Iraqi warplanes hit new targets in Iran despite U.N. hopes

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — Iran said Iraqi warplanes raided a nuclear plant and other targets in Iran today, causing deaths and injuries a day after Iran accepted a U.N. plan for ending the 8-year-old Persian Gulf war.

Iran said it shot down three Iraqi jet fighters and Iraq said its aircraft shot down one Iranian warplane.

The Iraqi fighters damaged the nuclear power station, a petrochemical plant and other industrial targets in the gulf coast city of Bushehr, Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency said.

The unfinished petrochemical plant is a joint Japanese-Iranian project.

IRNA said Japan announced today it was willing to begin talks on completing the project.

The Iranian agency, monitored in Cyprus, said the Iraqis also launched air raids near the city of Ahvaz in Khuzestan province.

"They were intercepted by heavy fire of the Iranian air defense gunners," IRNA said. The agency said several people were killed and wounded in the Iraqi attacks.

An Iraqi military spokesman said Iraqi jets shot down an Iranian warplane over the gulf near the Iraqi port of Ammiq.

The Baghdad Radio report, also monitored in Cyprus, said all Iraqi planes returned safely to base.

But IRNA said Iran shot down three Iraqi planes, two in dogfights over the gulf and one by anti-aircraft guns.

U.S. Navy officials in the gulf declined to comment on the reports.

The apparent raids were mounted less than a day after Iran announced it had agreed to a year-old United Nations resolution for a cease-fire in its war with Iraq, which has claimed an estimated 1 million lives.

'They were intercepted by heavy fire ... of the gunners.'

The cease-fire would not take effect until details are worked out within a week to ten days, U.N. Secretary General Javier Perez de Cuellar said Monday.

Iraq has regularly attacked Iranian shuttle tankers and key oil terminals in the gulf in an effort to choke off its enemy's revenue-earning exports.

The last two reported Iraqi raids were on July 14.

The sources said it was not immediately clear what type of Iraqi aircraft were involved, but they are usually French-built F-1 Mirages armed with Exocet missiles and other aircraft that carry missiles and bombs.

The Iraqi air activity began about 8 a.m. (12 a.m. CDT) and continued more than two hours later, said one of the sources, who are well informed on shipping activity in the gulf.

An Iraqi aircraft was shot down over the central gulf, the sources said, apparently by one of Iran's U.S.-built F-14 fighters, some of which are known to be based at Bushehr on the Iranian coast.

Ann Richards barbecues Bush

ATLANTA (AP) — Democratic keynote Ann Richards drew laurels — and laughter — for a speech that used an easy, homey tone and wicked humor to talk about what the Democrats can do for American families and what the Republicans have not.

"This Republican administration treats us as if we were pieces of a puzzle that can't fit together," the Texas state treasurer said in her Monday night speech that departed in style and tone from the traditional stemwinder that opens political conventions.

New York Gov. Mario Cuomo, whose Democratic keynote address four years ago propelled him to hero status in the Democratic Party, called Richards' effort "great," adding: "She lit their fuse tonight."

Richards, who is Texas' state treasurer and a 54-year-old divorced mother of four grown children, saved her most pointed quips for Vice President George Bush, the GOP presidential nominee-to-be.

The Omni audience interrupted the speech at least 50 times with applause and laughs. Afterward, delegates said they were taking their favorite Richards' lines home with them.

"George Bush is going to live for a long, long time with a silver foot in his mouth. That one will stick," said delegate Florence Peterson of Grand Rapids, Mich.

The "silver foot" line, an instant classic among delegates, was interrupted twice in the midst of it and ended with a roaring response from delighted delegates.

"Poor George," Richards said, grinning broadly. "He can't help it. He was born with a silver foot in his mouth."

Bush was barbecued early and often by the treasurer from the state where he has a Houston hotel suite that he calls home.

"I am delighted to be here with you this evening because after listening to George Bush all these years I figured you needed to know what a real Texas accent sounds like," Richards, who plans a 1990 race for Texas governor, said in an opening line that quickly got the crowd on its feet.

Richards was emotional, too. She talked about a woman from Lorena, Texas who had written her a letter that complained that life has become difficult despite a family income of about $50,000.

"I believe people like us have been forgotten in America," the mother of three said in her letter.

"Of course you believe you're being forgotten. Because you have been," Richards said, blaming the Reagan administration.

She excited both major factions at the convention by heaping praise on presidential nominee-to-be Michael Dukakis and runner-up Jesse Jackson.

The "Jesse, Jesse" chant rang out after Richards called him "a leader and a teacher who can open our hearts and minds and stir our very souls."

Dukakis backers chanted "Duke, Duke," when Richards said the best traditions of straight-talking Democrats "live today in Michael Dukakis."

And she had warm words for another Texan, Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, Dukakis' designated running mate.

"He knows how to bring us together by region, by economics, by example," she said of Bentsen. "And he's already beaten George Bush once."

Bentsen defeated Bush in a 1970 U.S. Senate race.

Delegates from around the nation, and Dukakis himself, called the Richards speech a winner.

"He said he thought it was great," Richards said after talking by telephone to Dukakis. "He wanted to know what he could say now because I'd taken all his good lines."

Charlene Shores of California, one of many delegates who said they knew little about Richards before Monday, said the speech "caught our attention and our hearts."

Delegate Sue Roken of Minnesota said the talk even topped Cuomo's 1984 keynote.

"I love hearing a feminist with a Southern accent," Rockne said. "I had never heard of her," said delegate Rudy Clay of Indiana. "You can become a star overnight in this ball game."

"That one about 'That dog don't hunt,'" said Rockne. "That one is going home to Minnesota."

The line, a longtime favorite among Texas politicians, was used by Richards Monday night to rap Reagan administration military spending.

"When we pay billions for planes that won't fly, billions for tanks that won't fire and billions for systems that won't work, that old dog don't hunt," she said, drawing big laughs.

Texans said they knew their state treasurer would be a keynote success.

"It was absolutely perfect," said U.S. Rep. John Bryant of Dallas.

Mobeetie ready for bluegrass festival

By DEE DEE LARAMORE
Staff Writer

MOBEETIE — Plans are nearing completion for the eighth annual Old Mobeetie Bluegrass Festival, set for Friday, Saturday and Sunday at the Old Mobeetie Jail and Museum.

Sponsored each year by the Panhandle Bluegrass and Old Tyme Music Association of Amarillo, this year's festival features a dozen bluegrass groups with the Top of Texas Cloggers appearing as special guest performers.

Organizers say festival-goers can expect improved lighting and more water availability. Trees have been planted and a larger area has been mowed as well.

Groups scheduled to perform include West Texas Ranch Hands, Now and Then, Smith Family Gospel, Sunrise, Tri-State Bluegrass Express of Lefors, Southern Express, Knee Deep in Bluegrass, Burke Bros. and Sherman, Jack Selby and family of Pampa, Charlie and Kiwi Hutchison, and Bill Murry and The Plainsmen.

To get to the festival, travel east on Texas 152 to Mobeetie, and turn south at the blinking caution light. Some hook-ups for campers are available, in addition to a large space for overnight camping without hook-ups.

Performances are scheduled for 8 p.m. to midnight, Friday; 2 p.m. to 6 p.m. and 7 p.m. to midnight, Saturday; and a gospel songfest is set for 10 a.m. to noon, Sunday.

Ticket prices vary according to the day. A two-day pass is $10 per person; Friday night - $5; Saturday, all day - $7, after 5 p.m. - $5; Sunday, free. Children age 12 and under are free.

For more information about tickets, call (806) 353-7950 or 381-2447.

Old Mobeetie Volunteer Fire Department members are furnishing concessions for the event.

Dave LaCaze, one of the organizers and member of the Panhandle Bluegrass and Old Tyme Music Association, said the festival evolved from a successful series of indoor concerts.

"They were talking about (the concerts), and someone said, 'Why not have a full-blown festival?'" he remembered. Club members began looking for the perfect place to have a bluegrass festival, finally settling on Old Mobeetie.

"Eddie Maxwell, now of Abilene, actually began it and got it going," LaCaze said. "There's been a number of people over the years who have organized it — including Brian Vining of Pampa — so it's grown and developed to what it is now."

While the bluegrass festival serves as a fund-raising event for the bluegrass club and for the Old Mobeetie Association, LaCaze said, its purpose goes deeper.

"It means more than just making money. It's a way to promote and preserve bluegrass and old time, traditional music," he said. "It's clean, simple fun for the weekend and we try to keep it that way. I think people like that."

Approximately 3,000 people like the atmosphere of the bluegrass festival well enough to attend the event each year.

And while making money is not the main purpose of the festival, organizers are able to use the profits productively. The Old Mobeetie Association takes a portion of the proceeds to be used for improving the historic jail, museum and grounds, LaCaze said.

The bluegrass association divides its profits among several areas, he said, including club administration, improvements such as lighting and sound for the festival area, and various charities.

Search continuing for helicopter crewmen

Fueling nozzle from helicopter is among debris recovered after explosion.

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A Coast Guard cutter searched off the Golden Gate today for eight crew members of a Navy helicopter that exploded over the open sea while on a training exercise, officials said.

"There's still no sign of survivors, but we're hoping and looking," Coast Guard Lt. Cmdr. Jack Hardin said. The search was hampered by dense fog that reduced visibility to 150 yards.

The MH-53E Sea Dragon helicopter was 11 miles northwest of the Golden Gate and five miles off Marin County when it vanished Monday in a burst of two explosions, Navy officials said.

Search crews found scattered wreckage that included seven helmets, Coast Guard Petty Officer Thomas Cowan said, adding that no survivors were expected. The cutter Blackhaw continued the search overnight with spotlights.

Names of the missing crewmen were withheld until the Navy had notified relatives.

Crew members of the Northern Lights, a fishing boat, reported they heard two explosions about 11 a.m. "and saw the helicopter disappear from the sky," Cowan said.

"Initially we had some reports there were explosives on the helicopter. It turned out they were pyrotechnics — flares — and small arms ammunition, which poses no threat to shipping," said Coast Guard Chief Petty Officer Ken Freeze.

The explosions also were seen by those on board the Lovely Martha, a salmon fishing boat. Pete Giddings, a KGO-TV weatherman who was aboard the boat, said, "All of a sudden, I saw a puff of smoke. ... Eleven seconds later, we heard the first explosion. Four or five seconds later, we heard the second explosion."

Neighbors say gunman laughed between shots

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. (AP) — A man accused of killing four people and wounding five others with a rifle as he roamed his neighborhood, laughing between shots, was upset because his pregnant wife left him, friends and neighbors said.

Michael Charles Hayes, 24, was charged Monday with two counts of first-degree murder, and other charges were expected, Forsyth County Sheriff Preston Oldham said.

Hayes was listed in critical condition today with six gunshot wounds suffered Sunday night when deputies returned fire, ending a 12-minute shooting spree that neighbors said was punctuated by Hayes' laughter.

"Every time you'd hear a shot go off, he'd laugh," said R. Timothy Beck, who lives nearby.

