Senate moves closer to arms treaty vote; Reagan awaits word

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate adopted strong language governing future interpretations of the U.S.-Soviet medium-range nuclear missile treaty as it headed toward likely final approval of the pact today.

"We are within striking distance," Senate Republican leader Bob Dole of Kansas said, as the chamber adjourned late Thursday. The day ended in a testy partisan exchange and a threat from Democratic leader Robert Byrd of West Virginia to let the treaty languish if Republicans continued to seek what he saw as debilitating amendments. Approval of the treaty was considered certain because it requires a two-thirds vote of the Senate, or 67 votes, and as many as 90 senators have expressed support for it. But the possibility of delay remained alive.

Byrd warned GOP senators that they risked embarrassing their own president by failing to deliver the approved treaty in time for the Sunday start of President Reagan's summit meeting in Moscow with Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev.

Dole

Byrd

"This is no empty threat," Byrd admonished senators. "If we're going to continue to have Mickey Mouse amendments like this, the president is not going to have his treaty before he leaves the summit."

White House chief of staff Howard Baker was standing by to carry the ratification papers to Reagan, who was resting in Helsinki, Finland, en route to Moscow.

expressed by administration officials during congressional hearings.

Any effort to change that interpretation would have to be approved again by the Senate before becoming valid, said the amendment, which passed on a vote of 72-27.

The provision grew out of a dispute with the Reagan administration over White House efforts to redefine the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile treaty with the Soviets to allow greater latitude for testing of Reagan's Star Wars missile defense program.

But a few hours after the vote on the Byrd amendment, Sen. Pete Wilson, R-Calif., came close to undermining the provision by proposing a change stipulating that the United States could not be bound by any interpretation of the treaty "that is not equally binding on the Soviet Union."

Wilson's proposal was killed, 53-45, and an angry Byrd sent the Senate home for the night. The vote was virtually a party-line division.

Reagan stresses human rights

HELSINKI, Finland (AP) — President Reagan, emerging from pre-summit isolation, today appealed to Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev to enter the Western "House of Democracy" by embracing the values enshrined in the 1975 Helsinki agreement.

Sounding the human rights theme he will stress in his talks in Moscow, Reagan praised Gorbachev's "glasnost" and the openness that has flourished in his three years at the Kremlin helm.

But while dissidents are released from labor camps and books and movies criticizing the communist system gain currency, the president said, "Soviet practice does not — or does not yet — measure up to Soviet commitment."

In the 1975 accord with 34 other nations, the Soviets pledged to provide more liberty for their people and those in Eastern Europe. And yet, 13 years later, Reagan said, the cases of divided families and blocked marriages remain on the East-West agenda, while Russians trying to emigrate are subjected to artificial quotas and arbitrary rulings.

"And what are we to think of the continued suppression of those who wish to practice their religious beliefs?" the president asked.

Reagan spoke in a prepared speech to a Finnish audience in Finlandia Hall, where the Helsinki Final Agreement was signed in 1975.

He said he welcomed every sign that the Soviets and their allies are ready to adopt Western values.

"The House of Democracy is a House whose doors are open to all," Reagan said.

As he spoke, Jewish groups gathered in the Finnish capital to mount public pressure on Moscow in behalf of Soviet Jews waiting for exit permits and those seeking wider latitude to teach and practice their religion.

A Friday evening Sabbath service was planned outside a Lutheran church in an ecumenical display of unity.

In other summit-related developments:

● A top Soviet arms control official in Moscow called on the United States to speed up negotiations on a treaty to cut long-range nuclear arsenals by making good on promises of compromise.

Viktor Karpov, head of the Soviet Foreign Ministry's arms control department and a former chief negotiator at Geneva arms talks, told the Tass news agency the United States had agreed to compromise on several key issues, but then backed off.

"As soon as an issue reaches the American delegation in Geneva, it gets stuck there," he complained.

● And an aide to Soviet Communist Party General Secretary Gorbachev charged that the United States is violating a peace accord by continuing to ship arms to Afghanistan's anti-communist Mujahedeen guerrillas.

"They are arming, quite openly, those who want to go on in their civil war," said Yevgeny Primakov, who is head of the Institute for the World Economy and has acted as a key adviser to Gorbachev on Afghanistan.

Before Reagan spoke, U.S.

Finnish President Mauno Koivisto presents bouquet to Mrs. Reagan upon her arrival at the palace.

Jewish activists for Soviet Jews urged the president to remind the Soviets that human rights were indirectly linked to progress in arms control.

Morris B. Abram, chairman of the National Council for Soviet Jewry, said Jewish emigration is a "test of whether arms reductions can succeed."

Any agreement "depends on trust and credibility," he told a news conference. "No one asks for direct linkage."

Abram called the improvement in Jewish emigration figures "insignificant compared with those who wish to leave ...

It's smoke and mirrors as far as the right to leave is concerned."

The council, an umbrella organization of U.S. Jewish groups active for Soviet Jewry, brought a 50-member delegation to Helsinki to draw attention to the issue.

The 1975 agreement signed by the United States, Canada and 33 European nations including the Soviet Union initially was viewed skeptically by American political conservatives because it implicitly accepts East European boundaries set after World War II in Moscow's favor.

Post office site sought

WHITE DEER — U.S. Postal Service is seeking a suitable site to build and lease a new main post office building in White Deer, announced Postmaster Mary Harlan.

The preferred area for the site is north by either side of Second Avenue (U.S. 60), south by either side of Fifth Avenue, east by either side of Paul Street and west by either side of Doucette Street.

All utilities and access to a two-lane paved public street must be available.

Minimum site size needed is 21,875 square feet of land, or a 125-foot by 175-foot lot. Property owners are asked to submit their site offerings no later than June 2 to John Logan, Real Estate Specialist, Facilities Service Office, U.S. Postal Service, P.O. Box 667180, Dallas, 75266-7180.

After a suitable site has been located, the Postal Service will call for construction bids for a building to be built with private funds and leased to the Postal Service for a long-term period.

The proposed post office building will have approximately 2,320 square feet of interior floor space.

House passes $1.1 trillion 1989 budget

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congress is moving with unusual speed toward final approval of a $1.1 trillion federal budget for the 1989 fiscal year, thanks to a little bipartisan cooperation and a lot of creative arithmetic.

The House approved the spending plan by a 201-181 vote on Thursday shortly after House-Senate negotiators reached agreement on a compromise document after six weeks of haggling.

The Senate is expected to give quick approval to the measure after the chamber returns early next month from its Memorial Day recess.

The budget meets the spending ceilings for domestic, defense and international affairs programs set at last fall's budget summit by President Reagan and congressional leaders.

"This, I believe, is a balanced approach," said House Budget Committee Chairman William H. Gray III, D-Pa.

The numbers used in the document were shoehorned into the budget summit and Gramm-Rudman limits by lawmakers intent on avoiding fights over spending and taxes in an election year.

The legislators used relatively rosy economic assumptions produced by the White House, rather than more pessimistic projections calculated by the Congressional Budget Office. As the economy worsens, government spending grows and its revenue shrinks, producing more red ink.

In addition, when their numbers threatened to spill over the budget summit's constraints, the lawmakers fiddled slightly with the definitions of the spending categories they used, allowing them to claim they had abided by their pact with the White House.

Even with that craftiness, the budget might still surpass the $146 billion limit set by Gramm-Rudman.

The law requires a fresh look at the spending plan's projected deficit in August, using updated readings of the economy's performance.

Rep. Delbert Latta, R-Ohio, said James Miller III, director of the White House's Office of Management and Budget, had told him Thursday that "it would be a miracle" if the automatic spending cuts are avoided.

Despite that warning, 26 Republicans joined 175 Democrats in voting for the measure.

Final congressional approval early next month would be unusually quick. The legislators, however, already have upheld their annual tradition of missing the April 15 deadline set in law for completing the budget.

The measure contains $299.5 billion in new defense spending, $18.1 billion for international affairs and $148 billion for domestic programs for 1989.

The Pentagon's $8.1 billion increase over spending this year is below the amount needed to keep pace with inflation.

BUDGET AT A GLANCE

WASHINGTON (AP) — Here are highlights from the federal budget for the 1989 fiscal year that the House approved Thursday by a 201-181 vote:

- Overall spending: The government would get $1,232 trillion in budget authority, which is the right to commit itself to that amount of new spending programs. Of that, $1,099 trillion is for outlays, the amount of money the government actually would spend next year.
- Revenues: $964 billion, including $14 billion in new taxes that were enacted last December.
- Deficit: The budget would create $135 billion in red ink. Under the Gramm-Rudman balanced budget law, the maximum deficit allowable for fiscal 1989 is $146 billion. Anything over that would trigger automatic spending cuts in defense and many domestic programs.

- Interest payments on the national debt: The government will spend $152 billion this year paying interest on the $2.5 trillion it currently owes.
- Defense: $299.5 billion.
- International affairs: $18.1 billion.
- Science and space: $13 billion.
- Environment: $15.8 billion.
- Agriculture: $25.5 billion.
- Transportation: $28.6 billion.
- Education and job programs: $37.2 billion.
- Health: $49.8 billion.
- Medicare: $103.7 billion.
- Social Security: $278.1 billion.
- Veterans: $28.8 billion.
- Justice: $8.9 billion.

Soviet media downplays Raisa

By KAREN GILMOUR
Associated Press Writer

MOSCOW (AP)— Raisa Maximovna Gorbachev, who charms the Western press on her trips abroad, is given far less attention on her own turf by a Soviet media that plays down the high profile of its first lady.
In Yugoslavia earlier this year, when American reporters wanted to talk with her, she sought out a Yugoslavian journalist and told him to ask a question before she would respond to others.
Like Gorbachev himself, the Soviet first lady has become somewhat controversial.
"The Soviet people do not believe that wives should influence a leader politically," said a 34-year-old teacher. "They are not used to it. And they ask, 'why should she influence affairs of our country?'"
Mrs. Gorbachev appears to serve as an unofficial adviser to her husband in a manner similar to former first lady Rosalynn Carter. But the extent to which she discusses policy with her husband is unknown among the Soviet people.
When Soviet television broadcast Gorbachev's interview with NBC anchorman Tom Brokaw in early December, it censored the Soviet leader's comment that he discusses "everything," including Soviet affairs at the highest level, with his wife.
The reference to Mrs. Gorbachev's role as unofficial adviser to her husband was the only portion of the interview not broadcast to viewers, indicating just how sensitive her high profile has become.
Foreign dignitaries who have met the 56-year-old Mrs. Gorbachev describe her as well-informed on international and domestic affairs. But her knowledge of political affairs is not flawless, as revealed during her Washington visit in early December for the superpower summit.

When talking with a group of Armenians who had emigrated to America, Mrs. Gorbachev told them the Soviet Union has always had a good relationship with Armenia. Armenia is one of 15 Soviet republics and, therefore, its people are Soviet citizens.
Mrs. Gorbachev is frequently seen at her husband's side when he travels around the Soviet Union, and she has accompanied him on all of his trips abroad.
Mrs. Gorbachev has been active in promoting an exchange of fashion and design ideas with Western firms and holds an official position as a member of the Soviet Cultural Fund.
Her wardrobe is smart and varied and has been supplemented by gifts from Paris couturiers during the couple's official visit to France in 1985. She is seldom seen in the same outfit twice when the average Soviet woman usually has no more than three or four changes of clothes to wear to work.
Last year on a visit to Prague, she was shown leaving Moscow wearing a fur hat and coat. But Soviet television also ran pictures of the Gorbachevs' arrival, revealing that Mrs. Gorbachev had changed in flight into a cloche cap and wool coat.
Raisa Maximovna Titorenko was born on Jan. 5, 1932. She and Gorbachev met at the boarding house where both lived as students at Moscow State University. She studied sociology, while he studied law. They moved to Gorbachev's home region of Stavropol in southern Russia when he graduated in 1955.
Mrs. Gorbachev took a job as lecturer at her alma mater when her husband, by then a rising party official, returned to Moscow. She gave up her job when Gorbachev became Communist Party chief.

Retrial begins for death row veteran convicted in murder

BAY CITY (AP) — A 36-year-old man who has spent one-third of his life on death row is sitting once again in the defendant's chair, having won a retrial in the shooting death of a Texas state trooper.

Last year, an appeals court overturned Billy George Hughes' conviction in the 1976 slaying of a Texas state trooper. The retrial began Thursday.
"Evidence will prove Billy George Hughes did intentionally and knowingly cause the death of Mark Frederick," prosecutor David Weeks said in his opening statement as Hughes' second capital murder trial began.
Hughes, who has spent one-third of his life behind bars for the trooper's slaying, won the retrial in 1987 when the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals ruled a potential juror improperly was excluded from his 1976 trial.
That jury, acting in response to a temporary insanity defense, quickly sent the former horsehoer from Montgomery, Ala., to the Texas Death Row, where he ranks as the 13th longest-serving inmate among the nearly 270 awaiting lethal injection.

Frederick, 25, of Bellville, was killed April 4, 1976 along Interstate 10 in Sealy — west of Houston — as he walked toward Hughes to question him about a stolen credit card used at a motel in nearby Brookshire.
Frederick's partner witnessed the shooting and said he fired six shots at Hughes' vehicle as it sped away. Hughes, labeled by the prosecutor at his first trial as a "baby-faced killer," was captured two days later hiding in a field near Sealy after pointing a gun at a police helicopter which spotted him from the air.
He has insisted he did not shoot the officer, contending the shots were fired at him as he was reaching into his car's glove compartment to get the vehicle registration.
Frederick's partner, Jack Reichert, 41, tearfully testified Thursday how they pulled over the car allegedly driven by Hughes and how Frederick was shot as he approached the driver's side of the car.
"Mark walked to the driver's door and immediately grunted," Reichert, who then had been on the job less than a month, said.

