Citizens group to ask county to join drug task force effort

By PAUL PINKHAM
Senior Staff Writer

A group of citizens upset over Gray County's absence from a Panhandle-wide anti-drug effort are scheduled to meet with county commissioners Friday to air their concerns.

Commissioners also plan to discuss the newest wrinkle in plans for a public golf course near Pampa during the 9:30 a.m. meeting at the courthouse.

The citizens group, estimated at 20 to 30 people, plans to ask commissioners to consider joining the Panhandle Regional Narcotics Trafficking Task Force, based in Amarillo.

Gray County is the only Panhandle county that hasn't signed a resolution supporting the effort, according to Amarillo police Lt. Robert Francis, who heads the special undercover unit. Francis said agreements were sent to sheriffs in 25 Panhandle counties to be signed by commissioners.

Gray County commissioners have never been presented with the agreement.

Although the project is entirely funded by grant money, Gray County Sheriff Rufe Jordan has expressed reservations about joining, fearing the county will have to pay if the grant money dries up. He also said he worries about a possible lawsuit if the unit makes a mistake in Gray County and wants to be made aware when undercover agents are operating in the county.

Jimmy Free of Pampa, designated spokesman for the citizens group, couldn't be reached for comment Wednesday, but other group members said they also have been begun circulating petitions concerning Gray County's refusal to back the effort.

In other business scheduled Friday, commissioners plan to discuss amending a public golf course contract previously signed with the city of Pampa. The agreement calls on the county to donate labor, equipment and $300,000 to the city-operated course, to be located north of Pampa on Texas Highway 70.

A Texas Legislative Council opinion says the contract may be invalid because counties cannot make contributions to cities unless the agreement benefits the county, and, since the county would relinquish control of the course to the city, the benefits to the county are legally unclear.

The opinion recommends that county commissioners seek an attorney general's opinion to guard against voiding the contract and possibly being removed from office.

A lawsuit or injunction to halt construction of the golf course has been threatened but not filed.

Pampa City Manager Bob Hart has said he is not concerned by the opinion, which he says can be resolved by creating a "joint operating agreement" between the city and the county for the golf course. Under the plan, the county would then contract with the city to run the course.

But altering the agreement may be easier said than done. County commissioners have expressed reservations about being involved with the course once construction is completed.

In a related matter Friday, commissioners also plan to name two representatives to the golf course advisory board.

Commissioners also are scheduled to:

- continue discussing an alcoholic beverage use policy for Clyde Carruth Pavilion;
- discuss the appointment of County Appraisal District board members on a staggered-term basis;
- consider authorizing Precinct 3 Commissioner Gerald Wright to advertise for bids for a truck and trailer;
- receive the independent auditor's report for 1987; and
- consider a request to replace an employee in the tax assessor/collector's office.

U.S. willing to forgive Noriega — if he leaves

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration is discussing a deal that could result in the dropping of drug trafficking charges against Panamanian strongman Manuel Antonio Noriega in exchange for his agreement to relinquish power, a White House spokesman said today.

"We're still talking" about such a deal, said chief presidential spokesman Marlin Fitzwater. "What this amounts to is a plea bargain," he said. However, the spokesman said no direct negotiations have taken place with Noriega on the matter.

Earlier, White House chief of staff Howard Baker, without actually confirming an offer, told CBS-TV that if such an arrangement got Noriega out of power, "that would be the most fruitful and productive plea bargain that we have seen in a long time."

Reports of an offer brought sharp criticism today from a Democratic senator and Panama's anti-Noriega ambassador to the United States.

Administration sources, speaking on condition of anonymity, said Wednesday that Florida drug-trafficking indictments against the de facto Panamanian ruler would be dropped if he stepped down and left the country for a year. The sources said the Justice Department objected to the offer, which was approved at a White House meeting.

Sen. John Kerry, D-Mass., said that if descriptions of the offer were accurate, it would appear to be a victory for Noriega, allowing his loyalists to retain control while he spent "a year's vacation on the Riviera."

"If I was a cop in Boston or Miami or somewhere, I'd sit there and say this administration has sent a signal that crime does pay," Kerry said on the CBS show.

Kerry said such a deal would be "a mistake and even an insult to the efforts of this country to fight a war on drugs."

Ambassador Juan Sosa, appearing on the same program, said Noriega opponents cannot accept the dropping of charges without any arrangements made for next year's election, the restructuring of the defense forces Noriega controls or the setting up of a government of reconciliation.

Sosa also said the obvious differences among U.S. officials on how to handle Noriega have only helped him.

He said if Noriega is to leave, he should leave now and not wait until August, which reportedly would be part of the arrangement between U.S. officials and Noriega.

The reported offer is the latest in a series of administration efforts since February, including U.S. economic sanctions, that have paralyzed the Panamanian economy but have so far not succeeded in ousting Noriega. The administration had offered previously not to extradite Noriega on the drug trafficking charges if he went into political exile.

A Panamanian government spokesman said in response to word of the new offer Wednesday night, "There has been no agreement about anything."

Panama's official news agency, Panapress, reported Wednesday night that President Reagan had "entered in direct contact with Gen. Noriega," but gave no details.

The Reagan administration has sent a State Department envoy in recent weeks to talk with Noriega, but a U.S. Embassy spokesman would not comment when asked whether the envoy met with Noriega or his representatives Wednesday.

The news agency said: "Gen. Noriega has said there can be no deal if the U.S. aggression and the violation of Panamanian sovereignty continue."

The administration had offered previously not to extradite Noriega on the drug trafficking charges if he went into political exile.

48 arrested in drug crackdown

HOUSTON (AP) — Operation Zero Tolerance, intended to penalize those bringing even small amounts of drugs into the United States, has yielded 48 arrests and 99 vehicle seizures in Texas over the past seven weeks, say U.S. Customs officials.

"It's been on the books a long time that you can't bring illegal drugs into this country," customs spokesman Charles Conroy said Tuesday. "We're just putting people on notice that the government won't tolerate it anymore."

Most of the Texas cases involve small amounts of drugs — cigarettes of marijuana or handfuls of diet pills — that customs officials usually had ignored or given administrative fines to the offenders.

Now, those violations can result in felony drug-smuggling charges with penalties up to five years imprisonment and $15,000 fines, though no sentences that steep have been levied in Texas, Conroy said.

The crackdown was ordered by Attorney General Edwin Meese III. Nationwide, hundreds of cars and at least 12 vessels have been seized, including a $2.5 million yacht seized off Florida after Coast Guard officials discovered less than one-tenth of an ounce of marijuana on board.

Civil rights proponents have criticized the operation as a way of finding people guilty before they receive a trial.

If a car or boat can be seized for small amounts of illegal drugs, it may not be long before the government decides to seize homes, said Gara LaMarche, executive director of the Texas Civil Liberties Union.

In Texas, customs agents are on the lookout for illegal drugs along the Mexican border and at international airports in Houston, San Antonio and Dallas, Conroy told the Houston Chronicle.

In addition, boats in U.S. waters or any U.S.-flagged vessel in international waters can be boarded and inspected by the Coast Guard.

Federal officials can then seize a car, truck or boat if it is determined that the person or persons using them have any amount of an illegal drug.

Since 1984, when Congress strengthened the law, authorities have seized cash and assets exceeding $500 million, including night clubs, a horse ranch, a florist shop, a recording studio, a Ferrari and hundreds of other cars, boats and planes.

The Laredo district, which stretches from Brownsville to Del Rio, has been the most active in Texas. Customs agents arrested 25 people, seized 75 vehicles and confiscated 337 capsules and 5.3 ounces of marijuana in that district since March 21.

Eight people have been arrested at Houston Intercontinental Airport after flying back into the country. The eight, arrested at different times, had a total of 2.14 ounces of marijuana.

In the past, people found with small amounts of drugs had to pay an administrative fine of up to $150 for marijuana possession of 4 pounds or less, Conroy said. Administrative fines do not appear on a person's criminal record.

Girl Scout cookies set to feed sailors on ship

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — Sailors aboard the USS Midway will finally get their ration of Girl Scout cookies after a persistent Brownie troop squeezed their shipment past high Japanese tariffs through diplomatic means.

The cookies, which have sat in a Corpus Christi airline ticket office since they were returned from an April 26 shipment to Tokyo, were scheduled for reshipment this morning.

"Everybody who was supposed to be getting the cookies was really upset when they didn't get them," said Petty Officer 3rd Class Sig Woolford, who was in Beeville Wednesday while on leave from the Midway.

Woolford, the son-in-law of Brownie troop leader Marchetta White, said sailors aboard the ship have been waiting for the cookies from home for more than two months.

Troop 807 in Beeville had sold 402 boxes of cookies to the crew of the USS Midway stationed in Atsugi, Japan, with free shipment provided by the airline.

But the plan crumbled, airline officials said, when Japanese customs officials said they would have to levy a $2,000 duty on the cookies.

So the cookies were returned to Corpus Christi International Airport.

Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, went through diplomatic channels to clear up the matter and sent a telegram to the Brownie troop on Wednesday.

"An officer on the USS Midway tells me that he is ready to go pick up your shipment of Girl Scout cookies when they arrive in Japan this Friday," the telegram said.

The cookies were to leave Corpus Christi aboard a 6 a.m. American Airlines flight today.

They would connect with a flight in Dallas, then catch a direct flight to Narita Airport near Tokyo, where representatives of the U.S. Navy will be allowed to take the shipment duty-free.

"I think it's great and I'll tell the girls this afternoon at our regular meeting," White, the troop leader, said upon hearing the news. "I'm sure you'll hear a cheer go up."

Japanese officials, however, issued a statement Tuesday denying that the tariff ever was as high as originally reported.

The Japanese Consulate in Houston reported that the airline made an inquiry in Tokyo about the cookies, but did not say that they were intended for U.S. servicemen stationed on a ship.

"The customs office gave the answer that the tariff rate was 24 percent, but never said the amount of the duty to be $2,000, contrary to media reports," the Japanese Consulate's statement said.

The statement added that if military officials "had taken necessary procedures, the goods would have been cleared as duty free without any problem."

Mayor proclaims Small Business Week

Pampa Mayor David McDaniel has joined with other mayors and governors across the nation in designating this week as National Small Business Week to pay tribute to small businesses in the community.

Meeting with Pampa Area Chamber of Commerce President-Elect Robert Wilson earlier this week, Mayor McDaniel issued a proclamation marking the local observance which began Sunday and continues through Saturday.

Chamber Manager Bruce Barton said no special activities are planned for the week this year but he expects to see some events scheduled for the observance next year as the city's economic development programs get more fully under way in the community.

In his proclamation, McDaniel says that "more than 17 million Americans own a small business, and the rest of us benefit from their ingenuity, enterprise and hard work."

The mayor notes that small businesses employ half of all Americans in the work force and provide "well over two-thirds of all new American jobs." In addition, the majority of jobs held by younger, older, minority and female employees are in small businesses.

McDaniel also praises the work spirit often found in the small business fields.

"These achievements and the American heritage of economie liberty that helps make them possible are truly fitting reasons for each of us to join in the observance of Small Business Week," he states.

"The development of new enterprises depends on the hopes, dreams and hard work that have always characterized America's entrepreneurs," he adds. "... The contributions of Pampa's small business men and women help ensure that Pampa will grow and prosper."

The mayor urges citizens "to join with me in saluting our small business men and women by observing this week which has been set aside nationally to honor them."

The week was proclaimed nationally by President Reagan as a way of honoring "those men and women who contribute so much to our country and your hometown."

The 17 million small business owners in the United States also are responsible for almost 40 percent of national production and most of the nation's new products and new technologies. Small businesses also create about two of every three new jobs.

As part of the national celebration, outstanding small business owners from each state, the District of Columbia and Puerto Rico will be cited during the week in ceremonies in Washington, D.C.

