust an unconstrained president to carry out their wishes in foreign affairs, unchecked by a watchful Congress. They no longer regard prayer in schools as necessarily benign or beneficial. They no longer demand that "traditional values" be imposed through government power. In these matters, Bork came to symbolize the worst side of an unmourned past, when the courts offered scant protection against the abuse of government power.

Bork himself was once an advocate of libertarianism and exhibits unwarranted pride in having abandoned it. Only his views on economics, which lean heavily to a laissez-faire approach, still show traces of that stage of his intellectual life. In other matters, he is stingy in his definition of individual liberty — believing, for example, that the majority has a right to vigorously enforce its standards of morality on the minority. The alternative is — horrors! — "the privatization of morality."

But while Bork was moving one way, the country was moving the other. Much of what happened in the 1960s and 1970s — the Vietnam War, the Watergate scandal, the failure of the Great Society, the energy crisis — produced a broad loss of faith in government and a growing belief in the need to protect the individual from state power.

In economics, that trend complemented Bork's arguments for free markets. Elsewhere, however, it contradicted his preference for an intrusive, activist government and his narrow reading of constitutional rights.

If any single opinion was likely to scuttle his chances, it was Bork's rejection of the Supreme Court's rulings protecting privacy. In constitutional terms, his arguments is not ridiculous. But in political terms, it proved disastrous. The idea that the Supreme Court could allow a state to forbid the sale of contraceptives to married couples — as Bork's criticism of its 1965 Griswold decision suggests — is utterly repugnant to most Americans. They have an ingrained belief in their own right to make such decisions, and they are not inclined to give it up.

Nor are they sympathetic to readings of the Constitution that give no protection to what they regard as basic rights. A constitution that would allow the abuses permitted by Bork's approach sounds like a constitution that is hardly worth having.

By nominating Bork, President Reagan hoped to mobilize popular sentiment behind his drive for "judicial restraint." Instead, he only dramatized the increasingly libertarian bent of the electorate. In their desire to preserve cherished rights — including, perhaps most importantly, what Justice Louis Brandeis called the "right to be left alone" — most Americans regard the Supreme Court as a crucial ally. They aren't likely to welcome any nominee who threatens to make it an enemy.

BORK SUPPORTERS FIGHT TO THE LAST MAN

Open closet for world to see

There used to be the belief in this country that "every little boy has a chance to grow up to be president."

What we really meant back then was every child had a chance to grow up to be president, but back then how were we to know little girls would someday care about anything but a degree in Home Ec and a husband with a hairy chest?

What else we didn't know is that presidential politics would become a steady exercise in muckraking, and when a little boy or little girl grew up and tried to be president, somebody would dig each and every wart out of their past.

We know what happened to Gary Hart and Joe Biden and their presidential bids. We found out Hart fooled around with the ladies and Biden fooled around with the truth.

Now, we come to Republican candidate Pat Robertson, the evangelist. Turns out, according to the Wall Street Journal, the Rev. Robertson gambled, drank, and caroused his way through college and when he married his wife, she was already seven months pregnant.

I gave up on the hope of this little boy ever growing up to be president a long time ago. Actually, I don't want to be president.

Lewis Grizzard

Regardless of that, however, I feel the compelling need to go ahead and reveal the sordid shortcomings of my past before somebody else, for whatever reasons, might start digging through it.

Who knows? I might replace Pat Sajak on "Wheel of Fortune" one day. I might even become a television evangelist myself. It's inside work with no heavy lifting, and the pay is great.

I simply want to get the past off my chest before the leeches have a chance to latch hold of me.

Let's start at the beginning:
 When I was 6, my mother served liver one night, and I got rid of mine by feeding it to the dog under the table.

"Did you eat your liver or did you give it to the dog?" my mother asked.

I lied, and said I ate it. Worse, my dog was sick for weeks from the liver and died.

When I was 11, I bought some dirty pictures from a friend at school. Every guy did that I suppose, but I still have mine.

When I was 14, I tried to put my hand inside Kathy Sue Loudermilk's sweater.

I wasn't successful, however. There wasn't room for anything else inside of Kathy Sue's sweater.

When I was 17, I cheated on a history exam. I couldn't remember Millard Fillmore's first name.

When I was 27, I folded, mutilated and spindled a computer card.

When I was 35, I said to somebody, "It takes one to know one." I stole that from Alvin Bates, who used to say the same thing back in high school.

Last year, when I was 40, I said, "What this country needs on the Supreme Court is a jurist like Robert Bork."

There it is, and I feel a lot better now that it's all out in the open.

Meanwhile, did you hear one of the presidential candidates is gay?

Baltimore's vote reflects racial harmony

By Robert Walters

BALTIMORE (NEA) — In an era when antagonism between blacks and whites too often is a hallmark of local politics, this city is making major changes in its municipal leadership with elections remarkably free of racial hostility.

Sustaining the concept of a shared community has become increasingly difficult in major cities after several decades of white flight to the suburbs. That phenomenon has exacerbated tensions between whites who remain in the cities and blacks determined to exercise the new-found political power they enjoy by virtue of their numerical superiority.

About 55 percent of the 780,000 people living in Baltimore are black, but until early this year the city had been governed by white mayors.

That was attributable, in great measure, to the 15-year reign of Mayor William Donald Schaefer, a Democrat who stepped down after being elected governor of Maryland last year.

Ascending automatically to fill the vacancy on an interim basis was City Council President Clarence (Du) Burns, a 68-year-old black Democrat who founded his own political club 40 years ago, then assembled a coalition of black and white supporters to gain a council seat.

Burns wanted to win a full term as mayor this year, but he was promptly joined in the race by 37-year-old Kurt L. Schmoke, another black Democrat.

A third candidate actively considered entering the race — Robert Embry, a highly regarded 49-year-old white urban planner who has been head of the city's housing program and chairman of its school board.

Political professionals here logically assumed that Embry had a good chance to win a three-way primary in which the black vote would be divided between Burns and Schmoke. But Embry declined to run, in part because he believed "it is not healthy for the city" to encourage such racial divisions.

Burns and Schmoke have strikingly different backgrounds. Before he entered politics, the acting mayor spent 22 years as a locker room attendant at a local high school.

Schmoke, in contrast, graduated from Yale, where he was captain of the football team and the first black to be elected president of a senior class. From there, he went to Oxford as a Rhodes Scholar and to Harvard Law School.

After working with a prestigious Baltimore law firm, he upset a white incumbent in the 1972 election for state's attorney, becoming the city's chief criminal prosecutor.

When black politicians first gained political leadership in many cities, they often enjoyed unquestioning support from black voters. Recently, however, increasingly sophisticated voters in predominantly black cities have been willing to dump incumbent black mayors who fail to meet their expectations.

Thus, voters in Gary, Ind., earlier this year rejected Mayor Richard Hatcher's bid for re-election, bringing his tenure in office to an end after 20 years. Similarly, voters in Newark, N.J., last year denied Mayor Kenneth Gibson a sixth term. Like Hatcher, he was succeeded by another black.

Here in Baltimore, white voters overwhelmingly supported incumbent Burns in last month's Democratic primary but black voters who wanted a change backed Schmoke by an equally large margin. Schmoke won by three percentage points.

At the same time, white civic activist Mary Pat Clark fashioned a biracial coalition of supporters to defeat black state legislator Larry Young by four percentage points in the contest for city council president.

All of those results must be ratified in next month's general election, but the outcome is not in doubt in a city whose electorate is more than 90 percent Democratic. Racial harmony, however fragile, is thriving in Baltimore.