Reichert said he heard another shot from inside the car and he fell to his knees.
"I had visions of the guy shooting out the back at me," he said.
Reichert said he returned six shots, shooting out the back window of the fleeing car and then shooting at the gas tank to try to blow up the vehicle.
"Everything was in real slow motion to me," he said.

Reichert said he found his partner curled up in a fetal position on the pavement, bleeding from a shoulder wound and without a pulse. Frederick was holding his service revolver.
"He never moved," Reichert, now a Department of Public Safety detective, said. "The only thing he said — he grunted. I'm sure he saw a gun."
Hughes, wearing a blue blazer and gray slacks, listened intently but showed no emotion. His only comment in court Thursday was a "Not guilty, sir," when asked by the judge to enter a plea.
Before testimony began, Hughes' attorney, Michael Maness, objected to the presence of 16 uniformed troopers in the courtroom.
Judge Allen Stille initially limited the number of troopers in the courtroom to six, then to three. "Their presence is inherently prejudicial and serves no function whatsoever," Maness said.
"We want to take every precaution," Stille said. "This has been to trial once and we don't want it to be tried again."
Many of the troopers returned, dressed in civilian clothes.
Prosecutors have acknowledged it will be more difficult to win a death verdict in the retrial because jurors must agree Hughes is a continuing threat to society.
During his dozen years on death row, Hughes became a registered lobbyist against the death penalty, operated a publishing business and drew greeting cards with other inmates for sale in the outside world. He also appeared regularly on a radio program taped in the death row visiting area and broadcast over a Houston station.

Soviet party criticizes militarism

MOSCOW (AP) — The Communist Party's policy-making Central Committee says the Kremlin has in the past wrongly stressed military over diplomatic solutions to world problems and that its foreign policy is no longer dogmatic.

A position paper approved by the 300-plus member body also sharply criticizes the role the party has come to occupy in Soviet society, saying bureaucrats are too often impeding the effectiveness of government bodies.
It proposes limiting party officials to two five-year terms, with exceptions that could include Soviet Communist Party General Secretary Mikhail S. Gorbachev. It also says elections for party jobs should be by secret ballot with more than one candidate.

The report will serve as the foundation for an extraordinary party conference that begins June 28, the first such gathering since 1941. Its details were distributed Thursday by the official Tass news agency.
Approved Monday, it sets the agenda for a possible showdown between reformers led by Gorbachev and conservatives resisting change.
The report says foreign policy before Gorbachev came to power "trailed behind fundamental changes that occurred in the world and missed chances to reduce tensions and enhance understanding among nations."

Praising changes made by the Soviet leader, it said Kremlin foreign policy now addresses problems of a world faced with nuclear destruction while "not imposing any conditions or dogmas on anyone."
The new Soviet approach has led to a "definite improvement" in relations with the United States, and a "fresh discovery" of the Soviet Union in other countries, the Central Committee report says.

"In our bid for military-strategic parity we occasionally failed to use opportunities available to attain security for our nation by political means, and, as a result, allowed ourselves to be lured into an arms race which could not but affect this country's social and economic progress and its standing on the international scene," the report says.
On domestic policy, the program strongly reflects Gorbachev's priorities for increasing citizen involvement in public affairs and making individuals more accountable. Its passage shows that the man who rose to party chief in March 1985 was able to muster the vital support of the Central Committee.
Gorbachev was named to present the party program at the meeting next month at which 5,000 delegates will pass judgment on his reforms.
The program indicates the Communists still lay claim to being the most important force in Soviet society and the only legal political party. But it says Communist authorities have seriously weakened local governing bodies and the party itself by seeking to dominate nearly all aspects of life.

The result has "sharpened many social development problems," the report said. "It is vital to change this situation radically."

Video system for rural health care to be studied

LUBBOCK (AP) — Country doctors won't have to worry about missing out on big-city developments through an experimental satellite network that would link rural and urban physicians, university officials say.

A $4.4 million pilot project called MEDNET will use video images and satellite hookups to allow face-to-face consultations between rural doctors and city medical specialists as well as other exchanges of medical expertise.

"We could do second opinions and consultations with patients still remaining in their local community with their local physician and their local hospital," said Bob Heins, associate dean of physical affairs at Texas Tech University Health Sciences Center.

"We see this as a long-range project that could significantly make some difference in the cost of health care."

The project will receive $2.25 million in federal funding from the Department of Health and Human Services, officials said Thursday.

MEDNET, which was developed at Tech's Health Sciences Center and will test several levels of interactive network technology, will link doctors in two outlying health care facilities with specialists at the four-campus medical school for consultations and continuing education. The rural locations for the experiment have not been chosen yet, Tech officials said.

"This will allow us to demonstrate the feasibility of two-way video communication, both in continuing medical education and reaching out to be able to provide the academic sub-specialty support to rural hospitals and physicians," said Heins.

Attracting physicians to serve rural areas has grown increasingly difficult. Exacerbating the situation is the large number of rural doctors that have been sanctioned by the Texas Medical Foundation's peer review board.

"Since there were doctors in the smaller communities that were not able to as easily keep up to date in some of the medical things, we thought if we could communicate with them through a system such as this on a regular basis we could help prevent them from getting behind in their information," said Dr. Ted Hartman, Tech's medical school dean.

"We think it's going to be a real boon ultimately for the other health care regions that are as isolated as we are."

The $2.25 million HHS funding was obtained with the aid of Sen. Lloyd Bentsen and approved by HHS Secretary Otis Bowen. The remaining $2.15 million will come from the medical school, Tech officials said.

Tech officials said they hope the demonstration project will be launched early in 1989.

A few other medical schools around the country have implemented communications networks using telephone lines, but Tech's system is the first system using solely video and satellite communication, said Hartman.

The medical school previously implemented a computer network program that links three rural hospitals to the school's campuses to provide access to treatment guidelines for certain ailments.

Through the system, called KARENET, rural doctors can tap into the network for information on the proper dosages of medication for a heart attack victim or the latest methods of treating a severe burn.

"We see (MEDNET) as a marked and radical departure from traditional medical continuing education that will really enhance use of technology and the reaching out of academic medical schools to rural areas," said Heins.

The school's satellite network will link its primary facility in Lubbock with regional campuses in Amarillo, El Paso and Odessa and will provide the basis for the project.

Bexar County's chief medical examiner, Dr. Vincent DiMaio, is the target of a district attorney's investigation into allegations he improperly earned money for harvesting bones from the dead for resale.

Bone extractions by county's medical examiner investigated

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Investigators are looking into possibilities that a pathologist may have been paid illegally for extracting bones from corpses, but county officials say the physician was within his rights.

Bexar County Chief Medical Examiner Dr. Vincent DiMaio said Thursday he earned about $50,000 since 1983 by harvesting bones that later went to the non-profit Bone Bank Foundation of San Antonio.

The bones were taken from bodies sent to the Medical Examiner's Office and were later used in other transplants.

Assistant District Attorney Nelson "Skip" Atwell confirmed that prosecutors were looking into allegations that DiMaio may have erred because he was harvesting the bones in county facilities and on county time.

"Dr. DiMaio has said he is available, his office is open and we will talk to him and the county auditor and then we'll sit down and evaluate the thing and see if it's a commissioner's court issue, or something we should be involved in or something nobody should be involved in," Atwell said.

"Right now, I'm not in a position to give a good answer on that," he said. "I'm not trying to belittle this, but if something was done wrong, we will certainly look into it."

DiMaio, who was among several pathologists who exhumed Lee Harvey Oswald's body in Dallas in 1981, said he has charged between $175 and $425 per body for harvesting.

DiMaio, a gunshot wound expert who supplements his $92,000-a-year salary by testifying at civil and criminal trials, said he had county approval to do the harvesting.

He said after the body is sent to the morgue, a medical investigator contacts survivors and asks if they would agree to donating the bones.

If the answer is yes, the investigator uses his vehicle, on his own time and drives to the family's residence so they can sign a consent form, he said.

Once DiMaio gets the form, he extracts the bones.

"I charged for my time, on my own time, not on the county's time," DiMaio said. "They may be able to change their minds, but they can't ever say they weren't informed."

County Judge Tom Vickers said DiMaio approached county commissioners in 1983 about doing work for the Bone Bank Foundation.

Vickers said DiMaio could continue the private practice.

"Unless we are given some new information that it legally should not continue, then it will," Vickers said.

Commissioners agreed in 1983 to let DiMaio do the work and agreed the county would be bill the foundation $25 per case for use of the facilities, Vickers said.

"It was all above board," Vickers said. "As far as I can tell, he didn't try to hide anything. His statement was given in open court, in front of attorneys and auditors."

The San Antonio Light reported initially Thursday that it had obtained invoices indicating the foundation paid DiMaio up to $10,000 per month for bones, but none of those payments went to the county.

Vickers said, however, that DiMaio has increased the revenue in his office in the past six years.

Before DiMaio became chief medical examiner, the office had returned about $30,000 per year in fees to the county treasury.

That figure will be more than $300,000 this year, Vickers said.

"That's because Dr. DiMaio has set up fees that he charges to do autopsies for other counties and he's made a real effort to bring in more fees," Vickers said.

DiMaio likened his role to a physician removing a heart from an accident victim for use in another transplant.

Man accused in slayings of two convicted child molester, police say

FORT WORTH (AP) — A convicted child molester who was the defendant in a civil suit filed by relatives of the child has been charged in the slaying of two relatives of the victim, police say.

William Wesley Chappell, 52, of Fort Worth, was arrested Thursday and being held in lieu of $750,000 bond capital murder charges in the slayings May 3 that killed two potential witnesses in the civil suit, police said.

Chappell was convicted in 1983 of molesting a 4-year-old girl and was sentenced to five years in prison, but was free on appeal bond at the time of the slayings.

The victims of the May 3 shooting at a Fort Worth home were Martha Lindsey, 50, grandmother of the child, and Alexandra Heath, 27, an aunt of the child. Police said they were killed by a masked gunman who burst into their home and began shooting.

Lindsey's husband, 62-year-old Lewis Sitton, who was wounded in the slayings, remained in critical condition Thursday at John Peter Smith Hospital.

Sally Chappell, 38, was also jailed in lieu of $750,000 bond each on charges accusing her of helping her husband plan and carry out the slayings.

Chappell was convicted and sentenced to five years in prison on the child molesting charge, but was free on bond while appealing the verdict.

A civil suit Ms. Lindsey filed against Chappell on behalf of the child was scheduled to be tried this summer, court officials said.

Teacher to spend summer, 37 weekends in jail

EL PASO (AP) — A high school teacher who pleaded guilty to drunken driving eight times says he's glad no one was hurt.

Curtis Burton, 41, an English teacher at Bel Air High School, was sentenced Wednesday to spend the summer and then 37 consecutive weekends in jail and fined $5,000.

Burton told a crowded County Court-at-Law audience that alcoholism is a disease and that he suffers from it.

"I'm grateful that nothing tragic has happened," Burton told Judge D. Clark Hughes. "I'm trying hard to overcome this disease and will be doing my best to see that this never, ever happens again."

Burton was arrested on drunken driving charges in October 1984, three times in 1985, once in 1986 and twice in 1987. His last arrest was in January.

He was not tried on any of the charges until Wednesday because of a backlogged docket, scattered records and court delays requested by defense attorneys, prosecutors said.

Burton's new lawyer, state Sen. Tati Santiesteban, D-El Paso, said his client thought the eight charges had been dismissed.

After serving a jail sentence from July 4 to Aug. 31, Burton will go to jail on 37 consecutive weekends. Then he will be on probation for eight years under strict supervision. His driver's license was revoked Wednesday.

"I would like to say I'm remorseful," Burton told the judge.

Pickens calls on legislature for shareholders' rights bill

DALLAS (AP) — Corporate raider T. Boone Pickens Jr. is trying to rally America's corporate shareholders to fend off management executives he said are destroying the nation's publicly held businesses.

"After World War II and up until 1986, what corporate America saw was fragmented ownership," Pickens told more than 400 members of the United Shareholders Association at a forum Thursday.

"Owners bent to the whim of their managers and it seemed there was no way out," Pickens said. "Now there's a way out."

Pickens is chairman of USA, a shareholders' rights advocacy with more than 15,000 active members in all 50 states. Pickens, general partner of the Amarillo-based oil investment firm Mesa Limited Partnership, founded the grassroots organization with his wife, Beatrice Carr Pickens, in August 1986.

Pickens said the group must fight against anti-shareholders legislation being considered at the state and national levels.

"Shareholders must unite if they want to combat this legislation," Pickens said. "You are an owner and the management are your employees."

Pickens said such legislation threatens to halt a corporate restructuring movement that has forced management to improve productivity and competitiveness.

"Restructuring I have seen in most companies liberates assets and brings back management accountability," Pickens said.

He said 33 states have enacted anti-shareholder legislation. While none has been written in Texas, the Legislature has conducted a hearing on the subject, Pickens said.

In the interim, Pickens said USA members need to work for pro-shareholder legislation that would ban golden parachutes for retiring executives, guarantee one-share, one-vote power for stockholders, establish confidential votes for shareholders and reform the proxy process.

He was critical of company executives who stack the boardroom against shareholders and prompt the adoption of two classes of stock to water down voting strength of the general stockholders.

"By joining USA, you're doing your part in putting corporate control and wealth back where it belongs, in the hands of the owners, the shareholders," Pickens said.

Pickens told the Dallas Morning News he "might be interested" in some of the oil and gas assets that Tenneco Inc. announced it is selling. But the Panhandle oilman criticized the Houston-based company's decision to "get rid of its first-class assets."

Tenneco, the second-largest company in Houston, announced Wednesday that it was selling its oil and gas and refining and marketing subsidiary — Tenneco Oil Co. — to pay down its $8.8 billion in debt. Analysts estimate the value of the properties at more than $5 billion. The $18 billion asset conglomerate will still be left with its natural gas pipeline business and shipyard, shock absorbers and farm equipment business.