Theme for the week is "Small Business: Working for America."

McDaniel signs proclamation while visiting with Wilson.

Death row inmate distressed at reprieve and interference

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — A death row inmate who sought execution but got a reprieve blames capital punishment opponents for interfering with his wishes.

"This was a decision I had made. It was the last act of freedom I could make," James Edward Smith said Wednesday. "It's frightening, to tell you the truth."

Smith, bitter at a reprieve handed down less than six hours before his scheduled execution early Wednesday, said death penalty opponents convinced his mother to pursue an appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court, contending her son was not mentally competent. The justices then granted the reprieve.

"This woman doesn't know me," Smith said of his mother, Alexzene Hamilton of Indianapolis. "She may understand some child who was under her care, but she doesn't understand this mature adult male."

Smith, 37, was sentenced to die for the 1983 robbery-slaying of Larry Rohus, manager of a Houston insurance office. Smith previously insisted he was innocent, but in an interview Wednesday detailed that murder and what he said were at least six other slayings, including the mutilation deaths of three people in South Carolina.

Another was a murder in Miami in 1978 and two in New York City in 1979, including the beheading of a baby whose corpse he said he left on a highway leading to the Verrazano-Narrows Bridge where it likely would be run over by trucks.

The baby, he said, was purchased for $300 in New York City's Spanish Harlem and was used in voodoo rituals.

"Look what you're trying to save!" he said, describing death penalty opponents who want to keep him alive as "just a bunch of bleeding-heart jerks."

"I'm still going to be executed," he insisted. "It may take a little longer."

Smith said Rohus was shot to death because of snide remarks the insurance office manager made while Smith was robbing the place.

"I killed him the same as I would a fly in my soup bowl," he said. "I shot him through the heart — almost at point-blank range — to get money. And then I ran out."

Harris County Assistant District Attorney Roberto Gutierrez, who prosecuted Smith, has described the former New Orleans tarot-card reader as the most evil and dangerous man he's ever prosecuted.

"That guy's got a little bit of insight," Smith responded, when told of Gutierrez's comment.

Smith's most chilling statements Wednesday, however, concerned his involvement in voodoo, which he said he became interested in while in high school.

He said the South Carolina slayings occurred in the spring of 1981 when three people were decapitated and their bodies mutilated in a ritual where their hearts were removed.

He told of taking human body parts from graveyards for use in the ceremonies but said the rituals — which involved the use of a severed head — were more powerful when a live human being was used.

"Babies, kids, whatever was available," he said. "You go out and simply snatch them off the street."

"You don't take the name of the victim. You think of them just like animals. You're not interested in their name. I'm only interested in their body being there and their blood flowing."

Sometimes bodies were buried, dumped in wooded areas or along roadsides or eaten, he said.

Mrs. Hamilton's appeal questioned her son's mental competence. Smith said the competency issue was linked to a 1978 Miami armed robbery charge, to which he pleaded innocent.

McLean readies for cleaning up

MCLEAN — City officials are again planning their annual clean-up, fix-up campaign June 1-15 and are asking residents for their help in the effort, announces Mayor George Green.

City employees will again haul away trash and tree trimmings that are not larger than can be handled by one man during the clean-up, fix-up weeks, Green said.

Residents are asked not to throw dirt or large objects in trash barrels. Large objects are to be stacked beside the barrels, keeping the alleys clear so trash trucks can move through the alleys.

"This is your town," Green said. "Please help keep it clean and orderly."

Noriega

An administration source said Wednesday that if Noriega accepts the deal, he would step down probably in August and would stay out of Panama until after the next presidential elections there in 1990.

The deal was approved Tuesday at a White House meeting over the objections of the Justice Department, including Attorney General Edwin Meese III, the source said.

U.S. Attorney Leon Kellner, whose office was prosecuting Noriega, said he was aware of the proposed deal but did not know any details.

"I was informed that an offer was being made," said Kellner, reached by telephone at his Miami office. "I have no knowledge of anything else."

In Panama City, the government said Noriega had not agreed to step down.

"There has been no agreement about anything," said Boris Moreno, director of the government's National Information System. "Such reports only come from sources interested in sidetracking the conversations and in aggravating the existing situation."

Deputy Assistant Secretary of State Michael G. Kozak went to Panama early last week and has been conferring there with Noriega and his representatives ever since, sources said.

"The situation in Panama has many aspects and no agreement has yet been reached," State Department spokeswoman Nancy Beck said Wednesday.

Noriega was charged in a 12-count indictment unsealed in Miami last Feb. 5 with taking at least $4.6 million in payoffs from Colombia's violent Medellin cartel to protect cocaine shipments, launder money, supply drug laboratories.

Defective jack blamed in death

CANADIAN — A defective hydraulic jack has been blamed by authorities for the death of a Canadian man found beneath a car he was working on late Tuesday.

James Donnell, 47, died about 8:30 p.m. Tuesday night at Hemphill County Hospital after about an hour of resuscitation attempts. Hospital authorities said Donnell had a crushed chest and abdomen.

Donnell died of injuries suffered when a Mercury fell on him while he was working under the vehicle.

"His family had just left the house," said Canadian Police Chief Phil Taylor. "He was getting underneath the car when the hydraulic jack which had a leak in it came down on his chest."

Family members were not gone from the home but about 15 minutes, Taylor said. The weight of the car hampered Donnell's efforts to breathe, suffocating him, he added.

"Somebody probably would have seen what was happening if it hadn't been for another car in front of his car," he said. The Mercury was parked facing the road, he said, and another car parked in front of it blocked it from view.

"His wife came home and saw him there and started screaming for someone to come help him," Taylor said. "Neighbors came out and tried to get the hydraulic jack to lift the car, but it wouldn't work." An emergency medical technician from down the street brought his own jack to lift the car from the stricken man, he said.

"After he got to the hospital, they tried to revive him three times, but they weren't able to,"

Taylor said. "It's a real sad thing."

Funeral services are to be at 2 p.m. Friday in the Canadian Church of Christ with Jerry Smith and Mike Heatwole officiating. Burial will follow in Canadian Cemetery under the direction of Stickley-Hill Funeral Home.

Born in Evansville, Ind., Mr. Donnell had been a resident of Canadian for 19 years. He was a member of the Church of Christ and was an operator of heavy equipment. He married Roberta Burns in 1970.

He is survived by his wife; one son, Jerry Paul Donnell of Canadian; two daughters, Tracy Lynn Davies of Amarillo and Torie Lee Donnell of Canadian; his mother, Marie Donnell of Pampa; a brother, Paul Eugene Donnell of Pampa, and one grandson.

Assassination plot suspect eccentric, loner

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A man accused of seeking to have Mayor Henry Cisneros assassinated was described as an eccentric tax protester frustrated with failed anti-government political agendas.

Parker E. Abell, 74, of Natalia, 18 miles southwest of San Antonio, was in the Bexar County Jail Wednesday without bond on charges of solicitation to commit capital murder.

Abell, a former Libertarian congressional candidate, was arrested Tuesday after he allegedly offered an undercover officer $5,000 to kill the mayor.

Officials said Abell wanted publicity for his political extremist group called American Patriots.

Friends and neighbors described Abell as odd, but committed to an ideal that government is ruled by the people.

"He's eccentric, but he's a man with a cause," said Lauren Reed, a friend of Abell's. "I think he felt he was at the end of his rope. He tried all the conventional channels to get his point across and when that didn't work I think it was a sort of cry for attention."

Abell had been under surveillance for a month after he talked with two undercover officers posing as hitmen.

"It wasn't a spur-of-the-moment thing. It was thought out," said Bexar County District Attorney Fred Rodriguez.

"He is firm in his convictions and somehow or another he wanted a hitman with the same resolve, the same philosophy," he said. "He just didn't want anybody. He wanted a patriot to carry out the execution."

Rodriguez met with Cisneros Wednesday to discuss the threat, but the 40-year-old mayor said he was not getting additional protection and joked that he was insulted he was worth only $5,000.

"I'm going about the business of San Antonio and this is not going to dissuade me," Cisneros said. "This is about the 15th time I've had to put up with something like this and there's (another) fellow who is in jail for this thing who sends me a Christmas card every year to remind me he is still thinking about me."

"So no, I am not worried about it," Cisneros said.

Rodriguez said that Abell mentioned other possible targets, including State Comptroller Bob Bullock, but decided on Cisneros, perhaps because of the mayor's popularity.

Cisneros is in his fourth term, is past president of the National League of Cities and in 1984 was interviewed as a possible Democratic vice presidential candidate.

Officers arrested Abell at a supermarket pay phone, and in his car, police found a .22-caliber rifle with bullets and "execution warrants" issued by the "Sovereign Court of the People."

The warrants contained blanks to fill in names of public officials to be assassinated.

Internal Revenue Service officials, keeping tabs on Abell because of his failure to file income tax returns, came into contact with the suspect.

Abell contacted an IRS undercover agent and said he wanted a public official assassinated, but because IRS officials did not know the target, they called in state prosecutors to avoid jurisdictional conflicts, Rodriguez said.

The IRS agent told Abell to talk to a district attorney's undercover agent. The state officer and Abell then talked over the telephone several times and in person on Tuesday before the arrest, Rodriguez said.

Abell, a Libertarian candidate who sought the 23rd Congressional District seat in 1982, lives in a wood-frame shack in Natalia.

Several years ago he built the Natalia Libertarian Party Headquarters in an effort to lead an anti-government movement, but it did not work because he was a loner and an eccentric, neighbors said.

"He wasn't the type of person you could see walking down the street and you could say Hi to," said Anita Fraga. "He was the opposite. He would turn around and go inside."

Abell owned a grocery store and nightclub, now called Natalia Club, but it has been closed.

"He was a good guy about 10 or 15 years back, but then he went into his house and hardly ever came out. I think because of his age, he may have changed," said neighbor Natividad Gonzales.

Rodriguez said the investigation is continuing and that he would oppose the suspect being released from jail.

"If he seeks a hitman to put a hit on the mayor of the ninth largest city in the United States, we've got a guy who's determining his resolve to do something," Rodriguez said.

Limits on Medical malpractice held unconstitutional by court

AUSTIN (AP) — A state Supreme Court ruling overturning a cap on medical malpractice damages was the latest in a series of decisions wiping out decades-old reform legislation, says the president of the Texas Medical Association.

Dr. David Vanderpool responded Wednesday to a ruling that the limitation on non-medical damages is unconstitutional. He said the association was "obviously disappointed but not terribly surprised, given the makeup of the court."

Vanderpool, a Dallas physician, said the law thrown out by the court was "the last vestige of reforms that have been systematically dismantled by the court."

The law was enacted in 1977 after doctors claimed that soaring rates for medical malpractice insurance made it too expensive and, in some cases, impossible to obtain.

Justice William Kilgarlin, writing for the 7-2 majority, said the law limiting recovery of non-medical damages is unreasonable and arbitrary.

In a dissenting opinion, Justice Raul Gonzalez said for the court to decide that there was no medical malpractice insurance crisis at the time the law was passed "is to act like a 'super Legislature' in violation of the separation of powers doctrine."

Kilgarlin recounted the facts of the case by quoting from an opinion by the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in suit filed on behalf of 14-month-old Christopher Lucas against the United States.

The opinion said the child was paralyzed when a penicillin product was injected directly into an artery while he was being treated at William Beaumont Army Medical Center near El Paso.

The district court held that the injection was negligently administered by a hospital nurse and awarded the child's parents $498,628 for medical expenses.

The court also awarded Christopher $2.45 million, including $2.1 million in non-medical damages, then reduced that total by $400,000 paid to the Lucases in settlement of a state suit against the drug manufacturer.

On appeal, the 5th Circuit held that the liability limit applied to federal hospitals and was consistent with the U.S. Constitution. The federal appeals court, however, submitted for review by the Texas Supreme Court whether the limitation on damages violated the state constitution.