Pennsylvania couple wins record lottery jackpot

HARRISBURG, Pa. (AP) — The small-town couple who won a record North American lottery jackpot of $46 million say they will travel, help relatives and take in stock car races but aren't talking about stock market investments.

Donald R. Woomer, 55, and Linda K. Despot, 37, claimed their first-year check of $1.4 million on Monday, the same day investors took a bath as the stock market suffered its biggest plunge in history.

In each of the next 25 years, the couple, whose odds of winning were 1 in 9.6 million, will receive similar annual payments after 20 percent federal income tax is withheld. At a news conference here, the couple, who live together in Holidaysburg, were asked if they would invest some of their winnings in stocks.

They did not respond, but the suggestion triggered a burst of laughter in the room.

They did say that returning to work was not in their plans.

"The morning I looked at the numbers that was it," said Woomer, a self-employed plasterer. "Early retirement," added Ms. Despot, a bookkeeper at a car dealership.

Woomer and Ms. Despot have been living together for about five years, and marriage also may be in the future.

"It's looking good," said Ms. Despot.

Woomer is separated, but not divorced from his wife, and said he supposes she may get some of the prize. Woomer has a 29-year-old daughter and a 32-year-old son. Ms. Despot has a 14-year daughter from a previous marriage.

The Super 7 jackpot swelled to $46 million over five weeks as no one won the lottery. The prize beat the previous North American record, $41 million in New York in August 1985, Pennsylvania lottery officials said. The world's largest jackpot, about $100 million, is offered in Spain.

Ms. Despot said she heard the winning numbers picked Wednesday announced on the radio the next morning as she was getting ready for work. She wrote the numbers down, and when Woomer checked them against the 25 one-dollar tickets he had purchased, he said it seemed they had the winner.

"I said, 'That's a cruel joke,' and I started crying," she said. "At first we were in a state of shock. Then we got our thoughts together and knew we had to get an attorney fast."

After calling lottery headquarters and the convenience store where they bought the ticket, they hired an attorney, made out a will and completed other legal arrangements before claiming the prize.

Woomer said he kept the ticket in his shirt pocket for four days until they verified it Monday morning at lottery headquarters.

Ms. Despot had the attorney call her in sick Monday. She said the hardest part was not telling other people about their windfall. She added, however, that she felt safe in telling a sister in Massachusetts and a few very close friends.

Woomer said the winning numbers — 06, 10, 13, 35, 55, 65 and 79 — were based on Ms. Despot's birthday, Oct. 13, his own birthday and random selections.

Lawmakers want to ban gulf trash

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Lloyd Bentsen said he would seek designation of the Gulf of Mexico as a garbage-free zone under an international treaty which awaits a Senate ratification vote.

The treaty would ban dumping of all plastics at sea and disposal of other floating garbage within 25 miles of the coast. It is known as Annex V of the International Convention for the Prevention of Pollution from Ships.

In addition, Bentsen, D-Texas, said Monday he would introduce an amendment to the treaty when it comes before the Senate supporting designation of the Gulf of Mexico as a special no-dumping zone.

"Ratification with some tough and clear laws is something that we have to do," Bentsen said. "I want to do one additional thing, and that's when we have Annex V in front of the U.S. Senate, ... I want to put the Senate on record as treating the Gulf of Mexico as a special area."

Texas has a particular problem with ocean garbage because currents in the Gulf of Mexico sweep the refuse onto beaches up and down the coast, according to Texas Land Commissioner Gary Mauro.

"We had over 12,000 volunteers over the past 12 months pick up over 500 tons of garbage on Texas beaches," Mauro said. He predicted that designating the Gulf of Mexico a special zone would ensure its future as one of the cleanest bodies of water on earth.

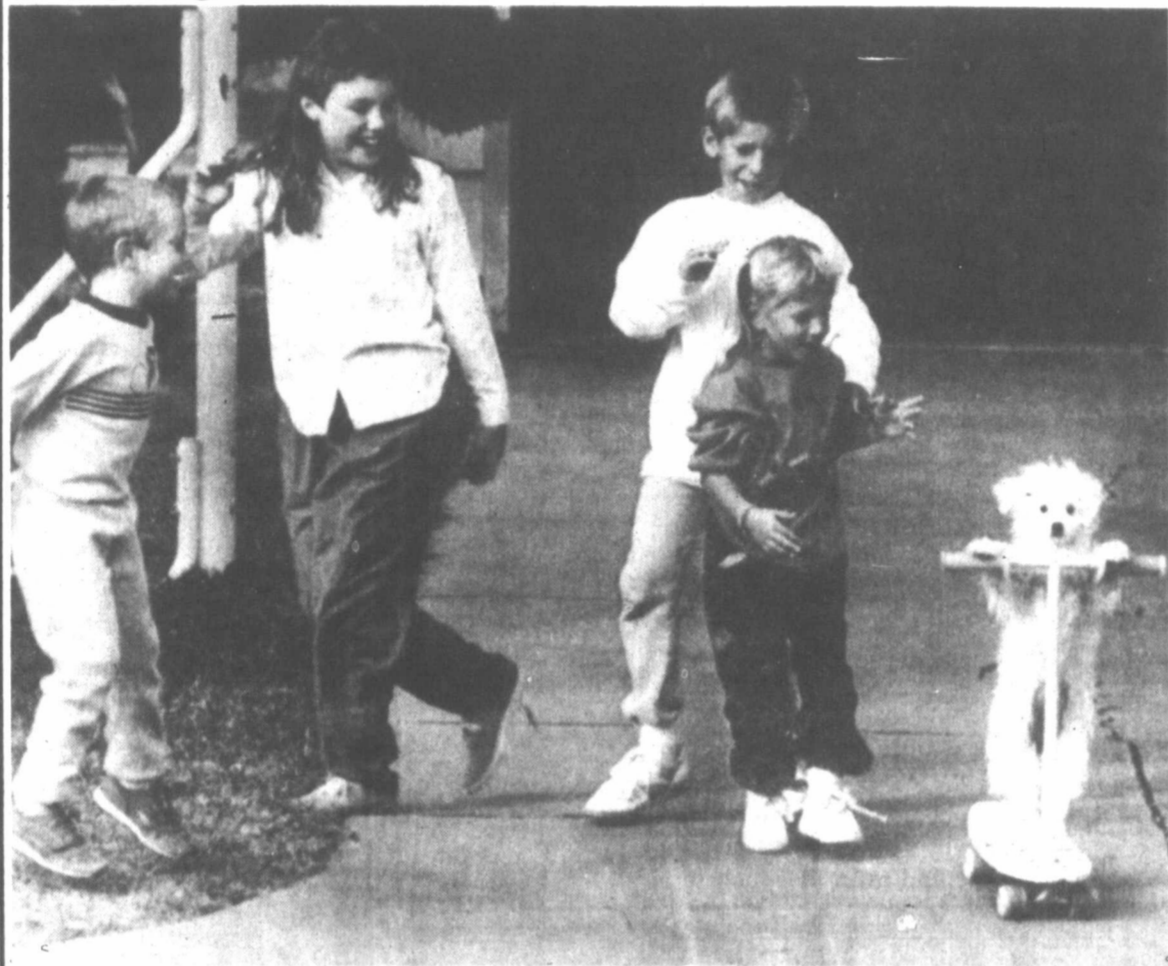

Mauro and Roger E. McManus, president of the Center for Environmental Education, brought petitions bearing the names of 15,000 Texas voters favoring the anti-dumping program, the land commissioner said.

The treaty becomes law one year after nations representing 50 percent of the world's shipping tonnage approve it. With the Soviet Union ratifying in July, U.S. approval would push it over the top. The Senate is expected to vote on the treaty before the end of the year.