"I understand that Tenneco is packing a lot of debt but I think they're making a mistake selling the goose that laid the golden egg," Pickens said.

City cleanup generates headaches

EULESS (AP) — A plan to keep this suburban city's streets sparkling almost took the city to the cleaners when residents pitched in with unexpected gusto.

"Sparkle Weeks," the annual city-sponsored cleanup that encouraged residents to spring clean and set their largest garbage at curbside, ran $75,000 over budget and piled garbage so high along curbs that the streets "looked like windrows," City Manager W.M. "Blackie" Sustairste said.

Eules, winner of the Governor's Community Achievement Award as the most beautiful city of its size in the state in 1983 and 1987, began the promotion in the early 1970s. It was a week-long effort to spruce up the town, then much smaller than its current 40,000 population, Sustairste said.

But this year's spring cleanup lasted from April 4 to beyond its scheduled May 6 completion.

The final cost: $200,000, about $75,000 more than was budgeted, to pick up about 1,000 truckloads of trash.

"What we have is tree limbs, shrubs, and an occasional refrigerator," Sustairste said. "In the beginning, it was a very simple task. But as the city has grown, the number of people has grown, and the number of trees — well, it's just more of everything."

Eight people working full time on the street crew fell more than two weeks behind in collection, officials said.

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Sandinistas don't keep any promise

Events in Nicaragua are now following a predictable course. The Sandinistas, having destroyed the Nicaraguan Democratic Resistance (the Contras), are tightening their repressive grip on the country's people.

Recently the junta increased censorship of what remains of the Nicaraguan free press. It broke off talks with Brooklyn Rivera, leader of the country's Miskito Indian minority, whom the Sandinistas have persecuted since seizing power in 1979. And Defense Minister Humberto Ortega announced that if the Contras don't surrender soon, the Sandinistas would begin a military offensive "on a scale never before seen in this war." No one doubts that the threat is real, because the Sandinista military continues to stockpile the Soviet arms it is receiving at a rate of $1 billion a year.

So much for House Speaker Jim Wright's promises of peace. So much for the "peace process" of Costa Rica President Oscar Arias. So much for Sandinista promises to promote democracy and pluralism.

It did not take Nancy Reagan's astrologers to figure what would happen. Only one key was needed, the fact that the Sandinistas openly proclaim themselves to be Marxist-Leninists. They're following the classic sequence of a Marxist-Leninist seizure of power: Get control of the government. Begin wiping out any democratic opposition. If you run into difficulties, or if foreign powers interfere, negotiate with them; make any promises they want for democracy, freedom, whatever. Get them to stop aiding the democratic opposition. Keep up the promises of freedom and democracy while in practice liquidating all opponents.

This pattern has been followed in diverse places: Russian after 1917, Czechoslovakia in 1948, Cuba in 1959, Vietnam in the 1970s. It succeeds so often because people in democracies are such easy prey to socialist propaganda. And because democratic politicians can be manipulated to the Marxist-Leninist regime's advantage. The collaboration of House Speaker Jim Wright and others in Congress in the enslavement of Nicaragua is a case in point.

As a corollary, even strongly anti-Communist governments, like that of Ronald Reagan, can be manipulated. Reagan vacillated between backing exclusive private aid for the Contras and exclusive government aid. At one point the hybrid form of Lt. Col. Oliver North's quasi-private network was all that kept the Contras alive. In the end, Reagan's inability to make a decision either way doomed the Contras.

So the dark night of totalitarian oppression now descends on Nicaragua. And the stockpiles of Soviet arms will be shipped to Marxist-Leninist terrorists throughout Central America, and used by Sandinista soldiers for invasions of Nicaragua's neighbors.

The Nicaraguan fiasco is another instance of the truism that the one thing one learns from history is that people seldom heed the lessons of history.

Courage made the difference

WASHINGTON—President Reagan watched a movie the other night. Nothing new in that, but this movie was enough to move a man to tears. It was a brief film prepared by the Navy on the saving of the Sammy B. The story is more than a month old, but it will bear retelling for years to come.

The Sammy B., of course, is the frigate Samuel B. Roberts (FFG 58), commissioned two years ago. She is, or was, and will be again, a beautiful swift ship, 453 feet long, 3,740 tons, carrying a crew of 224 officers and enlisted men. I know a ship just like her.

On April 14 the frigate was engaged in what had become a routine task of escorting Kuwaiti tankers through the Persian Gulf. A clear day. Calm seas. Month had passed without a hostile incident. Twenty-five convoys had gone through. Then, at 6 o'clock in the evening, came a startled cry from a lookout on the bow: Mines, three of them, had been sighted.

The Roberts' captain, Cmdr. Paul X. Rinn, ordered his engines halted, then reversed. Carefully, delicately, he began to back out of danger's way. Forty-five minutes ticked by in apprehensive silence. The tension abruptly ended. A submerged mine, packing the destructive power of 250 pounds of TNT, brushed against the Robert's hull. The explosion ripped a 22-foot hole in the frigate's side.

In a fraction of a second, disaster struck. The ship's two gas turbine engines spun off their mounts. Burning fuel formed into a fireball that shot through the main stack and dropped fiery debris on the ship. Decks and bulkheads buckled.

By all the rules of naval warfare, the wounded frigate should have sunk, but the Sammy B. was a ship not meant to follow ordinary rules. Over the next five hours, before the peril of sinking passed, the crew wrote a story of heroism and ingenuity. They literally bound the frigate together with steel wire. They kept her alive to fight again.

When the three mines were sighted, Rinn immediately sounded a call to general quarters, the Navy's condition of highest readiness. The disciplined crew closed watertight doors throughout the ship, manned damage control stations, and donned newly developed firefighting gear.

Lessons had been learned both from England's experience in the Falklands war and from the terrible damage done last year to the USS Stark, when an Iraqi missile nearly sent her to the bottom. Out of those lessons came new oxygen-breathing apparatus and other equipment for fighting fires at sea.

It was the courage of the crew, rather than the excellence of equipment, that made the difference when the explosion came. Three problems had to be tackled in an instant: fire, flooding and immobility. Make it four problems: Ten members of the crew had been injured, and their injuries had to be treated.

The Sammy B. was dead in the water, a thousand tons of water in the damaged spaces. Her main engines were disabled. Fires fed on ruptured tanks of fuel. Flood waters pushed at bulkheads. The explosion had badly shaken the ship's helicopter. Cracks were developing in the superstructure — all this in the middle of a minefield. But everyone did everything right.

The ship was relatively intact forward. An auxiliary room forward of the main engine room was flooded with a foot of water, but generators and ventilating equipment were working. Rinn put two auxiliary power units to work — electric motors with propellers — and the ship regained limited mobility.

Mechanics got the helicopter working. Damage control units fought the fires and shored the sagging bulkheads. Crew members struggled through blinding smoke to remove ammunition from the fire zone. To hold onto the after-end of the ship, sailors rigged cables of steel wire that kept the Sammy B. in one piece. At last free of the minefield, she traveled slowly in tow to Dubai.

Vice Adm. Henry Mustin, deputy chief of naval operations, told reporters last month that the story of the frigate Roberts will become part of the curriculum in damage control at the Naval Academy. "We can't speak highly enough," he said, "of those young fellows who brought us back a ship. We don't think it could have been done better by anybody, and we think that we're the finest Navy in the world."

Let me add a word as the father of a senior chief petty officer on the frigate Nicholas, sister ship to the Roberts, which went on duty this week in the Persian Gulf. I think so too.

Too many depend on phones

There's an urgent telephone message for you from Hinsdale, Ill.

An insignificant business on a Hinsdale side street has been gutted by fire and you can't imagine the resultant chaos.

The heat from that fire has scorched half a dozen municipalities thereabouts and crippled businesses and industries nationwide ... because it was a telephone building that burned and we have become that dependent on telephones.

And because most computers interconnect with phone lines, those connections died in the fire.

When residential users lose phone service it's an inconvenience; when businesses lose their phone service it is a disaster.

One small cab company is losing $1,000 a day; nobody can call in.

Florist shops live for holidays; florist shops in the area were altogether cheated out of Mother's Day.

Salesmen, unable to make calls ...

A hundred travel agencies in 15 suburbs are dying ...

And people may as doctors and hospitals and pharmacies are out of reach ...

Paul Harvey

A car dealer can't run a credit check without a telephone ...

Restaurants cannot order supplies ...

Holiday Inn, Oakbrook, had to send 80 employees from its reservation headquarters to Memphis and Raleigh, N.C.

Brokers are going broke, with up to 90 percent of their clients unable to reach out and touch.

Bell officials now say it may be the middle of June before tens of thousands of phoneless customers are back on line.

Until a few days ago the high-tech equipment handled 3½ million calls a day. Only a few of those can be rerouted around the blackened mass.

Police and fire departments have had to set up emergency reporting stations; inefficient, at best.

Cellular phones provided a backup service for some customers, but many of those went out. One carry-out pizza restaurant, receiving no phone orders, has had to lay off 12 drivers and three order-takers.

You have to be in the middle of this — as I have been — properly to appreciate the magnitude of the disaster. Some phone-dependent businesses will not survive this time-out.

This is not the first fire in a telephone switching plant; it happened in Brooklyn in 1987 and in New York's Second Avenue station as long ago as 1975. So we have been warned.

But a close-up experience with the far-reaching paralysis resulting from a fire in a single building has reminded many of us of our nation's vulnerability.

While we hear frequent expressions of anxiety about the atom bomb, our nation could be rendered militarily impotent by a handful of terrorists with incendiary grenades they could carry in their pockets.

They bring you a version of the 'news'

By WILLIAM A. RUSHER

Wrapping up our survey of former leftist or liberal activists now working for the news divisions of the three major television networks, we turn our attention today to NBC.

Let me stress that, as in the cases of ABC and CBS, the names that follow don't even begin to scratch the surface as a list of key NBC personnel with leftist or liberal political opinions. These are only those people whose records of prior employment or other public activity on behalf of left/liberal causes were reported by the Nexis computerized data-retrieval system when such names were requested by the Media Research Center.

As before, we have not listed network commentators (such as John Chancellor at NBC or George Will at ABC) who are legitimately entitled to express their own political opinions on the air. Also excluded are political consultants formerly employed by particular candidates but now hired by the networks for their expert advice during this election year — people like Walter Mondale's Bob Beckel at ABC and Jack Kemp's John Buckley at CBS. The stress, in other words, is on people responsible for coverage of the news and presumably committed to a reasonable neutrality concerning it.

In the case of NBC News, then, we start with senior vice president Thomas Ross, who served as Jimmy Carter's assistant secretary of defense for public affairs. Quite a benign eye to cast on the Reagan administration, eh?

Of course, Ross must not doubt contend with Tim Russert, vice president of NBC News "for editorial control." That might be more reassuring if Russert hadn't been chief of staff to New York's Democratic Sen. Pat Moynihan until 1983, when he left to become counselor and media strategist to Gov. Mario Cuomo. (In 1984 he went from Cuomo to NBC.)

Well, then, can we take any consolation from the fact that Tom Rogers is NBC's vice president "for policy planning"? Not much! Rogers was formerly senior counsel to the House Subcommittee on Telecommunications and Finance when that body was chaired by liberal Democratic Rep. (now Sen.) Tim Wirth. As a former congressional staff counsel myself, I can assure you that a high degree of ideological sympathy between a chairman and his counsel is axiomatic.

But let's get out of the rarefied air of NBC News' executive offices. Is there a more sensitive job in the entire organization than that of "chief political correspondent"? At NBC News that title is held by Ken Bode, who in 1976 could be found slaving away in the presidential campaign of liberal Democratic Rep. Morris Udall. Bode doubled in brass as "politics editor" of The New Republic from 1975 to 1979 — years when that publication's knee-jerk liberalism was a great deal more dependable than it is today.

Speaking of The New Republic, its "science and society" writer is Robert Bazell — who also serves as NBC

News' science reporter. If you think science is a safely non-political subject, think again: Bazell tangled not long ago with the top editors of The New Republic because he thought their policy toward AIDS was too sluggish.

Finally, in the key post of "national security affairs reporter" for NBC News is Jim Polk, who not long ago was teaching courses on investigative journalism for the Institute for Policy Studies, Washington's left-most think tank.

These are some of the key people backing up Tom Brokaw when he smiles at you and begins to report the day's news. There isn't even a token ex-Republican aide at NBC, like ABC's Joanna Bistany or CBS's Diane Sawyer. Bear these things in mind, as Election Day draws closer and America's liberal media elite exercise ever more vigorously what Richard M. Cohen, formerly of CBS News, bragged was their power to "form and maintain" the "American consciousness."

Heart disease death rates lowest in the West

ATLANTA (AP) — If you live in New York, your chances of dying from a heart attack may be twice as great as in New Mexico, according to a study that finds "significant" geographic differences in heart-disease death rates.

The national Centers for Disease Control reported Thursday that heart-disease rates were generally highest in concentrated, urbanized areas of the Northeast or Midwest, while the West had the lowest rates.

"We're talking about thousands of deaths difference between the low states and the high states," said Dr. Patrick L. Remington, a CDC researcher.

Heart disease is the leading killer in the United States, taking more lives each year than all other causes combined, according to the American Heart Association. In 1985, 540,800 Americans died of ischemic, or blocked-artery, heart disease — most commonly heart attacks, according to CDC statistics.

Remington said the stress of urbanization itself is probably not to blame for the high rates in the densely populated Northeast and Midwest, but many people in those regions probably have lifestyles that could lead to more heart attacks.

"Just living in a big city doesn't appear to be a risk factor," he said. "But more desk jobs, and greater reliance on automobiles, all are part of a sedentary lifestyle that contributes to greater risk of a heart attack."