The law allows recovery of all medical costs and expenses, with a $500,000 cap — plus a Consumer Price Index adjustment — on non-medical damages against a physician or other health-care provider.

"In the context of persons catastrophically injured by medical negligence, we believe it is unreasonable and arbitrary to limit their recovery in a speculative experiment to determine whether liability insurance rates will decrease," Kilgarlin said.

A partial limit on civil liability that would have kicked in if the $500,000 cap was thrown out also was held unconstitutional.

Gonzalez, in his dissent, said, "Whatever flaws exist in the legislative findings, the proper forum to correct them is the Texas Legislature and not this court," he said.

Chief Justice Tom Phillips also was listed as dissenting, with the notation that his opinion would be filed later.

The Lucas case is the first, under a 1985 state amendment, to reach the Texas Supreme Court on a question certified by a federal appeals court.

Bustamante calls movement direct attack on hispanics

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rep. Albert Bustamante says the movement to make English the country's official language is an insult to the American intelligence and a direct assault on Hispanics.

Wisconsin Rep. Gerald D. Kleczka agreed. "It is in fact a direct attack on Hispanics. No doubt about it," Kleczka told the House Judiciary subcommittee at a hearing Wednesday to consider proposed constitutional amendments designating English the official language.

"The English-language amendment clearly would not fit in the category of expanding the rights of Americans," said Bustamante, a migrant worker for 23 years and the son and grandson of Mexican-Americans who followed the crops.

"If it is a symbolic measure with no impact whatsoever on our rights, then it is a frivolous exercise. If it restricts civil rights on the basis of one's proficiency in English, then it is divisive and a dangerous amendment," the San Antonio Democrat told the Judiciary subcommittee on civil and constitutional rights.

Rep. John Conyers Jr., D-Mich., a member of the House panel conducting the hearing, said he questioned the motives behind the movement.

He said backers had not been able to rationalize the necessity of making English the official language.

Following the hearing, Bustamante said advocates of official English "have this fear they (Hispanics) are taking over. They're saying... there's too many of them."

But supporters told the House committee that the amendment was not an effort to stifle freedom, but rather to clarify public policy and give legal protection to English, the glue that holds the country together.

Rep. Norman D. Shumway, R-Calif., said he does not want to see the nation drift unwittingly into a bilingual country.

"We cannot afford to wait a decade, or a generation, until our government is conducting its affairs in languages other than English; it will be too late then," testified Shumway, who has proposed one of the English amendments before the House.

And Rep. William S. Broomfield, R-Mich., said English is the language of the United States only by tradition and action should be taken to prevent future uncertainty in basic communication.

Bustamante testified the amendment could alienate non-English speakers from vital services such as health care and deprive them of public translators for courts, hospitals, emergency services and police departments.

According to testimony, 14 states have enacted official-English laws.

At news conferences Wednesday in Washington and Austin, several groups urged Congress to turn back the proposed amendments.

Dora O. Tovar of the Mexican American Legal Defense and Educational Fund said in Austin that such legislation fails to address the need for English instruction.

"The Hispanic community recognizes that in order to achieve full economic participation, everyone must master the English language. Yet the proposed English language amendments do not provide even a single dollar for language instruction," Ms. Tovar said.

State Sen. Gonzalo Barrientos, D-Austin, said in the Texas capital that the proposed constitutional amendments being considered by Congress "would have far-reaching negative effects on public policy in this country."

And Fernando Dubove of the National Immigration, Refugee and Citizenship Forum said native languages tend to decline "as these people assimilate into the American culture."

At a news conference in Washington, those speaking against movement included Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz., who later testified at the hearing, and American Civil Liberties Union attorney Antonio J. Califa.

Texas Tech president will resign

LUBBOCK (AP) — After overseeing the administration of Texas Tech University and its medical school for eight years, President Lauro Cavazos says he doesn't want to overstay his alma mater's welcome.

Cavazos announced Wednesday he would step down at the end of July 1989 and assume teaching duties in the university Health Sciences Center's department of anatomy.

Cavazos, 61, said the timing was right for his departure and that the decision to step down was his own.

"One needs to leave the presidency when you think perhaps you've given direction to the institution and strong leadership," he said. "I really believe that things are in good shape here."

Since coming to Tech in April 1980, Cavazos has weathered a faculty no-confidence vote and legislative funding cutbacks, overseen the creation of schools of nursing and allied health and helped spearhead higher undergraduate admission standards.

"I believe in a certain period of time people can achieve certain things," he said in a news conference. "But large institutions and complex institutions such as these need new leadership, very frankly, from time to time."

The first Tech alumnus to be president and the second-longest office-holder, Cavazos is the 10th president of the 24,000-student school.

Cavazos said he has accomplished much, but that the job is never finished.

"In retrospect, I believe that considerable academic progress has been achieved at Tech and the Health Sciences Center during my presidency," said Cavazos, blinking back tears as he thanked his wife and colleagues.

Historic building burns

The Cabildo, the historic building where France and the United States concluded the Louisiana purchase in 1803, was seriously damaged by fire Wednesday. The building, which sits on New Orleans' Jackson Square beside the St. Louis Cathedral, is one of the most famous buildings in the French Quarter.

Former Gov. White: No constitutional amendment needed for school finance AUSTIN (AP) — Former Gov. Mark White disagrees with his successor, Gov. Bill Clements, that a constitutional amendment is needed to keep the responsibility for public school finances in the Legislature rather than the courts.

"The Legislature doesn't need a constitutional amendment to do its job. What the courts essentially have said is that there is a problem constitutionally with the devices that are employed now to allocate (public school) funds in Texas," White said after a speech to the Texas Tax Policy Conference Wednesday.

White also said that just putting more money into the finance system will not be enough to address State District Judge Harley Clark's ruling that it is unconstitutional.

Search committee will start soon

AUSTIN (AP) — A search committee should be appointed by early next week to begin the hunt for the Texas Racing Commission's first executive director, the panel's chairman says.

"I'm hopeful that we can hire someone around July 1. That's kind of what I'm shooting for," Chairman Hilary Doran said Wednesday.

Doran said he has waited to name a search committee until advertisements for the job had been run in various national racing publications.

More than 45 applications have been received so far, including those from a high school principal, a former jockey and a top state emergency management official.

The post will pay up to $60,000 per year, and Racing Commission members have said filling it is a top priority as Texas moves closer to conducting horse and dog race gambling as approved by voters last year.

Although Doran said he will be on the search committee, he said he hasn't yet reviewed the applications on file.

The search committee will include racing commissioners representing both the horse and greyhound sides of the panel.

The search committee will "start going into the applications and start the process of eliminating some and getting down to the final three or four or five or whatever," Doran said.

"I frankly don't believe that dollars per student really equate to quality education. If that's the only standard you have, then you've looked at the wrong bottom line," White said.

"Where are you spending your dollars on the students? How well are those dollars being spent? Until that's answered, you don't have an equation that will lead to quality education," he said.

Clark, of Austin, ruled last year that the school finance system is unconstitutional because it does not ensure that each district has the same ability to obtain money to educate students. The state has appealed the ruling.

The state has a responsibility "to make certain that there are sufficient funds out there in every school district in the state that will provide a quality education for the students that live there," said White, a Democrat who has worked as a partner in a Houston law firm since losing to Clements in 1986.

"It's not necessarily just a function of money. It's also a function of new ideas and the application of those ideas. In order to bring the teachers to the student, we can employ satellite communication many different ways. Technology can help solve this problem, and the technology is available."

EVER STRIVING FOR THE TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Government should hang up on phones

A recent Supreme Court decision permitting an Arizona telephone company to continue to ban sexually-explicit or "dial-a-porn" services on its equipment did not clarify popular confusion about the First Amendment. Speculation is rampant that the courts will now smile benignly on various state and federal proposals to ban such services whether the telephone companies involved want to restrict them or not. Given the prevalent confusion, the speculation may be correct; in fact, the issues are quite different.

Arizona's Mountain Bell decided in 1985 that "dial-a-porn" was not appropriate and refused to let companies furnishing such messages use phone company facilities. Now you could make an argument that as a government-protected monopoly, Mountain Bell is a quasi-governmental entity that should be covered by the First Amendment's "Congress shall make no law" language. But the court decided that Mountain Bell was more like a private company that had the right to decide how its facilities — its property — should be used.

The issue is different when people propose that government make a law prohibiting the phone company from making its facilities available to "dial-a-porn" companies. In that case the government is dictating to the company how its facilities shall be used, and dictating in such a way that the company is forced to limit freedom of speech — a clear violation of the First Amendment.

It is inevitable that tastes and opinions will differ radically. Mountain Bell's parent company, U.S. West, which provides phone services in 13 Western states, is not now considering extending the Arizona ban to the other states. As U.S. West spokesman Blair Johnson put it, "There are different circumstances in different states." But if the company encounters local economic and social pressure, it may well reconsider its policy and think about refusing to let "dial-a-porn" companies use its facilities in other localities.

At present, U.S. West in other states is offering customers one-time free blocking of 976 services, establishing a separate prefix for "dial-a-porn" services, and is no longer billing to collect for such services. That may not be a perfect solution to the problems presented by the availability of such service — indiscriminate access by children, for example — but it's a responsible approach to real concerns. It offers the hope of maintaining such services for adults who are odd enough to be willing to pay for them while making it easier for those who wish to avoid such messages to do so. Both diversity and free speech can survive.

As telephone technology is improved — which would be more likely to happen if competition were permitted in local telephone services — better solutions might become available. The best bet is for concerned groups and individuals to keep pressuring phone companies, and for government to reread the First Amendment — "Congress shall make no law" — and keep its clumsy mitts away from the entire situation.

Let's stay with cheaper cars

Today we start with a quiz. Given a choice, would you prefer that someone (a) sold you a new VCR or (b) dropped a bomb on you?

If you chose (a), you may be alarmed to find yourself in a minority. A recent poll of Americans found 59 percent solemnly agreeing that economic rivals like Japan "pose a greater threat to our national security than our military adversaries."

An electorate that would rather be invaded by Soviet tanks than Japanese cars ought to be pleased with the trade bill recently passed by Congress. It treats the import of products as a hostile act, to be repelled by any means available. The plant closing measure singled out for criticism by President Reagan, while fully worthy of censure, is just one stone in a monument to economic superstition.

Why Americans fear trade is a puzzle. No doubt a lot of them have been indoctrinated in the dogma that it destroys jobs. The experience of the past six years, however, has made that legend about as plausible as Shirley MacLaine's Autobiography.

Consider: Since the 1981-82 recession ended, our trade deficit has grown to record dimensions at the same time our unemployment rate was falling to the lowest level in 14 years. Economic Neanderthals like Richard Gephardt testify that unfair foreign trade practices have stolen away 2.5 million American jobs. This news is hard to square with the inconvenient fact that during the current economic expansion (the second longest since World War II), the economy has created a net total of 15 million jobs.

All that alleged chiselling by other countries, meanwhile, has brought them only well-deserved woe. The U.S., whose glib naivete has supposedly been exploited by its craftier trading partners, is the only major nation except Britain whose unemployment rate has not climbed since 1981. Here's to exploitation!

The advertised purpose of the trade bill is to force those unscrupulous foreigners to play fair. In those cases where they don't, which are far less numerous than generally assumed, that's a fine idea. But it's not one that the U.S. should pursue with punitive measures whose chief victims are Americans.

What Americans have trouble comprehending is that we gain from keeping our market open even if everyone else closes theirs. That should be obvious to anyone who drives a Toyota car or watches a Sony television: If the quality weren't better or the price lower, or both, foreign goods wouldn't sell here.

We're not buying their products in gratitude for Pearl Harbor. We're buying them because they unequivocally raise our standard of living. But when Americans find themselves face to face with a pollster, they are inexplicably seized by the notion that things which make us better off make us worse off.