Hayes' family tried to have him committed to a mental hospital on Saturday after he broke one of his hands beating a wall, said his stepfather, Garis Edwards. But the family was told they would have to file an involuntary commitment petition with a magistrate in another county, and a sheriff's lieutenant said the commitment could wait until Monday, he said.

"(Hayes' mother) talked to me Saturday for two hours and cried," said Gary, a family friend who would give only his first name. "She said, 'Gary, why can't they do something? Why can't they do something to stop him? Why can't they do something before he does something?'"

Sheriff's Capt. Charles McGee defended the department's actions.

"If we made a mistake, we'll take the blame for it," McGee said. "But I don't think that's the case here."

Several hours before the rampage began, neighbors said Hayes could be heard firing a gun in the field behind his small moped shop, as he frequently had done before.

Stanley Parks, who lives across the road from the shop, said Hayes then ran up his driveway and banged on the door of Parks' house, shouting "Come on out, I'm going to get you."

Hayes fired his .22-caliber semi-automatic rifle into the house, shattering an entry window, Parks said. Another bullet went through the entryway wall.

Parks sent his wife and 15-month-old son into a back room while he called police. "He was firing at everything that moved," Parks told The News and Observer of Raleigh. "He was laughing real strange."

Police said the gunman shot at cars driving through the two-block residential area in southern Forsyth County. Three people were found dead in their cars near the shop and a fourth died at a hospital. One victim was a 16-year-old girl.

Oldham said two patrol cars responding to the 11:32 p.m. call Sunday were hit by bullets. The deputies returned the fire, shooting the gunman. No deputies were injured.

Hayes was wounded in the back, groin and leg. Doctors said his chances for recovery were good.

Hayes' wife was nine months pregnant and had left him within the past two weeks, said a friend, who would only give his name as Luther.

Jesse Taylor, who lived near Hayes' trailer, said Hayes was very upset and confused because the couple's child was due within a week, he said.

Oldham said authorities had "no idea" what triggered the rampage.

"No one can answer that other than the suspect," he said, adding that investigators had been unable to question Hayes because of his injuries.

Three cows killed in highway collisions

Three cows were struck and killed within a 15-minute period by vehicles traveling 5.7 miles north of Pampa on Texas Hwy. 70 early Sunday morning.

A herd of 25 to 30 cattle owned by Neil Stovall of 1825 Christine apparently pushed through a fence gate and wandered into the highway shortly after midnight Sunday, according to Texas Department of Public Safety reports.

The first cow was struck at 12:25 a.m. by a 1978 Chrysler driven by Rudy H. Mena Jr. of Snyder.

A passenger in the car, Irene Mena, was reported by DPS troopers to have been taken to Coronado Hospital Emergency Room for treatment of injuries suffered in the accident. Hospital officials could not find any record of having treated Mrs. Mena, however.

Five minutes after the first accident, a second cow was hit by a pickup truck in the same location. The 1980 Ford pickup was driven by Jarrell Davis Russell Jr. of Shamrock. No injuries were reported.

At 12:35 a.m., a Ford Bronco driven by Jesus Guerrero Mendoza of Perryton collided with the third animal in the same place. Mendoza was reportedly uninjured in the mishap.

Gorbachev blasts Armenian leaders

MOSCOW (AP) — Mikhail S. Gorbachev accused leaders of the Armenian unification movement of exploiting a territorial dispute to hide their hostility to his drive for reform, Radio Moscow reported today.

The Soviet leader spoke Monday to the country's highest executive body, the Supreme Soviet, which rejected the movement to unite the Nagorno-Karabakh region of the Azerbaijan republic with neighboring Armenia.

He charged that leaders of the campaign were conservative and corrupt and had "stuffed their wallets" before he came to power, Radio Moscow said.

An Armenian journalist said today that the campaign of civil disobedience was continuing in the southern republics despite the Supreme Soviet's decision.

Most of Nagorno-Karabakh's residents are Armenian, though the enclave has no common borders with Armenia.

Since February, Armenians have been waging a sometimes violent campaign for transfer of Nagorno-Karabakh from Azerbaijan, which is mainly Moslem and has had control of the disputed region since 1923.

Many voiced hopes that the greater democratization and openness under Gorbachev would lead to the Kremlin's acceptance of their demands. In massive demonstrations that began in Yerevan, Armenia's capital, in late February, many participants carried portraits of Gorbachev to emphasize their faith in the Communist Party chief.

But Radio Moscow said Gorbachev told the Presidium Monday that he favored "the need to reaffirm the existing realities." He also said "the so-called Karabakh issue was being used as a smokescreen by opponents of perestroika, by conservative and corrupt people who stuffed their wallets in the period of stagnation," Radio Moscow reported in its international English-language service.

Gorbachev's harsh remarks and the Presidium's ruling, which the official Tass news agency said was unanimous, seemed certain to fuel more unrest among Armenians, who consider Nagorno-Karabakh part of their historic homeland.

State-run media in Armenia and Nagorno-Karabakh carried no word this morning of the Presidium's decision, residents said.

A journalist with the Gostelradio state broadcasting authority in Stepanakert, Nagorno-Karabakh's capital, said the Kremlin's refusal to change the region's status would not halt the annexation campaign.

"The general strike is continuing," the journalist said. "The Armenian people will continue their struggle for Nagorno-Karabakh until the bitter end."

The Presidium, which is headed by Soviet President Andrei A. Gromyko, has more than 30 members, including top leaders from each of the country's 15 constituent republics.

He said he did not believe that Armenia's representative on the Supreme Soviet's Presidium had voted to keep Nagorno-Karabakh part of Azerbaijan.

On Monday night, Moïsis Gorgisyan, an advocate of the unification campaign who lives in Yerevan, estimated that the number of security troops patrolling the city of 1.1 million people swelled to 200,000 in the previous 24 hours.

"I knew earlier what the decision would be from the number of troops here," Gorgisyan said. "I knew there would be no compromise."

However, a police officer at the republic's Ministry of Internal Affairs said by telephone today that there were no troops on Yerevan's streets.

"Everything's quiet here; there are no soldiers, and everybody's working," said the policeman, who hung up before he could be asked his name.

KSZN's return delayed by difficulties

Technical difficulties have delayed the sign-on of radio station KSZN, soon-to-be KPND, expected to return to the air Monday morning, station owners say.

"It was something unforeseen," said Char Hoyler, co-owner of the station along with Harry Glenn Hoyler, Dannie and Terry Miller.
She explained the engineer had been testing the station's transmitters most of Sunday. However, when they hooked up to transmit music about 3 a.m. Monday, four tubes blew out.

"I was thankful it wasn't any of our brand new $400 tubes," she said.
Engineer John Johnston of New Orleans and Harry Hoyler have been "out working like beavers," she said, trying to replace the tubes and repair wiring burned in the mishap.

Monday Char Hoyler said she expected the station to be on the air some time that day; however, by press time Tuesday the station remained silent.

She also expressed her regrets to the people of Pampa who might be inconvenienced by the technical problems.

Demos reach common ground on 1988 party platform planks

ATLANTA (AP) — Jesse Jackson's campaign said today common ground had been reached with Michael Dukakis' forces on most of Jackson's minority platform planks but the Jackson camp will press floor debate on three issues. Today's Democratic Convention session was moved up to allow more time for debate.

Jackson officials, in a written notice, said today there would be debate on three planks for which he had filed minority versions — higher taxes on the wealthy, no first use of nuclear weapons and Palestinian self-determination in the Middle East.

However, they said they would not press the Middle East issue to a vote.

The Dukakis delegates were expected to easily defeat Jackson on the higher-taxes and nuclear-weapons issues, but today's convention starting time was moved up from 3:30 p.m. to 2 p.m. CDT to allow time to air the issues.

Eleanor Holmes Norton, Jackson's chief platform negotiator, said of the Palestinian homeland issue on CBS-TV today. "Our supporters were anxious to have the issue debated, not necessarily voted. ... What was sought was an agreement that would keep our party together and avoid the dissonance."

But she said in regard to the Jackson plank that would pledge no first use of nuclear weapons, "We are going to the floor on that. The Soviet Union has said it. It's much more in the American tradition to say that."

Current U.S. and NATO policy would allow first use in the event of a Soviet invasion of Europe.

The Jackson campaign, in its written update, said, "We have reached common ground on nine of the minority planks advocated by our campaign," including acceptance of Jackson's minority plank on the budget.

That plank says, "Investing in America and reducing the deficit requires that the wealthy and corporations pay their fair share and that we restrain Pentagon spending."

Other Jackson proposals will be included in the platform compromise language, including expanded support for prenatal care, Head Start and education.

The platform negotiators resumed their talks Monday after a six-day hiatus caused by tension between Jackson and Dukakis.

The Jackson campaign said that "our major impact on the platform has been in the document itself (which) already reflects the guiding principles of our campaign: declaring South Africa a terrorist state, our five-point program to fight drugs, political empowerment and many more."

Corpus harbor open for normal traffic

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — As traffic flowed through the Port of Corpus Christi, workers wiped up what remained of an oil spill considered the worst in local history.

"The port has been opened to operations as normal," said Lt. Mike Crickard, chief of port operations for the U.S. Coast Guard's Marine Safety Office.

By Monday about one-half million gallons of oil, or about 73 percent of the amount spilled had been cleaned up, Crickard said. "We're in what I would call a mop-up phase, where you have bathtub ring stains to clean up," Crickard said, adding there is a stretch of shoreline three or four miles long has been blackened with a four-foot-wide strip of crude oil.

More than 15,000 barrels of oil spilled into the port last week when the 780-foot Nord Pacific crashed into a dock at the Inner Harbor. The spill forced a 56-hour closure of the port. During the weekend, limited traffic was allowed in daylight.

Minimal environmental damage was reported, but workers continued to use vacuum pumps to remove oil from a marsh adjacent to the spill site.

He said steady south-southeast winds have helped contain most of the spill along a northern bank.

The ship's owners were handling the cleanup operation, Crickard said, but an estimate of the cost was not available.

Wright says public takes 'So what?' attitude on ethics issue

ATLANTA (AP) — House Speaker Jim Wright believes his ethics problems are fading into the background as he takes the gavel at the Democratic National Convention, but Republicans are continuing to pester him about the issue.

A conservative Washington-based GOP group, Citizens for Reagan, filed a new complaint with the Federal Election Commission as the convention began. But Wright offered a spirited self-defense in an interview Monday, and a Republican "truth squad" dispatched to Atlanta did not mention Wright's case at its news conference.

"So what?" says Wright. "I think that's basically the attitude of the public."

Wright was formally installed as convention chairman Monday night and is scheduled to deliver a 10-minute speech tonight that will boast of Congress' accomplishments this year under his leadership.

As he wielded the chairman's gavel, Wright seemed as at ease as if he were in his home perch, presiding over the House of Representatives. After one interlude when delegates danced to a rock 'n' roll tune, he encouraged the audience in The Omni arena: "We're going to look good on television tonight."

The mood seemed far away from some Democrats' pre-convention worries that Wright's problems might taint the proceedings and tarnish the image the party is trying to project in its bid to regain the White House.