Legislation designed to implement the treaty has been passed in the House and is awaiting action in the Senate.

Birds and marine mammals, mistaking plastic garbage for food, sometimes eat the objects, which then block their respiratory or digestive tracts, resulting in suffocation or starvation.

Former cabinet member says officials made racist jokes

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan's first secretary of education says mid-level Reagan administration officials made racist jokes and other scurrilous remarks during civil rights discussions at the White House.

T.H. Bell, in a memoir of President Reagan's first term, said the slurs included references to the late Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. as "Martin Lucifer Coon" and calling Title IX, a federal law guaranteeing women equal educational opportunity, "the lesbian's bill of rights."

Bell's memoir is titled "The Thirteenth Man: A Reagan Cabinet Memoir." In it, he says that "since I had heard Ronald Reagan speak out convincingly against all forms of discrimination, I felt that my own dedication to enforcement of the civil rights laws as they applied to education would have the full support of the president."

Instead, he said, he was confronted with "evidence of apparent bias among mid-level right-wing staffers at the White House and at OMB. I was shocked to hear their sick humor and racist cliches."

Bell did not identify those who made the racist or scurrilous comments. He was en route Monday evening from his home in Salt Lake City to Los Angeles and could not be reached for further comment.

In his book, he says the jokes about King were made as Reagan was deciding whether to sign or veto a bill establishing King's birthday as a national holiday. He eventually signed it.

Blacks were not the only targets, Bell writes. "They delighted in making other slurs. Arabs were called 'sand niggers' in discussions about State Department issues in the Middle East, Bell said, often accompanied sardonic references to 'Comrade Bell.'"

Elsewhere in his book, he depicts Edwin Meese, the former White House counselor and now attorney general, as "a man who literally detested the federal government." He calls Meese "the champion of the far right in the White House."

Bell, now a professor of educational administration at the University of Utah, said Meese led a group of "movement conservatives" who operated "almost like a secret society" and fought to abolish the Department of Education and steer administration policies to the right.

Mrs. Reagan wants to go home, but her doctors say not yet

WASHINGTON (AP) — Nancy Reagan feels so good just days after breast cancer surgery that "she thinks she can go home," but she's been advised to remain in the hospital several days longer, her spokeswoman says.

President Reagan predicted his wife would be back home "in a few days" as he returned to the White House on Monday following a three-hour visit with Mrs. Reagan at Bethesda Naval Medical Center.

"She's just doing great," a beaming president called out to reporters. Reagan, who says his wife's recovery is ahead of schedule, greeted his wife of 35 years with "a big kiss and hug," according to Elaine Crispin, the first lady's press secretary.

Presidential physician John Hutton reported earlier in the day that "Mrs. Reagan's recovery is continuing very well and she feels wonderful."

The first lady underwent a modified radical mastectomy on Saturday to remove a cancerous left breast and several lymph nodes. On Sunday, Hutton reported that laboratory tests on the lymph glands showed her cancer had not spread and that her chances for a complete recovery were excellent.

"I'm feeling just great," Mrs.

Crispin quoted the first lady as telling her. Mrs. Reagan is doing so well, "she thinks she can go home, but we won't let her," her spokeswoman added with a chuckle.

Mrs. Reagan's doctors said she should stay in the hospital from five to seven days in total.

Mrs. Crispin said the first lady, the daughter of a neurosurgeon and a stickler on getting the president to adhere to doctor's orders, said she'd go along with their advice.

Mrs. Reagan has been keeping busy during her stay in the hospital and is "not at all down" about having lost a breast, Mrs. Crispin said.

"We had a girl-to-girl talk. ... She believes it's a matter that each individual has to deal with," Mrs. Crispin said. "She's got a good attitude."

On Monday, Mrs. Reagan got her first visitor outside her family — long-time friend Mary Jane Wick — and has been keeping busy reading, doing routine paperwork, looking over her get-well cards and flowers and chatting on the telephone with her children, step-children and friends, Mrs. Crispin said.

Cables, flowers and get-well messages have arrived from around the world.

Stocks plummet in London, Asia; Hong Kong closes

By The Associated Press

The drop on foreign stock exchanges that helped propel a more than 500-point plunge in the Dow Jones industrial average extended into a second day today, with prices skidding on markets in Britain, Asia and the Pacific.

On the London Stock Exchange, the Financial Times-Stock Exchange 100-share index plummeted 9.8 percent in the first half-hour of hectic trading. The index was down 202 points to about 1,850 following a record drop of 249.6 points on Monday.

In Japan, the Tokyo Stock Exchange was swamped with sell orders, and the 225-share Nikkei stock average fell a record 3,836.48 points to 21,910.08 at the close. The decline shaved nearly 15 percent off the index's value.

The plunge surpassed the largest previous one-day fall in the Nikkei average, an 831-point slide on April 27.

Analysts said the Dow's devastating 508-point plunge to 1,738.74 on Monday, which had been fed by the declines in overseas trading, spilled back onto today's activity.

Prices also plummeted on the Sydney exchange, falling a record 24.9 percent today and erasing the equivalent of $39 billion off the value of Australian stocks. Sharp declines also were recorded on exchanges in Taiwan, South Korea, Singapore and Malaysia.

But in Hong Kong, the stock market was silent. The exchange did not open and officials said they would keep it shut for the rest of the week to prevent panic selling. On Monday, the key Hang Seng index dropped a record 11 percent.

Frenzied selling also swept stock exchanges in Tokyo, Frankfurt, Amsterdam, Mexico City and other financial centers on Monday after traders were shaken by a 108-point drop in the Dow Jones average on Friday.

Japanese Finance Minister Kiichi Miyazawa today shrugged off speculation that Wall Street's declines could trigger a crash in stock markets around the world and send the world economy into depression.

He said the U.S. economy has been improving and the Japanese economy also is expected to pick up.

In Tokyo on Monday, the Nikkei average dropped 620.18 points to close at 25,746.56. Losing stocks outstripped gainers by a commanding margin of 863 to 111, with 69 other issues unchanged.

In London, the drop in the FT-SE index Monday was between four and five times larger than the previous record drop set Aug. 6 when the index fell 56.0 points to 2,261.4.

Brokers attributed London's massive decline to "herd instinct" and said it was exacerbated by the electronic price systems used by the London Stock Exchange.

West German stock indexes posted their largest losses ever. The Commerzbank index plummeted a record 132.5 points, or 7 percent, to 1,876.6. The previous largest drop was a 98.5-point decline on Jan. 28, 1987.

Dealers in Amsterdam dubbed the action there the "Monday massacre." The broad-based CBS tendency index, the bourse's main indicator, fell a record 12.9 percent as it slid to a close of 82.7 points.

Prices on the Milan Stock Exchange registered their biggest one-day decline this year, while Swiss stock prices in Zurich took their worst plunge in 25 years.

In Mexico City, the Mexican Stock Exchange fell a stunning 52,671.56 points in a fifth straight day of losses for a market that has been one of the world's biggest gainers in the past year.

Government blocks radio news broadcast

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — Former Nicaraguan rebel leader Edgar Chamorro has returned home under a government amnesty, saying he will "work for peace and reconciliation."

In another development, government censors told an opposition radio station that reopened this month that it could not broadcast news without permission.

Chamorro, who arrived Monday, had left Nicaragua before the leftist Sandinista government took power in 1979. He was a director of the U.S.-backed Contra rebels from 1982 to 1984, when he left the group, charging they were manipulated by the CIA.

Foreign Ministry sources said the Nicaraguan Consulate in Washington granted Chamorro an entry visa within the framework of the amnesty, which is available to rebels who lay down their weapons.