It's not just consumers who benefit; so do

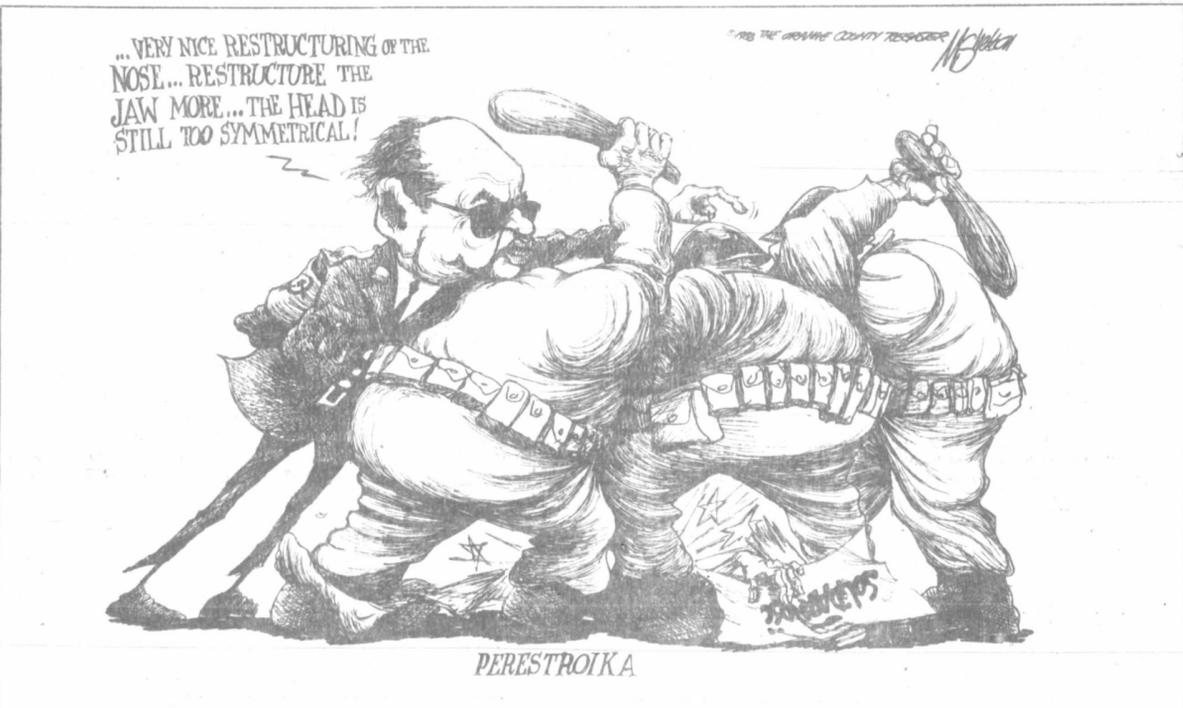

American manufacturers. When they can buy better or cheaper equipment or components from abroad than they can find at home, they lower their costs, improve their products and enhance their ability to compete in international markets.

The Big Three auto makers would be far more prosperous today if they hadn't been forced for the last 20 years to pay criminally inflated prices for steel — thanks to Washington's indulgence of the steel industry's allergy to foreign competition. Likewise for American computer firms, who were innocent casualties in the war on Japan's "dumping" of microchips.

Unfortunately, the trade bill is only the latest symptom of the revolt against free trade. Since 1980, the share of imports subject to some type of special restriction has nearly doubled, which amounts to an invisible $33 billion tax increase on unwitting American consumers.

Particular groups may benefit for a while from protectionism, but for the populace at large over time, it's the moral equivalent of a state lottery: extravagant promises, stingy payoff. If we simply banned all imports, we'd all have secure jobs and handsome wages. Trouble is, the gargantuan prices we'd have to pay for everything we buy would swallow up the gains several times over.

Protectionism is merely the current version of a perennial fantasy, noted by the 19th-century French economist Frederic Bastiat, who wrote that government is "the great fiction by means of which everybody contrives to live at the expense of everybody else." That fiction is alluring enough to overcome the cause of free trade, which is better at producing achievements than adherents.

He suggests seeing 'Milagro'

I rarely recommend movies in this space because I do not consider myself a real critic. For instance, I call movies, "movies." Real life movie critics refer to movies as "films."

I also rarely pay attention to who the director is in a movie, and I'm still not sure what a "dolly-grip" is, not to mention a "best boy." (Next time you go to a movie, watch as they roll the credits: every movie has a dolly-grip and a best boy. You know how strange they are in Hollywood.)

Yet, I think I recommended some movie winners for you over the years. Recently, I pushed a wonderful sleeper called Belizaire the Cajun and it was me, remember, who said to go see Fatal Attraction, before you fooled around on your wife or bought a pet rabbit.

I'm here today with a new movie I recommend heartily.

It is The Milagro Beanfield War, which doesn't have any bigtime stars unless you think Christopher Walken is a bigtime star.

This time, I did notice who the director was.

Lewis Grizzard

Robert Redford. I'm not sure when he got out of acting, but if this movie is any indication of his directing abilities, we certainly won't miss him in another Legal Eagles.

The Milagro Beanfield War is a movie about Milagro, New Mexico, a little dump of a town whose very existence is being threatened by the bulldozers of a large recreational developer.

Even the water has been cut off to local farmers in an effort to run them out.

But one brave soul decides to irrigate his beanfield with illegal water anyway. From all that comes a classical confrontation between little and good and big and evil.

There's a little violence in the movie, but not much. There are a few bad words, but not that many. Nobody gets naked that I can remember, and I usually remember things like that.

There's an old man who speaks to angels in the movie. He has a pet pig. You will love the old man and the pig.

I copied what one real critic said about Milagro:

"I loved this film" — Joel Siegel, Good Morning America.

(See what I mean about real critics saying "film"?)

What I say is we need more movies like Milagro that praise old values like standing up for what's right, sticking together, and learning to cherish and respect babbling old men with pet pigs.

They'll never use any of this for a Milagro ad in the paper, but if they did, here's what I would like for them to say I said:

"The last time I felt this good leaving a movie was when me and Kathy Sue Loudermilk went to see Francis (the talking mule) in the Navy and sat in the back row of the balcony.

"That child flung a dolly-grip around my neck and I never heard a word Francis said."

ABC News also shows a tilt to the left

By WILLIAM A. RUSHER

It is a truism that during the past 30 years technology has vastly increased the influence of the media, especially television. By the judicious selection of what stories to cover and how to cover them, the news producers and editors of the major TV networks are able, as Richard M. Cohen (then senior producer of foreign news for the CBS Evening News) bragged last August, to "form and maintain" the "American consciousness" on any subject that strikes their fancy.

But technology is a soulless monster that will serve any master who knows how to command it, and the wonders of computer science have recently enabled the Media Research Center — a brilliant new conservative monitor of the antics of our liberal media — to compile a devastating list of just a few of the hot-eyed liberals currently infesting the heights of the journalistic profession. It doesn't take much imagination to visualize the job these adept propagandists will be in a position to do on "the American consciousness" between now and Election Day.

Since one has to start somewhere, we will begin with the American Broadcasting Co. Bear in mind that what follows is far from a roster of all the liberals working in that influential organization. This summary merely lists the current high-ranking employees of ABC whose names were tossed up by the Nexis Data-Retrieval System when it was asked to tag any who had a public record of working for some political cause. If you've noticed that the gumbe fed to you as political "news" on ABC in recent years had a funny taste, here may be some of the reasons why.

Near the very top of ABC sits David Burke, executive vice president of ABC News. He brings to that job the insights he acquired as chief of staff to Sen. Ted Kennedy from 1965 to 1971 and press secretary to New York's Democratic Gov. Hugh Carey thereafter.

Burke has a political soul-mate in Jeff Gralnick, vice president of ABC News "for political coverage." Gralnick was press secretary to Sen. George McGovern in 1971.

Based in Atlanta, as chief of the Southern Bureau of ABC News, is Rex Granum. That should be convenient for keeping in touch with Jimmy Carter, whom Granum served as deputy press secretary.

In Washington is ABC correspondent Bettina Gregory, who acted as the campaign manager for her husband, John Flannery, in his 1984 race as the Democratic candidate against Rep. Frank Wolf, R-Va.

The "national security affairs correspondent" of ABC News is Rick Inderfurth, who worked for Sens. George McGovern and Gary Hart in the mid-1970s before accepting assignments in the Carter White House and on the staff of the (Democratic-controlled) Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

At the Pentagon is ABC News correspondent Bob Zelnick (formerly ABC bureau chief in Tel Aviv and Moscow), who was a legislative researcher in 1972 for liberal House Democrat Henry Reuss of Wisconsin.

Since 1983 the "chief foreign correspondent" of ABC News, based in Paris, has been Pierre Salinger — President Kennedy's press secretary, who was elected to a term in the Senate from California as a Democrat in 1964.

It seems almost overkill to add that Joyce Kravitz, director of ABC News Information in Washington since 1985, was formerly a press aide in both the Democratic National Committee and the Carter White House.

For "balance," however, there is Joanne Bistany, who was a communications aide in the Reagan White House in 1981-1983 and is now one of the many vice presidents of ABC News.

Those are the former political activists on the team that ABC has assembled to bring you the news of this presidential election year. Care to guess which way ABC's "news" will tilt?

Bush gets Reagan's nod; Dukakis heads for Capitol Hill

By LAURA KING
Associated Press Writer

George Bush's Republican candidacy finally got the presidential seal of approval, with President Reagan vowing to "campaign as hard as I can" on Bush's behalf. Democratic front-runner Michael Dukakis, meanwhile, was conferring with congressional leaders and making forays into the foreign policy arena.

Dukakis' only remaining rival, Jesse Jackson, brushed aside this week's losses in Nebraska and West Virginia with his stock line that his candidacy is "winning every day."

All three candidates were campaigning today in Western states, as the race pointed toward June 7, with its big delegate payoff from races in California, New Jersey, Montana and New Mexico.

Dukakis, who has been criticized by Bush for lacking foreign policy experience, had a meeting set this morning with Anglican Archbishop Desmond Tutu of South Africa, who was in Washington to lobby for new sanctions aimed at ending apartheid. Dukakis also arranged for a luncheon with Latin American ambassadors.

In between, the Massachusetts governor was making the rounds on Capitol Hill, meeting with leaders including House Speaker Jim Wright, House Majority Leader Tom Foley, Senate Majority Leader Robert Byrd and House Budget Committee Chairman William Gray.

Bush was formally given Reagan's endorsement at a pricey Republican fund-raiser in Washington on Wednesday night.

Reagan had remained neutral during the fight for the Republican nomination, but the vice president has had a mathematical lock on the nomination since the Pennsylvania primary last month. The president said the time had come to break his silence.

"I intend to campaign as hard as I can," Reagan said. "I'm going to work as hard as I can to make Vice President George Bush the next president of the United States."

The brief endorsement came at the end of a lengthy speech in which the president cited his administration's accomplishments. Reagan referred to Bush by name three times, at one point calling him "George Bush."

Bush, who preceded the president at the podium, praised Reagan for "your simple humanity, your decency and your strength," adding: "What an inspiration you have been to all of us."

After Reagan spoke, Bush joined him and the two clasped hands and held them high, while hundreds of red, white and blue balloons were released.

Bush's former rival Bob Dole drew laughter from the crowd at the Republican event when — acknowledging applause as he rose to speak — said: "I would accept the nomination, but I think it's already been spoken for."

"I can't remember the guy who got it," added Dole.

Hours before Reagan's endorsement,

Bush got the blessing of former television evangelist Pat Robertson, who technically remains a candidate although he has long ceased active campaigning and has only 46 delegates to Bush's 1,344, according to the latest AP count.