He said lack of exercise contributes to weight gain, higher cholesterol levels, stress and high blood pressure — all factors in heart disease.

"Lack of exercise can be directly connected to all these factors," Remington said.

Another likely cause of significant state-to-state discrepancies, Remington said, is the prevalence of cigarette smoking.

"These (Northeast and Midwest) states are the states that have high rates of cigarette smoking," he said. "And we do know that cigarette smoking is the most important preventable cause of heart disease. Most deaths from smoking are heart attacks — not lung cancer."

In contrast, "the lowest rates of smoking are in the West," he said. The five worst states for men and heart disease — New York, New Jersey, Rhode Island, Michigan and Ohio — are all in the Northeast or Midwest, where other states with the highest rates were clustered, the CDC reported.

The best rates are clustered near Chesapeake Bay and in the West. The five lowest heart disease death rates for men were in the District of Columbia, Hawaii, New Mexico, Maryland and Utah.

Similar geographic patterns were shown for women, although males historically suffer most from heart disease.

New York had the nation's worst rate, with 320 out of every 100,000 men dying of ischemic heart disease in 1985. The national average was 249 per 100,000; in

New Mexico, the rate was 151. Remington said other possible causes for the geographic disparities include cholesterol levels and differences in medical care, for which no firm state-by-state data are available.

Sociodemographic differences and population shifts also might play a part, the Atlanta-based CDC said in its weekly report.

However, heart disease death rates for all ages and geographic areas have decreased in the last two decades, the CDC said, citing previously reported research.

Remington noted that much of the nation had similarly high heart disease death rates in the 1950s, "then California and the Western states began declining. There's something about it."

Agreement to abandon nuclear plant still facing obstacles

ALBANY, N. Y. (AP) — Gov. Mario Cuomo, who persuaded a Long Island utility to abandon a $5.3 billion nuclear plant, still has to sell the deal to Wall Street bankers and a host of federal, state and local officials.

Cuomo, who announced the tentative agreement on the Shoreham nuclear plant Thursday, also wants the plant 55 miles east of Manhattan dismantled, but said there may be problems winning approval from the U.S. Nuclear Regulatory Commission.

"I expect the NRC to do everything it can to kill us and open the plant," the governor said. "I don't trust the NRC."

If the agreement with the Long Island Lighting Co. goes through, it would mark the first time a completed U.S. nuclear plant was abandoned before opening. For LILCO, which was driven to the edge of bankruptcy by the plant, the deal averted a threatened takeover by the state.

The accord drew applause from Shoreham opponents, even though it concedes LILCO a rate hike of more than 50 percent over the next decade to pay for the shutdown.

"This makes my whole year!" said Linda Schantz, who lives in the town of Shoreham with her husband and two children.

But it was the latest bad news for the troubled nuclear industry. More than 100 nuclear plants have been canceled since LILCO began building Shoreham in 1973 and no plants have been proposed in the last decade.

The pact "is a bad agreement for the nation as a whole," said Edward M. Davis, president of the American Nuclear Energy Council, an industry group in Washington. "The agreement could threaten energy security, as well as national security, by increasing oil prices in the face of predicted brownouts in the Northeast this summer."

Cuomo said the plant must be torn down to prevent future state leaders from resurrecting it. Just mothballing it, he told an Albany news conference, "would be very much like taking a loaded rifle and storing it in the closet."

U.S. Rep. George Hochbrueckner, whose district includes the plant, agreed.

"We've shown Shoreham the cross, but we have to put a stake through its heart," he said.

However, if the plant were dismantled, the fuel rods would have to be disposed at a nuclear waste facility. There are no facilities for high-level, commercial nuclear waste in the United States, NRC spokesman Frank Ingram said earlier this month.

The Shoreham project, begun in 1965, ended up 10 years behind schedule and 80 times more expensive than predicted.

The plant was completed in 1984 but never opened because state and local officials refused to participate in preparing emergency evacuation plans, arguing that Long Island couldn't be safely evacuated in a nuclear accident. Lacking such a plan, the NRC refused to issue more than a low-power testing license.

Under the agreement, LILCO would pay to decommission the plant, which Cuomo aides said could cost $500 million, while the state would buy it for a token dollar so that LILCO can claim a tax loss.

To make that happen, the investment community must agree to refinance $2 billion worth of LILCO debt at lower interest rates. Wall Street's initial reaction was positive. The price of LILCO stock jumped nearly 14 percent Thursday, rising $1.375 to $11.38 in heavy trading.

The state Public Service Commission must also agree to grant LILCO 5 percent rate hikes for the next three years, and set a goal of 5 percent increases a year for the following seven years.

LILCO's nearly 1 million customers already pay the second highest power rates in the country, second only to neighboring Consolidated Edison in the New York City area.

In addition, the state Legislature must give the New York Power Authority permission to build five non-nuclear generating plants on Long Island to ensure sufficient power for the area.

pains. He said he will ask U.S. officials to let him return to his homeland for the funeral of his mother. At left is his wife Imelda and at right is his doctor, Azucena Ignacio.

Surgeon operates on cancer in livers outside the body

PITTSBURGH (AP) — A West German surgeon believed to be the first in the world to repair livers outside the body says the procedure offers a temporary reprieve for victims of one of the bleakest forms of cancer.

"It's the best possible retaliation (against cancer) for these patients, and they are improved dramatically," said Dr. Rudolf Pichlmayr of the University of Hannover Medical School.

Pichlmayr said Thursday he has performed out-of-body liver operations three times, including twice this month. There was no other option for the patients, two women and a man suffering from malignant liver tumors, he said.

In each case, Pichlmayr removed the liver, worked on it for four to five hours, then put it back in tumor-free.

All three patients are doing well, although it's likely the tumors will reappear, Pichlmayr said.

FDA orders company to depict deformed infant on drug package

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — In an unprecedented move, federal regulators ordered the makers of the anti-acne medicine Accutane to warn customers of potential birth defects by using a picture of a deformed baby on the drug's packaging.

"It is an attempt to emphasize to people that we're not talking about a remote risk of some minor birth defect ... but a very high risk of extremely severe birth defects that can, in effect, make the child unable to function," says U.S. Food and Drug Administration spokesman William Grigg.

Among other requirements, the FDA will force female patients to sign a consent form stating they understand the risks associated with the powerful drug, according to Carolyn R. Glynn, a spokeswoman for the drug's manufacturer, Hoffman-La Roche of Nutley.

Grigg says the requirements were prompted by 62 reported cases of birth defects caused by the drug since it was introduced in 1982, though the FDA believes the actual number is much higher. The FDA says the risk of a pregnant Accutane user having a deformed child is one in four or greater.

The requirements follow a recommendation by an FDA advisory panel of outside experts that the prescription drug remain on the market. It is considered the only effective treatment for severe, scarring acne.

Grigg said the requirement that Hoffman-La Roche include a photograph of an infant deformed by the drug was "unprecedented."

Ms. Glynn said the company basically agrees with the FDA's order, which does not stray much from the advisory panel's recommendations, but Hoffman-La Roche believes the photo "may be more appropriate ... to use on the patient consent materials" signed in the doctor's office.

"It's not an issue of using the picture, it's where you use the picture," she said.

Noriega says U.S. ultimatum forced collapse of talks

PANAMA CITY, Panama (AP) — Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega told a packed National Assembly session that the United States' take-it-or-leave-it attitude forced the collapse of talks about his leaving power.

"The world must know that the conversation sustained with the envoy of President Reagan broke down when he presented us with an ultimatum in which Panama had to immediately accept his last offer," Noriega said.

"I know it and I say so because I was there. (U.S. Secretary of State) George Shultz wasn't there," Noriega said in his speech Thursday to a cheering crowd in the 500-seat assembly chamber.

Outside the chamber of the 67-member assembly, hundreds of people listened to his words through a loudspeaker.

Noriega, who commands Panama's 15,000-strong Defense Forces and is his country's de facto leader, did not elaborate. Shultz on Wednesday announced the breakdown of talks and blamed Noriega.

The general said Thursday that Panama had accepted several U.S. proposals, but added: "Even this wasn't sufficient. The United States desired an ultimatum."

In exchange for Noriega's stepping down, the Reagan administration had offered to lift economic sanctions it imposed on Panama after the general was indicted on U.S. drug trafficking charges in February.

It also offered to have the indictments dismissed.

The White House still recognizes the presidency of Eric Arturo Delvalle, whom the Noriega-dominated National Assembly deposed Feb. 26 after Delvalle tried to fire the general.

Noriega appeared before the assembly to answer questions about what the government insists on calling "conversations," not negotiations, on a possible arrangement under which he would relinquish power.

Asked whether his resignation had been discussed, the general replied:

"The commander doesn't abandon his ship in stormy weather."

Noriega said Panama has become a pawn for U.S. political candidates and charged them with "using the flag of Panama in whatever way is convenient for them."

Noriega on Thursday repeated his conditions for stepping down: Extra troops sent to U.S. bases in Panama must be withdrawn and the position of Manuel Solis Palma, who took over as president after Delvalle's ouster, must be guaranteed.

Earlier, Solis Palma told a women's organization that U.S. negotiators told Noriega in March to be out of the country in 48 hours or face the consequences.

When Noriega refused, Solis Palma said, the Americans softened their manner. He did not elaborate on what was meant by "consequences."

Solis Palma said the final U.S. offer was to drop the drug charges against Noriega in return for his giving up command of the Defense Forces on Aug. 12 and leaving Panama in September.

He said the United States also had promised to release $50 million in Panamanian assets frozen in American banks if a national unity Cabinet was chosen that picked a president "who could not be Solis Palma."

Meanwhile, President Vinicio Cerezo of Guatemala offered to mediate a solution to the impasse.

Deployment of Syrian troops under way

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Syrian troops and Lebanese police began moving into Beirut's southern slums today to end a three-week bloodbath between rival Shiite Moslem militias.

About 200 soldiers wearing bulletproof vests over their battle fatigues advanced on foot from Beirut's airport highway into the nearby southern suburb of Ghobeiri.

Militiamen of the Iranian-backed Hezbollah, or Party of God, and the Syrian-equipped Amal stopped shooting at each other as the Syrian deployment began.

Most of the 18 foreign hostages in Lebanon are believed held in south Beirut and a Syrian official in Damascus said on Thursday that ending the Amal-Hezbollah slaughter would mean new hope for the hostages, half of whom are American.

Reporters on the scene said the Syrian infantrymen were armed with machine guns and shoulder-fired grenades. They were followed into Ghobeiri by dozens of rifle-toting Lebanese policemen in gray uniforms.

The advance began at 11 a.m. (5 a.m. EDT), half an hour after shell blasts and staccato outbursts of gunfire from the embattled slums resounded across Beirut, police and reporters said. Police said they had no information on what had touched off the renewed fighting. Both Moslem militias earlier had agreed to a cease-fire.

"Zero hour has been set," Brig. Gen. Ghazi Kanaan, Syria's military intelligence chief in Lebanon, told reporters before Syrian troops began entering the slums. "We're moving in today to separate them."

Kanaan said Syria would deploy 7,500 soldiers in the 16-square-mile slums, about 90 percent of which are controlled by Hezbollah.

Hezbollah and Amal forces have battled for three weeks for supremacy in the slums.

President Hafez Assad's Syrian government announced on Thursday that a truce agreement has been reached with all parties concerned, including Iran and Hezbollah, to end the carnage.

"Ending the fighting will create new hope for the hostages and Syria will spare no effort to secure their release, regardless of their nationality," a Syrian official told The Associated Press in Damascus.

Most of the hostages are believed held by pro-Iranian extremist factions affiliated with Hezbollah.

A source at the Syrian command, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the deployment operation would be carried out in two stages in as many days.

The first involves the establishment of buffer zones in key positions along the Hezbollah-Amal confrontation lines in the neighborhoods of Shiyah, Ghobeiri, Mesharrafieh and Haret Hreik today, he said.

The deployment in the rest of the slums would be completed on Saturday, including Hezbollah's main strongholds of Bir el-Abed and Hay Madi, the source added.

The hostages are believed to be imprisoned in Hezbollah's Hay Madi barracks.

Both Amal and Hezbollah have said they would withdraw their fighters from the streets throughout the slums once the Syrians move in and keep only political and information offices.

It was not clear whether the hostages were part of the truce deal. But the Iranian assistant foreign minister, Ali Mohammed Besharati, predicted last week that the hostage problem would be solved after peace was restored in south Beirut.

Iran claims 10,000 Iraqi casualties in land war

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — Three Iranian speedboats raided a Maltese freighter today and left it burning in the Strait of Hormuz, then fired at a press helicopter when it approached the site of the attack, shipping executives said.

Iran earlier claimed it killed or wounded 10,000 Iraqi troops in land battles east of Basra.

The press helicopter chartered by the American television network CBS was not hit.

Shipping executives had said a second ship was hit but later retracted that report.

The executives said the 18-member crew of the 18,000-ton Don Miguel abandoned ship after the 8 a.m. attack. An Omani warship sailing nearby rescued them.

The executives, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said the crew, all South Koreans, were transferred to a salvage tugboat of the Dutch company Smit and appeared to have been unharmed.

Associated Press photographer Greg English, who was aboard a helicopter in the area, said a second Smit salvage tugboat battling the flames as they ravaged the freighter's stern.

The executives said the Iranians fired at the helicopter chartered by CBS when it tried to get close to the site of the attack. But they said the four volleys of gunfire only hit the water and did damage the aircraft.

It was the second Iranian raid in 12 hours and the fourth in 10 days since.

On May 3 Washington broadened the duties of the U.S. Navy in the gulf, allowing American warships to intervene in attacks on commercial ships, even if they are not sailing under the Stars and Stripes.

The executives said no American warships were believed to have been in the vicinity of the Don Miguel when it was raided.