Rep. Tom DeLay, R-Texas, a member of the GOP hit team, said the silence on the conflict-of-interest allegations against

Wright laughs as he holds a large gavel on convention podium Monday. (AP Laserphoto)

Wright did not mean the issue had evaporated. He said Republicans would rather focus on their charges that Democrats are trying to hide from their liberal records.

"That message has overshadowed Jim Wright's problems," DeLay said. He hinted that harsh criticism of outgoing Attorney General Edwin Meese III in an independent counsel's report Monday may also have blunted the issue.

"There's enough sleaze to go around, and I think everybody's trying to stay away from that," DeLay said in an interview.

Vice President George Bush, the GOP presidential candidate, has used Wright's problems as a theme in campaign speeches but has eased the attacks since Meese announced plans to resign. "I'd say before it's all over there will be a few more shots taken at Jim Wright," said Lee Atwater, Bush's spokesman. Easing the attacks "doesn't mean he's out of our crosshairs."

Wright said the Citizens for Reagan effort to revive the ethics issue would backfire. The group's complaint filed Monday with the FEC charged that Wright used a book he wrote as a way to circumvent limits on campaign contributions.

"It is an absolutely baseless, politically motivated effort," Wright said. "The obvious repetition of the very same baseless things reveals the bankruptcy of their claims."

He said the complaint was obviously timed to embarrass him at the convention.

Wright said he had not shied away from the convention podium because of the criticism.

Senator Bentsen reassures liberals with his civil rights record

ATLANTA (AP) — Liberal Democratic delegates, who find Sen. Lloyd Bentsen's civil rights record more palatable than his support for Contra aid, say the closer they get to the smooth-talking Texan the better they like him.

Bentsen, careful not to upstage Michael Dukakis, worked Monday to woo delegates skeptical of him as the vice presidential nominee-to-be. Some found their fears about his conservatism evaporating.

"He doesn't frighten me," said Harry Meshel, minority leader of the Ohio Senate. "You don't expect him to be a loose cannon. That's the kind of thing you're looking for: stability."

"He's smooth, like pouring honey, and I mean that in a complimentary way. If he walked on water, he wouldn't stir it," said Richard Daschbach, a New Hampshire legislator.

Bentsen, a tall imposing figure with a well-spoken patrician air, has been playing down his differences with the liberal Dukakis and urging party togetherness.

He plans to emphasize his civil rights record today with a breakfast salute to the civil rights movement and an outdoor walk with Dukakis and Coretta Scott King, widow of Martin Luther King Jr.

Some delegates made no secret of their disappointment in Dukakis' choice for a running mate. Supporters of Jesse Jackson threatened to challenge Bentsen, but such talk may have been muted by the outcome of Monday's Dukakis-Jackson meeting, which ended with pledges of unity.

Aides say Bentsen did not take part in the talks between Dukakis and Jackson, although he did have two candid telephone conversations with Jackson last week that aides say enabled Jackson and Bentsen to establish a good rapport. Jackson told Bentsen after one call that "you understand grits talk," said Bentsen spokesman Jack Devore.

Bentsen arrived in time for the trio to hold a press conference Monday. Afterward, he told a meeting of Ohio delegates "I just left a meeting with Gov. Dukakis and Jesse Jackson and we have put it all together."

He was well received by the Ohio crowd, despite their hopes that Ohio Sen. John Glenn would get the nod for the ticket's No. 2 spot.

Meshel, the Ohio Senate leader, called the choice "very practical."

"When you analyzed the political landscape, it seemed more important to have Bentsen in terms of winning Texas than it was to have Glenn ... because I think we're strong in Ohio and the Midwest," said Meshel.

At the New Jersey delegation, Bentsen was greeted by an ovation but also some Jackson placards. The Jackson supporters said later they were still committed to their candidate, but that Bentsen should not take it personally.

Wayne Bryant, a New Jersey assemblyman from Camden, said he remained concerned about what role Jackson will have in the campaign, but called Bentsen's civil rights record "very distinguished."

Bentsen has supported civil rights measures over the years, and this year was instrumental in welfare reform, catastrophic care and plant closing notification measures.

He highlighted some of those issues Monday as he took time out to join House Speaker Jim Wright in sending to President Reagan the bill requiring businesses to give workers advance notice of plant closings.

He also attended a caucus of Hispanic Democrats, where he told them they could "make the difference" for the Democratic ticket.

Many liberals who object to Bentsen's support for Contra aid and defense spending find him easier to take because of his positions on domestic issues.

"He's more conservative than I ... but he's a solid Democrat, and this year I think we need all Democrats, a lot of independents and some Republicans to get the White House back," said Irving J. Stolberg, speaker of the Connecticut House.

"Even from a liberal point of view, the goal is winning, and I see the choice of Bentsen as a giant step toward that goal," said Tom Loftus, speaker of the Wisconsin assembly.

Dawn Clark Netsch, an Illinois state senator from Chicago, said she was one of those who gulped hard when Bentsen was chosen.

But she is prepared to accept the ticket.

"If that helps to balance the spectrum and in a sense make Dukakis more acceptable, so be it," she said.

That sentiment was echoed by Daschbach, the New Hampshire lawmaker.

"There may be lots of liberal delegates who are just going to swallow mildly hard and accept him, without creating a ruckus," he said.

Others face drought, but too much rain hits desert areas

EL PASO (AP) — While farms across the United States and northern Mexico suffer from drought, farmers in the desert of far West Texas and southern New Mexico are dealing with too much rain.

From July 1 to last Sunday, 2.98 inches of rain fell at El Paso International Airport. The average rainfall for July is 1.6 inches, making it the rainiest month. The average rainfall from Jan. 1 to the third week of July is 2.93 inches — less than the rainfall during the first three weeks of this July.

Farmers in the upper Rio Grande Valley of far West Texas and the Mesilla Valley of southern New Mexico would prefer to have a bone-dry summer because it makes it easier to schedule irrigation times, extension agents say.

Rain disrupts irrigation schedules, Phillip Glogoza, agent with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, said Monday.

Cotton, chili, onion and alfalfa farmers in the region depend on irrigation water from the Rio Grande.

"We prefer not to have any rain during the season," Glogoza said. "I know that sounds funny. We like all our precipitation to come as snow in the wintertime in the mountains of New Mexico. Then it runs off into Elephant Butte (reservoir) and it's sent down the Rio Grande as irrigation water."

So far, the heavier-than-usual rainfall hasn't caused much damage, Glogoza said, but he added that a fungus called Southwest cotton rust thrives in rainy, humid conditions.

"We haven't had any report of severe infection — yet — but we can see it in the fields," he said. "There's really no way of stopping it once it starts."

Rain has been more scattered and less plentiful in southern New Mexico, said Javier Vargas, Dona Ana County extension agent. The main crops in the state's Mesilla Valley — chilis, onions and cotton — haven't been harmed because it hasn't rained enough to form pools in the fields and damage the roots.

He said there might be some isolated areas where it has rained on chili crops right after farmers irrigated the land, causing the roots to rot in the water.

Farms along the Mesilla and upper Rio Grande valleys open their irrigation canals about once every five days. During dry periods, farmers can regulate exactly how much Rio Grande water their crops get.

"We can go without rain all summer long, and actually that helps us because it doesn't mess up our irrigation schedule," Vargas said.

Farmers in the region cut alfalfa four times a year and usually bale the hay in the field. The hay loses its nutritional value and gets moldy if too much rain falls on it right after it is baled — and that has happened in the last few weeks, Vargas and Glogoza said.

The rain also has disrupted insecticide application schedules, Glogoza said. "They were about to spray for cotton boll worms, but people using ground spraying equipment can't get their pieces into the field," he said.

Aerial spraying is more expensive, and there is a risk that rain can wash the insecticide off just a few hours after it is sprayed on, he said.

Fathers sue over child-support billboards

AUSTIN (AP) — A billboard campaign criticizing fathers who don't pay child support is discriminatory because it doesn't mention non-paying women, according to six fathers who filed a federal lawsuit against state Attorney General Jim Mattox.

The six divorced or separated fathers suing in U.S. District Court in Tyler want the removal of the billboards, which say, "Who's bad? Fathers who don't pay their child's support. — Jim Mattox."

Besides discriminating against "the single largest minority in the United States (men)," the suit says, the billboards violate their constitutional rights by sowing "seeds of discord" between parent and child.

The billboards don't address the "collateral issue" of the denial of visitation rights, complains the suit.

The men also allege the signs are being used by Mattox to further his candidacy for governor. Mattox has not announced but is eyeing the 1990 governor's race.

Plaintiffs in the suit filed Friday are Stephen F. Brewerton, Rodney Hendricks, Jeff Slye-Nelson, David Lewis, Angelo Navarro and Gary Ponder. The men, all with Tyler addresses or post office boxes, are described as fathers of minor children who have reasons for not paying child support.

For example, Brewerton raised his three children for six years without receiving child support from their mother, said the lawsuit. It said Brewerton recently agreed to allow the children to live with their mother, with the agreement that he not pay child support for six years.

Hendricks did not pay child support for a period of time because he injured his back, said the lawsuit.

"There is no good reason" for not paying court-ordered child support, said Elna Christopher, spokeswoman for Mattox.

"The fact is that a little more than 98 percent of people who owe child support are men," said Christopher. "If they're not paying their child support, they're hurting their relationships with their children."

The men ask for a judgment that Mattox violated the U.S. Constitution by putting up the billboards, and an injunction ordering Mattox to take down existing signs and not to institute them again.

Federal law prohibits the attorney general from assisting parents with complaints about visitation rights, other than putting them in touch with a parent-locator service, Christopher said.

The law also requires that the attorney general do a certain amount of public information activity related to the child support collection program, she said.

The lawsuit complains that state money was spent on the billboards, which are to be put up in 22 Texas cities. But Christopher said the signs were donated by companies.

Wall collapse threatens open air seating

DALLAS (AP) — The open-air seating of a controversial amphitheater will be closed on its first weekend unless engineers who constructed the showplace can show a recent wall collapse won't endanger concertgoers.

City building inspectors said Monday they will close up to 12,500 seats in Fair Park's new Starplex Amphitheatre following collapse of part of a 35-foot-high exterior retaining wall.

The $10 million, 20,000-seat complex is owned by conglomerate MCA and Pace Entertainment Group of Houston. It is scheduled to open with a concert Saturday featuring veteran rock star Rod Stewart.

Sam Harting, assistant building official for the City of Dallas, said all lawn seating will be banned unless an engineering study can be produced to show the area is not life-threatening.

A section of the 1,000-foot-long wall, about 40 feet to 50 feet wide, collapsed about 2 a.m. Sunday, officials said. The failure was attributed to water erosion, said Laurie Muslow, a spokeswoman for Pace and MCA.

"It's our job to see they don't endanger lives and we intend to follow through on that," Harting said.

Another concert is scheduled Sunday and for four days in the final week of July.

"They — Pace and MCA — are trying to get it fixed and make it secure for everybody," Miss Muslow said.

A team of engineers from Southwestern Laboratories Inc. of Dallas was on the site Monday afternoon, examining damage to the wall, which rises to 10 feet behind the far audience and is designed to cut off sound from surrounding neighborhoods, as well as to support grassy slopes for open festival seating.