Robertson, who came to Washington to formally bestow his support on Bush, told reporters at the White House afterward he would withdraw from the race on Monday, and would be releasing his delegates.

But later, Robertson aide Richard Pinsky said Robertson was suspending his campaign rather than quitting outright, and would release his delegates, but not right away.

Still later, the Robertson campaign weighed in with a press release asserting that the former television evangelist had told reporters he was not withdrawing and was not releasing his delegates. It promised Robertson would discuss his campaign status on Monday, however.

Telephone calls to the campaign seeking clarification were not returned Wednesday night.

Some Robertson supporters were already vowing to keep up the fight. In Washington state, where Robertson won a straw poll earlier this year, his backers were gearing up to try to deliver all of the state's delegates to the former television evangelist.

Bush was leaving today for a week-long campaign swing through several Western states. Dukakis was also heading to Oregon and California today, while Jackson campaigned for a third day in Oregon.

The state holds its primary on Tuesday, with 45 delegates at stake.

On Wednesday, Jackson led a march against drugs through a crime-ridden neighborhood in Portland, and visited an Indian reservation in central Oregon.

"I earn my votes every day," Jackson told a cheering crowd in Salem. "When I win, you win."

Tabatha Foster before transplants. Transplant recipient dies after organs fail, infection

PITTSBURGH (AP)—A feisty, 3-year-old girl who made medical history with a five-organ transplant died after a six-month struggle that doctors say will help advance research into the experimental surgery.

Tabatha Foster of Madisonville, Ky., who spent most of her life in hospitals, died Wednesday afternoon, a month shy of her fourth birthday, in the intensive care unit at Children's Hospital of Pittsburgh.

The 36-pound, pigtailed child was the world's longest survivor of a five-organ transplant. She received a new liver, small intestines, pancreas and parts of a stomach and colon during a 15-hour experimental operation that ended Nov. 1.

Similar procedures had been performed only twice before in the world, and both patients died within a few days.

An infection in Tabatha's bloodstream caused her heart, kidneys and liver to fail, hospital spokeswoman Sue Cardillo said.

"It was system failure, everything. It was like a chain reaction," she said.

Among those expressing sympathy was President Reagan, who had mentioned Tabatha's plight in a national radio address in January and contributed $1,000 toward her medical expenses.

"Many Americans were drawn to her because of her courageous battle against birth defects. We extend our deepest sympathies to her family," the president said in a statement.

Tabatha's parents, Roy and Sandra Foster, were at her side and had told doctors not to try to revive her if her heart stopped, Ms. Cardillo said.

"I was a little surprised that it ended as suddenly as this," said Dr. Thomas E. Starzl, director of transplant surgery at Children's Hospital. "Even though she was a child of enormous physical and enormous emotional strength, it was just slowly ebbing away."

As Starzl described the devotion of Tabatha's parents at a news conference, he stopped speaking in the middle of a sentence and sat down, fighting back tears.

Tabatha won the hearts of hospital staff with good-natured teasing, playing peek-a-boo, giggling each day at "Sesame Street" and singing "The Itsy-Bitsy Spider."

Well-wishers from around the country, including Frank Sinatra, donated more than $350,000 to help cover her medical expenses. Much of the money came from black churches. Tabatha, who was black, also received boxloads of toys, cards and notes from schoolchildren.

$3.1 million fine for requiring repetitive work

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Occupational Safety and Health Administration says serious health problems among workers required to do repetitive physical labor on assembly lines prompted the agency's second-largest fine ever against a single company.

IBP Inc. says OSHA is trying to impose "Alice in Wonderland theories" on industry, but the union representing workers at IBP's Dakota City, Neb., meatpacking plant hailed Wednesday's decision to get tough with the company.

OSHA said it was imposing a $3.1 million fine against IBP for willfully ignoring the hazards of repetitive motion. The agency maintains that IBP could have taken numerous steps to reduce the risk of injury, but did not.

The affected employees work on production lines, doing such work as cutting, trimming, hide removal and lifting meat with hooks, said OSHA spokesman Terry Mikelson. All the work is done while the meat moves at high speed through work stations in a cold, damp environment.

Mikelson said safety inspectors from the agency first "noticed a pattern of repetitive motion injuries" during a preliminary review of safety records in November 1987. Such injuries can be crippling and are caused by repeated hand, wrist and arm motion.

OSHA Deputy Assistant Secretary Frank White said repetitive motion injuries are "a major health hazard in one of the most dangerous occupations in the country, and we want the meatpacking industry, in general, and IBP, in particular, to eliminate the problem."

OSHA says IBP refused to slow its production lines, change equipment designs or educate workers about the need to change positions periodically.

"IBP has known about the high toll that these disorders have had on its work force but has chosen not to deal with it," White said.

"We're most pleased about the recommendations the Occupational Safety and Health Administration made in their lengthy complaint against IBP — recommendations for some very simple ways of preventing injuries," said Al Zack, a spokesman for the United Food and Commercial Workers Union.

IBP, a subsidiary of Occidental Petroleum Co., has 15 working days to contest the fine. The company already is contesting a $2.6 million fine levied by OSHA last July for safety and record violations at the Dakota City plant.

In a statement issued late Wednesday, IBP officials indicated they will fight the case in court.

Retail sales April decline is first in 6 months

WASHINGTON (AP)—Retail sales, depressed by bad weather and an early Easter, fell 0.6 percent in April, the first decline in six months, the government said today.

The Commerce Department said that sales totaled a seasonally adjusted $131.6 billion last month as sales fell $815 million from March.

The 0.6 percent drop was the first decline since a 0.8 percent setback last October. The March performance was revised upward, however, to show an increase of 1.7 percent, the biggest advance since August and much stronger than the originally reported 0.8 percent gain.

The swings in both months came from the fact that Easter came early this year, meaning that consumers did their spring shopping in March and siphoning off sales from April.

In addition, unseasonably cool weather in the Northeast and West dampened sales for spring apparel as well as for lawn and garden items.

Given all the unusual influences, analysts said the weak April sales report did not alter their general assessment that the economy has been performing well so far this year.

Total economic activity, as measured by the gross national product, rose at an annual rate of 2.3 percent in the first three months of the year, far better than the recession fears immediately following the stock market crash last October would have indicated.

The surprisingly strong growth has caused interest rates to rise in recent weeks as investors have begun worrying about inflationary pressures. Major banks boosted their prime lending rate on Wednesday to 9 percent, the first increase since last October.

Shultz says talks going well

GENEVA (AP) — George P. Shultz resumed pre-summit talks with Eduard A. Shevardnadze today and said "we are doing pretty well" in trying to end a dispute over monitoring the destruction of intermediate-range nuclear missiles.

The differences over anti-cheating safeguards have stalled Senate approval of the treaty scrapping the medium- and shorter-range missiles.

"Some (issues) are resolved, some are not, and we are making good progress," the secretary of state said at the U.S. mission as he shook hands with the Soviet foreign minister today.

The two were beginning a second and final day of talks.

While they discussed the Middle East, the Iran-Iraq war and other regional issues, their senior arms control advisers worked on the technical issues blocking ratification of the treaty.

Maynard Glitman, who negotiated the Intermediate Nuclear Forces, or INF treaty, led the U.S. team. Col. Gen. Nikolai Chervov, an arms control expert of the Soviet armed forces, headed the Soviet delegation.

The arms-control specialists, who reportedly reached a tentative agreement on the verification issues Wednesday night, were to make recommendations to Shultz and Shevardnadze for final approval before winding up later today.

On Wednesday, the two ministers held "very businesslike and constructive talks" and made progress "in some areas," State Department spokesman Charles Redman said. The two met twice, in the afternoon and evening.

One of their first tasks was to instruct their arms control negotiators to conduct separate talks to try to resolve outstanding issues.

Following the arms control discussion group's 3½-hour meeting, a senior U.S. official said the two sides tentatively resolved four or five of the nine verification issues the Senate has said must be settled before it will debate ratification of the treaty, which was signed by President Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev on Dec. 8.

The Senate had been due to begin debate on the treaty this week, but postponed it indefinitely after the disputes arose.

The senior U.S. official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, declined to speculate on whether the Senate would pass the treaty based on the progress reached in Geneva. But he said "it is still our expectation we're going to get this resolved" before the Reagan-Gorbachev summit in Moscow on May 29.

Two principal stumbling blocks were among the issues settled, the U.S. official said. One deals with U.S. demands to inspect Soviet missile containers big enough to hold only a stage of a rocket. The other involves how much access U.S. inspectors will have to Soviet missile plants and bases.

In another sign of progress, the two sides agreed to exchange notes on futuristic weapons. The aim is to persuade Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., the chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, and other critics that the ban would apply to intermediate-range weapons that have not been developed yet.

The two sides also discussed prospects for a treaty reducing intercontinental nuclear forces, in a group headed by presidential arms control adviser Paul Nitze and chief Soviet arms control negotiator Alexei Obukhov.

The U.S. official said there were still a number of areas of disagreement between the two sides, both of which have said they do not believe it will be possible to agree on a treaty in time for signing at the summit.

Shultz and Shevardnadze centered their talks Wednesday on scheduling and logistical arrangements for the summit.

Britain's most damaging double agent is dead in Moscow at 76

LONDON (AP) — Upper-crust Englishman Harold "Kim" Philby, who for nearly three decades spied for the Soviets from the heights of British intelligence, died a decorated KGB officer in Moscow. He was 76.

The Foreign Office said it learned from the Soviet Embassy in London that Philby had died Wednesday. The embassy gave no cause of death. Four months ago, Philby said he was suffering from arrhythmia, a heart irregularity.

The most damaging double agent in modern British history, the suave, handsome Philby sent many Western agents to their deaths.

With three now-deceased colleagues he met at Cambridge University in the 1930s — Donald Maclean, Guy Burgess and Anthony Blunt — Philby turned Britain's most precious secrets over to the Kremlin.

By extension, he betrayed the United States, too, since he was privy to top-secret information exchanged by the two allies.

Philby was on his way to becoming head of British intelligence when he came under suspicion in 1951, when Maclean and Burgess — who had been posted at the British Embassy in Washington — fled to Moscow.

Philby was forced to resign from the service the following year, but he continued to freelance for MI6, the British intelligence agency.

By the time he was unmasked as the "Third Man" who tipped off Burgess and Maclean in time for them to escape British punishment, Philby was settling into Moscow as a senior KGB officer.

The Maclean-Burgess-Philby spy scandals damaged the exchange of intelligence information between Britain and the United States for years. But of perhaps even more profound impact in Britain was that the establishment's own could be traitors.

In 1979, Blunt's treachery was exposed publicly. In exchange for information, he had been allowed to escape disgrace, to receive a knighthood and to serve as the queen's art adviser for years.

Philby's death was front-page news in Britain today. The Times and other papers referred to him as "Traitor Philby."

There was no immediate comment from Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's government. But legislator Ted Leadbitter of the socialist opposition Labor Party said Philby's death "brings an end, I hope, to the unhappiest period of betrayal of this century."

Philby told Phillip Knightley of The Times of London in January, in his first and only press interview with a Western reporter, that he had no regrets, except for personal friends he lost.

Asked "Would you do it all again?" Philby replied: "Absolutely."

He said he had found peace, that he was happy in his fourth marriage, to a Russian woman, and felt Moscow to be his home.

Harold Adrian Russell Philby was born on New Year's Day 1912 in India, where his father was a colonial official, and was nicknamed Kim after the boy spy hero of a Rudyard Kipling story.

His father was Harry St. John Bridger Philby, an eccentric explorer of Arabia who converted to Islam and settled in Beirut, the Lebanese capital.

Later Philby wrote that he never felt patriotism toward any country.

At Cambridge, he fell under communism's spell. In those days of depression and early fascism, it was not unusual for idealistic young Englishmen to look to Moscow.

"The Western democracies in the 1930s were too weak and corrupt to fight Nazi Germany," Philby wrote in his autobiography, "My Silent War," published after he defected.