At the airport, Chamorro said he would stay "as long as I can." However, in Washington last week he said he would visit Nicaragua for two weeks to speak, write, travel and think about whether to return permanently.

Asked why he left the rebel movement, he said he did not agree "with the injustices and atrocities that the forces backed by the United States commit."

"It is time for them to stop," he said. He did not elaborate.

The Contras have been accused of attacking civilian targets.

The Sandinistas, who came to power in a revolution that overthrew the late President Anastasio Somoza, have offered an amnesty since 1985. Chamorro is a third cousin of Pedro Chamorro, a Contra director.

As part of a Central American peace plan signed by five regional presidents Aug. 7, Nicaragua has allowed opposition media to reopen, declared a partial, unilateral cease-fire and permitted banished priests to return. It has also opened talks with the unarmed opposition.

Radio Catolica, a Roman Catholic station, was one of the media outlets allowed to reopen under the peace accord.

The station was playing the musical introduction to the news program on Monday when government censor Lt. Lissette Torres called and told them not to broadcast the show, news director Auxiliadora Echegoyen said.

The news program was to be the station's first since it resumed operations Oct. 2, featuring musical and religious programming. It had been shut down since Jan. 1, 1986, when it failed to broadcast President Daniel Ortega's end-of-the-year message.

Isolda Hurtado, Interior Ministry press secretary, said Radio Catolica may broadcast news, but must apply for the legally required permission for the program and register the name of its director, the broadcast time and other information.

Fifteen thousand demonstrate

KHARTOUM, Sudan (AP) — Fifteen thousand people marched peacefully to demand the government apply Islamic laws and scrap a loan agreement with the International Monetary Fund that led to price increases.

Monday's demonstration was organized by the opposition Moslem fundamentalist group, the National Islamic Front. It is the third largest party in Sudan's 264-seat Parliament, with 51 seats.

Protesters, many of them women in veils, carried banners demanding the immediate application of Islamic laws, which were suspended when a popular uprising overthrew President Gaafar Nimeiri in April 1985.

Prime Minister Sadek el-Mahdi's government says Nimeiri's laws were unfair and incorrectly applied.

The demonstrators condemned rebel leader John Garang, whose followers are mainly Christians and animists from the south. The marchers called for new military action to end the four-year-old rebellion.

With riot police on trucks following closely, the demonstration moved to the Council of Ministers, the headquarters of the Cabinet. Leaders of the protest submitted a memorandum demanding general mobilization and the enactment of a high treason law to try supporters of the rebellion.

The memorandum also demanded immediate abrogation of an agreement signed recently with the International Monetary Fund, or IMF. The memo suggested imposition of a national economic plan based on self-reliance and cuts in "extravagant" government expenditures.

News reports said three people were killed early this month when riot police quelled demonstrations against price increases in Khartoum and other cities.

Those demonstrations broke out after the government announced an 80 percent devaluation of the Sudanese pound and increases in the prices of bread and gasoline, as part of an agreement with the IMF.

Sudan owes the IMF about $150 million.

Indians meeting resistance in latest tank-led offensive

COLOMBO, Sri Lanka (AP) — Indian troops led by tanks met fierce resistance from Tamil guerrillas today as the soldiers tried to link up with an Indian force holding the center of Jaffna, Sri Lankan military sources said.

Indian Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi meanwhile said he was optimistic a settlement could be reached and that his troops won't be in Sri Lanka "forever."

An Indian column led by tanks and armored personnel carriers was trying to move into Jaffna from the north today, to meet Indian forces on the city's southern waterfront, according to the sources who spoke on condition of anonymity.

There was no independent confirmation of the reports. India, which launched its offensive Oct. 10, has not allowed journalists to visit Jaffna.

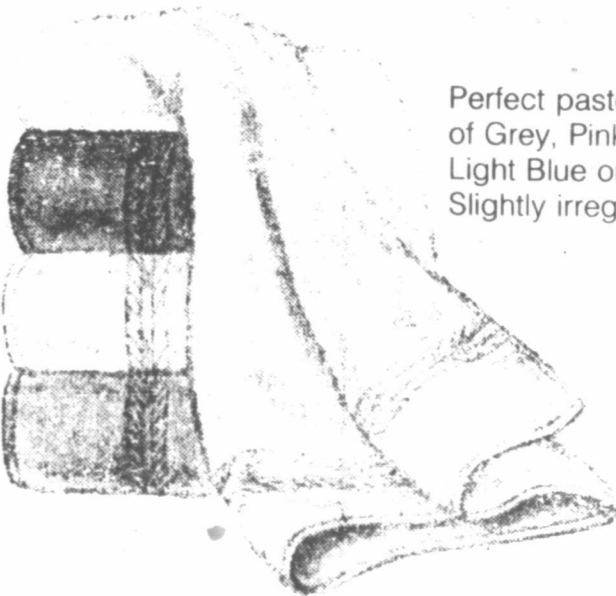

The Sri Lankan military sources said Indian soldiers were also searching for eight top leaders of the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam to break the backbone of the rebel organization.

Indian troops are in Sri Lanka to enforce a July 29 peace pact aimed at ending ethnic violence in the island country off the southern coast of India. The Indian-sponsored plan calls for the Tamil rebels to lay down their arms in exchange for a measure of autonomy.

Bentsen, Gramm urge deficit reduction

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sens. Lloyd Bentsen and Phil Gramm joined in calling for definitive action to reduce the federal budget and trade deficits, which they agreed were largely to blame for the dramatic fall of the stock market.

Democrat Bentsen said President Reagan must come to grips with the budget and trade deficits and realize that he must work with Congress to reduce them both.

"It's just as though you had a president who puts the country on autopilot then retired to the back of the plane to take a nap," Bentsen said on Monday. "The president doesn't want to participate. He wants to leave that to the next president. He's just interested in getting out of town."

Last week's Commerce Department report that the U.S. trade deficit reached $15.7 billion in August was widely viewed as the event that triggered the plunge of stock prices that continued through the record tumble.

"We've seen an increase in interest rates, and that results from having the worst trade deficit this nation has ever faced, and also the worst budget deficit," said Bentsen, chairman of the Finance Committee.

Republican Sen. Phil Gramm declared that unless the United States reduces its budget deficit before the end of the year the country will plunge into an economic recession.

"I believe that unless we bring the deficit down sharply, thereby paving the way for the Federal Reserve Bank to expand the money supply, that we are in danger of a major recession," the former Texas A&M economics professor said.

Bentsen predicted the market's free fall of 508 points Monday would not only put pressure on the president to reduce the trade and budget deficits, but also to develop an energy policy.

"I think it will put additional pressure on the administration to come up with an energy policy because one of the major items in that trade deficit is the increasing dependence on foreign oil at the same time you're seeing a shootout in the Persian Gulf," said the Texas Democrat.

Calling the present situation in the Persian Gulf untenable, Bentsen urged passage of the War Powers Act in the Senate, which would require the president to notify the Congress of hostilities after which Congress would have 60 to 90 days to accept or reject deployment of forces there.

At swearing-in ceremonies for new Commerce Secretary C. William Verity, President Reagan said Monday that the U.S. economy is being bolstered by "substantial growth" in exports not reflected in recent government trade figures.

Reagan made no mention of Monday's stock market slide, but noted that the current expansion has reached a record length for a peacetime recovery.

"Leading indicators are sending a message: steady she goes," Reagan said.

Gramm and Bentsen agreed that Congress and the president must come together and forge a pact to reduce the twin deficits.

"If we meet the $23 billion deficit reduction target as a first installment on balancing the budget, the Federal Reserve Bank will loosen monetary policy and we can avoid a recession," Gramm said.