The other 6,500 seats in the facility are permanent and under a covered pavilion.

"Our design team is currently making all the necessary corrections," Miss Muslow said.

Some citizens have previously criticized city officials for the project's cost and contractual terms and neighboring residents have expressed fears about noise and traffic congestion near the site.

Harting said any engineering report on the wall will have to be very thorough before being accepted by city inspectors because of Sunday's collapse.

He said concerts will only be allowed if a very secure fence is erected to screen out all the unsafe areas, unless a report is filed that shows the entire complex to be structurally sound.

SHOOTING PAINS

If you're a victim of sciatica, you know what "shooting pains" are all about. The sometimes excruciating pain of sciatica frequently affects the hip, thigh and back of the leg. The ankle and foot are sometimes affected, too. But that's not where the problem is.

The sciatic nerve, the largest nerve in the body, extends from the lower spine to the back of the thigh and knee. Then it divides. One nerve goes down the front of the lower leg, and other goes down the back of the leg.

It's the inflammation of the sciatic nerve that causes the pain. This can be triggered by an irritated nerve root. What causes the irritation? The cause may be traced to a misalignment of the spinal column that's putting abnormal pressure on the roots of the sciatic nerves as they pass between the vertebrae.

Through x-rays and other procedures the doctor of chiropractic can locate the misaligned vertebrae. Using a gentle adjustment, he can align it properly again to help eliminate the cause and the pain.

EVER STRIVING FOR THE TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Wage hike would boost labor costs

Ronald Reagan's economic policy has sometimes given us tax relief, sometimes socked us with more taxes, and always increased federal spending. Still, his course has proved to be steadier than that of any president since Calvin Coolidge.

Nowhere is this steady steering more evident than in the drop in unemployment. According to recent figures, the nation's unemployment dropped to 5.3 percent, down from 5.6 percent in May. The U.S. unemployment rate now stands at its lowest level since May 1974.

The 1974 date is significant. That year the first of a series of bad recessions began, compelled by rising federal spending and taxing. As government hoisted more of each citizen's income, production lagged and unemployment rose. Inflation at one point soared to 13 percent, shoving workers into higher income-tax brackets — the infamous bracket creep.

The 1981 and 1986 tax reforms ended that cycle of increasing government rapine. Tax rates were cut and were adjusted for inflation, ending bracket creep. Yet during these same years, Reagan approved two $220 billion-plus tax increases while almost doubling the federal budget, from $580 billion in 1980 to $1.1 billion today. Even taking into account inflation, that's a huge jump.

Even so, the economy has boomed and unemployment dropped, despite this vast increase in government spending, for a simple reason: The tax cuts both propelled the economy and brought in more revenue, not less, just as the supply-side economists predicted in 1980. Federal tax receipts have jumped 2.8 percent each year since 1980.

The tax cuts have spurred economic growth so fast that the private sector not only has expanded, but has been able to fatten the ever-growing government parasite attached to it. Imagine how healthy our economy would be if Reagan had starved the parasite by holding the line on spending!

What now? The obvious thing to do is continue holding Reagan's steady course. We could make it even steadier by cutting government. But in an election year, that will be hard.

Another important factor is to refrain from increasing the minimum wage. One of the best developments in the unemployment trend is that the jobless rate for black teen-agers has dropped to the lowest level since this statistic was first kept in 1972, down to 28.4 percent in June, a drop of 6 percentage points from May.

Increasing labor costs by boosting the minimum wage would pull the rug out from under enterprising youngsters just as they're getting started in the workplace. Even more than the rest of us, they would suffer from renewed attempts to sabotage the economy with higher taxes and government wage controls.

Bush needs sparkling bubbles

Stephen Chapman

Call it the wing-tip ticket: stodgy, unfashionable and perfectly safe. You think Lloyd Bentsen is boring? He's supposed to be boring. Michael Dukakis' idea of a stimulating presidential campaign is Reagan-Carter or Nixon-McGovern.

Losing by a landslide is exciting, not fun. Dukakis doesn't mind if the nation snores through his inaugural address.

But Bentsen is also the most conservative vice presidential candidate on a Democratic ticket since Alabama's John Sparkman in 1952. This is Dukakis' way of telling the electorate that he is no captive of his party's nuttier elements. George Bush won't find it easy to ridicule the ticket as "San Francisco Democrats."

Dukakis' choice also dispels fears that he will exert himself to appease Jesse Jackson. Last week, USA Today quoted political experts who predicted Dukakis wouldn't announce his choice until after his Wednesday speech to the NAACP convention, rather than risk a hostile reception from angry Jackson partisans.

My suspicion is that on Monday an aide told the governor, "If you pick Lloyd Bentsen tomorrow, you'll get booted at the NAACP convention," and that Dukakis said, "It's a deal."

As it was, the mood was merely chilly. Putting some distance between himself and Jackson's most fervent supporters is one way for Dukakis to demonstrate his steely independence. That makes a useful contrast with Walter Mondale — and with Bush.

This treatment may sound unfair, since blacks are the most loyal bloc in the Democratic coalition. Unfortunately, loyalty weakens leverage. Dukakis is betting that, however disappointed they are now, they have nowhere else to go on election day — and that eight years of Ronald Reagan is all the motivation they need to get to the polls. Dukakis knows Democrats need black voters to win, but he knows they need much more. Walter Mondale lost by a landslide in 1984, despite getting nearly all the black vote, because he lost two out of every three white votes. Bentsen is a valentine to white voters, asking them to come back.

But in assessing running mates, it's useful to keep in mind that they rarely make any difference. Voters vote for presidents, not for vice presidents. Geraldine Ferraro couldn't capture her old congressional district for Mondale, much less carry New York State.

Ronald Reagan could have won Texas in the last two elections if he had been running with Boy George. Only in the closest contests can a running mate provide a winning margin — Lyndon Johnson being the most recent, seven elections ago.

The choice of Bentsen gives Democrats the chance to carry Texas, the third-biggest electoral prize in the nation. But if Bush finds the right themes and exploits them with skill, Dukakis' running mate won't help much in Texas or anywhere else.

Bush would be making a mistake to divert lots of time and money to his home state: If he takes care of the rest of the country, Texas won't hurt him; if he doesn't, it can't save him.

The Republicans have carried the state in three of the last four presidential elections, with an average of 59 percent of the vote. If they lose it this year with an adoptive Texan at the top of the ticket, it will be because they are doing a nationwide impersonation of Michael Spinks.

Bentsen's own assessment of his partner's popularity in the Lone Star state was obvious on Dukakis' last visit, when Bentsen was no more than cordial toward the presidential standard-bearer. But that was when Bentsen was worrying only about getting re-elected to the Senate, a prospect Dukakis did not enhance.

So what should Bush do now? The right response to the gray Bentsen is to pick a novel, sparkling running mate: Elizabeth Dole. She would add luster and personality to a campaign that promises to be short of either. She would send a message that Bush is more daring and imaginative than Dukakis — and certainly more daring and imaginative than anyone thought Bush was. She would strengthen the ticket with women, without the tokenism Ferraro connoted.

What Bush has been unable to do so far is to convince voters that he offers some hope of change, not just Reaganism without Reagan. Picking the distaff Dole would do many things any single gesture he could make that a Bush presidency would be not only different but better.

Any expert you ask will dismiss the chance of Elizabeth Dole being chosen — it's too risky, it's too bold, it's too unlike George Bush. That's exactly why he should pick her. Dukakis can dare to be dull as mineral water. Bush needs to open some champagne.

Hard to feel sorry for Iran

Most of us don't know exactly what to make of the fact that a U.S. missile shot down an Iranian passenger plane and killed all those people.

It's the Russians, not us, who shoot down innocent passenger planes.

And how could all that expensive radar equipment we buy with our tax money not be able to distinguish between a commercial plane and a military aircraft.

Who's been monkeying with this stuff, Eastern Airlines?

We think of the horror of the jet's crew and passengers in the last seconds of their lives and we think of the families of the victims.

And there's probably no more than half a dozen people on earth who have any idea what all the trouble in the Middle East is about anyway, and three of them are dead, and one's being held hostage somewhere and the other two are out trying to blow up a busload of school children in the name of some religious belief.

But, after all that, the truth is, as a man said to me after I made all the previous points: "It's hard to feel sorry for Iran."

It's like feeling sorry for AIDS.

How long have we had to endure this outlandish nation and its nutcake fanatics. For years we've watched the television pictures of Iranians shaking their fists at us and burning our flag.

We've had to endure their threats of terrorism and the terrorist acts they have committed.

After the shooting down of the Iranian passenger jet, we heard the Iranians mourn their dead and cry out against needless loss of life.

If this nation is so concerned about the sanctity of life, why has it sent thousands upon thousands of its young to die in its war with Iraq?

I see pictures of Japanese mourning the dead of Hiroshima and Nagasaki, and I see an incriminating finger pointed at us for unleashing the two atomic bombs on those cities.

But then I remember the sneak attack at Pearl Harbor and the cruelty the Japanese showed allied prisoners in World War II, and I can feel no remorse for our actions that ended the war in the Pacific.

It's the same with Iran. No matter what it eventually pays for the trouble it has caused, the cost will never achieve a balance.

Now Iran wants the United States to fork over cash to the families of those killed in the Airbus tragedy.

What did Iran pay to the families of the Americans held hostage for all those months and what did it pay to the families of the soldiers in the effort to free those hostages?

"It's hard to feel sorry for Iran," the man said.

Try it — you'll see what he means.

Punishments don't always fit the crime

By SARAH OVERSTREET

We are surrounded by so many terrible, unbelievable crimes that we become almost immune to the empathies they would normally arouse. We read of them, or listen to a radio or television account of them, as if they were no more than one of the hundreds of atrocities we see play-acted in TV series each week.

But then a crime comes along that is either so heinous, or so lax in its punishment of the criminal, that we are shocked despite our mayhem overload.

Young fashion model Marla Hanson, whose landlord carved up her face with a razor blade, was the victim of a crime that shook us, made us feel for a moment the repeated slashes of the razor hacking away the dreams of a lifetime.

Bonnie Garland's former boyfriend split her head open with a pickax as she slept in the upstairs bedroom of her parents' home. That one unsettled us, too.

Perhaps it was the horror of having believed our daughters were at least safe in their own bedrooms in the homes we made to shield them, and finding they are not. Or maybe it was watching her parents suffer Bonnie's memory dragged through the mud in Richard Herrin's murder trial, so that Herrin's attorney could weave the myth of the pampered, spoiled rich girl and her poor barrio lover.

The Yale Catholic community rallied around him as the underprivileged outcast, jilted once more by cruel life and an affluent girlfriend. Their "West Side Story" worked, and Herrin received a prison term of only eight and a third years.

William Mirecki's death is one of those that cuts through the burnt-out circuits and makes us feel. Mirecki died March 2 at the hands of his "instructors" in Navy rescue-training school.

Earlier, Navy testing had determined him "psychologically unfit" for rescue-swimmer training, but that finding was later reversed, and Mirecki was sent packing off to rescue-training school. He was 19 years old.