Pothole settlement costs Dallas nearly $1 million

DALLAS (AP) — The Dallas City Council has agreed to pay nearly $1 million to the family of a woman who died in a 1985 car accident caused by a pothole.

The $969,000 settlement with the family of A. Glennie Mayer, approved by a 5-2 vote Wednesday, is believed to be the largest personal-injury settlement in city history.

In a suit filed in a state district court in Rockwall County, Mayer's family had sought $2.4 million from the city of Dallas for failing to fill the pothole, which was about 8 inches deep and 3 feet across.

The Mayer family's suit contended the city had been negligent because it failed to properly maintain the street block where the accident occurred, despite a pothole complaint filed with the Streets and Sanitation Department.

City Attorney Analesie Muncy, who has been with the city for 19 years, said the payment to the family is "the largest personal-injury settlement in my memory and probably the largest in the city's history."

Ms. Muncy said the city's litigation fund has "just a little over a million now" after having $2 million in October. She said the money must last the city until Sept. 30, the end of the fiscal year.

The council vote followed a closed-session debate in which council members disagreed about the size of the award.

"We're talking about nearly a million-dollar case for someone who hit a pothole that was 8 inches deep," said councilman Jerry Bartos, who voted against the settlement.

"I personally don't think the city has a million dollars to be spending without a legal battle to protect the taxpayers' interest."

The settlement was allowed to reach a record level because in 1985 there was no state limit on death claims resulting from faulty street maintenance. The state's 1987 tort reform law, however, placed a $250,000 limit on such settlements.

Under Texas law, a city may be held liable for an accident caused by a pothole only if a complaint has been filed and there was adequate time for city crews to fill it.

Officials familiar with the Mayer case say the city had adequate notice of the pothole because it had been reported more than six hours before the 4:30 p.m. accident. Officials say repair crews went to fill the potholes on Miller Road, which is near Lake Ray Hubbard, but did not see them.

Vic Terry, the attorney for the Mayer family, said in a statement, "We appreciate that the city has recognized its responsibility."

Economists should be looking up

By JOHN CUNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — When you're looking up when other people are looking down you see things they can't possibly see, said the economist, observing that the adage had particular meaning in his profession.

A lot of his colleagues are looking for bad news these days, he said, and so they see a lot of bad omens. They see the falling jobless rate not as healthy but as a signal of inflation and higher interest rates to come.

They observe that the factory utilization rate is rising, but rather than seeing this as good news for depressed areas, they view it as an indicator of stress on the economy, to be followed by inflation.

But there are things to be seen by looking up, too, said the economist.

You find, for instance, that the relatively low, 5.4 percent civilian jobless rate doesn't necessarily mean the labor pool is exhausted and that wages therefore must rise.

There are plenty of people unemployed, close to 6.8 million in fact. And, while some of these are unskilled teen-agers, many of them are adult men eager to work. He observed that the jobless rate today is higher for adult men than it was in May 1979, when the economy was in a similar expansion mode.

Since then, he continued, the situation hasn't been static; it has changed greatly, in part because American industry has become more productive. Labor costs might be higher than in 1979, but production efficiency is even higher.

That is, unit labor costs are lower today. In the manufacturing sector, productivity rose 3.7 percent in 1986 and 3.3 percent in 1987, he said. As a result, unit labor costs actually declined in 1986 and 1987.

Those same figures, he said, suggest that the nation's factories are not running up against a capacity problem, no matter how many economists say so. He cited the opinion of another upward-looking economist.

He read from that economist's report:

"Realistically, it would take at least two years of robust economic growth before the nation's capacity utilization rate of 82.5 percent would exceed 85 percent, at which point some legitimate inflation pressures might begin to be seen."

But the capacity situation isn't static either, the economist said. In fact, he noted, the latest Commerce Department survey indicated spending on plant and equipment should rise 8 percent this year.

We are in a capital spending boom, he said, explaining that it would mean expanded capacity, thus limiting the strain on existing capacity, and greater productivity, which would reduce inflation pressures.

UT, Penn State seek $6 million

AUSTIN (AP) — Construction of a telescope that would be among the largest and most innovative in the world is the goal of a $6 million fund-raising campaign by the University of Texas and Pennsylvania State University.

Officials of the universities say they want to build the telescope at UT's McDonald Observatory atop Mount Locke in the Davis Mountains of Jeff Davis County.

Jim Harris, associate director of corporate and foundation relations at Penn State, said Tuesday that the campaign's late start is a problem.

Harris said Penn State already has raised about $500,000 of its $3 million share for the Spectroscopic Survey Telescope, which was designed by astronomers Daniel Weedman and Larry Ramsey.

In contrast, Texas officials have yet to find any outside money for the telescope, but their goal is somewhat easier. They only have to raise $1.5 million because the university has pledged to donate the other $1.5 million from its resources.

Well, said the listener to the upward-looking economist, you must concede that the Federal Reserve is concerned, that interest rates have been edging higher.

Of course, he said, and then he went into a long analysis of pessimism. People today, he observed, were conditioned for the worst by the 1970s, when the nation was harassed for years by double-digit interest and inflation rates.

But why, he asked, do we assume that any movement in either rate must be for an extended period of time? Sure, he said, interest rates might rise and inflation stir, but that doesn't mean they are long-term phenomena.

He pointed out that higher interest rates are designed to slow the economy. Why, he asked, do we think they won't do the job, that they won't slow the expansion? And if expansion slows, he continued, shouldn't rates then fall?

There is one thing you should remember, he said. You should remember that the economy is always at risk.

Old train depot turned into weekend home

By NICKI B. LOGAN
Plainview Daily Herald

DAUGHTERY (AP) — Trains don't stop at the old Floydada station house any more. In fact, the Santa Fe stationhouse is no longer located in Floydada. Instead, it perches on the rim of a canyon almost 15 miles away; trains passing through the area are a puff of smoke on the horizon.

"I waited four months after I read in the paper that Santa Fe was phasing out small stations in the area beginning in the next year," explains Dr. Richard Morgan, Plainview optometrist. "I reasoned that I still had eight months to bid on one of the stationhouses."

"When I called, I was told that the Hale Center station had been donated to a museum and that all the others were gone — except for the station at Floydada. I said I wanted to bid on it right then and there — over the telephone."

It was probably fortunate that the Floydada station was the one available since it was closest to the site between Floydada and Matador where Morgan planned to move it.

"I called Dewey Henry (Plainview house mover) and he gave me an immediate quote. He already had been contacted for an estimate by someone else interested in the structure."

The logistics of moving the station from Floydada to Morgan's ranch were staggering. The site he selected first proved to be too difficult to reach, so he revised his plans. It now rests on a flat piece of ground at the edge of a canyon, overlooking the historic Burlison Ranch.

"When they set the building down, the neighbors came over to look. I think I can imagine how they felt. They had been out here isolated forever — then suddenly there's this house overlooking their rangeland.

"I think it would be like someone in town building a skyscraper next door to you where they could look into your windows and backyard — out here where they're used to open space for miles, just having a neighbor overlooking your canyon must seem like an invasion of privacy."

Morgan purchased his small ranch nine years ago as a place to get away — a weekend home. Named Arroyo Seco, he explains (tongue in cheek) that his brand is an AS on the left hip, devised so his city-bred wife, Sharon, can tell the cow's head from its rear.

Naturally, she denies his assertion, adding that although she grew up in Illinois in a rural town, she can tell the difference between the cow's head and its tail. She does add that she considers herself a "city girl" and isn't too fond of the outdoor life.

"Television reception out here is poor — especially with the little rabbit ear antenna we have. I read a lot, but I don't really enjoy hanging around the house while Richard is plowing or hunting."

A confessed movie buff, she muses, with one eye on her husband's reaction, that maybe she needs to buy a VCR so she can while away the hours watching movies.

Besides being a place to raise a few head of cattle, Morgan enjoys taking friends to the ranch to hunt. He has photos taken near the stationhouse of deer, including one of a buck with an impressive rack of antlers. Rabbits, turkeys, quail, possums, raccoons and porcupines populate the area, along with rattlesnakes.

The Morgans spotted a cougar last year on top of a neighbor's hay stack. "Its silhouette was visible against the sky," Mrs. Morgan says. "We first thought it was a bobcat, but the tail was too long."

An abandoned apparatus used for mining diatomaceous earth stands alone a few hundred yards from the house, visible evidence that early residents used every resource on the land.

"The neighbors tell me that a man came up here every year and mined the earth, then sold it to garages to sprinkle on their floors to absorb oil. Then he just quit coming. No one seems to

Humor for the health of it

EDITOR'S NOTE — A hearty laugh is good therapy in a lot of ways, says a New York educator who for the past 10 years has been spreading the gospel of humor. He's Joel Goodman, director of the Humor Project at Saratoga, whose motto is, "Jest for the health of it."

By LESLIE ZGANJAR
Associated Press Writer

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N.Y. (AP) — When a storm sent a tree crashing onto a motorists' car in Minneapolis a few years back, the owner grabbed a pen and scribbled a few words on a piece of cardboard.

Standing next to his car, he cheered passing motorists with his sign reading: "Compact Car."

Now that's the way to deal with a disaster, says humorist-educator Joel Goodman, who tells the story often.

Goodman should know. He makes a living out of telling people humor is no laughing matter — that you'll live longer if you loosen up, laugh and enjoy life.

"People who laugh...last," quips the pint-sized, 38-year-old Goodman.

"Jest for the health." Goodman, who speaks with a lot of one-liners, is director of the Humor Project at Saratoga, a non-profit resource and training center in Saratoga Springs. He says his mission is to get people to use humor as a tool for handling stress and as a way to get along better with others.

Don't laugh, it works. So far, he has written seven books on humor and has spoken to more than 80,000 people in the past 10 years throughout the United States, Canada and Europe in lectures and workshops.

He's helped businesses and hospitals integrate humor into their daily routine. He's also received a grant from a Florida hospital corporation to study the medical implications and applications of humor.

Goodman, who has a doctorate in education, also teaches graduate and undergraduate courses on health education at Russell Sage College in Troy.

Goodman says humor is important not only because of its health value, but because of its benefits in the workplace. He believes humor on the job boosts enthusiasm and psychic energy, which he says are steppingstones to greater creativity, alertness and camaraderie.

"Many people who are fired from their jobs get the boot not because they lack technical skills, but because they are unable to get along with others," he says.

Goodman, an irrepressible pun-lover, started his work in humor education about 10 years ago with the opening of the Humor Institute.

He said he first became interested in humor when he was in Houston, where his father underwent cardiovascular surgery in the early 1970s. He said the driver of the shuttle bus from the hotel to the medical center joked with passengers, helping the relatives of critically ill patients cope with their anxieties and fears.

"I got to thinking about how humor can help people in many walks of life by ridding them of anxiety or helping them see the funny side of some real-life situations," he said during a recent interview in his office, a clutter of cartoons, posters, gags and joke books in a red brick church he converted to office space.

Goodman also speaks to professionals from corporations such as IBM and Niagara Mohawk Power Corp., medical groups and educators about how humor can improve productivity, improve teaching efforts and help patients get well.

Since he began directing his energies to comic relief, Goodman has developed programs for major corporations that look at how managers and executives can use humor to build morale.

He's also helped a number of hospitals set up humor rooms for patients, equipped with games, records, books and movies.

Scientific research supports the theory that laughter is important for good health.

County Red Cross chapter meets to honor volunteers

Gray County chapter of the American Red Cross honored its volunteers and elected officers to its board of directors at the annual breakfast meeting Monday in the First United Methodist Church fellowship hall.

"Red Cross is volunteerism," said Chapter Chairman Steve Vaughn in his opening speech. "And it's not just for emergencies. Red Cross is far more. Red Cross gives a personal touch."