"I hope we can do it through discretionary action. I support that action, but it's imperative that the deficit be reduced within the next 30 days," Gramm said.

Long hair flap is heating up

HOUSTON (AP) — Parents are concerned about a school district's ban on long hair that led to the expulsion of a 7-year-old and prompted a high school student to withdraw from classes.

Johnny Vigh withdrew from Dulles High School last month after Fort Bend Independent School District officials told him he would be expelled if he didn't cut his shoulder-length hair.

"My hair is not unruly or scuzzy or anything," Vigh said. "I take time in styling it. A lot of people at school came up to me and said they liked my hair. People enjoyed it. I don't see how they could say it's disruptive."

Seven-year-old Bryce Cooke, whose hair falls a few inches below his collar, was expelled last week from an elementary school for violating the hair length rule.

The American Civil Liberties Union in Houston has fielded several calls from district students and their parents who want to know whether they have any legal recourse against suspensions based on hair length.

"I think this issue is coming up again because of political symbolism," said ACLU attorney Bruce Griffiths.

Diet Pills Sweeping U.S.

Doctors Invent 'Lazy Way' to Lose Weight

New 'Fat Magnet' Diet Pill Guarantees Fast Weight Loss

BEVERLY HILLS, CA (Special)—An amazing new weight loss pill called "fat-magnet" has recently been developed and perfected by two prominent doctors at a world famous hospital in Los Angeles that reportedly "guarantees" that you will easily lose fat by simply taking their tested and proven new pill.

No Dieting—Eat Normally
Best of all, "you can continue to eat all of your favorite foods and you don't have to change your normal eating habits. You will start losing fat from the very first day, until you achieve the ideal weight and figure you desire."

There has never been anything like it before. It is a totally new major medical breakthrough for weight loss (worldwide patent pending).

Flushes Fat Out of Body
The new pill is appropriately called the "fat-magnet" pill because it breaks into thousands of particles, each acting like a tiny magnet, "attracting" and trapping many times its size in fat particles. Then, all that trapped fat is naturally "flushed" right out of your body because it cannot be digested.

Within 2 days you will notice a change in the color of your stool as the fat particles are being eliminated.

"Pills Do All the Work"
According to the doctors, the fat-magnet pills do all the work while you quickly lose fat with no starvation diet menus to follow, no calorie counting, no exercising, and no hunger pangs. It is 100% safe. You simply take the pills with a glass of water before meals.

The fat-magnet pills have just been offered to the American public and are already sweeping the country with record sales and reports of dramatic weight loss. It's the "lazy way" to lose weight for people who enjoy eating.

Now Available to Public

If you need to lose 20, 50, 100 pounds or more, you can order your supply of these new highly successful fat-magnet pills (now available from the doctor's exclusive manufacturer by mail or phone order only) by sending $20 for a 90 pill supply (+$2 handling), or $35 for a 180 pill supply (+$3 handling), cash, check or money order to: Fat-Magnet, 9016 Wilshire Blvd., Dept. Appeals court judge dies aboard flight from Africa

DALLAS (AP)—Fifth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals Judge Robert Madden Hill, who as a district judge presided over the 1979 conspiracy trial of Billy Sol Estes, has died.

Hill, 59, of Dallas, who died Monday, was remembered by friends as a tough but fair jurist who sometimes injected a little humor into the courtroom.

"He was fair, he was conscientious and he was willing to listen," said Dallas lawyer Marvin Wise, a longtime associate of Hill. "He could tell a joke as well as anyone I knew."

Hill died after an asthma attack while he and his wife, state Rep. Patricia Hill, R-Dallas, were flying to the United States from Kenya, where they had been vacationing.

Carol Hallman, a spokeswoman for Hill's fellow appeals court Judge Patrick E. Higginbotham, said Hill died aboard the plane, which made an emergency landing in Iceland.

Hill presided over several high-profile cases as a U.S. district judge.

In the 1979 case, Estes was charged with conspiracy. Earlier, the flamboyant West Texan was convicted on a federal charge on mortgages he obtained on nonexistent fertilizer tanks. In the second case, he was convicted of mail fraud and conspiracy to conceal his assets to avoid paying back taxes.

Hill sentenced Estes to the maximum 10 years in prison.

"He did a magnificent job in the (Estes case)," said former U.S. Attorney James Rolfe, who prosecuted the case.

"I think Billie Sol used to send him Christmas cards from jail," Wise said. "It just shows how fair he (Hill) was."

In 1974, Hill caused some controversy when he refused to dismiss indictments against Jake Jacobsen for alleged misdealings in a thrift company. U.S. Justice Department officials wanted the charges dismissed so Jacobsen could testify against former Texas Gov. John Connally, who was accused of accepting a bribe. Connally was acquitted.

More recently, in a 1980 decision, Hill allowed the children of illegal aliens to attend Dallas public schools.

Gov. Bill Clements said Hill's death was a loss to the legal community and the state.

"Justice Hill was a gentleman beyond reproach whose evenhandedness and integrity on and off the bench earned the respect of his colleagues," Clements said in a statement.

Higginbotham issued a statement calling Hill a friend whom he will miss.

"Bob Hill had an unerring sense of justice and fair play that made him an outstanding judge," he said.

"We are all torn up about it (his death)," said U.S. District Judge Barefoot Sanders. "He was a favorite around here. There are a lot of tears around the courthouse today."

Hill was born in Dallas on Jan. 13, 1928, and received his law degree from the University of Texas in 1950. He practiced law until 1970 when President Nixon named him U.S. District Judge. In 1984, Hill was appointed by President Reagan to the appellate court.

Funeral arrangements for Hill are pending.

Law officers crack down on suspected Jamaican drug groups

DALLAS (AP)—A crackdown on alleged Jamaican drug organizations led to the arrest of 45 people in what could be tied to dozens of murders since 1984, authorities said.

The raids began Monday afternoon at 14 locations by heavily armed local and federal law officers. Officers seized about $18,000 in cash and $10,000 in drugs during the bust, authorities said.

More details were expected to be released by investigators today.

"These are people who love automatic weapons and aren't afraid to shoot," said Charles Storey, a Dallas police investigator. "They have killed a lot of people."

Investigators believe the Jamaican groups are linked to at least 44 Dallas slayings since 1984.

An 18-person task force of local and federal law enforcement officers was formed in November 1986, and that led to indictments returned by federal grand jurors.

Hospital's lab error causes tragic surprise for couple

DEAR ABBY: My wife, Kathy, and I are both Jewish, so when she became pregnant in 1985, I took a simple blood test to determine if I was a carrier of Tay-Sachs — a hideous disease that predominantly strikes Jewish children. About one out of 30 Jewish adults is a Tay-Sachs carrier. If a carrier marries another carrier, there is a one out of four chance that their baby will develop Tay-Sachs.

I was tested at a local hospital and was told I was not a carrier, so since both parents must be carriers in order to produce a Tay-Sachs child, there was no reason for Kathy to be tested.

In June 1986, Kathy had a beautiful baby. We named her Abigail. She appeared to be a normal, happy baby, but when she didn't sit up or progress the way other babies her age did, we became concerned and consulted a specialist. His diagnosis: Tay-Sachs. We were devastated! Abby, our daughter will never crawl, walk or speak. Instead, she will go blind, become paralyzed, have seizures and die before she is 3, 4 or 5 years old.

How could this have happened when I was told I was not a carrier? Our specialist called the hospital and discovered that the lab technician had made a simple mathematical error! We later learned that the hospital's policy was to only "spot-check" their results. Meanwhile, we looked into suing the lab, but were advised by several prominent malpractice attorneys that in New York it is not possible to collect damages for "pain and suffering." We finally found a lawyer who agreed to take our case, but were told not to expect too much.