Homer the hostage goose headed for reprieve

AUSTIN (AP) — Austin's homeless, satisfied that the city council is sympathetic to their plight, probably will not kill the little goose they have held hostage since last month, says a leader of the group.

Council members on Thursday agreed to meet June 7 with officials of the Street People's Advisory Council, which represents the homeless and has held Homer hostage since buying him.

SPAC leader Bruce Lester, a homeless, unemployed roofer, clutched Homer under his arm as he made his pitch to the city council. Lester ended by presenting two documents, an "emancipation proclamation" for Homer and a "certificate of consumption." He asked council members to sign the emancipation proclamation if they wanted to help the homeless and free Homer.

Researchers find protein defect in muscular dystrophy

BOSTON (AP) — The protein deficiency that triggers a rare form of muscular dystrophy has been pinpointed, according to a study that an expert called a "key victory" in finding the causes of the crippling disease of children.

The research was conducted by Dr. Louis M. Kunkel and colleagues at Children's Hospital in Boston and reported in Thursday New England Journal of Medicine.

They found that the disorder is caused by problems with the muscle protein called dystrophin. Becker muscular dystrophy results if the body produces too little of the protein or makes an abnormal form of it.

"We've scored another key victory in uncovering the causes of muscular dystrophy, learning what must be set right to cure these devastating diseases," said Dr. S. Mouchly Small, president of the Muscular Dystrophy Association of New York.

In December, Kunkel and his colleagues reported that a more common form of the disease, called Duchenne's muscular dystrophy, occurs when the protein is absent. Two years ago, Kunkel's team reported the discovery of the gene responsible for Duchenne's and Becker muscular dystrophy.

Duchenne's muscular dystrophy occurs in one in 3,300 births, while Becker muscular dystrophy strikes one in 30,000 births.

Both forms strike males almost exclusively and result in progressive weakness and wasting of the muscles.

The protein abnormalities in both forms result from an inborn genetic defect. Genes contain the code that instruct the body to make all the proteins necessary for life.

Oil futures prices advance

NEW YORK (AP) — Oil futures prices advanced on technical market factors in what analysts said was the heaviest trading volume in recent weeks.

On the New York Mercantile Exchange Thursday, contracts for July delivery of West Texas Intermediate, the benchmark U.S. crude oil, rose 17 cents to close at $17.54 per 42-gallon barrel.

Among refined products for June delivery, wholesale unleaded gasoline rose 0.63 cent to settle at 52.35 cents a gallon, while wholesale heating oil closed at 48.19 cents a gallon, up 0.88 cent.

"It was the biggest volume we've had in the energy market for several weeks, if not longer," said Peter Beutel, an assistant director at Elders Futures Inc.

Analysts said oil prices advanced slowly throughout the session but made a more dramatic rise in the last half-hour of trading.

Beutel said it appeared that July crude had been trying to fall below the psychologically important $17.30-a-barrel level for several days. When it became clear prices were not going to fall, traders had to scramble to cover their positions, he said.

Fundamentally, however, "there was nothing to indicate lower supplies or greater demand," Beutel said.

Seasonal buying of gasoline partly explained the rise in unleaded gas prices. Heavier purchases are typical ahead of the summer driving season, which runs from Memorial Day to Labor Day.

"We always see the best gas demand in summer," Beutel noted.

Old soreheads turn joke into a West Texas institution

By ED TODD
Midland Reporter-Telegram

STANTON (AP) — Stanton is rife with soreheads.

Most admit it in this West Texas town about 20 miles northeast of Midland on Interstate 20. Some don't. But a chamber of commerce joke that started three decades ago has become a local trademark.

"I'm not cantankerous enough (to be a sorehead)," said Martin County Sheriff Dan Saunders. "I don't get disgruntled. I'm not tough enough to chew tobacco and spit on the sidewalk," said Saunders, who has been sheriff in this agricultural community since 1953. "After they (the soreheads) shake the bushes, I try to come along and soothe things over."

But there are plenty of others who admit to being contrary enough to pay homage to a Stanton billboard landmark from the 1950s:

"Welcome to Stanton — Home of 3,000 Friendly People — And A Few Old Soreheads"

Paige Eiland, 51, who is the unofficial president of The Old Soreheads Club, says it has been suggested that the sign's message must be backward and should read: "Stanton — Home of 3,000 Soreheads and A Few Friendly Folks."

"Of course, that could have been after they talked with Jimmy Wheeler, Dan Saunders, and Bob Deavenport."

Deavenport, the county judge who jokes he occasionally has to go to the cemetery to check on his voters, questioned whether there really is an Old Soreheads president.

"They never had a president because they never have been able to agree on anything," Deavenport, 60, said. And had there been a first Old Soreheads president, he would have been Robert Whitaker, former Stanton mayor and ex-motion-picture-show operator, who in the late 1940s or early 1950s came up with "Old Soreheads" slogan, which has been "good" public relations for the community. Not much later, Martin County Chamber of Commerce President Hila "Stormy" Weathers got the "Old Soreheads" billboard posted along the highway west of town.

Wheeler is an automotive dealer who Saunders says "projects his feelings and opinions most vigorously."

And Saunders is the congenial sheriff who claims he is not a sorehead.

"The reason I haven't joined (the club)," said the sheriff, "is that I shut the bathroom door every time I go to the bathroom, and those old soreheads don't."

Eiland insisted that the sheriff is one of the soreheads.

"But don't let Dan kid you," Eiland said. "He's right up there with the best of us."

Eiland, a hefty sort who is prone to lean back in the swivel chair in his insurance office and reflect, said if Wheeler were to divulge his personality traits, he would define an old sorehead.

"Don't ask Wheeler about me," Eiland said. "He'd say I stay gone all of the time. Me? I like to work."

Wheeler doesn't see it that way. "He's never here. That's the problem with his being president," said Wheeler, 51. "According to calculations on my calendar, from Jan. 1 through April 27, he has been off 15 more days than he has worked."

But Wheeler said there was no doubt about who is the Old Soreheads Club president.

"If we were having an election tomorrow, I think he (Eiland) would win hands down — no question," Wheeler said. "I would probably be very low on the totem pole. I'd probably be known as the 'nice guy.'"

Anyway, Eiland sort of wonders how Wheeler could be an "old" sorehead.

"Wheeler just came here in the seventh grade," Eiland said. "He's not really an old-timer. He's a Johnny-come-lately. He's only been here 39 years."

Among the younger sorehead upstarts — those about a generation removed from Wheeler and Eiland — there is "tie between (farmer) Johnny Louder and (businessman) Terry Franklin for the top younger 'old sorehead,'" said Wheeler.

"We've got plenty of young ones coming up."

Retired druggist Glenn Brown is a club member. "He stays on the golf course too much," said Eiland. Joining the Old Soreheads clan is the town's barber, Stanley Reid, who runs The Clip Joint.

The club is somewhat exclusive.

"You just pretty near have to be a man to be a sorehead," said Eiland, who admitted to be ornery. In jest, he acted so cantankerous that he threatened to slap the county judge with a slander suit for accusing him of being Stanton's premier old sorehead.

Deavenport was unflappable.

"I told him he's carrying my insurance," the judge replied.

Wayne Mitchell, 53, superintendent of Stanton public schools, freely admitted to being a sorehead.

"I guess I don't do everything they want me to do," he reasoned. "You can't be all things to all people at all times. In this (school) business, there's no way you can please everybody all of the time, so somebody is going to think you are an old sorehead."

Now, if Stanton's teen-agers were to point out their top choice for a good-humored "old sorehead," their selection would be "Mr. A" — John Anastasio, a high-school science teacher.

"He's not only a sorehead," quipped Principal Bill Young. "He's ugly. He's an Italian from the Bronx."

Anastasio, who has been teaching science in Stanton for 24 years, is "the favorite of all the kids," said Young. "He's a good teacher."

"He yells and growls at the kids in their freshman year," Young said, "but by the time they get to be sophomores, they know he's only an old softie."

But Eiland said he doesn't know if "Mr. A" is a sorehead or not. "He's just a displaced Midlander who's over here teaching school."

Whatever soreheads may be, for Stanton they make good coffee-shop talk.

"I think most of us who are old soreheads are kind of fun-loving, happy people," said Eiland, who occasionally is grumpy. "If you can't laugh at yourself, life would be pretty dull around here."

Pioneer says nothing's more interesting than oil business

By HANK MURPHY
The Odessa American

McCAMEY, Texas (AP) — It was Aug. 4, 1935, when a penniless roustabout from Coleman showed up in this bustling oil town. He flew into town behind the wheel of a $65 Oldsmobile with paper-thin tires and a leaking radiator.

Now, 53 years later, few would dispute that McCamey's Claude Brown has left an indelible stamp on the Permian Basin.

And at age 83, the spry petroleum pioneer shows few signs of slowing down. "As long as I'm able to make deals ... I'll stay with it until I'm 100," Brown said recently. "Nothing's more interesting than the oil business."

In his spacious, ranch-style home, Brown's life and family is reflected in paintings and photographs.

He planned to attend college either at Texas A&M University or the University of Texas, but the lure of oil kept him from ever making a choice. "Sixty-six years later, I still haven't made up my mind which one I want to go to," he quipped.

He pointed to a black-and-white photograph of a frame building with the words "C.W. Brown" painted in bold letters.

The squat building housed Brown's first business in McCamey, a second-hand oil field supply store started from scratch in 1935. By 1939, he owned six supply stores in West Texas and Southeastern New Mexico.

Meanwhile, Brown bought up leases from seemingly spent oil wells near McCamey that he made productive through deeper drilling and new methods of recovery.

He expanded his business interests in 1946 by purchasing C.W. Brown Motor Co. in McCamey. Later, he would open another dealership in Crane.

Meanwhile, Brown's only child, Claudyne, married Louisiana geologist Ed W. Thorp in 1947. Brown and his son-in-law formed Brown and Thorp Oil Co. in 1950 and discovered the Brown and Thorpe oil field in Pecos County a year later.

Brown, however, was not finished. In 1951 he put together McCamey Pipe Line Co. And in 1967, Brown and Derwood Langston bought controlling interest in McCamey's Security State Bank, the bank that issued Brown his first loan — a $1,500 note — in 1936.

In a career stuffed with successful ventures, Brown said the 1955 purchase of 125 oil wells near Borger ranks near the top.

"Without a nickel of my own," Brown and Thorp financed $4.5 million to buy the wells. A year later, they sold them for $5.5 million.

On the reverse side, Brown recalled several mistakes.

In a move that cost him millions, Brown said he sold his oil interests in the 1960s when petroleum was just $3.50 a barrel — long before the boom of the early 1980s when prices shot up to $40 per barrel.

His other major goof, he said, was investing in oil industry stock before prices plunged in January 1986.

Despite the sluggish economy in the oil patch ever since, Brown looks at the future of West Texas and its small towns like McCamey with optimism.

"I think we reached bottom, and we've got no place to go but up," he said, predicting that when "the savings and loan situation is straightened out" sunny West Texas will flourish with ranching, manufacturing and industrial development.

"We've got too great a country to say West Texas is gone," he said, adding that the oil and gas industry — the businesses that made Texas great — will recover when Washington "sees the light."

Although Brown has been deeply immersed in private enterprise, he pursues politics and civic affairs with equal fervor.

"I was interested in good politics" and clean government, said Brown, a staunch Democrat and former mayor of McCamey.

Former Texas Gov. John Connally placed Brown on the state Industrial Commission, and in 1966, former Secretary of the Interior Stewart Udall appointed Brown a director of the National Board of the Petroleum and Gas Unit of the National Defense Executive Reserve.

IN THE CHURCH OF YOUR CHOICE

GREEN THUMB

The Church is God's appointed agency in this world for spreading the knowledge of His love for man and of His demand for man to respond to that love by loving his neighbor. Without this grounding in the love of God, no government or society or way of life will long persevere and the freedoms which we hold so dear will inevitably perish. Therefore, even from a selfish point of view, one should support the Church for the sake of the welfare of himself and his family. Beyond that, however, every person should uphold and participate in the Church because it tells the truth about man's life, death and destiny; the truth which alone will set him free to live as a child of God.

Coleman Adv. Ser.

GREEN THUMB... is the way of describing those that have a way with plant life. The ones, who are so gifted, will tell you that to be successful with plants, you must see that they have plenty of water. God knows too, that a soul must be watered in order for it to mature and grow.

"...and thou shalt be like a watered garden, and like a spring of water, whose waters fail not." Isaiah 58:11

Presbyterian missionaries to visit here

First Presbyterian Church will be visited by a husband and wife missionary team from Hungary this weekend.

Dr. Tibor Bartha and his wife, Kati, will arrive Saturday. They will preach during the 10:45 a.m. Sunday service and later meet with members of the congregation to discuss their work behind the Iron Curtain.

Dr. John Judson, pastor of First Presbyterian, invited those interested in learning of the Bartha's experiences to attend the Sunday morning service.

Dr. Bartha, 44, was born in Munkacs, Hungary, and attended various colleges and universities in Europe, including Westminster College in Cambridge, England. He currently is pastor in the reformed congregation of Kalvin-ter, Szeged in Hungary and works as a research professor and reader in Budapest. He also is now working on a one-volume Bible dictionary and has written several books and commentaries, many on the New Testament.

Kati Bartha, 39, was born in Bekesosaba, Hungary, and worked as an assistant pastor in the same parish where her husband serves as pastor. Her main interests are children evangelization, pastoral care of families and pastoral work among women.

The Barthas were married in 1968 and have two children, Kati, 18, and Tibor, 16.

Dr. Bartha speaks of "the amazing ability of Christians to live and thrive in a hostile environment, not by their own power, but by grace alone." Despite constitutional guarantees to the contrary, he says, discrimination against Christians is practiced and the right of individual dissent to government policy and practice is practically non-existent.

The church in Eastern Europe, however, speaks out on the arms race and views recent arms negotiations between the two superpowers as a welcome sign, Bartha says.