Vaughn spoke of the volunteers' efforts at Coronado Hospital and the local nursing homes. "Their days are brightened by their contact from that volunteer," he said.

Donna Reynolds, left, presents a pin to Reta Richards for being outstanding volunteer of the Gray County chapter of the Red Cross.

He added that many volunteers work quietly, helping in the office, training people in cardiopulmonary resuscitation, basic first aid and the Heimlich Maneuver.

"Those people never know how many lives they've saved," he said. "Without these volunteers we have no program."

In the coming year, Vaughn said the local Red Cross is to emphasize youth participation, especially at the high school level.

Marjie Holland, nursing chairman, presented Jeanette Gikas with a pin designating her as an official Red Cross nurse.

Ted Gikas, chairman of the disaster committee, presented citations to the following businesses and individuals for their help following the Hoechst-Celanese explosion: Domino's Pizza, Sirloin Stockade, Food Emporium, Allsup's, McDonald's, Russell Sikes, Mary and Butch Bristen. John Gikas, representing Coney Island Cafe, was given a citation by Vaughn.

Ten-year pins were awarded to Janice Carter, chairman of volunteers; Eva Cash, Edna Chisum and Neva Mackie. Rita Richards was recognized as an outstanding volunteer for her work with the Red Cross.

Joyce Roberts, local Red Cross director, gave VIP pins to local teachers whose classes provided holiday favors for nursing home residents and Meals on Wheels clients. Those receiving pins were Maxine Sanders, Lefors Elementary; Sue Burrell, Horace Mann; Marva Delk, Baker; and Ann Hurt, Austin Elementary.

Certificates of appreciation were given to retiring volunteers J.D. Ray, John Horst and Lee Waters.

Board of directors officers for the coming year are Vaughn, chairman; James Fruge, vice chairman; Marion Fugate, secretary; and Betty Casey Frye, treasurer. New members elected to the board include Jim Winegeart, Gene Thompson, Art Hill and Dee Dee Laramore.

Gray County's Red Cross chapter received additional funding for 1988 from Pampa United Way, building income and a federal grant. After the June 14, 1987 tornado, the local Red Cross assisted 30 people — 11 families. Three families whose homes were burned were helped by the chapter, and more than $7,000 was spent for personal assistance. The Red Cross also distributed food for emergency personnel following the Celanese explosion.

In addition to its disaster services, Red Cross handled many service to military cases — 64 servicemen, 22 veterans and 262 civilian cases.

In 1987, Red Cross sponsored 24 swimming classes, teaching a total of 472 students. Six students participated in the water safety instructor's course, and 30 certificates were awarded following three advanced lifesaving classes.

Twenty multi-media first aid classes were given in 1987, with 157 participants receiving certificates. In addition, 17 cardiopulmonary resuscitation courses were taught, with 145 certificates issued.

Red Cross' loan closet offers hospital beds, wheelchairs, crutches and other medical items for those in need. More than 150 items are on loan at present.

Red Cross' nursing committee also sponsors blood pressure and immunization assistance to the community.

Seven elementary schools are involved in the Red Cross' holiday projects which give treats and favors to Meals on Wheels, Coronado and Pampa nursing homes and the Veterans Hospital at Christmas.

Special music for the annual event was provided by Red Cross volunteer Ruby Gunn and Becky Pletcher.

Dee Babcock, left, a university sorority alumna, discusses the upcoming Panhellenic party with college students Summer Hudson of Oklahoma University and Kathleen Dunigan of Texas Christian University, both active sorority members.

Panhellenic party to be Sunday

Pampa Panhellenic will hold an informal party at 3 p.m. Sunday, May 15 at 2384 Chestnut for all high school senior girls and their mothers. Pampa Panhellenic is the alumnae group for college sororities.

Any senior girl who has questions or possible interest in college sororities is welcome to attend. Those in attendance will have the opportunity to submit their names to the Panhellenic file, which is necessary for participation in college sorority rush. Submitting one's name to the file is not a commitment to attend rush, but it makes it possible to later enroll in rush, explained Jane McDaniel, hostess for the tea.

Active college sorority members and sorority alumnae will be on hand to help answer questions.

For more information, call McDaniel at 669-7245.

Aunt's ashes appear in mail

DEAR ABBY: In a letter to you, a reader protested the callous manner in which he learned of the death of a friend in a nursing home. Wait until you hear what happened to me: My cousins in Texas asked me if I would handle the funeral arrangements for their mother (my aunt) who had died while visiting them. She was to be cremated there, and her remains sent to me (in California) to be taken to a nearby cemetery and placed in the crypt she had previously purchased.

Dear Abby
Abigail Van Buren

Of course, I agreed, assuming the remains would arrive by registered mail and that I would be notified either by my cousins or the crematory as to the date of arrival.

Imagine my horror when I opened my curbside mailbox one morning to find a box with these words stamped on the outside: CREMATED REMAINS OF MRS. — (my aunt's name).

That was 10 years ago, and I still get furious when I think of it. Talk about unfeeling and callous! I can't believe it's common practice to send cremated remains through the regular mails. Is it?

M.L.K., MONROVIA, CALIF.

DEAR M.L.K.: I inquired of three prominent mortuaries in Los Angeles and was advised by all three that because they want proof of receipt, cremated remains are always sent by registered mail, return receipt requested. Also, because they choose not to "surprise" the recipients, the contents are clearly marked on the outside of the box, and the recipients are notified in advance that it is on its way.

DEAR ABBY: With all the publicity you gave pantyhose, I have a true story for you.

When Mount St. Helens erupted in May of 1980, blowing the top 2,500 feet miles into the air, the volcanic ash was so heavy that in Spokane at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, it looked like midnight! In Yakima, Wash., breathing was difficult.

The automobiles sucked the ash into their air filters, and the abrasion ruined the engines. One family was stranded when their air filter became plugged. The husband removed the plugged filter, borrowed his wife's pantyhose, wrapped them around as a filter, and continued their trip in safety. They were stopped by a highway patrolman near Moses Lake, Wash., where there was up to 7 inches of the stuff on the ground. (You can still see it.) The patrolman asked how they could keep going. They explained that they had shaken the ashes from the pantyhose each time the engine quit.

The Highway Patrol then purchased pantyhose for their cars and continued to help stranded motorists in that area. Pantyhose saved many engines until proper filters could be installed.

KEN THELANDER, SEATTLE

DEAR KEN: Thank you for sharing your unusual story.

Celtics hold off Hawks

NBA playoffs

By HOWARD ULMAN
AP Sports Writer

BOSTON—The two superstars took turns having super quarters. Larry Bird's came early. Dominique Wilkins' came too late.

Bird hit his first 10 shots and scored a Boston playoff record 24 points in the first period. Wilkins had 15 points in the fourth period when Atlanta sliced a 17-point deficit to seven.

But with Bird's teammates scoring Boston's last 13 points, the Celtics held off the Hawks 110-101 in Wednesday night's opener of their NBA Eastern Conference semifinal series.

Game 2 of the best-of-seven matchup is scheduled for Friday night at Boston Garden, where Atlanta has lost 13 consecutive games.

Bird, who led all scorers with 38 points, was rolling as soon as the game began and the Hawks were sluggish. He broke Dave Cowens' 14-year-old team record of 20 points in one playoff quarter and outscored the Hawks in the first period, which ended with the score 38-23.

"I play basketball all the time and I sure haven't seen many quarters like that," Atlanta guard Glenn Rivers said. "But then you don't want to. Bird is just a phenomenal player, better than great."

"I was just moving and digging lead of the game, 80-61 with 1:02 left in the third quarter, the Hawks rallied again.

A 3-point shot by Bird had made the score 95-78 with 7:59 to play in the game. Wilkins' nine points then led a 21-11 Atlanta run that made the score 106-99 with 53 seconds to go.

Although the Hawks couldn't close the gap further, they were pleased with the way they finished after the way they started.

"We didn't give up," said Wilkins, who led the Hawks with 25 points despite giving them little help through the first three quarters. "That's a good sign."

"I was too tense and too tight," he added. "Usually we are loose and laughing. Tonight we were tight. We're at our best when we are loose."

Wilkins made only three of 11 shots in the first half and had just 10 points in the first three quarters. Rivers had 16 and Kevin Willis 13 for the Hawks.

For Boston, forward Kevin McHale had 25 points and center Robert Parish added 22 points and 14 rebounds as the Celtics worked to get the ball inside after Bird hurt the Hawks from outside in the first half.

"Larry really stretched their defense out and it loosened things up inside," McHale said.

Bird's last points came with 5:40 left on a 12-foot turnaround shot which gave the Celtics a 97-83 lead. Of their final 13 points, McHale had five, Parish four and Dennis Johnson and Danny Ainge two each.

"The Celtics play great team basketball," Rivers said. "If you use the word team, there's no one better than the Celtics."

In the other Eastern series, Chicago is at Detroit tonight, with the Pistons ahead 1-0. Also tonight, Dallas, trailing 1-0, is at Denver in the West.

On Friday night, the defending champion Los Angeles Lakers are at Utah, with the series tied 1-1.

Bulls-Pistons

While 29 points is a good night's work for almost any NBA player, it wasn't enough for Michael Jordan. He averaged 45 per game in the opening round.

For the Bulls to win against anybody, Jordan must be dominant. But none of the Bulls could do much in the first game at the Silverdome, a 93-82 defeat.

"Physically, I was tired," Jordan said. "But it's nothing to get panicky about. They played their game plan perfectly, which was to keep all eyes on me and control me."

Mavericks-Nuggets

Dallas needs to clamp down on the hot-shooting Nuggets, who made 58 percent of their shots from the field in the 126-115 opening victory.

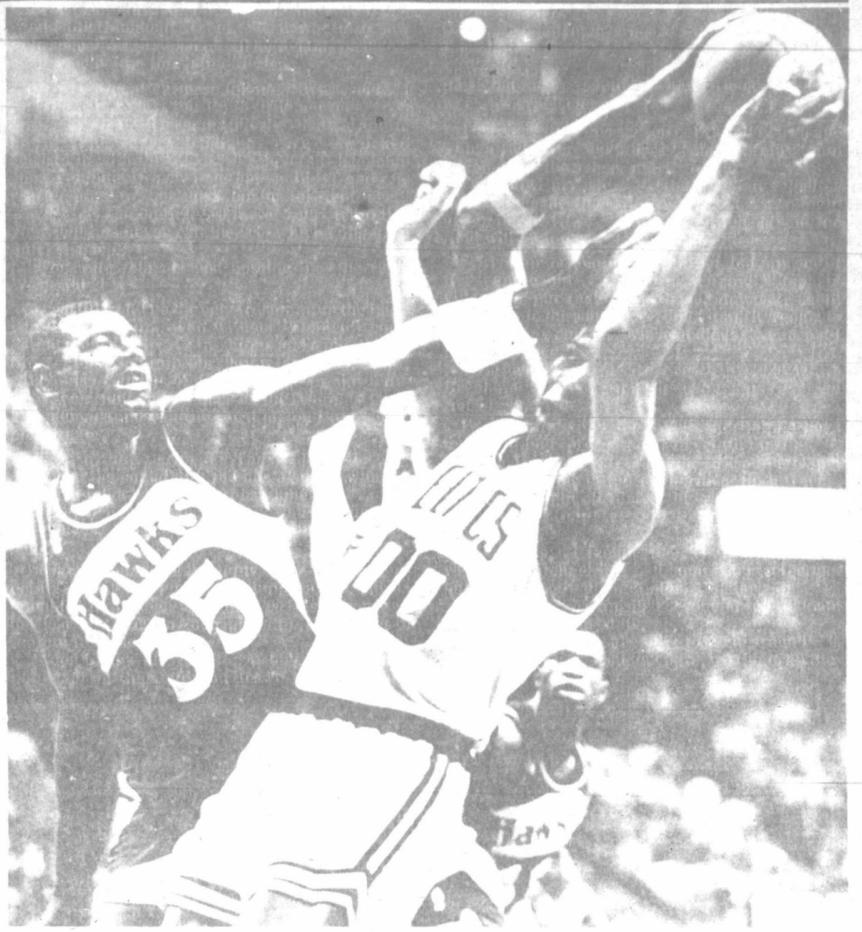

"Denver puts a premium on hard play, and it's important that you respond to it," Dallas coach John MacLeod said. "We didn't do that in the first game. Denver played at a much higher level than we did."