Abby, no amount of money can compensate for having to watch one's child slowly die, but we want to warn other prospective parents so this won't happen to them. No one should have to go through the hell we are presently going through. You may use my name. — DAVID ASTOR, QUEENS, N.Y.

DEAR MR. ASTOR: My heart goes out to you, Kathy and your precious daughter. Thank you for caring enough to write as a warning to others. Readers, be aware that Tay-Sachs has occurred in non-Jewish babies, too — but the incidence is much lower. And in order to reduce the possibility of a laboratory error, the man and woman should be tested twice — preferably at different labs.

DEAR ABBY: I appreciated your answer to that letter from "Considering Marriage" — the older, impotent man who was considering what he presumed would be a sexless marriage to a younger woman in a wheelchair. Thanks for setting him straight.

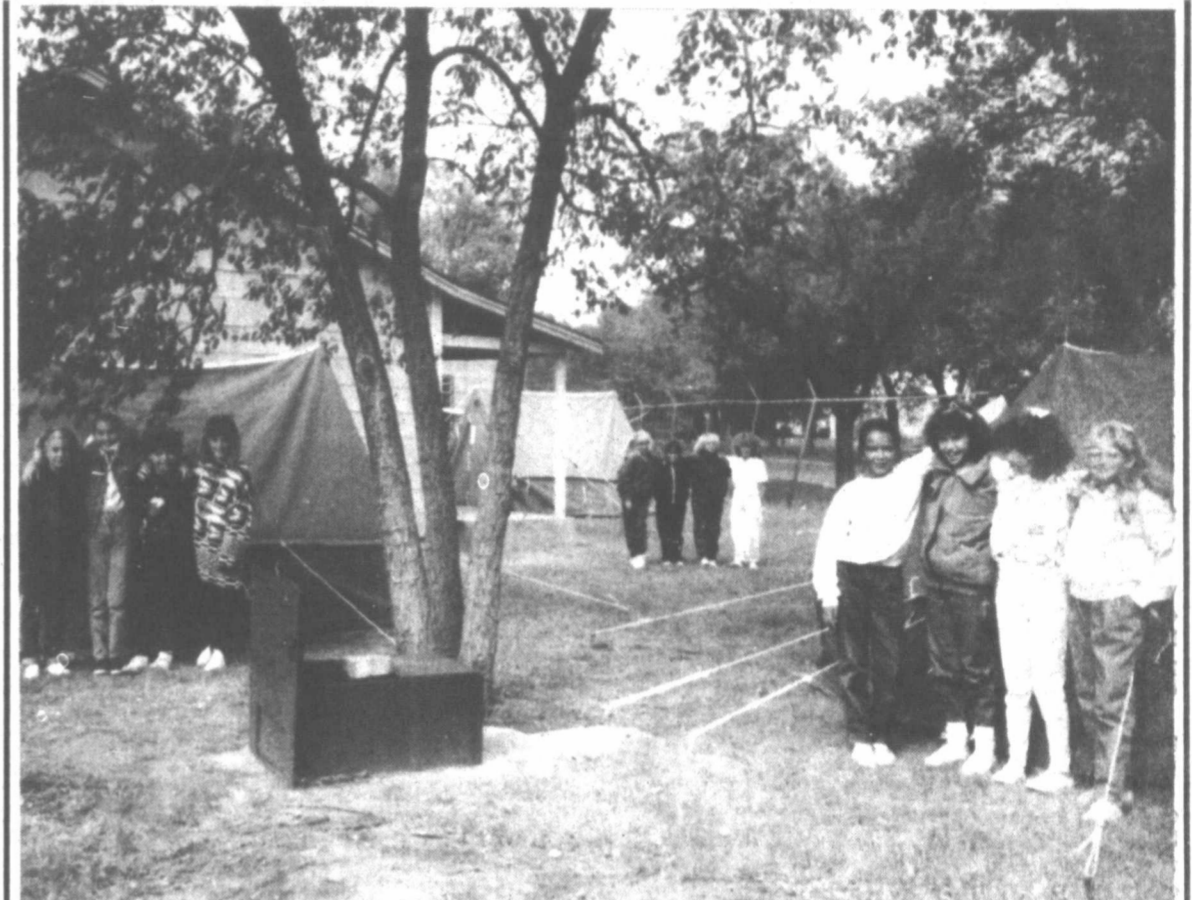

My husband has been a paraplegic since he was a teen-ager (spinal cord injury), but being in a wheelchair has not stopped him from being the sexiest, most satisfying lover a woman could want.

FULFILLED

DEAR FULFILLED: To assume that all people in wheelchairs have no sexual feelings and cannot perform is a popular myth that needs to be dispelled. Thank you for validating my statement.

(Do you hate to write letters because you don't know what to say? Thank-you notes, sympathy letters, congratulations, how to decline and accept invitations and how to write an interesting letter are included in Abby's booklet, "How to Write Letters for All Occasions." Send a check or money order for $2.50 and a long, stamped (39 cents), self-addressed envelope to: Dear Abby, Letter Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054.)

Little things can make a big difference in home safety

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

Small changes in the home can go a long way to making it safer, said designer Lyn Peterson.

Peterson, who recently created a new home environment for her parents in a suburb of New York City, said the experience had taught her that details such as floor-covering patterns can make a difference.

For example, she cautioned, avoid floor coverings (whether rugs or hard surface materials) that have busy patterns or those that produce optical illusions, especially when furnishing a home that individuals with weakening eyesight will use.

In general, she said, a subtle or solid light-colored floor covering, against which an electric cord or other obstruction can be seen and avoided, is safest. Don't use dark carpeting on stairs, since dark colors obscure the shadow cast by the step and make it difficult to judge where to place one's foot on the next riser.

Apply a non-skid backing to area rugs or tack them down firmly. Double-faced tape for rugs, available in housewares departments and hardware stores, can be used for rugs that get moved from place to place.

In the kitchen and bathroom where floors are subject to spills and dampness, specify non-slip surfaces. If ceramic tile is used, choose the kind with slip-resistant glazes.

Make sure the bathtub is fitted with non-slip strips and mount a sturdy grab-bar on the tub wall, both inexpensive changes that make a big difference in safety. A useful addition to shower or tub is a tub seat.

Plan kitchen counters so that there is a place beside the stove to set down heavy, hot pots and pans. She adds that you can use appliances to minimize potentially dangerous activities. For example, installing extra telephones cuts down on the possibility of running for a ringing telephone and tripping. Answering machines and automatic dialing for emergency and often-used phone numbers also have safety advantages.

Sliding, crank or pivot windows are easier to open than a sash that must be lifted, and levers are easier to turn than round doorknobs or faucets. Handrails are essential on all stairways.

Even the selection and arrangement of furniture and accessories can contribute to safety. Keep furniture out of traffic pathways in the house; plan plenty of accessible storage and keep frequently-used items at waist-to-shoulder height for easy removal and replacement.

Don't choose difficult-to-get-into and out-of low-slung seating. Furniture with outward splaying legs rather than the usual vertical line can trip the unwary.

Another way to promote safety is to use major appliances correctly. Some helpful suggestions from Whirlpool Corp.'s Appliance Information Service include the following.

Learn where your home's fuse box or circuit breaker is located so you can turn it off in an emergency. Don't use multiple plugs and extension cords indiscriminately, and maintain separate circuits for major appliances such as the refrigerator, oven, washer and dryer.

Keep the range hood and range free of grease and dust, and install smoke detectors in all rooms.

When operating the dishwasher, don't reach into the area below the bottom rack until the heating element has cooled for at least 20 minutes after a cycle is over.