On the day he died, Mirecki was scared. He was so scared he asked to be let out of the water training exercise he and other recruits were undergoing. Forced to continue, he was so scared he began to scream. His fellow recruits were then ordered out of the water. They were told to stand with their backs to the pool, singing the national anthem at the tops of their lungs, to drown out Mirecki's cries. Then Mirecki's "instructors" set about to teach him the Navy way to swim.

Mirecki was held under the water in a "rear head hold" until he died of what a Navy pathologist later testified was "sheer terror." His sin? Being afraid of the water, a normal shortcoming he shares with a huge percentage of the population he had signed up to serve. His punishment? Death.

A populace conditioned to losing sons and daughters in defense of a nation, and even to accidents that happen while preparing to defend, were unprepared for this senseless snuffing out of a young man's promise. Everyone who has ever loved a child felt his family's grief.

Perhaps his parents were steeled against the time his life might be lost for a purpose they could understand. There was no way they could have been prepared to see their son offered up for the egos of a group of macho lunatics.

We hoped when William Mirecki's killers came to trial, they would be punished according to the severity of their crime. The verdicts for four of the defendants were handed down recently.

Their punishment? All four were reduced one pay grade.

U.N. secretary general begins peace talks with Iran, Iraq

By PETER JAMES SPIELMANN
Associated Press Writer

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar has already begun cease-fire talks with Iranian and Iraqi diplomats and predicts that eight years of bloodshed in the Persian Gulf could be halted within a week.

The U.N. chief held the meetings on Monday just hours after Iran dramatically reversed its hard-line stance and said it would accept a year-old U.N. resolution calling for a truce in its war with Iraq.

The conflict has claimed an estimated 1 million lives.

Iraq, which already has accepted terms of the resolution, expressed skepticism about its rival's abrupt about-face.

Baghdad said the reversal may have been prompted by "tactical reasons" — Iran's recent battlefield defeats — rather than by a desire for peace. Iran's economy has also suffered deeply.

World leaders generally praised Iran's announcement and expressed hope it would lead to an end to the conflict that has endangered commercial shipping in the gulf's busy waters and heightened the U.S. military presence in the region.

Perez de Cuellar said he would assemble a 10-member team and another force of at least 250 U.N. military observers to monitor a prospective truce.

"If I'm lucky, I may have a cease-fire in a week to 10 days," he said.

The Peruvian said he also would dispatch U.N. teams to both countries at the end of the week to work on an early prisoner exchange.

Perez de Cuellar said acceptance of the resolution by both combatants is a breakthrough toward peace.

"The resolution is a peace plan," he said, "and it covers all aspects. It is fully implemented, I think it means an end of the conflict."

The Tehran government, battered by a string of recent military defeats and seeking a Security Council call for the withdrawal of the U.S. Navy from the gulf, said Monday it would accept the truce resolution without condition.

The Security Council was to reconvene today to discuss a U.S. warship's downing July 3 of an Iranian airliner, which killed 290 people.

Iran contends the U.S. Navy's presence in the gulf made the disaster inevitable, but has been unable to collect enough votes to condemn Washington.

U.S. officials say the plane was shot down in self-defense because the crew of the USS Vincennes thought the A300 Airbus was an Iranian F-14 jet fighter.

During debate last week, the United States, Soviet Union, Britain, France, China and others all told Iran that its failure to accept the cease-fire resolution caused the hostile atmosphere that led to the jetliner disaster.

Security Council Resolution 598, which was adopted July 20, 1987, demands an immediate cease-fire in the war, a troop withdrawal, a prisoner exchange and the creation of a comprehensive peace plan.

It also calls for formation of an impartial commission to determine responsibility for the conflict. Iraq invaded Iran in September 1980 after several border skirmishes.

U.S. might withdraw some ships from gulf if Iran-Iraq war ends

WASHINGTON (AP) — The prospect of an end to the Iran-Iraq war is raising the possibility that the United States will be able to reduce its military presence in the Persian Gulf, administration officials say.

White House spokesman Martin Fitzwater alluded to that possibility Monday after Iran agreed to accept a United Nations resolution calling for a cease-fire in its eight-year war with Iraq.

"We have always said that as hostilities end and as the war ends, we were willing to consider a withdrawal," Fitzwater told reporters in Santa Barbara, Calif., where President Reagan is on a weekend vacation.

Undersecretary of State Michael Armacost spoke in a similar vein last week when he said the U.S. presence will revert to more "normal and traditional levels" as tensions in the area abate.

It was just a year ago this week that the U.S. Navy began escorting Kuwaiti tankers operating as American flag vessels in the gulf, the key element of what has been a substantial U.S. military buildup in the waterway.

According to official figures, the number of U.S. military personnel in the region has increased from 2,000 to more than 15,000, while Navy ships now total 27, compared with six less than three years ago.

The deployment has stirred intense controversy in Congress and elsewhere, particularly after the extensive loss of lives in two instances of mistaken identity. When an Iraqi jet fired on the USS Stark in May 1987, 37 U.S. servicemen were killed. And 290 passengers died on July 3 when a U.S. warship shot down an Iranian civilian aircraft.

As a show of regret, Iraq offered to pay compensation following the Stark incident, and the United States did the same after the downing of the Iranian plane.

The American commitment to the gulf has been costly in other ways. The deployment has forced the United States to postpone ship overhauls and to reduce some forces normally assigned elsewhere.

Both Fitzwater and State Department deputy spokeswoman Phyllis Oakley called the Iranian acceptance of the U.N. resolution a "major breakthrough" that opens the way for an end to what has been the longest running large-scale war of the 20th century.

They also said the Iranian decision could restore stability to the gulf region.

But Fitzwater said U.S. officials "don't have a reading with any real definition" on Iran's intentions, and he cautioned that ending the war "is not going to occur overnight."

An end to the conflict would remove one of three impediments to a more normal relationship between the United States and Iran. Diplomatic ties were broken in April 1980 during the Iran hostage crisis, five months before the Iran-Iraq war broke out.

The other conditions the State Department has said are necessary for a friendlier relationship are the release of the Americans being held hostage by pro-Iranian militants in Lebanon and an end to Iran's alleged promotion of international terrorism.

Heroin smuggling increases

EL PASO (AP) — Police are seizing greater amounts of heroin along the Texas-Mexico border, and they report that the heroin they find is generally purer than it was in the past.

The head of the El Paso Police Department's narcotics section said the problem of heroin-smuggling across the Rio Grande could be insoluble, and El Paso County's coroner said the heroin's unexpected purity is killing people.

"We have such an open border and there aren't enough law enforcement officers to watch it all," said narcotics section head Joe Diaz. "Very, very large quantities of heroin are coming across between El Paso and Brownsville, and a lot of it is just walked across. They wade the river and carry it over."

Statistics suggest that the El Paso-Juarez area is becoming a major shipping point for Mexican black-tar and brown heroin, said Phil Jordan, special agent in charge of the Drug Enforcement Administration in Dallas.

From Sept. 1, 1987, until the end of June, the amount of heroin seized by El Paso police tripled from the same period a year before, according to police records. They confiscated a little more than a pound from Sept. 1, 1986, to June 30, 1987, compared with almost 5 pounds from Sept. 1, 1987, through June 20 this year.

"There is a significant trend," Jordan said last week. "Not only is there an increase in the amount of heroin coming into this area from Mexico, we are particularly concerned with the high purity levels of Mexican black-tar heroin."

Black-tar heroin, so-called because of its appearance and consistency, rivals Asian white in purity, Jordan said. Both are often brought into the country at 90 percent or greater purity; the drug usually is diluted to 5 percent to 10 percent purity before it is sold on the street. Mexican powdered brown heroin usually is not as pure as black tar.

It appears some dealers aren't diluting black-tar heroin enough when they sell it, El Paso County Medical Examiner Juan Contin said.

Despite report's conclusion, Meese says he acted legally

WASHINGTON (AP) — Attorney General Edwin Meese III says he acted "legally, ethically and properly," despite an independent counsel's conclusions that he probably broke two tax laws and twice violated a conflict-of-interest law.

Meese mounted a strong counterattack to the report by independent counsel James McKay, who said Monday that "the toughest calls we made were not to proceed" with criminal charges against the attorney general.

"It was not a close call to find that there were probable violations," McKay said on the MacNeil-Lehrer NewsHour television program.

McKay said Meese and his wife, Ursula, probably violated two sections of the Internal Revenue Code by failing to report and promptly pay tax on a net capital gain of $20,706 on the sale of $54,581 in securities in 1985.

McKay noted that Meese filed an amended return on Feb. 6 of this year, "shortly after the scheduling of the grand jury appearances for the Meeses' accountants" in connection with McKay's criminal investigation of the matter.

The Meeses paid $2,875 in overdue federal tax payments and interest with the amended return, and, according to McKay, apparently may owe an additional $600 because of an error made by his accountants in underestimated capital gains.

McKay said, "we had a situation where there's no pattern of violation of the tax laws" and that Meese "in effect, you might say, is a first offender."

Saying he was outraged and appalled by McKay's findings,

Meese

Meese said that "in every matter under investigation by the independent counsel... I have always acted legally, ethically and properly, and any implication by the independent counsel that I have in any way violated any law is absolutely false."

Meese said that if Justice Department lawyers had issued such a document "they'd be fired."

Washington tax lawyers Cono Namorato and Richard Timbie offered their opinion, at the request of Meese's lawyers, concluding that "the... facts do not describe a violation of any criminal provision of the Internal Revenue Code."

The tax lawyers said Meese candidly disclosed the securities transactions to his accountant, John McKean, and that he followed McKean's advice on how to file a return in the absence of the necessary records needed to compute the original cost of the securities.

McKay's report found that Meese probably twice violated the conflict-of-interest law in connection with his holdings of $15,000 in regional Bell telephone stock.

McKay said Meese owned the stock in the regional Bell companies in 1985 and 1986, when he set in motion a review process that led to a reversal of Justice Department policy. McKay also found that Meese participated in discussions of proposed legislation to shift regulatory responsibility for the breakup of AT&T from a federal court and the Justice Department to the Federal Communications Commission.

"Our conclusion was that although there was a probable violation, there was no venality involved," McKay said. "Mr. Meese was not lining his own pocket, so to speak. Had he not participated in these matters, the decisions of the Department of Justice probably would have been the same."

Meese participated in the matters after signing an agreement to transfer the regional telephone stock to his financial manager, W. Franklyn Chinn, who is under indictment for alleged racketeering in the Wedtech Corp. scandal.

Meese had pledged to the Senate and the Office of Government Ethics that he would sell the stock in 1985. He said he signed the transfer agreement because he couldn't find the stock certificates, reclaimed the stock from Chinn last summer and then sold it.

Western forest fires char 724,080 acres

By JONATHAN OATIS
Associated Press Writer

More than 1,700 firefighters were winning the battle against wildfires that blackened 49,000 acres in five Western states today, but one of 54 Alaskan blazes that charred 675,000 acres forced crews to retreat into a river.

"We're holding our own," Terry Fletcher of the U.S. Forest Service said Monday as a blaze in the Bridger-Teton National Forest's Teton Wilderness in northwestern Wyoming slowed after charring 13,500 acres in four days.