Both MacLeod and Nuggets coach Doug Moe felt the playoff series would resemble the Midwest Division race between the teams during the season—right down to the wire.

Lakers-Jazz

Utah surprised the Lakers at the Forum in Inglewood, Calif., to tie the series 1-1. Can the Jazz pull off any more shockers now that they have the home advantage?

"I'm not guaranteeing anything, but I do guarantee the Salt Palace will be rocking," Karl Malone said. "If we play like this game next time, we've got a good chance. I said after the first game this series was going to be a war."

Parish (00) bends over backwards to help the Celtics win.

The Pampa High track team prepares to leave Thursday morning for the Class 4A state meet in Austin. Both boys and girls tracksters compete Friday at Memorial Stadium.

Pampa High tracksters headed for state meet

By L.D. STRATE
Sports Editor

Pampa's young, but talented girls' track team didn't become any older when freshman Christa West was added to the 800-meter relay team, which is headed for the state meet Friday in Austin.

West is taking the place of another freshman, Cassandra Hunnicutt, who suffered a pulled leg muscle the day before the Lady Harvesters won regionals earlier this month at Brownwood.

Pampa coach Gary Cornelsen conducted a race between the other sprinters to decide which one would fill Hunnicutt's spot. West, who also saw high school varsity basketball action this past season, reached the finish line first.

"It was a neat surprise for me," West said. "I feel like I'm ready, but I'm a little nervous."

"Cassandra will be going but she won't be able to run," said Gary Cornelsen. "We've worked Christa in with the other 800 relayers (Lisa Johnson, Yolanda Brown and Tanya Lidy) and she started off slow, but she's looking all right now."

West has run on the 1600-meter relay team this year, but has never ran the 800, which calls for a quicker pace.

"The mile relay is just nothing like the 800," West added.

West still won't be the only freshman on the Lady Harvesters' team, even without Hunnicutt competing. Tonya Osby is a freshman and a member of the regional champion 400-meter relay team, which also consists of Johnson, Brown and Lidy. Osby took Hunnicutt's place on the 800-relay team at regionals and ran the third leg on the second-place team.

All-everything performer Tanya Lidy is the only senior on the squad and she has a shot at winning five gold medals, a feat almost unheard of.

"It would be tough for her to do, but it would be a great way to finish out her senior year," Cornelsen said.

Besides the two relay teams, Lidy will be competing in the triple jump, long jump and 200. Lidy is unbeaten in the long jump and 200 this season and has lost only twice in the triple jump, both times to teammate Yolanda Brown.

"I don't know of two better people to have competing for me than Lidy and Brown. Our other state qualifiers have key roles, but these two are going to have to perform well for us to have a chance," Cornelsen said.

Lidy has won state the past two years in the 200 and is headed for the University of Nebraska on a track scholarship.

In addition to the two relay teams, Brown, a junior, is entered in the 100-meter dash, an event she's been unbeaten in this season.

"Brown is a good athlete. She's performed well all year long for us," Cornelsen added.

Cornelsen has been impressed with his 400-meter relayers the past few days and feels the team is primed to set a record, either at the state or school level.

"We may have to break the record to win the meet, but they're capable. They've looked good all week," Cornelsen said.

Their best time this season is 47.9 and Brown and Tanya Lidy were members of the '86 relay team which holds the school mark of 47.5.

The Lady Harvesters and the Brenham Cubettes have made the Class 4A state meet a two-team affair the last two years, but Cornelsen said the field will be more wide-open in '88.

"Brenham is going to be a threat, but any one of five teams could win it," Cornelsen said. "Stephenville out of our region, Carthage, Mount Pleasant and us are in the running. 'I don't think it's going to take as many points to win as it did last year, but I may be wrong."

Pampa won the state crown in 1986 while Brenham was runnerup. The two teams reversed roles in '87.

For the first time since 1984, the Pampa boys team will be represented at the state meet.

Willie Jacobs is entered in the 1600 and Michael Shklar competes in the 110 hurdles. Both tracksters have fought off illness this week and appear ready to participate, said Pampa coach Mike Shklar.

"Willie wasn't feeling too good earlier in the week and Michael has had some sinus infection, but they're both all right now," Shklar said.

Both Harvesters finished second at the regional meet to qualify for state.

The 110-hurdles is scheduled to begin around 7:45 p.m. and the 1600 around 9 p.m. at Memorial Stadium.

Mets edge Astros

HOUSTON (AP)—In a game billed as one of the top pitching matchups of the young National League season, it only figures that the relief pitchers will determine the outcome as the New York Mets beat the Houston Astros in 10 innings by a final score of 9-8.

Right-handers Dwight Gooden of the Mets and Mike Scott of the Astros started the game and neither figured in the final outcome Wednesday.

"When teams have their top pitchers pitching and everyone expecting a pitching duel, the rest of the players really get up for it," Gooden said.

"A lot of times you get publicity about a game and it just doesn't turn out the way you think," said Mets manager Davey Johnson.

Both starters went six innings and gave up a combined total of 12 runs, 14 hits and only 10 strikeouts with the Astros holding a 7-5 lead.

Glenn Davis drove in three of the seven runs with an infield ground ball and his eighth home run of the year and Bill Doran stole home to offset a two-run home run by Darryl Strawberry and a run scoring double by Len Dykstra.

"It surprised a lot of people that it would be 7-5 after six innings," said Astros catcher Alan Ashby.

After the Astros took an 8-5 lead in the eighth inning, the Mets exploded for three runs in the ninth off Astros relief ace and loser Dave Smith, 1-2.

A bases loaded double by Tim Lincecum, who had entered the game in the seventh inning, tied the score and a single by Kevin Reynolds drove in the game winner in the tenth inning off Smith.

"I hit a good pitch," Tuelfel said.

"I feel fortunate to come away with a win with a guy like him (Smith) on the mound," said Mets first baseman Keith Hernandez.

Agassi advances

ROME (AP) — With his showmanship and scrappy play, Andre Agassi has captured the hearts of Italian fans.

And it only took two matches. "Today, I felt like I was Italian," said the 18-year-old Las Vegas, Nev., native. "Yesterday, they wanted Pistolesi (his first round Italian opponent), but today, the roles changed." For Agassi, the 12th seed, that support came just in time as he had to rally from one set down to beat Jan Gunnarsson of Sweden, 3-6, 7-6, (7-5), 6-3 in the second round of Italian men's tennis championship at the Foro Italico.

"It (the crowd) was a big part of my comeback," said Agassi, who broke Gunnarsson's serve twice, when he was down 5-4 and 6-5, to avoid defeat in the second set.

After the match, in a gesture of gratitude, he blew two kisses in the direction of the crowd. To accommodate the growing following of the young American player, organizers have scheduled Agassi to play at center court for the first time in this tournament on Thursday night.

Earlier matches at center court featured seeded players Yannick Noah of France, Mats Wilander of Sweden, Ivan Lendl of Czechoslovakia, and Andres Gomez of Ecuador.

Police rock 'n' roll band provides fun with a message

EDITOR'S NOTE—A group of Columbus, Ohio, police patrolmen formed a rock 'n' roll band about a year ago as "a fun way to get away from the stress of street duty." When the police chief heard them play, he got the idea of using the band to help combat drug abuse. Since then, "Hot Pursuit" has been spending a lot of time on the road across the Northeast.

By JOE B. MCKNIGHT
Associated Press Writer

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — They're just four street cops and a real estate agent until they take their guitars, keyboard and drums before a high school audience. Then they become "Hot Pursuit," a rock 'n' roll band with a message: "Stay away from drugs."

In just over a year they've taken that message to high school auditoriums and gymnasiums from here to New Jersey. They've cut a record album, appeared on national television, performed at a White House anti-drug conference, and have been invited to China.

The band leans heavily on music from the early days of rock 'n' roll. The 1955 hit "Jail House Rock" is their theme song and they quickly follow with such numbers as "Mony Mony" from 1968, "Twist and Shout," and "Wipe Out."

The five musicians get their kicks watching their young audiences.

"They dance in the aisles and they come on stage to sing with us," says Columbus patrolman Keith Ankrom, the drummer.

Lt. Karl Tresselt, who doubles as promoter and manager of the band, says, "When you hear the enthusiasm of the kids and how they get into the music, it's all worthwhile."

Patrolman Richard Gillilan, bass guitarist and vocalist, says, "One thing we want to do is show them that cops are people who have a job to do and then they go home to their families and bowling leagues like other people."

At first it was just a pickup band organized by Columbus patrolmen. Then about a year ago one dropped out and they brought in Michael Finks, a real estate agent with a radio-TV background who works the keyboard and is a backup vocalist.

Other members of the band are vocalist Randy Moon and lead guitarist Michael Wilson. Pat Barr is the sound engineer.

"We started as a weekend fun way to get away from the stress of street duty," Tresselt says. "We just played private parties at first."

Then Police Chief Dwight Joseph happened to hear the band play one night.

"He said he wanted to see all of us in his office the first thing Monday and we thought we were in trouble," Tresselt says. "Then he told us the department could use us to go into schools with the anti-drug message."

From that, the band's reputation has grown. It played at a regional drug conference in Cincinnati last fall and then got an invitation to perform at the White House Conference for a Drug-Free America in February. En route home they played at three schools in Scotch Plains, N.J., a suburb of Newark. They plan a four-county swing to schools in Michigan's Upper Peninsula in May and have been invited back to New Jersey.

They also have invitations to play at a July 4 party for the U. S. Embassy in Beijing and at a national Boy Scout conference in Boston on July 16.

"We've got the hotel reservations and are trying to get someone to underwrite the plane tickets," Tresselt says.

Gillilan says a Hollywood entertainment group has approached them about making a two-hour pilot movie for television.

Let him come home

Supporters of deposed president Ferdinand Marcos adjust posters of their leader during their hunger strike, which began Tuesday, at a city park in Manila in an effort to get the government to allow Marcos to return home to attend his mother's funeral. President Corazon Aquino is considering allowing only Marcos' children to come home.

Austin tracks down $13 million in fines

AUSTIN (AP) — Hoping to track down about $13 million in unpaid fines, Austin's city government has fielded city marshals for the first time in 64 years.

In the past four years, about 156,000 outstanding Class C misdemeanor warrants — most for traffic-related offenses — have accumulated, said Lt. Dell Shaw of the Austin police warrant division.

Shaw said that if every fine were paid, the city would collect $13 million. "We have so many outstanding warrants on our files. We hope this program will reduce that number," he said.

In 1924, city marshals in Austin were responsible for peace-keeping duties in the city, officials said. Their jobs later were assumed by the police department.

The three new marshals, who are paid by the city's legal department, will concentrate solely on serving the warrants. "They are commissioned police officers, but they will not be doing any patrol work," Shaw said.

Currently the marshals are assisted by a seven-member police warrants task force, which eventually will disband after more marshals are commissioned, Shaw said. By October, there should be 16 city marshals, he said.

Marshal Doug Bell said their primary goal is to get people to pay their fines voluntarily.

"We'll call them up and give them a chance to pay their fines," Bell said. "If you don't pay up, we'll come and get you."

Bell said people will be given up to 72 hours, depending on circumstances, to pay.

"Most of the people are pretty understanding when we come for them. They usually say, 'I've known about them (the tickets), I just haven't paid.'"