Renewing romance banquet scheduled

Briarwood Full Gospel Church is hosting its first "Renewing Romance Banquet and Seminar" at 7 p.m. Saturday, June 11, at the Pampa Country Club.

Featured speaker will be Jimmy Evans, pastor of the 2,000-member Trinity Fellowship Church in Amarillo.

Cost per couple is $25. This includes a two-meat buffet, gratuities and the seminar speaker. No offering will be taken.

For tickets or more information, call the church office at 665-7201 Monday through Friday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. or come by the office of Briarwood Church at 1800 W. Harvester.

His Touch

By Charlotte Barbaree

Scripture: The entrance of your words gives light; it gives understanding to the simple. (Psalm 119:130 NIV)

My home office has a double window through which I world-watch.

I watch God paint the seasons. I watch my neighbors drive past, busily living. I watch children play. I watch the clouds design climatic moods. I watch birds perch in trees and play in the lawn sprinkler.

Since I am a space cadet and get very involved in what I'm writing, the window serves as my lifeline to reality and Planet Earth.

Awhile ago, I read an article and saw a television documentary, both of which spoke of studies being conducted on people suffering from severe depression. A link has been established between depression and windowless offices. Evidence strongly connects some cases of depression with the simple lack of sufficient sunlight!

The Bible is the window through which a Christian views life. Without consistent exposure to divine instruction, we suffer depression of the spirit.

The cure lies in the glow of God's Word. It clears our heart vision and expands our panorama of understanding.

Religion Roundup

LAKE GENEVA, N.Y. (AP)—The new president of the Rabbinical Council of America, Rabbi Max N. Schreier of Brooklyn, has voiced concern about new legislation pending in various states about defining death and removing life-support systems.

"We want to make sure the sanctity of human life is protected," he told the Orthodox rabbinical convention.

Religion

Weakened faith spurs churches to new efforts

By GEORGE W. CORNELL
AP Religion Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — In heavily secularized modern society, statistics indicate the churches aren't getting their job done by working at it separately. So they're tackling it together.

That's the path-breaking commitment of a broad coalition of American church leaders, Roman Catholic and nearly every brand of Protestant, to reclaim those detached from religion.

"The time has come for us to stop the quarreling with one another, the rivalry and sheep-stealing, and learn to work together in mission," says the Rev. Alvin A. Illig of Washington, D.C.

Illig, director of the Paulist National Catholic Evangelization Association and a key figure in the wide cross-section of church leaders concerned with evangelism, added in an interview:

"The great challenge before us is reaching out to the huge mass of people not involved in churches and synagogues. We've all got to work together on it if we are to have any success in evangelization."

Spurring this collaboration is the aim of an unprecedented, multidimensional "Congress 88, a National Festival of Evangelism," in Chicago, Aug. 4-7. Planning for it has gone on for three years.

It is backed by a rare alliance of church specialists in evangelism from about 35 denominations, ranging from Mennonite to Catholic, mainline to Pentecostal, and Salvation Army to Southern Baptist.

"It's a breakthrough of real significance," Illig said.

"If Southern Baptists and Catholics and a coalition of this scope can come together and work harmoniously, it's ecumenical enough to encourage a lot of folks that they can, too."

A similarly inclusive affair, "A Gathering of Christians," takes place May 21-25 in Arlington, Texas, expected to involve about 3,000 evangelical, mainline Protestant, Catholic and Eastern Orthodox Christians.

However, that assembly is intended mainly to vent collective spiritual energies and concerns about contemporary social issues.

The Chicago congress, which hopes to bring together up to 15,000 church people, has a threefold practical purpose: To sharpen awareness of the need for evangelism; to offer advice from experts on various ways of doing it; and to provide resource materials for participants to take home and use.

"We can learn from each other," Illig said. "Lutherans, Catholics, Mennonites and Presbyterians, sharing their insights, can learn from one another in building the kingdom of God."

He said the urgency of stepped-up, concerted evangelizing efforts to bring in those outside the fold is prompted by the growing ranks of unchurched Americans, now totaling 90 million.

First Assembly to hold seminar

Evangelist Ray Comfort will hold a Radical Evangelism Seminar at First Assembly of God Church, 500 S. Cuyler, on June 2-4.

Times for the ministry will be at 10 a.m. for informal sessions and 7 p.m. for the seminar on Thursday and Friday, June 2 and 3. Saturday, June 4, will be street rally day.

Comfort has an itinerant evangelistic teaching ministry, having its roots in nine years of almost daily open-air preaching and over three years pastoring. He has written 17 books and was a speaker at Christian Equiper's International Conference for Local Church Evangelism in Sacramento, Calif.

Comfort and his wife Sue will be coming to Pampa from Christchurch, New Zealand. The Comforts are pleased and excited to visit the Pampa community and are anxious to meet people here, church representatives said.

Cost for the seminar is $7 in advance or $10 at the door. Call 665-5941 or come by 500 S. Cuyler for more information.

Evergreen

Evergreen to perform here

Gospel trio Evergreen will be singing during the 6 p.m. service Sunday at Pampa Chapel, 711 E. Harvester.

Evergreen, based in Pampa, is comprised of Janae Harris, Russell Ball and Wendel Christenson.

The group ministers in churches throughout the United States, singing a wide variety of Christian music including Southern gospel music, classic hymns of the church and other styles.

"Everyone is invited to attend this special time of ministry and sharing in song," said Pastor Austin Sutton.

"Young and old alike will be blessed by the ministry of Evergreen," he added.

Church members help repair elderly's homes

By SANDRA GINES
Waco Tribune-Herald

WACO (AP) — A couple of boards, a hammer and some nails are all that are needed to fix a rotting porch. Or a whisking out of the stepladder from the storage closet, and a slapping of paint on the ceiling to cover the spot where a water leak has stained it.

Minor home repairs may sound easy to people with able bodies and enough funds, but to the elderly, they're often impossible.

The Rev. Libby Bellinger, Inner City Ministries nursing home chaplain, said some elderly people are frustrated at not being able to do home repairs.

Often, she said, old people cannot afford to contract out repairs because many businesses will not accept small jobs or will charge standard hourly rates that are beyond their means.

In addition, Mrs. Bellinger said, elderly people are wary of outsiders, aware they can be easy targets for swindlers and other criminals.

As a response to this problem, Mrs. Bellinger and members of Lake Shore Baptist Church offered free repairing services to some elderly Waco residents.

"We were trying to figure out how to help people stay in their homes longer before making the transition to nursing homes, or even to keep them from making that transition," she said.

A member of Lake Shore Baptist, Mrs. Bellinger was aware of plans to involve members in more missions work. After engaging the church's help, she enlisted Meals-on-Wheels coordinator Kay Pennington for help in pinpointing an area where the home repairs service would be needed.

Deciding on East Waco, they narrowed a list of possible names to six. Of those, four were interested. One of the four decided to hire repair help, while another was rejected because the person did not own the home.

Mrs. Bellinger said she had to assure the clients that she was sincere.

"It's very frightening for the elderly because they get so many con artists who come and say they'll do things for them then take all their money," she said.

Arby Thomason, one of the two people whose homes eventually were chosen, had hired someone to do yardwork for him, Mrs. Bellinger said. The person had knocked Thomason down and stolen his wallet, she said.

"He told us he wasn't ready for us to start working on his house in January... but after he saw the work we were doing at the other house, he told us to come over. I think he was just making sure we were sincere," she said.

Work on the homes of Pauline Walker, 86, and Thomason, 77, was completed last month. Volunteers, most of them unskilled, worked on Saturday mornings. Thomason provided tools and materials for work on his home. Otherwise, the funds came from the Lake Shore missions fund or donations.

After two surveys, specific repairs were designated. Mrs. Bellinger said Randy Pederson, a member of Lake Shore Baptist and one of four skilled handymen, helped to guide the repair novices through the work.

Mrs. Bellinger said the repairs on Mrs. Walker's home included new back steps, handrails, new back door, replastered and repainted ceilings in two rooms, rescreening of the front door and the installation of dead bolt locks.

On Thomason's house, most of the repairs were outside. Mrs. Bellinger said. They included underpinning the entire house, installation of steps, removal and repair of a rotted porch ceiling, installation of a porch light and some painting.

Mrs. Walker said she feels safer with the dead bolt locks installed and the rip in the front screen repaired.

"Meals-on-Wheels people used to hand me my meals through the crack," she said, laughing.

Calling the volunteers "nice people," Mrs. Walker said, "I appreciate it, because I really didn't have any money to get it fixed."

Thomason, a hard-of-hearing, friendly widower whose only son lives in Houston, said he was also grateful.

"I don't know how to express it any other way than to say it was a great help," he said.

Mrs. Bellinger said she called the volunteers "God's blessing."

Bible teacher claims education quest begins in knowing frailty

By JOE YONAN
The Daily Texan

AUSTIN (AP) — An ancient but simple thought from Paul's letter to the Romans illustrates Charles Cox's philosophy of religious education:

"All have sinned and fall short of the glory of God," goes the verse from the early Christian missionary and author, Romans 3:23 in the New Testament.

"In that verse, Paul gives insight into what it means to be human — the frailty, the mortality," said Cox, a biblical studies instructor. "It's out of that sense of frailty that the quest for education comes. That verse points to the fact that we don't come into the world all-knowing."

After 30 years as director of the Texas Bible Chair, one of five groups that teach biblical studies in Austin, Cox should know. The 58-year-old leader of the Biblical Studies Association is dedicated to giving students an academic — not devotional — taste of the Bible.

Last year, the controversy caused by questions about the classes' constitutionality caused the University of Texas to decide to stop offering them after the fall semester. Although religious groups hired and paid Cox and the other Bible instructors, they received some of the benefits of faculty members, and Texas Attorney General Jim Mattox said that situation might have violated constitutional separation of church and state.

When the University canceled the classes, Cox and the BSA filed a lawsuit asking a court to decide if the situation had been unconstitutional. The BSA dropped the suit earlier this month when it became apparent that the question was moot: The University would not offer the classes whether they were found legal.

Students can take the classes by the same instructors off-campus and can transfer the credit to the University, but those hassles have caused enrollment by UT students in the classes to drop by almost 90 percent. Two chairs are offering classes this semester, but Cox's classes and two other groups' classes did not "make" because not enough students registered for them.

For Cox, that means only one thing: The students are losing.

"I'm really quite disappointed," the gray-haired, soft-spoken Cox said from his office in the University Christian Center.

"In all of the conversations that we (he and UT administrators) have had since early last summer, it would appear that there is not a very widespread appreciation for the study of the Judeo-Christian tradition in higher education."

Not offering biblical studies, Cox said, is an example of the increasing importance of natural science, engineering and business and decreased emphasis on the liberal arts at the University. "One of the byproducts of this shift is that we're a society that has lost contact with its roots, its foundations."

And the Bible is not just a religious work, but a historical one with many cultural connections, he said.

"The tendency in people's devotional kind of attitude is to look at the Bible as a collection of verses — you go and pick out a verse that's helpful to you relative to a problem, or one that gives you insight. But it never deals with the context of the passage, and the authorship and the time of writing.

"When my students would take a serious look at the writings and the content and the ideas of the stories, it was always helpful for them because it would dawn on them from time to time: 'This looks up with what I did in this other class or that class.' That was always good evidence to me of the foundational character of courses in biblical literature and history and biblical thought, because those ideas were popping up all over the place, in history, philosophy, art."

He said a study by the BSA showed that almost every other state's major universities offer courses not only in religion, which the University offers, but on the Bible itself. The reason Texas doesn't, he said, is ironically related to the recent return of fundamentalist religion.

"With that movement has come the resurgence of a devotional attitude toward biblical materials," Cox said. "In a sense, it's more difficult now to legitimize an academic study of the Bible than it ever has been."

There's also been a change in the type of students taking biblical studies classes.

"Since neither religion nor Judeo-Christian religion is taught in public schools, either elementary or secondary, the average college student is, certainly on the subject of Judeo-Christian themes, culturally illiterate. Some of the most basic stories are unknown — who was Moses, who was David, who was Noah?"

Howard Miller, UT professor of history, called Cox "a gentleman" and the study of the Bible "a legitimate, demanding part of the academy."

"He's been an eloquent defender of religious studies here and in insisting that the University take responsibility for this very, very important part of the human experience that they've never seriously sponsored the study of."

"Any good religious studies program at a major state university should have someone teaching biblical studies. And we don't. Or we did, but we don't anymore. And that's what those men did — they taught biblical studies. They weren't teaching Sunday school," Miller said.

Cox said the board of trustees that supervises Texas Bible Chair, the state's oldest Bible chair, plans to meet next month to decide whether to try to offer the courses again in the fall.

"I suspect they will try one more time," he said.

As for him, Cox said he's considering the possibility that the courses won't happen next fall, either, and that he'll have to look elsewhere for a job.

"I've had some friends who've said to me that after you're 55 years old, there's no job in the world open to you. I don't think that's true, but I have a little bit of that anxiety."

"I guess it's mostly the anxiety of having been someplace for 30 years and then making a change. I've never been a person who made changes easily. I grow very fond of where I am and who I'm with and give up space and time with a great deal of pain. I've always made it in the past, though."

"Actually, I'm kind of looking forward to it, because I do think it will force me to push out the outer edges of my life in a way I could not do if I stayed here and sat in this chair every day."

Anyone can master the art of tole painting

By PRISCILLA HAUSER

The most wonderful thing about the art of tole or decorative painting is that anyone can do it, and do it beautifully! You can create lovely items for your home and gifts for your loved ones and friends.

All it takes is some practice to master the basic strokes and blending techniques — you don't even have to be able to draw! You'll be surprised at how good even your first attempts will be.

The folk-art bird feeder and tulip wall shelf shown here are two very easy projects to start on. The designs are bright and appealing, they are easy to reproduce, and the projects are useful.