The fires in Wyoming, Alaska, California, Oregon, Montana and Colorado, many caused by lightning, began as early as Thursday, but crews in most of the Western states reported progress in battling the wildfires.

In Alaska, however, 54 wildfires had consumed more than 675,000 acres by Monday.

Nearly a third of the acreage went up in a blaze near Livengood, about 60 miles northwest of Fairbanks, said U.S. Bureau of Land Management spokeswoman Sue Mitchell.

A 6,100-acre fire in central Alaska's Selawik National Wildlife Refuge jumped the Koyukuk River, forcing firefighters to seek refuge on river gravel bars until the flames abated, Mitchell said.

In the Waring Mountains, 327 firefighters made extended fire lines around a 117,000-acre blaze, she said.

Crews fighting the lightning-ignited fire in the Wyoming forest have not been able to use bulldozers because the mountain region is a protected wilderness, limiting them to picks, shovels and backpack water tanks.

Seven helicopters ferried in crews and equipment, and two fresh 20-member crews joined the fight Monday.

To the north, officials at Yellowstone National Park monitored six fires covering about 11,000 acres near the nation's oldest national park. In Yellowstone's backcountry, campfire restrictions were imposed and some campsites were closed.

In Northern California, two fires near Jackson about 45 miles east of Sacramento forced the evacuation of 20 homes Monday and destroyed a house and two outbuildings, said state forestry spokesman Bob Heal, who put damage at $200,000.

One fire was 65 percent contained after consuming 600 acres, while the other was contained after charring 53 acres, said Heal.

About 10 miles to the southeast near San Andreas, 250 firefighters had a 400-acre blaze half contained after at least six air tankers attacked the fire, said forestry spokeswoman Sharon Torrence.

Authorities said they suspected the blazes resulted from arson.

In Southern California, bulldozers cut a mile-long path across a mountain ridge and firefighters lit backfires in century-old stands of brush to try to contain a 2,500-acre wildfire in the Los Padres National Forest east of San Luis Obispo, said Joe Pasinato of the U.S. Forest Service.

About 650 firefighters from across the state and as far away as the Midwest struggled in temperatures in the high 90s. One firefighter suffered a broken ankle and another smoke inhalation, Pasinato said.

Firefighters, aided by a seven-aircraft fleet of tankers and helicopters, hoped to contain the fire by this evening and to have it under control by Wednesday night, he said.

In northwestern Colorado, firefighters expected today to contain brush-fueled blazes that burned more than 20,000 acres. Firefighting was hampered by high temperatures and dry weather.

The largest fire was the 15,000-acre "I Do" blaze seven miles southwest of the little town of Maybell, said Mary Pressley, a spokeswoman for the federal Bureau of Land Management.

The fire got its name from the marriage of one firefighter over the weekend.

In southern Oregon's Siskiyou National Forest, a 27-acre fire in a logging area was expected to be contained today, said Forest Service spokesman Warrne Olney.

Although the blaze was small, 120 firefighters were rushed to the area to keep it from consuming tinder-dry timber killed in a fire last year. Three airplanes were called in to drop fire retardants on the blaze.

In Montana, 32 state and local firefighters fought a 20- to 40-acre fire on a mountain ridge west of Clinton.

At the western edge of Missoula, a grassfire started by a welding torch burned a $4,000-$5,000 mobile home on a sales lot, said fire official Tom Goheen.

About 15 fires in eastern Montana were contained or controlled Monday, said Mark Ahner of the Bureau of Land Management.

Rainbows cost taxpayers $300,000

ZAVALLA (AP) — It will be months before the final effects of this year's Rainbow Family reunion are known, but officials say the back-to-nature group's "Gathering of the Tribes" in an East Texas forest cost taxpayers about $300,000.

That word comes as Nevada authorities begin preparing for next year's July 4 gathering of the neo-hippie group known for nudity and drug use.

Some Rainbows spent almost as much time in court this year as in the Angelina Forest, where nearly 4,400 people gathered.

And Nevada officials say the same rules may apply in 1989.

"We have some campgrounds that can handle maybe 100, 200 or 300 people," said B.J. Graves, supervisor of Nevada's Humboldt National Forest.

"But I don't know where we'll be able to accommodate thousands of people in one area," Graves said. "We've just never had facilities for that many people."

The Rainbow Family faced three lawsuits and five hearings as the U.S. Forest Service tried to make the group apply for a special use permit and follow specific health guidelines.

U.S. District Judge William Wayne Justice eventually set the rules that allowed the woody festival.

"They'll run into the same problem here," predicted Jim Nelson, supervisor at Nevada's Toiyabe National Forest.

However, Nelson and Graves said they hope to meet with Texas authorities and Rainbow family members to avoid unnecessary problems.

Texas officials have said that the 17th annual tribal gathering was more peaceful, healthy and drug-free than expected.

Forest Service spokesman Carl Gidlund estimated that the cost of overseeing the Rainbows' gathering was "just under $300,000."

About $5,000 of that was paid to local law enforcement agencies for their help. The rest went almost entirely toward salaries, overtime pay, transportation and per diem expenses for the 42 extra officers and special agents the Forest Service transferred temporarily to the site.

None of the money was spent cleaning up after the group, Gidlund said.

"They did a wonderful job of cleaning up," he said.

Zavalla Mayor Larry Marshall said the gathering caused no problems for the town, and Texas Department of Public Safety officials said the event was peaceful.

Of approximately 100 arrests during the event, only seven were of Rainbow Family members, according to a DPS spokesman.

University plagued by string of scandals

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — The last-second basketball victory over neighboring Big Ten rival Wisconsin in 1986 was a proud moment for the University of Minnesota to savor. As it turned out, it was the last proud moment for quite a while.

On the morning after the 67-65 victory of Jan. 23, 1986, three members of the Golden Gophers basketball team were accused of rape in an incident in a Madison, Wis., hotel room.

The three later were acquitted in a trial filled with sordid testimony. But the notoriety was only beginning for Minnesota, which is among the nation's largest universities.

With 44,293 undergraduate and graduate students and 18,000 extension students, the Minnesota campus sprawls over both banks of the Mississippi River near downtown Minneapolis. The misdeeds, improprieties and embarrassments over the next 31 months were dizzying:

- The men's basketball team was placed on probation by the National Collegiate Athletic Association for numerous infractions, mostly over its recruiting of student athletes.

- University President Ken Keller resigned in a scandal over hundreds of thousands of dollars spent on his official residence.

- Keller's interim replacement, Richard Sauer, admitted plagiarizing part of a magazine article while applying for a job elsewhere.

- A former university official was indicted on charges of swindling money and giving it to athletes; the school's popular athletic director, Paul Giel, was fired.

The troubles are unprecedented among major universities.

Robert L. Gale, president of the Association of Governing Boards of Universities and Colleges, recalls discussing Minnesota's skid with colleagues. "They would say, 'Those poor devils. Everything has happened to them at once.'"

After the 1986 rape charges, many people began looking over the university's shoulder.

A Big Ten report later that year said the men's athletic department had the conference's lowest rate of graduation from 1978 through 1983.

While the school was still reeling from that report, NCAA investigators arrived to investigate recruiting. In March, the NCAA announced 40 rules violations, most of them in the basketball program under Coach Jim Dutcher, who resigned after the rape trial.

In the same month, Keller resigned after a six-week controversy over university financial management. It was sparked by his $1.5 million renovation of the official residence at more than twice the budgeted amount.

Keller also approved a $200,000 remodeling of his offices, including a $15,822 mahogany desk and credenza.

Students picketed the mansion, and a local radio station's ditty referred to Keller as the "Renovation Man." His "Commitment to Focus" plan to upgrade some programs, cut others and reduce enrollment by 8,000, was mockingly referred to as "Commitment to Furniture."

A widening probe turned up a $221 million reserve fund. Critics called it a slush fund, and it rankled professors whose programs had been targeted for elimination and angered some contributors and alumni, who quit giving.

When Sauer took over the president's duties, he remained in his own home, accepted a used desk and set out to mend fences.

Gentle Key deer are too cute for their own good

BIG PINE KEY, Fla. (AP) — The gentle Key deer who inhabit the Florida Keys are so cute it's killing them.

Emboldened by handouts from well-meaning residents, many of the Bambi-esque creatures have been run over by cars while crossing highways in search of food.

The smallest species of white-tailed deer in the nation, the endangered animals roam among the ever-increasing houses on this island, nibbling roots, homeowners' plants and flowers — and begging for snacks.

"A few days ago, a young one was eating our tomatoes. I went out to take its picture and he trotted up to me for a handout," said island resident Grace Manillo.

"They'll sit there and be cute and beg for food. They'll eat anything. It's the deers' undoing — you can love them to death," added Deborah Holle, manager of the National Key Deer Refuge.

The deer, about 2 feet tall and 70 pounds when full grown, will even munch marshmallows and potato chips, said Holle.

"We have one herd fed junk food daily. We noticed two of them with the worst coats we've ever seen."

But poor coats are the least of the deer's troubles. Dogs and wild pigs maul them. About a fifth of all newborns drown in ditches dug years ago to control mosquitoes. They lack sufficient fresh water. Development is whittling away their habitat outside the 7,400-acre federal refuge. And the handouts make them lose their savvy, becoming easy prey for poachers.

The handouts, which are illegal, have a more insidious effect: They make the deer bold enough to cross busy streets to reach houses where they can count on snacks.

Between 1980 and 1987, 345 of the 431 deer found dead on Big Pine Key and the several neighboring keys they also inhabit were killed by cars.

Cars killed all but eight of the 31 found dead so far this year, prompting Holle to spend $20,000 from the refuge budget for extra Monroe County Sheriff's deputies to ticket speeders on nearby roads. But she fears more of her 250 precious wards may soon die on the highway.

Compounding the problem is a controversial road first proposed in 1985 to siphon off traffic from often-clogged U.S. 1, the main drag through this island. The road would cut through prime deer-roaming territory, and is opposed by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, which manages the refuge; the Florida Game and Freshwater Fish Commission and local environmentalists.

But area residents overwhelmingly favor the road so they can avoid U.S. 1, and say objections to the route come too late.

"The route was published in newspapers. We followed the county attorney's advice. We picked a route able to move people in the most efficient way with the least disruption to the environment. Now people are yelling, 'Key deer!'" said Bill Becker, who founded the committee that drew up the highway plan.

Said Mrs. Manillo: "We need a bypass road, but I'm not convinced that's the place to put it. But some say people are more important than the deer, and get annoyed. They are inconvenienced by the deer."

The refuge was established in 1967 to save the 50 deer that remained then. In 1967, the deer received endangered species protection, and by 1978, the population grew to about 400. Now it's dwindling again, mostly because of development that destroys habitat and brings cars, says Holle, who spends $2 million a year to add land to the refuge.

WTSU to conduct high-risk pregnancy workshop here

West Texas State University's Division of Nursing will sponsor a high-risk pregnancy workshop from 6 to 9 p.m. Thursday, July 28 at HCA Coronado Hospital in Pampa.

The Pampa workshop is one of six workshops scheduled throughout the Panhandle during the last two weeks of July.