Hand wash fabrics treated with dry cleaning solvents before putting them in the washer. Don't pour chlorine bleach into wash water containing ammonia or acids such as vinegar or rust remover, since potentially irritating fumes will result.

Do not dry an item containing wax or paint in a dryer. The fumes can create a fire hazard.

Never use flammable liquids such as dry cleaning solvents near or in a dryer. Use a cool air setting when heat-sensitive materials such as plastics or foam rubber are placed in the dryer, rather than a heat setting.

Since lint is a potential fire hazard, clean the dryer's lint screen regularly. Shut off a gas dryer's gas valve before leaving on vacation.

Never place the electric heating elements of an electric range in water, since this could damage them, and don't line the reflector bowls with foil, since the practice can cause shocks or fire hazards.

When working at the stove, do not use bulky cloth towels as pot holders, since they have too much material to easily manipulate. Don't use a wet pot holder, either, since it can cause a steam burn. If there should be a grease fire, smother it by placing a lid on the pan; don't use water.

Never heat unopened cans or jars since they can explode, and don't touch any part of a range with bare hands during a self-cleaning cycle, since the heat can be intense.

Microwave ovens should never be operated with a broken, damaged or improperly closed door, since the practice can result in exposure to microwave energy. Don't overcook foods such as potatoes or popcorn since they flare up in the oven. Never cook or reheat an egg in the shell since steam can build up and may cause the food to burst.

Finally, when discarding old appliances with doors, be sure to remove the doors.

Lefors schools name students to honor rolls

Lefors Elementary and Secondary Schools have announced their honor rolls for the first six weeks of the 1987-88 school year.

Students on the "A" honor roll earned all A's during the six weeks. Those on the "B" honor roll received A's and B's.

In the year ahead, fresh opportunities will open up new horizons and vistas for you to explore. Take care, however, not to leap from one project to another before you fully reap all the benefits.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) Neglecting family obligations will arouse the ire of your mate today. Take care of your duties first, and avoid a peck of problems. Major changes are ahead for Libras in the coming year. Send for your Astro-Graph predictions today. Mail $1 to Astro-Graph, c/o this newspaper, P.O. Box 91428, Cleveland, OH 44101-3428. Be sure to state your zodiac sign.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Mental discipline will be required today if you hope to accomplish anything meaningful. Don't let your daydreams sidetrack you from your tasks.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) It's best not to spend too lavishly at this time, hoping you'll have the money to cover your bills when they come due. There's a chance your funds may be delayed.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Activities that are of interest to you might not be of equal interest to your companions today. Get opinions from others before appointing yourself entertainment director.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Guard against tendencies today to speak before thinking. If you don't, you might unintentionally hurt the feelings of someone who likes you.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Trying to keep up with the Joneses is not only unnecessary, it's foolish. This isn't the route to pursue if you hope to impress others.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Luck or chance, unaided, will not gain you the goals you are seeking today. Elbow grease and determination are your key ingredients for achievements.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Today, you could be easily misunderstood and labeled a braggart by associates if you start enhancing your recent accomplishments. Be modest.

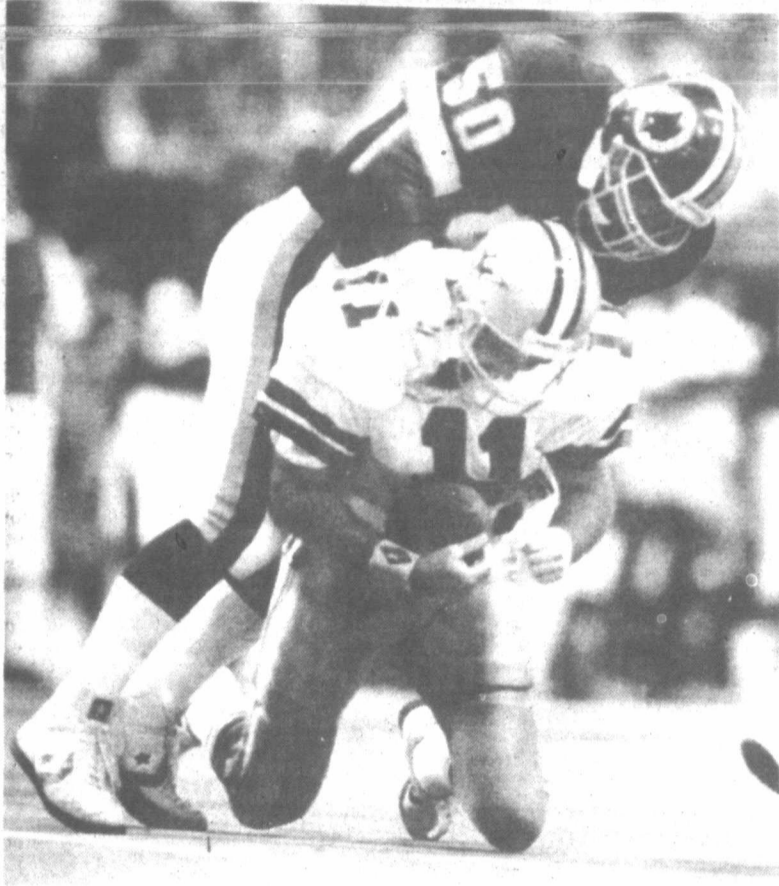

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) The actions of an extravagant friend could draw you into an expense you didn't plan on today. Be selective regarding companions.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Because it will be the most convenient thing to do, you might agree to an arrangement today about which you are doubtful. You could regret it later.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) You're apt to find ample reasons for postponing your responsibilities today. None will be valid, but you'll try to convince yourself that they are.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) There's a possibility you might rely too heavily on Lady Luck today. Be careful, however, because she may not be around at the time you need her the most.

Redskins edge by Cowboys NFL closes strike-replacement season

By DENNE H. FREEMAN
AP Sports Writer

IRVING, Texas (AP) — It was only fitting in the NFL's final replacement game that a former semi-pro quarterback was the winner and a 13-year veteran quarterback failed with the contest on the line.

The Washington Redskins, without any regular starters, beat the Dallas Cowboys, who started seven veterans, 13-7 Monday night in an NFC East showdown for first place.

Tony Robinson, a former Tennessee star who was playing for the Richmond Ravens in September, led Washington to victory after Ed Rubbert went down with a shoulder injury in the first period.

Robinson completed 11 of 18 passes for 152 yards and Lionel Vital ran for 136 yards against a Dallas defense that included a frontline of veterans Randy White, Don Smerek, Kevin Brooks, and Ed Jones.

Washington advanced to 4-1 and Dallas dropped to 3-2 because veteran Danny White couldn't produce with four downs from the Washington 20-yard line in the final minute. "It is one of the most emotional wins I've ever been associated with," Washington Coach Joe Gibbs said. "Our (replacement) players kept us in the conference race. They were 3-0 in their three-game season."

Robinson said he realized he could be back with the Ravens soon.

"I don't know where I'll be three days from now," Robinson said. "I was just happy to be part of the Redskins' organization and play in a game. This was a great opportunity for me."

Robinson added "I hated to see Ed get hurt. He had been doing a terrific job."

What was heaven for Robinson was hell for the heavily booed White.

"This was one of the most difficult games I've played in," White said. "The boos don't make my job any easier. We could really use the homefield advantage. Right now we don't have it."

The 60,415 fans, second largest of the NFL replacement games, booed White and Tony Dorsett every time they touched the ball. There were only 197 no-shows.

"The fans pay their money and can respond any way they want to," Dorsett said. Gibbs said Robinson "was great" considering he was "thrown in there cold against the Cowboys. He made some big plays and it was a tribute to him. He had tremendous poise for his first NFL game."