If you would like to work from our step-by-step plans, you may order them in our new packet, "Priscilla Hauser's Tole & Decorative Painting on Wood." It contains a booklet of detailed painting instructions, full-size patterns and paint-along color worksheets for six lovely designs, plus illustrated step-by-step plans for building 10 easy, useful and charming wood projects.

To order, specify Packet No. 4300 and send $24.95, a special savings through your newspaper of $10 off the regular $34.95 price. Mail to: For Whom the Brush Toles, Dept. 79065, P.O. Box 1000, Bixby, Okla. 74008.

Before you begin practicing techniques, you'll need to know a little about brushes and paints. Brushes are your most important tools. If you are going to take the time to learn to paint, use the best tools you can, so that your painting will be as beautiful as it can be.

There are several types of brushes used in decorative painting: flat brushes (flat, with squared-off tip), liner or scroll brushes (round, with pointed tip) and special effects brushes.

The bristles or hairs of a brush may be made of red sable or synthetic fibers. Sable brushes are more expensive but are well worth the price.

Synthetic brushes "dump" the paint instead of allowing it to flow evenly and smoothly. And synthetic bristles tend to curl, just like some kinds of ribbon curl, no matter what you do to prevent it.

This folk-art bird feeder and tulip wall shelf are decorated with popular tole painting.

You will need a basic set of three flat brushes (small, medium and large) and one round liner brush. (I almost always use a small, #1 liner.) The set of sable brushes will cost in the neighborhood of $50; synthetics, $25.

Clean your sable brushes in a generous amount of turpentine (I use odorless turp), but do it gently, so you don't abuse the hair. To condition, work the brush back and forth in a small amount of brush cream until all the color seems to be gone. Shape the brush with your fingers, squeezing out the excess cream. Leave the remaining cream in the brush, to keep the hairs in good condition. Do not use brush cream with acrylic paints.

You may use either oil or acrylic paints. Oils are my favorite. They are slower to dry, which gives you extra time to blend and move them, and they are extremely opaque, which means that a single coat is usually enough to cover. Oils must be thinned and cleaned up with turp.

Acrylics are thinned and cleaned up with water. It often takes up to three coats of acrylic paint to cover, but acrylics dry fast.

Whether you use oils or acrylics, you will have to thin the paint before using it. Aside from the actual brush strokes and blending techniques, paint consistency is the most important thing to learn about decorative painting.

Squeeze about an inch of paint from the tube onto your palette. Use a palette knife to pick up a small amount of turp (or water, if you are using acrylics) and mix it into the paint.

Start by thinning the paint to the consistency of soft, spreadable butter or cake icing. Use the paint in this consistency to fill in or color-book paint large areas of color, and for shading and blending.

For brush strokes, you will need to thin the paint further, to the consistency of very light cream. For fine linework, thin the paint even further, so that it is very, very thin and watery, like ink.

Practice working with the paints to see how they act at the various consistencies. The paint must flow smoothly and evenly from the brush in order for you to paint beautifully, which you will soon be doing!

New oil wells are horizontal

HOUSTON (AP) — An oil well that is drilled horizontally can replace five conventional vertical wells, according to Petroleum Management Magazine. The oil flows sideways before surfacing vertically.

In one instance, one horizontal well produced 20 times the oil of an average conventional well. It ran through an oil reserve that a vertical well had missed.

But, says the magazine, horizontal wells can be this productive only when the site has been properly selected and the well, or system of wells, carefully designed.

Who's liable when stores give undue credit to children?

DEAR ABBY: "Cash Only" wrote to say that her daughter, who was "substantially under 18, unemployed and loves clothes," received a credit card from a major department store. ("Cash" is a single parent working full-time to support herself and her daughter and is struggling to stay afloat.) She said she phoned the store's credit department asking if there was an age requirement for credit card holders, and was told there was not. In other words, Mother was stuck for her daughter's bills. She asked for your comments.

You said: "Laws concerning credit extended to unemployed minors differ in the various states, and if there isn't a law stating a parent is not responsible for merchandise purchased by a minor child, there ought to be."

Abby, in Illinois there is a law. It's the Family Expense Act, which makes the head of a household — husband or wife or parent, if it's a single-parent household — liable for "family expenses." The courts have construed this to cover essentials such as necessary clothing. So if the daughter charged exotic perfumes, expensive dresses, furs, etc., her mother would not be liable. But if any necessary garments of a reasonable quality and price, consistent with the family's established lifestyle, were bought by the daughter,

DEAR MR. HORSLEY: Thanks for the input concerning Illinois law. It makes sense, and seems fair to me. ***

DEAR ABBY: My boyfriend and I broke up four months ago and I am having a hard time getting over him. He has a new girlfriend now, but he still calls me to talk because he considers me a friend. I really don't know what he wants from me.

Abby, I find it very hard to talk to him because I still care for him and it tears me up to hear him talk about his new love.

I would like to tell him to please quit calling me, but I'm afraid it would be a mistake. I really don't know how to handle this. Please help me.

ACHING HEART

DEAR ACHING: The next time he calls you, cut the conversation short. And do it each time he calls you. Make it plain that you have no time to talk to him. Although it's not as honest as coming right out and telling him it's too painful to listen to him talk about his new love, it's your right to avoid pain whenever possible. Good luck.

have anybody special. We've had some long conversations (in his car) when he drove me home from basketball practice. He told me he thought I was an exceptional young woman who could be anything I wanted to be.

Abby, all I want to be is his wife. He has never laid a hand on me, and I certainly gave him every chance. I know he has some special feelings for me, but he's afraid to give in to them.

I have dated some guys, but they seem so immature compared to Mr. X. How can I get him to take me seriously, or get him out of my mind? And should I write to him from college?

Honor deceased veterans on Memorial Day

Memorial Day has been celebrated the last Monday in May since 1971 and is often an occasion for honoring those who have died in battle.

The first Memorial Day in the United States was in 1948 and has been an annual presidential proclamation requested by Congress since that date. Not only is it a day to decorate graves and for other memorial tributes to the dead, it is also a day established as a day of prayer for permanent peace.

Prior to 1948, the first documented observance was at Waterloo, N.Y. on May 5, 1865. This day, known as "Decoration Day," was designated to remember the veterans by marking their graves.

National cemeteries developed during the Civil War when an act of July 17, 1862 authorized the president to get land for the burial of soldiers who died for their country. These first cemeteries were actually battle monuments for the Union soldiers rather than burial grounds for regular use. Many peacetime veterans wanted to be buried in these cemeteries, and burial policies were slowly broadened.

Today, any military person dying on active duty, a veteran who was honorably discharged

Gena on Genealogy

Gena Walls

and served a minimum of 160 days, the husband or wife of a veteran and in some cases a child of a veteran are eligible for burial in a national cemetery.

The government maintains 126 national cemeteries in the United States and Puerto Rico. More than one-third have no space for additional graves; however, some in that category have space for cremated remains. Others, for example Arlington National Cemetery, limit the number of veterans eligible to be buried there due to the shortage of burial sites.

On Memorial Day 1987, a new cemetery was dedicated in Phoenix City, Ala. and named Fort Mitchell. This year, the Florida National Cemetery in Bushnell, Fla. will be dedicated on Memorial Day with the first burial scheduled for June 2.

Texas has three national cemeteries — Fort Bliss, Fort

Sam Houston and San Antonio National Cemetery. Information concerning burial may be obtained from the Veterans Administration or from the cemetery.

Many veterans do not realize that they are entitled to burial benefits. There is no charge for the grave site, and the VA provides headstones and markers for all graves in national cemeteries and for all graves of veterans that do not have them.

One grave site is allowed for each veteran and can contain a maximum of three graves, one resting on the other. If you have "lost" relatives since 1948, you may find them by checking burials in our national cemeteries.

The government has established several permanent military cemeteries in other countries for men killed in action fighting American wars overseas. All are battle monuments and no veteran dying in peacetime can be buried in them. These cemeteries are maintained by the Battle Monuments Commission and include the cemetery in Mexico City where 750 Americans who died in the Mexican War are buried.

As we pay tribute to our dead this year, let's remember our living heroes who have served, and are serving, our nation to protect our freedom. Pray for permanent peace.

Women's colleges are growing

WASHINGTON (AP) — Enrollments in the nation's women's colleges are rising, according to a survey conducted by the Women's College Coalition headquartered here.

The survey reports that inquiries for the current academic year (1987-1988) increased by almost 12 percent; freshman applications were up about 4.5 percent; full-time freshman enrollments were up for the second year in a row, registering a 2.3 percent increase; part-time undergraduates were up almost 3 percent, following the unbroken upward trend started in the early '70s.

The survey data came from 51 of the 96 women's colleges in the country today. They span 18 states and the District of Columbia and include public and private, independent and church-related and two-and four-year colleges.

Celtics outlast Pistons in double overtime

By HOWARD ULMAN
AP Sports Writer

BOSTON — The outlook was grim. The Boston Celtics faced almost certain defeat.

Standing just 15 feet from the leprechaun painted at the center of the parquet floor, Kevin McHale, of all people, flung up a desperation 3-point shot. It went in, adding another magic moment to the Celtic mystique.

"I know, playing these guys, it's not over 'til it's over," Detroit's Isiah Thomas said.

McHale's basket with five seconds left in the first overtime gave Boston a 109-109 tie. With Dennis Johnson scoring the last six points of the second overtime, the Celtics overtook the Pistons 119-115 Thursday night to even the best-of-seven Eastern Conference final at one game each.

Detroit, which broke a 21-game Boston Garden losing streak in Wednesday night's opener, will be home for the next two games Saturday and Monday afternoons. Boston has lost its last eight NBA games at the Pontiac Silverdome.

In his eight NBA seasons, the 6-foot-10 McHale had taken just 21 shots from 3-point range and made only one. His

McHale signals 3-pointer

3-point attempt Thursday night was his first of the season.

"The leprechaun stepped up for us," Boston coach K.C. Jones said. "We were lucky."

Not even the supremely confident Larry Bird had confidence that McHale would hit his shot. Bird was cutting toward the basket when Johnson's inbounds pass went behind him and hit his left hand.

"I thought it was over," Bird said. "I thought for sure someone on the other team would pick it up."

The Pistons planned to foul the player who got the ball. But when the play broke down, they were unable to get to McHale in time.

The ball rolled to the forward, who is known more for his inside excellence. He picked it up and fired from the top of the 3-point line, 23 feet, 9 inches — give or take a fraction of an inch — from the basket.

The Pistons protested that McHale had his foot on the 3-point line, but referee Jack Madden conferred with the other referee, Mike Mathis, and the alternate referee, Bill Saar. Again, Boston had luck on its side.

"It was ruled a 3-pointer," Detroit coach Chuck Daly said. "I'm not sure it was."

"You think I was actually worried about where my feet were?" McHale said. "I was in no man's land with the clock ticking down."

Similarly improbable misfortunes have struck the Pistons in Boston Garden.

In the fifth game of last season's conference final, Bird stole Thomas' inbounds pass with five seconds left and fed Johnson for a layup as Boston won 108-107.

In the seventh game, Detroit's Adrian Dantley and Vinnie Johnson collided head-first while diving for a ball in front of their bench. The Pistons were leading 80-79 at the time, but without Dantley for the rest of the game they lost 117-114.

"There is something special about this team. We have won games like this before," said McHale, who had 24 points.

"It's a big game Saturday," said Thomas, who led Detroit with 24 points. "If we win all games at home, we win the (conference) championship."

Boston, trying to reach the NBA finals for the fifth straight year, trailed 29-28 after one quarter but led 53-46 at halftime.

The Celtics led 81-78 after three quarters, but Dantley made one of two free throws with 11 seconds left in the fourth period to send the game into overtime tied at 102.

Boston's Danny Ainge got the first two baskets of the first overtime, but Thomas scored seven straight points, including a 3-pointer over McHale that made the score 109-106 with seven seconds left.

Joe Dumars' jumper gave Detroit its last lead, 115-113, with 1:39 remaining in the second overtime.

Triangle Energy, Cree still deadlocked for lead

Optimist roundup

After four weeks into the Babe Ruth 13-year old league, Triangle Energy and Cree Insurance remain tied for first with 5-2 records.

In action Thursday night, Triangle turned in a good defensive effort to thwart First National Bank's comeback attempt, eventually rolling to a 12-2 win.

Triangle was leading 4-2 when Bank loaded the bases in the fourth inning. The third out was recorded when Bank's Timmy Wells hit a grounder to second baseman Jason Clark, who stepped on second for the force to retire the side.

Triangle's win came on the strength of a fine pitching performance by Jason Brantley and a solid defensive team effort. Triangle committed only two errors.

Triangle was leading 10-2 when Brantley helped his own cause with a two-run triple to 10-run rule the Bankers.

Brantley threw a two-hitter while striking out two and walking four. Besides Brantley's triple and single, Matt Clark had a double, Mark Woelfle, two singles, Davis, Hernandez and Donnelly had one single each.

J. Smith and Ross Johnson had one base hit each for Bank.

Losing pitcher was Heath Stevens.

Cree had improved its record to 5-2 earlier in the week by defeating the Lions Club.

Babe Ruth action resumes Tuesday, following the Memorial Day weekend.

New York Life finished the first half of the season in first place in the Babe Ruth 14-15 year old league.

New York Life blanked Grant's Supply 14-0 Wednesday night to run its record to 7-0.

Quincy Williams pitched a two-hitter while striking out nine and walking two for New York Life.

Tony Bybee, Jesse Hernandez and Dwight Nickelberry were New York's top hitters.

Brandon Wells and Justin Cross had one hit each for Grant's. Wells was the losing pitcher.

New York's next game is Tuesday night against Sullins, starting at 6 p.m.

In the Minor League Thursday night, Thomas Automotive slipped by Texas Furniture 5-4 in extra innings.