The program will focus on identification and current management treatments of the high-risk client. Pregnancy-induced hypertension, gestational diabetes, preterm labor and teenage pregnancy are among the topics of discussion. Nursing implications for caring for clients with little or no prenatal care and factors relating to transporting high-risk clients will also be discussed.

The program will be presented by Nancy Lee Schnell, MSN, CNM, RNC, assistant professor of nursing at WTSU. Schnell earned a master's degree from Catholic University of America in Washington, D.C., and a certification in nurse midwifery from Catholic Maternity Institute in Santa Fe, N.M. She has practiced as a nurse midwife at Johns Hopkins Hospital in Baltimore, Md. and with the U.S. Public Health Service at the Navajo Indian Reservation in Shiprock, N.M. Schnell has taught maternal/infant nursing at WTSU for 10 years.

The workshop is open to RNs, LVNs, nursing students, allied health personnel, EMS personnel and other interested health care providers and community members.

Registration fee is $20 for health care workers and $10 for students at the door. Late registration and check-in will begin at 5:30 the night of the program.

Preregistration fees are $16 for health care providers and $8 for nursing students. Participants may preregister by calling the division of nursing continuing education office at 656-2648.

Middle-age 'spread' is not inevitable

NEW YORK (AP)—The "middle-age spread" is a myth, according to the Reebok Aerobic Information Bureau.

Physiologists at the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Human Nutrition Research Center on Aging compared body fat percentage of two groups of men, one in their 20s and the other in their 50s. They found fat levels had nothing to do with age, only with the amount of time the men exercised.

Judge apologizes for furor over 'Ms.'

By TARA BRADLEY-STECK — Associated Press Writer

PITTSBURGH (AP)—An elderly federal judge says he was only expressing the values of his generation when he ordered a female attorney to use her married name in court and threatened her with jail if she refused.

Senior U.S. District Judge Hubert Teitelbaum apologized Thursday to attorney Barbara Wolvovitz for scolding her in court when she refused to go by her husband's last name and later calling her "sweetie" when she asked for a mistrial.

"I have always referred to married women by their married name. This is the way my generation was taught, to express respect to the institution of marriage and the family," Teitelbaum told Wolvovitz and three other attorneys involved in a race discrimination trial.

"I recognize your right to be addressed in any manner in which you see fit, and I apologize for my comments and the resulting situation," he said.

"Three cheers!" said Molly Yard, president of the National Organization for Women.

"I think that he did what he had to do, and thank God he did it. I think it's raised everybody's consciousness, and that's fine," she said.

Thomas Hollander, president of the Allegheny County Bar Association, said "it was big of him to apologize."

"It's certainly better that he apologized to clear the air. It's better for the lawyers and for the court," he said.

Teitelbaum had told Wolvovitz, who is married to University of Pittsburgh law professor Jules Lobel, "From here on, in this courtroom you will use Mrs. Lobel. That's your name."

The judge originally threatened the woman with jail time when she resisted his instruction. When her co-counsel, Jon Pushinsky, protested, Teitelbaum found him in contempt for "officious intermeddling" and gave him a suspended 30-day jail sentence, which he later vacated.

Wolvovitz, 36, who has practiced law for 10 years, and Pushinsky did not want to comment further after the judge's apology, Pushinsky said Thursday.

In his apology, which was officially entered into court records, Teitelbaum said that if Wolvovitz still wanted to press for a mistrial, he would grant it before the jury returned with a verdict. But he said the parties would be "stuck with that verdict" if they declined his offer.

The attorneys agreed to not seek a mistrial. Hours later, the jury decided against Wolvovitz's clients, two black men who sued the Pittsburgh-based company charging they were harassed at work because of their race.

JoAnn Dempler, who has been Teitelbaum's law clerk for eight years, said the judge "is not sexist ... does not discriminate against woman ... does not demean women."

"He's a tease," she said. "His sense of humor is such that he likes to tease and joke and kid around, and if people do not know that, they could easily misconstrue what he's doing or saying."

Readers discuss proper church attire

DEAR ABBY: This concerns "Frosted in Lake Forest" who criticized a mother for bringing her children to church in their pajamas. I want to thank "Frosted" for setting me straight.

I had always believed that God's house was open to all people — not just the well-dressed. I got this crazy idea from reading the Bible. I thought that since Jesus hung out with prostitutes, poor fishermen and lowly tax collectors, he wouldn't be uncomfortable in the company of hard-working people who couldn't afford the luxury of dressing up.

Thank you, Abby, for giving the mother credit for taking her children to church.

LOVES THE LORD
IN EL PASO

DEAR ABBY: I commend you for your response to the woman who was perturbed by the pajama-clad children in church.

As state chaplain of the Kansas Campers, for three years I drove from Wichita to Topeka every Sunday to offer Mass. Why? Because the church pastor, three miles away, refused admission to anyone who came in camp garb. Many youngsters approached communion in shorts, some parents wore tank tops, others came in jeans, and a few were barefooted. I served 200 Catholics every week. I agree with you. I'm sure the Lord didn't care what they were wearing.

FATHER BOB IN WICHITA

DEAR ABBY: Come on, Abby. No kid in this nation has to come to church in pajamas. It's just a part of the ever increasing tendency toward sloppiness, plus the attitude that whatever people want to do is their business. Today we see sloba weighing 300 pounds shopping in stores — without shirts, wearing shorts. They're just plain repulsive. You said, "The Lord doesn't care what they are wearing." That was one of your worst and silliest replies.

HAZELWOOD, MISSOURI

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I am plenty frosted over "Frosted's" objections concerning what children wear to church. Did she ever stop to think that maybe the mother was running late that morning and instead of dressing the children and walking into church late, or skipping church altogether, she chose the alternative? At least she was there!

I used to be a Presbyterian. Now I'm a Catholic. I would rather see people in blue jeans and shorts every week than those phonies who dress up to come to church only at Easter and Christmas.

Astro-Graph

by bernice bede osol

Several nice things you would like to have but really don't need might come into your possession in the year ahead. It will be similar to putting frosting on the cake.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) A situation that may cause you consternation early in the day will eventually resolve itself, so don't get uptight. Conditions should begin to brighten by the afternoon. Cancer, treat yourself to a birthday gift. Send for your Astro-Graph predictions for the year ahead by mailing $1 to Astro-Graph, c/o this newspaper, P.O. Box 91428, Cleveland, OH 44101-3428. Be sure to state your zodiac sign.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) People will try to be friendly to you today because they sincerely like you. However, there is a chance you might misinterpret their signals and feel otherwise.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Matters that pertain to your finances or career should run rather smoothly today. However, your social involvements may have some sticky points.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) Make a concerted effort to treat everyone equally today or else you could make a wrong impression and be labeled a Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Merely feeling kindly won't be enough if there is someone you want to help today. Your intentions must be backed up with constructive deeds.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Although you'll be your usual cordial and charming self in group involvements today, the truth of the matter is that crowds might fray your nerves.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Work alone today if possible. In your intensity to achieve objectives, it might appear that others are more of a hindrance than a help.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) In dealings with others today, strive to be philosophical if something goes awry. If your attitude is forgiving, problems will go like water off a duck's back.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Although your heart will be in the right place today when you try to help another, there is a possibility that you might be too wasteful with both yours and the other person's resources.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) If a family disagreement arises today, try using your quick wit to avert a major squabble. You'll know how to have everyone chuckling instead of quarreling.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Walk away temporarily if you can't keep your mind on what you are supposed to be doing today. A brief break could enhance your effectiveness and productivity.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) You're likely to be in a sociable mood today and you might look for ways to escape routines. This is OK, provided you don't spend more time than you should.

Ballesteros wins third British Open

By LARRY SIDONS
AP Sports Writer

LYTHAM, England — He is known simply as Seve, one of those first-name-only stars like Arnie or Magic or Reggie.

That type of recognition came to Seve Ballesteros as he became one of golf's dominant figures, winning four majors and taking the top spot in world rankings.

The ranking slipped a bit and some of the adulation went, too, as the Spaniard brooded over losses and feuded with officials in recent years.

But now, Seve is back, reborn on the very hole of the very course where he started to become a household word nine years ago, and in a match he called his best ever.

"I am the same person I was a week ago, but this means I will have more confidence," Ballesteros said Monday after shooting a tournament-low 65 to edge Nick Price by two strokes for his third championship in the British Open.

Ballesteros won his first major on the same Royal Lytham and St. Annes course in 1979. He won the British Open again in 1984 at St. Andrews, and two Masters titles, in 1980 and 1983.

But in more recent years, the headlines of "Seve Wins It" have been replaced by "Seve Blows It."

He let the 1985 Masters slip away, with Jack Nicklaus winning. He fell out of a playoff for the same title in 1987, before Larry Mize holed a 40-yard iron shot to win.

Ballesteros showed signs of returning to form in recent months. He opened the PGA European Tour with a victory in Majorca, and took the Westchester Classic on the U.S. tour last month.

With a third British Open title tucked away, Ballesteros said he could forget those earlier failures.

It will be a shot by the shores of the Irish Sea that will spring to mind when Ballesteros looks for inspiration, one that will find a spot in the lore of golf's oldest tournament and golf itself.

It came late in a classic duel, the front-running Price playing well but, in the end, not well enough.

The South African-born Price, who has applied for U.S. resident status, opened the day with a two-stroke lead over Ballesteros and defending champion Nick Faldo of England.

Price, trying to erase memories of a 1982 final round in the Open, when he blew a three-shot lead with six holes to play, was solidly in front through the first six holes, although Ballesteros matched his birdie-eagle on the par-5 sixth and seventh holes.

Ballesteros kept going and birdied the eighth with an 18-foot putt to tie for first, and stayed even with birdies at 10 and 11.

They got to the 16th hole all even. Faldo had by now fallen away, and the remaining two members of the threesome were in virtual match play, the score now 10-under par.

Ballesteros teed off with a 1-iron to the middle of the fairway on the par-4, then lofted a 9-iron toward the hole. It hit the flagstick and dropped dead, three inches behind the pin.

"He played the winds so well," Price said. Ballesteros tapped in for birdie-3. Price had an eight-footer to stay even, but two-putted.

The match was as good as over.

"I think the shot I hit at the 16th was very important," said Ballesteros, who sealed the victory with a sand wedge to within four inches of the pin on the final hole.

Price, trying for a birdie that would have sent the weather-plagued tournament into a four-hole playoff, drove a 25-foot putt by the 18th hole and two-putted for bogey-5 coming back.

The over-par finish by Price could not overshadow a great golf battle, one that Ballesteros called the best he has played "up to now."

Dodgers widen NL West gap

By BEN WALKER
AP Baseball Writer

Tim Leary and the Los Angeles Dodgers are well on the road to the National League West title.

Leary pitched a five-hitter and Mike Marshall homered in the ninth inning Monday night as the Dodgers beat the St. Louis Cardinals 1-0 for their sixth straight victory.

Los Angeles now leads the division by eight games over San Francisco and Houston.

The Dodgers started a 16-game trip—the longest in the majors—after the All-Star break by winning five times in Chicago. The victory in St. Louis gave Los Angeles the best road record in baseball at 29-13.