Dallas Coach Tom Landry the Cowboys contributed to Robinson's success.

"We were our own worst enemy," he said. "And we just couldn't stop that second quarter they had in there. He kept making some big plays."

Landry said he never considered replacing White despite the boo birds.

"It's our job to turn boos to cheers," Landry said. "I didn't want to take Danny out. We had a chance to win until the last play of the game."

Chants of "We want (Kevin) Sweeney, We Want Sweeney" began in the second period. Sweeney had quarterbacked Dallas to two replacement game victories.

"I had to make a choice and when I decided on Danny and Tony it was their game, at least as long as it was close. You have to stick with your veterans."

White hit Kelvin Edwards with a 38-yard touchdown pass, but it wasn't enough to offset two field goals by Obed Ariri and Ted Wilson's 16-yard touchdown on a reverse.

Rose sacks Pokes' White for big loss.

UIL adds eight districts to 4A

AUSTIN (AP) — Allowing coaches to hold their own summer camps and the biennial realignment of districts were the two most-discussed proposals Monday at the 47th annual University Interscholastic League Legislative Council meeting.

Of the 82 proposals presented to the 20-member group of school administrators, of which 45 dealt with athletics, only two were defeated and several were set for a referendum ballot in February.

One issue put on the referendum ballot was a proposal to allow coaches to conduct summer camps in football, basketball and volleyball in which incoming seventh, eighth and ninth graders from a coach's attendance zone could attend for the first time.

In an effort to keep costs affordable, committee members added an amendment that would require coaches to set camp fees through a school district's superintendent.

"We want camps to avoid vying for athletes and coaches," said UIL Director Bailey Marshall. "In other states you have this situation where popular coaches who have won state championships and the best players in the area are being coaxed into going to one camp or another."

In another proposal that garnered substantial attention, the committee approved policy outlines for procedures to be used by the UIL for conference and district realignment in January.

Under the change, Class 4A for the next alignment period will increase from 16 districts to 24. The increase was designed to eliminate the north-south zoning of individual districts in the class.

In one of several new district assignment policies, any school may elect to be elevated one conference, provided a notification has been sent to the UIL by Dec. 1, 1987.

In another action, the UIL responded to a request denied to the Harlandale Independent School District to change to another 5A district due to overwhelming competition. The committee added an amendment stating that exceptions can be made if all participating schools agree that a school can change districts.

Ryan will remain an Astro

HOUSTON (AP) — Nolan Ryan will remain in a Houston Astros' uniform next season.

The Astros exercised the option on the veteran pitcher for the 1988 season, Dick Wagner, the team's general manager, said Monday. The Astros had until Nov. 1 to sign Ryan.

"Everyone associated with the Astros is pleased that Nolan will be a member of the Astros in 1988," Wagner said. "This certainly helped to solidify the pitching. His stats for 1987 were exceptional."

Wagner, who announced his resignation last week and is leaving the Astros on Friday, made the announcement to keep Ryan another season after the two met during the weekend.

Pampa frosh spikers down Valley View

Pampa ninth-graders won over Valley View 15-9, 16-14 in volleyball action Monday night.

Pampa's won-lost record is now 9-3. They close the season next Monday at Borger.

Against Valley View, the serving of Tammy Childers was near perfect (19 of 20) while Melissa Brookshire played outstanding around the net.

Jennifer Bailey and Shelia Reed played well in the backcourt in both games.

Twins' Bert Blyleven is ready to skin the Cardinals.

Herzog doesn't think Twins are for real

By JOHN NELSON
AP Sports Writer

ST. LOUIS (AP) — The burden of proof now rests with the St. Louis Cardinals.

Despite trailing Minnesota 2-0 in the best-of-seven World Series going into tonight's game at Busch Stadium, the Cardinals remain unconvinced the Twins are for real.

In fact, Cardinals Manager Whitey Herzog says the Twins couldn't win in the National League East, or the American League East, for that matter, because they have only two bona fide starting pitchers.

Tonight, the impostor, rookie Les Straker, takes the mound for Minnesota against the ace of St. Louis' staff, left-hander John Tudor.

"When you have two starting pitchers and two days off (during the World Series), that's a hell of an advantage," Herzog said Monday, one of the off days.

"I don't think they could have won the AL East or the NL East with that type of situation when you play every day. But that's the way it is. ... Put them in the same division as Detroit (AL East) and the Tigers would win by 15 games. That's because of the pitching staff. It's nothing against them."

To some of the Twins, however, it sounded like something against them.

"He's grasping at something," Twins third baseman Gary Gaetti said. "I don't know what. Would they win in the AL East? Would they win in the American League at all?"

And Twins first baseman Kent Hrbek said: "Too bad we're not in their league."

The Twins won the first two games, 10-1 and 8-4, behind the pitching of Frank Viola and Bert Blyleven, who had 32 victories between them this season. Viola was 1-0 against Detroit in the playoffs, and Blyleven beat the Tigers twice in the five-game series.

Straker, 8-10 during the season, started the Twins lone loss in the playoffs, although it was not credited against his record. The loss went to Jeff Reardon in relief.

Tudor, 10-2 after spending most of the season on the disabled list with a broken leg, was 1-1 in the Cardinals' seven-game playoff victory over San Francisco.

"In a playoff, you can get by using only five of your nine or 10 pitchers," Herzog said. "I've always said you shouldn't have an off day during the playoffs. With the off days, you can't see the depth of the pitching staffs, and it doesn't show the true strengths of the team."

Only 10 of the 37 teams that have fallen behind 2-0 in the World Series have come back to win.

The Cardinals' consolation is they are home, and away from the Metrodome in Minneapolis, where Minnesota built the best home record in baseball this year, 56-25. On the other hand, the Twins this year had the worst road record, 29-52, of any team to ever win a pennant.

Martin returns as Yankees' manager

NEW YORK (AP) — Only George Steinbrenner could knock the World Series and the end of the NFL strike out of the sports headlines. Billy Martin is coming back as manager of the Yankees for the fifth time.

Steinbrenner, ignoring the brawls and angry words that forced Martin's four previous firings, brought Martin back Monday to replace Lou Piniella, who was promoted to general manager to replace Woody Woodward, who resigned.

"I'm anxious to return as Yankee manager and I'm looking toward bringing an exciting and winning team to Yankee fans," Martin said.

Martin's last dismissal by the Yankees came just before Game 7 of the 1985 World Series.

The Yankees finished fourth in the American League East, nine games behind first-place Toronto, in Piniella's second season as manager. The Yankees were second in his first year.

Steinbrenner's decision to hire Martin had been expected since last week, but Piniella's move to the GM post was a surprise.

On Aug. 8 in Detroit, Steinbrenner issued a two-page statement in which he said he might have made a mistake by hiring the inexperienced Piniella as manager.

The Yankees, who led the American League East by three games at the All-Star break, finished fourth this season with an 89-73 record.

"Nothing Lou did hurt us in any way," Yankees first baseman Don Mattingly said. "He did what he could. He put the best players on the field every day and made the right moves. We just didn't produce."

Piniella had one year remaining on his two-year contract. The Yankees suffered major injuries to their first two hitters in the lineup — outfielder Rickey Henderson, with a right hamstring strain, and second baseman Willie Randolph, who had torn knee cartilage that necessitated surgery. They missed a combined 109 games.

Piniella did not talk with Steinbrenner for almost a month after missing a scheduled call from his boss on Aug. 3. Piniella later apologized for not being in his hotel room to accept the call.

He was 90-72 in his first year as manager, and his two-year record was 177-145.