With the score tied 4-4, Clint Thomas doubled in Burton Jones with the winning run in the eighth inning.

Billy Thomas was the top hitter for Thomas with three singles and teammate Brian Cota added two singles.

J.J. Mathis had two doubles and a triple to lead Texas Furniture. Trent Davis had a single.

Winning pitcher was August

Larsen, who came to relieve Cota. Larson struck out two, walked one, and gave up one run on two hits.

Dixie Parts outlasted Davis Well Service 29-11 in another Minor League game played last night. Ryan Cook led Dixie at the plate with three singles, a double and a home run. James Wilbon had two singles and a homer while Kyle Easley also hit a four-bagger for Dixie.

Some sad stats on football players

RESULTS OF TWO SEPARATE studies on professional athletes announced recently are interesting.

Working through the NFL Players Association, former all-pro tackle Ron Mix is compiling a comprehensive death and disability study for NFL players. Now an attorney, Mix handles workers' compensation and disability claims in California. And his facts thus far compiled in 800 cases are not pleasant.

Mix figures are backed up by those of another former NFL player, Len Teeuws, who played with the old Chicago Cardinals and now is an insurance actuary who has studied more than 1,800 players who performed a minimum of five years each between 1921 and 1959. His study is equally depressing, verifying that football and a long, healthy life do not mix...like alcohol and driving.

Teeuws finds the average lifespan of these former players was 61 years, well below the national average. The NFL Players Association has recorded 77 deaths of vested veterans since 1960. Those are players with four years of NFL experience. The average age of death was 34! Teeuws primarily blames the use of steroids and artificial turf. The problem is exacerbated by body building programs that develop areas of the body in disproportion to other normal body functions. And the current trend toward 250-300 pound players, unlike the trim conditioned ones of yesteryear, further complicates life expectancy.

Mix' study estimates that life expectancy for the average NFL player is 55 years, and that the average player will be 50 to 65 percent disabled because of leg and back injuries. Although research has no concrete answers yet, it is believed the high-stress games, full-speed collisions, two-a-day practices, steroids, painkillers and amphetamines, added weight, concussions and broken bones are taking their lethal toll.

To support that yet-to-be-proven theory, the death rates have been further broken down by decades, from the 1920s when it was still a game played without all the protective gear to today's highly-technicalized game that has turned that protective wear into offensive, injury-creating armament. Of the 31 players in the Hall of Fame who played primarily in the 1920s, it was discovered they lived an average of 72.4 years. Players from the 1930s averaged 64.2. Players from the 1940s averaged 58.3, and those from the 1950s averaged 54.3, and that trend has continued in recent years. John Leyboldt, 40. Doug Kotar, 32. John Tuggle, 25. Spider Lockhart, 43. Ricky Bell, 29. Just a few of many who died at an early age, despite a life expectancy of beyond 70. Probably another reason the players association fights for higher salaries with the reasoning that "I've got to get it while I can", a phrase that was thought to relate to a brief playing career...not a brief lifetime.

On the other side of the stadium, the respected New England Journal of Medicine this month released good news for baseball players, suggesting they live longer than their male fans. In a study of 958 major leaguers who played between 1911 and 1915 it was discovered their average age of death was 70.7, about three years more than for white USA males born during the same period. In a further breakdown, infielders were found to have the lowest mortality rate and catchers the highest. Further, it was revealed that the best players, and those who played longest, tended to live the longest.

What does it all say? Science and research will come up with some sort of rational report after similar studies from the lifespans of basketball, hockey, tennis and golf athletes. But first clues would seem to be that football players are a most unusual group. While the life expectancy of all other Americans continues to shoot upward, footballers are in the one category that has statistically proven that life expectancy is in a severe decline. And access to lifetime sports early in life can be very beneficial.

Groom hires coaches

By SONNY BOHANAN
Sports Writer

The Groom school board has given final approval for the hiring of three new coaches for the 1988-89 school year, according to Rex Peeples, Groom school superintendent.

Jim Branch, Jay Lamb and Tim Gilliland will replace Terry Coffee, Gary Rambo and Eric Erwin, who all resigned during the past year, apparently in controversy with the Groom school board. Coffee and Rambo are relocating to Panhandle High School, and Erwin is as yet undecided where he will coach next year.

Branch has been named Groom athletic director, head football coach, girls' head basketball coach, and will assist in track, as well as teaching English classes.

Branch, a graduate of East Texas State University, has 15 years of coaching and teaching experience under his belt. He is leaving his job as high school principal at Newcastle, Texas, to get back into a career in coaching.

Lamb will serve Groom High School in the capacity of boys' head basketball coach, assistant coach in football and track, and mathematics teacher.

Lamb is currently finishing his second year as junior high coach and teacher at Highland Park School in Amarillo. He is a graduate of West Texas State University.

Gilliland has been hired as Groom's new junior and senior high school boys' and girls' basketball coach. He will teach social studies classes in addition to his coaching responsibilities.

Gilliland is a Follett native who has just received his bachelor's degree in education from West Texas State University, specializing in social studies and coaching. This is Gilliland's first coaching job.

The 1988 football season marks Groom's first year to compete in six-man football. In a unanimous decision last November, the Groom school board voted to abandon the 11-man program in favor of six-man.

New Head Football Coach Branch, according to Peeples, has had experience coaching six-man football. Groom players and supporters may find that to be in their favor, as there are important differences in rules and strategies between six-man and 11-man ball.

Groom, now in the same district as McLean, Miami and Lefors, begins its regular season football schedule on September 2 against McLean on the Groom field. Complete football schedules for all area teams will be published later in the summer.

Monitor with bedside manner

(AP Laserphoto)

A new monitoring system for hospital intensive care units which PPG Industries developed jointly with Drägerwerk AG of West Germany was demonstrated recently in Washington. It is designed to improve patient treatment quality by eliminating a clutter of bedside devices. The prototype displays data on a patient's condition, top, simplifies monitoring and therapy control with a touchscreen, center, and contains pumps and ventilator.

How the Russian press sees Reagan today: Trust, but verify

By MARK J. PORUBCANSKY
Associated Press Writer

MOSCOW (AP) — Tass doesn't call him a "lunatic" any more, nor does Pravda compare Ronald Reagan to the Nazis — a particularly cutting label in a country that cannot forget it lost 20 million people to the Nazis in World War II.

In fact, the Russians have come to look upon Reagan as trustworthy, even grandfaterly. Although still hardly immune to criticism, the American president is being shown to the Soviet people as a less confrontational figure as he prepares to visit Moscow for his fourth summit meeting with Mikhail S. Gorbachev.

Reagan, because of his strong anti-communist views before he became president in 1981, had long been the target of strident criticism in the Soviet media. But his image has matured and grown more complex and human during the period of Gorbachev's "glasnost," or greater openness.

Characterizations of foreign leaders by the state-run press are particularly important in the Soviet Union because citizens have little else on which to base their impressions. Few have contact with foreigners or access to foreign publications. Until recently broadcasts of foreign radio stations were jammed.

Reagan's anti-communism, as filtered through the official media, gave Russians a "first image" as "this hostile, even brutal man, much in the American cowboy mold — shoot first and ask questions later," Soviet radio and TV commentator Vladimir Pozner said in an interview.

And the Soviet media made much of the president's own harshest comments, such as his March 8, 1983, description of the Soviet Union as an "evil empire."

After Reagan offered that description in a speech to Christian Evangelists, the Soviet news agency Tass said Reagan's administration thought only in terms of "confrontation and bellicose, lunatic anti-communism."

Seven months later, following the U.S.-led invasion of Grenada, Tass commentator Konstantin Kuryev said Reagan's explanation for the undertaking was made with "the simple-mindedness characteristic of him."

Pravda, the Communist Party daily, compared Reagan to a Nazi, which has an especially derogatory ring in Russia.

In August 1984, after Reagan's inadvertently recorded — and humorously intended — remark that the United States would begin bombing the Soviet Union in five minutes, the Soviet government fumed in a statement issued through the official press that Reagan's words were "unprecedentedly hostile toward the USSR and dangerous to the course of peace."

But the official image of Reagan began to warm with the coming of the 1985 Geneva summit, the first face-to-face meeting of U.S. and Soviet leaders in more than a decade.

And Reagan's own description of his attitude toward dealing with the Soviets — "Trust, but verify" — was shown to millions of Soviet and American television viewers alike during Gorbachev's visit to Washington last December. The remark could be used as well to sum up the cautious but constructive atmosphere the Soviet media have built around superpower relations in the last years of Reagan's presidency.

During the Geneva summit, Soviet television began to broadcast appearances by Reagan. His picture appeared for the first time on the front page of Pravda.

Reagan started coming across to Soviets "as a more homemade, grandfaterly gentleman, perhaps not the greatest mind in the world, but not as threatening as he was once perceived," Pozner said.

Moscow resident Anna Likhacheva, 64, told The Associated Press at the time of the Geneva summit that, "It seems to me from the expression on his face that he does not favor bad relations. But I think a small circle of bad people influence him."

Pozner said Gorbachev's emphasis on greater openness has allowed Soviet media to give more than just a one-dimensional treatment to Reagan. "We're doing a better job than we did before. Basically I think the media is being fairer," he said.

Nonetheless, the commentator added, Reagan would win few popularity contests among Soviet citizens.

But after the last summit in December, Soviet television viewers heard Gorbachev tell a Washington news conference: "I think we now have more understanding between the president and myself... It's more business-like, it's more of a constructive approach. And I'll even venture to say that I think we trust each other more."

The softer treatment in general doesn't mean Reagan is immune to criticism on the issues that divide the superpowers. Soviet media still strikes back when he attacks Soviet foreign and human rights policies.

And after Reagan's critical foreign policy speech in Springfield, Mass. in April, the official media gave wide display to Gorbachev's retort that "we are not going to re-educate the United States and do not recognize that it has any right to re-educate us."

Charge for uneaten food to cut waste

SINGAPORE (AP) — The newly diagnosed "buffet lunch syndrome" won't be found in any medical dictionary under exotic diseases.

A social disorder that strikes at mealtime rather than a physical complaint, it was given a name in Parliament recently by Acting Health Minister Yeo Cheow Tong.

The only obvious symptom is heaping platefuls of food taken from open buffets — far more than most gluttons can possibly eat. Costly leftovers go to waste.

Such antics have been pondered by politicians and dissected in weighty editorials, including one in the Business Times that said in part, "All feasts are an invitation to let go. The food is there, in overwhelming quantities, and guests have the privilege to eat their fill. In fundamental, human terms, a feast is man's temporary revenge on fate..."

Singaporeans are revenging themselves so greedily at the all-you-can-eat spreads that restaurants and at least one cruise ship are fighting back.

Lau Ping Sum, a member of Parliament, said he was embarrassed to learn from the captain of the ship that buffet service had to be dropped in favor of set menus when his vessel entered Singapore waters.

"I was so ashamed when he told me. And I have also observed Singaporeans piling up food in our hotels."

Lau said the same liner served buffet meals on routes to Japan and Australia. He advised fellow citizens of this affluent island republic to line up in an orderly way and take small helpings.

To deter those who pile their plates with far more food than they would take at a normal meal, the Jade Room restaurant in the Hotel Royal placed a sign at the $4.75 (U.S.) buffet. "Please be reminded eat to your heart's content but any unnecessary wastage will be charged 10 dollars per 100 grams ($5 U.S. per 3.53 ounces)," it warns.

Jade Room boss Stephen Poon said the sign worked, cutting waste by as much as 40 percent.

At the Okoh Restaurant, which charges by the plate for overly abundant leftovers, manager Rita Tham observed that, "Singaporeans tend to pile food on their plates because they are lazier about going back for second helpings."

Travel guide Sylvia Toh, who has been escorting local tourists on trips abroad for five years, said one hotel in West Germany cancels buffet breakfasts when groups of Singaporeans check in.

"They bale up the food, don't eat it, and a lot has to be thrown away," she said.

As a humor writer when she is not traveling, Miss Toh has lightheartedly described the foibles of her fellow citizens in two books.

Weekly doses of cancer-fighting drug reported safe for arthritis

HOUSTON (AP) — A cancer-fighting drug has been found to be safe and effective in selected patients of rheumatoid arthritis without risk to the liver, according to a report released Thursday at a meeting of the American Rheumatism Association.

Treatment for people with rheumatoid arthritis ordinarily involves a combination of medication, physical therapy, education and surgery, but many of the drugs used to treat the arthritis are not without side effects.

Patients that are unresponsive or intolerant to the simplest drugs progressively receive more potent medications, one being Methotrexate, a drug originally used to treat cancer.

"Rheumatologists have become increasingly concerned about the use of Methotrexate in the treatment of rheumatoid arthritis, due to its effect on the liver," said Dr. James E. Brick, assistant professor of medicine at West Virginia University School of Medicine. "Earlier studies with psoriasis patients indicated that daily Methotrexate treatment led to cirrhosis of the liver in a significant number of patients. So the purpose of our study was to examine the effects of weekly Methotrexate on liver biopsies in rheumatoid arthritis patients."

The West Virginia group began their study in 1980. By 1987, a total of 96 patients were biopsied. Mild and moderate amounts of fat and inflammation were found to be very common in the livers of patients with rheumatoid arthritis even before they were treated with Methotrexate, Brick said.

"After treatment, these abnormalities increased in some patients but seemed to decrease in others," Brick said. "None of the patients developed cirrhosis as a result of Methotrexate therapy."

"We believe our data indicates that Methotrexate can be safely given, from an hepatic standpoint, to selected patients with rheumatoid arthritis for a period of several years," he said.

No food value in 100-year-old artificial sweetener

NEW YORK (AP) — The sugar substitute saccharin has been around for over 100 years.

It is made from toluene, which derives from coal tar and petroleum. It has no food value.

Saccharin was discovered by 1879 by German chemist Constantin Fahlberg.