"Our pitching has been sensational," Manager Tom Lasorda said after Leary's fourth shutout this season.

The Cardinals have lost 10 of their last 11 games and have not scored more than three runs in any of them. St. Louis fell into a last-place tie in the NL East with Philadelphia.

"You can't win without any runs," Cardinals manager Whitey Herzog said. "We haven't scored in a long time."

In other games, Cincinnati got past New York 2-1, Chicago rallied past San Francisco 8-3, Houston beat Montreal 6-1 and Atlanta split a doubleheader with Philadelphia, winning the opener 9-8 in 11 innings before the Phillies won 4-1. San Diego at Pittsburgh was rained out.

Reds 2, Mets 1

Nick Esasky hit a sacrifice fly and Tim Teufel's error on the relay allowed another run to score, enabling Cincinnati to edge New York.

Danny Jackson, 11-5, pitched three-hit ball for seven innings.

Sid Fernandez, 5-7, held Cincinnati hitless until Kal Daniels opened the sixth inning with a single. Eric Davis drew Fernandez's sixth walk and the runners pulled a double steal.

Esasky followed with a fly that center fielder Mookie Wilson caught at the wall. Daniels scored and Davis also came around when Teufel's throw from shallow center was wild.

Darryl Strawberry hit an RBI single in the third.

Cubs 8, Giants 3

Vance Law and Mitch Webster hit two-run singles during a six-run rally in the eighth inning that sent Chicago over San Francisco.

Pat Perry, 4-2, got the victory and Craig Lefferts, 2-6, took the loss at Wrigley Field.

Astros 6, Expos 1

Joaquin Andujar got his first victory in more than a year with home-run support from Kevin Bass and Buddy Bell as Houston won at Montreal.

Andujar, 1-4, gave up one run in six innings to win for the first time since July 2, 1987, for Oakland. Danny Darwin closed with one-hit relief in his second save.

Bass hit a three-run homer in the first inning after an RBI single by Glenn Davis. An error by second baseman Tom Foley set up the four unearned runs off Bryn Smith, 6-6.

Rain postpones Bambino game

The championship finals in the West Texas State Bambino 11-12 year-old Tournament was postponed tonight because of heavy rains in Plainview.

The finals have been reset for 6:30 p.m. Wednesday night at the Jaycee Park in Plainview. Pampa meets the Plainview-Tulia winner for the right to advance to the Southwest Regionals in Donaldsonville, La.

Plainview and Tulia are scheduled to play tonight. Pampa has won both their games and have to lose twice to be eliminated from the tournament.

Junior girls eliminated
Pampa was eliminated by Borger 11-5 Monday night in a junior girls' district softball tournament at Borger.

In an earlier game, Pampa came from behind to down Fritch 18-16.

Pampa was down 16-8 in the final inning and one out away from defeat when the rally started. The Fritch pitcher then walked the next five hitters, bringing up Danette Hoover, who drove a two-run double to left field. Misty Plunk tripled to center field to knot the score at 16-11.

With the winning run on third, Julie Forman watched the first pitch go by and then slammed a home run over the center field fence for the victory.

Deadline Wednesday for softball tourney

Deadline for the fifth annual Pampa Satellite Workshop Men's and Women's Softball Tournament has been extended to Wednesday.

The tournament is July 22-24 and there will be a men's open, men's class C and women's open divisions.

Entry fee is $100. The tournament is being sponsored by the Top of Texas Kiwanis Club.

LeBaron's ghost haunts Sweeney

By DENNE H. FREEMAN
AP Sports Writer

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. — The ghost of Eddie LeBaron haunts Kevin Sweeney and the kid knows it.

The mighty mite LeBaron was the Dallas Cowboys quarterback in the expansion years of 1960 through 1963.

Despite a strong arm and genius for reading defenses, LeBaron was too short at 5-foot-7 to see over defensive linemen or his own offensive line for that matter. Dallas suffered through seasons of 0-11-1, 4-9-1 and 5-8-1.

Dallas Coach Tom Landry has never played a short quarterback since.

Now, here comes Sweeney, listed at 6-foot but appearing shorter, and with all his NCAA passing records out of Fresno State.

Although he had impressive moments in the 1987 training camp, Landry cut Sweeney because of that too-short phobia.

The NFL strike of veteran players gave Sweeney a second shot.

He started and won two games for the "rhinestone" Cowboys, hitting 14 of 28 passes for 291 yards and four touchdowns.

Sweeney admits he isn't 6-foot. He calls himself 5-11½.

"I'm 5-11½ and that's as tall as I'm going to get so I have to make up for it in mobility, strength, and the ability to read defenses," Sweeney said. "I've always fought that 'too short' tag."

Landry was giving Sweeney no chance to be an NFL quarterback last year, saying "he has to see between the linemen which means he's not effective as a drop-back passer. This means we have to use a lot of roll-out patterns while he is in there and it's difficult to throw accurately on the run."

However, Landry has changed his tune somewhat on Sweeney.

"He is a winner and a leader and he could be a starter and take you to the playoffs if he can do what we think he can," Landry said. "He has some awful good qualities which we saw in the replacement games."

"He can really throw the football. It's a matter of whether he's strong enough to hold up under the punishment you have to take as an NFL quarterback. We're going to see what he can do this summer."

Sweeney appeared tense in the 1987 summer camp, but his replacement games' experience gave him a needed shot of confidence.

"He's much more relaxed this year," said father Jim Sweeney, who was also the younger Sweeney's coach at Fresno State. "He has found his comfort zone and there's nothing more important for a player."

Both Sweeneys are having to deal with the death of wife and mother, Cile Sweeney, who died in March.

"It's hard to understand because she was only 58 years old," Kevin Sweeney said. "I guess it's life, but that doesn't make it easy."

His mother used to pray that Kevin didn't get hurt. Now, his father prays Kevin makes the Cowboys.

"He's a winner, he always has been," the elder Sweeney said. "He wins at pool, bowling, golf, whatever the sport. He's a tremendous competitor."

And the Cowboys need competitors as they try to climb back to NFL respectability.

Yankees topple Rangers 7-2

NEW YORK (AP) — Richard Dotson spent his free time watching the movies and he found it both enjoyable and educational.

"The first thing we did was go back and look at the films," said Dotson, 8-3, who earned his first victory since June 13 Monday night in the New York Yankees' 7-2 triumph over the Texas Rangers.

By winning, the Yankees stayed one game behind the Detroit Tigers, 12-3 winners over the Seattle Mariners in the American League Eastern race.

Dotson was activated Monday from the 15-day disabled list, having been sidelined with a slight groin pull.

"Basically, I am using my lower body a lot more. I was just kind of rotating my shoulders sideways," said Dotson, who worked with Yankees pitching coach Stan Williams during his stretch on the disabled list.

"When you have one or two bad outings in a row, you don't need to solicit their help. They come right to you," said Dotson, when asked if he sought Williams' advice.

New York jumped away to a 5-0 lead against Paul Kilgus, 7-9, in the first inning on five hits, three of them doubles, and a walk.

"The five runs definitely helped. I was pumped up. I was a little excited," said Dotson, who missed two starts by going on the disabled list July 1.

Dotson said he worked his regular preparations while disabled.

"It (the injury) was never anything that severe. It just came at a time when they had a roster move to make and with that kind of an injury, it pays to be careful," said Dotson.

"He has added velocity and he was getting his breaking ball across. That's the hardest I've seen him throw all year," said Yankees manager Lou Piniella. Despite the 5-0 lead, Dotson struggled, throwing 99 pitches on a hot, humid night, before being relieved by Neil Allen in the sixth inning.

Dotson stranded two Rangers in the second, another in the third, and escaped a bases-loaded jam with one out in the fifth.

Luis Aguayo bare-handed Scott Fletcher's bunt down the third base line in time to force Steve Buechele at the plate and Dotson then struck out Ruben Sierra.

Pete Incaviglia's 17th homer opened the sixth and when Buechele doubled with two out, Allen relieved Dotson.

"No matter how much you work, it's not the same as throwing on the side," said Dotson, who last pitched June 29.

"We kept battling back. We had a few opportunities to cash in," said Texas manager Bobby Valentine, whose club left 11 runners aboard while collecting 10 hits and three walks against three Yankee pitchers.

Rickey Henderson opened the first inning with a double and held second when Willie Randolph beat out an infield hit. But Henderson scored and Randolph went to third when Don Mattingly drove a double off first baseman Pete O'Brien's glove down the right field line.

Jack Clark's single scored Randolph, Mattingly scored on Dave Winfield's forceout grounder, and Joel Skinner followed a walk to Aguayo with a two-run double that finished Kilgus.

Kilgus was the fifth opposing pitcher to be knocked out in the first inning by the Yankees this season.

Reliever Guy Hoffman's wild pitch made it 6-1 in the sixth and Rafael Santana's third homer of the season in the eighth off Dale Mohorcic produced the final Yankee run.

Texas picked up its final run in the eighth when Incaviglia led off with a single off Allen and, after Dave Righetti struck out two, Buechele walked and Cecil Espy singled to score Incaviglia.

The Yankees have now won four of their last five and the Rangers have lost six of seven and nine of their last 12.

Rockets' Reid going to Charlotte

HOUSTON (AP) — Robert Reid, a fixture on the Houston Rockets roster for the past 10 years, says he expects to play several good seasons of basketball and will prove it with the Charlotte Hornets.

Reid, a guard-forward, was traded Monday to the National Basketball Association expansion Charlotte team for guard Bernard Thompson and a second-round draft choice in 1990.

"It's Charlotte's gain," Reid told The Houston Post Monday evening in an airport interview upon his return from a vacation in Cancun, Mexico. "I know I can still play. It's a new career for me. I've got a lot of good ball left. A lot."

Reid said he would definitely report to Charlotte, although he hadn't had a chance to talk with Hornets officials yet.

"I don't know who's on their roster, whether (I'll be) a small forward or big guard," he said.

New Rockets Coach Don Chaney said the main reason Reid was released was that once they shed Reid's $475,000-a-year salary, the Rockets had room under the NBA's $6.7 million salary cap for free agent Mike Woodson.

Birdsong learning wrestling ropes

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston Oilers defensive back Craig Birdsong says he's literally wrestling over two sports.

Birdsong was to report today to San Marcos in an attempt to make the 1988 Oilers team as a backup to Pro Bowler Keith Bostic.

But when the 6-foot-2, 230-pound defensive back is out of the familiar blue and gray, he often wears a straw resistor, faded jeans a scissor-cut T-shirt and boots while wrestling under the name Cowboy Craig.

"It's kind of hard to fluctuate between the two" sports, Birdsong said. "But my obligation right now is to the Houston Oilers."

Birdsong, 23, played strong safety in all three replacement games last season before an abdominal injury in late October. He later appeared only in the Oilers' playoff elimination loss at Denver, and then only on special teams.

"I can always wrestle after I get out of football," said Birdsong, who has been told by pro wrestling insiders that he could be a very marketable commodity in the Houston-Dallas areas, especially if his NFL career caught on.

"It's showmanship. It's how you sell yourself. I don't mean to sound arrogant, but I know I can be one of those big-dollar wrestlers," he told The Houston Post.
